Combined bands of the 26th Division. 250 Players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky; Berkshire Music Center on Parade, Simultaneous performances by the school orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's "Rio Grande", opera scenes from "Hansell and Gretel," "Otello," "Falstaff," "Czar and Carpenter"; the manifestation, speakers to be introduced by Randall Thompson's "Alleluia Chorus"; lawn party.

Gala concert—in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Fifth Symphony (Allegro con brio), Beethoven, Koussevitzky conducting; "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace," from "The Planets," Holst, Stanley Chapple, conducting; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Mendelssohn, Albert Spalding, soloist; Festival Chorus; Overture "1812," Tchaikovsky, combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras and the Bands of the 26th Division, Koussevitzsy conducting. Fireworks will conclude the evening.

Good Music In Berkshires

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
SENTINEL
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 4 - 1941

Audience Of 9,700 Biggest For Berkshire Concert

BY JOHN SELBY.
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., August 3—Before the largest crowd to hear a concert at Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought to a close today the first week-end series of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

A few more than 9,700 persons heard the curiously varied program in the unique wedge-shaped music shed—setting an attendance record for the three-concert series which attracted a total of 26,400.

A few seats are still available for the next section opening Thursday. However, everything but general admission tickets are gone for next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

A number of things account for the phenomenon of such attendance here in the Berkshires, with no large city near, and no circus stunts provided to whip up a ballyhoo, and first of these is Dr. Koussevitzky.

It is not only his conducting, and his orchestra, but his absolute refusal to play more than three concerts a week. He can, he maintains, rehearse no more than that, and provide performances up to his winter standard. Nightly concerts would exhaust both him and his men—so they are taboo.

A second reason is the natural beauty of the 210 acres which overlook the famous Stockbridge Bowl. A third is the fact that the acoustics of the "shed" approach perfection, largely by accident, since no summer music auditorium of comparable size has been designed in the shape of a huge wedge of pie before.

This was demonstrated last night with a performance of Beethoven's "Lenore No. 3" overture. The score calls for off-stage trumpet calls. These were sounded outside the "shed," and were heard at least three times because of the echo, although the music from the stage was perfect.

Today Dr. Koussevitzky played the Fourth Symphony of Johannes Brahms, revising the usual order of things by serving the meat before the appetizers.

Then came Aaron Copland's nocturne-like "Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings; Hindemith's 'cello concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and the flashy Spanish Caprice of Rimsky-Korsakoff, a virtuoso piece for orchestra which, as played today, brought the audience up cheering.

The Hindemith work served better to prove the abilities of Piatigorsky than those of Hidemith, the concerto being one of those workmanlike jobs which leads the lisner to wonder, at the end, just hat has been constructed, if anying.

The festival resumes Thursday ght with a Mozart-Beethoven proam.

This Clipping From
DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS
AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
AUG 3 - 1941

Eighth Berks

By Pierre Key

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Everything is set at this moment of writing for the opening of the Berkshire festival's eighth annual activities . . . a program of solid music which the Boston symphony orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky were scheduled to perform last Thursday.

Much has been accomplished since the start of this enterprise on the beautiful Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. Simple physical aids have been succeeded by a fine "shed" which makes a suitable out-of-doors auditorium, and the series of programs has grown to one of major proportions.

The performances have become as unique as the enterprise itself: for there is now an established school catering to gifted "pupils" who are guided by masters in their own particular crafts.

The three series of programs which will take place on succeeding Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays during August range extensively across the available classic and modern orchestra repertory: Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Handel, Haydn and Wagner will vie with Debussy, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa-Lobos and our own Aaron Copland, Roy Harris and Samuel Barber.

This is as it should be: compositions chosen for their seeming fitness regardless of nationality. It is when a composer is able to hold his own in any company, or ranked as worthy of such association ,that he gains a place of acceptance.

This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 4 - 1941

MUSIC

RECORD THRONGS AT MUSIC FETE AT "TANGLEWOOD"

The festival atmosphere on the Berkshire concerts continued unabated as the weekend throngs surpassed all previous number for the initial series. Builded securely on a basis of music-making according to the highest standards, without concession or relaxation, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has proven its right to leadership. Twelve thousand persons, including the multitude which occupied the wide spaces of the surrounding lawn, visited the grounds without creating any strain on the available facilities or conveying the sense of crowdedness. Dr. Koussevitsky enlivened the program by works of contemporary worth on both programs, that of Saturday evening and of Sunday afternoon.

* * *

At "Tanglewood" music is the principal thing, aided by natural attractions of a superior sort; the resident students, the vacationers in the academy, all make music from dawn to late night. Visitors, including the subscribers, and the school children of the neighboring towns attended the orchestra's rehearsal on Saturday morning; the friends of those at the school came in the afternoon to hear an informal program under Mr. Hindemith and featuring a brief lecture by Olin Downes. In the evening the players offered Mendelsohn's "Italian" symphony in a graceful performance, Beethoven's portentous Overture for "Egmont", and the much-debated Fifth Symphony Shostakovitch. This is the work which Dr. Koussevitsky has performed some ten times within the year and threatened to continue to feature until the critics recognize its worth.

* * *

This being the first time your correspondent has heard it, his still small voice may be added to the general clamour which, it must be admitted, has somewhat died down by this time. To the writer the Symphony appears to be a fine work, readily appealing on first hearing, but hardly advanced either in idiom or structure to be regarded as very forward-looking in the realm of contemporary music. The composer, now past the first flush of extreme youth, is a master of his craft; he has achieved recognition and security enough to give him confidence in stating whatever ideas underlie his musical thinking. (The Fifth Symphony celebrates the 25th anniversary of the Soviet revolution.) The audience found it agreeable, partly in compliment to the superb performance no doubt, and seemed to think the critics and the conductor guilty of laboring an academic question.

* * *

The audience on Sunday came early to the spacious grounds, eager to hear Brahms' Fourth Symphony and two new works, one each by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, members of the Berkshire Faculty. Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" is made from the music to a film produced in Hollywood. As soundtrack music its effect was not fully realized, but in the form now presented the music holds up well, giving a quiet evocation of the moods of the city. Like King Charles it takes a long time dying, but the unpretentious harmonic and orchestral garb of the score is attractive. Mr. Hindemith did not fare so well, and the violoncello concerto may be said to have fell with a dull thud. Never having really come to life, it is not necessary to discuss it in detail, except to add that Gregor Piatigorsky and the orchestra played the ambitious score for more than it was worth. After the brilliant violin concerto of a year ago much was expected, but it is too much to count on hitting the ball every time.

* * *

With a record attendance behind the Festival in its first week, and ticket sales promising capacity throngs for the next two weekends, talk is already active as to the steps for future years of the Festival. Some are advocating an extra week, but the management is silent; all will be considered in good time.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 7 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Continues

The second series of concerts of the 1941 Berkshire Festival begins tonight at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra, assisted by the Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, will present excerpts from Mozart's Requiem and Beethoven's Third Symphony tonight.

On Saturday evening, their program will be Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2; the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major, with Leonard Shure as soloist; and the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" by Wagner.

The final concert of this series takes place at 3:30 P. M. Sunday, when Mozart's Symphony in A Major (K. 201), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony will be played.

The third and last series of concerts will be played on August 14, 16 and 17.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 3 - 1941

'Tanglewood' Is Thronged for Festival

This afternoon's concert, closing in program Series A of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starts at 3:30 o'clock in the great shed at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass. The Brahms Symphony No. 4, Coylan's "Quiet City," Hindesmith's Violincello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist, and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espanol" will be presented.

Last night's program opened with Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, followed by the Overture to Beethoven's "Leonore." Closing number, to appeal to devotees of modern music, was the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony. The Festival opened Thursday night with an attendance of 7,500. Series B of the Festival will open next Thursday night with concerts, also Saturday night, Aug. 9, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. Series C will open the night of Aug. 14 with concerts the night of Aug. 16 and afternoon of Aug. 17.

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the School and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, a draw for prizes and a display of fireworks.

The Gala Benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1941

Chorus Assists Boston Players In Berkshires

Singers Heard in Excerpts From Mozart 'Requiem'; 'Eroica' Symphony Given

By Robert Lawrence

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 8.—There is time now to discuss last night's magnificent concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky—magnificent, that is, except for a performance of Mozart's G-minor symphony, which opened the concert. The familiar work sounded with perfunctory effect, much like certain passages in "Hamlet" when delivered by actors who are too conscious of the text's universality.

Once Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and a chorus drawn from among the residents of the Berkshires had reached a series of excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem," sung in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death, a mood was established. Considering its nonprofessional nature, the chorus did well, especially in the climaxes. And this music, direct in style, with a welcome avoidance of long polyphonic sections, proved congenial to the assembled singers.

They did not probe all its subtleties—for the Mozart who wrote "The Magic Flute" and "Requiem" remains in many ways an impenetrable figure, a genius whose full message can be conveyed only in a second flash of creation, that of the performing body. But the excerpts went affectingly.

The "Requiem" is a short work. It seemed regrettable that a solo quartet had not been engaged so that the score could be given in its entirety. Yet one was grateful for the selections that were played.

The concert ended triumphantly with a brilliant performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. Although the first movement was taken at too brisk a tempo—and that is a matter of taste—the rest was not only above criticism but above praise.

The long, sweeping line of the funeral march; the dazzling tracery of the scherzo, in which the horn trio was performed with the utmost style, gusto and accuracy, and the finale, in which all the variations were etched with remarkable precision, culminating in the great emotional surge of the closing pages, represented one of the finest achievements I have ever heard by an orchestra and conductor. The Boston Symphony remains a fabulous ensemble.

This afternoon marked the second meeting at Tanglewood of the conductors' conference, made up of young men who are studying here. They were addressed by Howard Hanson, dean of the Eastman School, who paid tribute to Koussevitzky's service toward living composers, and by Dr. Koussevitzky himself, who made a moving speech on the relationship between a conductor and the community in which he performs.

Referring to the increasingly democratic trend of performance, he told his audience of how, thirty-two years ago, he conducted concerts at the finest halls in Moscow for those who could afford only the equivalent of a 5-cent admission.

"It is one of the greatest joys of my life," he declared, "playing for workers."

The noted leader ended his talk with an admonition to the young conductors. "When you appear before an audience," he urged them, "you must feel that you can be looked at, that you are clean without and within."

Good Music In Berkshires

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
SENTINEL

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

AUG 4 - 1941

Audience Of 9,700 Biggest For Berkshire Concert

BY JOHN SELBY.
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., August 3—Before the largest crowd to hear a concert at Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought to a close today the first week-end series of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

A few more than 9,700 persons heard the curiously varied program in the unique wedge-shaped music shed—setting an attendance record for the three-concert series which attracted a total of 26,400.

A few seats are still available for the next section opening Thursday. However, everything but general admission tickets are gone for next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

A number of things account for the phenomenon of such attendance here in the Berkshires, with no large city near, and no circus stunts provided to whip up a ballyhoo, and first of these is Dr. Koussevitzky.

It is not only his conducting, and his orchestra, but his absolute refusal to play more than three concerts a week. He can, he maintains, rehearse no more than that, and provide performances up to his winter standard. Nightly concerts would exhaust both him and his men—so they are taboo.

A second reason is the natural beauty of the 210 acres which overlook the famous Stockbridge Bowl. A third is the fact that the acoustics of the "shed" approach perfection, largely by accident, since no summer music auditorium of comparable size has been designed in the shape of a huge wedge of pie before.

This was demonstrated last night with a performance of Beethoven's "Lenore No. 3" overture. The score calls for off-stage trumpet calls. These were sounded outside the "shed," and were heard at least three times because of the echo, although the music from the stage was perfect.

Today Dr. Koussevitzky played the Fourth Symphony of Johannes Brahms, revising the usual order of things by serving the meat before the appetizers.

Then came Aaron Copland's nocturne-like "Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings; Hindemith's 'cello concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and the flashy Spanish Caprice of Rimsky-Korsakoff, a virtuoso piece for orchestra which, as played today, brought the audience up cheering.

The Hindemith work served better to prove the abilities of Piatigorsky than those of Hidemith, the concerto being one of those workmanlike jobs which leads the listner to wonder, at the end, just hat has been constructed, if anying.

The festival resumes Thursday ght with a Mozart-Beethoven proam.

This Clipping From
DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS

AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

AUG 3 - 1941

Eighth Berks

By Pierre Key

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Everything is set at this moment of writing for the opening of the Berkshire festival's eighth annual activities . . . a program of solid music which the Boston symphony orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky were scheduled to perform last Thursday.

Much has been accomplished since the start of this enterprise on the beautiful Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. Simple physical aids have been succeeded by a fine "shed" which makes a suitable out-of-doors auditorium, and the series of programs has grown to one of major proportions.

The performances have become as unique as the enterprise itself; for there is now an established school catering to gifted "pupils" who are guided by masters in their own particular crafts.

The three series of programs which will take place on succeeding Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays during August range extensively across the available classic and modern orchestra repertory: Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Handel, Haydn and Wagner will vie with Debussy, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa-Lobos and our own Aaron Copland, Roy Harris and Samuel Barber.

This is as it should be: compositions chosen for their seeming fitness regardless of nationality. It is when a composer is able to hold his own in any company, or ranked as worthy of such association ,that he gains a place of acceptance.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD

AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

AUG 4 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 4 - 1941

MUSIC

RECORD THRONGS AT MUSIC FETE AT "TANGLEWOOD"

The festival atmosphere on the Berkshire concerts continued unabated as the weekend throngs surpassed all previous number for the initial series. Builded securely on a basis of music-making according to the highest standards, without concession or relaxation, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has proven its right to leadership. Twelve thousand persons, including the multitude which occupied the wide spaces of the surrounding lawn, visited the grounds without creating any strain on the available facilities or conveying the sense of crowdedness. Dr. Koussevitsky enlivened the program by works of contemporary worth on both programs, that of Saturday evening and of Sunday afternoon.

* * *

At "Tanglewood" music is the principal thing, aided by natural attractions of a superior sort; the resident students, the vacationers in the academy, all make music from dawn to late night. Visitors, including the subscribers, and the school children of the neighboring towns attended the orchestra's rehearsal on Saturday morning; the friends of those at the school came in the afternoon to hear an informal program under Mr. Hindemith and featuring a brief lecture by Olin Downes. In the evening the players offered Mendelsohn's "Italian" symphony in a graceful performance, Beethoven's portentous Overture for "Egmont", and the much-debated Fifth Symphony Shostakovitch. This is the work which Dr. Koussevitsky has performed some ten times within the year and threatened to continue to feature until the critics recognize its worth.

* * *

This being the first time your correspondent has heard it, his still small voice may be added to the general clamour which, it must be admitted, has somewhat died down by this time. To the writer the Symphony appears to be a fine work, readily appealing on first hearing, but hardly advanced either in idiom or structure to be regarded as very forward-looking in the realm of contemporary music. The composer, now past the first flush of extreme youth, is a master of his craft; he has achieved recognition and security enough to give him confidence in stating whatever ideas underlie his musical thinking. (The Fifth Symphony celebrates the 25th anniversary of the Soviet revolution.) The audience found it agreeable, partly in compliment to the superb performance no doubt, and seemed to think the critics and the conductor guilty of laboring an academic question.

* * *

The audience on Sunday came early to the spacious grounds, eager to hear Brahms' Fourth Symphony and two new works, one each by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, members of the Berkshire Faculty. Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" is made from the music to a film produced in Hollywood. As soundtrack music its effect was not fully realized, but in the form now presented the music holds up well, giving a quiet evocation of the moods of the city. Like King Charles it takes a long time dying, but the unpretentious harmonic and orchestral garb of the score is attractive. Mr. Hindemith did not fare so well, and the violoncello concerto may be said to have fell with a dull thud. Never having really come to life, it is not necessary to discuss it in detail, except to add that Gregor Piatigorsky and the orchestra played the ambitious score for more than it was worth. After the brilliant violin concerto of a year ago much was expected, but it is too much to count on hitting the ball every time.

* * *

With a record attendance behind the Festival in its first week, and ticket sales promising capacity throngs for the next two weekends, talk is already active as to the steps for future years of the Festival. Some are advocating an extra week, but the management is silent; all will be considered in good time.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 7 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Continues

The second series of concerts of the 1941 Berkshire Festival begins tonight at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra, assisted by the Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, will present excerpts from Mozart's Requiem and Beethoven's Third Symphony tonight.

On Saturday evening, their program will be Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2; the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Major, with Leonard Shure as soloist; and the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" by Wagner.

The final concert of this series takes place at 3:30 P. M. Sunday, when Mozart's Symphony in A Major (K. 201), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony will be played.

The third and last series of concerts will be played on August 14, 16 and 17.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 3 - 1941

'Tanglewood' Is Thronged for Festival

This afternoon's concert, closing in program Series A of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starts at 3:30 o'clock in the great shed at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass. The Brahms Symphony No. 4, Coylan's "Quiet City," Hindesmith's Violincello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist, and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espanol" will be presented.

Last night's program opened with Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, followed by the Overture to Beethoven's "Leonore." Closing number, to appeal to devotees of modern music, was the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony. The Festival opened Thursday night with an attendance of 7,500. Series B of the Festival will open next Thursday night with concerts, also Saturday night, Aug. 9, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. Series C will open the night of Aug. 14 with concerts the night of Aug. 16 and afternoon of Aug. 17.

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the School and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, a draw for prizes and a display of fireworks.

The Gala Benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1941

Chorus Assists Boston Players In Berkshires

Singers Heard in Excerpts From Mozart 'Requiem'; 'Eroica' Symphony Given

By Robert Lawrence

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 8.—There is time now to discuss last night's magnificent concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky—magnificent, that is, except for a performance of Mozart's G-minor symphony, which opened the concert. The familiar work sounded with perfunctory effect, much like certain passages in "Hamlet" when delivered by actors who are too conscious of the text's universality.

Once Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and a chorus drawn from among the residents of the Berkshires had reached a series of excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem," sung in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death, a mood was established. Considering its nonprofessional nature, the chorus did well, especially in the climaxes. And this music, direct in style, with a welcome avoidance of long polyphonic sections, proved congenial to the assembled singers.

They did not probe all its subtleties—for the Mozart who wrote "The Magic Flute" and "Requiem" remains in many ways an impenetrable figure, a genius whose full message can be conveyed only in a second flash of creation, that of the performing body. But the excerpts went affectingly.

The "Requiem" is a short work. It seemed regrettable that a solo quartet had not been engaged so that the score could be given in its entirety. Yet one was grateful for the selections that were played.

The concert ended triumphantly with a brilliant performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. Although the first movement was taken at too brisk a tempo—and that is a matter of taste—the rest was not only above criticism but above praise.

The long, sweeping line of the funeral march; the dazzling tracery of the scherzo, in which the horn trio was performed with the utmost style, gusto and accuracy, and the finale, in which all the variations were etched with remarkable precision, culminating in the great emotional surge of the closing pages, represented one of the finest achievements I have ever heard by an orchestra and conductor. The Boston Symphony remains a fabulous ensemble.

This afternoon marked the second meeting at Tanglewood of the conductors' conference, made up of young men who are studying here. They were addressed by Howard Hanson, dean of the Eastman School, who paid tribute to Koussevitzky's service toward living composers, and by Dr. Koussevitzky himself, who made a moving speech on the relationship between a conductor and the community in which he performs.

Referring to the increasingly democratic trend of performance, he told his audience of how, thirty-two years ago, he conducted concerts at the finest halls in Moscow for those who could afford only the equivalent of a 5-cent admission.

"It is one of the greatest joys of my life," he declared, "playing for workers."

The noted leader ended his talk with an admonition to the young conductors. "When you appear before an audience," he urged them, "you must feel that you can be looked at, that you are clean without and within."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1941

KOUSSEVITZKY ASKS WIDE AID FOR MUSIC

Support of Masses, Rather Than the Few, Urgent, He Tells Conference of Conductors

SPEAKS FOR COMPOSERS

Urges Playing of New Works—Howard Hanson of Eastman School Also Gives Talk

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—In our time, when democracy is the dominating factor of our way of life, we must draw support from the masses of the people for our orchestras, not from any one rich person, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared in a brief address at Tanglewood this afternoon.

Speaking at a meeting of the Conference for Orchestral Conductors, which is meeting here this week-end in conjunction with the eighth annual Berkshire Festival at the Berkshire Music Center, Mr. Koussevitzky made an impassioned appeal for performances of music by contemporary composers.

He told his audience of sixty young conductors of secondary orchestras from thirty States of the Union and of students of the center that no leader had the right to reject any score without the deepest study.

Help for New Composers Urged

"Even if a manuscript, which is twelve or fifteen minutes long, has only twenty bars of worthwhile music, he must play it," Mr. Koussevitzky said. "A composer cannot compose unless he can hear how his work sounds. Schubert's great C Major Symphony was not played until twelve years after his death. That was terrible. In those days composers died of hunger."

Insisting that this must not happen in our own time, Mr. Koussevitzky declared: "Conductors must think of the art of music, not of their personal success. If you love music, you must walk hand in hand with the young composers."

Symphony orchestras must operate today on a basis of a mass audience, Mr. Koussevitzky said. The system of having orchestras maintained by a few still continues, he said, even with the Boston Symphony, but, said Mr. Koussevitzky, "it cannot continue long."

Tells of His Concerts in 1909

"You must go to the people, give them your best, and they will come to you," Mr. Koussevitzky continued. "I speak with authority. In 1909, in Moscow and Petrograd, I gave concerts with a fine orchestra where admission was 5 cents. The hall was packed with workers and poor, young students. Playing for them was my greatest joy."

The conductor must be an example in his community, Mr. Koussevitzky said. He must lead the way in musical taste. His way of living, even his way of dress, must make his audience feel that he has the right to stand before it on the stage.

Speaking of interpretation, Mr. Koussevitzky observed that many musicians think that if they can analyze a score, and know it by heart, they know everything. But he called this "their greatest mistake," which produced only scholastic or wrong performances. He added, "we have many examples of such performances."

"For the other important half of your work," Mr. Koussevitzky said, "I send you to your hearts, brains and emotions. There you must find the inner meaning of a score."

Howard Hanson Also Speaks

The other speaker at this afternoon's meeting was Dr. Howard Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman School of Music of Rochester, who discussed "The Relation of the American Composer to the American Conductor."

He said he felt sometimes that it would be better if all the music from 1750 to 1880 were lost, so that we would create our own beauty. Dr. Hanson envisioned the coming of a great day in American music, for composers here are now creating honestly. At a luncheon meeting at the Morgan House in Lee near here today, Stanley Chapple spoke on "Symphonic Repertory and Problems of Interpretation" and Boris Goldovsky stressed the importance of "Opera in Our Cities."

At a concluding luncheon meeting tomorrow afternoon at Morgan House there will be a discussion of management and orchestral administration, with comments by George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Margaret Grant of the Berkshire Music Center.

Of last night's concert, which opened the second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, only a few words need be added. Mr. Koussevitzky and his Bostonians played the Mozart G minor symphony and Beethoven's "Eroica" with a fine command of their styles and with a stirring projection of their deep, abiding human feeling.

One could quibble about details of tempi perhaps in the "Eroica," but this would not alter the essential fact of the grandeur and humanity of its performance. Sections of the Mozart requiem were done with a big line. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association sang with impact, and while it could not command delicacy of shading and tone, it fitted into the picture.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1941

Second Series Of Berkshire Concerts Opens

Mozart G-Minor Symphony and Beethoven's 'Eroica' on Festival Program

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 7.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is enjoying good luck in weather and attendance records.

This morning, the last seat was sold for tonight's concert, which opens the second series. A detailed review of the program, which includes Mozart's G-minor symphony, six excerpts from the same master's requiem and Beethoven's "Eroica," will be contained in tomorow's dispatch. There is only time now, before the concert begins, to draw a few general conclusions about the nature of this series.

It is certainly not radical. The most adventurous work that has been listed for this week end will be played on Saturday night—Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2 ("Romantic"). I use the word "adventurous" in a comparative sense. Saturday's performance will also bring forward Mozart, Brahms and Wagner.

On Sunday, in place of the expected "fantastic" symphony of Berlioz—in itself no novelty—Dr. Koussevitzky has elected to conduct the fairly familiar Symphony No. 1 of Brahms. The Mozart A-major, also scheduled for Sunday afternoon, will yield to that composer's symphony in E flat. Debussy's "La Mer" remains unscathed.

At such time, one begins to wonder about the purpose of a big symphonic festival. Is it to pull chestnuts—even beautifully roasted chestnuts—out of a bag, or to present a cosmopolitan audience with musical literature which they have not been able to hear during the regular season? Emphasis on performance is a good thing, otherwise we should not have today the brilliant perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But when that perfection is geared in a groove, it often ceases to interest.

The work of the great music academy that is in operation at Tanglewood goes on with its usual significance. A walk around the grounds this afternoon led me to the new functional opera house, whose exterior resembles the Petroleum Building at the late World's Fair.

Inside, Herbert Graf was directing a group of talented students in Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," which is to be done at Tanglewood next Tuesday and Wednesday night.

A further stroll brought the sound of woodwind ensembles, rehearsing near the opera house, and I came eventually to a small structure where a double chorus and double orchestra, under the direction of two different conductors who stood about ten feet apart and watched each other's beats with hawk-like intensity, were performing antiphonal music by Heinrich Schuetz. The noted composer, Paul Hindemith, could be noted among the choristers, singing lustily.

This activity was part of the school's music and culture department, which revives in actual performance works of centuries past. The picturesque sight was heightened by the presence outside the small structure of the second orchestra (woodwinds, brass and double bass).

As the participants earnestly recreated the music of the seventeenth century, a scattering of abandoned electric light bulbs about the base of a near-by tree offered a properly modern counterpoint.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 6 - 1941

Acoustics Of Music Shed U

Favorable Weather Brings Improvement In Tonal Qualities, Reviewer Finds

(Special to The Republican)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 5—Before audiences estimated to have surpassed all previous records in attendance, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzsky, presented Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon two programs of both musical and theoretical interest. The Music Shed, a large conical structure in which the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts are held, proved once again that acoustically it cannot be surpassed in any outdoor auditorium in this country.

The concert series resumes on Thursday.

With the change to favorable weather conditions, an improvement in the tonal qualities of the various instrumental units of the orchestra was apparent and necessarily affected the caliber of performance in comparison with that of the opening concert. The first week-end program included three major works, Symphony in A major, No. 4, ("Italian") Opus 90 of Mendelssohn, Beethoven's third Overture to "Leonore," Opus 72 and most significantly the Symphony No. 5, Opus 47 of the contemporary Russian composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch.

The first work above listed was performed in all the inherent Mendelssohn romanticism, with its lyric quality and buoyant rhythms. Especially well executed was the long line of the second movement and the spirited presto of the final Saltarello. In all four movements, the interpretive approach was in idiom and projected with the cultivated finesse of a true Mendelssohn translation.

The Beethoven Overture, No. 3, to "Leonore" is exceptionally well adapted to performance in such an auditorium as the Music Shed, in respect to the off-stage trumpet sections which climax the orchestral passages and bear dramatic quality. The placement of this overture before an intermission and between two strikingly contrasted works is evidence of the imaginative art in program building which, with little variation, marks a Koussevitzky program bill.

Shostakovitch Symphony Scores

Both interpretively and technically, the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony was the high point of not only the Saturday evening program but of the offerings of the week-end. Despite the simplicity with which this contemporary work is scored, the emotional depths with which it is imbued can only be ascribed to the Russian temperament, and only translated in full vigor and sincerity when in the hands of one himself a part of this people. Under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky, the symphony seemed to realize its deepest Russian portent and to verify the rebellion of one composer against a conformed standard of contemporary music, as well as a prescribed national conscience. It was, in all four movements, a monumental achievement on the part of both conductor and orchestra and tribute to one of our most important musical figures.

The program which followed on Sunday afternoon was not as successful in several points as that of the above discussed. The two major works included were the Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98 and the Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra by Paul Hindemith with Gregor Piatigorsky, world famous cellist, as guest artist. Supplementing was the orchestral nocturne, "Quiet City" of Aaron Copland and the Capriccio Espagnol, Opus 34, of Rimsky-Korsakov.

The Hindemith work was performed from mansucript and could best be discussed after sufficient hearings. The difficult cello passages were executed with the complete mastery of instrument from a technical conideration and the musical artistry of Piatigorsky. The work as a whole contains a mingling of humour, intensity, strikingly compact thematic developments and some questionable orchestration on first hearing which seems to cloud the usual clarity of a Hindemith score. But the vigour and spontaneity which pervades the composer's style was apparent, and the brilliant contrapuntal passage which stand out from certain homophonic romanticism are in this score as well.

Awe-Inspiring

"Quiet City" of Copland, which features trumpet, English horn and strings, lost much of its subtle beauty and dramatic connotations in Sunday's performance. At least one listener was conscious of the lack of sympathetic understanding in this reading.

If any important musical heights were attained in the program, one must look to the Brahms symphony. At moments, the inevitability of the interpretive approach was awe-inspiring, but these were pitted against a few lifeless technical moments which kept the work from being the interpretive masterpiece that it has been at times in the past under the same hands. The first movement, however, was of such great inherent artistry, coupled with perfect instrumental tone and balance, that whatever digressions from the opening standard may have been felt, they were understandable in view of a natural comparison.

CELINE KOESTER

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
Aug 4, 1941

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 9 - 1941

USO Benefits By Berkshire Music Festival

The program in detail is announced for the gala benefit to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Friday, at Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass. The benefit will be held the final week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief.

The festivities will begin at 5.30 p. m. when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to perform marches under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The program will be as follows: Combined bands of the 26th. Division, 250 players under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky; Berkshire Music Center on Parade, simultaneous performances by the orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's, Rio Grande; instrumental ensembles, opera scenes from Hansel and Gretel, Otello, Falstaff, and Czar and Carpenter; the manifestation, speakers to be introduced by Randall Thompson's Allelulia Chorus; gala concert in the Shed, by the Boston Symphony, including Fifth Symphony by Beethoven, Mars, the Bringer of War, and Venus, the Bringer of Peace from The Planets by Holst; concerto for violin and orchestra (Mendelssohn) Albert Spalding, violinist; Festival Chorus Overture 1812 by Tschaikowsky, by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the bands of the 26th Division.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 10 1941

MUSIC REVIEW

By Isabelle Workman Evans

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Threatening clouds during the early evening did not dampen the enthusiasm of thousands of people who had assembled from all parts of the country for the Saturday evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. In this Tanglewood shed, which houses 6,000 persons in a territory of some 1½ acres, ovations are accorded for the interpretative talents of the piano soloist, Leonard Shure, and the creative genius of Howard Hanson.

Mr. Shure provided an excellent interpretation of Brahm's Concerto No. 2 in B Flat, with excellent tonal balance achieved between soloist and orchestra. This pianist is well known to Buffalo chamber music audiences and the musicianship for which he has been admired was apparent in a lyric and beautifully phrased performance of Brahms. Complex rhythms were clearly defined and the third movement, with its 'cello solos, was eloquent emotionally.

Howard Hanson is a great influence in present day musical life, not only in the field of composition but also in that of education. His music displays absolute knowledge of form and at the same time originality of expression not too dissonant to be pleasing to the ear. His second symphony as played last evening was unified and of fascinating tonal color. It is a brilliantly orchestrated work and of course, was heard to best advantage under the guiding hand of Dr. Koussevitzky. It gave the impression of being music which will live and carry to future generations a message native to the soil of America. Dr. Hanson and Dr. Koussevitzky were recalled many times to acknowledge the applause.

The wonderful tonal genius of Wagner was superbly presented by the orchestra in prelude to Lohengrin and prelude to Die Meistersinger.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
AUG 10 1941

Stockbridge Festival Attracts Big Crowd Of Symphony Devotees

Boston Orchestra Presents Nine Concerts In Summer Series; Estate Provides Beautiful Setting

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Mrs. Gorham Brook's magnificent "Tanglewood" estate here that she deeded in perpetuity to the Boston Symphony Orchestra several years ago so that the annual events of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival might have a permanent home, has virtually become the most important center of summer music activity in the United States.

These annual concerts, nine in number this year, together with the development of the Berkshire Music Center for summer music advanced study—are fulfilling a long cherished dream of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With each passing year ever since the Boston Orchestra began giving its season of notable concerts here, crowds of symphony devotees come from various parts of the country to dedicate a portion of precious vacation time to attending the Festival.

Mr. Lewando

This year, again, vast audiences ranging in size from about 8000 to nearly 10,000 at each event, are here to listen to great music surpassingly performed, amid a sylvan setting of expansive vernal beauty that further stimulates the artistic experience and adds incalculably to the spirit of well-being.

The Festival seems to have a magnetic hold on its patrons. Even bad weather has no deterring effect on attendance. That the Festival is weather-proof in this connection is indicated by the fact that an audience of nearly 8000 turned out for the opening concert after a downpour of days that ceased only a few hours before the sounding of the bell that called the faithful to their seats in the immense fan-shaped shed, and others who preferred sitting on the grass beyond its confines. In fact, the acoustic arrangements make possible effective listening even a couple of hundred yards beyond the shed limits.

* * *

The wide public interest that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president, has developed throughout the land, is revealed by the presence this year of 101 press representatives. Although the festival events attract many famous men and women of the realms of music, art and letters, the annual concerts are signalized by an influx of the elite of society and politics.

Among patrons in the latter category attending the first concert were Governor Herbert H. Lehmann of New York, Representative Heaton I. Treadway (R., Mass.), Major John Warner, superintendent of New York State Police, an excellent pianist, and Norman Davis.

At the opening event the enthusiastic acclaim that greeted the orchestra and its leader attest to their great popularity and to the unique position they occupy in the world of musical art. Nor were the approbative demonstrations, at subsequent concerts, by comparison, any the less exciting.

* * *

The opening program was devoted to Haydn's 88th symphony in G-major; Debussy's two nocturnes: Clouds, and Festivals, and The Afternoon of a Faun by the same composer, the latter work substituted at the 11th hour for the third Debussy nocturne, namely, Sirens, due to inability of the women's chorus, needed in this work, to achieve the fullest implications of the score; the No. 10 Choros, "Rasga O Coracao" ("Rend My Meart"), and Beethoven's 5th symphony.

It was my first hearing—aside from the recording—of the Villa-Lobos work. Here is remarkable writing, in an idiom foreign to our ears, of a choral-symphonic piece that is rich in tonal scope and admirable in instrumental treatment. It is highly original. The composer calls this number a "new form of musical composition in which are synthetized the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian (South American, of course) and popular music, having for principal elements rhythm and any type of melody of popular character."

The composer's instrumentation in addition to the usual strings and winds include timpani, snare drum, tamtam, tambourine, caxambu (glass bottle filled with gravel), puita (small animal roar—tin cylinder about 15 inches deep and 10 inches in diameter with a drum-head on one end and a gut string rubbed with rosin which extends from the center of the drum-head through the cylinder—it is played by tightly pulling the hand over the strings), reco-reco (ratchet stick, large and small), xucalho (rattle, in wood and metal), and strings.

This work evoked hearty response, both the orchestra and the chorus sharing the applause with the conductor.

* * *

The second program, cleverly arranged, comprised Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, No. 4; the 3rd "Lenore" overture of Beethoven and Shostakovitch's 5th symphony—a combination of works as marvelously performed as juxtaposed.

Of exceeding interest, to the cognoscenti at least, was the third concert list which embraced Brahms' 4th symphony in E-minor, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for trumpet, English horn and stings; Paul Hindemith's concerto for violoncello and orchestra, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice.

New to these ears were the Copland and Hindemith works. Both composers have a large following. Both are teachers at the Berkshire Music Center. The Copland opus is a symphonic rewrite of a score originally composed for a play by Irwin Shaw. This impressionistic number is designed to express the thoughts of different kinds of people at night in a large city. It calls for "music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity."

In his characteristic idiom of musical speech Mr. Copland has in this poetic work achieved fine tonal effects that in turn create the moods he sought to convey.

* * *

The final three concerts of the Festival will be given on Thursday and Saturday nights of this week and next Sunday afternoon.

The first concert will feature Handel's concerto No. 10, in D-minor, of Handel with E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis which will enlist soloists and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. On Saturday the program will embrace Vaughn-Williams' London Symphony, and Samuel Barber's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and three Wagnerian items: Prelude to Parsifal, Good Friday, from Parsifal, and overture to Tannhauser.

The final event next Sunday will list Sibelius' 7th symphony, Prokofieff's suite, "Lieutenant Kije," and Tschaikowsky's 5th symphony.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 10 1941

Thousands Visit "Tanglewood" With First Lady of Land Among Notable Listeners

The thousands visiting Tanglewood this season to enjoy the highly polished and extremely interesting concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival are meeting numerous notable folk from many states in the Union. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt motored over Thursday night from her home at Hyde Park for the first concert in the second series under Dr. Serge Koussivitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Musical Association of 150 voices under Horace Hunt.

The third and final series of concerts is to open next Thursday night and there will be festival concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and a benefit event Friday starting at 5:30 o'clock for U. S. O. and British war relief.

Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox are added to the long list of sponsors for the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Honorary sponsors are the six New England governors and trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

More than half the boxes have been sold for the gala benefit to be given for the USO and British War Relief at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., Friday, Aug. 15, by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center. There is likewise a brisk demand for general admission tickets.

Among features of the benefit will be the appearance of a 250-piece band from Camp Edwards to be led by Dr. Koussevitsky. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, chief bandmaster of the 26th Division have been at Tanglewood to make arrangements for the band to bivouac on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac.

The Governors of all the New England states and trustees of the Festival and the orchestra invite everyone from everywhere to join to help make this manifestation a tremendous success.

All over New England and in the Hudson Valley, hundreds of women are serving under community chairmen, selling tickets, distributing posters and doing everything they can to promote the Tanglewood event. Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield and Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York are co-chairmen of the ticket committee.

On the grounds at Tanglewood will be served a New England supper of baked beans and brown bread or salads and cold cuts with desserts and hot and cold drinks. The price will be moderate and a liberal amount of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will the money from the refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 10 1941

Music World

By Isabelle Workman Evans

A typical day on the grounds of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood is filled by meetings with fascinating personalities and by incidents unexpected and unheralded. Following the interesting hours of hearing one of Koussevitzki's rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the writer was rushed to the so-called tuning shed at the rear of the main shed to meet little Kenneth Wolf of Cleveland. Kenneth, who will arrive at his tenth year this month, played a movement of a Bethoven sonata and a prelude of his own composition.

Tallulah Bankhead, a close friend of Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky, was present as were Pierre Luboshutz, pianist, and Edwin McArthur, accompanist for Kirsten Flagstad and Wagnerian conductor. Dr. Koussevitzky fired questions at Kenneth and received answers of amazing precocity. The child is far ahead of children of his age in general and specific knowledge. His speech states facts as though he were reading from an encyclopedia and one wonders if future years will provide creative thought to match the retentive memory.

At approximately the noon hour the field cafeteria, a small truck, was admitted to the grounds and persons automatically verged to this point from all directions. Those who enjoyed the inexpensively priced food and carried their trays to picnic tables under the trees included several members of the orchestra board and the manager, Mr. Judd, discussing plans for the gala benefit concert for British relief August 15th, as well as Donald Greason, the artist, whose paintings of the Boston Orchestra are renowned.

Hugh Ross who demonstrated so beautifully the vocal effects which he wishes his chorus to produce was another picnicker. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony, who is called "papa" by the scholarship students from South America was guiding his proteges. Only two of the five students speak English so "papa" is very busy. Incidentally there are 33 pianists enrolled in the chamber music classes of the center.

Readeres probably will be interested in the unusual prizes to be presented by Elsa Maxwell to the draw ticket winners at the British benefit concert next Friday. The prizes include: A $50 defense bond, Koussevitzky's recording of Brahms Fourth Symphony, a set of Spaldings matched woods, autographed photos of Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky as well as one of Albert Spalding, a year's subscription of a magazine, a cocker spaniel puppy, and most amazingly, a Sky Farm pedigreed 1940 Guernsey heifer, papers included. One wonders whether the heifer will be happy in the studio of the potential winner. Such is life at Tanglewood!

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
Aug 9, 1941

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 9 - 1941

USO Benefits By Berkshire Music Festival

The program in detail is announced for the gala benefit to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Friday, at Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass. The benefit will be held the final week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief.

The festivities will begin at 5.30 p. m. when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to perform marches under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The program will be as follows: Combined bands of the 26th. Division, 250 players under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky; Berkshire Music Center on Parade, simultaneous performances by the orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's, Rio Grande; instrumental ensembles, opera scenes from Hansel and Gretel, Otello, Falstaff, and Czar and Carpenter; the manifestation, speakers to be introduced by Randall Thompson's Allelulia Chorus; gala concert in the Shed, by the Boston Symphony, including Fifth Symphony by Beethoven, Mars, the Bringer of War, and Venus, the Bringer of Peace from The Planets by Holst; concerto for violin and orchestra (Mendelssohn) Albert Spalding, violinist; Festival Chorus Overture 1812 by Tschaikowsky, by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the bands of the 26th Division.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 10 1941

MUSIC REVIEW

By Isabelle Workman Evans

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Threatening clouds during the early evening did not dampen the enthusiasm of thousands of people who had assembled from all parts of the country for the Saturday evening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. In this Tanglewood shed, which houses 6,000 persons in a territory of some 1½ acres, ovations are accorded for the interpretative talents of the piano soloist, Leonard Shure, and the creative genius of Howard Hanson.

Mr. Shure provided an excellent interpretation of Brahm's Concerto No. 2 in B Flat, with excellent tonal balance achieved between soloist and orchestra. This pianist is well known to Buffalo chamber music audiences and the musicianship for which he has been admired was apparent in a lyric and beautifully phrased performance of Brahms. Complex rhythms were clearly defined and the third movement, with its 'cello solos, was eloquent emotionally.

Howard Hanson is a great influence in present day musical life, not only in the field of composition but also in that of education. His music displays absolute knowledge of form and at the same time originality of expression not too dissonant to be pleasing to the ear. His second symphony as played last evening was unified and of fascinating tonal color. It is a brilliantly orchestrated work and of course, was heard to best advantage under the guiding hand of Dr. Koussevitzky. It gave the impression of being music which will live and carry to future generations a message native to the soil of America. Dr. Hanson and Dr. Koussevitzky were recalled many times to acknowledge the applause.

The wonderful tonal genius of Wagner was superbly presented by the orchestra in prelude to Lohengrin and prelude to Die Meistersinger.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
AUG 10 1941

Stockbridge Festival Attracts Big Crowd Of Symphony Devotees

Boston Orchestra Presents Nine Concerts In Summer Series; Estate Provides Beautiful Setting

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Mrs. Gorham Brook's magnificent "Tanglewood" estate here that she deeded in perpetuity to the Boston Symphony Orchestra several years ago so that the annual events of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival might have a permanent home, has virtually become the most important center of summer music activity in the United States.

These annual concerts, nine in number this year, together with the development of the Berkshire Music Center for summer music advanced study—are fulfilling a long cherished dream of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With each passing year ever since the Boston Orchestra began giving its season of notable concerts here, crowds of symphony devotees come from various parts of the country to dedicate a portion of precious vacation time to attending the Festival.

Mr. Lewando

This year, again, vast audiences ranging in size from about 8000 to nearly 10,000 at each event, are here to listen to great music surpassingly performed, amid a sylvan setting of expansive vernal beauty that further stimulates the artistic experience and adds incalculably to the spirit of well-being.

The Festival seems to have a magnetic hold on its patrons. Even bad weather has no deterring effect on attendance. That the Festival is weather-proof in this connection is indicated by the fact that an audience of nearly 8000 turned out for the opening concert after a downpour of days that ceased only a few hours before the sounding of the bell that called the faithful to their seats in the immense fan-shaped shed, and others who preferred sitting on the grass beyond its confines. In fact, the acoustic arrangements make possible effective listening even a couple of hundred yards beyond the shed limits.

* * *

The wide public interest that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president, has developed throughout the land, is revealed by the presence this year of 101 press representatives. Although the festival events attract many famous men and women of the realms of music, art and letters, the annual concerts are signalized by an influx of the elite of society and politics.

Among patrons in the latter category attending the first concert were Governor Herbert H. Lehmann of New York, Representative Heaton I. Treadway (R., Mass.), Major John Warner, superintendent of New York State Police, an excellent pianist, and Norman Davis.

At the opening event the enthusiastic acclaim that greeted the orchestra and its leader attest to their great popularity and to the unique position they occupy in the world of musical art. Nor were the approbative demonstrations, at subsequent concerts, by comparison, any the less exciting.

* * *

The opening program was devoted to Haydn's 88th symphony in G-major; Debussy's two nocturnes: Clouds, and Festivals, and The Afternoon of a Faun by the same composer, the latter work substituted at the 11th hour for the third Debussy nocturne, namely, Sirens, due to inability of the women's chorus, needed in this work, to achieve the fullest implications of the score; the No. 10 Choros, "Rasga O Coracao" ("Rend My Meart"), and Beethoven's 5th symphony.

It was my first hearing—aside from the recording—of the Villa-Lobos work. Here is remarkable writing, in an idiom foreign to our ears, of a choral-symphonic piece that is rich in tonal scope and admirable in instrumental treatment. It is highly original. The composer calls this number a "new form of musical composition in which are synthetized the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian (South American, of course) and popular music, having for principal elements rhythm and any type of melody of popular character."

The composer's instrumentation in addition to the usual strings and winds include timpani, snare drum, tamtam, tambourine, caxambu (glass bottle filled with gravel), puita (small animal roar—tin cylinder about 15 inches deep and 10 inches in diameter with a drum-head on one end and a gut string rubbed with rosin which extends from the center of the drum-head through the cylinder—it is played by tightly pulling the hand over the strings), reco-reco (ratchet stick, large and small), xucalho (rattle, in wood and metal), and strings.

This work evoked hearty response, both the orchestra and the chorus sharing the applause with the conductor.

* * *

The second program, cleverly arranged, comprised Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, No. 4; the 3rd "Lenore" overture of Beethoven and Shostakovitch's 5th symphony—a combination of works as marvelously performed as juxtaposed.

Of exceeding interest, to the cognoscenti at least, was the third concert list which embraced Brahms' 4th symphony in E-minor, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for trumpet, English horn and stings; Paul Hindemith's concerto for violoncello and orchestra, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice.

New to these ears were the Copland and Hindemith works. Both composers have a large following. Both are teachers at the Berkshire Music Center. The Copland opus is a symphonic rewrite of a score originally composed for a play by Irwin Shaw. This impressionistic number is designed to express the thoughts of different kinds of people at night in a large city. It calls for "music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity."

In his characteristic idiom of musical speech Mr. Copland has in this poetic work achieved fine tonal effects that in turn create the moods he sought to convey.

* * *

The final three concerts of the Festival will be given on Thursday and Saturday nights of this week and next Sunday afternoon.

The first concert will feature Handel's concerto No. 10, in D-minor, of Handel with E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis which will enlist soloists and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. On Saturday the program will embrace Vaughn-Williams' London Symphony, and Samuel Barber's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and three Wagnerian items: Prelude to Parsifal, Good Friday, from Parsifal, and overture to Tannhauser.

The final event next Sunday will list Sibelius' 7th symphony, Prokofieff's suite, "Lieutenant Kije," and Tschaikowsky's 5th symphony.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 10 1941

Thousands Visit "Tanglewood" With First Lady of Land Among Notable Listeners

The thousands visiting Tanglewood this season to enjoy the highly polished and extremely interesting concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival are meeting numerous notable folk from many states in the Union. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt motored over Thursday night from her home at Hyde Park for the first concert in the second series under Dr. Serge Koussivitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Musical Association of 150 voices under Horace Hunt.

The third and final series of concerts is to open next Thursday night and there will be festival concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and a benefit event Friday starting at 5:30 o'clock for U. S. O. and British war relief.

Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox are added to the long list of sponsors for the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Honorary sponsors are the six New England governors and trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

More than half the boxes have been sold for the gala benefit to be given for the USO and British War Relief at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., Friday, Aug. 15, by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center. There is likewise a brisk demand for general admission tickets.

Among features of the benefit will be the appearance of a 250-piece band from Camp Edwards to be led by Dr. Koussevitsky. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, chief bandmaster of the 26th Division have been at Tanglewood to make arrangements for the band to bivouac on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac.

The Governors of all the New England states and trustees of the Festival and the orchestra invite everyone from everywhere to join to help make this manifestation a tremendous success.

All over New England and in the Hudson Valley, hundreds of women are serving under community chairmen, selling tickets, distributing posters and doing everything they can to promote the Tanglewood event. Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield and Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York are co-chairmen of the ticket committee.

On the grounds at Tanglewood will be served a New England supper of baked beans and brown bread or salads and cold cuts with desserts and hot and cold drinks. The price will be moderate and a liberal amount of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will the money from the refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 10 1941

Music World

By Isabelle Workman Evans

A typical day on the grounds of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood is filled by meetings with fascinating personalities and by incidents unexpected and unheralded. Following the interesting hours of hearing one of Koussevitzki's rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the writer was rushed to the so-called tuning shed at the rear of the main shed to meet little Kenneth Wolf of Cleveland. Kenneth, who will arrive at his tenth year this month, played a movement of a Bethoven sonata and a prelude of his own composition.

Tallulah Bankhead, a close friend of Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky, was present as were Pierre Luboshutz, pianist, and Edwin McArthur, accompanist for Kirsten Flagstad and Wagnerian conductor. Dr. Koussevitzky fired questions at Kenneth and received answers of amazing precocity. The child is far ahead of children of his age in general and specific knowledge. His speech states facts as though he were reading from an encyclopedia and one wonders if future years will provide creative thought to match the retentive memory.

At approximately the noon hour the field cafeteria, a small truck, was admitted to the grounds and persons automatically verged to this point from all directions. Those who enjoyed the inexpensively priced food and carried their trays to picnic tables under the trees included several members of the orchestra board and the manager, Mr. Judd, discussing plans for the gala benefit concert for British relief August 15th, as well as Donald Greason, the artist, whose paintings of the Boston Orchestra are renowned.

Hugh Ross who demonstrated so beautifully the vocal effects which he wishes his chorus to produce was another picnicker. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony, who is called "papa" by the scholarship students from South America was guiding his proteges. Only two of the five students speak English so "papa" is very busy. Incidentally there are 33 pianists enrolled in the chamber music classes of the center.

Readeres probably will be interested in the unusual prizes to be presented by Elsa Maxwell to the draw ticket winners at the British benefit concert next Friday. The prizes include: A $50 defense bond, Koussevitzky's recording of Brahms Fourth Symphony, a set of Spaldings matched woods, autographed photos of Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky as well as one of Albert Spalding, a year's subscription of a magazine, a cocker spaniel puppy, and most amazingly, a Sky Farm pedigreed 1940 Guernsey heifer, papers included. One wonders whether the heifer will be happy in the studio of the potential winner. Such is life at Tanglewood!

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 0 1941

Listeners to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood

Part of the crowd which heard last Sunday's Berkshire Festival concert on the lawn outside of the Music Shed

John Mahe

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 1 0 1941

BERKSHIRE OPERA PLANNED FOR 1942

Works of Festival Nature in Natural Setting May Be Added to Tanglewood Concerts

MORE PROGRAMS URGED

Extension to Four Weeks Next Season Considered—Gala USO Benefit on Friday

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9—As the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival resumed tonight at Tanglewood with audiences still mounting to new record figures, authorities of the festival association and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the two organizations whose cooperation makes this evening the most important of its kind in the land—were beginning to think ahead to next year.

The chances are exceedingly fair that the scope of the 1942 festival will be expanded further, if world affairs do not intervene. Present plans, still in the discussion stage, look to the addition of operatic performances to the festival programs. How such opera productions would be integrated in the festival program is being worked out, but the groundwork is being laid this season in the work of Herbert Graf and his opera-dramatics division of the Berkshire Music Center, which is an adjunct of the festival.

Outdoor Opera Discussed

If opera is added to the festival offerings, it will be produced directly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra rather than the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., it was learned here today. These operas would be works of a festival nature that would be given to best advantage in the beauteous surroundings of the mighty hills of Berkshire and the greensward and trees of Tanglewood.

They would not be the conventional works that are standard in the Metropolitan Opera repertory, but operas that are off the beaten path and yet richly viable as music and theatre.

The opera-dramatics division is producing Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" next week, on Tuesday and Wednesday nights before an invited audience. The present small company of singers is regarded here as a nucleus for a theatre group that would perform before a paying public next year. The new theatre, which was built for this year's session of the Music Center and the festival at a cost of about $40,000, is ready for use if opera is decided upon for next Summer.

Festival May Be Extended

The record-breaking turnouts that have marked the first five concerts of this year's festival have given rise to rumors that the symphonic aspect of the festival may be extended next year. Voices have been raised in behalf of a four-week festival, instead of the three-week program of this Summer and last. The board of trustees of the festival corporation is scheduled to meet next week to discuss plans for the coming season.

In the meantime, the energies of festival and orchestra boards are being devoted to making a smashing success of the gala benefit for the USO and British War Relief next Friday evening. One of the highlights will be the appearance of the combined bands of the Twenty-sixth Division of the United States Army, comprising more than 250 men, who will be led in a program by Mr. Koussevitzky.

The Berkshire Music Center forces will take over after the band, giving scenes from opera, orchestral and choral works and chamber music compositions. The manifestation, with distinguished speakers, possibly headed by Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, will follow.

After time out for picnic suppers and country dancing on the lawn, the Boston Symphony, led by Mr. Koussevitzky, will give a formal program, with the festival chorus taking part. Albert Spalding will be the soloist. This program will end with the Boston Orchestra combining with the Twenty-sixth Division bands and the Center Orchestra—a total of more than 450—in Tchaikovsky's "Overture 1812."

The draw for prizes, with Elsa Maxwell presiding, will follow. Among the prizes will be a pedigreed Guernsey heifer, a pair of tickets for next year's festival, a $50 defense bond, several recordings, golf clubs, a portable radio, a phonograph, a dozen pair of Nylon stockings, a cocker spaniel puppy, a bicycle, a white leather handbag, a dinner for two in style at the Curtis Hotel here, a tortoise-shell fan contributed by Lucrezia Bori and autographed by her, and a ton of coal delivered anywhere in the United States.

At tonight's concert there was one American work on the program, Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony. The list began with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." Leonard Shure was the soloist in Brahms's Second piano concerto, and the program ended with the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Meistersinger."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 1 0 1941

Berkshire Music Festival Will End Next Sunday

Series B of the Berkshire Music festival will come to a close this afternoon when Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston symphony orchestra in Mozart's A-major symphony, Debussy's "LaMer" and the Fantastic symphony of Berlioz.

Series C, the final of the summer, will open Thursday night when several soloists will be heard with the orchestra. E. Power Biggs, organist, with the orchestra, will play Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, Noll in D-minor. A quartet of soloists of the Berkshire festival chorus will sing Beethoven's "Missa Solemnia." The quartet is composed of Rose Dirman, soprano, Hertha Glaz, contralto, John Priebe, tenor and Julius Huehn, bass.

Saturday night, Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be soloist with the orchestra. She will play the violin concerto by Barber. Orchestral numbers are Vaughan Williams's "London" symphony and the prelude and Good Friday spell from "Parsifal" and overture to "Tannhauser" by Richard Wagner.

The series will end and bring the festival to a close Sunday, the 17th. The program contains the Sibelius symphony No 7. Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tchaikowsky's Fifth.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 1 0 1941

13

Benefit for USO, British War Relief Friday At Tanglewood

A Gala Benefit for United Service Organizations and British War Relief will be held at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Friday at 5.30 p. m. under auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The program will be held, rain or shine.

There will be a draw for prizes at the flagpole at 10.40, after the concert. Fireworks and playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" will follow.

Unreserved tickets are two dollars, tickets to the reserved section five dollars, boxes seating six, fifty dollars.

The program:

Combined Bands of the 26th Division, 250 Players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky; Berkshire Music Center on Parade, Simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center; In the Shed, Orchestra and Chorus; In the Theater, Opera; In the Chamber Music Hall, Instrumental Ensembles; Fanfare, The Manifestation. Distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings engendered by the day's program, itself constituting a Manifestation of unity in diversity, under freedom—the American way of life.

LAWN PARTY—Picnic Supper, and other refreshments, including beer.

FANFARE

GALA CONCERT—In the Shed.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

"Fifth Symphony" (Allegro con brio) ..... Beethoven

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conducting

"Mars, the Bringer of War," "Venus, the Bringer of Peace" from "The Planets" ..... Holst

STANLEY CHAPPLE, Conducting

Concerto for Violin and Orchestra ..... Mendelssohn

ALBERT SPALDING, Soloist

"Hallelujah" Chorus from "The Messiah" ..... Handel

FESTIVAL CHORUS

Overture "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky

Combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras and the Bands of the 26th Division

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conducting

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 1 0 1941

MUSIC

Berkshire Arts Are Dev

Dance and Drama Follow Music as Tourist Crowds Increase

By HENRY SIMON

When the Salzburg festival started, its chief attraction for the tourist trade was the music. Pretty soon Max Reinhardt offered dramatic spectacles as well and inevitably the dance followed.

A somewhat parallel development seems to be taking place in the Berkshire Hills. The purpose of the Berkshire Music Center is chiefly educational, and the annual three week ends of concerts that constitute the festival are a natural culmination to a summer of study under a distinguished faculty. Yet the high standards of performance at the orchestra concerts, the excellent acoustics of the Center's music shed and the beautiful vacationland in which it all takes place, make a crowded tourist mecca of Lenox and Stockbridge for the first three week ends of August.

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, leaves the music shed after a 4-hour rehearsal.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1941

Berkshire Festival Weekend

IN FIVE years of annual Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival-going at beautiful Tanglewood in the hills of northern Masasachusetts, there has never been a year like this. Although on last Sunday afternoon the conservative Associated Press said there were nearly 10,000 in the music shed, there was no sense of confusion or of crowds. First note of the Brahms Symphony found the voices hushed. Not an untoward sound marred its progression of heavenly harmonies.

In the five years I have never run into rain at Tanglewood, either before or after the shed was built in 1938. There have been billowing white clouds over the far-off hills and the distant lake. There have been blue skies showing through the pines "off-stage", deeper at night under moon and starlight that first weekend in August. Now there are three series to choose from. There were 3000 or more cars at one time, this year on the hillside below the enclosure. State troopers help handle this traffic problem. People can (and do) wander the grounds for hours before the concert, lost in the vast acres in colorful panorama. There is incidental entertaining at inns and Summer estates nearby in Stockbridge, Lee and Pittsfield. But this is not the real festival.

That is made by the music and the musicians, led so brilliantly and so long by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. This is no idle holiday for the 110 men who play three concerts a week in the three successive week-ends of the "season," except as the music is their life as well as livelihood. Nowhere else, say the greatest of critics is deathless music performed as it is there. The director refuses to give more than three concerts a week, the utmost number that can be done well, and he holds valiantly to this tradition.

Musicians find the Saturday morning rehearsal a marvelous experience. On Friday evenings there is a concert of the student's orchestra of the comparatively new Music Center, in their modernistic new theater almost out of sight from the music shed. This year there was a memorable event during rehearsal. I'll let an eye-witness, Mrs. Leslie P. Leland tell you, Jane, in her own words what took place. (She was a member of the Scribbler's Class at the Worcester Women's Club last January. She tells her story simply and effectively).

The Conductor Speaks

"LAST WEEK during the student's concert the young student conductor then on the platform turned to the audience and said that since it was Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday the school had prepared a small tribute to him. Then the orchestra broke into the strains of "Happy Birthday to you" and the chorus joined the instrumentalists. One of the students had written and elaborated a parody of the familiar song. Dr. K. went on the stage," writes Mrs. Leland, "with a gesture which seemed to say 'what can I do about all this,' turned to the students and made a very sincere and touching speech.

"'My children—my life, my love and my work are yours' and he went on to pledge his devotion, and to remind them of the privilege of working in a 'truly free' America. Then with a gesture wholly European he kissed composer and conductor!

"At the opening of Saturday morning's rehearsal Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, president of the Berkshire Festival, came forward and announced the tragic death on Monday of Norval H. Busey, Jr., its vice-president, and Dr. Koussevitzky had asked the privilege of playing a funeral march, tribute to the official's untiring efforts for the festival. (The flag in the square at Pittsfield was at half staff in his honor).

"The rehearsals are most informal and interesting. Olin Downes, the critic and commentator speaks of the music to be rehearsed. This time he told at length of a meeting with the Russian composer Shostakovitch (whose 5th symphony was highlight of the Saturday evening concert) in Leningrad. He also traced the form of that symphony that was rehearsed in its entirety. Gregor Piatagorsky, the Sunday afternoon 'cello soloist, dark, slim, and handsome, thoroughly rehearsed for his "Cello-Koncert" by Hindemith. The orchestra has probably played the final rehearsal number Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" hundreds of times, yet the conductor spent nearly an hour on that alone!"

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1941

A NEW ENGLAND manifesto calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, Aug. 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful concert of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc. Again all the forces at Tanglewood — the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will co-operate in presenting the manifestation. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1941

Koussevitzky's Students Heard At Stockbridge

Four Conductors Perform With School Orchestra; Rita Laplante Is Soloist

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—The charm of Tanglewood and the many activities connected with the school of music here provide full artistic experiences even on days when there are no official concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last night there was a public performance in the music shed by four students of Serge Koussevitzky conducting the "first" orchestra of the school.

Leonard Bernstein, a shadowgraph of his famous instructor, made the most definite impression, directing a prelude and toccata by Gardner Read, who is enrolled in composition this summer at Tanglewood. This work of Read's has been performed before, notably by Stokowski's youth orchestra, and it is effective.

Richard Korn, Walter Hendl and Robert Whitney, also student conductors, merited praise in order of listing.

The student concert served to introduce an extremely talented pianist, Rita Laplante, who played the solo passages in Walter Piston's concertino for piano and orchestra.

This morning brought a public rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which was well attended; and this afternoon, the "second" orchestra of the music school assembled in the shed. This group, composed of non-professionals, played with astonishing quality of tone, sounding not so inferior to the more experienced ensemble that played last night's student concert.

Howard Hanson led them in this third symphony. Dr. Hanson's conducting is admirable and has unfortunately been lost sight of because of his wider reputation as a composer. This afternoon he inspired the young musicians under his direction to the climax of their capabilities.

Tomorrow's review will include detailed comments on tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony, which includes Mozart's string serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; the Hanson "Romantic" symphony, No. 2; Brahms's B-flat piano concerto, with Leonard Shure as soloist, and two Wagnerian preludes—those to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger."

In writing for an early edition, I must close with an account of a concert given on the grounds this afternoon during which the audience lay on the grass or reclined on benches under the trees. In this informal setting, with the gleam of the lake known as Stockbridge Bowl in the background, we heard a program of baroque music, prefaced by a lecture of Olin Downes, who also spoke informatively this morning at the Boston Symphony's public rehearsal.

Rare works by German, English and French composers of the seventeenth century were performed, ending with Johann Pezel's Tower Music for brass, which was played from the roof of the main house.

No finer atmosphere for creative work in music and art can be imagined than Tanglewood. As I type this dispatch, a near-by harpsichord, chorus and orchestra are performing baroque works. Students and lay listeners stroll across the lawn; rehearsals of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" are going on in the school's opera house; and one feels imbedded in this entire project an idealism which does not always go hand in hand with big music organizations.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 10 1941

Array of Notable Guests Attending Music Festival Concerts at Tanglewood

Annual Series by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Assisting Artists Attracts Distinguished List—Numerous Private Social Gatherings Complement Major Berkshire Event — Benefit Program Friday Night Will Serve to Inspire Many More Luncheon Parties —Other Items of Interest to Society in Berkshire Hills

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 9—Many distinguished men and women were in the Music festival boxes again tonight at Tanglewood. Noticed with Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis were Mrs August Belmont of New York city and Mr and Mrs John Fennelly of Chicago, son-in-law and daughter of Mr and Mrs Davis, who are having members of their family as guests at Oronoque, Stockbridge. In a box with Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia of Wheatleigh, Lenox, were Mr and Mrs John Nicholas Brown of Providence, R. I., and Prof Thomas Whittemore, an eminent archeologist of Harvard university.

Hosts at Dinner Party

Mr and Mrs Rodney S. Jarvis had as guests in their box following a dinner party at Wheelbarrow Hill farm, Great Barrington, Mrs Denison D. Dana and her guest, Lady Kemp of Laurel Way, Norfolk; Mr and Mrs George Adams Clark of Darien, Ct., son-in-law and daughter of Mr and Mrs Jarvis; Mrs Ward C. Belcher of Salisbury, Ct., and Mrs Wilbur L. Ruthrauff of Rumson, N. J. Lady Kemp is the widow of Sir Edward A. Kemp of Toronto, Ont. She is the former Miss Virginia Copping of New York city. For several days the coming week Mrs Jarvis is to be the guest of Mrs Kirkwood E. Jewett at Saratoga, N. Y., for the races.

Mrs James Lees Laidlaw of 60 East Sixty-sixth street, New York city, is spending August at her summer home, Mountain-of-Echoes, Hillsdale, N. Y., near Alford, and she was a dinner hostess tonight at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill of Crane hill, Great Barrington, are in a weekend house party given by Mrs Rockhill's brother and sister-in-law, Mr and Mrs William L. Austin at Loudonville, N. Y.

Guests at Lenox Club

Mr and Mrs Philip R. Allen of Spring Brook farm, Walpole, are at the Lenox club until after the big Tanglewood benefit on the 15th for benefit of United Service Organizations and British War Relief, inc. The program will start at 5.30 p. m. with a band concert by 250 musicians from Camp Edwards, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and there will be noted speakers in a "manifestation," which will open with the singing of Randal Thompson's "Alleluia," by the festival chorus. The program will close with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky conductor, with Albert Spalding, soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Last year over $23,000 was raised in a similar war relief benefit.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 10 1941

Tanglewood

Benefit Program Arranged

Complete program of the benefit performance to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox, was announced yesterday by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Highlight of the program will be a repeat performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, performed by the orchestra at the Tanglewood festival's opening a week ago.

Proceeds from the performance will be turned over to the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief fund. The festivities will begin at 5:30 p. m. when combined military bands will assemble to perform marches under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

The program:

Combined bands of the 26th Division, 250 musicians, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Berkshire Music Center on Parade—Simultaneous performance by the Music Center orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's "Rio Grande".

Instrumental Ensembles—Opera scenes from 'Hansel and Gretel,,, "Othello", "Falstaff", "Czzar and Carpenter".

Fanfare

Speakers—to be introduced by Randall Thompson's "Alleluis Chorus".

Lawn Party.

Fanfare

Concert, in the music shed—Boston Symphony orchestra

"Fifth Symphony" ....Beethoven
(Koussevitzky, conducting)

Selections from "The Planets" ..... Holst
(Sidney Chapple conducting

Concerto for violin and orchestra .....Mendelssohn
(Albert Spalding, violinist)

Festival chorus.

Overture "1812" ...Tschaikowsky
(Combined Boston Symphony, Berkshire Music Center orchestras and bands of the 26th division, Koussevitzky conducting.)

Draw for prizes.

Fireworks.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1941

14 ☆

Berkshire Festival Weekend

IN FIVE years of annual Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival-going at beautiful Tanglewood in the hills of northern Masasachusetts, there has never been a year like this. Although on last Sunday afternoon the conservative Associated Press said there were nearly 10,000 in the music shed, there was no sense of confusion or of crowds. First note of the Brahms Symphony found the voices hushed. Not an untoward sound marred its progression of heavenly harmonies.

In the five years I have never run into rain at Tanglewood, either before or after the shed was built in 1938. There have been billowing white clouds over the far-off hills and the distant lake. There have been blue skies showing through the pines "off-stage", deeper at night under moon and starlight that first weekend in August. Now there are three series to choose from. There were 3000 or more cars at one time, this year on the hillside below the enclosure. State troopers help handle this traffic problem. People can (and do) wander the grounds for hours before the concert, lost in the vast acres in colorful panorama. There is incidental entertaining at inns and Summer estates nearby in Stockbridge, Lee and Pittsfield. But this is not the real festival.

That is made by the music and the musicians, led so brilliantly and so long by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. This is no idle holiday for the 110 men who play three concerts a week in the three successive week-ends of the "season," except as the music is their life as well as livelihood. Nowhere else, say the greatest of critics is deathless music performed as it is there. The director refuses to give more than three concerts a week, the utmost number that can be done well, and he holds valiantly to this tradition.

Musicians find the Saturday morning rehearsal a marvelous experience. On Friday evenings there is a concert of the student's orchestra of the comparatively new Music Center, in their modernistic new theater almost out of sight from the music shed. This year there was a memorable event during rehearsal. I'll let an eye-witness, Mrs. Leslie P. Leland tell you, Jane, in her own words what took place. (She was a member of the Scribbler's Class at the Worcester Women's Club last January. She tells her story simply and effectively).

The Conductor Speaks

"LAST WEEK during the student's concert the young student conductor then on the platform turned to the audience and said that since it was Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday the school had prepared a small tribute to him. Then the orchestra broke into the strains of "Happy Birthday to you" and the chorus joined the instrumentalists. One of the students had written and elaborated a parody of the familiar song. Dr. K. went on the stage," writes Mrs. Leland, "with a gesture which seemed to say 'what can I do about all this,' turned to the students and made a very sincere and touching speech.

"'My children—my life, my love and my work are yours' and he went on to pledge his devotion, and to remind them of the privilege of working in a 'truly free' America. Then with a gesture wholly European he kissed composer and conductor!

"At the opening of Saturday morning's rehearsal Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, president of the Berkshire Festival, came forward and announced the tragic death on Monday of Norval H. Busey, Jr., its vice-president, and Dr. Koussevitzky had asked the privilege of playing a funeral march, tribute to the official's untiring efforts for the festival. (The flag in the square at Pittsfield was at half staff in his honor).

"The rehearsals are most informal and interesting. Olin Downes, the critic and commentator speaks of the music to be rehearsed. This time he told at length of a meeting with the Russian composer Shostakovitch (whose 5th symphony was highlight of the Saturday evening concert) in Leningrad. He also traced the form of that symphony that was rehearsed in its entirety. Gregor Piatagorsky, the Sunday afternoon 'cello soloist, dark, slim, and handsome, thoroughly rehearsed for his "Cello-Koncert" by Hindemith. The orchestra has probably played the final rehearsal number Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" hundreds of times, yet the conductor spent nearly an hour on that alone!"

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1941

A NEW ENGLAND manifesto calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, Aug. 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful concert of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc. Again all the forces at Tanglewood — the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will co-operate in presenting the manifestation. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1941

Koussevitzky's Students Heard At Stockbridge

Four Conductors Perform With School Orchestra; Rita Laplante Is Soloist

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—The charm of Tanglewood and the many activities connected with the school of music here provide full artistic experiences even on days when there are no official concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last night there was a public performance in the music shed by four students of Serge Koussevitzky conducting the "first" orchestra of the school.

Leonard Bernstein, a shadowgraph of his famous instructor, made the most definite impression, directing a prelude and toccata by Gardner Read, who is enrolled in composition this summer at Tanglewood. This work of Read's has been performed before, notably by Stokowski's youth orchestra, and it is effective.

Richard Korn, Walter Heindl and Robert Whitney, also student conductors, merited praise in order of listing.

The student concert served to introduce an extremely talented pianist, Rita Laplante, who played the solo passages in Walter Piston's concertino for piano and orchestra.

This morning brought a public rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which was well attended; and this afternoon, the "second" orchestra of the music school assembled in the shed. This group, composed of non-professionals, played with astonishing quality of tone, sounding not so inferior to the more experienced ensemble that played last night's student concert.

Howard Hanson led them in this third symphony. Dr. Hanson's conducting is admirable and has unfortunately been lost sight of because of his wider reputation as a composer. This afternoon he inspired the young musicians under his direction to the climax of their capabilities.

Tomorrow's review will include detailed comments on tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony, which includes Mozart's string serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; the Hanson "Romantic" symphony, No. 2; Brahms's B-flat piano concerto, with Leonard Shure as soloist, and two Wagnerian preludes—those to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger."

In writing for an early edition, I must close with an account of a concert given on the grounds this afternoon during which the audience lay on the grass or reclined on benches under the trees. In this informal setting, with the gleam of the lake known as Stockbridge Bowl in the background, we heard a program of baroque music, prefaced by a lecture of Olin Downes, who also spoke informatively this morning at the Boston Symphony's public rehearsal.

Rare works by German, English and French composers of the seventeenth century were performed, ending with Johann Pezel's Tower Music for brass, which was played from the roof of the main house.

No finer atmosphere for creative work in music and art can be imagined than Tanglewood. As I type this dispatch, a near-by harpsichord, chorus and orchestra are performing baroque works. Students and lay listeners stroll acro[ss] lawn; rehearsals of Mozart's [Co]si Fan Tutte" are going on [in] school's opera house; and on[e] imbedded in this entire proj[ect] idealism which does not alw[ays] hand in hand with big music[al] ganizations.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 10 1941

Array of Notable Guests Attending Music Festival Concerts at Tanglewood

Annual Series by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Assisting Artists Attracts Distinguished List—Numerous Private Social Gatherings Complement Major Berkshire Event — Benefit Program Friday Night Will Serve to Inspire Many More Luncheon Parties —Other Items of Interest to Society in Berkshire Hills

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 9—Many distinguished men and women were in the Music festival boxes again tonight at Tanglewood. Noticed with Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis were Mrs August Belmont of New York city and Mr and Mrs John Fennelly of Chicago, son-in-law and daughter of Mr and Mrs Davis, who are having members of their family as guests at Oronoque, Stockbridge. In a box with Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia of Wheatleigh, Lenox, were Mr and Mrs John Nicholas Brown of Providence, R. I., and Prof Thomas Whittemore, an eminent archeologist of Harvard university.

Hosts at Dinner Party

Mr and Mrs Rodney S. Jarvis had as guests in their box following a dinner party at Wheelbarrow Hill farm, Great Barrington, Mrs Denison D. Dana and her guest, Lady Kemp of Laurel Way, Norfolk; Mr and Mrs George Adams Clark of Darien, Ct., son-in-law and daughter of Mr and Mrs Jarvis; Mrs Ward C. Belcher of Salisbury, Ct., and Mrs Wilbur L. Ruthrauff of Rumson, N. J. Lady Kemp is the widow of Sir Edward A. Kemp of Toronto, Ont. She is the former Miss Virginia Copping of New York city. For several days the coming week Mrs Jarvis is to be the guest of Mrs Kirkwood E. Jewett at Saratoga, N. Y., for the races.

Mrs James Lees Laidlaw of 60 East Sixty-sixth street, New York city, is spending August at her summer home, Mountain-of-Echoes, Hillsdale, N. Y., near Alford, and she was a dinner hostess tonight at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill of Crane hill, Great Barrington, are in a weekend house party given by Mrs Rockhill's brother and sister-in-law, Mr and Mrs William L. Austin at Loudonville, N. Y.

Guests at Lenox Club

Mr and Mrs Philip R. Allen of Spring Brook farm, Walpole, are at the Lenox club until after the big Tanglewood benefit on the 15th for benefit of United Service Organizations and British War Relief, inc. The program will start at 5.30 p. m. with a band concert by 250 musicians from Camp Edwards, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and there will be noted speakers in a "manifestation," which will open with the singing of Randal Thompson's "Alleluia," by the festival chorus. The program will close with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky conductor, with Albert Spalding, soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Last year over $23,000 was raised in a similar war relief benefit.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 10 1941

Tanglewood

Benefit Program Arranged

Complete program of the benefit performance to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox, was announced yesterday by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Highlight of the program will be a repeat performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, performed by the orchestra at the Tanglewood festival's opening a week ago.

Proceeds from the performance will be turned over to the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief fund. The festivities will begin at 5:30 p. m. when combined military bands will assemble to perform marches under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

The program:

Combined bands of the 26th Division, 250 musicians, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Berkshire Music Center on Parade—Simultaneous performance by the Music Center orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's "Rio Grande".

Instrumental Ensembles—Opera scenes from 'Hansel and Gretel,,, "Othello", "Falstaff", "Czzar and Carpenter".

Fanfare

Speakers—to be introduced by Randall Thompson's "Alleluia Chorus".

Lawn Party.

Fanfare

Concert, in the music shed—Boston Symphony orchestra

"Fifth Symphony" ....Beethoven
(Koussevitzky, conducting)

Selections from "The Planets" ..... Holst
(Sidney Chapple conducting

Concerto for violin and orchestra .....Mendelssohn
(Albert Spalding, violinist)

Festival chorus.

Overture "1812" ...Tschaikowsky
(Combined Boston Symphony, Berkshire Music Center orchestras and bands of the 26th division, Koussevitzky conducting.)

Draw for prizes.

Fireworks.

15

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1941

Rain Fails to Dislodge Berkshire Festival Crowd

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 9 (AP)—The rain came—but the crowd stayed—at tonight's Berkshire symphonic festival concert.

Congestion caused by more than 11,000 persons seeking choice spots forced Conductor Serge Koussevitsky, a stickler for promptness, to delay the opening of the performance for 10 minutes.

Spreading far beyond the protection afforded by the roof of the music shed at Tanglewood, hundreds who carried blankets for sitting on the lawn converted them into raincoats.

However, in the comfortably cool air even those farthest away could hear the frailest measures of the opening composition—Mozart's Serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."

This was played in progressive tribute which Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra are paying through the festival in advance of the October observance of the 150th anniversary of the death of that composer.

The young American pianist, Leonard Shure, was the guest artist in the second number—Brahm's Second Piano Concerto and his playing held the crowd in its place, despite the rain.

The audience received with enthusiasm an American symphony, Howard Hanson's Second or "Romantic" Symphony. Present was the tall, bearded composer.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 10 1941

This Clipping From
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1941

Berkshire Haven for Ambitious Musicians

College students, housewives with voices, amateurs who like music and want to know more about it—these are the people who will attend Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer, according to an article by Carleton Smith in the July Esquire.

There Koussevitzky has founded a school with a future, a center where there is a wellspring of genuine enthusiasm for art. There they study a score not only for the sake of performing it but to know it. They teach students music from the inside instead of from the outside. Creative interpretation is Doctor Koussevitzky's central theme. Conducting is studied under him, composition under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, chamber groups under Gregor Piatigorsky, and opera dramatics supervised by Herbert Graf. Singers are taught that the day has passed when they can stop in the middle of the aria, however, and bow and smile if some man from sheer boredom happens to spring his opera hat.

The difference between this and other schools? A Juilliard scholarship man explains it. "Here," he says, "you never play a note your teacher doesn't hear. And when you rehearse, the first chairmen of the Boston Orchestra sit right alongside of you. When we play a concert at Juillard, my teacher is usually play-

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
Aug 10, 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Crowds Continue New Records

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—It is Dr. Koussevitzky's habit this season at Tanglewood to change his program.

The most radical departures of all occurred Sunday afternoon when he substituted for the short A major Symphony of Mozart the much better known E flat and dropped the too seldom heard Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz in favor of Brahms' C minor, which is a Tanglewood habitue.

Persons who phone this office to inquire about programs and then choose their dates with respect to what is being played cannot be pleased over such capriciousness. The nature of the changes may be significant in view of the tremendous increase in attendance this year.

Saturday night the count exceeded 11,000. Since the opening night, which set a record, audiences have regularly passed the 9,000 mark. With so broad a base, music appreciation necessarily limits its repertory. The symphonies of Brahms are for the tens of thousands, but scarcely Berlioz.

The Brahms

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted for the masses but not in the ordinary sense. Instead of going down to his listeners he made the multitude rise to his level. This was especially true of the Brahms symphony which he has ever endowed with vision and a singularly strong rapture. It has always conveyed the feeling of standing upon a promontory that commanded a view of all the pitiable world this side of eternity.

Fond as he is of the C minor, Koussevitzky has never given it a more powerful and glowing interpretation than on this occasion. The peroration of the final movement was magnificent and brought the crowd to its feet in a shouting frenzy. This work is capable of stirring great excitement.

Debussy and Mozart

Much more so, for instance, than Debussy's La Mer which was performed with every bit as much technical brilliance and powerfully motivated. The brass choir was made to chant so forcefully as to make Debussy sound like translations from Wagner. There is this risk in these three symphonic sketches whose impressionism becomes so objective as to border on the programmatic. Much depends upon the mood, which was decidedly on the romantic side.

The imperious Tanglewood leader was bound to beguile anyone away from resentment against the change in Mozart symphonies. The A major might have had the virtue of freshness but the E flat was made fairly to drip with beauty. The slow movement was as rare an interval as this Festival has ever vouchsafed and the minuet had about it a crisp charm that was quite different from the heavy-footed pace that it often gets.

Saturday's Concert

The audience was restless Saturday night but whether this was attributable to the hints of rain and storm or the result of artistic tension would be difficult to say. There were a few drops of rain that resulted in heavily congested aisles during intermission. On the other hand the aesthetic pitch was tuned high by a courtly and exquisitely Viennese performance of the opening Mozart serenade "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."

I am at a loss to account entirely for Mr. Shure's enormous success with the audience. This is a challenging concerto from the standpoint of difficulty but for a pianist to meet it with a chip on his shoulder is to miss the cordialities of one of Brahms' heartiest and most evocative compositions. The decision unquestionably went to Mr. Shure for an athletically competent encounter although it is gravely to be feared that he will one of these days come out of a cadenza with his good right arm bent under him. He has a big tone of metallic brightness, an admirable fleetness in passage work and generally great technical cunning. One of the most satisfying qualities of the concerto was the symphonic texture that Dr. Koussevitzky gave it.

Two Demonstrations

Mr. Shure who will be remembered in Hartford as having played a concerto in the Beethoven cycle last winter was the object of the greatest ovation that Tanglewood has witnessed this season. It surpassed even the sizable demonstration for Dr. Howard Hanson whom Koussevitzky produced after the playing of his symphony.

There are some pretty big "effects" in this work that made their mark by means of grandly shaped crescendos, impressive accruals of reiterated figures that suggest the Sibelius dialect and not a little of that feeling too. Dissonance as such doesn't bother anyone at Tanglewood and there were compensatory interludes of 19th century sweetness and light. No doubt the title "Romantic" is the worst enemy of this symphony. Certainly Dr. Koussevitzky proved himself one of its best friends.

This program was sealed with two Wagnerian preludes: "Lohengrin," which is one of the Bostonian's finest pieces and "Die Meistersinger," which this time was a masterpiece of polyphonic transparence.

The program on Thursday night will be: Handel's Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor with E. Power Biggs as soloist and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" with a quartet of soloists from the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 10 1941

Shure Wins Big Hand At Tanglewood

Pianist, Here in Spring, Plays Brahms 2d Concerto With Boston Symphony; Record Crowd

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—Leonard Shure, pianist, who stopped in at Hartford during the spring to play in the Beethoven festival of the Hartford Symphony orchestra, became the bravo of Tanglewood here tonight after a handsomely eloquent performance of Brahms's Second Piano Concerto, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Shure was accorded the tribute accorded to heroes of the Berkshire Symphony Festival, beginning with the anti-Emily Post applause between movements of the composition, and the all-out shouting, shrieking and parade of curtain calls at its conclusion. It was probably even noisier than usual as the audience hit an all-time record this evening, 11,000, of which 4500 were general admissions.

When Mr. Shure appeared in Hartford several months back, his performance was brisk and businesslike, in the main. His approach to technical problems was still definitely assertive tonight, and he took no more fooling from Brahms than he had from Beethoven. But the Brahms had a superlative eloquence not given the Beethoven. Fundamental in Mr. Shure's eloquence were the bright, warm clear flow he found for Brahams's complex ideas. The framework of the concerto was always plain and fluent in his performance of it.

Handsome Colorist.

But most of all, Mr. Shure is a handsome colorist. Without being picky, he lets no phrase go by without a shrewd twist, or some dash of color. His dynamic treatment is remarkably happy.

Although Mr. Shure's style is not big (in fact there were a few climactic moments when the orchestra threatened to wash him out) he has a most persuasive way of muting passages into a riple of color, of achieving delicate, poetic effects in the most pianissimo of ways.

Add to that his remarkably fluid tone, and you have, I think, the essentials of Mr. Shure's eloquence as nearly as they can be skimmed off in a hasty report from this outpost.

It hardly need be said that Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave a hearty performance of their allotment of the score. It was less in the perfervid style of last Sunday's second Brahms Symphony, but it was certainly sufficiently intense and hale or at least so to my tastes.

Tempestuous Hanson.

Whom the good doctor champions, he champions passionately and in presenting Howard Hanson's second "Romantic" Symphony tonight, he sent this work snorting with brass and bristling with snare drummery out across the night air and stillness with smashing vehemence. The tempestuous horn calls and the surging waves of almost anguishing music were flung out to the hills with an emotion and a vividness that called up the second storm of "bravo's" which the evening's program had evoked. This was one of those turbulent pieces which Dr. Koussevitzky grasps with Slavic romancing, and into which the orchestra can blow with all its Boston might. It is unintentionally showy music, excusably flamboyant in a self-confessed style and sounds across the orchestra with blazing effects. It does very well for such a sultry night as this with thunderstorms flicking about, and the weight of thick romanticism lying over everything.

The only temperate moment in the evening had been the initial Mozart "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" in itself one of Mozart's little romancings and prettily if delicately set out by conductor and orchestra. The evening was to end on more ringingly romantic music, the Wagnerian prelude to "Lohengrin" and then to "Die Meistersinger." They were excellently played but this was not enough to hold much of the audience which drifted parking-lotswards as the too familiar strains began.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1941

HALIFAX PLANS TANGLEWOOD TALK

British Envoy Accepts Invitation to Benefit Concert On Friday — 9500 Heard Yesterday's Program

Tanglewood, Aug. 10 — Lord Halifax, British embassador at Washington, is to be the guest of honor and the principal speaker at the gala benefit to be held at Tanglewood on Friday evening. Jerome D. Greene of Boston, a member of the benefit committee, now at Curtis hotel, today received this telegram from the diplomat now in California:—

"Delighted to find that I can accept your kind invitation to address the gala concert at Tanglewood on August 15 and greatly look forward to it. Halifax."

According to the present arrangements, Lord Halifax is to fly to Chicago and thence to Albany, N. Y., where members of the benefit committee will meet him Friday and bring him to Lenox by car.

Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, who is a member of the Berkshire Symphonic festival executive committee, will preside at the benefit and introduce Lord Halifax. His address will be only one feature of a program that will start at 5.30 p. m., and will include a concert by 250 musicians from the 26th division at Camp Edwards with Albert Spalding, violinist. The benefit is for the U. S. O. and British War relief.

(Continued from First Page)

Attendance 9500

Today's attendance at the Boston Symphony orchestra concert was officially given as 9500, making a total of 29,700 for series B and a grand total of 56,100 for the six concerts to date. All boxes have been sold for the final series, which starts next Thursday evening and already there is a sellout for the 6038 seats in the music shed itself for the last concert next Sunday afternoon, with only a few left for the other two. Today's general admission sale was 2800.

This was another profitable weekend for hotels, taverns, rooming houses, restaurants, garages and gasoline service stations. Hotel Wendell was filled to capacity again with a house count exceeding 500 last night.

By 6 p. m., Assistant Manager James D. O'Keefe was sending an overflow to North Adams after filling all smaller Pittsfield inns. Traffic was the heaviest of the season so far on all main routes, with only a comparatively few minor accidents reported to local or state police.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 11 1941

MRS. ROOSEVELT TO BE SPEAKER AT TANGLEWOOD

Lord Halifax, British Envoy, Also to Be Heard at Benefit on Friday

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 11 — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today accepted the invitation of the executive committee for the gala benefit at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Friday for the USO and British War Relief, and she will be one of the speakers during the manifestation.

Lord Halifax to Speak

Other speakers will be Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States and Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Exeter Academy, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, will be the master of ceremonies.

The public is invited to join in the festivities which will begin at 5.30 with a band concert by the 250 piece band from Camp Edwards. After that all the forces at Tanglewood will be in operation—the Opera Department, the Student Orchestra and the Choral Group. The manifestation is scheduled for 6.45 after which comes the lawn party with a New England baked bean supper and other refreshments.

A fanfare at 9 will summon everyone back to the shed for the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Stanley Chapple, English conductor, will also lead the orchestra in one number. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist and the program will conclude with the combined Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the massed bands of the 26th Division from Camp Edwards performing Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture," Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The draw for awards by Elsa Maxwell and others, and fireworks will end the evening.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 11 1941

PERFECT DAY DRAWS CROWD TO FESTIVAL

More Than 50,000 Have Attended First Two Series of Concerts

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 11—Another perfect Sunday drew an audience of 9500 to the final concert of the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. An estimated total of 29,400 people attended these three concerts, bringing the total attendance of six concerts to 56,100. Although Saturday night was a bit wet, 11,000 people were on hand to hear the concert, which included the superb interpretation of the Brahms second concerto for piano and orchestra, with Leonard Shure as pianist.

Changes in Program

There have been changes in the programs during these last three concerts and the changes made today were particularly disappointing. Dr. Koussevitzky substituted Brahms' first symphony for the Berlioz symphony and the "Symphony in E Flat Major" for the A major symphony by Mozart. The only work remaining of the original program was the "La Mer" by DeBussy.

Already there are rumors of an expansion of the festival program next year. There appears to be two schools of thought on the operation of the festival. One group would expand to bring in opera and more choral works while the other group would keep the festival purely symphonic as it started out to be and, they contend, and rightly, that it was the symphonic phase which first attracted the audiences. Also first-rate choral performances are quite impossible due to the relatively limited time in which to prepare a chorus.

Opera, on the other hand, may become an important part of the festival and may give opportunities to American singers, some of whom are already studying here during the school period. It is possible that a series of operatic performances may be given next season in the new opera house, but these will probably be given under the auspices of the orchestra association.

The series of concerts which closed today had been arranged with an eye to the observance of the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart and many delectable performances of the works of the Salzburg master have been heard. None was more charming than the performance of the "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" given Saturday night, although the performance today of the E flat major symphony very nearly approached it. Dr. Koussevitzky made much of the rugged minuet and the graceful and swift finale.

Koussevitzky's reading of DeBussy's "La Mer" is one of the outstanding contributions to music. In the interpretation of the music of the French and Russian masters he stands pre-eminent and the vast audience this afternoon closely approached hysteria before the final notes of "La Mer." The ear was enchanted by the play of color, the sheer magnificence of the wood winds and the boldness of the reading as a whole.

The program concluded with a memorable reading of the great first symphony of Brahms. Even those who bemoaned its substitution for the Berlioz symphony must have realized that they were hearing something far greater in every aspect. It was a reading of thrilling contrasts, relentless in its intensity, yet flexible in every contour. It was a veritable triumph for conductor and players and it was many minutes before the audience would consent to leave the music shed.

The third and final series of three concerts opens Thursday night and the program will feature Handel's "Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10" and the "Missa Solemnis" by Beethoven, which will be sung by the chorus and distinguished soloists.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 10 1941

FESTIVAL OFFERS A VARIED PROGRAM AT FIFTH CONCERT

Large Audience Hears Small Classic, Soloist in Great Concerto and Wagner's Music Dramas

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 9—The fifth of the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts drew another great audience tonight to the Tanglewood Music Shed for an interesting program of perhaps more varied character than its predecessors. Thus it offered (1) a favorite small classic, (2) a modern American symphony, (3) a soloist in (4) a great modern concerto, and (5) selections from Wagner's music dramas. In the performance the program was changed for the better by moving forward to second place the magnificent interpretation by Leonard Shure and the orchestra of the great 2d piano concerto by Brahms. This received a tremendous ovation and was the outstanding feature of the festival thus far. This was a wide departure from the "symphonic" scheme indicated by the name of the festival, but a broader base was sooner or later inevitable, and this expansion has been hastened by the enlargement of the summer musical activities at the Tanglewood music center.

The need of taking music to the people and enlisting their support was strongly put by by Dr Koussevitzky yesterday in an address to 60 conductors from 30 states, and many students of conducting, at a weekend conference for orchestral conductors. Symphony orchestras, he said, must now operate on a basis of mass audience, an ideal which is being attained at Tanglewood. It is the opposite of the older ideal of scarcity value which inspired the demand in Chicago, a generation ago, for a smaller concert hall for the Theodore Thomas orchestra so that all the seats could be sold at a high price. Mr Koussevitzky recalled giving concerts with a fine orchestra in Moscow and Petrograd in 1909, where admission was five cents: "The hall was packed with workers and poor, young students. Playing for them was my greatest joy."

Koussevitzky's Sympathetic Spirit

In the same broadly liberal spirit he told the conductors assembled in conference that no leader had a right to reject a new score without deep study: "Even if a manuscript which is 12 or 15 minutes long has only 20 bars of worth-while music, he must play it. A composer cannot compose unless he can hear how his work sounds."

In his long service in Boston Mr Koussevitzky has not been lacking in sympathetic regard for young and unknown composers, and his readiness to encourage American music was illustrated in tonight's program by the performance of the second symphony by Howard Hanson, which was composed for the Boston Symphony orchestra in its 50th anniversary season, Serge Koussevitzky conducting at the first performance, on November 28, 1930. Much water has gone under the bridge since then, and it may no longer be necessary for Mr Hanson, now well known both as composer and conductor, to apologize for the romanticism of this "Romantic" symphony.

Neither can Mr Hanson be taken very seriously in his declaration at the conductors' conference that he sometimes felt that it would be better if all the music from 1750 to 1880 were lost, so that we were obliged to create our own beauty. His time limit would just let in the second Brahms concerto (1881), played by Leonard Shure, which was one of the finest features of tonight's program, or of the festival thus far, but would exclude Mozart's exquisite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" which opened the concert—a gem so precious that it ought, like a Cremona violin, to be jealously wrapped in silk and not used roughly or too much. Attrition by radio may wear out the favorite masterpieces so rapidly that Mr Hanson may yet urge conservation rather than incineration.

The program for the last concert of the second series, at 3.30 tomorrow afternoon, will carry on the commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart with his symphony in A major, followed by Debussy's marine tone picture, "La Mer." The second half will be filled by the long "Fantastic Symphony" by Berlioz, one of the landmarks in the evolution of the romantic movement of the early 19th century.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1941

OVERTONES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 10—One of the most ambitious and important departments of study at the Berkshire Music Center is the orchestral conducting division over which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Stanley Chapple of Boston, formerly of London, Eng., preside.

This department features, apart from a source of theoretical training in the analysis of orchestral scores, actual training in the conducting of a symphonic orchestra under the expert tutelage of the above-mentioned conductors. Two orchestras are available for rehearsal and performance, an advanced student orchestra, primarily composed of virtuoso instrumental students, chosen by special audition from hundreds of candidates all over the western hemisphere, and a second orchestra of less gifted players who, nevertheless, desire orchestral experience under the most competent of instruction.

A small group of outstanding conductors, the majority of whom are already actively connected with a symphonic orchestra as conductor, were chosen last season and this to work directly with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and to lead the advanced orchestra in both daily rehearsal and a weekly concert. The remaining group receives its training under Stanley Chapple and employes the second orchestra for active conductorial experience under the latter's direction and coaching.

At the end of last season, it was decided to gather these orchestral conductors together in an informal association, mainly for the interchange of ideas and exchange of such information and experience as would be mutually advantageous to all concerned. Further, what was actually being done in way of program building under all conditions of orchestral organization was immediately apparent in exchange of program bills.

This organization of conductors was initially launched by Thor Johnson, conductor of the Grand Rapids Symphony orchestra and choral and orchestral conductor on the faculty of the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Mich. Now including such leading young American conductors as Richard Bales, Robert Whitney, Samuel A. W. Peck, Richard Duncan, Sydney Baron and Carmine Ficocelli, to mention but a few. This group met Friday and Saturday in a first formal meeting. While many of the conductors are presently participating in the activities of the Berkshire Music center, many others came from all over the country to be present at this important event.

Four speakers highlighted the two days of activity, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N. Y., Dr. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Berkshire Music center and George E. Judd, business manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky emphasized in his few words the relationship of the conductor to the community, stressing particularly the relationship of a conductor to the contemporary composer. In speaking of scores, he mentioned that the actual material involved is "only half of the score." The right emotion within the soul of the conductor himself is the more important second half, and this must be found in the heart, the brain, the emotions if the exterior technique is to be complemented and enhanced by the interior technique.

These same properties must be felt in the conductor's relationship to his public, and in his obligation to study, evaluate and perform the music of his composing brotherhood. He must "go hand in hand with the young composer, the young creator." As far as the public is conerned, one must keep himself clean both exteriorly and interiorly, giving first, last and always of his art and his best living. He must be an example of "how to live," he must be an example of taste both physically and spiritually.

Dr. Howard Hanson, in speaking of the life-long consideration which Dr. Koussevitzky has given to all contemporary music, said that young conductors might well follow the Biblical advice, "Go Thou and do Likewise." Inasmuch as musical art is three dimensional, the "only art which does not exist at the time it is created," it is the duty of the conductor to maintain a "working agreement" with the composer, to allow creative works to find an opportunity of re-ceration without which they cannot be called an active art.

In speaking of the conductor, Dr. Hanson asserted that he must be a leader and educator, an historian and prophet of the future. The composer must express himself with all that implies of "background, race, environment, his age and his country," and do this with an "immunable honesty." From this point, the conductor must winnow from the wealth of newly composed material that which he, personally, believes to have worth and merit, and give that, through actual performance, to the listener.

Dr. Grant reviewed the importance of the organizing of such a group of conductors, the security of orchestral organizations within a country which is far in advance of any country in the world in this field of musical interpretation. George E. Judd stressed the business aspects of the managing of an orchestral organization, mentioning some of the pitfalls which monetarily confront any such group, and the importance of proving worth before soliciting support other than through active ticket sale. He recalled that after the founding of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Henry Lee Higginosn, 40 years transpired before the public was asked to contribute to the orchestra's support. In closing, Mr. Judd advised that young conductors should not be "influenced at any time, in any city, by those numerous people whom we can only classify as gossips."

What tangible form this newly created association of orchestral conductors will take in the future is as yet unknown to even those now actively associated with it, but one can easily judge that such a body must and will add immeasurably to the growing integrity of our national musical life, and do it in such a way as to make even more possible the American composer and the American conductor.

CELINE KOESTER.

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
AUG 11 1941

Benefit Program For British Relief At Lenox August 15

Mrs. Albert P. Cushman, acting chairman of the local committee of the British War Relief society, has been requested to call attention of all supporters and sympathizers to the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood on Friday, August 15, from 5.30 to 11 p. m., by the erkshire Symphonic festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra. This generous contribution to the cause is being made largely by the efforts of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his 250 musicians of all nations. A benefit for British War Relief given last year realized $23,000. This year proceeds are to be divided between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief society. Tickets may be obtained by letter, with check enclosed, from the Gala Benefit committee, Lenox, Mass.

The program begins with the playing of the combined bands of the 26th Division under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky at 5.30; from 6 to 6.40 there will be simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center in the Shed, the theatre, and the Chamber Music hall, followed by 15 minutes of speaking and a lawn party picnic supper. From 9 to 10.30 the gala performance in the Shed will be conducted by Koussevitzky; it will include the playing of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, whose number and opening bar constitute the now well recognized symbol standing for "victory." Prizes will be drawn for around the flagpole at the close of the performance and fireworks will conclude the evening.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 11 1941

Mrs. Roosevelt Speaks Friday At Tanglewood

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has accepted an invitation to head the list of speakers at the USO-British War Relief benefit at the Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, Mass., Friday, it was announced today.

The first lady will appear with Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Exeter Academy, and Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College, will be master of ceremonies.

Five-Hour Program

The entire program for the benefit will cover five hours, from 5:30 to 10:40 p. m. It will open with a concert by the combined bands of the 26th Division under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

At 6 o'clock the feature, "Berkshire Music Center on Parade," will offer a variety of muscal events including a concert in the music shed by the orchestra and chorus, operatic scenes presented in the theater and programs by instrumental groups in the chamber music hall.

This will be followed at 6:45 by "The Manifestation," during which Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Perry and Viscount Halifax will speak.

The evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be preceded by a lawn party, including a picnic supper and country dancing.

Spalding as Soloist

The concert will offer Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, selections from "The Planets" by Gustave Holst, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, two old English madrigals and the 1812 Overture of Tchoikowsky. Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple will be the conductors and Albert Spalding will be soloist.

The benefit will onclude with a draw for prizes, conducted by Elsa Maxwell.

Mrs. Francis S. Murphy is chairman of the Hartford Committee for the benefit. Tickets may be purchased either at the benefit office in Stockbridge, Mass., or at Gallup and Alfred's.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1941

AT TANGLEWOOD

Lord Halifax Also to Talk at Combined U. S. O.-British War Relief Benefit

Special to The Daily News

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt will speak in behalf of the combined U. S. O.-British War relief benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, it was announced today by officials of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The President's wife completes a trinity of noted persons who will be heard during the varied program, scheduled to begin at 5.30 and to run until midnight.

A telegram from Mrs Roosevelt assured the committee today of her willingness to speak for the charity program. Thursday night the first lady was given an ovation when she attended the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the opening of the second series in the festival.

Dr Perry Third Speaker

Lord Halifax, British ambassador at Washington, will be another guest of honor and speaker on Friday, according to an acknowledgment from California where the British diplomat has been inspecting defense industries. Dr Lewis Perry, headmaster at Exeter academy, is the third speaker. Lord Halifax's telegram follows:—

"Delighted to find that I can accept your kind invitation to address the gala concert at Tanglewood on August 15 and greatly look forward to it. Halifax."

According to the present arrangements, Lord Halifax is to fly to Chicago and thence to Albany, N. Y., where members of the benefit committee will meet him Friday and bring him to Lenox by car.

Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, who is a member of the Berkshire Symphonic festival executive committee, will preside at the benefit and introduce Lord Halifax. His address will be only one feature of a program that will start at 5.30 p. m., and will include a concert by 250 musicians from the 26th division at Camp Edwards with Albert Spalding, violinist. The benefit is for the U. S. O. and British War relief.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Performance Is Handsome

Some of Boston Symphony's Most Celebrated Items Heard By 9500 Hyper-Enthusiasts

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL—The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in the sixth concert of a series of nine at Tanglewood, Lenox, Sunday afternoon; the program:

Symphony in E Flat Major (K. 543) ..... Mozart
La Mer ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor ... Brahms

Presenting three of its famous mainstays, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky brought Series B of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a superlative close yesterday.

The program offered only one of the three works originally scheduled for the afternoon. The Mozart E Flat had been substituted for the same composer's A Major Symphony (K. 201), a work favorite with Dr. Koussevitzky, but less well known and perhaps for that reason less favorite with his Festival audiences. The Brahms First was also a last minute change, replacing Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony," a work played in Hartford for the first time last winter.

The changes, however, did little harm besides disappointing the probable few who cherish the Berlioz work. The audiences have been inured to change this season, and I cannot remember at the moment any of the six programs played to date, which have not been altered. Most disappointing had been the omission of "Sirenes" from the Debussy "Three Nocturnes," a lovely work only too infrequently heard and one to hanker for.

Outstanding Performance.

Least of all the change affected the orchestra and the imperious Doctor, for they combined to make this the most satisfying performance, everything considered, of the Festival this season. The playing by the whole ensemble and by the soloists or groups of specialists had not been so excellent in technical quality, nor so eloquent in musical statement, so consistently in any of the preceding concerts. As for Dr. Koussevitzky, his interpretations of all three scores are famously among his best, and he was more than usually eager to present them, it seemed.

The merit par excellence of Dr. Koussevitzky's Mozart is that he plays both sides of the composer. Time was, not so long ago, when everyone tried to make Mozart ultra-dainty. Then came the revolution, and everybody felt Mozart had been belittled, and began to play him hard and heavy. Dr. Koussevitzky shows Mozart to have been of dignified mien, grave without being boresome, and something of a Voltairean philosopher, touching up thought with wit. At the same time, he also admits of a poetic Mozart, sensitive, introspective, and fine-chiseled, exceedingly precise and polished in statement, having somewhat the quality of Greek poetry.

In the ordered, elegant and pat performance of the E Flat Symphony, neither conductor nor orchestra can ever have done much better than they did on this occasion. It was a marvelously handsome and cool attainment.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 11 1941

Brilliant Concert Is Staged at Tanglewood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Directs Sunday Afternoon Program Delighting Nearly 10,000 Spectators

(Reviewed)

Tanglewood at Lenox was the scene of one of many distinguished musical events Sunday afternoon in the sixth program of the Berkshire Music Festival. The outstanding personage of the afternoon was Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, director, and next in importance if not sharing honors, was the Boston Symphony orchestra. It being Sunday afternoon and one of the most glorious days of the summer, the regulars were all in their seats in the shed minutes before Koussevitzky entered. Every seat was occupied and out on the lawn surrounding the shed were over two thousand people who enjoyed the music from the sidelines. Between nine and ten thousand, it is estimated, attended yesterday afternoon's concert.

With no sound from the vast assemblage, just the music of the band and the soft sound of the leaves fluttering in the breeze, Dr. Koussevitzky made everybody happy with, first, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat Major (Koeshel No. 543), Debussy's three orchestra sketches, "The Sea," and substituted for the originally planned Berlioz, Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Opus 68. All were given in so distinguished and moving fashion that the three rated even, you might say, but standing out was the compelling direction in the DeBussy "Symphoniques." The audience burst into spontaneous applause. Certainly it was a notable performance, the orchestration and the merging of the instruments, the colorful pictures presented, and the vigor of the conductor, especially in the third "Wind and Sea" dialogue, were something to remember.

More sustained and reposeful was the Mozart, smoothly and grandly given coming quickly to an unexciting conclusion. Beauty of tone was there and the Mozart temperament ably read in the score translation.

Brahms' Symphony was a triumphant close to the program. The first Allegro movement merging into the thoughtful Andante, followed by the more animated Allegretto grazioso; then the Adagio and Allegro non troppo which suddenly becomes a great force and both the conducting and execution by the orchestra brilliant. Nothing more exciting could occur on a peaceful lovely Sunday afternoon than this great climax to Brahms' C Minor No. 1. Once again the audience came alive and Koussevitzky was brought back again and again, while bravos came from the listening throngs.

Last Saturday night there was likewise a record attendance. Brahms Second Concerto was played at this time, Leonard Shure, piano soloist. Also played were Preludes from Wagner's "Meistersinger," as well as Wagner's "Lohengrin." It was of interest also to hear Howard Hanaen's Second Symphony (The Romantic).

One of the highlights of the festival this week will be the Gala Benefit Friday night starting at 5:30 and continuous until 10:30 with many innovations, among them the concert by the Combined Bands of the 26th Division, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center will be given, an al fresco party on the lawn, a gala concert in the shed and concluding with fireworks and the singing of the National Anthem.—M. M.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1941

9,500 at Berkshire Music Festival

Knick. Mt. News

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—Showing their amazing command of style, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra today pleased a 9,500 crowd at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with master works of composers of three different centuries.

Ideal weather—sunny, but temperate—saw 6,700 persons assembled in the famous music shed, while 2,800 others relaxed with vacation ease on the lawns of Tanglewood.

Mozart's Symphony in "E Flat Major" led the program as Koussevitzky and the orchestra evoked grandeur from the work's lyricism of movement and expression.

This was followed by DeBussy's "The Sea," which seemed enhanced by the circumstance of open air presentation.

Announcement was made that Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to this country, would address a festival audience next Friday when a United States Army band of 300 musicians will give a concert with Koussevitzky as conductor.

Celebrated Sea.

So celebrated is the Boston's performance of "La Mer," that some are willing to call it the superlative work in the entire repertoire of Dr. Koussevitzky and his men. For weight, for wonderful restlessness, certainly no other performers match this picture of "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster."

But to me the fascination of Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation lies not so much in the great, sweeping and turbulent marine-scape which it undeniably paints, but the remarkable degree of pure music which he retains out of so programmatic a temptation. While certainly Debussy loved the sea in its literal aspects, and in its philosophic connotations, its translation into music and not imitation by music were assuredly his paramount interest. Dr. Koussevitzky never forgets this, no matter how the tempests rage—and he lets them rage good and plenty. It is an extraordinary feat in the division of interests, and no one else accomplishes it as he does.

And "La Mer" is also an example of one of the elements in the Boston's reputation as the greatest of orchestras in the realm of modern composition. No one surpasses either conductor or performers in doing wonderful things with the peculiar timbre or characteristic idioms of instruments in the woodwind and brass choirs. "Fire Bird" is of course their supreme manifestation of this, but in "La Mer," too, the exceedingly shrewd employment of single instrument in the coloring, musical or emotional or atmospheric, of a phrase is strikingly present and perfect.

Brahmsian Best.

The Boston Symphony's performance of the First Brahms Symphony is so absolutely celebrated as to require no comment of itself. This was one of the orchestra's most beautifully clear performances, with every thread in the orchestral fabric startlingly evident. The multitudinous contributions of solo instruments were ravishing, and most especially of the horn in the last movement. And it was Dr. Koussevitzky at his best in Brahms, not neurotic as last week, but adding a wonderful breadth of concept to the intense romanticism.

The audience of 9500 was boisterously enthusiastic, whooping, pounding and stamping, while the good Doctor beamed paternally.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 11 1941

17

Music Festival Audiences Now Total 56,100 Persons

Saturday Night Attendance Swelled to New Record of 11,000 Persons as 4,500 Purchase General Admission Tickets Despite Threatening Weather—First Festival Rainfall of Season Clears for 9,500 Persons to Attend Sunday's Concert, Last of Series B—Final Series Opens Thursday, Featuring Handel's Concerto.

Threatening weather Saturday night did not deter 4,500 persons from buying general admission tickets to the Berkshire Symphonic festival and swelling the attendance that night to a new record of 11,000.

First Rain of Season

Although a slight shower, accompanied by distant thunder and lightening, occurred shortly before the intermission, the rainfall was not heavy enough to seriously inconvenience those who were listening to the concert from outside the music shed.

The rain Saturday night was the first during this year's festival; but, by yesterday afternoon the perfect weather conditions which have been the norm for this year's concerts again prevailed. The audience yesterday numbered 9,500 persons. According to the festival management, audiences for the second concert series totaled 29,700 persons, while total attendance at the first six concerts was 56,100.

In the two week-end concerts, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, offered a stimulating variety of musical fare, ranging from works of Mozart to a symphony by the contemporary American composer, Howard Hanson.

One of the finest features of the festival thus far was the playing Saturday night of Brahms' Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2. Leonard Shure, a young American pianist, who has appeared previously with the Boston orchestra in concerts in Boston and New York, performer brilliantly as soloist and received a tremendous ovation from the listeners.

Flawless Performance

Continuing the observance of the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart, Dr. Koussevitzky opened both the Saturday and Sunday concerts with works of this composer. The selection Saturday night was "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," a delicate composition for string orchestra which was performed flawlessly by the unsurpassed string sections of the Boston orchestra.

The work by Dr. Hanson, his Second symphony, is frankly a "romantic" work, and is thus designated by the composer. Since Dr. Hanson is one of the comparatively few native American composers (he was born in Wahoo, Neb.), who have achieved general recognition for their work from contemporary audiences, his compositions are no longer offered as "novelties," and the Tanglewood audience showed its appreciation of the merits of his "Romantic" symphony.

Doubtless many of those who attended the Saturday night concert did so particularly in anticipation of hearing fine performances of the first works of Wagner offered thus far during the festival. The two selections, which closed the concert, were the "Preludes to Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

Familiar to All

For the average concert-goer, the program yesterday afternoon was one of the most satisfactory of the year, since the three works played are familiar and delightful to all who have a speaking acquaintance with music.

The opening selection was again a Mozart work, and was played with the grace which must be accorded to the symphonies of Mozart. Although the work originally scheduled was the A major symphony, the E flat major symphony was played instead.

Another change in yesterday's program was the substitution of Brahm's First symphony for the "Fantastic" symphony of Berlioz. It was apparent that for most of the audience this was a change for the better, or at least not for the worse, inasmuch as following a superb performance, the conductor and the orchestra received one of the most enthusiastic ovations of the season.

Likewise the second selection on the program "La Mer," by Debussy, stirred the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Apparently enchanted himself by the imagery of the composer, Dr. Koussevitzky never fails to set forth the impressionistic works of Debussy in their fullest color.

Final Rehearsal

As usual, many subscribers to the concerts, and school pupils, took advantage of the opportunity Saturday morning to attend the final rehearsal of Saturday night's program, while in the afternoon the "second" orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, the school conducted in conjunction with the festival, played in the music shed. Led by the composer, this group, composed of non-professional musicians, played Howard Hanson's Third symphony. Another Saturday afternoon activity was a concert of baroque music played by students at the Center, following a lecture by Olin Downes.

The final concert series will open at 8:30 o'clock Thursday night, with performances of Handel's Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor, featuring E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", in which four soloists and the Berkshire Festival chorus will join the orchestra.

This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN

AUG 11 1941

TANGLEWOOD EVENT FOR BENEFIT OF U.S.O. IS SET FOR FRIDAY

Berkshire Music Center To Be Scene of Concert, Lawn Party and Dance—Koussevitsky Conducting

VAILLS SPONSOR IN THIS SECTION

A gala benefit for the United Service organizations and the British War relief will be held Friday afternoon and evening at Tanglewood, at Stockbridge, Mass. The program will begin at 5:30 p. m., with a concert by the combined bands of the 26th division, 250 strong, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra.

At 6 o'clock the Berkshire music center will present program in the Shed and theater, the orchestra and chorus giving a program in the Shed and the opera department presenting scenes from several operas in the theater.

From 6:45 until 9 o'clock there will be short talks by distinguished guests, followed by a lawn party, with picnic supper and country dancing.

At 9 o'clock the Boston symphony orchestra will present a concert in the shed, directed by Mr. Koussevitzky. As the grand finale on the program, the Boston symphony and Berkshire music center orchestras and the bands of the 26th division will play Overture "1812." Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the soloist on the program.

A mammoth display of fireworks will bring the program of the day to a close.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Performance Is Handsome

Some of Boston Symphony's Most Celebrated Items Heard By 9500 Hyper-Enthusiasts

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL—The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in the sixth concert of a series of nine at Tanglewood, Lenox, Sunday afternoon; the program:

Symphony in E Flat Major (K. 543) .....Mozart
La Mer .....Debussy
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor ...Brahms

Presenting three of its famous mainstays, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky brought Series B of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a superlative close yesterday.

The program offered only one of the three works originally scheduled for the afternoon. The Mozart E Flat had been substituted for the same composer's A Major Symphony (K. 201), a work favorite with Dr. Koussevitzky, but less well known and perhaps for that reason less favorite with his Festival audiences. The Brahms First was also a last minute change, replacing Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony," a work played in Hartford for the first time last winter.

The changes, however, did little harm besides disappointing the probable few who cherish the Berlioz work. The audiences have been inured to change this season, and I cannot remember at the moment any of the six programs played to date, which have not been altered. Most disappointing had been the omission of "Sirenes" from the Debussy "Three Nocturnes," a lovely work only too infrequently heard and one to hanker for.

Outstanding Performance.

Least of all the change affected the orchestra and the imperious Doctor, for they combined to make this the most satisfying performance, everything considered, of the Festival this season. The playing by the whole ensemble and by the soloists or groups of specialists had not been so excellent in technical quality, nor so eloquent in musical statement, so consistently in any of the preceding concerts. As for Dr. Koussevitzky, his interpretations of all three scores are famously among his best, and he was more than usually eager to present them, it seemed.

The merit par excellence of Dr. Koussevitzky's Mozart is that he plays both sides of the composer. Time was, not so long ago, when everyone tried to make Mozart ultra-dainty. Then came the revolution, and everybody felt Mozart had been belittled, and began to play him hard and heavy. Dr. Koussevitzky shows Mozart to have been of dignified mien, grave without being boresome, and something of a Voltairean philosopher, touching up thought with wit. At the same time, he also admits of a poetic Mozart, sensitive, introspective, and fine-chiseled, exceedingly precise and polished in statement, having somewhat the quality of Greek poetry.

In the ordered, elegant and pat performance of the E Flat Symphony, neither conductor nor orchestra can ever have done much better than they did on this occasion. It was a marvelously handsome and cool attainment.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
AUG 11 1941

Brilliant Concert Is Staged at Tanglewood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Directs Sunday Afternoon Program Delighting Nearly 10,000 Spectators

(Reviewed)

Tanglewood at Lenox was the scene of one of many distinguished musical events Sunday afternoon in the sixth program of the Berkshire Music Festival. The outstanding personage of the afternoon was Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, director, and next in importance if not sharing honors, was the Boston Symphony orchestra. It being Sunday afternoon and one of the most glorious days of the summer, the regulars were all in their seats in the shed minutes before Koussevitzky entered. Every seat was occupied and out on the lawn surrounding the shed were over two thousand people who enjoyed the music from the sidelines. Between nine and ten thousand, it is estimated, attended yesterday afternoon's concert.

With no sound from the vast assemblage, just the music of the band and the soft sound of the leaves fluttering in the breeze, Dr. Koussevitzky made everybody happy with, first, Mozart's Symphony in E Flat Major (Koeshel No. 543), Debussy's three orchestra sketches, "The Sea," and substituted for the originally planned Berlioz, Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Opus 68. All were given in so distinguished and moving fashion that the three rated even, you might say, but standing out was the compelling direction in the DeBussy "Symphoniques." The audience burst into spontaneous applause. Certainly it was a notable performance, the orchestration and the merging of the instruments, the colorful pictures presented, and the vigor of the conductor, especially in the third "Wind and Sea" dialogue, were something to remember.

More sustained and reposeful was the Mozart, smoothly and grandly given coming quickly to an unexciting conclusion. Beauty of tone was there and the Mozart temperament ably read in the score translation.

Brahms' Symphony was a triumphant close to the program. The first Allegro movement merging into the thoughtful Andante, followed by the more animated Allegretto grazioso; then the Adagio and Allegro non troppo which suddenly becomes a great force and both the conducting and execution by the orchestra brilliant. Nothing more exciting could occur on a peaceful lovely Sunday afternoon than this great climax to Brahms' C Minor No. 1. Once again the audience came alive and Koussevitzky was brought back again and again, while bravos came from the listening throngs.

Last Saturday night there was likewise a record attendance. Brahms Second Concerto was played at this time, Leonard Shure, piano soloist. Also played were Preludes from Wagner's "Meistersinger," as well as Wagner's "Lohengrin." It was of interest also to hear Howard Hanaen's Second Symphony (The Romantic).

One of the highlights of the festival this week will be the Gala Benefit Friday night starting at 5:30 and continuous until 10:30 with many innovations, among them the concert by the Combined Bands of the 26th Division, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center will be given, an al fresco party on the lawn, a gala concert in the shed and concluding with fireworks and the singing of the National Anthem.—M. M.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1941

9,500 at Berkshire Music Festival

Buffalo, N.Y. News

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—Showing their amazing command of style, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra today pleased a 9,500 crowd at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with master works of composers of three different centuries.

Ideal weather—sunny, but temperate—saw 6,700 persons assembled in the famous music shed, while 2,800 others relaxed with vacation ease on the lawns of Tanglewood.

Mozart's Symphony in "E Flat Major" led the program as Koussevitzky and the orchestra evoked grandeur from the work's lyricism of movement and expression.

This was followed by DeBussy's "The Sea," which seemed enhanced by the circumstance of open air presentation.

Announcement was made that Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to this country, would address a festival audience next Friday when a United States Army band of 300 musicians will give a concert with Koussevitzky as conductor.

Celebrated Sea.

So celebrated is the Boston's performance of "La Mer," that some are willing to call it the superlative work in the entire repertoire of Dr. Koussevitzky and his men. For weight, for wonderful restlessness, certainly no other performers match this picture of "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster."

But to me the fascination of Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation lies not so much in the great, sweeping and turbulent marine-scape which it undeniably paints, but the remarkable degree of pure music which he retains out of so programmatic a temptation. While certainly Debussy loved the sea in its literal aspects, and in its philosophic connotations, its translation into music and not imitation by music were assuredly his paramount interest. Dr. Koussevitzky never forgets this, no matter how the tempests rage—and he lets them rage good and plenty. It is an extraordinary feat in the division of interests, and no one else accomplishes it as he does.

And "La Mer" is also an example of one of the elements in the Boston's reputation as the greatest of orchestras in the realm of modern composition. No one surpasses either conductor or performers in doing wonderful things with the peculiar timbre or characteristic idioms of instruments in the woodwind and brass choirs. "Fire Bird" is of course their supreme manifestation of this, but in "La Mer," too, the exceedingly shrewd employment of single instrument in the coloring, musical or emotional or atmospheric, of a phrase is strikingly present and perfect.

Brahmsian Best.

The Boston Symphony's performance of the First Brahms Symphony is so absolutely celebrated as to require no comment of itself. This was one of the orchestra's most beautifully clear performances, with every thread in the orchestral fabric startlingly evident. The multitudinous contributions of solo instruments were ravishing, and most especially of the horn in the last movement. And it was Dr. Koussevitzky at his best in Brahms, not neurotic as last week, but adding a wonderful breadth of concept to the intense romanticism.

The audience of 9500 was boisterously enthusiastic, whooping, pounding and stamping, while the good Doctor beamed paternally.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 11 1941

17

Music Festival Audiences Now Total 56,100 Persons

Saturday Night Attendance Swelled to New Record of 11,000 Persons as 4,500 Purchase General Admission Tickets Despite Threatening Weather—First Festival Rainfall of Season Clears for 9,500 Persons to Attend Sunday's Concert, Last of Series B—Final Series Opens Thursday, Featuring Handel's Concerto.

Threatening weather Saturday night did not deter 4,500 persons from buying general admission tickets to the Berkshire Symphonic festival and swelling the attendance that night to a new record of 11,000.

First Rain of Season

Although a slight shower, accompanied by distant thunder and lightening, occurred shortly before the intermission, the rainfall was not heavy enough to seriously inconvenience those who were listening to the concert from outside the music shed.

The rain Saturday night was the first during this year's festival; but, by yesterday afternoon the perfect weather conditions which have been the norm for this year's concerts again prevailed. The audience yesterday numbered 9,500 persons. According to the festival management, audiences for the second concert series totaled 29,700 persons, while total attendance at the first six concerts was 56,100.

In the two week-end concerts, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, offered a stimulating variety of musical fare, ranging from works of Mozart to a symphony by the contemporary American composer, Howard Hanson.

One of the finest features of the festival thus far was the playing Saturday night of Brahms' Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2. Leonard Shure, a young American pianist, who has appeared previously with the Boston orchestra in concerts in Boston and New York, performer brilliantly as soloist and received a tremendous ovation from the listeners.

Flawless Performance

Continuing the observance of the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart, Dr. Koussevitzky opened both the Saturday and Sunday concerts with works of this composer. The selection Saturday night was "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," a delicate composition for string orchestra which was performed flawlessly by the unsurpassed string sections of the Boston orchestra.

The work by Dr. Hanson, his Second symphony, is frankly a "romantic" work, and is thus designated by the composer. Since Dr. Hanson is one of the comparatively few native American composers (he was born in Wahoo, Neb.), who have achieved general recognition for their work from contemporary audiences, his compositions are no longer offered as "novelties," and the Tanglewood audience showed its appreciation of the merits of his "Romantic" symphony.

Doubtless many of those who attended the Saturday night concert did so particularly in anticipation of hearing fine performances of the first works of Wagner offered thus far during the festival. The two selections, which closed the concert, were the "Preludes to Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

Familiar to All

For the average concert-goer, the program yesterday afternoon was one of the most satisfactory of the year, since the three works played are familiar and delightful to all who have a speaking acquaintance with music.

The opening selection was again a Mozart work, and was played with the grace which must be accorded to the symphonies of Mozart. Although the work originally scheduled was the A major symphony, the E flat major symphony was played instead.

Another change in yesterday's program was the substitution of Brahm's First symphony for the "Fantastic" symphony of Berlioz. It was apparent that for most of the audience this was a change for the better, or at least not for the worse, inasmuch as following a superb performance, the conductor and the orchestra received one of the most enthusiastic ovations of the season.

Likewise the second selection on the program "La Mer," by Debussy, stirred the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Apparently enchanted himself by the imagery of the composer, Dr. Koussevitzky never fails to set forth the impressionistic works of Debussy in their fullest color.

Final Rehearsal

As usual, many subscribers to the concerts, and school pupils, took advantage of the opportunity Saturday morning to attend the final rehearsal of Saturday night's program, while in the afternoon the "second" orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, the school conducted in conjunction with the festival, played in the music shed. Led by the composer, this group, composed of non-professional musicians, played Howard Hanson's Third symphony. Another Saturday afternoon activity was a concert of baroque music played by students at the Center, following a lecture by Olin Downes.

The final concert series will open at 8:30 o'clock Thursday night, with performances of Handel's Organ Concerto No. 10 in D minor, featuring E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", in which four soloists and the Berkshire Festival chorus will join the orchestra.

This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
AUG 11 1941

TANGLEWOOD EVENT FOR BENEFIT OF U.S.O. IS SET FOR FRIDAY

Berkshire Music Center To Be Scene of Concert, Lawn Party and Dance—Koussevitsky Conducting

VAILLS SPONSOR IN THIS SECTION

A gala benefit for the United Service organizations and the British War relief will be held Friday afternoon and evening at Tanglewood, at Stockbridge, Mass. The program will begin at 5:30 p. m., with a concert by the combined bands of the 26th division, 250 strong, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra.

At 6 o'clock the Berkshire music center will present program in the Shed and theater, the orchestra and chorus giving a program in the Shed and the opera department presenting scenes from several operas in the theater.

From 6:45 until 9 o'clock there will be short talks by distinguished guests, followed by a lawn party, with picnic supper and country dancing.

At 9 o'clock the Boston symphony orchestra will present a concert in the shed, directed by Mr. Koussevitzky. As the grand finale on the program, the Boston symphony and Berkshire music center orchestras and the bands of the 26th division will play Overture "1812." Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the soloist on the program.

A mammoth display of fireworks will bring the program of the day to a close.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1941

18

Record Weekend Crowds Enjoy Berkshire Festival Concerts

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—The second weekend of the Berkshire Symphonic festival found the largest crowd yet to attend the Tanglewood concerts. Two stunning concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra drew more than 20,000 Saturday night and yesterday afternoon, and gave rise again to the question of what direction the festival is to take if it is to accommodate all those who obviously want to enjoy these summer treats.

In view of the attendance record of 11,000 established Saturday, despite the rain, the total of 9500 yesterday, the finest day yet, was a little disappointing, and yet perhaps it hinted that attendance will run into five figures—if that is desirable—only when widely diversified programs are offered. Saturday's program with five selections, at least three of which the audience could whistle at the drop of a baton, and with a soloist, had more "selling points" than did the "severe" program given yesterday afternoon.

Yesterday the orchestra offered the Mozart "Symphony in A major" (K. 201); the Debussy tone poem, "La Mer," and the Brahms First symphony. The last came as a surprise to those cooperative souls who had saved their programs for the entire series as requested, because the Berlioz "Fantastic" symphony had been announced. It was a program such as might have graced a Symphony-hall concert in midwinter.

The Mozart, which was included presumably because a new recording of it by the Bostonians has just been released, was a product of his 19th year. Thirty other symphonies had come earlier, but this was one that he frequently took with him for performance by various orchestras. Its humor and grace have made it favorites with audiences since and justified his own faith in it. Virtually a serenade for strings—the woodwinds only double on chords—it is another of those showpieces for the Boston string section.

The Debussy literally came home to the hills, for it was in the mountains that the French composer acknowledged his preoccupation with the sea. He feared to pen his impressions near the shore lest the ocean paralyze his creative faculties. The exquisite shading from the most delicate nuances to the most clangorous of chords made it a memorable performance.

The Brahms symphony was powerful in the Koussevitzky reading. It had a close-knit unity that the Berlioz of itself does not possess, though there must have been many who would have welcomed a chance to hear the infrequent visitor.

The program Saturday was most satisfactory. In addition to offering familiar items, it introduced the very talented young pianist, Leonard Shure, as soloist in the Brahms "Piano Concerto number two," and also Howard Hanson in person and through his "Romantic" symphony.

Mr Shure's performance of this diabolically difficult concerto was commendable both in the large outlines and the smaller details, despite some wrong notes and some theatrical posing. The audience applauded most generously at the end of each of the four movements, just as a prize fighter is acclaimed as he emerges alive at the end of each round. The performance did not have the unity noted in the Brahms yesterday, for the rain disturbed the overflow audience which in its efforts to seek shelter disturbed Koussevitzky, but there was no denying that Shure was top man at the end.

Dr Hanson, who deserves a hand for his efforts on behalf of American composers even if he never wrote himself, was most warmly received. While the "romance" explicit in the title seems at times to be of the cave-man variety, there is a warmth about the work that cannot be denied. The second movement is especially lovely and makes this reviewer wonder that the work is not more frequently programmed.

The preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger" were just what Boston audiences have come to expect, except that the strings in the opening of the "Lohengrin" seemed more ethereal than ever. The inclusion of these favorites with the Mozart "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"—given with superlative grace and verve—accounted for a large part of the turnout.

Thursday night, for the opening of the third series, the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" is scheduled with a notable quartet of soloists assisting the Berkshire Festival chorus. The soloists are Rose Dirman, soprano; Herta Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass. The Handel "Organ Concerto in D minor," with E. Power Biggs as soloist, will open the program.

Tuesday and Wednesday night, students at the music center will present Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" in English and on Friday night comes the gala benefit concert for the U. S. O. and the British War Relief. The final concerts are Saturday and Sunday. Apparently the only way to cooperate with Secretary Ickes is to tent on the grounds. —D.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 11 1941

Berkshire Festival May Be Enlarged In 1942

With the conclusion of the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood yesterday, rumors were abroad that the program will be changed next year to include opera and more choral works. Another group, however, feels that the festival will be kept purely symphonic as it was originated.

Attending the Sunday concert were 9,500 people. The only work remaining the same as was previously announced, was the presentation of "La Mer" by DeBussy. On the whole, the program was disappointing. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky substituted Brahms' first symphony for the Berlioz symphony and the "Symphony in E Flat Major" for the A major symphony by Mozart.

Assistant Secretary of State, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., and Mrs. Berle, were guests at the Saturday concert. Others present were Sir Arthur Salter and Lady Salter of London, who will fly from La yuardia field in New York on Thursday to Richmond, Cal., for the launching of the first British ship built in the United States.

An estimated total of 29,700 heard the three concerts in this second series, bringing the total attendance of six concerts to 56,100. On Saturday night, in spite of rain, a group of 11,000 people was present for the superb interpretation of the Brahms second concerto for piano and orchestra with Leonard Shure as poanist.

In regard to proposed alterations in the music to be offered, it would seem impossible to prepare adequate choral performances in such a limited time. Opera, however, would offer an opportunity for performance by American singers, some of whom study during the school period.

On Thursday night, the final series will open. Handel's "Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10," and the "Missa Solemnis," will be featured. The chorus and distinguished soloists will be heard in the Beethoven work.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Attendance Record Set

30,000 Present At Second Week Of Music Festival

The second week of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival topped all previous periods with a record attendance of 30,000 for the three concerts given by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood. The Saturday evening program drew the largest audience, with 11,000 persons appearing and staying from the first part to the end. A great proportion of the audience sitting and reclining on the lawn oblivious to the distant flashes of lightning and light rains. Safely ensconced beneath an umbrella and wrapped from head to toe in a blanket, the outdoor listener at Tanglewood takes his music seriously. The only sound was the wind whispering through the trees, a not unpleasant obligato the music of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Thursday night's program included excerpts from the Mozart Requiem, with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association assisting the Symphony. Among interested listeners from Schenectady were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kibbee, Mr. Kibbee having directed a similar chorus several seasons ago in the Mozart work. The "Eroica," symphony of Beethoven's, also was included on this program. There could be no more ideal spot to hear Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the opening number on Saturday night's program, than Tanglewood, and it always seems as though the Boston Symphony plays it with extra zest in the great music shed, open to the night air. Leonard Shure, soloist for the Brahms' Concerto No. 2 in B flat, received an ovation at the conclusion of his performance. Equally vociferous acclaim was given Dr. Howard Hanson, whose "Romantic" Symphony opened the second half of the program. For the rest there was the ever-loved music of Wagner, the Preludes to "Lohengrin," and "Die Meistersinger."

Sunday afternoon's program continued the commemorative Mozart music with the composer's Symphony in E flat major. Then came Debussy's "Le Mer," and Brahms' First Symphony, the latter replacing the programmed "Berlioz'" Fantastic." The most memorable performance was that of Debussy's wonderful score, which has been one Koussevitzky's chiefs d'oeuvre in recent years. The audience mage vonductor and orchestra a rousing ovation at its conclusion.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 11 1941

Festival at Tanglewood Attracting Big Crowds

—By JOSEPH J. HORAN

As the Berkshire Symphonic Festival goes into its third week at Tanglewood, the effect of its farreaching culture becomes more and more evident. During the last six concerts a total of 56,000 admissions have been sold. The three concerts for the coming weekend are expected to bring the total of listeners to more than 75,000.

The name "festival" for this gathering of musicians from all parts of the country at the Tanglewood estate in the beautiful valley between Lenox and Stockbridge is an apt one, for the entire proceedings have an air of joy and culture. Besides main attractions of the nine scheduled concerts there is a continual round of rehearsals and classes for student productions and plans are moving swiftly for a benefit performance, complete with a military band and Elsa Maxwell as added starters, Friday starting at 5:30 p. m. and lasting till midnight.

The second week's program was devoted largely to Mozart as a commemoration of the 150th anniversary of his death. For Saturday night's program Dr. Serge Koussevitzky selected the "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" as the chief Mozart opus and yesterday afternoon gave the Symphony in E. Flat by the same composer.

Saturday Program Praised

Saturday night's program was, to the mind of this reviewer, the high spot of the season. Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony through a program replete with color and richness with a perfection that left nothing to be desired.

Piece de resistance of the Saturday schedule was the Brahms Concerto in B Flat Major with Leonard Shure, brilliant young pianist, as soloist. The piano as played by Shure blended perfectly with the other choirs of instruments in the thematic statements and reiterations. At the cadenzas he was superb.

Shure has all the competency of the expert craftsman and the brilliance of the mature artist (although he is barely past 30) that makes a great virtuoso. In the second movement so perfectly did the piano and orchestra blend together that one could feel the ensemble as one musical entity rather than a composite of 100 instruments.

The Concerto was a rich, soul-satisfying experience. It was music at its most sublime with the perfect harmonization of composer, soloist, conductor and orchestra.

Composer Acclaimed

This piece was followed by Howard Hanson's "Romantic Symphony." His instrumentation was more that of individual voices asserting themselves. The composition is conventional in form, but the themes have a freshness and a touch of the modern. The composer was present to receive the acclaim of the audience.

The rest of Saturday's program included Wagner's "Prelude to Lohengrin" and "Prelude to Die Meistersinger," works so familiar to symphonic audiences as to require little comment. The two preludes beautifully rounded out the program under the masterly baton of Koussevitzky.

Contrasting with the classicism of Mozart and the purism of Brahms was the impressionism of Debussy in his composition "Le Mer" yesterday afternoon. This is mood music at its best. Debussy's passion for the ocean is beautifully expressed in this work. The audience can hear the waves and the wind murmuring in the calm and then the mighty sonorities of a wind-churned surf in this music that reproduces the sound of nature with phonographic realism.

A change in yesterday's program brought Brahms First Symphony in the place of Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony. Although this composition originally was criticized for lack of melody and emotional attractiveness such criticism would not be justifiable after hearing yesterday's rendition. The dynamic range of the symphony is enormous. The concert master's solo in the second movement was a thing of beauty. The ever - broadening fourth movement was a fitting climax to the afternoon's concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky substituted Mozart's Symphony in E. Flat instead of the A. Major Symphony of the same composer yesterday. There have been numerous program changes this season, but unless one had a particular desire to hear a piece that was eliminated no fault can be found with the substitutions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 11 1941

THRONGS ATTEND MUSIC FESTIVAL

Vast throngs attended the second series of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and tumultous applause was again bestowed upon the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its brilliant conductor, Serge Konssevikky.

In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart, compositions of his appeared on each program of the three concerts of the second series and, exquisitely played, were received with marked enthausiasm. In addition to the Mozart number, Saturday night's program included Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, a Brahms' cencerto, and Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger."

Yesterday afternoon's program, which differed considerably from the one previously announced, consisted of Mozart's symphony in E flat, Debussy's "La Mer", and Brahms' first symphony, all rendered with consummate musicianly skill.

Among those from this vicinity who attended one of both of the week end concerts, were Dr. and Mrs. Harry A. Pattison of Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred T. Ogden of Kinderhook and their house guests Mrs. Williams and Miss Hope Williams of New York City, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Block of Hillsdale, Mrs. Walter S. Crandell of Bronxville and Chatham, and Dr. Roger Bliss, Dr. Elah Bliss, Mrs. Wendover Neefus, Mrs. Homer B. Armstrong, Miss Dorothy Clark, Miss Hazel Drumm, Miss Ruth Sceurman, Mrs. Frank B. Holsapple, Miss Dorothy Holsapple, and the Rev. James Penneck of this city. Guests of James E. Leath of Kinderhook in his box at Saturday night's concert were his house guests, Mrs. John Singleton Amory of Wenham, Mass., Miss Julia Pruyn, Mrs. Ernest P. Hoes, John S. Hoes of Kinderhook, Miss Louise Hutchinson of Old Chatham and Gerald S. Bliss of this city. Mr. Leath's guests in his box at yesterday afternoon's concert were Mrs. Marion H. Johnson of Kinderhook, her house guest, Mrs. Helene Ball of Boston, Mass., and Mrs. William G. Studwell, Mrs. Otis Howard Bradley and Gerald S. Bliss of this city.

Among the many celebreties at Saturday night's concert were Dr. Hanson, composer of Symphony No. 2, "Romantic" which was played at that concert, Ted Shawn of Jacob's Pillow, Lee, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. Lytle Hull of Staatsburgh and New York City, and Mrs. August Belmont and Mme. Schiaparelli of New York City. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and a party of friends were present at Thursday night's concert and during the intermission went back stage to congratulate Dr. Konssevitzky upon the magnificent work of the Boston Symphony orchestra and his impressive leadership. Mrs. Roosevelt's guests at the concert were Mrs. Henry Morgenthau and her daughter, Miss Joan Morgenthau, Earl Parkman of St. Paul, Minn., and Robert Ferley and Joseph Lash of New York City.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 11 1941

9500 Hear Concert At Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 10 (AP)—Showing their amazing command of style, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra today pleased a 9500 crowd at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with master works of composers of three different centuries.

Ideal weather — sunny, but temperate—saw 6700 persons assembled in the famous music shed, while 2800 others relaxed on the lawns of Tanglewood.

Mozart's Symphony in "E Flat Major" led the program as Koussevitzky and the orchestra evoked grandeur from the work's lyricism of movement and expression.

This was followed by Debussy's "The Sea," which seemed enhanced by the circumstance of open air presentation.

In one of those impetuous decisions for which he is well known, Koussevitzky substituted Brahms' "First Symphony" for the announced "Fantastic" of Berlioz for the second half of the program.

Announcement was made that Lord Halifax, British ambassador to this country, would address a festival audience next Friday when a United States Army band of 300 musicians will give a concert with Koussevitzky as conductor.

This Clipping From
SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE
AUG 11 1941

The World of Music

Carlos Chavez, Mexican composer and conductor, who has been appearing at Ravinia park in Chicago, will be back with his own orchestra in Mexico City late this month. Soloists under his direction there will include Robert Casadesus, pianist, and Joseph Szigeti, violinist. Chavez will return to the United States during February as guest conductor of the Chicago and Boston symphonies.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 11 1941

Halifax to Speak.

By the Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 11.—Announcement was made here last night that Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to this country, would address a Berkshire symphonic festival audience next Friday when a United States Army Band of 300 musicians will give a concert with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
AUG 13 1941

BENEFIT PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Many Thousands Expected at Great Estate — Festivities Begin at 5:30 P. M.

The program in detail is here announced for the gala benefit to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass. The benefit will occur within the final week end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the forces of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood and nationally prominent speakers and soloists will make the occasion a musical one, as well as an impressive demonstration in favor of the national emergency.

Many thousands are expected to visit the great Tanglewood estate, to which there will be a nominal admission fee. The festivities will begin at 5:30 o'clock, when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to perform marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program will be as follows:

Combined bands of the 26th Division (250 players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky)
Berkshire Music Center on Parade
Simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center
Orchestra and chorus in a program to include Lambert's "Rio Grande"
Instrumental ensembles
Opera scenes from "Handel and Gretel," "Othello," "Falstaff," "Czar and Carpenter"
Fanfare
The Manifestation—The speakers to be introduced by Randall Thompson's "Allelulia Chorus"
Lawn Party
Fanfare
Gala concert (in the Shed)—Boston Symphony Orchestra
"Fifth Symphony" (Allegro con brio) —Beethoven
(Serge Koussevitzky conducting)
"Mars, the Bringer of War," and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace" from "The Planets"—Holst
(Stanley Chapple conducting)
Concerto for violin and orchestra—Mendelssohn
(Albert Spalding, soloist)
Festival Chorus
Overture "1812"—Tchaikovsky
(Combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras and the Bands of the 26th Division, Serge Koussevitzky conducting)
Draw for prizes
Fireworks

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 11 1941

19

Berkshire Festival Gets 11,000

They Brave Drizzle at Stockbridge

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 11.—Despite a teasing drizzle that kept turning on and off and shifting lawn sprawlers toward Tanglewood's spreading elms, festival sojourners went over the top Saturday night with an 11,000 attendance.

The combined state police and local constabulary forces unwound traffic snarls in clockwork sequence, though the two mile trip back to Lenox was at snail's pace.

Saturday's record-breaking total speaks well for Berkshire standards, though by now everybody knows perfect Berkshirites go the whole repertory caboodle from Bach to Hindemith and take their Shostakovich with a bang.

* * *

Heated Ovation.

At least one-third of Saturday's bill went to the American Howard Hanson's Romantic Symphony, and time was when upper bracket American music kept the camp followers away in droves. The ovation for Dr. Hanson's symphony was no less heated than that for Beethoven's Eroica Thursday night.

Put it down to primary factors, widening interest in new music, Dr. Hanson's sturdy talents and Dr. Koussevitzky's way with the latest in symphonic styles. The Boston leader can dress a score to kill, given a minimum of intrinsic worth.

The Romantic Symphony is American to the core, barring the few token bows in the direction of Debussy, Sibelius and the Russians. The creative drive never slackens in its three movement surge and the fresh themes weave into a many-hued fabric of taut texture.

Dr. Koussevitzky's men put the score through a wonder-working process, polishing it to a fine glow and whipping up the climaxes to resounding heights. Conductor and composer took the four recalls as a team, though an Alphonse-and-Gaston act stymied the priorities a bit.

* * *

Shure Soloist.

Saturday's soloist entry brought the current reading level down a few pegs when Leonard Shure appeared in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. A cog slipped somewhere along the line and the first two movements limped and trudged ahead heavily, with Mr. Shure tugging along.

Things perked up in the Andante where pianist and orchestra flung wisps of reverie mood about in a clean-cut ensemble of neat dynamic dove-tailing. The Finale went off in a torrent of crisp tone, making further amends.

Of the two Wagnerian selections Saturday the Lohengrin Prelude lorded it over the Meistersinger Prelude in soaring lyric reach, the latter also suffering from weak contrasts in the timing.

The Mozart commemoration went on over the week end with Eine Kleine Nachtmusic Saturday and the E Flat Major Symphony (K543) yesterday. The Little Serenade chattered brightly in one of the finest readings ever heard on or off the Tanglewood summit. The Rondo breezed by on wings.

* * *

Sunlight in Music.

Anton Rubinstein once referred to Mozart as "Sunlight in Music." Yesterday's lawn lollers took it literally, with sunshine radiating from the E Flat Symphony and the other kind pouring down from above. In fact, the Sunday matinee sun bath is quite a mass diversion here.

The symphony was also in the Koussevitzky groove of high grade finish. Mozart and Koussevitzky have teamed up beautifully on series B's commemorative side, and Tanglewood has done humble homage to music's graveless wonderchild.

Debussy's The Sea hit a new high in symphonic sorcery on yesterday's program. The mirrored deep tossed impressionistic spray in a vivid flow of orchestral tone and Dr. Koussevitzky churned Debusseyan waves till Tanglewood was threatened with mass seasickness.

As a parting gesture the conductor brought the program back into three B line as Brahms' First Symphony arched its epic span in a rendering of tense and driving power.

* * *

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 11 1941

Cheering Crowds Break Festival Records Again

Saturday Night Audience Exceeds 11,000 —Sunday Concert Attracts 9500 Enthusiastic Music Lovers and Others

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Serge Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought the second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood to a close yesterday afternoon after audiences of near-fantastic numbers shouted, applauded, waved handkerchiefs, and, in general, deported themselves like anything but New Englanders.

Records Fall Again

Saturday night saw more people at Tanglewood than ever had been there at one time before, including last year's British Relief benefit and its 10,000 visitors. Slightly more than 11,000 attended the Saturday concert and 9500 were present yesterday, the week-end total of almost 20,000 setting still another record.

The cause of yesterday afternoon's frenzy was the last movement of the Brahms first symphony. The orchestra itself never played with more faultless precision and more rounded tone. The wind section distinguished itself particularly in this last movement; first the horn calls in the introduction, and then the full brass in the coda where they have a great A major chord, which they made a marvelously complete and true tone. The excitement accumulated until the final crash.

The afternoon had been of Berkshire's most perfect kind. The clarity of the atmosphere and of the skies added resonance to the strings. This week's series had honored the memory of Mozart, who died just 150 years ago. Each program contained at least one of his compositions. Yesterday they played the E flat major symphony, the companion in age to the G minor of Thursday night's program. We question the choice of this, even though it be one of his greatest symphonies. Its introduction, marked adagio, was played with annoying caution, and the second movement, andante, moved with an unaccountable deliberation.

In fact, it was only in the closing section of the Brahms that the orchestra rose above the lethargy their leader had imposed upon them during most of the afternoon, and achieved a climax which loosed all the emotional stops of the holiday audience.

We all recognize that program changes become necessary for many

Festival
Continued on Fifth Page

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

N.Y. Sun 8/11/41

Second Series of Concerts Given at Tanglewood.

The second of the three series of concerts which make up the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival, came to a close yesterday afternoon with a program of Mozart, Debussy and Brahms which delighted another record-breaking audience in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The Mozart was the E Flat Major Symphony, the Debussy "La Mer" and the Brahms the towering C Minor Symphony. The final series of concerts will be given next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. So large have been this year's crowds that there is talk of extending the festival to four weeks next year.

The Saturday night audience, which numbered more than 10,000, heard an exceedingly generous program that included Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," superbly played by the fabulous Boston strings; Brahm's B Flat Piano Concerto, with the gifted young American, Leonard Shure, as soloist; Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, and two Wagnerian excerpts. Mr. Shure received a well-deserved ovation, something in the way of personal tribute a little above and beyond the raptures with which the festival audiences are accustomed to receive (and very properly, too), whatever musical fare their beloved Serge Koussevitzky and his men choose to set before them.

W. G. K.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1941

Crowd of 11,000 Sets Berkshire Festival Record

Howard Hanson Symphony Played; Leonard Shure at Piano in Brahms Work

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—A record crowd of 11,000 listeners thronged the grounds at Tanglewood last night to hear a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and another huge audience, drawn by prevailing splendid weather, has gathered here this afternoon.

From the standpoint of applause the feature of last night's concert, which opened with an amiable reading of Mozart's serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," was the performance of Brahms's second piano concerto, in B-flat major, with Leonard Shure as soloist. Mr. Shure, young American artist, scored a decided success with the audience. Critical reaction prompts me to a more sober estimate. This pianist has temperament, rhythmic feeling and a touch of the heroic—welcome assets for this most noble of piano concertos. But last night he had not enough reserve technique.

This is not to say that Mr. Shure did not encompass all the notes of a difficult solo part. He did, and the trying episode in octaves and sixths of the second movement went uncommonly well. But too often he gave the impression of a final effort, of an insufficient surplus upon which to draw, if necessary, for a bravura performance. Certain passages in the opening allegro were taken too slowly, although this might have been the fault of the conductor; and an amount of caution was evident throughout.

Wagner Preludes Given

Mr. Shure was at his best in the rugged scherzo, where his virile tone-quality and incisive rhythms came off to fine advantage. The slow movement also went well and breathed a poetic atmosphere. Here much of the pianist's good work was negated by the poor playing of the orchestra's first cellist. The last movement lost out somewhat through Mr. Shure's inability as yet to lighten his passage work. It was deftly played, but the soloist's full, weighty tone did not match the filigree design.

A total impression of this performance revealed a highly talented young pianist who, with more varied dynamic range and wider technical development, may become a highly significant artist. But should not the most celebrated soloist available have been engaged for a festival of this kind?

Other works on last night's program included the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"—of which the "Lohengrin" received a superb performance—and Howard Hanson's second ("Romantic") symphony. Dr. Hanson's score is well made, but obvious. His third symphony, which I heard him conduct two days ago in the Tanglewood shed, seems to be far more vital and individual music. One reservation about the "Romantic" symphony may be based on the matter of its eclecticism; another on the "theme song" quality of its second subject, which returns at the close of the work in cinematic style. Nevertheless, the actual sound of the symphony is good, the orchestra well handled. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men gave it so stunning a performance that the audience cheered. Dr. Hanson was present to acknowledge the tribute.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 11 1941

9,500 Throng To Concert At Tanglewood

Practically every state in Union is represented

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS
Courier-Express Music Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 10—The Tanglewood concert today had a national audience. Lines of automobiles, bearing license plates of practically every state in the Union, brought 9,500 persons to the grounds for the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The orchestra gave a superb performance, comprising Symphony in A major by Mozart; La Mer by Debussy and Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

The beautiful tone quality of the string choir did full justice to the lilting themes of the Mozart number. Numerous rehearsals attended during the week impressed this writer with Dr. Koussevitzky's painstaking care to produce the most exquisite pianissimi, to enunciate every subtlety of dynamics and to achieve just the proper degree of crescendo and diminuendo.

Comment by Downes

Olin Downes at the rehearsal Saturday morning quoted the late Charles Loeffler: "If one could hear grass growing, Debussy in his remarkable talent for writing impressionist music would have created the effect in sound." This very sensitivity and genius for color of Debussy was imparted in full by the interpretation of La Mer offered today. Scintillating weaving of tone pictures was captivating.

The Brahms interpretation was heroic in style. Inferior orchestras frequently lose the emotional expression of this composer by cloudiness of rhythm and lack of balance of subordinate phrases. Today, the version offered particularly in the andante and in the finale was of tremendous rhythmic strength and extreme sensitivity of phrasing. The audience shouted and stamped its acclaim.

Buffalonians noted were Dr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck Perry, Mrs. Sidney Kennedy, Mrs. Eddy of Cleveland Avenue, Franco Autori, conductor of the Buffalo Symphony, and Mrs. Autori; June Hards, Mathew Tworek and Karol Barabas, violinists in the Buffalo orchestra; Virginia Peters and Walter Hagen, Buffalo violinists who are students at the E

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 11 1941

Concert Group Named

—By RHODA HATHAWAY
Society Editor of, The Knickerbocker News

Laurence McKinney has been named a member of the ticket committee for the gala benefit concert to be staged at Tanglewood Friday at 5:30 p. m. for the USO and British War Relief by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Colony. Other Capital District members of the ticket committee are Miss Annabel Terrell, Chatham; Mrs. Harry Adams, Lebanon Valley and Mrs. Alexander Bloch, Hillsdale.

One of the features of the benefit will be the appearance of the 250 piece band from Camp Edwards, led by Dr. Koussevitzky.

A New England supper of baked beans, salads, cold cuts, desserts and hot and cold drinks will be served on the grounds of Tanglewood. Women of the Thursday morning Club of Great Barrington will serve refreshments and proceeds will go to the benefit fund.

Governors of the six New England states and trustees of the festival are sponsoring the event

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 11 1941

Leader Is God To Band Girls

Live In World All Their Own

By ALICE HUGHES and LEONARD HALL

New York, Aug. 11, 1941

WHILE Madame Hughes and I were soaking up musical culchah amid the beauties of nate-chah in the gorgeous Berkshires, we had an excellent opportunity to study the domestic manners of symphony orchestra wives and their talented husbands who saw tootle or bang things. I may say that they are gentle and tender to a degree I've never noted before, living in a strange little world of their own composed entirely of the band, its programs, its plans and its god, the conductor.

Since the madame's sister is married to a fiddler in the Boston symphony, now making music on the superb Tanglewood estate near Stockbridge, Mass., I have a decided in on this situation, though I shall violate no homey confidences. The wives tend to cluster during rehearsals, and they have particular pals with whom they have dates when papa is not making noises under the wonder wand of Maestro Serge Koussevitzky, know to one and all as "the boss." He is somewhat of a hard man when on duty, but he is highly respected by his jive gang for his fine musicianship.

The girls huddle somewhat by choirs, but more according to nationality, and as there are about 40 Frenchmen in the band, the Gallic contingent is very strong and clubby. When I was presented to an extremely pretty girl named Jane Dixon, and learned that her husband Harry plays a hot fiddle in the band I like to drop down dead. A symphony fiddler with the simple American name of Dixon? Couldn't be. It seems to be a symphony tradition that an American named John Paul Jones from Seattle, Wash., is not quite fit even to bang a triangle in such a snorty gang, but if his name is Ivan Sergeievitch Popsky, he can fiddle solo.

Madame Hughes and Mrs. Eugene (Billie) Lyons set a new cultural high by fighting out a ferocious gin rummy game on the lawn outside the Music Shed at Tanglewood during the first two movements of old man Brahms' Fourth Symphony on a sunny Sunday afternoon. Brahms shuddered in his cool tomb, but Billie won and took the last two movements in stride.

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
OAKLAND, CALIF.
POST-INQUIRER

AUG 14 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 11 1941

Cheering Crowds Break Festival Records Again

Saturday Night Audience Exceeds 11,000 —Sunday Concert Attracts 9500 Enthusiastic Music Lovers and Others

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Serge Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought the second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood to a close yesterday afternoon after audiences of near-fantastic numbers shouted, applauded, waved handkerchiefs, and, in general, deported themselves like anything but New Englanders.

Records Fall Again

Saturday night saw more people at Tanglewood than ever had been there at one time before, including last year's British Relief benefit and its 10,000 visitors. Slightly more than 11,000 attended the Saturday concert and 9500 were present yesterday, the week-end total of almost 20,000 setting still another record.

The cause of yesterday afternoon's frenzy was the last movement of the Brahms first symphony. The orchestra itself never played with more faultless precision and more rounded tone. The wind section distinguished itself particularly in this last movement; first the horn calls in the introduction, and then the full brass in the coda where they have a great A major chord, which they made a marvelously complete and true tone. The excitement accumulated until the final crash.

The afternoon had been of Berkshire's most perfect kind. The clarity of the atmosphere and of the skies added resonance to the strings. This week's series had honored the memory of Mozart, who died just 150 years ago. Each program contained at least one of his compositions. Yesterday they played the E flat major symphony, the companion in age to the G minor of Thursday night's program. We question the choice of this, even though it be one of his greatest symphonies. Its introduction, marked adagio, was played with annoying caution, and the second movement, andante, moved with an unaccountable deliberation.

In fact, it was only in the closing section of the Brahms that the orchestra rose above the lethargy their leader had imposed upon them during most of the afternoon, and achieved a climax which loosed all the emotional stops of the holiday audience.

We all recognize that program changes become necessary for many

Festival
Continued on Fifth Page

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

N.Y. Sun 8/11/41

Second Series of Concerts Given at Tanglewood.

The second of the three series of concerts which make up the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival, came to a close yesterday afternoon with a program of Mozart, Debussy and Brahms which delighted another record-breaking audience in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The Mozart was the E Flat Major Symphony, the Debussy "La Mer" and the Brahms the towering C Minor Symphony. The final series of concerts will be given next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. So large have been this year's crowds that there is talk of extending the festival to four weeks next year.

The Saturday night audience, which numbered more than 10,000, heard an exceedingly generous program that included Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," superbly played by the fabulous Boston strings; Brahm's B Flat Piano Concerto, with the gifted young American, Leonard Shure, as soloist; Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, and two Wagnerian excerpts. Mr. Shure received a well-deserved ovation, something in the way of personal tribute a little above and beyond the raptures with which the festival audiences are accustomed to receive (and very properly, too), whatever musical fare their beloved Serge Koussevitzky and his men choose to set before them.

W. G. K.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1941

Crowd of 11,000 Sets Berkshire Festival Record

Howard Hanson Symphony Played; Leonard Shure at Piano in Brahms Work

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—A record crowd of 11,000 listeners thronged the grounds at Tanglewood last night to hear a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and another huge audience, drawn by prevailing splendid weather, has gathered here this afternoon.

From the standpoint of applause the feature of last night's concert, which opened with an amiable reading of Mozart's serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," was the performance of Brahms's second piano concerto, in B-flat major, with Leonard Shure as soloist. Mr. Shure, young American artist, scored a decided success with the audience. Critical reaction prompts me to a more sober estimate. This pianist has temperament, rhythmic feeling and a touch of the heroic—welcome assets for this most noble of piano concertos. But last night he had not enough reserve technique.

This is not to say that Mr. Shure did not encompass all the notes of a difficult solo part. He did, and the trying episode in octaves and sixths of the second movement went uncommonly well. But too often he gave the impression of a final effort, of an insufficient surplus upon which to draw, if necessary, for a bravura performance. Certain passages in the opening allegro were taken too slowly, although this might have been the fault of the conductor; and an amount of caution was evident throughout.

Wagner Preludes Given

Mr. Shure was at his best in the rugged scherzo, where his virile tone-quality and incisive rhythms came off to fine advantage. The slow movement also went well and breathed a poetic atmosphere. Here much of the pianist's good work was negated by the poor playing of the orchestra's first cellist. The last movement lost out somewhat through Mr. Shure's inability as yet to lighten his passage work. It was deftly played, but the soloist's full, weighty tone did not match the filigree design.

A total impression of this performance revealed a highly talented young pianist who, with more varied dynamic range and wider technical development, may become a highly significant artist. But should not the most celebrated soloist available have been engaged for a festival of this kind?

Other works on last night's program included the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"—of which the "Lohengrin" received a superb performance—and Howard Hanson's second ("Romantic") symphony. Dr. Hanson's score is well made, but obvious. His third symphony, which I heard him conduct two days ago in the Tanglewood shed, seems to be far more vital and individual music. One reservation about the "Romantic" symphony may be based on the matter of its eclecticism; another on the "theme song" quality of its second subject, which returns at the close of the work in cinematic style. Nevertheless, the actual sound of the symphony is good, the orchestra well handled. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men gave it so stunning a performance that the audience cheered. Dr. Hanson was present to acknowledge the tribute.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 11 1941

9,500 Throng To Concert At Tanglewood

Practically every state in Union is represented

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS
Courier-Express Music Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 10—The Tanglewood concert today had a national audience. Lines of automobiles, bearing license plates of practically every state in the Union, brought 9,500 persons to the grounds for the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The orchestra gave a superb performance, comprising Symphony in A major by Mozart; La Mer by Debussy and Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

The beautiful tone quality of the string choir did full justice to the lilting themes of the Mozart number. Numerous rehearsals attended during the week impressed this writer with Dr. Koussevitzky's painstaking care to produce the most exquisite pianissimi, to enunciate every subtlety of dynamics and to achieve just the proper degree of crescendo and diminuendo.

Comment by Downes

Olin Downes at the rehearsal Saturday morning quoted the late Charles Loeffler: "If one could hear grass growing, Debussy in his remarkable talent for writing impressionist music would have created the effect in sound." This very sensitivity and genius for color of Debussy was imparted in full by the interpretation of La Mer offered today. Scintillating weaving of tone pictures was captivating.

The Brahms interpretation was heroic in style. Inferior orchestras frequently lose the emotional expression of this composer by cloudiness of rhythm and lack of balance of subordinate phrases. Today, the version offered particularly in the andante and in the finale was of tremendous rhythmic strength and extreme sensitivity of phrasing. The audience shouted and stamped its acclaim.

Buffalonians noted were Dr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck Perry, Mrs. Sidney Kennedy, Mrs. Eddy of Cleveland Avenue, Franco Autori, conductor of the Buffalo Symphony, and Mrs. Autori; June Hards, Mathew Tworek and Karol Barabas, violinists in the Buffalo orchestra; Virginia Peters and Walter Hagen, Buffalo violinists who are students at the Berkshire music center.

EWS
1941

Concert Group Named

—By RHODA HATHAWAY

Society Editor of, The Knickerbocker News

Laurence McKinney has been named a member of the ticket committee for the gala benefit concert to be staged at Tanglewood Friday at 5:30 p. m. for the USO and British War Relief by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Colony. Other Capital District members of the ticket committee are Miss Annabel Terrell, Chatham; Mrs. Harry Adams, Lebanon Valley and Mrs. Alexander Bloch, Hillsdale.

One of the features of the benefit will be the appearance of the 250 piece band from Camp Edwards, led by Dr. Koussevitzky.

A New England supper of baked beans, salads, cold cuts, desserts and hot and cold drinks will be served on the grounds of Tanglewood. Women of the Thursday morning Club of Great Barrington will serve refreshments and proceeds will go to the benefit fund.

Governors of the six New England states and trustees of the festival are sponsoring the event

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 11 1941

Leader Is God To Band Girls

Live In World All Their Own

By ALICE HUGHES and LEONARD HALL

New York, Aug. 11, 1941

WHILE Madame Hughes and I were soaking up musical culchah amid the beauties of nate-chah in the gorgeous Berkshires, we had an excellent opportunity to study the domestic manners of symphony orchestra wives and their talented husbands who saw tootle or bang things. I may say that they are gentle and tender to a degree I've never noted before, living in a strange little world of their own composed entirely of the band, its programs, its plans and its god, the conductor.

Since the madame's sister is married to a fiddler in the Boston symphony, now making music on the superb Tanglewood estate near Stockbridge, Mass., I have a decided in on this situation, though I shall violate no homey confidences. The wives tend to cluster during rehearsals, and they have particular pals with whom they have dates when papa is not making noises under the wonder wand of Maestro Serge Koussevitzky, know to one and all as "the boss." He is somewhat of a hard man when on duty, but he is highly respected by his jive gang for his fine musicianship.

The girls huddle somewhat by choirs, but more according to nationality, and as there are about 40 Frenchmen in the band, the Gallic contingent is very strong and clubby. When I was presented to an extremely pretty girl named Jane Dixon, and learned that her husband Harry plays a hot fiddle in the band I like to drop down dead. A symphony fiddler with the simple American name of Dixon? Couldn't be. It seems to be a symphony tradition that an American named John Paul Jones from Seattle, Wash., is not quite fit even to bang a triangle in such a snorty gang, but if his name is Ivan Sergeievitch Popsky, he can fiddle solo.

Madame Hughes and Mrs. Eugene (Billie) Lyons set a new cultural high by fighting out a ferocious gin rummy game on the lawn outside the Music Shed at Tanglewood during the first two movements of old man Brahms' Fourth Symphony on a sunny Sunday afternoon. Brahms shuddered in his cool tomb, but Billie won and took the last two movements in stride.

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 11 1941

This Clipping From
OAKLAND, CALIF.
POST-INQUIRER
AUG 14 1941

REDUCTION

RATIO

16x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

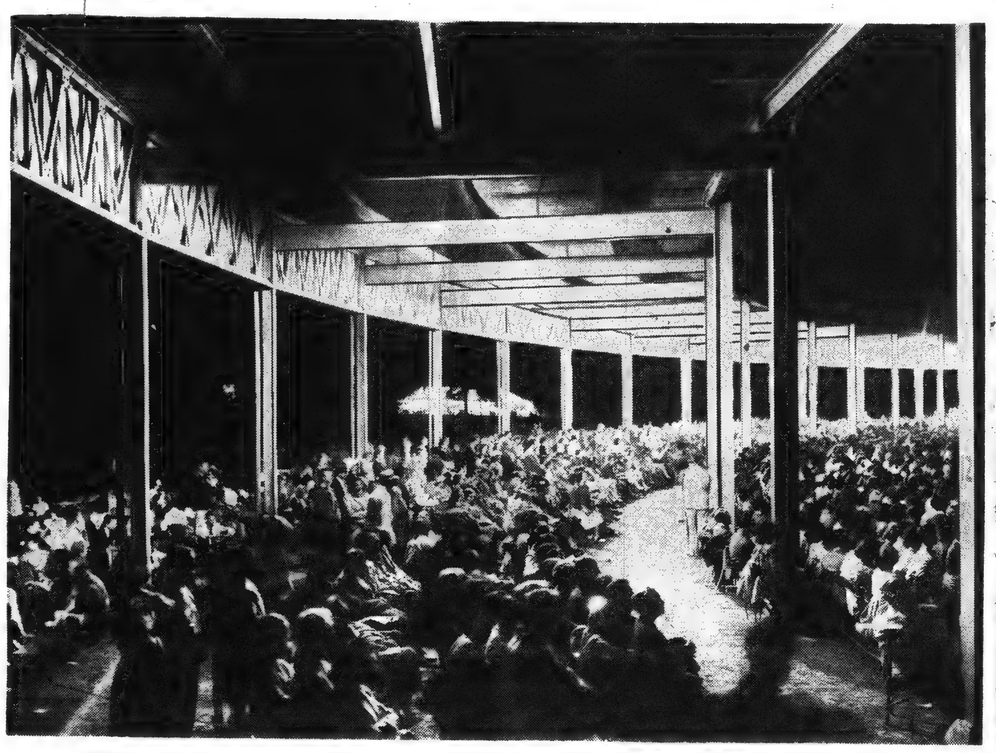
3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

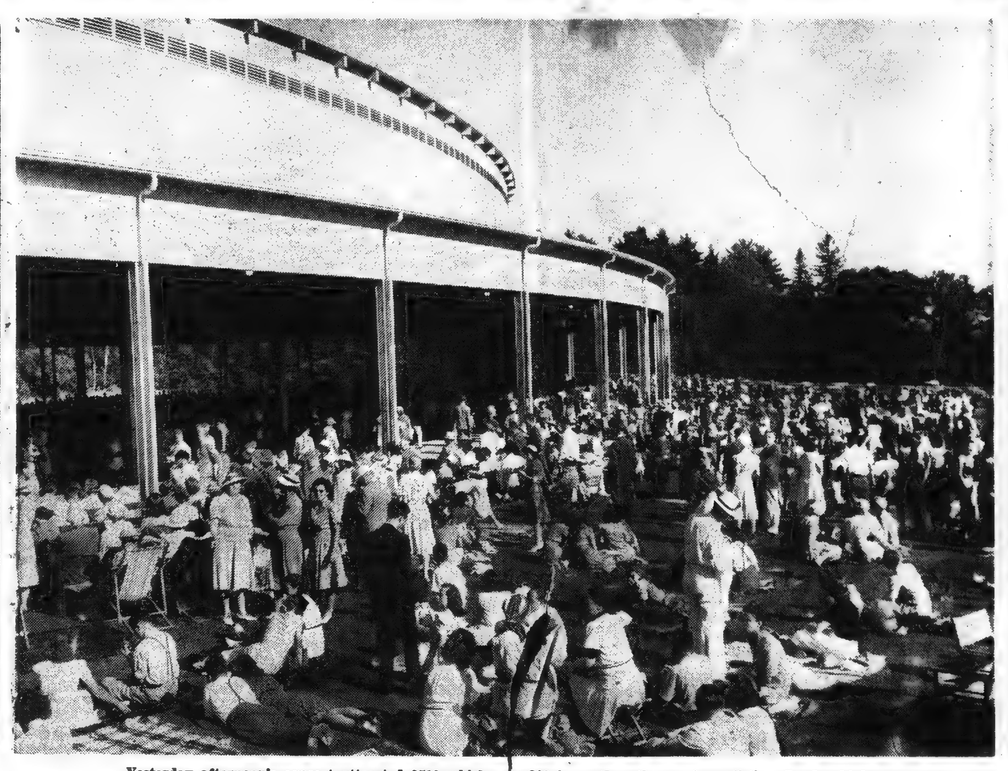
21

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Shed and Lawns Overflow With Record Crowds



A glimpse of the rear section of the Shed during Saturday night's concert which drew more than 11,000 persons.



Yesterday afternoon's concert attracted 9500 which was 200 fewer than the previous all-time Sunday high.

Conductors Conference Held at Lee

George E. Judd And Mrs. Grant Among Speakers

LEE—The conference of orchestra conductors who have been in attendance at the Berkshire Music Centtr at Tanglewood this summer was brought to a close at a dinner meeting at the Morgan House in Lee Saturday afternoon. James Adair, conductor of the Burrell Symphony Orchestra at Stephen's College in Columbia, Mo., was in charge of the program at this meeting.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were the principal speakers. The subject for the talks and for the discussions which followed was on problems of business management of symphony orchestras.

Mr. Judd stressed the importance of an orchestra's contributions to the field of music, as being a deciding factor in gaining a profitable audience following. The use of publicity and advertising alone was described as giving short-term life. Rather than this, an "honest growth—giving something to music" will insure the financial and musical success of any orchestra. In this connection Mr. Judd mentioned that the Boston Symphony has grown up over a period of 40 years of hard work.

Following the main speakers several conductors from various parts of the country were called upon to describe their business organization and the results obtained from these. Robert S. Whitney, conductor of the Louisville Civic Orchestra, Thor Johnson, conductor of the Grand Rapids Symphony, Carmine Ficocelli, conductor of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, Watson Peck, conductor of the Reading Symphony, Harold Lesley of the Pioneer Valley Association Orchestra, and Miss Dorothy Holcombe, who conducts a string ensemble, all spoke breifly concerning their own organizations.

Various methods of presentation of a year's program were described, among which were straight symphony concerts, children's instruction concerts, Christmas programs, choruses, and the use of soloists of national fame.

One unique method of advertising was described by Thor Johnson of the Grand Rapids Symphony. For their Christmas concert, the launderies in the city and the department stores co-operated by inserting programs in each package which they wrapped for delivery prior to the date of the concert. Over 5000 persons attended this one event as a result of this unique campaign.

Upon adjournment, the members expressed their wish to have mimeographed lists of the conductors and student conductors who have attended the conference made up for each to take with him. The purpose of this step will be to perpetuate the work of the conference by enabling each one to correspond with the others during the year, exchanging ideas, programs, and suggestions. A similar conference will be again instituted next year at the Berkshire Music Center to carry on the work that has been started this year.

Festival

Continued From First Page

reasons, but we could not help thinking with regret of the joyous A major symphony of the 18-year-old Mozart which had been announced up to a day or so ago.

Why Was Berlioz Withdrawn?

It would satisfy the public's curiosity tremendously, too, if they could be informed why Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony was also withdrawn. The present schedule of a three series Festival makes it imperative for some people to choose one or two from the entire three weeks. Programs are a determining factor in most cases. No one cavilled at Brahms in lieu of Berlioz, but the substitution of a piece so lately played on a Festival program for one never before played here is at best a disappointment.

Debussy's "La Mer" was the piece which gave the afternoon a lift. These sketches, depicting three different aspects of impressions of the sea, are in no fixed form. Their vague continuity and tenuous consistency are held together by only the most fragile and vaporous tone. Koussevitzky caressed his sensitive band into making for him gorgeous tone clusters and incomparably subtle colors. The warm afternoon sun could not have bathed us with a more soothing effect.

Leonard Shure High Scorer

But Saturday night was the night. In a program of a half-dozen touchdowns, Leonard Shure, soloist in the second Brahms piano concerto, took the ball and scored the outstanding success of the evening. He displayed a magnificent combination of technical brilliance and good taste. His equipment places no restrictions on him whatsoever. He applied his amazing pianistic strength with most gratifying judgment; the first movement came off with galvanic eclat; the slow movement was serene poetry. The 'cello solo in the introduction, played by Jean Bedetti, was deservedly recognized. Koussevitzky supplied a superlative accompaniment; in fact, the accompaniment is a symphony as massive and as glorious as any of Brahms' purely orchestral works. This is the concerto (B flat major), about which Brahms wrote to a friend "I have written quite a nice little piano concerto containing quite a nice little scherzo." This "little" concerto is beyond the technical reach and certainly the musical comprehension of all but an elect few virtuosi. Shure belongs to that select group by virtue of his majestic performance Saturday night. This is his second appearance in the Berkshires, the first took place at a private recital at the home of the late Gertrude Watson in Pittsfield a half dozen years ago.

Hanson Takes a Bow

Howard Hanson, the director of the Eastman Music School at Rochester, was present and was led out from the wings by Koussevitzky after a dramatic intrpretation of his "Romantic" symphony. This, his second, was written in 1930 as a feature of the Boston orchestra's 50th anniversary celebration. He is the second American to figure on this year's Festival programs; Copland was the first, and Barber is still be to heard. His symphony begins with an ascending slow three step minor figure, in a unit of two broad notes progressing to a longer note of repose which is reiterated some two dozen times with increasing intensity, until it arrives at the main statement. This, in time, subsides into passages of gentle affection suggestive possibly of such a background as served Berlioz for the basis for his "Fantastic" symphony. The diverse episodes which pass in parade in this overlong first movement lead to a nostalgic coda which well repays repeated hearings.

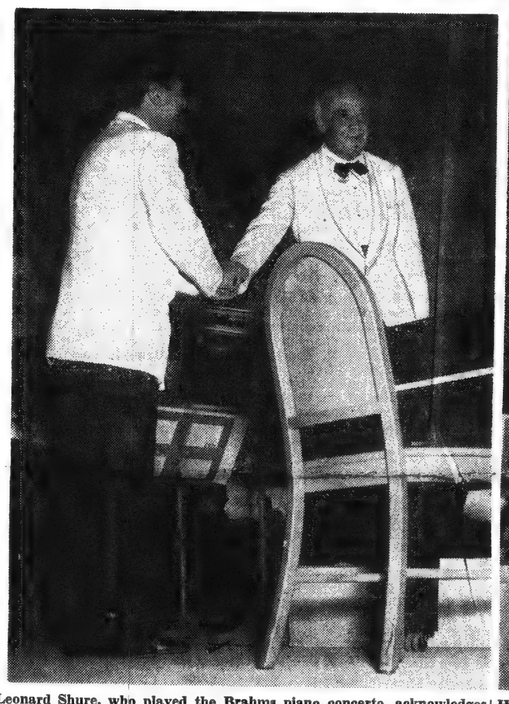
The middle movement, andante con tenerezza, makes use again of much of the material employed in the first movement, but, however, in fresh and different orchestration. We do not know if this is used as leit-motifs or if it betrays a paucity of means. We grant that it is unmistakably effective. Hanson makes conspicuously good use of the brass; to express the principal theme in his first movement, and again in the last.

The Mozart excerpt for the evening was "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," one of a long list of works Mozart dashed off during his career to fulfill the order of some nobleman who possibly asked to have "a little four movement suite for a small orchestra sent up to the castle by Saturday night." Koussevitzky did the wise thing, as usual, and allowed his string sections to play with the great but natural coherence they have acquired under his long years of drilling. The details were realized with keen purity in true style.

Rain Teases Audience

The prelude to "Lohengrin" and to the "Meistersinger von Nurnberg" completed a beautifully constructed program, and one performed with unsurpassed brilliance. Rain teased the record audience a few times during the evening. Just before the concert started, a few raindrops put into effect what must have appeared like a strange centripetal attraction, for the Shed suddenly became a magnet drawing people on the double quick from all the surrounding walks and lawns. Again during the inner movements of concerto, distant soft rumblings of thunder, and nearer and more tangible unimportant sprinkles threatened to disturb the performance, but, fortunately, it was dissipated, and, in fact, the close of the concert found the moon in its proper Berkshire position, doing its duty for all, and especially for the Festival audience.

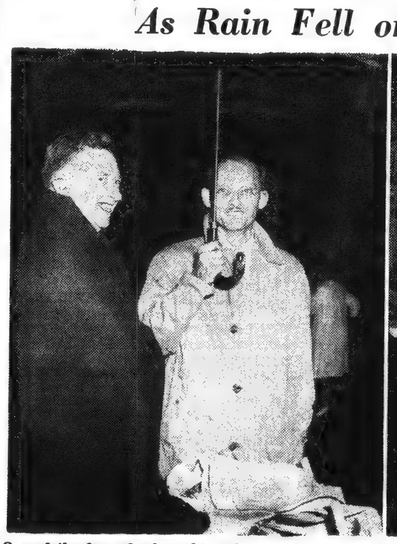
Make News at Record Tanglewood Concert



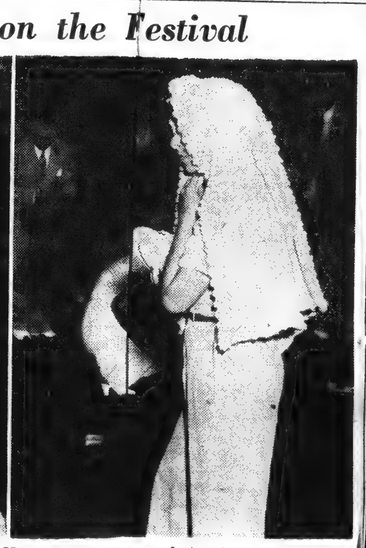
Leonard Shure, who played the Brahms piano concerto, acknowledges the support of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Howard Hanson responds to the ovation which greeted his "Romantic" symphony.

As Rain Fell on the Festival



One of the few who brought umbrellas shares his with a member of the blanket brigade.



Not everyone was as fortunate as this woman whose shawl was just the thing in the emergency.

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

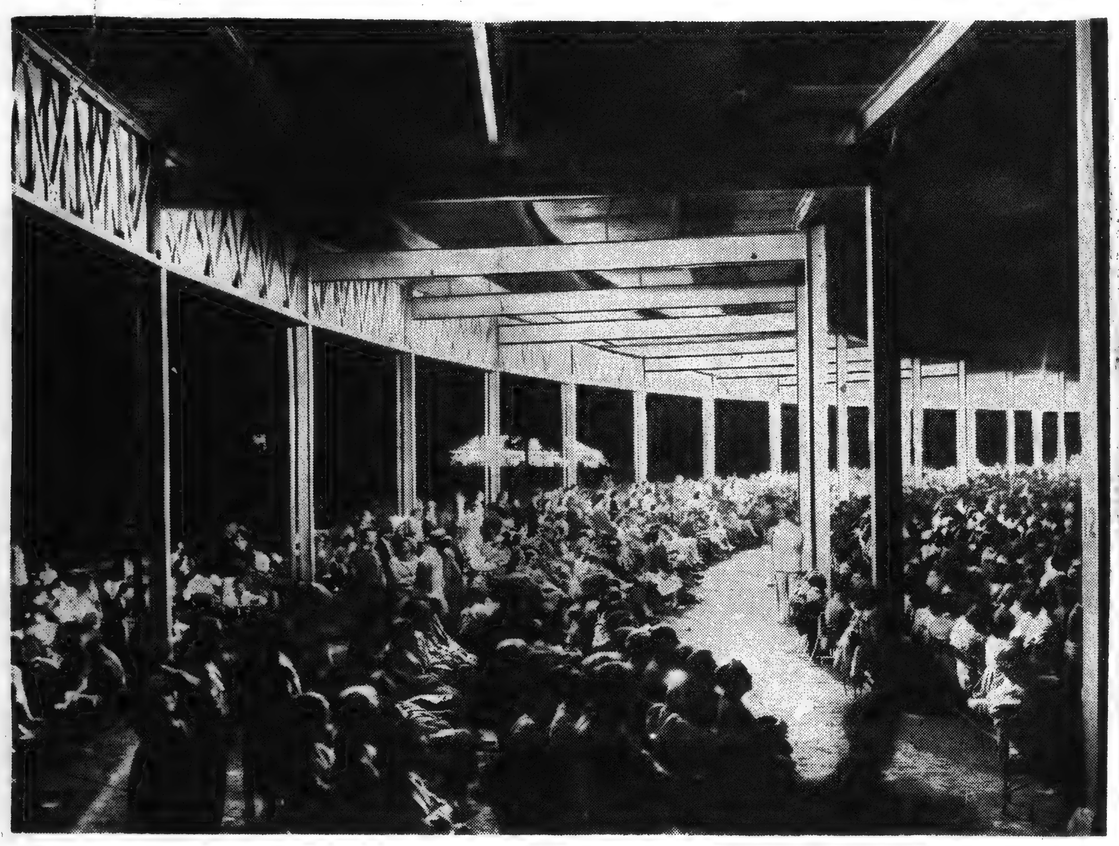
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

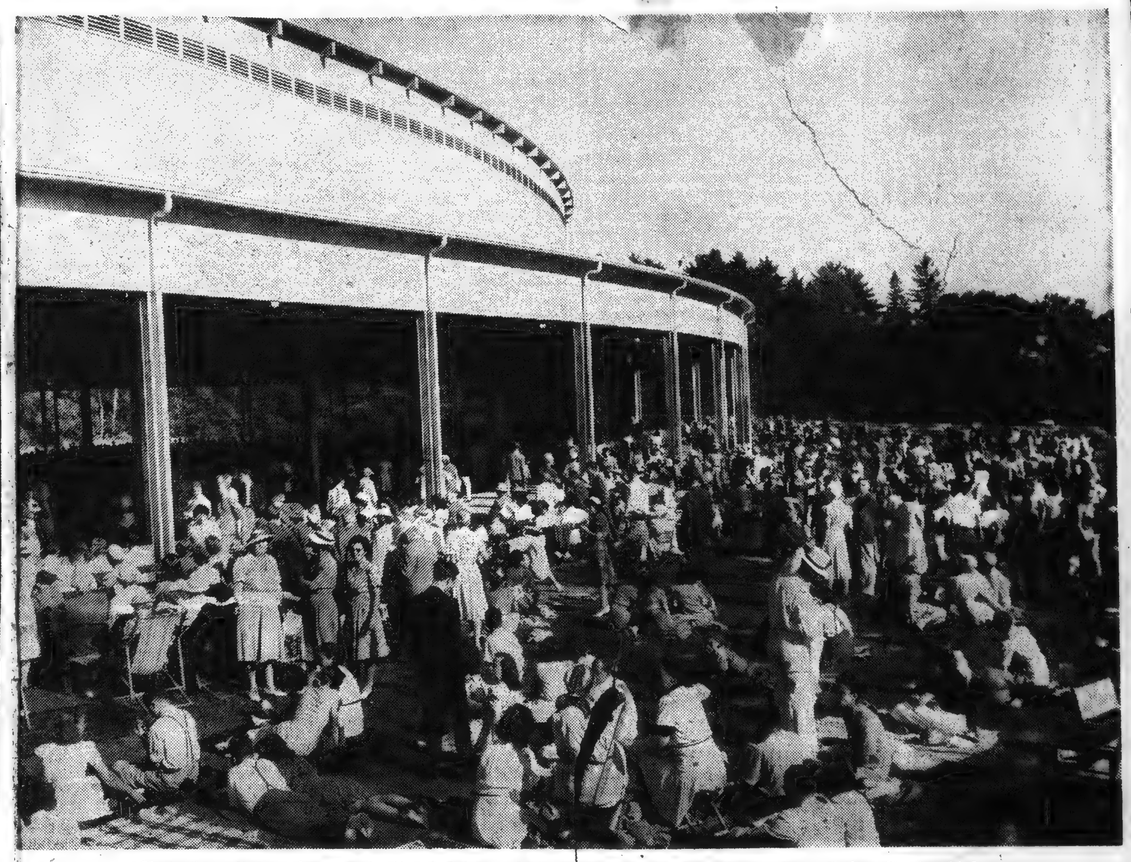
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 11 1941

Tanglewood Shed and Lawns Overflow With Record Crowds



A glimpse of the rear section of the Shed during Saturday night's concert which drew more than 11,000 persons.



Yesterday afternoon's concert attracted 9500 which was 200 fewer than the previous all-time Sunday high.

Conductors Conference Held at Lee

George E. Judd And Mrs. Grant Among Speakers

LEE—The conference of orchestra conductors who have been in attendance at the Berkshire Music Centtr at Tanglewood this summer was brought to a close at a dinner meeting at the Morgan House in Lee Saturday afternoon. James Adair, conductor of the Burrell Symphony Orchestra at Stephen's College in Columbia, Mo., was in charge of the program at this meeting.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were the principal speakers. The subject for the talks and for the discussions which followed was on problems of business management of symphony orchestras.

Mr. Judd stressed the importance of an orchestra's contributions to the field of music, as being a deciding factor in gaining a profitable audience following. The use of publicity and advertising alone was described as giving short-term life. Rather than this, an "honest growth—giving something to music" will insure the financial and musical success of any orchestra. In this connection Mr. Judd mentioned that the Boston Symphony has grown up over a period of 40 years of hard work.

Following the main speakers several conductors from various parts of the country were called upon to describe their business organization and the results obtained from these. Robert S. Whitney, conductor of the Louisville Civic Orchestra, Thor Johnson, conductor of the Grand Rapids Symphony, Carmine Ficocelli, conductor of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, Watson Peck, conductor of the Reading Symphony, Harold Lesley of the Pioneer Valley Association Orchestra, and Miss Dorothy Holcombe, who conducts a string ensemble, all spoke breifly concerning their own organizations.

Various methods of presentation of a year's program were described, among which were straight symphony concerts, children's instruction concerts, Christmas programs, choruses, and the use of soloists of national fame.

One unique method of advertising was described by Thor Johnson of the Grand Rapids Symphony. For their Christmas concert, the launderies in the city and the department stores co-operated by inserting programs in each package which they wrapped for delivery prior to the date of the concert. Over 5000 persons attended this one event as a result of this unique campaign.

Upon adjournment, the members expressed their wish to have mimeographed lists of the conductors and student conductors who have attended the conference made up for each to take with him. The purpose of this step will be to perpetuate the work of the conference by enabling each one to correspond with the others during the year, exchanging ideas, programs, and suggestions. A similar conference will be again instituted next year at the Berkshire Music Center to carry on the work that has been started this year.

Festival

Continued From First Page

reasons, but we could not help thinking with regret of the joyous A major symphony of the 18-year-old Mozart which had been announced up to a day or so ago.

Why Was Berlioz Withdrawn?

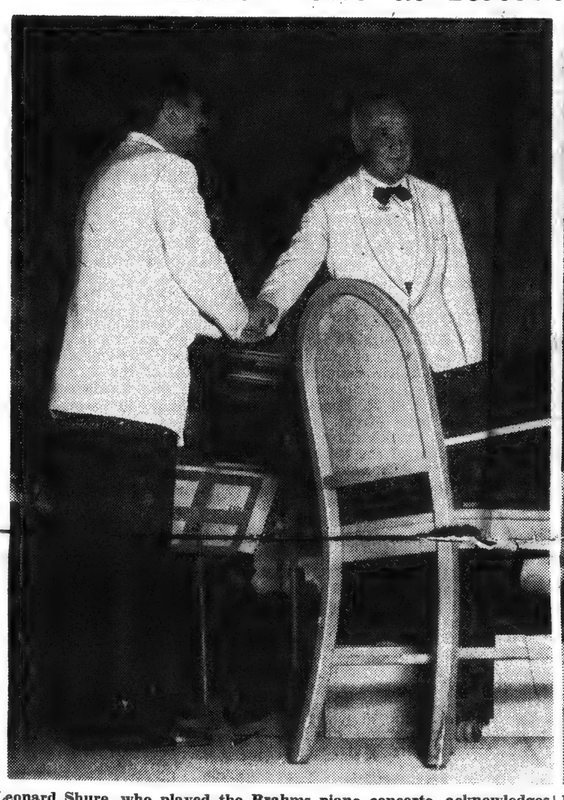
It would satisfy the public's curiosity tremendously, too, if they could be informed why Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony was also withdrawn. The present schedule of a three series Festival makes it imperative for some people to choose one or two from the entire three weeks. Programs are a determining factor in most cases. No one cavilled at Brahms in lieu of Berlioz, but the substitution of a piece so lately played on a Festival program for one never before played here is at best a disappointment.

Debussy's "La Mer" was the piece which gave the afternoon a lift. These sketches, depicting three different aspects of impressions of the sea, are in no fixed form. Their vague continuity and tenuous consistency are held together by only the most fragile and vaporous tone. Koussevitzky caressed his sensitive band into making for him gorgeous tone clusters and incomparably subtle colors. The warm afternoon sun could not have bathed us with a more soothing effect.

Leonard Shure High Scorer

But Saturday night was the night. In a program of a half-dozen touchdowns, Leonard Shure, soloist in the second Brahms piano concerto, took the ball and scored the outstanding success of the evening. He displayed a magnificent combination of technical brilliance and good taste. His equipment places no restrictions on him whatsoever. He applied his amazing pianistic strength with most gratifying judgment; the first movement came off with galvanic eclat; the slow movement was serene poetry. The 'cello solo in the introduction, played by Jean Bedetti, was deservedly recognized. Koussevitzky supplied a

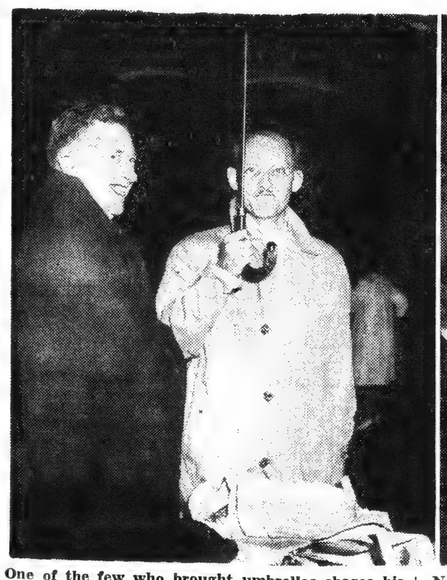
Make News at Record Tanglewood Concert



Leonard Shure, who played the Brahms piano concerto, acknowledges the support of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Howard Hanson responds to the ovation which greeted his "Romantic" symphony.

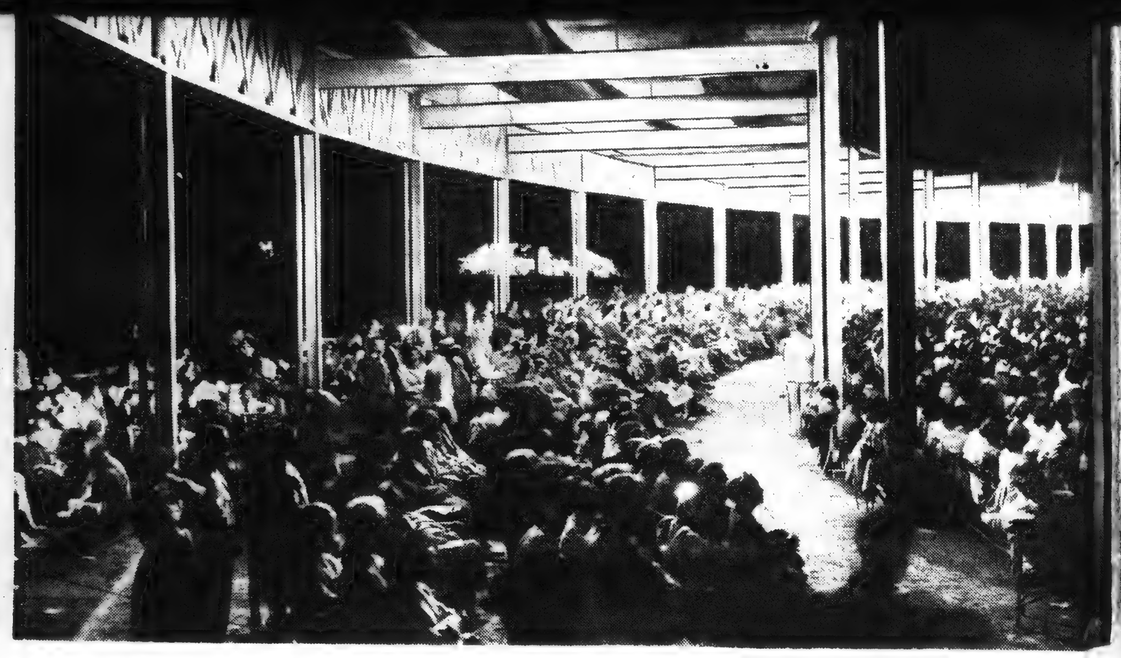
As Rain Fell on the Festival



One of the few who brought umbrellas shares his with a member of the blanket brigade.

Not everyone was as fortunate as this woman whose shawl was just the thing in the emergency.

structed program, and one performed with unsurpassed brilliance. Rain teased the record audience a few times during the evening. Just before the concert started, a few raindrops put into effect what must have appeared like a strange centripetal attraction, for the Shed suddenly became a magnet drawing people on the double quick from all the surrounding walks and lawns. Again during the inner movements of concerto, distant soft rumblings of thunder, and nearer and more tangible unimportant sprinkles threatened to disturb the performance, but, fortunately, it was dissipated, and, in fact, the close of the concert found the moon in its proper Berkshire position, doing its duty for all, and especially for the Festival audience.



A glimpse of the rear section of the Shed during Saturday night's concert which drew more than 11,000 persons.

Yesterday afternoon's concert attracted 9500 which was 200 fewer than the previous all-time Sunday high.

Conductors Conference Held at Lee

George E. Judd And Mrs. Grant Among Speakers

LEE—The conference of orchestra conductors who have been in attendance at the Berkshire Music Centtr at Tanglewood this summer was brought to a close at a dinner meeting at the Morgan House in Lee Saturday afternoon. James Adair, conductor of the Burrell Symphony Orchestra at Stephen's College in Columbia, Mo., was in charge of the program at this meeting.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and George E. Judd manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were the principal speakers. The subject for the talks and for the discussions which followed was on problems of business management of symphony orchestras.

Mr. Judd stressed the importance of an orchestra's contributions to the field of music, as being a deciding factor in gaining a profitable audience following. The use of publicity and advertising alone was described as giving short-term life. Rather than this, an "honest growth—giving something to music" will insure the financial and musical success of any orchestra. In this connection Mr. Judd mentioned that the Boston Symphony has grown up over a period of 40 years of hard work.

Following the main speakers several conductors from various parts of the country were called upon to describe their business organization and the results obtained from these. Robert S. Whitney, conductor of the Louisville Civic Orchestra, Thor Johnson, conductor of the Grand Rapids Symphony, Carmine Ficocelli, conductor of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, Watson Peck, conductor of the Reading Symphony, Harold Lesley of the Pioneer Valley Association Orchestra, and Miss Dorothy Holcombe, who conducts a string ensemble, all spoke breifly concerning their own organizations.

Various methods of presentation of a year's program were described, among which were straight symphony concerts, children's instruction concerts, Christmas programs, choruses, and the use of soloists of national fame.

One unique method of advertising was described by Thor Johnson of the Grand Rapids Symphony. For their Christmas concert, the launderies in the city and the department stores co-operated by inserting programs in each package which they wrapped for delivery prior to the date of the concert. Over 5000 persons attended this one event as a result of this unique campaign.

Upon adjournment, the members expressed their wish to have mimeographed lists of the conductors and student conductors who have attended the conference made up for each to take with him. The purpose of this step will be to perpetuate the work of the conference by enabling each one to correspond with the others during the year, exchanging ideas, programs, and suggestions. A similar conference will be again instituted next year at the Berkshire Music Center to carry on the work that has been started this year.

Make News at Record Tanglewood Concert

Leonard Shure, who played the Brahms piano concerto, acknowledges the support of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Howard Hanson responds to the ovation which greeted his "Romantic" symphony.

Festival

Continued From First Page

reasons, but we could not help thinking with regret of the joyous A major symphony of the 18-year-old Mozart which had been announced up to a day or so ago.

Why Was Berlioz Withdrawn?

It would satisfy the public's curiosity tremendously, too, if they could be informed why Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony was also withdrawn. The present schedule of a three series Festival makes it imperative for some people to choose one or two from the entire three weeks. Programs are a determining factor in most cases. No one cavilled at Brahms in lieu of Berlioz, but the substitution of a piece so lately played on a Festival program for one never before played here is at best a disappointment.

Debussy's "La Mer" was the piece which gave the afternoon a lift. These sketches, depicting three different aspects of impressions of the sea, are in no fixed form. Their vague continuity and tenuous consistency are held together by only the most fragile and vaporous tone. Koussevitzky caressed his sensitive band into making for him gorgeous tone clusters and incomparably subtle colors. The warm afternoon sun could not have bathed us with a more soothing effect.

Leonard Shure High Scorer

But Saturday night was the night. In a program of a half-dozen touchdowns, Leonard Shure, soloist in the second Brahms piano concerto, took the ball and scored the outstanding success of the evening. He displayed a magnificent combination of technical brilliance and good taste. His equipment places no restrictions on him whatsoever. He applied his amazing pianistic strength with most gratifying judgment; the first movement came off with galvanic eclat; the slow movement was serene poetry. The 'cello solo in the introduction, played by Jean Bedetti, was deservedly recognized. Koussevitzky supplied a superlative accompaniment; in fact, the accompaniment is a symphony as massive and as glorious as any of Brahms' purely orchestral works. This is the concerto (B flat major), about which Brahms wrote to a friend "I have written quite a nice little piano concerto containing quite a nice little scherzo." This "little" concerto is beyond the technical reach and certainly the musical comprehension of all but an elect few virtuosi. Shure belongs to that select group by virtue of his majestic performance Saturday night. This is his second appearance in the Berkshires, the first took place at a private recital at the home of the late Gertrude Watson in Pittsfield a half dozen years ago.

Hanson Takes a Bow

Howard Hanson, the director of the Eastman Music School at Rochester, was present and was led out from the wings by Koussevitzky after a dramatic intrpretation of his "Romantic" symphony. This, his second, was written in 1930 as a feature of the Boston orchestra's 50th anniversary celebration. He is the second American to figure on this year's Festival programs; Copland was the first, and Barber is still be to heard. His symphony begins with an ascending slow three step minor figure, in a unit of two broad notes progressing to a longer note of repose which is reiterated some two dozen times with increasing intensity, until it arrives at the main statement. This, in time, subsides into passages of gentle affection suggestive possibly of such a background as served Berlioz for the basis for his "Fantastic" symphony. The diverse episodes which pass in parade in this overlong first movement lead to a nostalgic coda which well repays repeated hearings.

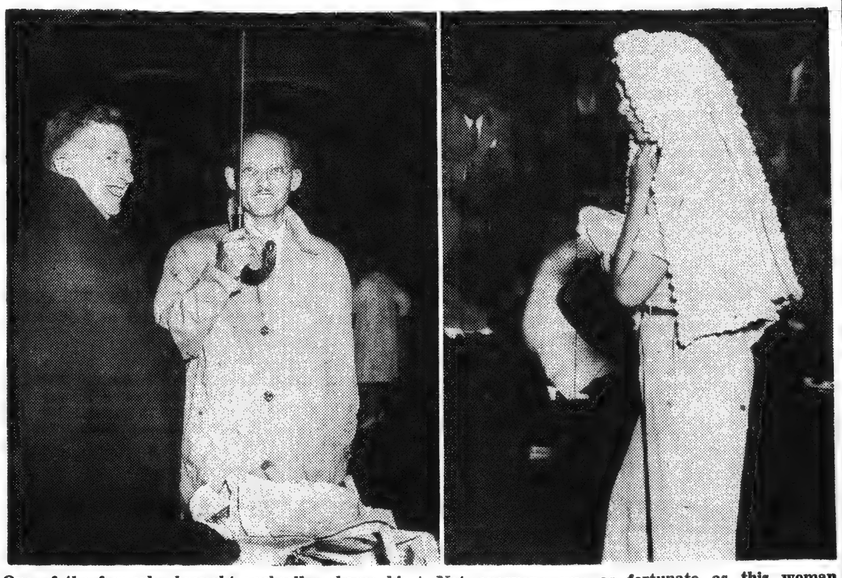
The middle movement, andante con tenerezza, makes use again of much of the material employed in the first movement, but, however, in fresh and different orchestration. We do not know if this is used as leit-motifs or if it betrays a paucity of means. We grant that it is unmistakably effective. Hanson makes conspicuously good use of the brass; to express the principal theme in his first movement, and again in the last.

The Mozart excerpt for the evening was "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," one of a long list of works Mozart dashed off during his career to fulfill the order of some nobleman who possibly asked to have "a little four movement suite for a small orchestra sent up to the castle by Saturday night." Koussevitzky did the wise thing, as usual, and allowed his string sections to play with the great but natural coherence they have acquired under his long years of drilling. The details were realized with keen purity in true style.

Rain Teases Audience

The prelude to "Lohengrin" and to the "Meistersinger von Nurnberg" completed a beautifully constructed program, and one performed with unsurpassed brilliance. Rain teased the record audience a few times during the evening. Just before the concert started, a few raindrops put into effect what must have appeared like a strange centripetal attraction, for the Shed suddenly became a magnet drawing people on the double quick from all the surrounding walks and lawns. Again during the inner movements of concerto, distant soft rumblings of thunder, and nearer and more tangible unimportant sprinkles threatened to disturb the performance, but, fortunately, it was dissipated, and, in fact, the close of the concert found the moon in its proper Berkshire position, doing its duty for all, and especially for the Festival audience.

As Rain Fell on the Festival



One of the few who brought umbrellas shares his with a member of the blanket brigade.

Not everyone was as fortunate as this woman whose shawl was just the thing in the emergency.

This Clipping From
WACO, TEX.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1941

See Aug. 18.

My Day

BY

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK

I TOOK my annual pilgrimage last night to Stockbridge, Mass., to hear the fourth program of the Berkshire Music festival. In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, excerpts were played from his requiem mass. His Symphony in G Minor was also played and, after the intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica."

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, of which Horace Hunt is the conductor, sang the mass and the whole program was a most finished and beautiful performance. I enjoyed every minute of it. Even though we did not return until rather late, for it takes us two hours to drive from here, still it was well worth it.

We had the pleasure of speaking with Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky for a few minutes during the intermission. My admiration for his work increases every year.

On the way up, we met Mrs. Henry Morgenthau Jr., and her daughter, Joan, and had a picnic supper together in a field on a dirt road leading off from route 7, before we reached Great Barrington. One of the boys with us carelessly put his hand on the wire which surrounded part of the field we were in and discovered that it was charged. I suppose it was intended to keep erring cattle who attempted to jump the fence within proper limits.

We picked up everything very carefully like good Boy Scouts, not even leaving chicken bones about, for fear the dogs or cattle might find them. We were very grateful for the nice, grassy spot under the shade of a tree and the view of the gently flowing stream below us.

I have just been told that there is a great shortage of young women entering the nursing schools. At this time nurses are much needed, and it always seemed to me that it is good training for any girl to take, whether she means to take up nursing as a profession or not. At the present time, the girls in training release nurses already trained, for duty where they are needed.

If later, these girls marry, or have no reason for earning a living by nursing, but wish to serve in some way in their community, there are innumerable opportunities to use the knowledge they have acquired in the service of a great many people. Therefore, if any young woman feels she wishes to do something for her country in the present crisis, and is willing to work hard, put in long hours, and sacrifice her leisure during these years of stress, I can think of few things as useful as taking a course in one of our good training schools for nurses.

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N.Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
AUG 12 1941

German Music Accepted

SUMMER concerts are not to be deprived of one of their most pleasing features, the performance of German music. The bitterness which characterized the last war period and led to the banishing of German musical classics and German and Austrian musicians from American concert halls is not to prevail, apparently, in the present turmoil.

In presenting a program comprised largely of German music at the Berkshire Music Festival, Serge Koussevitzy is setting a precedent which most music-conscious Americans will wish to see followed by others. The supreme artistry of the composers in any nation, or of any race, know not limitations of politics, national boundaries, or racial prejudice .

America honors its own musicians o English or African or Scandinavian or German ancestry without regard to their origin and in time of peace has enjoyed withou thought of discrimination the music o Russia or Poland, Sweden or Finland, Eir or Wales or Scotland, England, France o Spain, to say nothing of the popularity o German and Italian music.

After all, what have master musician to do with the passing fever of totalitaria plagues? Nothing could be farther fror the ideologies of dictators than the might ideals expressed in great music by th world's best composers. Besides, the Ger many and Austria which produced Beethoven, a Schubert and a Wagner hac little in common with the strangled and im prisoned land which Hitler grinds under hi iron heel.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1941

MRS. ROOSEVELT TO SPEAK FRIDAY AT TANGLEWOOD EVENT

(Special to The Republican)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11— Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has accepted an invitation to head the list of speakers at the USO-British war relief benefit at the Tanglewood festival, it was announced today.

The first lady will appear with Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Exeter academy, and Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, will be master of ceremonies.

The entire program for the benefit will cover five hours, from 5:30 to 10:40 p. m. It will open with a concert by the combined bands of the 26th Division under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

At 6 o'clock the feature, "Berkshire Music Center on Parade," will offer a variety of musical events including a concert in the music shed by the orchestra and chorus, operatic scenes presented in the theater and programs by instrumental groups in the chamber music hall.

This will be followed at 6:45 by "The Manifestation," during which Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Perry and Viscount Halifax will speak.

The evening concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be preceded by a lawn party, including a picnic supper and country dancing.

Spalding As Soloist

The concert will offer Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, selections from "The Planets" by Gustave Holst, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, two old English madrigals and the 1812 Overture of Tchaikowsky. Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple will be the conductors and Albert Spalding will be soloist.

The benefit will conclude with a draw for prizes, conducted by Elsa Maxwell.

CELINE KOESTER.

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 12 1941

Notables To Speak At Tanglewood Program

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax are scheduled to speak during the manifestation at the USO and British war relief Friday evening at Tanglewood.

A concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple conducting, will be a feature. The propram will include "Fifth Symphony", Beethoven; "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace", Holst; "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra", Mendelssohn; and "Overture 1812", Tchaikovsky, in addition to two madrigals, "The Silver Swan", Gibbons, and "Long Live Fair Oriana", Weelkes, by the festival chorus.

Mrs. B. G. Peck, Mrs. F. Earle Coe, Mrs. Henry G. Ellis, Mrs. Graham Shields and Miss Eleanor Gaines Smith are in charge of local arrangements for the event.

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
AUG 12 1941

Berkshire Event To Benefit War Relief Unit, USO

The gala benefit for the B. W. R. S. and the USO which has been announced for Friday August 15, at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., is a musical event of national significance. It is to benefit the British War Relief Society and the United Service Organizations equally and is under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This benefit will not only result in a large money contribution to the British War Relief Society and the USO, but also is in the nature of a great demonstration of sympathy on the part of the world of music. It is due in large measure to the leadership and sympathy of Dr. Koussevitzky himself, and is a gift on the part of the artists of all nationalities who compose this great orchestra, as well as of those who in other ways make this extraordinary event possible.

Music lovers of Stamford and vicinity who wish to attend this musical event may subscribe through the British War Relief Society, Stamford Savings Bank Building. "Tanglewood" is located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The hour set (continuing till 10:30 p. m.) is 5:30 p. m., rain or shine. The complete program is at B. W. R. S. headquarters.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 12 1941

Tanglewood Benefit Plans Now Complete

Concert Program In Berkshires Announced

A gala benefit program will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The benefit will occur within the final week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the forces of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and nationally prominent speakers and soloists will make the occasion impressive musically and as a demonstration in favor of national preparedness.

Many thousands are expected to visit the great Tanglewood estate, to which there will be a nominal admission fee. The festivities will begin at 5:30 p. m., when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to play marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The program follows:

Combined Bands of the 26th Division—250 players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Berkshire Music Center "On Parade"—Simultaneous performances by the Center's orchestra and chorus, instrumental ensembles, opera scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Otello," "Falstaff," "Czar and Carpenter."

Fanfare, followed by "The Manifestation." Speakers will be introduced by "Allelulia Chorus," by Thompson.

A lawn party will next be held

Fanfare, followed by gala concert in the shed by the Boston Symphony, including:

Fifth Symphony Beethoven
Allegro con brio

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting

Mars, the Bringer of War, from "The Planets"—Holst

Venus, the Bringer of Peace," from "The Planets"—Holst

Stanley Chapple, conducting

Concerto for violin and orchestra Mendelssohn

Albert Spalding, soloist

Festival Chorus

Overture "1812," Tschaikowsky

Combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras and the Bands of the 26th Division

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting

Fireworks will conclude the festivities.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 12 1941

Stockbridge Benefit Event

Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox were added today to the long list of sponsors for the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood Stockbridge, Friday, for the USO and British War Relief. Honorary sponsors are the six New England governors and trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

On the joint sponsoring committee from the USO and British War Relief are: Mrs. Winthrop Aldrich, Mrs. John W. Cross, Mrs. Edgar W. Leonard and Henry J. Whigham of New York City; Mrs. Halstead Freeman of St. Andrews, New Brunswick; Mrs. William Armour, Peapack, N. J.; Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, Stamford, Conn.; Mrs. Paul Moore, Convent, N. J.; Mrs. Lowell Weicker, Millneck, N. Y.; Mrs. Gordon Mickler of Greenwich, Conn.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 12 1941

TANGLEWOOD

From the Providence Bulletin

Tanglewood, the great music Mecca near Lenox, Massachusetts, began its eighth annual festival this week with what Howard Taubman describes as a "rested, refreshed and splendidly keyed-up Boston Symphony Orchestra" under Dr. Koussevitzky, who was also, apparently, rested, refreshed and keyed-up.

More than 7000 people attended the opening concert, filled the vast new auditorium, or "shed" as it is the style to call it; and sat on the wide though slightly damp lawns to listen as people should listen to music—relaxed and unstarched.

Some people, of course, attend these festivals at Tanglewood simply because it is the thing to do. There are always uninspired and uninspiring people who do that, and we imagine the Festive Board will be happy to have them drop away, especially after it gets the shed paid for!

But most of the thousands of Tanglewooders go there because music has become more than a passing delight to them and something of a necessity. Not as palpable a necessity as bread and cheese and perhaps a little wine for their stomach's sake, yet a "tonic" of profound and lasting effect upon their thoughts and feelings. And that is of excellent promise.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 12 1941

Mrs. Gannett Will Attend Benefit Concert

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Cape Elizabeth, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs will attend the special benefit concert Friday at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., by the Berkshire Music Festival. The proceeds will be divided between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief.

Between the opera, chamber music and symphonic programs of the afternoon and the magnificent evening concert at which Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Festival chorus and orchestra and the united bands of Camp Edwards, a New England supper will be served on the grounds at Tanglewood.

Part of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will money from refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
WACO, TEX.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1941

See Aug. 18.

My Day

BY

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK

I TOOK my annual pilgrimage last night to Stockbridge, Mass., to hear the fourth program of the Berkshire Music festival. In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, excerpts were played from his requiem mass. His Symphony in G Minor was also played and, after the intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica."

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, of which Horace Hunt is the conductor, sang the mass and the whole program was a most finished and beautiful performance. I enjoyed every minute of it. Even though we did not return until rather late, for it takes us two hours to drive from here, still it was well worth it.

We had the pleasure of speaking with Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky for a few minutes during the intermission. My admiration for his work increases every year.

On the way up, we met Mrs. Henry Morgenthau Jr., and her daughter, Joan, and had a picnic supper together in a field on a dirt road leading off from route 7, before we reached Great Barrington. One of the boys with us carelessly put his hand on the wire which surrounded part of the field we were in and discovered that it was charged. I suppose it was intended to keep erring cattle who attempted to jump the fence within proper limits.

We picked up everything very carefully like good Boy Scouts, not even leaving chicken bones about, for fear the dogs or cattle might find them. We were very grateful for the nice, grassy spot under the shade of a tree and the view of the gently flowing stream below us.

I have just been told that there is a great shortage of young women entering the nursing schools. At this time nurses are much needed, and it always seemed to me that it is good training for any girl to take, whether she means to take up nursing as a profession or not. At the present time, the girls in training release nurses already trained, for duty where they are needed.

If later, these girls marry, or have no reason for earning a living by nursing, but wish to serve in some way in their community, there are innumerable opportunities to use the knowledge they have acquired in the service of a great many people. Therefore, if any young woman feels she wishes to do something for her country in the present crisis, and is willing to work hard, put in long hours, and sacrifice her leisure during these years of stress, I can think of few things as useful as taking a course in one of our good training schools for nurses.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1941

MRS. ROOSEVELT TO SPEAK FRIDAY AT TANGLEWOOD EVENT

(Special to The Republican)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11— Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has accepted an invitation to head the list of speakers at the USO-British war relief benefit at the Tanglewood festival, it was announced today.

The first lady will appear with Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Exeter academy, and Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, will be master of ceremonies.

The entire program for the benefit will cover five hours, from 5:30 to 10:40 p. m. It will open with a concert by the combined bands of the 26th Division under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

At 6 o'clock the feature, "Berkshire Music Center on Parade," will offer a variety of musical events including a concert in the music shed by the orchestra and chorus, operatic scenes presented in the theater and programs by instrumental groups in the chamber music hall.

This will be followed at 6:45 by "The Manifestation," during which Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Perry and Viscount Halifax will speak.

The evening concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be preceded by a lawn party, including a picnic supper and country dancing.

Spalding As Soloist

The concert will offer Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, selections from "The Planets" by Gustave Holst, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, two old English madrigals and the 1812 Overture of Tchaikowsky. Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple will be the conductors and Albert Spalding will be soloist.

The benefit will conclude with a draw for prizes, conducted by Elsa Maxwell.

CELINE KOESTER.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 12 1941

Tanglewood Benefit Plans Now Complete

Concert Program In Berkshires Announced

A gala benefit program will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The benefit will occur within the final week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the forces of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and nationally prominent speakers and soloists will make the occasion impressive musically and as a demonstration in favor of national preparedness.

Many thousands are expected to visit the great Tanglewood estate, to which there will be a nominal admission fee. The festivities will begin at 5:30 p. m., when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to play marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The program follows:

Combined Bands of the 26th Division—250 players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Berkshire Music Center "On Parade"—Simultaneous performances by the Center's orchestra and chorus, instrumental ensembles, opera scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Otello," "Falstaff," "Czar and Carpenter."

Fanfare, followed by "The Manifestation." Speakers will be introduced by "Allelulia Chorus," by Thompson.

A lawn party will next be held

Fanfare, followed by gala concert in the shed by the Boston Symphony, including:

Fifth Symphony Beethoven
Allegro con brio
Serge Koussevitzky, conducting

Mars, the Bringer of War, from "The Planets"—Holst

Venus, the Bringer of Peace," from "The Planets"—Holst
Stanley Chapple, conducting

Concerto for violin and orchestra Mendelssohn
Albert Spalding, soloist

Festival Chorus

Overture "1812," Tschaikowsky
Combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras and the Bands of the 26th Division
Serge Koussevitzky, conducting

Fireworks will conclude the festivities.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 12 1941

Stockbridge Benefit Event

Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox were added today to the long list of sponsors for the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood Stockbridge, Friday, for the USO and British War Relief. Honorary sponsors are the six New England governors and trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

On the joint sponsoring committee from the USO and British War Relief are: Mrs. Winthrop Aldrich, Mrs. John W. Cross, Mrs. Edgar W. Leonard and Henry J. Whigham of New York City; Mrs. Halstead Freeman of St. Andrews, New Brunswick; Mrs. William Armour, Peapack, N. J.; Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, Stamford, Conn.; Mrs. Paul Moore, Convent, N. J.; Mrs. Lowell Weicker, Millneck, N. Y.; Mrs. Gordon Mickler of Greenwich, Conn.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 12 1941

TANGLEWOOD

From the Providence Bulletin

Tanglewood, the great music Mecca near Lenox, Massachusetts, began its eighth annual festival this week with what Howard Taubman describes as a "rested, refreshed and splendidly keyed-up Boston Symphony Orchestra" under Dr. Koussevitzky, who was also, apparently, rested, refreshed and keyed-up.

More than 7000 people attended the opening concert, filled the vast new auditorium, or "shed" as it is the style to call it; and sat on the wide though slightly damp lawns to listen as people should listen to music—relaxed and unstarched.

Some people, of course, attend these festivals at Tanglewood simply because it is the thing to do. There are always uninspired and uninspiring people who do that, and we imagine the Festive Board will be happy to have them drop away, especially after it gets the shed paid for!

But most of the thousands of Tanglewooders go there because music has become more than a passing delight to them and something of a necessity. Not as palpable a necessity as bread and cheese and perhaps a little wine for their stomach's sake, yet a "tonic" of profound and lasting effect upon their thoughts and feelings. And that is of excellent promise

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N.Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
AUG 12 1941

German Music Accepted

SUMMER concerts are not to be deprived of one of their most pleasing features, the performance of German music. The bitterness which characterized the last war period and led to the banishing of German musical classics and German and Austrian musicians from American concert halls is not to prevail, apparently, in the present turmoil.

In presenting a program comprised largely of German music at the Berkshire Music Festival, Serge Koussevitzy is setting a precedent which most music-conscious Americans will wish to see followed by others. The supreme artistry of the composers in any nation, or of any race, know not limitations of politics, national boundaries, or racial prejudice .

America honors its own musicians o English or African or Scandinavian or German ancestry without regard to their origin and in time of peace has enjoyed withou thought of discrimination the music o Russia or Poland, Sweden or Finland, Eir or Wales or Scotland, England, France o Spain, to say nothing of the popularity o German and Italian music.

After all, what have master musician to do with the passing fever of totalitaria plagues? Nothing could be farther fro the ideologies of dictators than the might ideals expressed in great music by th world's best composers. Besides, the Ger many and Austria which produced Beethoven, a Schubert and a Wagner hac little in common with the strangled and im prisoned land which Hitler grinds under hi iron heel.

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 12 1941

Notables To Speak At Tanglewood Program

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax are scheduled to speak during the manifestation at the USO and British war relief Friday evening at Tanglewood.

A concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple conducting, will be a feature. The propram will include "Fifth Symphony", Beethoven; "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace", Holst; "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra", Mendelssohn; and "Overture 1812", Tchaikovsky, in addition to two madrigals, "The Silver Swan", Gibbons, and "Long Live Fair Oriana", Weelkes, by the festival chorus.

Mrs. B. G. Peck, Mrs. F. Earle Coe, Mrs. Henry G. Ellis, Mrs. Graham Shields and Miss Eleanor Gaines Smith are in charge of local arrangements for the event.

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
AUG 12 1941

Berkshire Event To Benefit War Relief Unit, USO

The gala benefit for the B. W. R. S. and the USO which has been announced for Friday August 15, at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., is a musical event of national significance. It is to benefit the British War Relief Society and the United Service Organizations equally and is under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This benefit will not only result in a large money contribution to the British War Relief Society and the USO, but also is in the nature of a great demonstration of sympathy on the part of the world of music. It is due in large measure to the leadership and sympathy of Dr. Koussevitzky himself, and is a gift on the part of the artists of all nationalities who compose this great orchestra, as well as of those who in other ways make this extraordinary event possible.

Music lovers of Stamford and vicinity who wish to attend this musical event may subscribe through the British War Relief Society, Stamford Savings Bank Building. "Tanglewood" is located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The hour set (continuing till 10:30 p. m.) is 5:30 p. m., rain or shine. The complete program is at B. W. R. S. headquarters.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 12 1941

Mrs. Gannett Will Attend Benefit Concert

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Cape Elizabeth, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs will attend the special benefit concert Friday at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., by the Berkshire Music Festival. The proceeds will be divided between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief.

Between the opera, chamber music and symphonic programs of the afternoon and the magnificent evening concert at which Dr. Koussevitsky and Stanley Chapple will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Festival chorus and orchestra and the united bands of Camp Edwards, a New England supper will be served on the grounds at Tanglewood.

Part of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will money from refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 13 1941

LORD HALIFAX LANDS FRIDAY AT WESTFIELD

British Ambassador Will Fly to Barnes Airport, Motor to Tanglewood Benefit

Lenox, Aug. 13—Lord Halifax, returning from the Pacific coast, will take a plane from Washington Friday morning, in order to be at the gala benefit at Tanglewood in the evening. The benefit given by the Boston Symphony orchestra in the many cooperative forces, is expected to make a large contribution to the United Service Organization and the British War Relief. The British ambassador will be met at Barnes airport in Westfield by a delegation of the committee, who will drive him into the Berkshire hills which he will view for the first time. He will be taken to Egremont, where he will be the guest of Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky Farm.

Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt, who will sit on the platform as coguest of honor at the manifestation, and likewise address the great audience in the shed, is to motor directly from Hyde Park with friends, on Friday. Dr Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter academy will be a third speaker. Dr James Phinney Baxter, III, president of Williams college, will preside.

The combined military bands of the 26th division will journey from Camp Edwards in a mobile unit of 40 trucks, completely equipped with kitchen and sleeping quarters. Arriving at Tanglewood on Thursday afternoon at 4, they will set up camp on the lake shore. As guests of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the festival, they will attend the Thursday evening concert of the Berkshire symphonic festival, when the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the festival chorus will present Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

The army bands will open the benefit program Friday at 5.30, playing marches under the direction of Dr Koussevitzky. They will also augment the Boston Sumphony and school orchestras in the performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture later in the evening. The Boston Symphony concert will also include the first movement from Beethoven's Fifth smphony, the movement typifying "War" and "Peace" from Holst's "The Planets." Albert Spalding, the famous violinist, appearing with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto.

The Berkshire Music center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood, will earlier present a triple program by three of its departments in the shed and the two new buildings. They will consist of an orchestral and choral concert, four opera scenes in the theater-concert hall, and a recital of chamber music in the chamber music hall.

The order of the evening will be as follows:—

5.30	Combined bands of the 26th division, led by Serge Koussevitzky.
6.00	Berkshire music center on parade—symphony concert; opera; chamber concert.
6.45	The manifestation speakers—Mrs Roosevelt, Lord Halifax, Dr Perry, Dr Baxter.
7.30	Lawn pary and supper.
9.00	Gala concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra.
10.30	Draw for prizes.
10.45	Fireworks.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 13 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 13 1941

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
AUG 12

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
AUG 12 1941

AMBASSADOR AT FESTIVAL

Lord Halifax to Speak; U. S. Army Band in Concert

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP). Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, will address an audience at the Berkshire Symphonic festival next Friday, the same day that a United States army band of 300 musicians will present a concert under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
AUG 13 1941

Lowell Represented at Berkshire Symphonic Fete

Sidney R. Fleet and Julius Woessner Enjoy Associations at Music Center

LOWELL—Spending the weekend at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at beautiful Tanglewood by invitation of the management, Sidney R. Fleet and Julius Woessner, conductor of the Lowell Philharmonic Orchestral society, found the symphony musicians, the many students of the music center and the summer colonists all working for the success of the gala benefit for the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief scheduled for Friday of this week beginning at 5.30 and continuing through the evening. Lord Halifax is to be the guest of honor and both he and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt have agreed to speak in behalf of the two good causes. President James Finney Baxter of Williams college will preside.

Gala Program

Entertainment will be continuous and will start with a program by the combined bands of the 26th Division, 250 players, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Following will be a concert by the student orchestra and the Berkshire chorus, excerpts from grand operas, staged in the new theatre, a lawn party and supper, all to culminate in a gala concert in the great music shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Albert Spalding as featured violin soloist, besides numbers by the Festival chorus. For climax to the concert the Boston Symphony orchestra, the music center orchestra and the bands of the 25th Division will be combined for a thrilling performance of the Overture "1812" of Tschaikowsky. Fireworks will bring the gala event to a close. This fete is not included in the subscription series and is open to all interested to help the two good causes along.

Attendance at last Saturday night's concert broke all records. All told over 11,000, of which number 4000 heard the music from the lawn outside the Shed, enjoyed the program by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Leonard Shure, American pianist as featured soloist in Second Concerto of Brahms. Attesting to the superb acoustical properties of the Shed, the tones of the piano carried clearly to the remotest limits of the vast audience. During the performance there were flashes of lightning and murmurs of thunder, like the roll of distant tympani from the everlasting hills around. But only a few drops of rain fell and at the close of the concert the sky was clear again. Debussy's "La Mer" and Wagner and Mozart selections had place on the program. For American work there was Howard Hanson's Romantic Symphony, which comes nearest to classic romanticism in the slow movement.

Chamber Music

Sunday morning there was a program of chamber music by advanced students. In a group which played some Free Variations by Pierne for strings, harp and flute, the flutist was Harriet Peacock, who was soloist with the Massachusetts Youth Administration Symphony orchestra when it played here in Lowell earlier in the season.

At the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in the afternoon 9500 were present. Dr. Koussevitzky had made two changes from the list printed in the program book. The announced Mozart Symphony in A Major was supplanted by the same composer's work in E Flat and instead of the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony there was a rewarding performance of the First Symphony of Brahms.

Intermission gave opportunity for meeting musical friends. For the two Lowell men there was a pleasant chat with Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, the interesting and expert duo pianists who have twice appeared here in our Parker course with great success. Albert Spalding was among the promenaders. There was chance for a word with E. Powers Biggs, the symphony's organist, whose recitals in Methuen will be remembered. Many other friends, some from Lowell and Lawrence were greeted.

Interesting experience was a visit to Tanglewood on Monday morning to see the Music Center in action. In the Shed the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Richard Burgin was whipping into shape the orchestral score of the new violin concerto by the young American composer, Somerset Barber. Soon Ruth Posselt, the soloist, came out to rehearse it with the ensemble. The slow movement was rather grateful music. The faster movements were in modernistic style and struck one as rather overshadowing the solo instrument, which, however, Miss Posselt played with no little dash and brilliance. In the chamber music hall the advanced student orchestra was rehearsing. Over in the barn Stanley Chapple, Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant in the class in conducting was holding an audition for half a dozen aspiring young conductors. Each in turn was required to conduct the Center's Junior orchestra in the first movement of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. One, as he mounted what the radio announcers refer to as the podium, turned to a group of his fellows saying, sotto voce: "We who are about to die salute you." But actually there were no serious musical casualties although the success of the young baton wielders naturally varied.

Lawrence Violinist

Over at the Shed there was a chance meeting with Joseph Pulvino, the Lawrence violinist who appeared in concert here with Caroline Urbanek last season and at one time was a special student at the State Teachers college. He is playing in the advanced orchestra at the Center and Mrs. Pulvino is staying with him at a nearby camp.

Just before leaving there was a call to the Lowell men from Messrs. John Burk and "Lanny" Humphrey of the Symphony staff to serve as supernumeraries in the re-enactment for motion picture of an episode in a recent lecture-recital by the composer, Paul Hindemith, in music for ancient instruments, in which a group of instrumentalists stood on the peak of the veranda roof of the old mansion while the composer directed them in amusing fashion. It was a case in which the Lowell men were "among those present."

With the concerts of Thursday and Saturday evenings and next Sunday afternoon, in addition to the gala already mentioned, the festival comes to a close.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 14 1941

26th Division Bands To Play at Benefit

Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—The massed bands of the 26th Division—250 pieces—started a 200-mile trek across the state from Camp Edwards early today, bound for Tanglewood, Lenox, where they will participate tomorrow in a benefit for the U. S. O. and British war relief.

Tonight members of the bands will be guests at the Berkshire festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The bands, in 50 trucks, were scheduled to pass through Springfield shortly before noon and to arrive at Tanglewood at 4 P. M.

Lord Halifax and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be among the speakers at the affair tomorrow.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 14 1941

Gala Benefit At Tanglewood Tomorrow

Mrs. Roosevelt Among Scheduled Speakers at Affair

Speakers for "The Manifestation," on the gala benefit program to be given at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow include Dr. James Phinney Baxter, President of Williams College, presiding; Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Dr. Lewis Perry, Headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, and the Right Honorable Viscount Halifax, K. G., Ambassador from Britain. The benefit will be given for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief.

The program will open at 5:30 p. m. with the combined bands of the 26th Division playing under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center will follow. In the shed the orchestra and chorus will present Stravinsky's "Petrouchka," "The Rio Grande" of Lambert and the first movement of the Borodin Symphony in B minor. In the theater the opera department will present scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; "Verdi's "Otello," and "Falstaff," and "Czar and Carpenter," Lortzing. In the chamber music hall the Schubert "Thio in B flat major," and Galindo's "Sextet for Wind Instruments," will be programmed.

A lawn party with country dancing will follow the Manifestation. The gala concert in the shed will open at 9 p. m. The Boston Symphony will be heard in the allegro con brio, from Beethoven's Fifth, chosen because the cause the rhythm of the symphony's them corresponds precisely to the rhythm of the Morse code: three dots and the dash which denote the letter "V," adopted the world over as anti-Hitler propaganda. Koussevitzky will conduct in this number. Stanley Chapple will direct the Holst music following, selections from "The Planets." Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the soloist for the Mendelssohn Concerto for violin and orchestra. The Festival chorus, Hugh Ross, conducting, will appear in two madrigals: "The Silver Swan," Gibbons and "Long Live Fair Oriana," Weelkes. The Boston Symphony and the Music Center Orchestra and the Bands of the 26th Division will combine under Koussevitzky to bring the program to a close with Tschaikowsky to bring the program to a close with Tschaikowsky's Overture "1812." Fireworks will follow.

GREAT BARRINGTON,
MASS
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/14/41

23

TANGLEWOOD BENEFIT

Mrs. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax to Speak At Program Friday,

Many thousands are expected to be present at the gala benefit for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief which is to be presented at Tanglewood tomorrow night under the compined auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Serge Koussevitzky. Featured on the program as distinguished speakers will be Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, as well as Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster at Phillips Exeter Academy.

The program is scheduled to begin at 5:30 and to run until midnight. Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College, is to preside at the manifestation ceremonies which are only one feature of a program that will include a concert by 250 musicians from the 26th Division at Camp Edwards and also a gala concert during which Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist. Tickets may be obtained in Great Barrington from Mrs. George L. Taylor, chairman of the local ticket committee, and from Secretary Junius P. Adams of the Southern Berkshire Chamber of Commerce. Members of Mrs. Taylor's committee are Mrs. Rodney S. Jarvis, Mrs. H. Gray Treadwell, Mrs. George M. L. LaBranche, Jr., Mrs. Joseph C. Rennard and Mrs. Almon P. Culver.

The program opens at 5:30 o'clock with a half hour concert by 250 players of the combined bands of the 26th Division under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This will be followed by simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center in the shed, and in the theatre by the orchestra and chorus and the opera department respectively.

The manifestation by distinguished speakers will take place from 6:45 to 7:30 in the shed, after which a picnic supper and other refreshments will be served. Elsa Maxwell is to preside at the draw for prizes late in the evening, which will follow the gala concert. The evening will conclude with a display of fireworks and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The entire program for the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra is as follows: Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting; "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace," from "The Planets" by Holst, with Stanley Chapple conducting; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Mendelssohn) with Albert Spalding soloist; two madrigals, "The Silver Swan" (Gibbons) and "Long Live Fair Oriana" (Weelkes) with the Festival chorus; 1812 Overture (Tschaikowsky).

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 14 1941

Benefit at Tanglewood

The inspiring way in which music bestrides the wide, deep cleavage in world thought is nowhere better illustrated than at Tanglewood where last year a Russian conductor (Russia then swung upon the Axis) drew a crowd that paid into British War Relief coffers more than $20,000 to hear German music played by an American symphony orchestra.

This year Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (he has now become an American citizen) is sponsoring another benefit, or, as he calls it, "manifestation." His native land is now reckoned on the side of the democracies. Again music of German origin is included on the program.

The United Service Organizations this year, along with British relief, are the beneficiaries. That even a larger sum than before will be raised is scarcely to be doubted not only because Tanglewood audiences are breaking all records but because Mrs. Roosevelt and Viscount Halifax will be among the speakers.

Not to be lost sight of is the fact that this is also the occasion of a demonstration of the summer's work at the Music Center. The vital educational functions undertaken by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with the Berkshire Festival prove that comparisons between Tanglewood and the famous Old World festivals are no longer in order.

MONTCLAIR, N.J.
TIMES
8/12/41

THE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL closed its second series on Sunday, and The Montclair Times herewith presents an account of the concerts by Mrs. Joseph L. White, who covered that series as this newspaper's representative:

A CLOUDLESS sky and a full moon. Tanglewood estate in its mid-season height. The nearly completed circular shed brilliantly lighted against a background of tall pines. The lawns littered with blankets on which stretched people, French, Spanish, Italian, as well as New Englanders and citizens from the Bronx, a completely cosmopolitan audience. A slight stir as the Archduke Franz Joseph and his beautifully groomed wife picked their way through this amazing gathering of early comers.

Within the great shed every seat is taken as the record breaking crowd of 9,000 awaits with anticipation the appearance of Dr. Koussevitzky. Suddenly an excited clamoring, the entire audience rises to its feet as Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Morgenthau and Mrs. Perkins enter. It is difficult to record in words the impression one receives of so many persons from so many places assembled in a setting of such great beauty.

Dr. Koussevitzky entered and after receiving a tumultuous ovation raised his baton and entered into the opening measure of Mozart's well known and ever popular symphony in G minor. A part of each of the programs included in this week-end series was given over to the work of this great master, thus commemorating the 150th anniversary of his death.

The G minor symphony, skillfully played, was followed by excerpts from the Requiem. This was sung by a chorus of local talent trained under the able leadership of Harold Hunt and together with the orchestra presented to the audience a musical experience of inspiring effectiveness.

Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony concluded the opening program Space forbidding an extended comment, let it simply be said that here was noble music receiving noble treatment. This symphony, "dedicated to the memory of a heroic man," was given a dynamic and meaningful reading.

The highlight of the second concert was the playing of Brahms second piano concerto, in B flat minor, by Leonard Shure, who received tremendous applause following his meticulous and brilliant performance. The program was rounded out with the playing of Hanson's "Romantic" symphony and the ever familiar preludes to "Die Meistersinger" and "Lohengrin."

In the audience at the second concert were seen Madame Schiaparelli, Lowell Thomas, Norman Davis and the composer of the aforementioned symphony, Harold Hanson.

By all means the outstanding orchestral achievement of Sunday's concluding performance was the execution of Debussy's "La Mer." It is difficult to find a work demanding more infinite attention to split timing and perfection of unity than in the work of this great French composer, who did so much to develop new compositional forms. Mention should also be given to Brahms' first symphony and to one of Mozart's, both admirably presented at this same concert.

This is the eighth year of this increasingly popular festival. One realizes its significance in today's world, drawing together as it does nine to ten thousand people from every walk of life and from many different lands and giving them the opportunity of listening to music which knows neither racial boundaries nor class hatreds . Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are indeed making a rare and great contribution to this part of the world in these troubled times.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 14 1941

YD BANDS ARRIVE FOR USO CONCERT

Soldiers Set up Camp at Tanglewood

300 MEN IN OUTFIT

26th Division Musical Units, Combined, Travel in 40-Truck Convoy From Camp Edwards.

The combined military bands of the 26th Division, Camp Edwards, in a mobile unit of 40 trucks, completely equipped with kitchen and sleeping quarters, late this afternoon began setting up camp on the lake shore at Tanglewood in preparation for participation in the gala USO-British War Relief Festival program tomorrow night.

Comprises 300 Men

The military unit, comprising approximately 300 men, will be the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival. Tonight the men will attend the Thursday evening concert to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Festival chorus presents Beethoven's "Missa Solemis."

Lord Halifax, who will be one of the speakers at the manifestation, is scheduled to arrive from Albany, N. Y., under Festival committee escort, Friday. He will be taken to Egremont, where he will be the guest of Mrs. William Felton Barrett at Sky Farm.

The army bands will open the benefit program Friday night at 5:30 o'clock playing a selection of marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. They will also augment the Boston symphony and school orchestras in the performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture later in the evening. The Boston symphony concert will also include the first movement from Beethoven's Fifth symphony, the movements typifying "War" and "Peace" from Holst's "The Planets," Albert Spalding, the famous violinist, appearing with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Triple Program

Earlier, the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood, will present a triple program by three of its departments in the shed and the two new buildings. They will consist of an orchestral and choral concert, four opera scenes in the threater-concert hall, and a recital of chamber music in the chamber music hall.

The order of the evening will be as follows:

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 14 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 14 1941

Halifax to Talk at Stockbridge

Returning from the Pacific coast, Lord Halifax will fly from Chicago tomorrow morning in order to speak at the gala ceremonies and concert under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in the evening. The event is a benefit for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt also will address the gathering in the Shed and another speaker will be Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy. Dr. James Phinney 3rd, president of Williams College, will preside.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1941

Who should know how Howard Hanson's second symphony should be played better than Howard Hanson? At any rate, last year he made a recording of his work, using his own orchestra at Rochester. It may be a composer can never perform his own works as well as someone else. Be that as it may, we liked Koussevitzky's Saturday interpretation best. Unfortunately he has made no recording, and the Hanson one will have to stand.

When critics of 20 great newspapers have disagreed as to the playing of the Brahms second piano concerto by Leonard Schure the other night, it would be presumptuous to enter any controversy in this column. It can be said however, with few to contradict, that if you want to hear the opening piano passage march up the keyboard in the grand manner, get the Victor recording of the concerto as done by Vladimir Herowitz, with Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra. Here is a thrilling performance.

Within the past few months Columbia has issued a recording of the Mozart E flat major symphony, with which Dr. Koussevitzky opened Sunday night's concert. It is by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, Sir Thomas Beecham conducting. It is charming in every particular. Victor has an earlier recording by Bruno Walter and the British Broadcasting Orchestra.

Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra have done an excellent recording of Debussy's "La Mer." Not only is it the only recording of this work which this reviewer knows, but there seems to be no reason for another. It is the Festival brought into your own home.

Winding up the second series of the Festival was the great Brahms first symphony. Unfortunately the Boston Orchestra has never recorded it, but there are some very excellent ones on the market. Near the top is the performance by the London Orchestra with Felix Weingartner conducting, issued by Columbia, although one could do worse than acquire the one by the Philadelphia Orchestra and Leopold Stokowski. D.L.C.

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 14 1941

This Friday, August 15, a gala benefit concert for the U.S.O. and the British War Relief will be given at Tanglewood in Stockbridge under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. There is to be a long and varied program of events beginning at five thirty in the afternoon with the combined bands of the 26th division, 250 players, performing under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. At six, the Berkshire Music Center on Parade—simultaneous performances by the Berkshire Music Center. In the Shed the orchestra and chorus will present "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky, "The Rio Grande," by Lambert, and the first movement of the Symphony in B Minor by Borodin. In the theatre the opera department will present scenes from "Hansel and Gretel" by Humperdinck, "Otello" by Verdi, "Falstaff" by Verdi, and the "Czar and Carpenter" by Lortzing. At six forty-five there will be a Manifestation during which distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings engendered by the day's program, itself constituting a manifestation of unity in diversity, under freedom — the American way of life. The committee has made arrangements for a dawn party—a picnic supper which will be served at seven thirty. The gala concert is to be held in the Shed at nine o'clock. The program will consist of the "Fifth Symphony" (Allegro con broi) by Beethoven, "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace" from "The Planets" by Holst. Concerto for Violin and Orchestra by Mendelssohn with Albert Spaulding as soloist, Two Madrigals: "The Silver Swan" by Gibbons and "Long Live Fair Oriana" by Weelkes sung by the Festival Chorus and finally the Overture "1812" by Tchaikowsky played by the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras and the bands of the 26th Division, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

And here are the programs for the regular Series Concerts. Tonight at 8:30 E. Power Biggs will be the soloist in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor. The other number on the program is Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" with a quartet of soloists and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. Saturday at 8:30 p. m. the program will feature Ruth Posselt as soloist in Barber's Violin Concerto. The concert will open with Vaughn Williams' London" Symphony. The program will close with three Wagner numbers: the Prelude to "Parsifal," the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," and the Overture to Tannhauser." And on Sunday, at 3:30 p. m., the program will consist of: Symphony No. 7 by Sibelius; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, and Tchaikowsky's Fifth Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 14 1941

Music News

The Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its final series of concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., this evening. Tonight's program is devoted to Handel and Beethoven. The former's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D Minor, with E. Power Biggs as soloist, will open the concert. Afterward Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," in which the orchestra will be assisted by a quartet of soloists and the Berkshire Festival Chorus, will be heard.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 14 1941

Halifax to Aid Benefit Event In Berkshires

Mrs. Roosevelt Also to Talk Tomorrow; Koussevitzky to Lead Army Musicians

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, and Lewis Perry, head master of Phillips Exeter Academy, are to be guests of honor and speakers tomorrow night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where a large-scale benefit program will be given for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief.

The Ambassador will fly tomorrow morning from Chicago to Albany, where he will be met by a delegation of the benefit committee. He will be the guest of Mrs. William Felton Barrett, at Sky Farm, Egremont, Mass. Mrs. Roosevelt will drive with friends tomorrow directly from Hyde Park to Tanglewood. Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, will preside in the non-musical part of the program, to be called the manifestation.

The program will begin at 5:30 a. m., when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a band of 250 Army musicians, chosen from bands of the 26th Division at Camp Edwards, Mass. They will travel from Camp Edwards in a unit of forty trucks equipped with kitchen and sleeping quarters and, on reaching Tanglewood at 4 o'clock today, will set up their camp on the shore of the near-by lake.

The second part of the program, "Berkshire Music Center on Parade," beginning at 6 o'clock, will be a simultaneous demonstration of the center's various activities, including the student orchestra, opera class and chamber music groups. The Manifestation will begin at 6:45. There will be an intermission at 7:30 for supper. At 9 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Berkshire Center Orchestra, the Festival Chorus and the military bands will take part in a concert in the Music Shed, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist. A drawing for prizes will be held at 10:30, and a display of fireworks will start at 10:45. A drawing also will be held for articles donated for raffling.

The third series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins at 8:30 tonight in the Music Shed, where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in a Handel organ concerto, with E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, which has been rehearsing since early in July at the center, will sing in the latter work. The Boston Symphony's program for Saturday night's festival concert consists of Vaughan Williams's "London" Symphony, Samuel Barber's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Wagner excerpts. For the closing festival concert Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, Sibelius's seventh symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 14 1941

25

Mrs. Roosevelt Upsets Tanglewood Concert

10,000 Crane Necks Before Koussevitsky Takes Podium

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: Just as Koussevitsky was about to step to the podium and begin the concert at Tanglewood the other evening, an almost electric flurry passed through the crowd of some 10,000 people.

Necks craned, chairs groaned as people stood on them, and the man next to me gushed with excitement "It must be Garbo!" It wasn't, of course, but Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Morgenthau arriving with friends to hear the music.

Half way down the aisle, her head wrapped in a white turban and wearing a blue and white tweedy coat, Mrs. R. came into full view and the crowd roared and clapped its approval.

Bowing, waving and smiling to friends, she plunged on through the crowds, ignored the sparkling scimitar of boxes, and found her way to her seat. Literally thousands of people who had been standing in the rear of the Shed or sprawling on the lawns began to push down into the enclosure.

The photographers and society reporters forgot the correct, erect, perfectly groomed box holders they had come to describe and commenced leaping over the backs of chairs to reach the first lady of the land.

Spotlight on Her

No one noticed Emeln and Gloria Braggiotti Etting enter from the side. They were quite a sight, too, especially as Emeln was all done up in a bottle green velvet corduroy pea jacket! But I don't think a nude man in a barrel would have attracted the slightest attention. The spotlight was on Mrs. Roosevelt.

Then the lights dimmed. The autograph collectors put away their little books sadly to retreat to the shadows, the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association cleared a great communal throat and the magnificent Mozart Requiem (played in excerpts) was under way.

Now I admire Mrs. Roosevelt's fine, and I am perfectly certain sincere gestures of democracy. I can understand her wanting to sit in the less expensive seats rather than the boxes, but I still think it was an error in judgment.

To begin with, she is the first lady. Obviously, her presence anywhere is going to cause excitement, and it is only natural that people en masse should want to see her. They could do so with much less discomfort, both to themselves and others, if she were prominently, properly and conspicuously seated.

As a matter of fact, there comes a moment in the lives of important people when they are less conspicuous in the limelight than they are in the shadows.

Thinks It Bad Judgment

I am also not unaware of the fact it must be enormously thrilling to anyone suddenly to find himself in the somewhat unique position of sitting next to the wife of the President of the United States.

In fact, I am positive there were people at Tanglewood the other evening saying "Look at Marge, doesn't she have all the luck?" But in this case there was no reason to believe Marge was in luck at all. The reporters and photographers stepped all over her feet before the concert, during the interval, and after it was over.

If she wanted to go out to smoke a cigarette during the 25-minute intermission, she had to struggle through an army of less fortunate people who were absolutely determined to get a glimpse of the smiling first lady of the land. And when Marge returned to her seat—indeed if she left it at all—she must have felt a little like Napoleon on the retreat from Russia.

In any case, and regardless of her fine disdain for protocol, the lady of "My Day" fame was certainly the star attraction of that lovely concert.

Others Had No Chance

Forgotten were the Myron Taylors, the Norman Davises and the blonde, ice cool, beautiful Lady Castlerosse. People were betting as to where she was staying and the best odds went to the tourist camp sections. Black autograph books were passed up and down her row all evening and the continual flashes from the photographers' exploding bulbs was like heat lightning.

Yet the instant Koussevitsky called his men to attention the silence was complete and the music, to borrow a cliche, golden.

In fact, the entire second series was a great improvement over the first, with Mozart, Brahms, Beethoven, Debussy, Berlioz and Hanson the stars: The critics didn't like the Brahms and, although it is of no importance, I thought the Hanson "Romantic Symphony" sounded like a sentimental tempest in a Kansas dust bowl. But the audience cheered, Hanson himself took a bow, and altogether it was a triumph.

Leonard Shure also had a triumph with his playing of the Brahms Concerto No. 2 in B Flat. The purists were furious, insisted it had no body, no tempo, and had been treated as if it were a souffle. I am no purist, however, nor were several thousands more around me, and Mr. Shure was called back to the stage time and time again.

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
AUG 14 1941

Boxoffice Stimulated by Great Music

Critic Reports on Berkshire Festival

By GRAYDON HEARTSILL

New York, Aug. 14.—Up at Tanglewood, close to Stockbridge, Mass., in the midst of the Berkshire Hills there is amazing proof of the drawing power of great music.

New Yorkers, cognizant of the way this section's heavy traffic lengthens distance, consider the 160 winding mile jaunt to Tanglewood too stupendous a journey for ordinary week-end pleasure trip. But New Yorkers on the other hand regard the Berkshire Festival's series of Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, as the most exciting events of the summer. So since the concerts began they have been giving the picturesque little New England inns a boom business en route to Stockbridge to join hundreds of other music lovers who find their way by automobile, by excursion trains and special buses from Boston, Albany and other cities.

There's no need here to write a report of the Sunday afternoon concert or the magnificent Mozart and Debussey and Brahms when their music shines with a master's magic touch.

The audience itself, however, presents another story. More than 6,000 filled every chair and loge in the huge roof-covered shed. They paid neat prices for the privilege. Approximately the same number, in return for $1.50 for general admission tickets were entitled to occupy some back benches or to sit on the huge grass expanse backing the concert shed and encircled by majestic pines and birches.

◆ ◆ ◆

Equipped for Comfort.

They came equipped. Some brought pillows; many brought blankets. The breeze-swept grounds looked like a much-enlarged and grass-covered White Rock Lake beach on a hot holiday afternoon.

"Why this is just a Navajo blanket party with music," one Texan remarked.

Brown-legged girls in play suits, their tanned swains, handsome dowagers, vacationists from the four corners, children, even a baby or so in baskets—these were all in the thousands who soaked up sun and Koussevitzky music simultaneously, who basked in the golden opportunity to hear music under the most ideal conditions, in comfort and informality and surrounded by beauty

And Texans were there. Miss Marion Flagg, director of music education in the Dallas public schools, and Miss Louise Allen of her staff, both vacationing at Cummington Inn and studying at the close-by school, heard both the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts and will hear others before coming to New York. With them until her departure Sunday was Miss Alice Wilkerson, also one of the school music teachers. Miss Beulah Dunn of Lubbock is spending the summer at Stockbridge and Helen Lasley of Abilene has been one oof the concert series' most enthusiastic attendants.

Miss Flagg will return to Dallas Sept. 26 and the following day the graduate music class which will be conducted by Abby Whiteside and attended by pianists, including a number of the public school teachers, will begin.

Sitting on the porch of the old home which serves as headquarters for the Tanglewood school and center of the activities which draw musicians and music lovers to the heart of the Berkshires were Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Pollock. They have been staying in nearby Great Barrington and postponed their departure for Canada a few hours in order to hear one more Boston Symphony concert.

Frank E. Hobden, who directs music activities for the Civic Federation along with vocational guidance and other responsibilities, drove up with a group from New York where he arrived last week for a "working holiday" after spending the first part of the summer in Washington and attending a vocational guidance course at the University of Maryland. Dr. Hal Maxwell of Myra, a graduate of both S. M. U. and Baylor Medical and now with the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, loaded up his car and was off for a day of Berkshire music. In the party also was Miss Barbara Briscoe of Fort Worth, celebrating the first day of a short vacation from managing a Fifth Avenue cosmetics shop.

To all these Texans and former Texans who can ordinarily match anything around here with something better back home it was something of a blow to admit that Texas with its beauty spots, its ideal climatic conditions, its summer evenings and its notable musical strides, hasn't taken full advantage of combining its outdoors and its cultural activities.

◆ ◆ ◆

Technical Innovations.

Dallas music lovers are pretty conscious of concert lighting which has had its bad occasions, and so notice the way the problems are approached in other places. The big music shed at Tanglewood with its plyboard stage is not only acoustically so excellent that with the co-operatively dry weather of Sunday the music's subtleties were as manifest as they would have been in the ideal enclosed auditorium. The illumination was ingenious. The lights, appearing in closer inspection to be simply theatrical border lights, shone through round openings in the stage's ceiling, lighting the music adequately for the musicians and the stage for the spectators to see them in action. Shutters, however, in each opening kept the glare from the audience's eyes and from out front there was no harshness. In fact, there was no obvious upper light at all to draw the attention from the orchestra.

◆ ◆ ◆

To watch Koussevitzky conduct and hear his orchestra respond is an experience which answers the question as to why the gray-haired maestro so frequently heads the list of the great conductors.

Dr. Koussevitzky is called around Tanglewood "the sage of Stockbridge," and this summer fledgling conductors are among those eating up his teachings. In something of a musician's Hippocratic oath in discipline he bids them to conduct their personal lives so they can be examples of correct living in the community and can appear without apology before the lovers of good music.

Among the prime duties of the conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky believes one to be the study, analyzation and conducting of new scores. Remembering that the Dallas Symphony's conductor, Jacques Singer, has practiced this "duty" with varied public reaction, the strong opinions of Boston's celebrated leader, are especially pertinent.

The public's objections must in this case be passed by, he believes. By introducing new works, the conductor gradually educates the public.

"Composers like Schubert died of hunger and despair mainly because conductors neglected them. Conductors who do so today think only of themselves, their personal success, not of musical art and their responsibility to creative art."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 15 1941

ATTENDED BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

The first concert of the third series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held last night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a flawless [illegible]n of Handel and Beethoven.

The soloist of the Handel Concerto No. 10, in D Minor, was E. Power Biggs, noted organist, whose exquisite playing was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's playing of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" was magnificently impressive, and the singing by a quartet of soloists and the Berkshire Festival Chorus intensified the solemn beauty of this portion of the program.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled again and again, and always shared his tremendous ovation with his orchestra and the singers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 15 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO CLOSE SUNDAY

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, will come to a close Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, playing the following program:

Symphony No. 7 by Sibelius, "Lieutenant Kijl Suite," by Propofieff, and Symphony No. 5 by Tchaikovsky.

This season there have been nine concerts given at Tanglewood, the large estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks as a permanent home for this famous orchestra located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

At many of the concerts this year there were ten thousand people from all over America. Do they come to hear this famous orchestra play the masterpieces of music, or do they come simply because "it is the thing to do?" These questions can best be answered by an attendance at one of the concerts and observing the expressions by the individuals as the orchestra plays.

One Sunday afternoon the orchestra played Brahms' beautiful Symphony No. 4 in C Minor. This symphony is perhaps one of the greatest symphonies ever composed. The applause which followed was overwhelming. In reality does the mutitude praise the wonderful orchestra with the master conductor, or the beautiful music of Brahms. Without the orchestra we could hear no symphony, but it is truly Brahms, Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Wagner and a score of other composers which is given to us through the medium of this superb orchestra. Their melodies, their interpretations, their tragedies and fate all works in various moods on the individual as the orchestra plays.

As an artist has a definite meaning to his picture, but is interpreted in many ways, so has a great symphony a meaning. If we have imagination, music can bring untold joys and pleasures. So when we applaud the conductor and his orchestra let us not forget that a great part of this ovation belongs to the memory of the composer, whose music will live forever.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 15 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 15 1941

Thousands of Young People Attend Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—Young America isn't all for swing and jitterbug music.

Sponsors of the Berkshire Festival, in fact, are convinced the younger element is definitely interested in symphonies.

When the festival opened eight years ago, audiences leaned heavily toward the elders, but numbered among last night's 8,000 patrons were thousands in their 'teens and twenties.

Interest has been so much broader this season, that the concert sponsors are thinking of extending the 1942 festival from three to four weeks.

This plan, however, is still in the conjectural state. Nothing definite will be decided upon, they say, until possible restrictions imposed by the war can be determined.

"Actual enforcement of a five-gallon a week gasoline ration possibly would cut down audiences a half," one officer said. "Already Canadians are finding it almost impossible to come to the states for such an event, because of exchange restrictions."

Quartet Heard

Last night's program was made up of two works—Handel's Organ Concerto Nomio in D Minor with E. Power Biggs as soloist, and Beethoven's imperishable "Missa Solemnis" using the chorus of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's unique Berkshire Music Center and a quartet made up of Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass—not to mention the Boston Symphony, which once again distinguished itself for the flexibility and sensitivity of the accompaniment it furnished the singers.

The chorus proved excellent, barring a slight lack of volume in the male sections. The quartet was adequate, if not distinguished for attention to pitch or style. And Dr. Koussevitzky himself was at his best, carrying the great weight of the performance lightly.

Halifax Not to Attend

Announcement was made at last night's concert that Viscount Halifax would not be able to attend tonight's program for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, owing to pressure of affairs at Washington. The remainder of the benefit, which begins at 5:30 o'clock and continues well into the night, will run as scheduled.

One of its features will be music by 250 bandsmen from Camp Edwards, Mass., who arrived in a motor cavalcade of 34 trucks, and camped last night on the Tanglewood Estate.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Number of Weeks for Festival In 1942 To Be Decided Soon

TANGLEWOOD. — Officials of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival have made no decision as to the length of next year's season it was declared today. Although programs to be distributed at the USO-British War Relief benefit this afternoon and evening carry the announcement that the Festival concerts of the Boston Orchestra will be held Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons beginning July 30, 1942, nothing is said as to the number of weeks. It has been reported that four weeks are being considered.

It was stated that committees from the two boards, Festival and orchestra, are discussing contract matters and that reports may be expected soon. A meeting of the Festival trustees, held Wednesday, was adjourned to an unnamed day.

Like Symphonies

The sponsors of the Festival are convinced the younger element is definitely interested in symphonies. Eight years ago audiences were composed mostly of elders, but this season has seen an ever increasing number of men and women in their 'teens and twenties.

What effect the war and enforcement of a five-gallon ration of gasoline a week would have next year is a matter of conjecture. No doubt the attendance would be lessened by such an edict.

The program announcements read as follows:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, announces the third session of the Berkshire Music Center to be held at Tanglewood beginning July 6, 1942.

"The Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoons beginning July 30, 1942."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 15 1941
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 15 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Expect Crowds at Benefit Despite Threat of Rain

Tanglewood Event Will Go On Rain or Shine—Halifax Unable To Leave Washington

Berkshire Symphonic Festival and Boston Symphony Orchestra officials had their fingers crossed this afternoon as the clock neared 5.30, scheduled hour for the rain-or-shine opening of the gala benefit at Tanglewood for the United Service Organizations and the British war relief.

Despite word from Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, that he would be unable to come to Tanglewood, and a depressing prediction from the weatherman of scattered showers—with or without thunder—the committee looked forward to a tremendous crowd.

More Pleasant News

More pleasant news came from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, after he had rehearsed the 250-piece band representing the combined musicians of the 26th Division.

Plan Special Bus Service For Benefit

Special busses for the huge USO-British relief benefit at Tanglewood tonight will leave the Park in Pittsfield and the center of Stockbridge at 4.30, and from Lenox at 4.45.

Another bus will leave Pittsfield at 6.

"The band is absolutely splendid—first class," Dr. Koussevitzky said. "They know how to play."

The huge group will be heard three times during the evening. Led by Chester Earl Whiting, chief bandmaster, and under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, they will give a half-hour concert starting at 5.30. During the main concert, which starts at 9, they will appear with the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture, and finally will bring the evening's program to an end after the fireworks, playing the national anthem.

News of Lord Halifax's last-minute inability to make his scheduled address during the manifestation was received by Jerome D. Greene of the benefit executive committee during last night's concert. The sudden arrival of Lord Beaverbrook in Washington after the secret conference between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill forced him to stay at the capital. Mr. Greene will read the ambassador's speech.

Besides Mr. Greene, the group of special guests on the platform during the manifestation will be Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, who will preside; Dr. Koussevitzky; Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony; Norman H. Davis of Stockbridge, national chairman of the American Red Cross; Harper Sibley, national president of the USO; Albert G. Milbank, general counsel for British war relief; Col. Charles H. Moore, representing Maj.-Gen. Roger W. Eckfeldt, commanding officer of the 26th Division; Dr. Lewis D. Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, member of the executive committee.

At noon, the Festival office reported 95 boxes already have been sold, and it is hoped to reach last year's total of 100 before the afternoon is over.

The facilities of both the Shed and the new theatre and three large tents will be available in case of rain at any time.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 15 1941

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
Aug. 15, 1941

Soldiers Play Tonight In Berkshire Festival

26th Division Bandsmen Return Visit of Koussevitzky to Camp Edwards Last May

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14.—A motorized column of soldiers and Army bandsmen rode into Tanglewood from Camp Edwards tonight to return a compliment paid them last May by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Serge Koussevitzky.

They swung past the famous "Music Shed," pitched camp in a lakeside meadow, then shined up and attended the first of four concerts that will close the eighth Berkshire symphonic festival.

Extra Performance

The last series of the Summer includes an extra performance tomorrow night in which the soldiers will participate.

The Army trucks brought from the Cape Cod contonment 250 bandsmen and 10 other soldiers whose duties range from driving to cooking.

Last May 6, Dr. Kossevitzky accepted an invitation to conduct the nine bands of the 26th Division at the Army camp. The visit was a great success and when the bands were asked to come to Tanglewood to participate in tomorrow night's gala for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British relief, the answer was "yes."

Special Seats

Capt. Herman A. Hoffman, commanding the cavalcade, Bandmaster Chester Whiting and their men heard tonight's concert from seats installed for them in what otherwise was a sold out "house." The attendance was estimated at 8500 persons, in spite of almost Autumn weather.

2 Works Heard

Tonight's program was short in the telling, but somewhat longer in the performance.

There were but two works heard, Handel's Concerto for organ in D Minor, No. 10, and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," unique among liturgical works of its sort, and also among the compositions of the irascible composer from Bonn.

E. Power Briggs Soloist

Soloist in the Handel work was E. Power Briggs, whose task was complicated a little by the fact that the organ is installed on top of the orchestra shell, where its tone is somewhat obscured to orchestra and player. Briggs' task was considerably eased, however, by the fact that the organ itself is far closer to the type of instrument for which the music was written than most modern instruments, thanks to the revival of interest in the organ as a solo instrument, rather than as an orchestral imitator.

The mass, not Beethoven's greatest music by a great deal, is still one of the summits of the Beethoven period. Tonight it was given a reading that made plain why this is so. Dr. Koussevitzky has not more often been in the vein. The chorus was that of the Berkshire Music Center.

Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States who was to address tomorrow's audience, sent word tonight that he would be unable to leave Washington. The remainder of the program—addresses, music by Army bands and even dancing on the wide lawns of Tanglewood—will go on as scheduled, however, with the proceeds going to British war relief.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 15 1941

Chorus Hit Of Festival Program

—By JOSEPH J. HORAN

The Berkshire Festival Chorus has come into its own. Composed of voice students at the Berkshire Music Center which is conducted jointly with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, the chorus last night took over the seventh concert of the series.

For it was this well-trained, perfectly modulated group of 100 singers that was the main attraction of the concert. For once the great Boston Symphonic Orchestra was subordinated to the chorus and full credit must be given to Serge Koussevitsky, its conductor, for molding his musicians into an excellent accompanying element for the singers.

The chorus, which has been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross of the Music Center Staff, gave a program of unforgettable beauty in presenting Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Excellent Choice

The choice of this music, written by Beethoven to celebrate the elevation of the Archbishop of Olmutz, was a happy one. Many composers have been attracted by this central liturgical rite of the Catholic Church and have written music to the words of the principal parts of the Mass. The church itself, has long favored the simplicity of the Gregorian Chant, devised in the middle ages by Pope Gregory. It has often frowned upon and sometimes outlawed the works of some of the more florid composers, pointing out that the music was too operatic for church.

It is doubtful today that the church would favor this music to be sung during the Mass itself, but there is none that can deny there is in Beethoven's work the most complete association between the meaning of the music and the meaning of the words.

Thus in this Mass, the Kyrie Eleison becomes a solemn plea to God to have mercy; the Gloria, a paean of praise to the incarnated God; the Credo, a solemn profession of faith; the Sanctus and Benedictus, an expression of joy; and the Agnus Dei, another plea to a merciful God.

Studied Latin Text

Beethoven is said to have carefully studied the meanings of the Latin text and to then have set about carefully constructing the music so that even if it were played alone it would express in tonal themes the meaning of the words of the Mass. There is no wasted effort in the music; no expansions of musical themes. Accustomed to pithy symphonic thinking, he focused his emotions sharply to a point and built it with special forcefulness. He shows the supreme effectiveness which the vivid word, flung out once and for all can command.

There is a pleading note in the andante movement of the Kyrie Eleison (Lord, have mercy). The words of the chorus rang through the auditorium with a special clarity that only a well-trained chorus singing as a perfect entity can accomplish. The solos, evolved from the chorus and then passed back to the chorus, were handled beautifully.

In the "Gloria in Excelsis" ("Glory to God on high, and on earth peace, good will towards men") there is all the joy of Christmas morning. In this the quartet of soloists open the piece and the chorus evolves from it, in just the opposite way in which the "Kyrie" is written. The "stretto" themes — repetitions of words—and the clipped staccato showed the chorus at its best. The orchestra followed the mood of the words perfectly as the singers let out their full voices in this hymn to the Son of God.

The Knickerbocker News Photo

MUSIC HATH CHARMS—A quartet of soldiers from the 101st Medical Regiment in Boston listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last night. They accompanied members of the Regimental Band who will play at the festival benefit for the USO tonight on the same grounds and under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony conductor. Left to right are Pvts. William J. Van Beynum, Myron P. Lepie, Seymour J. Kahn and Leonard G. Ratte.

Credo Sung Expressively

In the Credo, ("I believe in one God., etc), which to Catholics is the Nicene Creed, was sung as it should be expressed—expressing belief with assurance. Its words come out directly and unhesitatingly. The "Incarnatus Est" solo was handled with a quiet devotional awe by the tenor and then the "Ressureit" passage becomes a glorious announcement of the resurrection of Christ.

The Sanctus, (Holy, Holy, Lord of Hosts. Heaven and earth are full of thy glory,) opened with a devotional theme by the orchestra and then was taken up by the soprano section singing almost sotto voce.

The "Agnus Dei" (Lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world, have mercy on us; grant us peace) expressed both a poignant plea in the bass solo on the "miserere nobis" part and then ended with a burst of ethereal glory on the words which ask God to grant peace to the world.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

"BATTLE OF MUSIC"
(Boston Herald)

The gala concert at Stockbridge Friday evening, to benefit the United Service Organization and the British War Relief, promises to be nothing less than a world shaking event. At the very least its echoes should go resounding down the Berkshire valleys for months to come.

The speakers, it seems, will range from Lord Halifax to Elsa Maxwell, and the prizes, from a pedigreed Guernsey heifer to a ton of coal. But these will provide only the quieter, the more refined parts of the entertainment. The real noise, the big "smash", as Variety would call it, will be a double concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and 250 army bandsmen from Camp Edwards, both led by Dr. Koussevitzky, climaxed by a joint rendition of Tchaikowsky's rip-snorting, old war-horse, "Overture, 1812." Although as yet no firing of cannon is promised, there will be rockets aplenty and bombs bursting in air.

Even if the ensuing din is not heard across the Atlantic and fails to frighten the Nazis into beginning their retreat from Moscow, it should precipitate a handsome flow of coins into the coffers of two extremely worthy organizations. People living within 50 miles of Stockbridge will do well to prepare for a minor seismic disturbance Friday night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 15 1941

Handel and Beethoven Fill Stockbridge Air

E. Power Biggs Is Organ Soloist as Festival Enters Last Week

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15.—The classics, surprisingly, took over last night's concert at Tanglewood, which opened the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The program offered two of the most revered names in all music, Handel and Beethoven.

Proceedings began with a performance of the Handel Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in D Minor, No. 10 (Op. 7, No. 4), bringing forward as organ soloist E. Power Biggs. The Beethoven work was the Missa Solemnis, which called for the services of Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass, besides Mr. Biggs, the Berkshire Festival Chorus and, of course, the Boston Symphony and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 7800 persons attended. The night was coolish, a bit on the damp side, but otherwise good for music—as what night isn't?

Handel, as matters went, had the better of the situation. Soloist, conductor and orchestra joined forces in a generally revealing delivery of the work, whose melodic content is Handelian to the core, flowingly expressive and elegant in the grand manner.

Once or twice Mr. Biggs and Mr. Koussevitzky differed slightly in the matter of tempos, but soon enough matters were rectified.

The best features of the account of the Beethoven Mass were easily the exciting climactic moments. Mr. Koussevitzky literally hurled the massed voices, human and instrumental, into the air at such times and the effects were thrilling, to say the least.

However, there is much more to this composition than mere pyrotechnical display. There are great depths of emotion, which were by no means exploited; the unequaled concentration of a simple, yet direct and unchanging faith, personal, perhaps, but aiming ever at an objective which is close at hand.

As for the soloists, their work moved up or down in the artistic scheme of things, much like the graph of a fluttering seismoscope. Miss Dirman's voice was the best of the lot and the soprano could also be credited with the most artistic of the evening's solo singing.

Miss Glaz disclosed some attractive tones, but often she turned in as many unattractive ones. Mr. Priebe, the possessor of one of those carrying voices, performed respectably, if not strikingly. Mr. Huehn could scarcely be heard.

Had the solo singers been better placed—in front of the orchestra, say, instead of buried among the choristers—things might have been altogether different.

If there is such a thing as vocal spectacle, that was what carried the night, the vocal spectacle supplied by great masses of performers giving for all they were worth in the startling, crashing crescendos.

22

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1941

Missa Solemnis Of Beethoven Is Heard at Lenox

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony and Chorus in Work at Festival Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—The third series of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival began here in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Festival Chorus in Beethoven's Missa Solemnic in D major.

Before performing this unparalleled work, the orchestra played Handel's tenth concerto for organ and orchestra in D minor, with E. Power Biggs as the soloist.

The weather was not quite so favorable as it has been for the festival's previous six concerts. It was still cool, although the chill of the last two days has begun to moderate, and the sky was cloudy, while abstaining from rain.

Still, the audience of 7,000 or more included a good-sized delegation listening from the lawn in the neighborhood of the shed. Five-figure crowds are expected for the last two festival concerts on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, for which all the reserved seats have been sold.

Among tonight's listeners were the 250 military musicians of the 26th Division, who will play under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction tomorrow at 5:30 o'clock in the first event of the six-hour benefit for the United Service Organization and the British War Relief Society.

They left Camp Edwards on Cape Cod at 6 o'clock this morning in a fleet of trucks and came to Tanglewood at 4 this afternoon. Tonight and tomorrow they will camp on the shore of the lake known as Stockbridge Bowl. Warrant Officer Chester E. Whitney is in charge of the Army delegation, with which Dr. Koussevitzky will make his debut as a bandmaster.

It was said today that several of those who will provide refreshments during tomorrow's exceptional affair will donate part or all of their receipts to the beneficiaries of the occasion.

The Missa Solemnis is the second large-scale choral work to be sung in these festivals. The festival chorus, which made its debut last August in the Bach B-minor mass, has been preparing for this performance at the Berkshire Music Center since early July under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross.

Those who sang the exacting solo roles in the Missa Solemnis were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, barytone.

Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, wired from Washington that owing to pressing reasons of state he will not be able to leave the capital and come to Tanglewood as he had planned. He asked Dr. Jerome Greene, of the benefit committee, to read the speech he was to deliver at the manifestation, which is the third part of the benefit program. He also asked Dr. Greene to convey the thanks of the people of Great Britain to all concerned in arranging the benefit for their generosity which, he said, "we shall not forget."

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Dr. Lewis Perry, head master of Phillips Exeter Academy, and Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College, will speak as announced.

28

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 16 1941

Gala Tanglewood Musical Attended by 7,800 People

Four Hundred Musicians, More Than Half Wearing U. S. Army Uniforms, Crowd Stage of Music Shed at Stockbridge to Give Rousing Finale to Five-Hour Benefit Program — Mrs. Roosevelt Speaks Briefly—Lord Halifax's Speech is Read —Koussevitzky Also Makes Brief Remarks— "V" Note Prominent Throughout Program.

Four hundred musicians, more than half of them wearing the uniform of the United States army, crowded the stage of the vast music shed at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night to give a rousing musical finale to a five-hour benefit program, which attracted between 7,800 and 8,000 persons and included a brief "manifestation," in which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President spoke, and an address written by Viscount Halifax, British ambassador, was read.

Exciting Day

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra which will be heard in the final concerts of the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight and tomorrow, led the massed orchestra in the finale—Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture—which recalled to many another Russian stand against invasion. Before him sat not only his own orchestra but also the Berkshire Music Center orchestra and many of the 250 army musicians from the 26th division at Camp Edwards whose earlier playing as a unit, was one of the features of an exciting day.

In between conducting the army band and his own orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky paused to make one of the few speeches he has given from the festival stage. Taking part in the manifestation the distinguished conductor, who became a U. S. citizen earlier in the year, told the overflow audience that had braved rain, wind and wet roads to witness the program that the open hand of America "holds the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening fist of despotism."

The program, doubtless one of the most brilliant ever conducted in Berkshire county, saw the combined forces of the Boston symphony, the Music Center orchestra, the Festival chorus, chamber music and opera divisions and the 250 uniformed visitors from the cape producing a many-sided musical circus, the not inconsiderable proceeds of which will be split between the United Service organizations (USO) and the British War Relief society.

In his short talk, given in broken English, Dr. Koussevitzky said that to him the demonstration represented "the act of stretching a hand of hope and help across the ocean." He introduced Dr. James P. Baxter, 3rd, president of Williams college and a member of the festival board, who in turn presented Mrs. Roosevelt; Dr. Lewis Perry, principal of Phillips academy, Exeter, N. H., and a trustee of Williams college; and Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the Harvard college corporation and a trustee of the Boston Symphony, who read Lord Halifax's address. The ambassador was held in Washington at the last moment by the pressure of his duties.

The British ambassador, in his prepared speech, observed that no music festivals have been conducted in England for two years but expressed the hope that it would not be long before they were resumed.

Devotion and Sacrifice

"Here," he said, "I would think, is an example, and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire all of us who believe in those principals just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the President and the Prime Minister."

Lord Halifax said he and Lady Halifax had had many opportunities to travel since coming to these shores six months ago and that they both were amazed at the amount of work being done by private citizens, especially women, to help Great Britain.

Mrs. Roosevelt told the audience which gave her an exceedingly warm welcome that she believed "the development in people of an appreciation of the arts is a sign that the people are coming of age." She expressed the view that various of the government's programs have brought "all these things nearer to the people."

"I would say to Lord Halifax, if he were here," she continued, "how happy I am that the two great English-speaking nations have joined together to build a better world for the future.

Prizes Awarded

The benefit ended with Elsa Maxwell, famed society party planner, distributing prizes which included two tickets for the 1942 festival, a cocker spaniel, a ton of coal and a registered heifer. Fireworks was on the agenda but the dampness caused a change of plans. They were to have included a tremendous "V" which was in place on the lawn in front of the stage as another of the many symbols of the unity of Great Britain and the United States which was so obviously the message of the day.

The massed army bands opened the benefit with a concert at 5:30 o'clock under the direction of Chester Earl Whiting, chief bandmaster. In leading the musicians through the "William Tell" overture and the "Washington Greys" march, he showed the audience what the bands could do, but these two numbers were only a prelude to the inspired playing of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" and "Semper Fidelis" under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Even seasoned concert-goers figured that if the 26th division's bands are a standard for military musicians, then the army now forming has about the ablest musicians ever.

Dr. Koussevitzky seemed just as flushed with emotion as he led the army men as when addressing the huge audience. It was learned that yesterday morning he left his own orchestra to an assistant in order to go down to the lake shore where the military band was bivouacked, to do some strenuous rehearsing. Whatever he did or said then was reflected later on for the men played with great gusto and fire and sonority and when they were through the audience rose and cheered.

"Open House"

Between the band concert and manifestation, the Music Center threw open its doors with the Music Center orchestra playing in the shed, the opera division presenting four excerpts against handsome settings in the theater and student groups playing in the chamber music hall. Capacity audiences witnessed each program. The center orchestra was conducted in turn by Walter Hendl, Leonard Bernstein and Thor Johnson, all gifted members of Koussevitzky's class.

The audience took time out also for a rather damp picnic supper. It was no evening to spread a luncheon on the lawn so several hundreds ate in their cars while others huddled about tables in special refreshment tents. The speakers and some 100 guests were entertained by the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees at a box supper under a big tent erected just outside the shed. A program of country dancing scheduled to have been staged on the grass was shifted to the theater.

Dr. Koussevitzky began at 9 o'clock the gala concert, for which Albert Spalding was the violin soloist, with the familiar first movement of Beethoven's Fifth symphony—billed as the "V" symphony on the benefit program. He had chosen Beethoven's Fifth for the season's first concert July 31.

Stanley Chapple of the Music Center's conducting staff led the orchestra through brilliant readings of the "Mars" and "Venus" movements from Gustav Holst's "The Planets." He also conducted the orchestra while Mr. Spalding was heard in the Mendelssohn violin concerto. The violinist, whose contribution to the program was one of the very richest, received a great ovation and was called back to the stage on five or six occasions to bow to the applause.

Lusty Singing

After Hugh Ross, also of the Center's conducting staff, had directed the festival chorus in two English madrigals, Dr. Koussevitzky returned to lead the massed orchestra in the "1812" overture and also in the national anthem in which the audience joined with lusty singing.

Among North Adams people present were Miss Martha Durnin, Mrs. Herbert W. Clark 2nd, Mrs. Clinton E. Whitney, Mrs. Clarence W. Wildman, Mrs. Charles R. Canedy, Miss Virginia Hewat, Mrs. George T. Mullen, Mrs. Harry J. Hewat, Mrs. Donald E. Hewat, Mr. and Mrs. G. Douglas Hewat, Miss Jessie Sherman, Mrs. Thomas Conant, Mr. and Mrs. Donald W. Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Bond, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. W. Coggswell Chisholm of Westfield, formerly of this city.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Arnold, George B. Flood, Mr. and Mrs. Sterling E. Smith, Mrs. George M. Flood, Mrs. John W. Lindsay, Mrs. Ruth Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel U. Hirsh, Mrs. Jack Less, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Kronick, Judge and Mrs. Israel Ruby, Mrs. Celia Rudnick, Mrs. Samuel M. Goldstein, Miss Ruth Hamblen, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace H. Kezer, Miss Ruth M. Hall and Miss Mary Wilbur.

Among those present from Adams were Dr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Spicker, Miss Mary Carney, Mrs. Robert K. Waite and Roy B. Peebles and Mrs. Arthur D. Simmons. Joseph Gorman of Pittsfield, former supervisor of music in the Adams schools, was also in the audience.

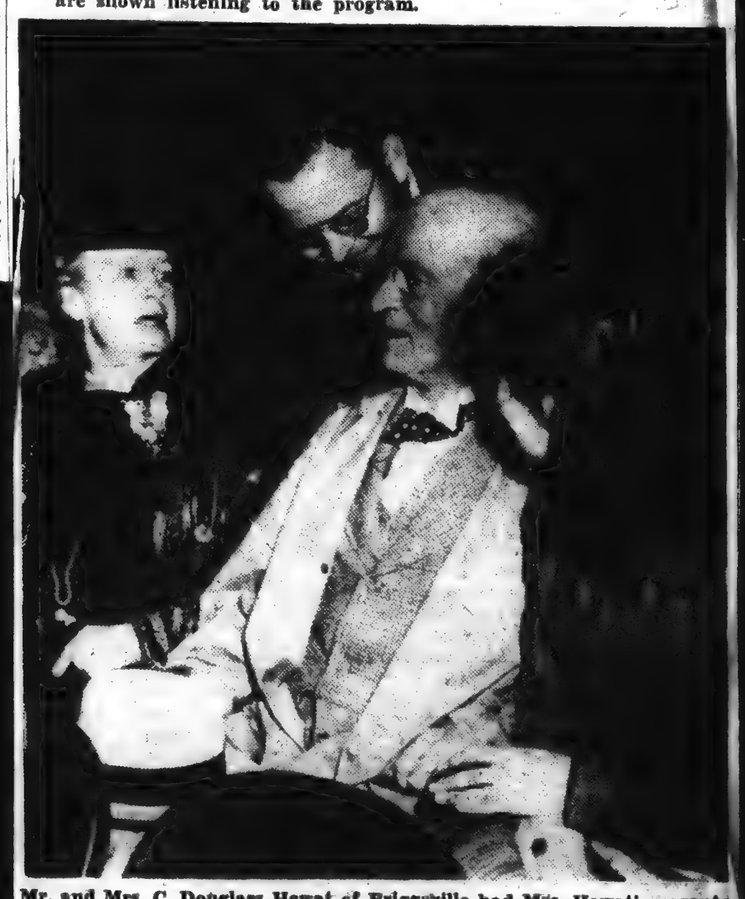
Williamstown attendants included Judge and Mrs. Arthur M. Robinson, Prof. and Mrs. Karl E. Weston, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar W. Flinton, Mrs. George W. Schryver and her daughters, the Misses Helen Louise and Priscilla Schryver; Miss Elizabeth B. Prindle and her brothers, E. Winthrop Prindle of Cambridge and Sumner S. Prindle of Beverly Hills, Calif.; Harry Kalker, Miss Patricia A. Ruether, Prof. and Mrs. S. Lane Faison.

Tanglewood Benefit Glimpses

Following opening remarks by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor (seated), Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3rd, president of Williams college, is shown introducing Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in the "manifestation," the speaking part of the gala British war relief-USO benefit given at Tanglewood last night with the Boston Symphony, the various branches of the Berkshire Music Center and the bands of the Yankee Division taking part.

Principal Donald W. Fowler of Drury high school, holding umbrella, and George H. Higgins, treasurer of the North Adams Trust company, were among the Northern Berkshire people in the crowd of 7,800 which converged on Tanglewood for the benefit despite a steady downpour of rain.

Mrs. Robert K. Waite and her brother, Roy B. Peebles, both of Adams, are shown listening to the program.



Mr. and Mrs. C. Douglass Hewat of Briggsville had Mrs. Hewat's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Vaill of Winsted, Ct., as their guests. Mrs. Hewat is shown talking to them while Mr. Hewat leans over their shoulders.

REDUCTION

RATIO

16x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

TANGLEWOOD IS TAKEN OVER BY U. S. ARMY

250 Military Musicians Pitch Camp at Lake, Will Play Today

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 14—The United States Army took over Tanglewood in Stockbridge late this afternoon when 50 trucks, mobile kitchens and other vehicles rolled into the grounds on Stockbridge Bowl, and 250 military musicians piled out. The bandsmen are from the various regimental bands at Camp Edwards, and have arrived to take part in the concert tomorrow night for the benefit of the U. S. O. and the British relief.

Camp on Shore

The Army trucks rolled down the road toward the lake and camp was set up on the lakeshore, and the soldiers immediately went in for a swim in the water which has bathed scores of America's "Four Hundred." Meals were prepared by Army chefs.

Tonight the bandsmen were guests of the Berkshire Festival at the opening of the third series of concerts.

Tomorrow they will play in massed formation late in the afternoon and will combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the student orchestra in the final concert of the da...

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Members of 26th Division Bands Are No "Yoo Hoo Battalion"

225 Musicians Bivouaced At Mahkeenac

Hold Strenuous Rehearsal for Tonight's Concert

By a Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD.—No "Yoo Hoo Battalion," the 225 members of the nine regimental bands, 26th Division, rolled into their bivouac at Lake Mahkeenac late yesterday afternoon with nary a murmur although their small audience included Mrs. John Dufresne, wife of a Boston Symphony Orchestra musician, in shorts, and The Eagle's comely social and food editor, who was there to see what made the rolling kitchens the feature of the Army's new mess routine.

If one were near enough to the convoy trucks, he might have heard an occasional whistle (very soft and low) but otherwise the naive attitude could be attributed either to the Yankees' arch conservatism or perhaps Gen. Ben Lear's recent punishment in Tennessee. Nevertheless, to the man, even the musicians passed by their female audience with an appraising glance, which expressed approval.

No Pleasure Trip

Although the trip from one corner of the commonwealth to the other has been looked forward to for many weeks, the Camp Edwards musicians discovered this morning that all would not be pleasure. Awakened at 7 they had breakfast and then marched to the Tanglewood barn for a grueling rehearsal under Serge Koussevitzky in preparation for tonight's concert. They break camp tomorrow at 7, head back for Edwards, but en route most of them will be dropped off at their home towns. Many of the 104th Infantry (Western Massachusetts) band drove their own cars in from Springfield and vicinity.

Greeted by Dr. Koussevitzky and other officials at the Court Hill Square, Lenox, the troops were escorted to the bivouac by Philip R. Allen of Walpole, general chairman of today's gala benefit, and George W. Edman, clerk of the Festival board. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery, commanding the convoy of about 35 trucks, immediately laid out the camp and within a half hour pup tents were pitched while the kitchen crews of Service Companies, 104th and 182d Infantries, prepared the evening meal.

Capt. Hoffman was assisted by Divisional Warrant Officer Chester Whiting, a second lieutenant of the 181st Infantry as mess officer, and a captain and first lieutenant of the 101st Medical Regiment, in charge of the trucks, sanitation and health.

Although the 26th Division band's role is a minor one in the training program at Camp Edwards, warrant officers and veteran bandsmen know from experience in the last World War that in time of emergency the musicians' day will come. Maintained primarily for morale purposes, the Yankee Division band has accomplished that object and during the last war covered itself with glory as stretcher-bearers on the field of battle.

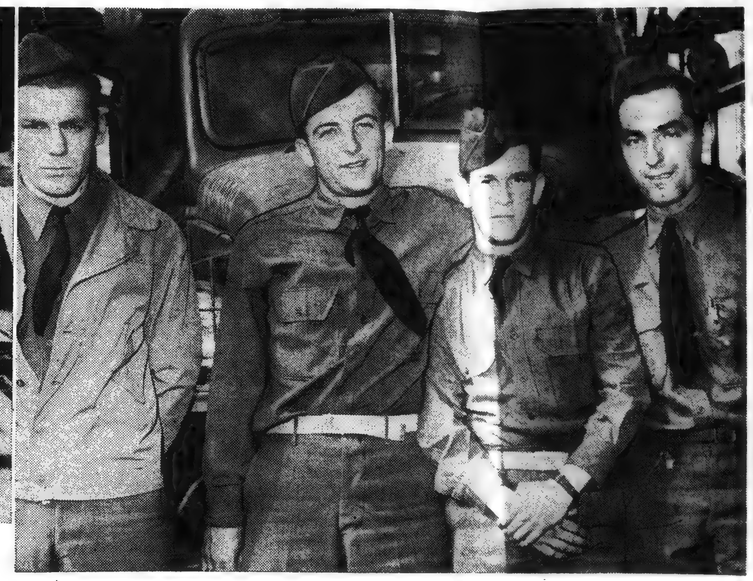
Lafrancis Tops Them All

No better testimony to the band's activities during World War I could be obtained than that of Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis, of Springfield, who today, as head of the 104th Infantry musicians, is dean of the Yankee division band leaders. Lafrancis joined the 104th Infantry band when it was sent overseas in 1917, has been with it ever since and took over its leadership in 1924.

Of the 104th's wartime experience, Lafrancis can recall when his group was within a mile of the front at Rupt-en-Woevre, in the St. Mihiel salient at Verdun, Meuse-Argonne offensive and the famous Battle of Apremont in which the Yankee Division distinguished itself so famously. In the latter encounter, 104th members received nine decorations and 20 citations. Three were wounded and one killed in that engagement and since the war, the bands have been ordered to stay away from the battle lines because of their value in morale restorative work.

Today, the 26th Division bands are comparatively inactive. They hardly ever go out on field problems or marching maneuvers but near the end of the day, when the soldiers are returning to the post, the musicians take to the outskirts and escort the lines of marchers back to camp. Another chore is the morning "eye opener" when they march up and down the company streets to make sure the top sergeant hasn't overslept.

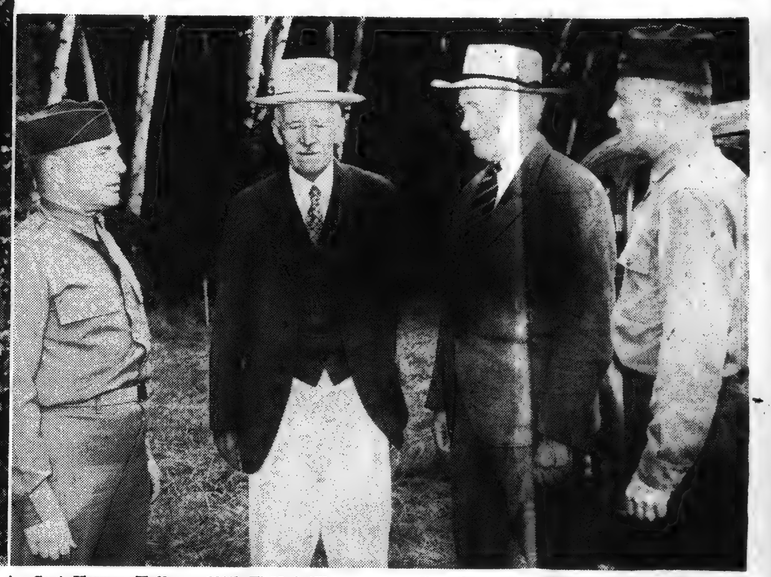
The long grass at the Lake Mahkeenac bivouac area may have been damp for pup-tent sleeping last night, but the soldiers made sure they wouldn't be bothered by mosquitoes.



Among the 101st Medical Regiment truck drivers, who convoyed the musicians across the commonwealth, were these Pittsfield men: Henry Gallent, Stephen Hospot, Edward M. Hall Jr., and Antonio J. Gallego.

Veteran of the 26th Division's nine warrant officers is Cyril J. Lafrancis, leader of the 104th Infantry band of Western Massachusetts. He served with the outfit in France.

One of the most interested in the rolling kitchen setup was W. Hewitt Clifford of Lenox, who did kitchen work for the U.S. Army Ambulance Service with the French Army. Here he is looking into one of the two kitchen trucks, handled by Cook Edward J. Crosby of Pittsfield Company I.



Capt. Herman Hoffman, 180th Field Artillery, commanding the convoy; Ernest D. Dane of Boston, president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Philip R. Allen of Walpole, general chairman of the gala benefit, and Chester Whiting, divisional warrant officer, discuss plans for the week-end.

29
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

COLD WEATHER CUTS AUDIENCE AT STOCKBRIDGE

Opening Concert of Final

50 Trucks Carry Camp Edwards Musicians to Tanglewood 'Jam Session'

Fifty trucks bearing the massed bands of the 26th division passed through the city about noon today en route to a "jam session" tomorrow night at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox.

The men will bivouac on the festival grounds tonight when they will be guests of honor at the concert of the orchestra led by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tomorrow night, the 250 men will participate in the benefit concert for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Speakers tomorrow include Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, the British ambassador.

The army trucks, preceded by police escort, came down State street and went across the Memorial bridge where they were escorted to the Westfield line by West Side police.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

TANGLEWOOD IS TAKEN OVER BY U. S. ARMY

250 Military Musicians Pitch Camp at Lake, Will Play Today

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 14—The United States Army took over Tanglewood in Stockbridge late this afternoon when 50 trucks, mobile kitchens and other vehicles rolled into the grounds on Stockbridge Bowl. and 250 military musicians piled out. The bandsmen are from the various regimental bands at Camp Edwards, and have arrived to take part in the concert tomorrow night for the benefit of the U. S. O. and the British relief.

Camp on Shore

The Army trucks rolled down the road toward the lake and camp was set up on the lakeshore, and the soldiers immediately went in for a swim in the water which has bathed scores of America's "Four Hundred." Meals were prepared by Army chefs.

Tonight the bandsmen were guests of the Berkshire Festival at the opening of the third series of concerts.

Tomorrow they will play in massed formation late in the afternoon and will combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Student Orchestra in the final concert of the day.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Members of 26th Division Bands Are No "Yoo Hoo B

225 Musicians Bivouaced At Mahkeenac

Hold Strenuous Rehearsal for Tonight's Concert

By a Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD.—No "Yoo Hoo Battalion," the 225 members of the nine regimental bands, 26th Division, rolled into their bivouac at Lake Mahkeenac late yesterday afternoon with nary a murmur although their small audience included Mrs. John Dufresne, wife of a Boston Symphony Orchestra musician, in shorts, and The Eagle's comely social and food editor, who was there to see what made the rolling kitchens the feature of the Army's new mess routine.

If one were near enough to the convoy trucks, he might have heard an occasional whistle (very soft and low) but otherwise the naive attitude could be attributed either to the Yankees' arch conservatism or perhaps Gen. Ben Lear's recent punishment in Tennessee. Nevertheless, to the man, even the musicians passed by their female audience with an appraising glance, which expressed approval.

No Pleasure Trip

Although the trip from one corner of the commonwealth to the other has been looked forward to for many weeks, the Camp Edwards musicians discovered this morning that all would not be pleasure. Awakened at 7 they had breakfast and then marched to the Tanglewood barn for a grueling rehearsal under Serge Koussevitzky in preparation for tonight's concert. They break camp tomorrow at 7, head back for Edwards, but en route most of them will be dropped off at their home towns. Many of the 104th Infantry (Western Massachusetts) band drove their own cars in from Springfield and vicinity.

Greeted by Dr. Koussevitzky and other officials at the Court Hill Square, Lenox, the troops were escorted to the bivouac by Philip R. Allen of Walpole, general chairman of today's gala benefit, and George W. Edman, clerk of the Festival board. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery, commanding the convoy of about 35 trucks, immediately laid out the camp and within a half hour pup tents were pitched while the kitchen crews of Service Companies, 104th and 182d Infantries, prepared the evening meal.

Capt. Hoffman was assisted by Divisional Warrant Officer Chester Whiting, a second lieutenant of the 181st Infantry as mess officer, and a captain and first lieutenant of the 101st Medical Regiment, in charge of the trucks, sanitation and health.

Although the 26th Division band's role is a minor one in the training program at Camp Edwards, warrant officers and veteran bandsmen know from experience in the last World War that in time of emergency the musicians' day will come. Maintained primarily for morale purposes, the Yankee Division band has accomplished that object and during the last war covered itself with glory as stretcher-bearers on the field of battle.

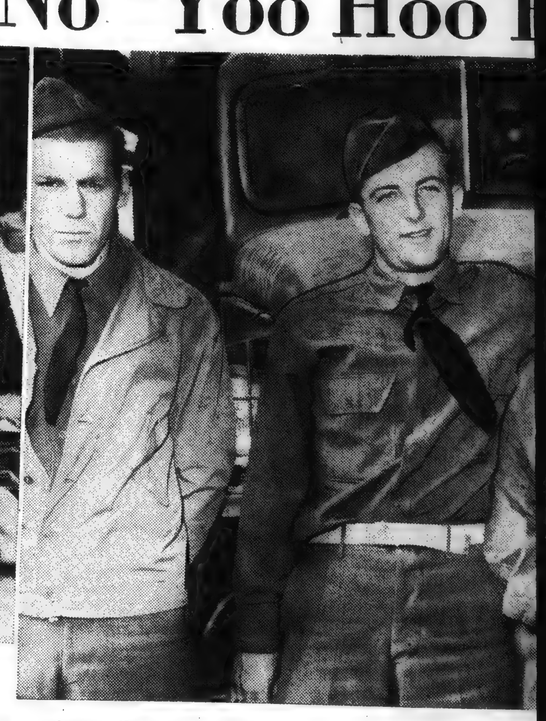
Lafrancis Tops Them All

No better testimony to the band's activities during World War I could be obtained than that of Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis, of Springfield, who today, as head of the 104th Infantry musicians, is dean of the Yankee division band leaders. Lafrancis joined the 104th Infantry band when it was sent overseas in 1917, has been with it ever since and took over its leadership in 1924.

Of the 104th's wartime experience, Lafrancis can recall when his group was within a mile of the front at Rupt-en-Woevre, in the St. Mihiel salient at Verdun, Meuse-Argonne offensive and the famous Battle of Apremont in which the Yankee Division distinguished itself so famously. In the latter encounter, 104th members received nine decorations and 20 citations. Three were wounded and one killed in that engagement and since the war, the bands have been ordered to stay away from the battle lines because of their value in morale restorative work.

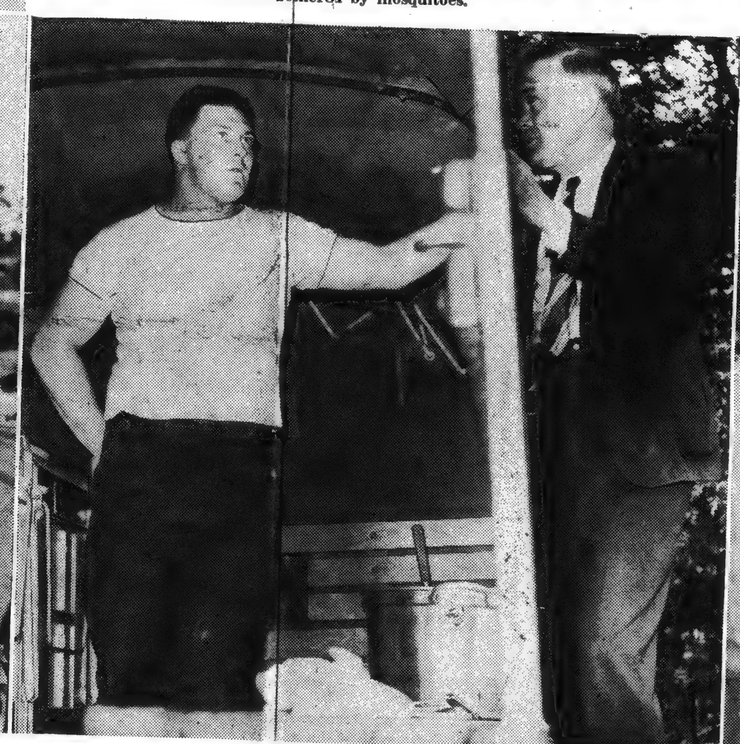
Today, the 26th Division bands are comparatively inactive. They hardly ever go out on field problems or marching maneuvers but near the end of the day, when the soldiers are returning to the post, the musicians take to the outskirts and escort the lines of marchers back to camp. Another chore is the morning "eye opener" when they march up and down the company streets to make sure the top sergeant hasn't overslept.

The long grass at the Lake Mahkeenac bivouac area may have been damp for pup-tent sleeping last night, but the soldiers made sure they wouldn't be bothered by mosquitoes.



Among the 101st Medical Regiment truck drivers, who co wealth, were these Pittsfield men: Henry Gallent, Stephe J. Gallego.

Veteran of the 26th Division's nine warrant officers is Cyril J. Lafrancis, leader of the 104th Infantry band of Western Massachusetts. He served with the outfit in France.



One of the most interested in the rolling kitchen setup was W. Hewitt Clifford of Lenox, who did kitchen work for the U.S. Army Ambulance Service with the French Army. Here he is looking into one of the two kitchen trucks, handled by Cook Edward J. Crosby of Pittsfield Company I.

Capt. Herman Hoffman, 180th Field Artillery, commanding the president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; chairman of the gala benefit, and Chester Whiting, divisional wa week end.

29
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

COLD WEATHER CUTS AUDIENCE AT STOCKBRIDGE

Opening Concert of Final

50 Trucks Carry Camp Edwards Musicians to Tanglewood 'Jam Session'

Fifty trucks bearing the massed bands of the 26th division passed through the city about noon today en route to a "jam session" tomorrow night at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox.

The men will bivouac on the festival grounds tonight when they will be guests of honor at the concert of the orchestra led by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tomorrow night, the 250 men will participate in the benefit concert for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Speakers tomorrow include Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, the British ambassador.

The army trucks, preceded by police escort, came down State street and went across the Memorial bridge where they were escorted to the Westfield line by West Side police.

29 This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

COLD WEATHER CUTS AUDIENCE AT STOCKBRIDGE

Opening Concert of Final

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Members of 26th Division Bands Are No "Yoo Hoo Battalion"

225 Musicians Bivouaced At Mahkeenac

Hold Strenuous Rehearsal for Tonight's Concert

By a Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD.—No "Yoo Hoo Battalion," the 225 members of the nine regimental bands, 26th Division, rolled into their bivouac at Lake Mahkeenac late yesterday afternoon with nary a murmur although their small audience included Mrs. John Dufresne, wife of a Boston Symphony Orchestra musician, in shorts, and The Eagle's comely social and food editor, who was there to see what made the rolling kitchens the feature of the Army's new mess routine.

If one were near enough to the convoy trucks, he might have heard an occasional whistle (very soft and low) but otherwise the naive attitude could be attributed either to the Yankees' arch conservatism or perhaps Gen. Ben Lear's recent punishment in Tennessee. Nevertheless, to the man, even the musicians passed by their female audience with an appraising glance, which expressed approval.

No Pleasure Trip

Although the trip from one corner of the commonwealth to the other has been looked forward to for many weeks, the Camp Edwards musicians discovered this morning that all would not be pleasure. Awakened at 7 they had breakfast and then marched to the Tanglewood barn for a grueling rehearsal under Serge Koussevitzky in preparation for tonight's concert. They break camp tomorrow at 7, head back for Edwards, but en route most of them will be dropped off at their home towns. Many of the 104th Infantry (Western Massachusetts) band drove their own cars in from Springfield and vicinity.

Greeted by Dr. Koussevitzky and other officials at the Court Hill square, Lenox, the troops were escorted to the bivouac by Philip L. Allen of Walpole, general chairman of today's gala benefit, and George W. Edman, clerk of the festival board. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery, commanding the convoy of about 35 trucks, immediately laid out the camp and within a half hour pup tents were pitched while the kitchen crews of Service Companies, 104th and 182d Infantries, prepared the evening meal.

Capt. Hoffman was assisted by Divisional Warrant Officer Chester Whiting, a second lieutenant of the 101st Infantry as mess officer, and a captain and first lieutenant of the 101st Medical Regiment, in charge of the trucks, sanitation and health.

Although the 26th Division band's role is a minor one in the training program at Camp Edwards, warrant officers and veteran bandsmen know from experience in the last World War that a time of emergency the musicians' day will come. Maintained primarily for morale purposes, the Yankee Division band has accomplished that object and during the war covered itself with glory as stretcher-bearers on the field of battle.

Lafrancis Tops Them All

No better testimony to the band's activities during World War I could be obtained than that of Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis, of Springfield, who today, as head of the 104th Infantry musicians, is one of the Yankee division band leaders. Lafrancis joined the 104th Infantry band when it was sent overseas in 1917, has been with it ever since and took over its leadership in 1924.

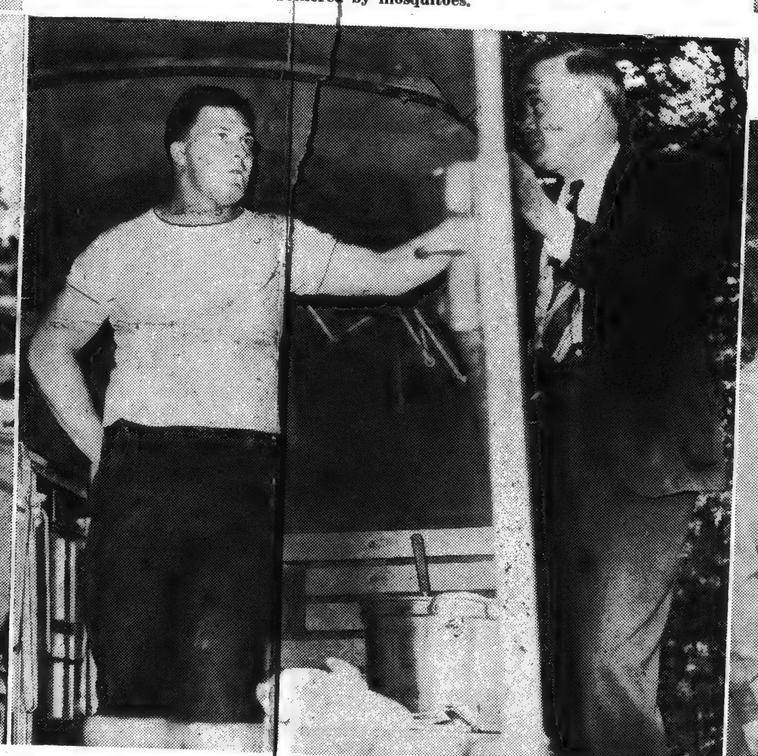
Of the 104th's wartime experience, Lafrancis can recall when his group was within a mile of the front at Rupt-en-Woevre, in the St. Mihiel salient at Verdun, Meuse-Argonne offensive and the famous battle of Apremont in which the Yankee Division distinguished itself so famously. In the latter encounter 104th members received nine decorations and 20 citations. Three were wounded and one killed in the engagement and since the war, bands have been ordered to stay away from the battle lines because of their value in morale and decorative work.

Today, the 26th Division bands are comparatively inactive. They rarely ever go out on field problems or marching maneuvers but near the end of the day, when the soldiers are returning to the post, the musicians take to the outskirts and escort the lines of marchers back to camp. Another chore is the morning "eye opener" when they march up and down the company streets to make sure the top sergeant hasn't overslept.

The long grass at the Lake Mahkeenac bivouac area may have been damp for pup-tent sleeping last night, but the soldiers made sure they wouldn't be bothered by mosquitoes.

Among the 101st Medical Regiment truck drivers, who convoyed the musicians across the commonwealth, were these Pittsfield men: Henry Gallent, Stephen Hospot, Edward M. Hall Jr., and Antonio J. Gallego.

Veteran of the 26th Division's nine warrant officers is Cyril J. Lafrancis, leader of the 104th Infantry band of Western Massachusetts, He served with the outfit in France.



One of the most interested in the rolling kitchen setup was W. Hewitt Clifford of Lenox, who did kitchen work for the U.S. Army Ambulance Service with the French Army. Here he is looking into one of the two kitchen trucks, handled by Cook Edward J. Crosby of Pittsfield Company I.

Capt. Herman Hoffman, 180th Field Artillery, commanding the convoy; Ernest D. Dane of Boston, president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Philip R. Allen of Walpole, general chairman of the gala benefit, and Chester Whiting, divisional warrant officer, discuss plans for the

50 Trucks Carry Camp Edwards Musicians to Tanglewood 'Jam Session'

Fifty trucks bearing the massed bands of the 26th division passed through the city about noon today en route to a "jam session" tomorrow night at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox.

The men will bivouac on the festival grounds tonight when they will be guests of honor at the concert of the orchestra led by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tomorrow night, the 250 men will participate in the benefit concert for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Speakers tomorrow include Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, the British ambassador.

The army trucks, preceded by police escort, came down State street and went across the Memorial bridge where they were escorted to the Westfield line by West Side police.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

TANGLEWOOD IS TAKEN OVER BY U. S. ARMY

250 Military Musicians Pitch Camp at Lake, Will Play Today

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 14—The United States Army took over Tanglewood in Stockbridge late this afternoon when 50 trucks, mobile kitchens and other vehicles rolled into the grounds on Stockbridge Bowl. and 250 military musicians piled out. The bandsmen are from the various regimental bands at Camp Edwards, and have arrived to take part in the concert tomorrow night for the benefit of the U. S. O. and the British relief.

Camp on Shore

The Army trucks rolled down the road toward the lake and camp was set up on the lakeshore, and the soldiers immediately went in for a swim in the water which has bathed scores of America's "Four Hundred." Meals were prepared by Army chefs.

Tonight the bandsmen were guests of the Berkshire Festival at the opening of the third series of concerts.

Tomorrow they will play in massed formation late in the afternoon and will combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the student orchestra in the final concert of the ...

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Lenox

e Woman ins $100 Prize

ENOX—Mrs. Raymond Norton, Park Street, Lee, won the draw prize at St. Ann's Church n party this week, it was anced today.

ohn McIntyre and Alfred Marno of Lenox both showed great uracy in guessing the number pennies in a glass jar at the n party, and divided the coins ween them. The count showed re were 2488 pennies. Both Mr. Intyre and Mr. Marchino essed 2482.

Awards for fancy articles were won by Mrs. Frederic Schenck, first prize; Rev. Eugene Arcney, second and third; Mrs. Edmond C. L. Dupont, fourth; and Rev. William Foran of Webster, formerly of Pittsfield, fifth.

—Rev. Joseph J. Johnson, Northampton, is visiting his mother, Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson, School Street.

—Charles Blake of Greenfield is visiting his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Blake, East Street.

—Miss Katherine Bain of Lenox left today for Amenia, N. Y., to take a position as governess for the children of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Tunney.

—Miss Louise Ludlow is visiting Mrs. H. G. Wilde at High Lawn Farm.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Daley, Boston, are visiting Mr. Daley's father, Patrick Daley, Stockbridge Street.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bryant M. Patten are on a vacation trip to Southwest Harbor, Me. Mr. Patten is employed by the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company.

—Mrs. B. I. Degnan of Fairview Avenue has just returned from Falmouth, Cape Cod.

—Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Lovelace of Boston are visiting Mr. and Mrs. William L. Bull of Walker Street.

For Sale or Rent—7 room house, Lenox Village, Sept. 1. Bldg. sites for sale. See Manley Fairfield after 6.—Adv. —18

Firemen's Ball Fri. P.M. Stockbridge Town Hall.—Adv. —16.

Carrots for Tank Drivers

CAMBERRA, Australia (UP) — Australian army authorities are experimenting with carrotin, a derivative of raw carrots, as an aid to night vision. It is believed that tank and mechanized unit drivers with sufficient carrotin in their diet will be able to drive at night without lights.

Halifax

Sir Ronald Ian, Ca minister at Was take over duties in Washington if bassador return

U. S. STATESMAN

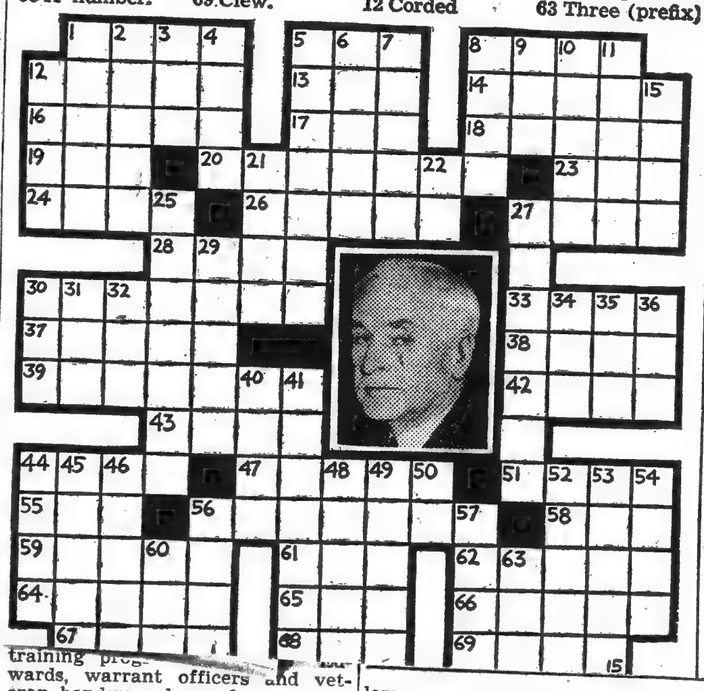
HORIZONTAL

1 Mohammedan judge.
5 Watering place.
8 Germinated barley.
12 Furious.
13 A fish.
14 Vigilant.
16 Rub out.
17 Relative (abbr.).
18 Step.
19 Fondle.
20 Landing field.
23 Look.
24 Stalk.
26 Social class.
27 Give in.
28 Help.
30 To rust.
33 Grade.
37 Make a speech
38 Opium.
39 Withdraws.
42 Therefore.
43 On the sea.
44 U. S. secretary of state.
47 Sovereign.
51 Part of ear.
55 A number.
56 One of two words with same meaning
58 In place of.
59 Not fresh.
61 Lincoln's son.
62 Essence of roses.
64 Shaft for turning things
65 Compass point
66 Lock of hair.
67 Limbs.
68 Color.
69 Clew.

Answer to Previous Puzzle

VERTICAL

1 Mark of omission.
2 Lessen.
3 Prefix.
4 Notion.
5 Notched.
6 Peers.
7 Assign.
8 Part of a ship.
9 Altitude (abbr.).
10 Rent.
11 Attempted.
12 Corded materials.
15 Large plant.
21 Cooled.
22 Musical note.
25 Warlike.
27 First name of 44 across.
29 Natives of Africa.
30 Corner (abbr.).
31 Raw metal.
32 Rodent.
34 Arrive (abbr.)
35 River boat.
36 Self.
40 Weird.
41 Stroll.
44 Hospital (abbr.).
45 Later.
46 Depart.
48 Open.
49 Finished.
50 Railway (abbr.)
52 Not rarely.
53 Brags.
54 Makes mistakes.
56 Puts down.
57 A school subject (abbr.).
60 Tree after cutting.
63 Three (prefix)



OUR BOARDING HOUSE . . . with

BOOTS AND HER BUDDIES

training prog... wards, warrant officers and veteran bandsmen know from experience in the last World War that in time of emergency the musicians' day will come. Maintained primarily for morale purposes, the Yankee Division band has accomplished that object and during the last war covered itself with glory as stretcher-bearers on the field of battle.

Lafrancis Tops Them All

No better testimony to the band's activities during World War I could be obtained than that of Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis, of Springfield, who today, as head of the 104th Infantry musicians, is dean of the Yankee division band leaders. Lafrancis joined the 104th Infantry band when it was sent overseas in 1917, has been with it ever since and took over its leadership in 1924.

Of the 104th's wartime experience, Lafrancis can recall when his group was within a mile of the front at Rupt-en-Woevre, in the St. Mihiel salient at Verdun, Meuse-Argonne offensive and the famous Battle of Apremont in which the Yankee Division distinguished itself so famously. In the latter encounter, 104th members received nine decorations and 20 citations. Three were wounded and one killed in that engagement and since the war, the bands have been ordered to stay away from the battle lines because of their value in morale restorative work.

Today, the 26th Division bands are comparatively inactive. They hardly ever go out on field problems or marching maneuvers but near the end of the day, when the soldiers are returning to the post, the musicians take to the outskirts and escort the lines of marchers back to camp. Another chore is the morning "eye opener" when they march up and down the company streets to make sure the top sergeant hasn't overslept.

29

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

COLD WEATHER CUTS AUDIENCE AT STOCKBRIDGE

Opening Concert of Final Berkshire Festival Series Is Heard by 7800

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14—The third and final series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival opened tonight with an audience estimated at 7800 in attendance. The cold weather apparently kept many of those who usually sit outside the shed from attending.

The program contained only two works, the Handel "Concerto for organ and orchestra in D Minor, No. 10" and the "Missa Solemnis" by Beethoven. The latter enlisted the services of the Berkshire festival chorus, made up, for the most part, of students at the summer school. The soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass.

The difficulties of Beethoven's choral writing have long been bemoaned by singers and conductors alike. It is too much to expect a festival chorus to provide a highly finished performance in the relatively short time given for rehearsals, but it must be noted that the present chorus was not only enthusiastic, but vocally opulent. Particularly fine were the sopranos. The technical difficulties were negotiated unusually successfully. There were some nice moments of shading and climaxes were quite compelling. The work of the Boston players was truly magnificent. Dr. Koussevitzky, who seems to have a particular fondness for the mass, lavished upon it all the magic of his direction.

The part of the soloists is so closely a part of the whole that one hears them to less advantage than in other works. Miss Dirman's light, pure, soprano, floated beautifully above the chorus and her musical sense was of the highest. Miss Glatz was rather mouthy, while Mr. Priebe's naturally fine tenor was not heard to advantage due to his peculiar method of emission. Julius Heuhn is happier in opera than in this type of singing, but he used his big voice with discretion and excellent taste.

The "Missa Solemnis" was designed by Beethoven for the ceremony of the enthronement of his patron and his pupil, the Archduke Rudolph as Archbishop of Olmutz. Beethoven began work upon it in 1818, but it was not completed until two years after the enthronement or in 1823. Beethoven witnessed the first performance of the work in 1824.

The "Missa Solemnis" has little in common with music of the Catholic Church, the Protestant Church, or, for that matter, any church. Beethoven permits no doubt that in the "Missa Solemnis" he was concerned with the musical expression of ideas and emotions which all men share in common and which no single faith can claim as its property. His inscription on the opening page of the work reads "From the heart—may it be received by the heart."

Saturday night the program will open with the London Symphony by Vaughan Williams and will include the Concerto for violin and orchestra by Samuel Barber, played by Ruth Po... th...

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 14 1941

26TH DIVISION BANDSMEN GO THROUGH HERE

50 Trucks Carry Camp Edwards Musicians to Tanglewood 'Jam Session'

Fifty trucks bearing the massed bands of the 26th division passed through the city about noon today en route to a "jam session" tomorrow night at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox.

The men will bivouac on the festival grounds tonight when they will be guests of honor at the concert of the orchestra led by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tomorrow night, the 250 men will participate in the benefit concert for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Speakers tomorrow include Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, the British ambassador.

The army trucks, preceded by police escort, came down State street and went across the Memorial bridge where they were escorted to the Westfield line by West Side police.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

TANGLEWOOD IS TAKEN OVER BY U. S. ARMY

250 Military Musicians Pitch Camp at Lake, Will Play Today

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 14—The United States Army took over Tanglewood in Stockbridge late this afternoon when 50 trucks, mobile kitchens and other vehicles rolled into the grounds on Stockbridge Bowl. and 250 military musicians piled out. The bandsmen are from the various regimental bands at Camp Edwards, and have arrived to take part in the concert tomorrow night for the benefit of the U. S. O. and the British relief.

Camp on Shore

The Army trucks rolled down the road toward the lake and camp was set up on the lakeshore, and the soldiers immediately went in for a swim in the water which has bathed scores of America's "Four Hundred." Meals were prepared by Army chefs.

Tonight the bandsmen were guests of the Berkshire Festival at the opening of the third series of concerts.

Tomorrow they will play in massed formation late in the afternoon and will combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the student orchestra in the final concert of the day.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1941

Lenox

e Woman ins $100 Prize

ENOX—Mrs. Raymond Norton, Park Street, Lee, won the draw prize at St. Ann's Church n party this week, it was anced today.

ohn McIntyre and Alfred Marno of Lenox both showed great uracy in guessing the number pennies in a glass jar at the n party, and divided the coins ween them. The count showed re were 2488 pennies. Both Mr. Intyre and Mr. Marchino essed 2482.

Awards for fancy articles were won by Mrs. Frederic Schenck, first prize; Rev. Eugene Arcney, second and third; Mrs. Edmond C. L. Dupont, fourth; and Rev. William Foran of Webster, formerly of Pittsfield, fifth.

—Rev. Joseph J. Johnson, Northampton, is visiting his mother, Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson, School Street.

—Charles Blake of Greenfield is visiting his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Blake, East Street.

—Miss Katherine Bain of Lenox left today for Amenia, N. Y., to take a position as governess for the children of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Tunney.

—Miss Louise Ludlow is visiting Mrs. H. G. Wilde at High Lawn Farm.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Daley, Boston, are visiting Mr. Daley's father, Patrick Daley, Stockbridge Street.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bryant M. Patten are on a vacation trip to Southwest Harbor, Me. Mr. Patten is employed by the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company.

—Mrs. B. I. Degnan of Fairview Avenue has just returned from Falmouth, Cape Cod.

—Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Lovelace of Boston are visiting Mr. and Mrs. William L. Bull of Walker Street.

For Sale or Rent—7 room house, Lenox Village, Sept. 1. Bldg. sites for sale. See Manley Fairfield after 6.—Adv. —18

Firemen's Ball Fri. PM. Stockbridge Town Hall.—Adv. —16.

Carrots for Tank Drivers

CAMBERRA, Australia (UP) — Australian army authorities are experimenting with carrotin, a derivative of raw carrots, as an aid to night vision. It is believed that tank and mechanized unit drivers with sufficient carrotin in their diet will be able to drive at night without lights.

Halifax

Sir Ronald Ian C... minister at Was... take over duties ... in Washington if ... bassador return...

U. S. STATESMAN

HORIZONTAL

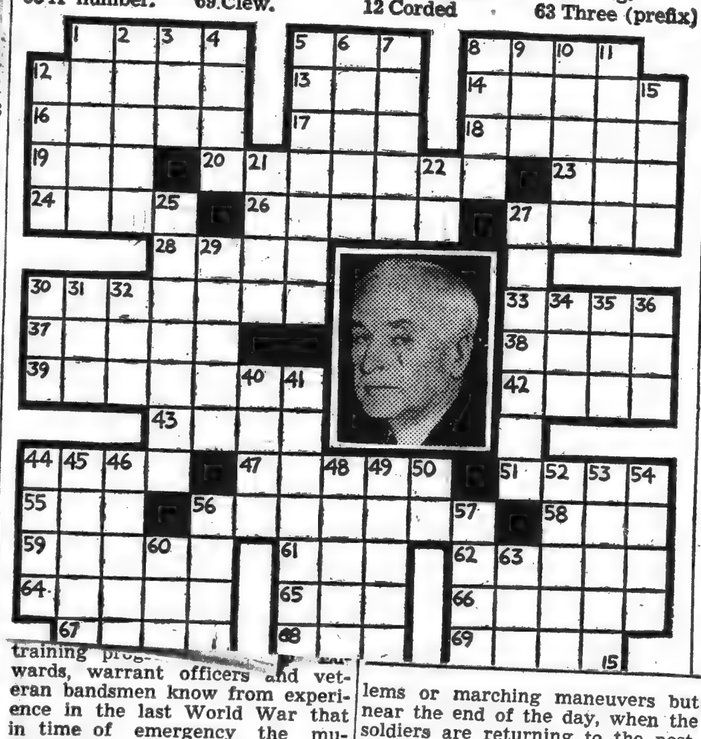
1 Mohammedan judge.
5 Watering place.
8 Germinated barley.
12 Furious.
13 A fish.
14 Vigilant.
16 Rub out.
17 Relative (abbr.).
18 Step.
19 Fondle.
20 Landing field.
23 Look.
24 Stalk.
26 Social class.
27 Give in.
28 Help.
30 To rust.
33 Grade.
37 Make a speech.
38 Opium.
39 Withdraws.
42 Therefore.
43 On the sea.
44 U. S. secretary of state.
47 Sovereign.
51 Part of ear.
55 A number.
56 One of two words with same meaning.
58 In place of.
59 Not fresh.
61 Lincoln's son.
62 Essence of roses.
64 Shaft for turning things.
65 Compass point.
66 Lock of hair.
67 Limbs.
68 Color.
69 Clew.

Answer to Previous Puzzle

B	R	A	T		C	R	U	M	B		R	A
R	U	T	H		R	U	R	A	L		E	V
O	D	O	R		A	M		P	A		T	E
S	E	P	A	L	S		S	P	A	D	E	D
		L	E	S	T		D	E	E	R
T	I	T	L	E		G	E	O	R	G	E
O	N	E		K		E		D	I	C	T
A	T			E		O	R		T	O	O
S	E	N		G		R	U	T	H		D	I
T	R	U	E	R		E		E	L		F	R
		G	O	R	E		S	A	R	A
G	E	O	R	G	E		C	A	N	D	O	R
L	A	V	E		F	A		D	O		C	O
U	S	E	S		E	R	R	O	R		E	V
T	E	N	S		R	E	I	G	N		R	E

VERTICAL

1 Mark of omission.
2 Lessen.
3 Prefix.
4 Notion.
5 Notched.
6 Peers.
7 Assign.
8 Part of a ship.
9 Altitude (abbr.).
10 Rent.
11 Attempted.
12 Corded materials.
15 Large plant.
21 Cooled.
22 Musical note.
25 Warlike.
27 First name of 44 across.
29 Natives of Africa.
30 Corner (abbr.).
31 Raw metal.
32 Rodent.
34 Arrive (abbr.).
35 River boat.
36 Self.
40 Weird.
41 Stroll.
44 Hospital (abbr.).
45 Later.
46 Depart.
48 Open.
49 Finished.
50 Railway (abbr.).
52 Not rarely.
53 Brags.
54 Makes mistakes.
56 Puts down.
57 A school subject (abbr.).
60 Tree after cutting.
63 Three (prefix).



OUR BOARDING HOUSE . . . with

BOOTS AND HER BUDDIES

training prog... wards, warrant officers and veteran bandsmen know from experience in the last World War that in time of emergency the musicians' day will come. Maintained primarily for morale purposes, the Yankee Division band has accomplished that object and during the last war covered itself with glory as stretcher-bearers on the field of battle.

Lafrancis Tops Them All

No better testimony to the band's activities during World War I could be obtained than that of Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis, of Springfield, who today, as head of the 104th Infantry musicians, is dean of the Yankee division band leaders. Lafrancis joined the 104th Infantry band when it was sent overseas in 1917, has been with it ever since and took over its leadership in 1924.

Of the 104th's wartime experience, Lafrancis can recall when his group was within a mile of the front at Rupt-en-Woevre, in the St. Mihiel salient at Verdun, Meuse-Argonne offensive and the famous Battle of Apremont in which the Yankee Division distinguished itself so famously. In the latter encounter, 104th members received nine decorations and 20 citations. Three were wounded and one killed in that engagement and since the war, the bands have been ordered to stay away from the battle lines because of their value in morale restorative work.

Today, the 26th Division bands are comparatively inactive. They hardly ever go out on field problems or marching maneuvers but near the end of the day, when the soldiers are returning to the post, the musicians take to the outskirts and escort the lines of marchers back to camp. Another chore is the morning "eye opener" when they march up and down the company streets to make sure the top sergeant hasn't overslept.

29
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1941

COLD WEATHER CUTS AUDIENCE AT STOCKBRIDGE

Opening Concert of Final Berkshire Festival Series Is Heard by 7800

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14—The third and final series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival opened tonight with an audience estimated at 7800 in attendance. The cold weather apparently kept many of those who usually sit outside the shed from attending.

The program contained only two works, the Handel "Concerto for organ and orchestra in D Minor, No. 10" and the "Missa Solemnis" by Beethoven. The latter enlisted the services of the Berkshire festival chorus, made up, for the most part, of students at the summer school. The soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass.

The difficulties of Beethoven's choral writing have long been bemoaned by singers and conductors alike. It is too much to expect a festival chorus to provide a highly finished performance in the relatively short time given for rehearsals, but it must be noted that the present chorus was not only enthusiastic, but vocally opulent. Particularly fine were the sopranos. The technical difficulties were negotiated unusually successfully. There were some nice moments of shading and climaxes were quite compelling. The work of the Boston players was truly magnificent. Dr. Koussevitzky, who seems to have a particular fondness for the mass, lavished upon it all the magic of his direction.

The part of the soloists is so closely a part of the whole that one hears them to less advantage than in other works. Miss Dirman's light, pure, soprano, floated beautifully above the chorus and her musical sense was of the highest. Miss Glatz was rather mouthy, while Mr. Priebe's naturally fine tenor was not heard to advantage due to his peculiar method of emission. Julius Heuhn is happier in opera than in this type of singing, but he used his big voice with discretion and excellent taste.

The "Missa Solemnis" was designed by Beethoven for the ceremony of the enthronement of his patron and his pupil, the Archduke Rudolph as Archbishop of Olmutz. Beethoven began work upon it in 1818, but it was not completed until two years after the enthronement or in 1823. Beethoven witnessed the first performance of the work in 1824.

The "Missa Solemnis" has little in common with music of the Catholic Church, the Protestant Church, or, for that matter, any church. Beethoven permits no doubt that in the "Missa Solemnis" he was concerned with the musical expression of ideas and emotions which all men share in common and which no single faith can claim as its property. His inscription on the opening page of the work reads "From the heart—may it be received by the heart."

Saturday night the program will open with the London Symphony by Vaughan Williams and will include the Concerto for violin and orchestra by Samuel Barber, played by Ruth Posselt; the prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

...DIVISION BANDSMEN GO THROUGH HERE

50 Trucks Carry Camp Edwards Musicians to Tanglewood 'Jam Session'

Fifty trucks bearing the massed bands of the 26th division passed through the city about noon today en route to a "jam session" tomorrow night at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox.

The men will bivouac on the festival grounds tonight when they will be guests of honor at the concert of the orchestra led by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Tomorrow night, the 250 men will participate in the benefit concert for the U. S. O. and British war relief. Speakers tomorrow include Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, the British ambassador.

The army trucks, preceded by police escort, came down State street and went across the Memorial bridge where they were escorted to the Westfield line by West Side police.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 15 1941

30

Missa Solemnis Sung At Berkshire Concert

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Each season witnesses the performance of at least one large choral work at Tanglewood. Previously have been heard Bach's B minor Mass, the Choral Symphony and operatic excerpts. Last night Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the aid of the Berkshire Festival Chorus, which has been trained during the summer by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, gave Beethoven's Missa Solemnis.

There may be those who say that Dr. Koussevitzky is not a great choral leader but I cannot agree with them. True, he handles a chorus as no one else does, but then so did Beethoven when he wrote for it.

Instrumental Perspective

To this conductor, human voices are no different from string, reed and brass instruments. The attack of his human basses must be in texture precisely like that of his string basses; more than once the sopranos were called upon for a sustained piercing tone like that which Richard Burgin sets for the first violins; even the soloists were made to adjust themselves to a consistently orchestral fabric. During one quartet they were quite covered by the instrumental dynamics.

Now that was just about the perspective of Beethoven in creating this imposing work. He was utterly uncompromising in his demands upon the human voice, no less so in the Missa Solemnis than in the Ninth Symphony. Parts of it are scarcely singable. But he knew precisely what he wanted to say and the great effects as well as the persuasions are there.

This constitutes the success of Koussevitzky. He was pitiless in his demands but all of his ideas were securely founded and almost without exception the objectives were realized.

Great masses of tone were built up in the Gloria and the Credo, producing a compelling brilliance and grandeur. Details, such as a quick diminishing and resurgence on a single tone, another conductor would hardly dare expect to get from a whole chorus but this and other designs were splendidly achieved.

Koussevitzky's interpretation had solemnity and a votive if not liturgical feeling. Although there were some very telling technical achievements, nothing in the performance savored of virtuosity in the shallower sense. The program requested that applause be withheld but there were spontaneous ovations for leader, soloists and all participants.

Chorus and Soloists

With a strongly built up soprano section, the balance was just the reverse of the situation when the Mozart Requiem was performed in the first series. The male voices easily dominated the picture on that occasion. Last night the sopranos were distinguished by incisiveness and power. Pitch was well maintained; if it erred it was on the sharp side.

The soloists were well matched and in general gave commendable accounts of their parts. Rose Dirman, soprano, and John Priebe, tenor, seized their first tones in the Kyrie with assurance and strength. Hertha Glaz took the contralto part creditably and Julius Huehn, bass, was heard to advantage. The soloists had individual merits rather than an integrated working together as a quartet.

The opening number was Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in D minor with E. Power Biggs at the console. It was a clean, straight-forward performance. The organ tones had definition but lacked body for while the acoustical properties of the Tanglewood shed are good, it remains substantially an open air performance.

Other Programs

This afternoon and evening is being held the gala benefit for USO and British Relief. Besides other speakers and many musical attractions, Mrs. Roosevelt and Viscount Halifax will be heard.

The Saturday night program features Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony," preludes to Parsifal and Tannhauser and Ruth Posselt will play Samuel Barber's Violin Concerto.

The 1941 Tanglewood season closes Sunday afternoon at 3:30 with the following program: Sibelius' Symphony No. 7; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 16 1941

Mrs. Roosevelt at Tanglewood

Don Jose Browning Photo

Seated on the platform during the manifestation at the benefit performance at Tanglewood last night, in upper photo are: Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Koussevitzky and James P. Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College, who presided. Lower: Many who came for the festivities did so with an idea of being comfortable—inside as well as outside. It seemed like one huge picnic. Everyone had food. This scene is typical with one exception . . . it does not show the mud or the countless persons hurrying through the rain trying to balance cups of coffee atop box lunches. This party brought chicken!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
AUG 16 1941

Tanglewood Benefit Receipts $15,000

TANGLEWOOD — A crowd officially estimated at 7,800 disregarded recurrent downpours yesterday afternoon and evening to attend the gala benefit at Tanglewood for the United Service organizations and the British War Relief fund.

Arranged under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra, the benefit was unofficially figured to have brought in at least $15,000.

Bringing together one of the largest groups of musicians ever to play at Tanglewood — the Boston Symphony orchestra and the 250-piece massed bands of the 26th division—the benefit concert provided almost every sort of musical fare.

Principal guest was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, while Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the corporation of Harvard college and an officer of the Boston Symphony, read a prepared address by Lord Halifax, Great Britain's ambassador to the United States, who was unable to attend.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 16 1941

FESTIVAL SEASON CLOSES TOMORROW

Advance Ticket Sales Are Favorable

CONCERT TONIGHT

Ruth Posselt, Violinist, Will Join Koussevitzky and Orchestra in Next to Last Program.

Advance ticket sales indicate that the final concerts of the Berkshire symphonic festival tonight and tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood in Lenox will be well patronized; and, if the weather is fair, it is anticipated that the new attendance record established last week-end may be equalled or surpassed.

As the feature of tonight's concert at 8:30 o'clock, Ruth Posselt, violinist, will join Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony orchestra in presenting Barber's Violin Concerto. The program will open with the "London" Symphony of Vaughan Williams. Following the intermission, the orchestra will play Wagner's Prelude and Good Friday Spell from "Parisfal", and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

As the closing number of the festival, tomorrow afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky has selected Tchaikovsky's stirring Fifth Symphony. Preceding this will be the Symphony No. 7 of Sibelius, and the "Lieutenant Kije Suite" of Prokofieff. The Sunday concert will start at 3:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 15 1941

BEETHOVEN MASS GIVEN AT FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky Directs Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Chorus in Missa Solemnis

HANDEL CONCERTO PLAYED

Members of Camp Edwards Army Bands Are Guests at Opening of Third Week

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Serge Koussevitzky is making it a policy to give at least one major work with chorus and soloists at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival each year. Last year it was Bach's B minor Mass. This season fell on Beethoven's lofty and impassioned Missa Solemnis. The great score dominated tonight's program as the third week of the Eighth Annual Berkshire Festival began at Tanglewood.

Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor, with E. Power Biggs as organist, served as a curtain raiser. In the mass the soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, baritone. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, comprising students of the Berkshire music center, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, was the vocal ensemble. The orchestra, of course, was the Boston Symphony.

The early intimations of Fall, which had given the Berkshires near frost early this morning, had softened into mild weather by sundown, and the usual trek of automobiles headed for Tanglewood. The audience filled the music shed and spilled over onto the lawn. There were more than 7,800 on hand and they followed the enfolding of the Missa Solemnis with intenseness and solemnity, heeding the program's request not to applaud between sections.

Army Men Are Guests

In the audience was a contingent of more than 320 men of the United States Army's Twenty-sixth Division from Camp Edwards on the Cape. They arrived in a long motorized column late this afternoon, bringing their own mobile kitchens, and pitched camp at the edge of Stockbridge Bowl, the lake toward which the festival grounds slope.

Two hundred and fifty of these United States Army men were members of Camp Edwards bands, who will play at tomorrow's gala benefit for the USO and the British War Relief. The tasks of the other soldiers included cooking, driving and the like. They were all the guests of the festival at tonight's concert.

The visit of the Army bandsmen is a return call on Serge Koussevitzky who went to Camp Edwards to conduct the nine bands there last May. The Camp Edwards bands are led by Bandmaster Chester Whiting and the motorcade was in command of Captain Herman A. Hoffman.

At intermission time tonight a wire arrived from Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, to Jerome D. Greene, member of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, saying that he could not leave Washington to appear as principal speaker here tomorrow at the manifestation of "unity in diversity—under democracy." "Pressing reasons of state" will keep the Ambassador in Washington, but he is forwarding a copy of his planned speech, which will be read to the audience. Lord Halifax expressed the gratitude of the people of Great Britain.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will motor from Hyde Park to address the gathering. Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, will also be a speaker, and the chairman will be Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College.

Rendition of Handel Concerto

The Handel concerto, graceful, full blooded and joyous in its stride, was a happy introduction to the more solemn part of the program. And it was played with freshness and lift.

The Missa Solemnis is no small undertaking, particularly when one remembers that the Berkshire Festival Chorus has been working together only since the beginning of the music center term less than six weeks ago. Mr. Ross and Mr. Woodworth did a yeoman job of preparing the young singers, and Mr. Koussevitzky fused chorus, soloists and orchestra with commanding resourcefulness.

The singing of the chorus was astonishingly fine, under the circumstances; it was a vivid endorsement of the high caliber of the center's student body. The soloists traversed their share with security and confidence. But the Missa Solemnis derives its most searching and dramatic moments from the orchestra, for here Beethoven wrote with the hand of an incomparable master, and here Mr. Koussevitzky and his players brought the vitalizing imagination that a work of this nature must have to realize its full stature.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 16 1941

Berkshire Festival Sets Nation's Tempo

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—"Music has two ills, the one mortal, the other wasting; the mortal is ever allied with the instant which follows that of the music's utterance, the wasting lies in its repetition, making it seem contemptible and mean."

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival gives the lie to Leonardo da Vinci's indictment of music. The inspiration of magnificent performances of symphonic works amid the beautiful surroundings of the Berkshires can scarcely be ephemeral, either to the musically untutored ear or to the musically indifferent soul.

Evanescent though music's sounds may be, these festivals have a lasting and far-reaching influence, in that they have set a standard for the entire country, and, through the Music Center, have established a source of creative inspiration for the talented young musicians who are to be the musical leaders of tomorrow.

Critical Basins Needed

And whatever of "wasting" there may seem to be in the repetition of the tried and true works from the symphonic repertoire, the importance to the public of hearing and re-hearing thoughtfully-wrought interpretations cannot be overemphasized. If this nation is fully to take her place as the music center of the world, her public must attain a high degree of understanding of music and a solid basis for critical judgment.

Certainly there can be little doubt that the country is on its way to a substantial musical maturity as one observes the hundreds of people, old and young, professional musicians and the lay public, representative of every state in the Union, flocking to these festival concerts. This eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all previous attendance records and already there are plans afoot to broaden the scope of the festival for next season.

Those Zealous Brasses

After hearing the concerts of the first two series of 1941 and the first concert of the third series, this listener remains more than ever impressed with the remarkable qualities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—its precision, the sheen of the strings, the warm, full boldness of the brasses, and the exquisite purity of the woodwinds. And—over it all—that patina of tonal blending that has grown through the years and under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky into a mellowness that cannot be surpassed by any other orchestral organization of today.

There have been moments during the concerts so far when the brasses, zealously responding to Dr. Koussevitzky's demands, assailed the ear with a strained harshness, when occasional dampness played havoc with the sensitive strings, and when certain interpretations lacked impact, but, by and large, one could not ask for more satisfying performances.

Debussy and Beethoven

Superlative readings of Debussy's "La Mer" and the Beethoven Fifth and Third Symphonies; of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and Beethoven's Third Leonore Overture; of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony and Mozart's E flat Symphony (K. 543) have highlighted the first six concerts of the festival.

Of the three Brahms works offered—the First and Fourth Symphonies and the B flat Concerto—the Concerto fared by far the best. This was chiefly by virtue of Pianist Leonard Shure's sensitive interpretation. The Concerto rather made up for the opening work on that particular program—Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," which was played neatly and nicely but without that final imaginative spark to make the performance alive. Not that the delicious Mozart measures suffered at all, they merely didn't register their full beauty.

A Rare Musical Experience

Not up to Boston Symphony standards were the Wagner Preludes to Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger, while Mozart's G minor Symphony received a pleasant if unimportant performance.

Dr. Howard Hanson's Romantic Symphony received a devoted reading from orchestra and conductor but it still seems very self-conscious music. Hindemith's 'Cello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist was interesting, although the solo instrument's part lay too much in the upper register to be consistently effective.

The work of the Berkshire Musical Association chorus in Villa-Lobos' "Choros No. 10," and in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem was creditable if not distinguished.

In the American musical scene the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is unique and of vital import. For the individual music-lover it provides one of the rarest and most worth while of musical experiences.

This Clipping From
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
NEWS
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
Aug 16, 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 16 1941

Kousevitzky Led Army Bandsmen

Stockbridge, Aug. 16—Serge Koussevitzy last night led American army bandsmen in blood-tingling martial music opening a five-hour program to help British war relief and the United Service Organizations.

His face flushed with emotion, the famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who recently became an American citizen, directed 250 soldier musicians from Camp Edwards in Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Al all-afternoon rain failed to dim the enthusiasm of the crowd which sloshed over the lawns of picturesque Tanglewood and cheered long and loud.

Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, was unable to attend because of pressure of duties in Washington, but in a prepared speech read for him he asserted:

"Here, I would think, is an example and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire us all who believe in those principles just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the president and the prime minister."

Present was Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the president, who said: "I would say to Lord Halifax, if he were here, how happy I am that the two great nations have joined together to build a better world for the future, in which all people will freely determine their own governments and within their own borders the well being of all their citizens."

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 16 1941
THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 16 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1941

STOCKBRIDGE CONCERT HEARS FREEDOM PLEA

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — A Russian-born conductor interrupted American army bandsmen long enough last night to tell an audience of approximately 8,000 persons that the open hand of America held "the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening fist of despotism."

Flushed with emotion, Serge Koussevitzky, recently admitted to American citizenship, directed 250 soldier-musicians from Camp Edwards in Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever" before halting to say:

"We are witnessing, and in some degree we participate in, the act of stretching a hand of hope and help across the acean—the open hand of America holding the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening first of despotism and destruction."

Koussevitzky directed the martial music which opened a five-hour program in the spacious Tanglewood shed to aid British relief and the United Service Organizations.

Unable to attend because of pressure of duties in Washington, Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, in a prepared speech read for him, asserted:

"Here, I would think, is an example, and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire us all who believe in those principles just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the President and the Prime Minister.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who was in the audience, said she would like to say to the ambassador that she was happy that "two great nations have joined together to build a better world for the future."

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 16 1941

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 16 1941
This Clipping From
MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
AUG 16 1941

8,000 MUSIC LOVERS AT STOCKBRIDGE EVENT

Rain Fails to Dampen Ardor of Assembly at Tanglewood.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—(UP)—A steady rain failed to dampen the ardor of 8,000 music-lovers who crowded the lawns of lovely Tanglewood last night and cheered Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt who keynoted a five-hour patriotic program to help British war relief and the United Service Organizations.

A unit of 250 soldier-musicians from Camp Edwards returned the compliment of Conductor Koussevitzky's earlier visit to camp, and under his direction rendered two Sousa marches. Later 60 picked soldiers joined with a mixed group of Boston Symphony artists and students from the Berkshire music center in presenting Tchaikovsky's Overture: 1812.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 16 1941

32

7800 Attend Tanglewood For U. S. O., British Relief

Tanglewood, Aug. 16—A crowd officially estimated at 7800 disregarded recurrent downpours yesterday and last night to attend the gala benefit at Tanglewood for the United Service organizations and the British War Relief fund.

Arranged under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra, the benefit was unofficially figured to have brought in at least $15,000. From sale of boxes alone $5000 was realized.

Bringing together one of the largest groups of musicians ever to play at Tanglewood — the Boston Symphony orchestra and the 250-piece massed bands of the 26th division—the benefit concert provided almost every sort of musical fare.

Mrs Roosevelt Main Guest

Principal guest was Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt, while Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the corporation of Harvard college and an officer of the Boston symphony, read a prepared address by Lord Halifax, Great Britain's embassador to the United States, who was unable to attend because of urgent matters requiring his attention at Washington.

Mrs Roosevelt expressed pleasure at the recent action joining more closely the United States and Great Britain, and the address of Lord Halifax urged that "those peoples who are still free and who are determined to maintain their freedom must, by their devotion and self-sacrifice, match those same qualities which Hitler has perverted to such evil ends in Germany."

Mrs Roosevelt paid tribute "to all those who have made this festival possible" with particular and specific mention of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Mrs Roosevelt emphasized the importance of music in unifying people, and, praising the increasing success of the Berkshire festival, expressed hope "the appreciation people have shown will continue."

Cites Government Program

"I feel the development in a people of an appreciation of the arts is a sign that the people are coming of age," Mrs Roosevelt said. The government's program has brought music, the graphic arts and other cultural interests nearer to the people, she continued.

Noting that last year contributions were confined primarily to British War Relief work, Mrs Roosevelt asserted that this year we are preparing not only for our own defense but also for that of all other democracies of the world. We should think today of the things which draw us together, the President's wife continued, and try to wipe from our consciousness all those things which keep us apart.

"I would say to Lord Halifax, if he were here," Mrs Roosevelt said, "how happy I am that the two great English-speaking nations have joined together." Together the United States and England will build a better world for the future, she continued, in which all people will freely determine how they wish to be governed, and will be enabled to increase the well-being of all within their borders.

Military Bands Open Concert

The benefit opened officially at 5.30 with a concert by the massed bands of the 26th division. While some 5000 gathered in and around the huge music shed, hundreds of others—and more without protection against the rain than with—strolled about the grounds as showers fell.

Led by Chester Earl Whiting, chief bandmaster, the massed organizations representing bands of nine regiments opened their program with the "Washington Greys" march, followed by the "William Tell Overture." Despite the huge size of the band, it was well balanced and its work was marked by the acme of precision.

Full capabilities of the band, however, were not realized until Dr Serge Koussevitzky took over to conduct "Semper Fidelis" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

The brief band concert was followed by simultaneous performances by various groups. In the music shed, Walter Hendl conducted the orchestra.

In the new opera house, the opera department presented scenes from Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel," Verdi's "Otello" and "Falstaff," and Lortzing's "Czar and Carpenter." In the chamber music hall, the Galindo sextet was given its premiere.

The "manifestation" program opened with "Alleluia" especially composed for the Berkshire Music center by Randall Thompson and sung by the festival chorus under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth.

Introduces Dr Baxter

Dr Koussevitzky introduced Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, in an address in which he asserted that "the undaunted spirit of a people is proof of their faith in the justice of their cause. The English nation holds that faith," he continued. "In standing by and voicing our belief in England, we are helping our own nation. For the victory of freedom is also the victory of truth."

As chairman, Dr Baxter introduced Mrs Roosevelt and, after her remarks, Dr Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter academy, whose speech was devoted mostly to personal tribute to Dr Koussevitzky, and to the Berkshire Music festival.

Lord Halifax's prepared address, read by Mr Greene, recalled that England, too, has its music festivals, although they have been "put by" for the past two years. He mentioned such collectors of music and composers as Cecil Sharp, Orlando Gibbons and Thomas Weelkes, the latter two represented on tonight's program by madrigals, as evidence that England is not a "land without music," and noted that "the gracious presence of Mrs Roosevelt confirms the significance of what you have done and of all that this festival stands for in the musical and artistic life of New England . . ."

Speaking of the joint benefit for U. S. O. and British relief, the address continued, "It will be an inspiring thought to the people in Britain that you should have coupled together these two great organizations and it is yet one more testimony of the way in which you are helping Great Britain in her present challenge to the forces of evil."

Picnic Suppers Served

The speaking program was followed by intermission, during which picnic suppers were served, with thousands wandering about the grounds munching sandwiches which quickly became soggy and drinking coffee which was cooled and diluted by rain.

The evening was devoted to a gala concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, during which Albert Spalding presented Mendelssohn's Concerto for violin and orchestra, and the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestra and the bands of the 26th division presented a rousing performance of Tschaikowsky's 1812 overture.

Final event was drawing of prizes at which Elsa Maxwell officiated.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 17 1941

The Berkshires Crowded for Musical Fete

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

The Berkshire hills are crowded with visitors for the final series of concerts in the Tanglewood Music festival. The last of them will be given tomorrow afternoon by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The climax of the festivities was reached last night with a gala program at which the principal speakers were Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Lord Halifax. Among the box holders were Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter of Chicago, who motored over from Beverly and are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at Court Hill, Pittsfield. Among others having boxes were Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. John B. Casserly [Cecilia Cudahy], Mrs. John S. Newberry of Grosse Pointe, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O. Eaton of Cleveland, O., Dr. James Phinney Baxter III.' president of Williams college and Mrs. Baxter, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, who have as guests at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, Mrs. Edward Strong Avery of New York and Miss Clara A. Harmer of Doylestown, Pa.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 16 1941

8,000 Attend Tanglewood Music Benefit

Koussevitzky Leads Military Band; First Lady Speaks

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16—With Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as one of the speakers, the second annual large-scale benefit event to be held at Tanglewood during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here ran a successful course yesterday from 5:30 p. m. until nearly midnight.

This was in spite of the weather which, after an unfulfilled hint of clearing up, settled down to a fairly continuous rain. Nevertheless, 7,000 were on hand when the bands of the 26th Division began their part of the program, and another thousand had braved the downpour by the time the 45 minutes of speeches, known as the Manifestation, began at 7 p. m.

Last year's benefit was for the British War Relief Society, which will share the proceeds of last night's event with the United Service Organizations.

Halifax Not Present

Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, was to have been a fellow speaker with Mrs. Roosevelt on the platform in the Tanglewood Music Shed, but owing to pressing reasons of state was unable to leave Washington. His speech was read by one of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Trustees.

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, was a speaker, and Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, President of Williams College, presided. He was introduced by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, who earlier in the program had conducted the military musicians from Camp Edwards in two Sousa marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Anglo-American cooperation towards bringing about a better world was an important theme in all the speeches. Another was the value of music and other arts in helping to break down barriers between peoples and to bring about better mutual understanding.

Mrs. Roosevelt Speaks

Mrs. Roosevelt congratulated Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, President of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and her collaborators in the foundation and development of the institution, and expressed the hope that it will continue to draw ever-growing audiences.

The 26th Division band, which held a vigorous rehearsal under Dr. Koussevitzky in the morning, had intended to play on the lawn by the flagpole, but the rain sent it to the southeastern border of the music shed.

Chester E. Whiting, its regular leader, conducted the first two numbers, "The Washington Greys March" and Rossini's "William Tell" overture, then Dr. Koussevitzky took charge and, particularly in "The Stars and Stripes Forever," the best known of all American marches, led a superb, rousing performance, which should remain long in its hearers' memory.

Informal Supper

After the speeches, the rain conveniently slackened to a sprinkle to allow the throng of patrons to make their way from the music shed to the tents, where an informal supper was served. At 9 o'clock, they returned to the shed or the principal concert of the day.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony began its program with the first movement of Beethoven's fifth symphony, here announced as the "V Symphony," since its first four notes have provided the theme for the V-for-Victory campaign.

Stanley Chapple conducted the Mars and Venus sections from Gustav Holst's "The Planets." Albert Spaulding was the soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Hugh Ross conducted the festival chorus in two Elizabethan madrigals, "The Silver Swan" and "Long Live Fair Oriana," and the concert closed triumphantly with Tschaikowsky's 1812 overture, played by the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Center Orchestras and the bandsmen from Camp Edwards under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 16 1941

First Lady Speaker At Stockbridge

Festival Called Symbol of of Unity By Mrs. Roosevelt; Message From Halifax Read

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15.—(Special.)—"I have said publicly more than once since my arrival here that I am convinced that those peoples who are still free and who are determined to maintain their freedom, must, by their devotion and self-sacrifice match those same qualities which Hitler has perverted to such evil ends in Germany," Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, said through a representative here tonight.

The address of Viscount Halifax, who himself was detained in Washington by the critical state of international affairs, was read on the same program on which Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt also was heard, at the second annual gala, sponsored by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British war relief.

Symbol of Unity.

Mrs. Roosevelt viewed the festival closing this week end as "a symbol of unity which has drawn us all closer together." After paying tribute to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, she said in part:

"Last year this gala was held for British war relief only. This year it is being held for the United Service Organizations also. I think that the festival has drawn us all closer together, and that it is a happy thing that we are being joined through art.

"I think of this festival as a symbol of unity, bringing together people from all over the United States, and wiping out of their consciousness all those things which keep the world from mutual understanding.

"How happy it is that the two great English speaking nations should not only be united in their war views, but in their aim to pull a better world from out of this chaos."

Dr. James Phineas Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College, presided, introduced the speakers and in brief remarks of his own, recalled a speech by Admiral Mahan who in the turn of the century already foresaw Britain and the United States sharing a mutual destiny on the seas, and eventually coming to defend it jointly.

Fight For Freedom.

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy said in part:

"This is our fight for freedom. It is no foreign war, no war fought on behalf of a foreign nation. It is our fight, to win or lose, and the longer we wait, the harder the battle will be."

The applause meted out to Dr. Perry for his militant statement was the most enthusiastic given any speaker and together with widespread is politely sotto voce comment after the "manifestation," indicated that the vast and audience of over 8000 people had come to huzza something more stirring than the strains to Art which made up 90 per cent of the speeches.

Last year a similar gala had heard many such militant, war-like paragraphs, and the applause of the audience had rolled out to the surrounding hills. Tonight, despite the great happenings which have transpired in the last 12 months, and the acutely critical state of affairs at the moment, the speakers carefully skirted the matter of war, making only oblique references to it while speaking of music.

The "manifestation," which was held in the big music shed, was described on the program as follows:

"The speakers, in giving their support of their present to the objects of the benefit—war relief and the health, comfort and morale of the armed forces and industrial workers of the United States,—will express the thoughts and feelings engendered by the day's assemblage, a tribute to music and other creative arts, a manifestation of unity in diversity under freedom, the way of life which we are determined to defend."

Tribute to Music.

The tribute to music was copious, and Dr. Koussevitzky glowed red with modesty at the praise heaped upon him from all speechmaking quarters. Dr. Koussevitzky himself had said in his broken, soft-spoken English that "in helping Britain we are but helping our own nation." He had also conducted the combined bandsmen of the 26th Division, 250 of them, in a program of familiar marches, after which one bandsman phoned his girl: "I have just had the greatest thrill of my life, playing under Dr. Koussevitzky when he conducted 'The Stars and Stripes' I could feel my hair stand up. It was terrific."

The audience thought so too, standing on chairs in the shed to see the bandsmen play, shouting and cheering each number.

But although Lord Halifax's speech made passing and undeveloped reference to "those principles just expressed by the President and the prime minister," he had nothing else to utter on collaboration between the two nations, nor any statement on the state of British affairs. The greatness of art and its spiritual part in a nation were the entire substance of his and Mrs. Roosevelt's talks.

Neither were the topics of the USO or British war relief more than mentioned academically in passing.

The manifestation, though the nub and heart of the gala, was but one of the events on a long program, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the music center sponsored here by the orchestra and the festival.

Rain Falls Continuously.

In the rain which swept over the festival grounds in solid sheets for much of the afternoon and evening, the audience truged squishily from the main shed, where the student orchestra performed under student conductors, from Borodin, Lambert and Stravinsky, to the opera building where excerpts from "Otello," "Falstaff," "CosiFan Tutti," "Hansel and Gretel" and other familiar works were sung and staged by students of the opera and stage school, and to the Chamber Music Hall.

They stood about in the downpour, under the dripping eaves of the refreshment tents, munching sandwiches and drinking coffee. They heard the Boston Symphony's gala concert at which Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, now dubbed the "V" was heard in excerpts, at which Albert Spalding played the Mendelssohn violin concerto, the festival chorus under Hugh Ross sang from Holst's "Seasons" and did Madrigals, and the combined orchestra and 26th Division bands put on the "1812 Overture."

They loved it all, apparently, absolutely undamped in spirit though dripping in the flesh and mackintosh. They gave a great hand to Elsa Maxwell who supervised the distribution of prizes. They wondered whether the fireworks could be shot off in the rain but they weren't.

HARTFORD, CONN. COURANT Aug 17, 1941

Big doings up at Lenox, Mass., on the Tanglewood estate where 56,000 persons sat in the shell and on the lawn before it to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky play as only the Boston Symphony men can play. The Berkshire Festival concerts are going beautifully.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 16 1941

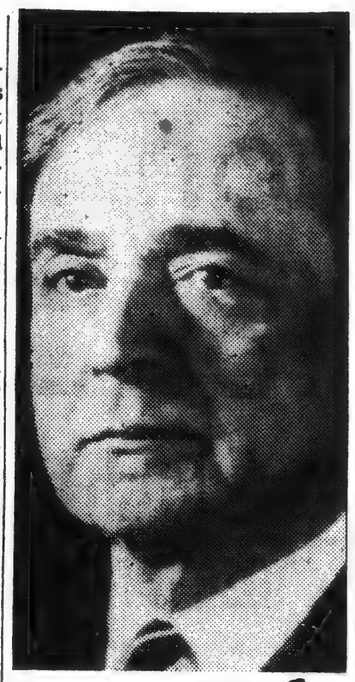
Over 8,000 Attend Tanglewood Benefit

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The Manifestation, which is Dr. Koussevitzky's name for the gala benefit concert for British relief and the United Service Organizations, drew another throng to Tanglewood Friday in spite of a soaking rain.

The attendance was officially reported in excess of 8,000, many of whom were doubtless attracted by the fact that the First Lady of he Land was present as a speaker.

About the only departure from plan was the inability of Viscount Halifax, British ambassador, to be there because of the pressure of international affairs. He was to have flown from Washington. His speech was read by Jerome D. Green. Telegrams of regret were read from Governor Saltonstall and Fiorello LaGuardia, chief of civilian defense. Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College, presided. Completing the list of speakers was Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Over Six Hours of Music

There was music on all sides from 4:30 in the afternoon until nearly 11, for this was also Tanglewood-on-Parade, which has come to describe the public review of the summer's work of Berkshire Music Center. And while music of every sort was heard from opera to choral and symphonic works, easily the most exciting performance was Dr. Koussevitzky's leading of the combined bands of the 26th Division in the playing of Sousa marches.

Mrs. Roosevelt paid tributes to Dr. Koussevitzky and to Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, for their efforts at Tanglewood and for their help to young artists.

Widespread appreciation of art, she said, indicated the nation's coming of age and in this the government had greatly helped by bringing art of all kinds nearer to the people.

Furthering Defense

Last year's benefit had been for British relief alone, but this year's had the additional objective of furthering defense and the defense of other democracies against aggression.

Music, said Mrs. Roosevelt, brought all peoples closer together; art had no barriers, of nationality, language or creed, but was the symbol of unity. For that reason it was important to cling to the things that brought people closer together and to put away those things which tended to spread disunion. She referred in closing to the Atlantic conference by expressing thankfulness that the English speaking peoples had "joined in war aims and also the determination to build for the future."

'Music Center of World'

"In this shed we have heard the sacrificial call of freedom and democracy," declared Dr. Perry. Out of the confusion of Babel, music was the only remnant of a language that men understood the world over, and Tanglewood had become the music center of the world. It symbolized what America was and may become. The Boston Orchestra, he said, with its diversity of nationalities represented America as did the Army bands.

The speaker addressed Koussevitzky as "a rare man in that he is one of those who are capable of feeling excitement."

Dr. Perry asked that the excitement generated by these concerts in such works as the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch and the Fifth of Beethoven be preserved and translated into action.

"This is not a fight to save any nation," he declared. "This is our fight!"

Halifax Message

The speech of Lord Halifax, as did Mrs. Roosevelt's, referred to the joint Roosevelt-Churchill declaration as follows: "I have said publicly more than once since my arrival here that I am convinced that those peoples who are still free and who are determined to maintain their freedom, must by their devotion and self-sacrifice match those same qualities which Hitler has perverted to such evil ends in Germany. Here, I would think, is an example, and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire us all, who believe in those principles just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the President and the Prime Minister, and for which the United States and British Commonwealth of nations today stand."

Said Koussevitzky: "We are witnessing, and in some degree we participate in, the act of stretching a hand of hope across the ocean—the open hand of America holding the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening fist of despotism and destruction."

Tide of Enthusiasm

The usual perspective of musical judgment is not suited to proceedings of such magnitude, diversity and objectives. A great tide of enthusiasm was set moving that ignored the discomforts of rain, crowding and the difficulty of obtaining refreshment.

One can only particularize about those things which were unique, like the performance of Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture by the Boston Orchestra with the mighty re-inforcement of the Army bands. It was gigantic, thunderous, brazen, but it was meant to be just that.

A Thrilling March

Koussevitzky's conducting of the "Stars and Stripes Forever" was electric. In a way it was the answer to the perennial question: What does a conductor do? Without rehearsal he projected his own wholly unconventional ideas as to what the famous march ought to sound like. Ritards and accelerandos as well as all the nuances that the Boston Orchestra is capable of were drawn from the bandsmen on the spot. And when it was over they were all patently thrilled at their own performance.

The festivities began at 4:30 with a performance in the new theater-concert hall of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutti" by members of the opera department under the direction of Herbert Grof. Immediately following there were simultaneous programs in the shed, the theater and the chamber music hall. These comprised quotations from "Hansel and Gretel," "Otello," "Falstaff" and "Czar and Carpenter;" a Hindemith Harp Sonata, a Haydn Quartet and Galindo's Sextet for Wind Instruments.

In the main auditorium the student orchestra was put through its paces by three young conductors, all of whom showed the obvious influence of Koussevitzky. Programmed were Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Lambert's "The Rio Grande" and one movement of Borodin's B minor Symphony.

Spalding Soloist

The highlight of the concert proper was Albert Spalding's playing of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, of which the slow movement was one of the finest things Spalding has ever done. He was tremendously acclaimed.

Stanley Chapple directed the Boston Orchestra in the war and peace movements of Holst's "The Planets" and Hugh Ross directed the Festival chorus in madrigals of Gibbons and Weelkes. The concert began with Koussevitzky conducting the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth.

Auditorium and grounds were especially decorated for the occasion but the effectiveness of the setting was spoiled by the weather.

The regular programs for tonight and Sunday afternoon, the last of the Festival, are as follows:

Tonight—Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony;" Barber's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra and Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

Sunday — Sibelius' Symphony No. 7; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 17 1941

PROGRAM TO AID U. S. O. AND BRITAIN REALIZES $20,000

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—New England weather gave a little unwanted atmosphere to the major work of tonight's Berkshire festival concert—rain for Vaughan Williams' "London" symphony.

A crowd of 8,500 at the festival's next-to-last program heard Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra pay tribute to Great Britain with an interpretation of the Williams' music that was uniquely forceful and logical in preentation.

Soloist was Ruth Posselt who played the violin concerto of Samuel Barber. The concert closed with two Wagnerian excerpts.

Announcement was made that last night's program to help United Service Organizations and British war relief netted $20,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER
AUG 17 1941

IN THE BERKSHIRE HILLS, where Serge Koussevitzky is lecturing on conducting when he is not acting as a model director on the podium during the Berkshire Festival, a few tips on how to be a skillful baton waver were given. "You must conduct your lives in such a way that when you come out on the stage to lead your orchestra you can truthfully say to your self: 'Yes, I have the right to appear before these lovers of good music. They can watch me without shame. I have the right because my life and my work are clean.'"

Again, I cannot resist a quibble. What if the reviewer were to remark:

"Mr. Albertini conducted an inspiring performance of the Bach Chorale but how such an unlicensed libertine would dare to appear before an audience of highly moral music lovers passes our compresension. Shame on you, Mr. Albertini!"

Still Mr. Koussevitzky may have given us the clue to Richard Wagner's failure to make much headway as a conductor. Let us be thankful for that blessing and strive to live a better life.

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES
AUG 17 1941

The Enduring Record

BY HARRY V

SYMPONHY NO. 29 IN A MAJOR (K 201) and SYMPHONY NO. 34 IN C MAJOR (K 338) (Mozart). Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Victor album M-DAY 795. Nine 12-inch faces. $5.

Two short symphonies not played often of recent years until Mr. Koussevitzky delighted his audiences and had them asking for more. The first has an Allegro Moderato, a Menuetto and an Allegro con Spirito. The entire work, particularly the Andante passages is Mozart at his most haunting loveliness with a depth of feeling underlying the apparent ingenuousness of the music. The second symphony, also in three movements, may possibly wear better with longer hearings. Although it fails to achieve the captivating melody of the slow movement in No. 29, its rapid excursions from the signature key and its brisk final allegro, suggestive of a Highland fling, give it great interest.

The playing and recording have that admirable quality of orchestral richness without sacrifice of the cleanness of structural lines. Altogether the album is a must for the Mozart devotee to hear.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
AUG 17 1941

33

Tribute to Mozart Feature Of Concerts at Berkshire

BY DOROTHY D. RYAN
Exclusive Dispatch to The Oregonian

NEW YORK, Aug. 16 (Special)—Perfect summer weather and great music in a setting of rare natural charm have combined to draw record crowds to the Berkshire Symphony festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

The programs of last week end were planned, in part, to honor the 150th annivarsary of Mozart. On each of the three programs Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra played some of the music of the master.

Mozart's G minor symphony and some excerpts from the requiem stirred the large audience on Thursday night to tumultuous applause. Critics, who always have praised Koussevitzky's reading of Mozart, called his interpretation of the requiem "stupendous," and spoke of its "panoramic sweep."

Many There From Afar

Many in the large audience had driven long distances. Among the appreciative listeners was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who had driven 70 miles from Hyde Park with a party of friends. During the intermission Mrs. Roosevelt expressed to Dr. Koussevitzky her enjoyment of the program and her interest in the extensive music program at Tanglewood, now in its eighth season.

Although the majority of music-lovers travel to the festival by car or plane, some enthusiasts this season have walked, arriving with packs on their backs, as young people used to do at Salzburg. For them, and for others who desire modest accommodations, there is a listing of rooms in tourist homes and private families, increasingly in demand this season.

Many noted persons attended last night's gala benefit for the benefit of the U. S. O. and the British war relief. The list of box-holders included names of many men and women who are leaders in government, business, soiety, finance and the arts.

Notables Attend

Simplicity of architecture marks the new buildings opened this season for students of the academy. Participation in the programs is a keynote of the enterprise, and many distinguished musicians can be seen enjoying music together with young students. In a rehearsal group, where a double chorus and double orchestra were performing antiphonal music, the famous composer, Paul Hindemith, was seen singing away among the choristers.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 17 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 17 1941

Berkshire Symphony British Benefit Nets $20,000

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 (AP) — New England weather gave a little unwanted atmosphere to the major work of tonight's Berkshire Festival concert—rain for Vaughan Williams' "London" symphony.

A crowd of 8500 at the festival's next-to-last program heard Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra pay tribute to Great Britain with an interpretation of the Williams music that was uniquely forceful and logical in presentation.

Soloist was Ruth Posselt who played the violin concerto of Samuel Barber. The concert closed with two Wagnerian excerpts.

Announcement was made that last night's program to help United Service Organizations and British war relief netted $20,000.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 17 1941

34

At Tanglewood

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt congratulates Dr. Serge Koussevitzky during intermission at a recent concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music World

By Isabelle Workman Evans

One of the interesting memories which the writer will hold following her recent exploration of the home territory of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is a visit to Seranak, the Tanglewood home of Dr. Koussevitzky. The view from the terrace impresses one with a sense of peace and relaxation. Dr. Koussevitzky explained in his very kindly manner that the title Seranak was derived from the first three letters of his name, Serge, from the first name of Mrs. Koussevitzky, and the K, of course, from Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 15 1941

Beethoven 'Missa Solemnis' Features Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Aug. 15—Featuring the mighty "Miss Solemnis" of Beethoven and the "Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in D minor" by Handel, the third and final series of concerts in this year's Berkshire Symphonic festival began last night at Tanglewood before an audience of 7800, the smallest crowd this year. Dr Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony orchestra were assisted by the Berkshire Festival chorus, G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, conductors, E. Power Biggs, organist, and a quartet of soloists: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; and Julius Huehen, bass.

The chill weather and the gravity of the program undoubtedly kept attendance down, though there were nearly 1500 listening outside the shed. Tonight's U. S. O. benefit is expected to boost the attendance to record hights, though Lord Halifax will be held in Washington by the international situation.

The principal problem in the presentation of so massive a choral work as the Beethoven mass is the preparing of singers to work on the same level as that of the Boston orchestra. When that problem is further complicated by a score that has no mercy on voices, the achievement of the festival chorus last night was quite commendable. There was plenty of forthright tone and a sureness in attacks, though a greater variety of tone color might come with longer rehearsals than are possible at the music center.

The soloists had a rather ungrateful task, sandwiched geographically between the chorus and the orchestra, and often inundated musically by both. Mr Huehn was a tower of strength, though the soaring soprano of Miss Dirman rode the sea of sound surely and safely. Mr Priebe's light voice would be more effective indoors while Miss Glaz did her little with distinction. The personal experience of this reviewer is that the choral works sound better outside the shed, particularly toward the sides, a surprising phenomenon in view of the excellent acoustics during instrumental passages.

It is amusing to note that the first performance of the mass was delayed because it was scheduled the worldly atmosphere of a theater. Today the mass is not acceptable liturgically because of its constant repetition of phrases and its theatricalism. Though the audience was requested not to applaud it gave manual manifestation of its pleasure and of the secular appeal of the work.

To Mr Biggs who also assisted at the organ during the mass should go a deserved tribute. One of the foremost organists of the day, he achieved a fine balance with the orchestra and notable registration effects. The organ, fortunately, has its own amplification system within itself, far beyond the poor powers of a solo voice, piano, or cello.

Numbered among the guests were 250 bandsmen of the 26th division who will participate tonight in the U. S. O.-British War relief benefit. The varied program will run from 5.30 until nearly midnight. Programs Saturday night and Sunday afternoon will conclude this year's series of nine regular concerts.

J. D. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 15 1941

'MISSA SOLEMNIS' IS MUSICAL CLIMAX AT TANGLEWOOD

Handel's 10th Concerto for Organ and Orchestra Also Excellent — Soloists and Chorus Are Competent

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 14—In the production tonight of Beethoven's great "Missa Solemnis" by the festival chorus, the Boston Symphony orchestra and a competent quartet of soloists, all under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the eighth Berkshire Symphonic festival in a sense reached the musical climax. Another kind of climax will be attained tomorrow in the varied festivities connected with the gala program of music and speech-making, beginning at 5.30 and stopping when it ends, which is to be given for the benefit of the United Service organizations and British war reuef. Also there are still two concerts in the regular series still to come, and both of them have excellent programs. But the production of a great and difficult choral work is the severest test of a music festival and the quality of tonight's performance makes it this season's outstanding event.

The mass was preceded by an excellent performance of Handel's 10th concerto for organ and orchestra, the solo part of which was played by E. Power Biggs, who also played the organ part in the mass. This concerto is a fine example of the perfect coordination of organ and orchestra which so few composers have attained and it has in full measure the heartening power which flows from Handel's music at its best. Both in the solo part, and in combination with the orchestra. Mr Biggs was fortunate in his registration and his touch had a crispness in rapid passages which added much to the perfection of the ensemble.

Good Chorus Work

Perfection comparable to that of one of the world's greatest orchestras is of course not possbile for a chorus under actual conditions, but the singers tonight deserve much credit for the success with which they brought out the rugged grandeur of Beethoven's rather intractable music.

Perhaps by temperament he was incapable of the small concessions which to this singer make a vast difference; it is much easier for instrumental performers to conform to his bold and uncompromising style. Beethoven pays little attention to those lines of least resistance which sympathetic composers like Handel, Mozart or Verdi follow instinctively when writing for voices. From the singer's standpoint this sublime mass runs sometimes across the grain, but if sung truly and with feeling the effect nevertheless is grand and moving, and this was the case tonight.

Praise for good intentions and for good singing as well may also be given to the quartet of solo singers, Rose Dirman, Hertha Glaz, John Priebe and Julius Huehn, but the effect intended was not fully realized because the solo parts did not carry well. Theoretically it is more artistic for the solo singers to be put with the chorus with which they cooperate. But in so vast an auditorium a position behind the orchestra is too remote. Is the solution to be found in amplification or in bringing the singers nearer to the audience?

This year the festival has been rich in its choral resources, for besides the festival chorus, made up of students in the summer school at Tanglewood, which sang tonight and appeared last year in Bach's B-minor mass, some excellent singing has been done by the Berkshire Musical association chorus which was heard on August 7 in excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem Mass" and in a work by the Brazilian composer, Villa-Lobos, at the opening concert on July 31.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 16 1941

Albany
MUSIC NEWS

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The usual capacity audience under the music shed at Tanglewood and the overflow which extended over the ajacent lawns experienced the unusual situation of hearing only half-hearted applause following each of the two sections of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," the principal work of the evening. This was due, in part, to the small program note requesting the audience not to applaud, and partly to the fact that the many of the audience failed to see the fine print. In any case, it was a superb rendition of the great music of the Mass as visualized musically by Beethoven; music built on such heroic lines as to preclude its use in the ritual of the church at the present time.

The entire program had a distinctly ecclesiastical tone, since the first third of the evening was devoted to the playing of the concrto for organ and orchestra by Handel. When it is considered that the organ approximates the various tonal colors of the instruments of the orchestra, the opportunity for contrasting effects is nil. However, E. Power Biggs, at the console of the music shed organ, displayed virtuosity of a very high order and musical intelligence in the use of registration.

For the "Missa Solemnis," every available inch of space on the great stage was utilized. The some 100 men of the orchestra; the Berkshire chorus of over 200; four soloists; Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass, not only made an imposing picture, but sang the difficult score, under the inspired direction of Serge Koussevitzky, with admirable attention to the conductor and vocal oppulance brilliant in the extreme. As is the case of the same composer's use of a chorus in the Ninth symphony, he has no regard for the limitations of the human voice, with the sopranos and tenors frequently straining along on high A's and higher B-flats. This not only subjects the soloists to severe strain, but the members of the chorus as well, resulting, at times, in a certain dry, stringy quality which denotes an excess of strain on the vocal cords, but not in any case, a reflection on the merits of the singers. It is just not in the vocal book. The penultimate concert of the 1941 series will be held tonight when the program will consist of "A London Symphony," by Vaughan Williams; Concerto for violin and orchestra by Barber, with Ruth Posselt, wife of the concertmaster of the Boston Symphony orchestra as soloist; the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhauser" by Wagner.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 16 1941

UNITY FOR VICTORY URGED BY HALIFAX

Speech Read at the Berkshire Festival Links USO With British War Relief

JOINT AIM TO END CHAOS

Mrs. Roosevelt Hails Ties of the Two Peoples as Opening Way to Better World

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—The increasing unity of the two great English-speaking peoples in the cause of ending chaos and insuring a better world for all was the keynote sounded by speakers at the gala benefit put on at Tanglewood today by the Berkshire festival forces for the USO and the British War Relief.

More than 6,000 seats in the music shed were filled and another thousand persons stood under the colonnade at the edges of the enclosure to hear speeches by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The principal speaker was to have been Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, but "pressing reasons of State" kept him in Washington and his prepared address was read by Jerome D. Greene, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, presided.

Lord Halifax's speech, as well as Mrs. Roosevelt's, stressed the rightness of joining the USO and the British War Relief as beneficiaries. He remarked that it would be "an inspiring thought to the people in Britain that you should have coupled these two great organizations and it is yet one more testimony of the way in which you are helping Great Britain in her present challenge to the forces of evil."

Lord Halifax's address went on to say that nothing had touched him and Lady Halifax in their seven months here "more than the work which is being done all over these United States, and in large part by the American women for those who in Great Britain have lost nearly everything they had."

One Boy's Sacrifice

The ambassador told of help that had come from all quarters, high and low, and in particular of an American boy of 14, who for six months had sent 50 cents each week, half his allowance to help the British cause.

Lord Halifax wrote the boy a letter of thanks, and the lad replied:

"Tell them [the British children] that we American boys and girls are backing them all the time and that our President, Mr. Roosevelt, who is a great man, will send them all the food they need and all the supplies that England needs."

Lord Halifax said that he was convinced that "those peoples who are still free and who are determined to maintain their freedom, must by their devotion and self-sacrifice match those same qualities which Hitler has perverted to such evil ends in Germany."

Mrs. Roosevelt gave a brief talk with a statement of conviction that men of good-will working together could achieve unity. She remarked that the two English-speaking nations had joined together, not only in art, but also to bring order out of chaos, to let free men pre-determine their own forms of government and to permit all to live a better and fuller life in the future.

Mrs. Roosevelt said that art knew "no barrier of nationality, language of creed," and added that we must wipe out of our consciousness the things that keep people apart.

Holding Out "A Hand of Hope"

In introductory comments, Mr. Koussevitzky said:

"We are witnessing, and in some degree we participate in, the act of stretching a hand of hope and help across the ocean, the open hand of America holding the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening hand of despotism and destruction."

"In standing by and proclaiming our belief in England, we are helping our own nation, for the victory of freedom is also the victory of truth."

Dr. Perry, turning to Mr. Koussevitzky, said:

"Music speaks in different voices to different individuals, but your music has strengthened me in the conviction that we in America should be on the march."

He added:

"The longer we wait the harder will be our battle. If throughout history men had been willing to fight only when the percentage was in their favor, where would civilization be today?"

Dr. Baxter read telegrams from Governor Saltonstall and Mayor La Guardia regretting their absence. The Mayor's wire observed that there were only 168 hours in a week and his many duties prevented him from being among his friends and admired musicians.

On the platform with the speaker were Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston symphony; Norman H. Davis, national chairman of the Red Cross; Harper Sibley, national chairman of the USO; Albert G. Milbank, general counsel for British War Relief; Colonel Charles G. Moore, representing Major General Roger W. Eckfeldt, commanding officer of the Twenty-sixth Division.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1941

Drizzle Dampens Festival

But 7000 Hear Music Nevertheless

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—Rain in a steady drizzle may have injured the attendance prospects for the gala day planned as a benefit for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, but it could not dampen the spirits of more than 7000 who had come to Tanglewood.

One of the major disappointments was the absence of Lord Halifax, whose commitments prohibited him from taking part. The British Ambassador's speech, however, was read by Jerome Greene of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The opening points of his talk covered the importance of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the fact that Great Britain has its festivals, too.

* * *

Mrs. Roosevelt Talks.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, introduced by Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College, who presided, spoke of the value of music in the cultural and spiritual life of a people. "Art knows no barriers of race or creed," she said. Then she praised Serge Koussevitzky and his men of the Boston Symphony for the important influences they have been in the musical life of America.

Other speakers included Mr. Koussevitzky and Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy.

The gala day began at 4 p. m., with a performance of the second act from Mozart's Opera Cosi Fan Tutte. It was given by the students of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, and an overflow audience applauded enthusiastically. The piece was given under Herbert Graf's direction, and Boris Goldovsky conducted the orchestra.

* * *

Many Things to Hear.

Soon after that there were so many things going on at once that the best one could do was to skip from one to the other and trust to luck about getting the important features.

For instance, the combined bands of the 26th Division, which had been camped on the lake on the Tanglewood property, played a program under the twin directorship of Mr. Koussevitzky and Chester E. Whiting, warrant officer at Camp Edwards. The Boston Symphony's batonist conducted the Semper Fidelis and Stars and Stripes Forever, marches of Sousa, and Mr. Whiting took similar care of the Overture to William Tell and the American Patrol march.

* * *

Students Conduct.

The Music Center's Orchestra gave a program under various student conductors in the shed, while the Opera Department again came through with scenes from several works in the Theater-Concert Hall.

Following the distinguished speakers, the Boston Symphony supplied another of its programs with Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Hugh Ross taking turns on the podium. The list consisted of the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, described as the V Symphony, because of the Morse code V which opens the work, two pieces by Holst, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist, a pair of Madrigals and the Tschaikowsky 1812 Overture.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 16 1941

35

8000 BRAVE RAIN AT TANGLEWOOD

Mrs. Roosevelt Among Noted Speakers

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 16 — Undaunted by a pelting rain which soaked grounds and garments and leaked through roofs to damage silks and satins and slacks, more than 8000 people turned to Tanglewood yesterday afternoon and last night to benefit the British war relief and the USO.

Plenty of Entertainment

But they had plenty of entertainment to keep them occupied and three quarters of an hour of speechmaking by the great and near great of the Nation. The theme of the second annual event at Tanglewood was cooperation with England, and voicing this were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, who presided, and Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy. A telegram was read from Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, who, along with the others, pointed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival as a symbol of unity of people and nations toward which Britain and America are working.

While the benefit revolved around the speakers, the principal events were music, and chief among them was the playing of 250 musicians of the Yankee Division, massed under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and their own director, Chester Earl Whiting. The audience, which moved about the grounds under umbrellas and raincoats, also heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, Albert Spalding, violinist, chamber music groups, singers in several scenes from operas, and the Berkshire Music Center chorus.

The benefit was opened at 5.30 by the 36th Division Band, massed to the right of the shed playing a march and the William Tell overture under the baton of Lieut. Whiting. Then, covered by a cape, Dr. Koussevitzky made his way through the crowd in the shed, and the audience cheered. He mounted the podium and led the band in two stirring marches, Semper Fidelis and "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Once, calling for the bass drum, he pointed to the left and the bang came from the right, but he put on a good show and the audience loved it.

A half hour was then given for the opera and chamber music departments to perform in the respective buildings. Scenes from four operas were given: Hansel and Gretel, "Otello," "Falstaff" and "Czar and Carpenter." Among the five singers was Mary Van Kirk, soprano, who this winter won the Metropolitan Opera auditions.

Then came the manifestation. Dr. Koussevitzky told of what the Festival and Music Center was trying to do, and found in it a reason for the American way of life. Dr. Baxter called Tanglewood the musical capital of America and a "symbol of the way of life cherished by all of us."

Mrs. Roosevelt, after praising Dr. Koussevitzky and the Festival directors for what they have built, expressed herself as "happy that the great English-speaking peoples have joined together, not only for purposes of war, but to build a better world," thus noting the recent declaration of aims by Prime Minister Churchill of England and President Roosevelt. In speaking of the Festival, she said she felt that development in the people of an appreciation of the arts is a sure sign that the people are becoming of age. She pointed to the government program along this line and felt "that we should all be grateful" for it.

The concert in the shed, the last event on the program with the exception of a fireworks display which was somewhat rained out, featured the whole battery of organizations: the Boston orchestra, the student orchestra, the massed soldier bands, and the chorus. Albert Spalding, American violinist, was heard in the Mendelssohn concerto.

MISSING
PAGE(S)

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 16 1941

38

Tanglewood Benefit For British War Relief And U. S. O. Brilliant Success

An outpouring of people, estimated at 8000, nothing daunted by a steady downpour of rain, flocked last evening to Tanglewood for a brilliant program of music, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, and a speech manifestation in which some of the country's most outstanding leaders took part. Mutual benefits, amounting to the unofficial total of $15,000, will be shared by the British War Relief and the United Service Organizations.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college who presided, Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster at Phillips Exeter academy, and Jerome D. Green, representative of Viscount Halifax who was unable to leave Washington for the event, alike hailed Tanglewood and Koussevitsky as symbols of the freedom for which Great Britain and the United States are striving.

"The V for victory of freedom is the victory of truth, declared President Baxter, who spoke after Koussevitsky had briefly explained the purpose of Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt, attired in a black ensemble with white fox neckpiece, paid tribute to those who have made the Berkshire festival possible. The appreciation of the art, she interpreted as an indication that we, as a nation, are coming of age, and the sharing of proceeds between the British and American societies seemed especially fitting.

In his speech, Dr. Perry asserted, "We should be on the march for it is up to us to win or lose this battle. Freedom is truth and this is a fight for freedom." He described the master director of the Boston Symphony orchestra as a spiritual as well as musical leader.

The events opened at 5.30 o'clock with the rendition of a march and the William Tell overture by the 36th Division band under the baton of Lieut. Chester Earl Whiting. Dean of the bandmasters who brought their charges to the benefit, was Warrant Officer Cyril Lafrancis of Springfield, leader of the 104th regiment band who is well known in Holyoke. Ever since 1917, when he joined the regiment band, Officer Lafrancis has been with it.

Looking to the spot to the right of the shed where the soldiers played, the audience could discern clouds of rain being carried by the breeze. "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever" were the selections thundered harmoniously by the band under the direction of Koussevitsky.

Scenes from "Hansel and Gretel", "Otello", "Falstaff", and "Czar and Carpenter" were then given in the theater by the opera department while a simultaneous program was rendered in the shed by the chamber music departments. After the manifestation and partaking of lunches by the throng, the concert proper started. Taking part were the symphony orchestra, student group, band and chorus, with Albert Spalding, noted violinist, heard in the Mendelssohn concerto. He was called back for numerous ovations at its close.

The selections started with Beethoven's Fifth symphony, now called the Victory symphony, because its first four notes are similar to the Morse code signal for V. Following Koussevitsky's direction of this work which was followed raptly by the audience, Stanley Chapple led the orchestra in "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus,, the Bringer of Peace" from Holst's "The Planets."

Conducted by Hugh Ross, the festival chorus, which opened the manifestation with "Alleluia," was again heard. This time, two madrigals, "The Silver Swan", and "Long Live Fair Oriana" were given. To complete the program, the entire group of 500 musicians gave a terrific account of "Overture 1812" by Tschaikowsky.

After the concert, Elsa Maxwell wittily presided at the drawing of a number of prizes, which included a dozen pair of nylon stockings, a heifer, tickets for next year's festival, a defense savings bond, and a ton of coal. The fireworks display had to be cancelled.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ATHOL, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 17 19[illegible]

'Battle of Music'

The gala concert at Stockbridge Friday evening, to benefit the United Service Organization an the British War Relief, promises to be nothing less than a world shaking event. At the very least its echoes should go resounding down the Berkshire valleys for months to come.

The speakers, it seems, will range from Lord Halifax to Elsa Maxwell, and the prizes, from a pedigreed Guernsey heifer to a ton of coal. But these will provide only the quieter, the more refined parts of the entertainment. The real noise, the big "smash" as Variety would call it, will be a double concert by the Boston symphony orchestra and 250 army bandsmen from Camp Edwards, both led by Dr. Koussevitsky, climaxed by a joint rendition of Tchaikowsky's ripsnorting, old war-horse, "Overture, 1812." Although as yet no firing of cannon is promised, there will be rockets aplenty and bombs bursting in air.

Even if the ensuing din is not heard across the Atlantic and fails to frighten the Nazis into beginning their retreat from Moscow, it should precipitate a handsome flow of coins into the coffers of two extremely worthy organizations. People living within fifty miles of Stockbridge will do well to prepare for a minor seismic disturbance Friday night.—Boston Herald

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1941

Final Series Of Festival Opens; Attendance Drops

Cold Weather Blamed as Only 7,800 Persons Gather to Hear Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis"—Program Again Emphasizes That Music Shed, Despite Fine Acoustics, Does Not Give Vocalists Fair Opportunity—YD Bandsmen in Audience.

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky opened last evening at Tanglewood before an audience estimated at 7,800, one of the smallest gatherings at any concert this year. Beethoven's lofty and impassioned "Missa Solemnis" dominated the program.

Only Two Works

The program was composed of only two works, the Beethoven composition and the Handel Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in D minor, No. 10. which served as the curtain-raiser, with E. Power Briggs at the organ. Cold weather was blamed for keeping many of those who usually sit outside the shed from attending the performance.

The audience, which completely filled the structure, however, heard the "Missa Solemnis" with intensity and solemnity, heeding the program's request not to applaud between the various sections. This work enlisted the services of the Berkshire Festival chorus as well as four soloists—Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass. The technical difficulties the work offers to a festival chorus which has a limited amount of time for practice are great, but the Berkshire chorus was not only enthusiastic but vocally opulent. Quite impressive was the tonal shading in some of the passages, demonstrating the fine vocal control of the chorus, and the numerous climaxes in the work thrilled the audience. The work of the soloists was so closely interwoven with the whole that their voices were heard to less advantage than they might have been in other compositions. To most concert goers it has also been evident from the first experiment that the big music shed, for all its fine acoustics, does not give solo singers a fair opportunity. Those who sang last night suffered from this circumstance in the impression their work conveyed.

The Handel concerto, a lilting, graceful and light composition provided a joyous introduction to the solemn remainder of the program. The refreshing rendition of this popular work provided a sharp contrast to the Beethoven piece.

"From the Heart"

Beethoven's intention in writing his "Missa Solemnis" was that it came "from the heart" and should be "received by the heart." While it is not closely identified with the music of the church—Catholic, Protestant, or any other—the composer leaves little doubt that his piece is concerned with a musical expression of ideas and emotions which all men share in common and no faith can claim as its own.

Three hundred and 20 men of the U. S. Army's 26th division from Camp Edwards—250 of whom are members of the division's bands who will play at tonight's gala benefit concert—were in the audience for last night's program. The extra men will take care of the camp which has been set up on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac, towards which the Tanglewood lawns slope, and do the kitchen police duty. The soldiers arrived late yesterday afternoon in a long motorized column of more than 300 trucks, supplemented by mobile kitchens, and complete camping equipment.

The next-to-last concert tomorrow evening will open with the London symphony by Vaughan Williams, and will include the Concerto for Violin and Orchestra by Samuel Barber, played by Ruth Posselt, the prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 17 1941

SINGLE SYMPHONIC WORK ON PROGRAM OF MUSIC FESTIVAL

Ruth Posselt, Violinist, Assists Orchestra in Concert at Tanglewood—Excellent Program for Final Concert Today

BY FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 16—The last of the evening concerts in the three-weeks' Berkshire Symphonic festival was given tonight at the Tanglewood music shed, leaving only tomorrow's concert at 3.30, for which an attractive program of contemporary or fairly modern music has been reserved. In this final concert the symphonic idea will again be stressed. It will open with the seventh symphony by Sibelius, and come to a splendid close with Tschaikowski's fifth symphony, perhaps the favorite of all that composer's works. Between these serious and intense major works will be the gay and entertaining suite, "Lieut Kijie," by the clever bad boy of contemporary Russian music, Serge Prokofieff.

Tonight's program contained but one symphonic work, "A London Symphony" by the contemporary British composer Ralph Vaughan Williams, but it is of ample proportions and would have sufficed for a full program if it had not been cut and cut again by the author after its first performance in 1914. Even in its reduced dimensions it filled the first half of the concert, the second offering an attractive feature in the new violin concerto by Samuel Barber, completed last July and first performed last February.

It was played tonight by a distinguished Massachusetts violinist, Ruth Posselt, who began her concert giving at Medford at the age of three and has moved on steadily from prodigy to mature artist. To the classical repertory she has added ultra-modern works, including Hindemith's violin concerto and the concerto by Walter Piston which she gave its first Boston hearing last season.

She was in line, therefore, for tonight's performance of a new concerto by one of the most promising of the younger American composers. Mr Gardner at 31 has written works of various types but with a general slant toward the stringed instruments. This concerto shows the mastery of the violin which might be expected from its author, and is not lacking in originality. It opens in an unusual way with the sounding of the first theme by the solo violin without orchestral introduction, a severe test for the performer, and it closes with a brilliant perpetual motion in rapid tempo which gave Miss Posselt a chance for a dazzling display of virtuosity.

The principal work of the evening, Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony," composed in 1912-13, remains in its revised form one of the composer's most successful works, and it is perhaps the most attractive symphonic work yet produced by a British musician. It is neither in the strictly classical form nor a loose descriptive tone poem, but stands somewhere between.

The listener, if on the alert, may catch hints of the Westminster chimes and "Who'll buy my lavender?" but the composer has sanctioned no programs, and one would need to know prewar London very well to surmise, without the title, that its pulsing life and varied scenes had inspired the work. But listeners are likely to reflect that the "vigorous vitality and merriment (even rowdiness)," attributed to the composer to parts of the work, would be replaced by something very different in a London symphony as of today. The symphony was first heard in America in 1920, and in 21 years it has had many performances and has won much favor. Its varied beauties were finely brought out tonight by Mr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Especially beautiful was the performance of the second movement and the unusual liminuendo at the close of the work.

The program ended with the prelude to Parsifal and the overture to Tannhauser by Wagner.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 17 1941

RESULTS OF A FESTIVAL

Berkshire Returns—Stadium Audiences—Power of the Interpreter

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival gives its final concert of 1941 this afternoon in Stockbridge, Mass. The present and the future of this festival are bright indeed. The audiences, which have grown steadily season by season during the period of the stewardship of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have reached almost the limit of numbers which can be accommodated and receive the full benefit of the sound of a symphonic body of the customary proportions. The financial returns of the festival keep pace with the patronage, and they are impressive. They prove the popularity of a music festival which asks a Winter scale of prices, ranging from $5 per box seat to $1.50 for admission. At these rates the festival emerges from its three weeks' season of nine concerts with returns which are flatttering from the artistic as well as practical point of view.

Attendance Figures

It is true that other Summer performances in America than these attract on occasion immense audiences. If 11,000 people have attended a single Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood, over 20,000 have gathered on occasion at the Lewisohn Stadium concerts, which finished their season last Wednesday. One could quote equally imposing figures from places like Grant Park in Chicago and Forest Park in St. Louis, which nightly attract their many thousands. In these places prices are popular or non-existent. The size of the audiences varies with the attraction.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has special advantages which more popular priced and less artistically exacting concerts have not. First and foremost, at Stockbridge is the nucleus of the audience formed by people of means who buy the box seats and pay practically Winter prices for other places in the covered auditorium. This festival has the great advantage of beautiful natural surroundings as well as a public which in the main is carriage trade, one that can spend week-ends out of town and plan to attend the events as features of an outing which costs much more than the subway fare and the admission prices of New York's Summer concerts.

Nine symphony concerts, three each week, are given at Tanglewood, as compared with the eight weeks of programs given on successive evenings, weather permitting, at the Stadium. A nearer approach to the character of the Stadium concerts, as regards prices of admission and public accommodation, are those given for many thousands nightly at the Hollywood Bowl in California. But performances of the supreme finish and distinction of those of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival are not given anywhere else in the United States during the Summer months, despite the various and important seasons of opera and of concert given in many cities and out-of-door places all over the country and attended literally by millions of listeners.

Public Response

Two things are proved in broad outline by these manifestations. One is the love of good music which characterizes the American public. The other is its unfailing response to performances of highest quality. If any one doubts this, let him recall the returns from the symphony concerts given under the leadership of a very fine and authoritative musician at Stockbridge in the two years before Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Association, invited Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be its ministrants. It is no disparagement whatever to their predecessors to remark upon the plain fact that when one of the finest orchestras, directed by one of the greatest leaders of this period, began to function, the box office responded, and for the best and simplest of reasons.

Great Interpretation Needed

Some look askance at this phenomenon. They say that it demonstrates a public interest in reputations rather than music and an appetite for "personalities" of the baton rather than the sincere presentation of masterpieces. But why rush to such a conclusion?

Why should a justified antagonism to virtuosity of the sensational order cause us to deny the extreme importance of revealing interpretation? And remember, the supreme interpretation can only come from the artist of distinction. It does not suffice for a routined, experienced and well intentioned conductor to wave a stick in the proper tempo and make the traditional shadings and nuances in a Beethoven symphony.

That is a great deal to accomcomplish, but it is not the consummate achievement. It goes without saying that the cause of the composer and not the personality of the virtuoso is the thing that is important for music. Who would dream of claiming the contrary? But we are speaking of the supreme revelation of masterpieces.

Interpretation, next to the production of music, is the most important and creative field of effort that the art knows. To have developed the profound knowledge necessary to decipher every meaning of the printed score; to fully comprehend not only its details but the inner significance of its structure; to have developed the technical means whereby this knowledge and understanding can be communicated, and finally by the flash of re-creative genius to resurrect the music as it took shape in the composer's consciousness, is possible only to the most finished and intuitive performers.

Music a Short-Lived Art

The average laborer in the vineyard will go as far as he may toward these gleaming portals. We honor and acclaim such a man for his worth and his services. Admitted, and gladly, that it is mainly upon his efforts that the artistic level of the community must rest, and that he must not be slighted for the advantage of showier and more superficial persons. It nevertheless remains that it takes genius to reveal genius, and that this cannot be accomplished by less than virtuosity and creative vision. Were it otherwise, great performances of music would be the common thing instead of the rare exception which the public will sacrifice to hear. Perhaps this is a cruel fact. No doubt the best is at times the enemy of the good, though we should be too well informed for it to be so. But the instinct the people have for the best is not abnormal or unsound at all. It is perfectly healthy and logical. If it were otherwise the race would not need to develop genius.

How necessary the perceptive and re-creative powers of the master interpreter are to music is illustrated every other day, as also throughout the pages of history. There has been lost, beyond question, much if not most of the music of certain bygone periods because of the plain fact that living people have forgotten how to interpret it. Of course, the greatest masterpieces live the longest. They have in them the strength of structure and universality of content which has significance for successive generations. But music, of all the arts, is undoubtedly the shortest lived. Architecture, sculpture, painting, literature, are of less volatile and perishable material. We speak of Palestrina, Bach, Beethoven, as "immortals." "Immortals," please, for how long?

Nothing is truer than the remark that Ernest Newman makes in his early study of Gluck (the book is not at hand, but the thought is unforgettable) that music which once moved men to delirious ecstacy is a voice from the shadows, that statues of gods once glorious stand, pale, silent, with arrested tongues, inarticulate. His thought is of the music of Gluck, once so potent, still noble and antique, communicating certain grand emotions, yet far from the thrill and communicative power of the dramatic music of a later day.

Interpreters for the Classics

How many, today, can interpret Gluck? How many can interpret Cherubini, or even Donizetti? Yes, Donizetti! But we have heard Arturo Toscanini direct "Lucia di Lammermoor." Then only did we know the meaning of that composer's patrician style, if you please, and the elevation of his melody and his sentiment. Last week at Stockbridge Koussevitzky and his men gave their unique performance of Debussy's "La Mer." Will their secret die with them? Probably not, since we have now our modern devices of recording, and it will nevermore be a matter of deduction or conjecture as to how the music of the immediate past sounded. Lacking the records we could easily imagine a conductor or historian, after a gap of, say, a hundred and fifty years, fumbling over some faded score, among them "La Mer," saying, "Look at this! Once it was considered a masterpiece. Can you imagine that? Take a lesson from it. You see what the music is, don't you? Nothing but a series of harmonies, without cohesion or form, invertebrate and meaningless aside from its title. A first-class example of the musical impotence of that period!" Only a master interpreter could refute him.

Familiarity With Scores

Should we then insist upon the greatest interpretations of music, and ignore any lesser accomplishments? Obviously not. If we did that, we would in the first place listen to very little music. If we failed to become through many hearings fully acquainted and familiar with every detail of a score, and form our own ideas of it, and repeatedly compare them with rank and file performances, we would greatly limit our comprehension and delight in our musical inheritance. We cannot wait for the man of genius to open the book of the art for us, and we should not. But he is the man for whom we wait to be ushered into the master's presence.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 17 1941

39

Benefit Concert In Berkshires Yields $20,000

Dr. Koussevitzky Leads Orchestra in Rehearsal for Last Two Programs

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—According to a preliminary estimate, the receipts of last night's benefit concert at Tanglewood for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief amounted to more than $20,000. This was considered a remarkable showing in view of the evening's fairly continuous rain and, had the weather been a little drier, the proceeds would undoubtedly have topped the $26,000 realized by the corresponding performance last summer. About $4,000 of yesterday's revenue came from the sale of chances for prizes contributed by residents of the Berkshire region.

About eleven hours after it had played the last notes of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture at the close of yesterday's benefit, the Boston Symphony Orchestra reassembled this morning to rehearse the two final programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. Meanwhile, the 250 bandsmen of the 26th Division, whose playing of Sousa marches under Dr. Koussevitzky had been one of the memorial features of last night's extensive program, departed soon after breakfast for Camp Edwards on Cape Cod.

In this morning's semi-public rehearsal Dr. Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony through the Vaughan Williams London symphony and Samuel Barber's violin concerto which, with music from Wagner's Parsifal and Tannhäuser, composed the semi-final program played at Tanglewood tonight. Ruth Posselt, young Boston violinist, was the soloist in the concerto.

The rehearsal also included two numbers from the ninth and last festival program to be presented tomorrow afternoon, Prokofieff's amusing Lieutenant Kije suite and the finale of Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony. The quality of the playing suggested that the orchestra was not yet fatigued by a schedule which rivals in intensity that of its regular season in Symphony Hall.

Thursday night's performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis in D spoke well for what the festival chorus was able to accomplish after four weeks of preparation at the Berkshire Music Center under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. On the whole, it could be said that the singers had mastered not only the notes, but also the emotional significance of this exceptionally exacting and rewarding masterpiece. In the Kyrie the tone quality had an occasional opacity which vanished later and in the Plenisunt Coeli a few of the soprano section's highest tones took on a slightly shrill timbre. But points admitting cavil were few; in tone quality, balance and co-ordination and responsiveness to Dr. Koussevitzsky's interpretative indications the record was mainly one that called for much praise. Climaxes were set forth with imposing sonority and the dynamic range was wide and marked by a realization of fine points of shading.

The soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor and Julius Huehn, Metropolitan opera barytone. Here and in the ninth symphony the solo quartet usually makes it apparent that its music is difficult and on Thursday there was some of the familiar evidence of vocal effort during the first two sections. But after the intermission the solo singing gained notably in freedom and fluency; it was also expressively persuasive, especially in one of the most poignant episodes of the score, the appeals for peace after the instrumental harbingers of war in the Dona Nobis Pacem. The orchestra observed its wonted high standards and, as in last April's performance of the Missa Solemnis in Boston Dr. Koussevitzky's general interpretation told of his devotion for and his understanding of the work. In the Kyrie there were moments when the performance was not entirely integrated, but emotional spontaneity as well as unity or conception and interpretation characterized most of its course from then on. In the great rolling fugue near the end of the Gloria, Dr. Koussevitzky favored a relatively broad pace which made for clarity of detail, but preserved the essential momentum of the music. In the matter of preserving a due balance between the choral and orchestral elements, the conductor and instrumentalists deserved warm encomiums.

Handel's tenth organ concerto in D minor, which opened this program, was played in the edition of Max Seiffert including the short air supplied by this editor in lieu of a slow movement. E. Power Biggs, the soloist at the console, gave a performance distinquished for technical skill and interpretative musicianship. In the orchestral playing one sometimes missed a full sense of the characteristically Handelian combination of pomp, state and vitality, but one could find much for relish in the delectability of the orchestral tone.

The festival chorus also took advantage of an opportunity to illustrate its notable talents in two Elizabethan madrigals sung in last night's program. One reason why it had been able to master its assignments with unusual celerity is that its members are all musicians or music students who have been attending this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center. Among these are several advanced students and instructors.

In addition to the Vaughan Williams symphony, which was the principal subject of Olin Downes's discourse at this morning's rehearsal, and the Barber concerto, tonight's program included two Warner excerpts, the preludes to Parsifal and Tannhäuser.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 17 1941

In the Berkshires

Festival Ends Today; Quartet Series Closes Aug. 24

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which has established a new record for attendance in this series, will close with today's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under [redacted]itzky's direction in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning at 3:30. The works scheduled are Sibelius's seventh symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

The South Mountain String Quartet will not play today, but will give the last concert of its series at South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., next Sunday afternoon, Aug. 24, at 4 o'clock. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Kathe[redacted], pianist, will be guest artists with the regular members of the quartet: Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violinists; Conrad Held, violist, and Willem Willeke, cellist. The program includes a sonata by Mr. Spald[redacted]

Two scenes from the production of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," which climaxed the work of the opera-dramatics division, under Herbert Graf, at the Berkshire Musi

John C

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 18 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 17 1941

'LONDON SYMPHONY' HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Work by R. Vaughan Williams Is Played at Tanglewood by the Boston Orchestra

VIOLIN CONCERTO IS GIVEN

Ruth Posselt Soloist in Number by Samuel Barber — Last Concert to Be Held Today

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16 — The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival swung into its final phases tonight with the last program but one. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under [illegible] Koussevitzky, devoted the greater part of tonight's concert at Tanglewood to two contemporary works—one by an Englishman and the other by an American, once again underscoring the hands-across-the-sea motive that has characterized much of this year's festival.

The Englishman was R. Vaughan Williams, the most eminent living composer of his land, and his composition was "A London Symphony." The American was Samuel Barber, who, at 31, has seen his works performed throughout the country; his composition was his concerto for violin, with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Though the city of London has had a relative respite from the vicious bombing attacks of recent months, it is not, physically, the city that the world knew before this war began. Nor is it quite the city that Vaughan Williams memorialized in tone, for the composer's picture was evoked by the familiar sights and sounds of London—sights and sounds that have undoubtedly undergone modifications.

Essence of City Captured

It was good to hear this music again and to travel with a tone poet along his imaginative conception of a great metropolis and its people. For we know that the spirit of London endures through blackouts and bombings, and whatever the destruction, Vaughan Williams has done his share to capture the essence of a fascinating and brave city.

Mr. Barber completed his concerto a year ago, and it had its first performance last February in Philadelphia and New York, with the Philadelphia Orchestra playing under Eugene Ormandy and with Albert Spalding as soloist. Miss Posse[illegible]t's soloist, may be considered a member of the Boston Symphony family, for her husband is Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the orchestra.

Tonight's program ended with two works by Richard Wagner, proving once more that, though this festival's official and unofficial sympathies are emphatically anti-Nazi, no one confuses nazism with the music of the great German composers long since dead. The Wagner works were the prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture of "Tannhaeuser."

Concluding Program Listed

For the concluding program tomorrow afternoon Mr. Koussevitzky will direct Sibelius's Seventh symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony.

It has been announced that the Berkshire Music Center will open next year on July 6, and that the 1942 concerts will start on July 30. The announcement adds that the concerts will be held as usual on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, but it does not specify the length of the festival. It is a foregone conclusion that a three-week season is the minimum and it is possible that a fourth week may be added.

The war and its attendant uncertainty is giving the festival corporation and the Boston Symphony pause. The officials fear that rationing of gasoline might hurt attendance, for every one comes by car and there are as many as 3,000 to 4,000 autos at Tanglewood for a concert. On the other hand, it has been noted that more young people in their 'teens and twenties have attended this year's festival, and it is believed that this element forms a convincing nucleus for the increased audiences that must be counted upon for a longer festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 17 1941

A Musical Miracle

One would have needed to be a prophet of greater matters than musical trends to forecast, 20 or even 10 years ago, the amazing development of a great music center in Berkshire. Even 20 years ago, it is true, interest in music was growing rapidly, and the tendency to make a summer in the country more than a vacation had already begun. Summer classes in music, as in painting and other arts, were springing up at many places throughout New England. At Pittsfield the delightful festivals of chamber music long maintained by Mrs Coolidge made South Mountain, for a week every year, the Mecca of the musical world.

Yet when the first Berkshire Symphonic festival was held in 1934, with Henry Hadlay as conductor, it seemed a precarious adventure. How was a large audience to be assembled so far out in the country? How was it to be housed? What if it rained? Courage was needed, but it has been wonderfully rewarded, and the gift in 1937 of Tanglewood as the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra gave the festivals an ideal setting.

Yet even the artistic and popular success of these concerts could not have led to so amazing an expansion as that of recent years if world developments had not increasingly thrown musical America upon its own resources, with the aid of a great influx of foreign musicians escaping from a tormented Europe.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, whose great gifts as an interpreter of musical masterpieces gave the concerts high prestige, also deserves praise for his clairvoyant sense of the possibilities which these conditions would offer to the Berkshire festivals. Multitudes of young Americans who had been accustomed to spend their summers abroad were forced to stay at home, and Tanglewood offered them tuition under eminent masters under ideal vacation conditions.

Moreover, the number of people flocking to the resorts of New England because of the disturbed state of Europe was bound to increase, and the growing fame of Tanglewood warranted a long journey to hear such superlative concerts. To all these factors, to which may be added the excellent management of the festivals and the thoughtful care taken for the comfort of patrons, is due the astonishing fact that an auditorium designed for 6000 listeners is now called upon, at the festival which closes today, to make room, with the help of the beautiful lawns outside, for 12,000. The faith of the founders has borne splendid fruit.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 16 1941

250 Army Bandsmen Led by Koussevitzky At Tanglewood Event

Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt Makes Brief Address Among Cheers

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—Despite a pounding rain which started early in the afternoon and continued all evening, the Berkshire Symphonic festival and the Boston Symphony orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is conductor, presented last evening its gala benefit in behalf of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief society.

Russian-born Koussevitzky led 25 American army bandsmen in blood-tingling martial music opening the five-hour program.

His face flushed with emotion, the famed conductor, who recently became an American citizen, directed the soldier-musicians from Camp Edwards in Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Koussevitzky himself sounded the key note of the performance when he told the 8,000 who crowded the Music Shed that "we are witnessing, and in some degree we participate in, the act of stretching a hand of hope and help across the ocean—the hand of America holding the torch of freedom against the clenched, threatening hand of despotism and destruction."

An all-afternoon rain failed to dim the enthusiasm of the crowd which sloshed gaily over the lawns of the picturesque Tanglewood and cheered long and loud.

As early as 5:30, several thousands of bedraggled spectators were thronging the already sodden grounds of the Tanglewood estate to witness the opening of the evening's ceremonies, a short program by the combined bands of the 26th division and a parade of simultaneous performances of various units of the Berkshire Music Center. It was estimated that some 500 men from Camp Edwards were stationed on the grounds, with 250 playing in the military band under the direction of Chester Earl Whiting, chief bandmaster.

Halifax Sends Message

Principal guest of the benefit was Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who along with Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams college, Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of the Phillips Exeter academy and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared on the speakers' platform in the Music Shed during the "manifestation" portion of the program. Viscount Halifax, ambassador to the United States from Great Britain, was unable to appear as scheduled because of "pressing reasons of state." However a message from him was read by Jerome D. Greene, member of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The message read:

"Here, I would think, is an example, and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire us all who believe in those principles just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the President and the Prime Minister."

Mrs. Roosevelt Wildly Cheered

Mrs. Roosevelt, greeted by wild cheers and a standing audience, asserted that "men of good will working together will achieve unity." She emphasized that two English-speaking nations have joined together "not only in art, but to bring order out of chaos, to let free men pre-determine their own forms of government and to permit all to live a better and fuller life in the future."

Continuing with a personal salutation to the Berkshire symphonic festival and Dr. Koussevitzky, she said in effect that the development of the appreciation of art is a "sign that a people is coming of age" and that the government program in support of the arts, whether music or graphic, had helped in this direction.

Symbolizes What U. S. Is

Dr. Lewis Perry stated that the music of the festival is "not a mere sensuous selfish enjoyment but that it symbolizes what America is and what it may become." In commending Dr. Koussevitzky on his achievements, not only in respect to the growth of the Boston Symphony orchestra but in the realization of both the summer festival and the Berkshire Music Center, he said that "the message of the shed and of all of Tanglewood has been a message of aspiration, of courage, of unity."

"Freedom is our truth, and this is our fight for freedom."

In closing, he asserted that "guns, ships, planes, ammunition are necessary, but even in a mechanical age, real beliefs are more vital still."

Koussevitzky Speaks

Dr. Koussevitzky in his opening remarks said that "it is significant that our manifestation takes place in the heart of New England, and that today in New England the cause of Old England and the cause of America are merged into one."

"No one can deny that the spirit of the people of England is a great example in the history of the world. But let us not forget that the undaunted spirit of a people is proof of their faith in the justice of their cause." He further added that "the English nation holds that faith. In standing by and proclaiming our belief in England, we are helping our own nation. For the victory of freedom is also the victory of truth."

Following the manifestation, the crowds thronged to the tent pavilions to partake of hot plate suppers and box lunches. With early darkness, the only semblance of festivity was to be found in the numerous colored lights which surrounded the three main pavilions the inner lighting of the shed and the spot lights which featured the outer decorations on both shed and the small pavilion built on the base of flag pole which carried both the American and British flags.

"V-" Theme Song Played

A gala concert featuring the Boston Symphony orchestra, the advanced orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center and the bands of the 26th division formed the major musical portion of the program. As guest soloist Albert Spalding rendered the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto.

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first movement of the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, theme song of the British "V-for-Victory" campaign. Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Music Center led two movements, Mars and Venus, from "The Planets" of the English composer, Gustav Holst, and Hugh Ross, conductor of the Scola Cantorum led the festival chorus comprised of students of the center in two madrigals "Silver Swan" and "Long Live Fair Oriana" by Gibbons and Welkes respectively.

As grand finale the Overture 1812 of Tchaikovsky was played by the 400 musicians on the stage under the conductorship of Dr. Koussevitzky.

(Celine Koester).

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

AUG 16 1941

World Wide News Briefs

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 16—A benefit program at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and United States Army bandsmen for British war relief and the United Service Organizations today had been featured by messages of Anglo-American unity from Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the president.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1941

First Lady, Noted Conductor At Festival

—Republican Photo

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra (center), and Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, took leading roles in the gala benefit program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., last night. The proceeds were donated to the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. One of the highlights of the day was the directing by Russian-born Koussevitzky of 250 soldier-musicians from Camp Edwards in Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." (Story

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 16 1941

At Tanglewood

The inspiring way in which music bestrides the wide, deep cleavage in world thought is nowhere better illustrated than at Tanglewood where last year a Russian conductor (Russia then swung upon the Axis) drew a crowd that paid into British War Relief coffers more than $20,000 to hear German music played by an American symphony orchestra.

This year Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (he has now become an American citizen) sponsored another benefit, or as he calls it, "manifestation." His native land is now reckoned on the side of the democracies Again music of German origin is included on the program.

The United Service Organizations this year, along with British relief, are the beneficiaries. That even a larger sum than before was raised was scarcely to be doubted not only because Tanglewood audiences are breaking all records but because Mrs. Roosevelt and Viscount Halifax was among the speakers.

Not to be lost sight of is the fact that this is also the occasion of a demonstration of the summer's work at the Music Center. The vital educational functions undertaken by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with the Berkshire Festival prove that comparisons between Tanglewood and the famous Old World festivals are no longer in order.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1941

41

Tanglewood Benefit Nets USO and British $20,000

Waterdrenched Crowd of 8000 Jams Music Shed To Hear Mrs. Roosevelt And Witness Colorful Program

TANGLEWOOD.—Approximately 20,000 slightly water-soaked dollars will be divided between the USO and the British Relief as the result of last night's multi-ringed musical circus, held at Tanglewood in the face of intermittent rain that blew in from the south across the gray waters of Stockbridge Bowl.

8000 Crowd Shed

Despite the weather, 8000 people from all over the East, many laden with thermos bottles and picnic boxes, came to hear and see Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, principal speaker in the brief manifestation ceremonies; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as conductor not only of his own Boston Symphony Orchestra, but of the 250-piece band of the 26th Division; Elsa Maxwell as official number-drawer for prizes contributed to the benefit, and a procession of other attractions which filled the late afternoon and evening.

For many, the first event on the program was the high light of the benefit. Promptly at 5.30, Warrant Officer Chester Earl Whiting raised his baton over the 250 players of the combined bands of the 26th Division, massed in the colonnade at the northeast corner of the Shed. They played the "Washington Greys" march and followed it with the "William Tell" overture, both of which drew tremendous applause. Then Dr. Koussevitzky mounted the podium and proceeded to light a fire under both the band and the audience. The applause after "Semper Fidelis" was deafening, but it paled before the stamping and whistling and shouting that greeted the conductor and his soldier musicians after the last crashing notes of "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Programs Simultaneous

At 6, simultaneous programs were presented by three departments of the Berkshire Music Center. In the Shed, three student conductors put the Center orchestra, assisted by the chorus and student soloists, through their paces.

Tanglewood

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1941

First Lady, Noted Conductor At Festival

—Republican Photo

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra (center), and Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, took leading roles in the gala benefit program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., last night. The proceeds were donated to the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. One of the highlights of the day was the directing by Russian-born Koussevitzky of [illegible] musicians from Camp Edwards in Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." (Story

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 16 1941

At Tanglewood

The inspiring way in which music bestrides the wide, deep cleavage in world thought is nowhere better illustrated than at Tanglewood where last year a Russian conductor (Russia then swung upon the Axis) drew a crowd that paid into British War Relief coffers more than $20,000 to hear German music played by an American symphony orchestra.

This year Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (he has now become an American citizen) sponsored another benefit, or as he calls it, "manifestation." His native land is now reckoned on the side of the democracies Again music of German origin is included on the program.

The United Service Organizations this year, along with British relief, are the beneficiaries. That even a larger sum than before was raised was scarcely to be doubted not only because Tanglewood audiences are breaking all records but because Mrs. Roosevelt and Viscount Halifax was among the speakers.

Not to be lost sight of is the fact that this is also the occasion of a demonstration of the summer's work at the Music Center. The vital educational functions undertaken by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with the Berkshire Festival prove that comparisons between Tanglewood and the famous Old World festivals are no longer in order.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1941

41

Tanglewood Benefit Nets USO and British $20,000

Waterdrenched Crowd of 8000 Jams Music Shed To Hear Mrs. Roosevelt And Witness Colorful Program

TANGLEWOOD.—Approximately 20,000 slightly water-soaked dollars will be divided between the USO and the British Relief as the result of last night's multi-ringed musical circus, held at Tanglewood in the face of intermittent rain that blew in from the south across the gray waters of Stockbridge Bowl.

8000 Crowd Shed

Despite the weather, 8000 people from all over the East, many laden with thermos bottles and picnic boxes, came to hear and see Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, principal speaker in the brief manifestation ceremonies; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as conductor not only of his own Boston Symphony Orchestra, but of the 250-piece band of the 26th Division; Elsa Maxwell as official number-drawer for prizes contributed to the benefit, and a procession of other attractions which filled the late afternoon and evening.

For many, the first event on the program was the high light of the benefit. Promptly at 5.30, Warrant Officer Chester Earl Whiting raised his baton over the 250 players of the combined bands of the 26th Division, massed in the colonnade at the northeast corner of the Shed. They played the "Washington Greys" march and followed it with the "William Tell" overture, both of which drew tremendous applause. Then Dr. Koussevitzky mounted the podium and proceeded to light a fire under both the band and the audience. The applause after "Semper Fidelis" was deafening, but it paled before the stamping and whistling and shouting that greeted the conductor and his soldier musicians after the last crashing notes of "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Programs Simultaneous

At 6, simultaneous programs were presented by three departments of the Berkshire Music Center. In the Shed, three student conductors put the Center orchestra, assisted by the chorus and student soloists, through their paces.

Tanglewood

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 16 1941

AT TANGLEWOOD BENEFIT CONCERT

Photographed on the lovely grounds at Tanglewood yesterday were, left to right, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont and Rye, N. Y. Mrs. Edman and Mrs. Gould were cochairmen of the ticket committee for the British War Relief benefit yesterday and Mrs. Barrett was a member of the executive committee.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 18 1941

8TH SEASON ENDED AT TANGLEWOOD

13,000 Hear Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony at Close of the Music Festival

87,000 AT THE CONCERTS

Attendance Gain Noted This Year—Works by Sibelius and Prokofieff Given

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 17—A perfect day and a new record audience of about 13,000 men, women and a host of children brought the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood to a dazzling end today. Add to the weather, the beautiful site and eager disposition of the crowd, a program by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra which showed them both at their shining best and you have the measure of a brilliant farewell.

It is clear, and the figures are the best proof, that this festival is solidly established. Only the shadow of war or some other major catastrophe could halt this festival in its road to a dominant place in America's musical scene.

Consider the statistics. About 87,000 persons came from all over the nation—and some from other lands—to attend the nine concerts of this year's festival. Last year's festival, which was pronounced a success, drew 67,000 to a similar number of concerts. This year's budget was about $100,000, but income far exceeded expense as far as the festival proper was concerned. Almost $10,000 was taken in at the box office today for general admission.

Audience Cheers Works

But figures are only part of the story. The enthusiasm of this audience, which overflowed the shed, out on the vast lawn almost like a crowd on the Coney Island sands on a hot Sunday, is a vital element. This gathering, however, was quietly intent on the music. It gave expression to its holiday feeling only at the end of each composition, and especially at the close of today's concert. Then the thousands stood and cheered, waving handkerchiefs and recalling Mr. Koussevitzky for many minutes.

The music was made to order for Mr. Koussevitzky and his band, ordered, of course, by Mr. Koussevitzky. The program began with Sibelius's Seventh symphony, which gave the orchestra and conductor an opportunity to show their talents as lyricists on a broad scale. The compact simplicity of the score was set forth with eloquent directness; the colors were deep and mellow; the great climaxes were steadily and truly arrived at.

Then came the amusing and deft "Lieutenant Kije" suite of Serge Prokofieff. This was music in another vein—glittering, witty and mockingly lush. Conductor and orchestra knew how to convey the bite and irony of this music. One wonders whether Prokofieff, who is living somewhere in Russia, is still composing today in the sparkling, satiric style of which he is a contemporary master.

Tchaikovsky on Program

The program ended with Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony, the rhapsodic qualities of which are as meat and drink to Mr. Koussevitzky. The urgency of the performance seemed to make the same impression on today's spontaneously responsive gathering.

At last night's penultimate concert the largest works were by living composers: "A London Symphony," by Vaughan Williams, English composer, and the violin concerto by Samuel Barber, American. Mr. Koussevitzky and his players gave the gracious, evocative symphony of Mr. Williams a performance of spacious loftiness.

This is a sensitive, tasteful score. Its poetry has the voice of a generous singer; it is neither excessive nor puny in scope. The breadth and the good taste of its design were felicitously conveyed. Solo passages by the wind instruments and the concertmaster were expertly and colorfully played.

It does not matter whether Mr. Williams now admits a program for his symphony, or whether it should be called rightfully "A Symphony by a Londoner" instead of "A London Symphony." There was a feeling among many in the audience of 9,000 that here was a memorial in tone to the spirit of a city that cannot be crushed by bombs or incendiaries.

Violin Concerto Heard

Mr. Barber's concerto, which had its première last February, went well with the Williams symphony, for the young American's artistic sympathies seemed to be close to those of his English confrère. This is music both deeply felt and well-bred. Only in the last movement, a delightfully fresh moto perpetuo, is there the boldness that one expects from a young composer. Otherwise, Mr. Barber writes soberly, earnestly and feelingly.

Adherents of the more progressive camp of composers would call much of this work conservative and perhaps old-hat. But we can see no harm in having Mr. Barber pursue his own path—even a backward one—if that is how he feels, and there is no doubt of his integrity.

Ruth Posselt, as the violin soloist, gave an expressive performance of the work; only in the light, graceful third movement did her tone and style seem rather small for the immense enclosure. Mr. Koussevitzky led a full-blooded and comprehending reading that must have been a joy to the composer, who shared in the audience's applause at the end.

Officials of the Berkshire Festival Corporation and the Boston Symphony may well say that, come what may, the 1941 fete has made a mark to aim at in the future.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 18 1941

Music Festival In Berkshires Ends 8th Year

Record Attendance at Last Concert Carries Total for the Series to 95,500

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Aug. 17.—The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed at the Music Shed at Tanglewood this afternoon when an audience of 13,000 left the previous record of 11,000 for attendance, made last Sunday, far in the rear. Clear, cool weather had proved a stimulating factor in bringing forth this afternoon's record gathering and what was also, in all probability, a record number of cars on the roads.

For their closing program Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed Jean Sibelius's Seventh Symphony, Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Applause after the playing of new music is more likely to be cordially polite than vigorously fervent, but a feature of last night's concert was the unusually extensive display of enthusiasm which followed the performance of Samuel Barber's violin concerto. The plaudits lasted for several minutes and the Pennsylvania composer was called to the stage to share several bows with Ruth Posselt, who was the soloist, and with Dr. Koussevitzky. Both had done very well by Mr. Barber's music.

Miss Posselt's Playing

Miss Posselt, who is the wife of the Boston symphony's concert master, Richard Burgin, is a young Boston violinist who has been heard in New York as recitalist and orchestral soloist and who in the latter capacity has introduced several modern concertos. Her playing yesterday was of notably consistent merit; it was marked by unerring and impressive technical skill and deftness and a tone which preserved its appealing quality, its evenness of texture and fluency throughout its compass, while her interpretation told of well grounded musicianship and artistry and understanding of the score. The conductor and orchestra set forth the concerto with the intent vitality and high standard of performance which they also brought to Ralph Vaughan Williams's London Symphony at the beginning of the program and to Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal" and "Tannhaueser" overture at the close.

Mr. Barber's concerto completed thirteen months ago, was introduced to Philadelphia and New York last February by the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, with Albert Spalding as soloist. There is nothing refractory in this score. His thematic ideas are outspokenly lyric in character and his writing for the violin generally grateful and idiomatic. The solo instrument is allowed to sing and also to display agility.

Vaughn Williams Work

The orchestration is good, but there were a few times when the composer seemed to give the soloist a little unnecessary work in playing over sonorous passages which absorbed the violin's tones instead of providing them with a contrast or complement. One could also relish the melodies generously provided by Mr. Barber in the first two movements and at the same time feel that their effectiveness might have been enhanced had the composer interspersed some more pungent material and thus increased the variety of the work as a whole. Comments such as this, however, should not withdraw attention from the positive assets of a noteworthy American work, and the reaction of yesterday's listeners was gratifying.

A symphony associated with London can be regarded as a particularly appropriate offering just now, but the Vaughan Williams work has long shown its independence of the need of any extra musical stimulus toward public favor. The twenty years which have elapsed since its American premiere have proved its durability, have shown that it gains by rehearing and that it can stand on its musical merits, whether one prefers to hear it with Albert Coates's detailed program in mind or listen to it in a more absolute way as a symphony by a Londoner, to quote a later title suggested by the composer. The performance under Dr. Koussevitsky was memorably expressive, and the close of the "Tannhaeuser" overture gave the concert an imposingly sonorous conclusion.

In spite of the shower at the start of the program, the audience numbered 9,000.

Sibelius and Prokofieff

Today's program was ably arranged from the standpoint of variety, contrast and cumulative effectiveness. The meditative breadth of Sibelius's latest symphony was followed by the tunefulness and humor of the suite which Prokofieff derived from his incidental music for a Soviet film, shown seven years ago, which has an imaginary officer for its title role. Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, whatever one may think of its essential merits as music, provides a proclamative and climatic close. The Prokofieff work gave the audience some unusual visual diversion in watching an assistant conductor on the southern margin of the shed transmit the beat to the distant player of the opening trumpet fanfare. The suite is not momentous music, but yet often witty music that can be thoroughly enjoyed.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, as on former occasions, proved at home in Sibelius's music, and the color, sonorous pomp and emotional effect of their playing of the Tchaikovsky Symphony was none the less telling because it was predictable. At the end the excited audience gave the conductor and instrumentalists long salvos of applause; some shouted "encore." But after several recalls Dr. Koussevitzky finally motioned to the orchestra to leave the stage, and another festival had completed its record.

Talk of the addition of a fourth week next summer, which would be a natural consequence of this summer's record patronage, has been current here for the last few days, but no decision will be made until the festival trustees have met. The additional series, if decided upon, would probably follow the others in the third or fourth week of August.

Roosevelt

Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, 56, wife of the President, has long been known as a writer on current affairs and personal observations. She writes daily the column below which she calls "My Day."

Girls can serve as nurses

HYDE PARK, N. Y.—I took my annual pilgrimage night before last to Stockbridge, Mass., to hear the fourth program of the Berkshire Music Festival. In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, excerpts were played from his Requiem Mass. His Symphony in G. Minor also was played and, after the intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica."

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Assn., of which Horace Hunt is the conductor, sang the Mass and the whole program was a most finished and beautiful performance. I enjoyed every minute of it. Even though we did not return until rather late, for it takes us two hours to drive from here, still it was well worth it.

WE HAD the pleasure of speaking with Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky for a few minutes during the intermission. My admiration for his work increases every year.

On the way up, we met Mrs. Henry Morgenthau Jr. and her daughter, Joan, and had a picnic supper together in a field on a dirt road leading off from Route 7, before we reach Great Barrington. One of the boys with us carelessly put his hand on the wire which surrounded part of the field we were in and discovered that it was charged. I suppose it was intended to keep erring cattle who attempted to jump the fence, within proper limits.

We picked up everything very carefully like good Boy Scouts, not even leaving chicken bones about, for fear the dogs or cattle might find them. We were very grateful for the nice, grassy spot under the shade of a tree and the view of the gently flowing stream below us.

I HAVE just been told that there is a great shortage of young women entering the nursing schools. At this time nurses are much needed, and it has always seemed to me that it is good training for any girl to take, whether she means to take up nursing as a profession or not. At the present time, the girls in training release nurses already trained, for duty where they are needed.

If later these girls marry, or have no reason for earning a living by nursing, but wish to serve in some way in their community, there are innumerable opportunities to use the knowledge they have acquired in the service of a great many people. Therefore, if any young woman feels she wishes to do something for her country in the present crisis, and is willing to work hard, put in long hours, and sacrifice her leisure during these years of stress, I can think of few things as useful as taking a course in one of our good training schools for nurses.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
AUG 9 - 1941

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER
AUG 20 1941

ELKINS, W. VA.
INTERMOUNTAIN
AUG 20 1941

HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS
AUG 19 1941

DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS
AUG 20 1941

MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES
AUG 20 1941

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS
AUG 19 1941

RENO, NEV.
STATE JOURNAL
AUG 21 1941

MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
AUG 19 1941

HOUSTON, TEX.
PRESS
AUG 19 1941

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
AUG 19 1941

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 20 1941

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
AUG 20 1941

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
ADVERTISER
AUG 20 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
AUG 19 1941

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
EXPONENT
AUG 20 1941

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
AUG 20 1941

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
AUG 19 1941

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
AUG 19 1941

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
AUG 19 1941

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 19 1941

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 20 1941

READING, PA.
TIMES
AUG 20 1941

EVANSVILLE, IND.
PRESS
AUG 19 1941

ABERDEEN, S. D.
NEWS
AUG 20 1941

PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
AUG 21 1941

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 19 1941

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON
AUG 20 1941

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 20 1941

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS-SENTINEL
AUG 19 1941

FORT WORTH, TEX.
PRESS
AUG 19 1941

FORT SMITH, ARK.
TIMES-RECORD
AUG 21 1941

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 19 1941

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL
AUG 20 1941

KINGSTON, N.Y.
LEADER
AUG 19 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 19 1941

LYNN, MASS.
TELEGRAM-NEWS
AUG 19 1941

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
AUG 20 1941

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
AUG 19 1941

EL PASO, TEXAS
HERALD-POST
AUG 9 - 1941

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 9 - 1941

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
AUG 9 - 1941

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 11 1941

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1941

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
AUG 9 - 1941

HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1941

CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
AUG 10 1941

43

My Day

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

Hyde Park, Monday.

Yesterday we had a quiet and peaceful Sunday. The high spot of the day was a talk with the President in Washington after his return. I shall be seeing him there on Tuesday evening, but I could hardly wait to hear some of the details of his trip and some news of our two sons. He did not know that the destroyer on which Franklin Jr. is an ensign, would be anywhere near him, so it was a pleasant surprise when he was told it was part of the group of ships in attendance. I can well imagine what it meant to both Elliott and Franklin Jr. to have this chance with their father.

I forgot to tell you yesterday about the gala benefit given under the auspices of the Berkshire Music Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass.

Not even the rain, which would ordinarily have spoiled most festivals, had any effect on this one. Crowds were there. The music was perfect and the speeches, including Lord Halifax's which had to be read since he could not be present to deliver it, seemed to give the audience pleasure.

We were whisked away for dinner with kind Mr. and Mrs. Myron Taylor and had a delightful time, though it nearly broke my heart to come in after Albert Spaulding had begun to play. We were able, however, to hear most of the evening concert and went home very happy that we had had the opportunity to take part in this benefit, given for our united service organizations and the British war relief.

I have just received a cook book, compiled by the American friends of France, called "Specialties de la Maison." The preface is written by no less a person than Louis Bromfield and I must quote one statement: "A man indifferent to food not only is uncivilized, he is without a soul."

So it is fitting that the proceeds of the sale of this book should go to: "Help those who are fighting for civilization, and in civilization the art of cooking holds a high place." The illustrations by Alajalov will certainly catch your eye. The jacket, by Clement Hurd, should surely attract you so that you cannot pass by without buying this book for your cook bookshelf.

Today I am driving with Mrs. Lyman Delano to the Girl Scout encampment near Springfield, Mass., but I shall have to tell you about that tomorrow.—E. R.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS
AUG 19 1941

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
AUG 19 1941

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
AUG 19 1941

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
AUG 20 1941

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
EXPONENT
AUG 10 1941

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
AUG 11 1941

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 12 1941

EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER
AUG 10 1941

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 9 - 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1941

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1941

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
AUG 9 - 1941

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 9 - 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
AUG 9 - 1941

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
TIMES
AUG 20 1941

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
AUG 19 1941

DURHAM, N. C.
SUN
AUG 20 1941

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 20 1941

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 9 - 1941

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
TIMES
AUG 11 1941

MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES
AUG 10 1941

EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 11 1941

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 11 1941

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS-SENTINEL
AUG 9 - 1941

WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN
AUG 9 - 1941

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
AUG 11 1941

CINCINNATI, O.
POST
AUG 9 - 1941

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 16 1941

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
AUG 9 - 1941

ELKINS, W. VA.
INTERMOUNTAIN
AUG 11 1941

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 16 1941

BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
AUG 11 1941

WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
TWIN CITY SENTINEL
AUG 11 1941

DURHAM, N. C.
SUN
AUG 11 1941

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1941

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS
CALLER
AUG 12 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 18 1941

44.

13,000 HEAR FINALE OF MUSIC FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky Ends Eighth Annual Series.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Stockbridge, Aug. 18.—Since no festival at Tanglewood could be complete without a new attendance record, it may be duly noted that the concert yesterday afternoon which completed the eighth annual series by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony produced two of them. The throng of 13,000 which streamed into the grounds and spread itself over much of the surrounding lawn, as well as filling the shed to overflowing, was the largest for a single concert in the long span of the festival's history; and it swelled to 87,000 the total for the nine concerts. This was a more than 25 per cent increase over last year's total, which was the previous high.

However, these prosaic words hardly cover the quality of the occasion, the rich golden sonority of the orchestra's playing of a program that was, inimitably, Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky. As seems to be a fashion these days (it happened at Lewisohn Stadium also a week ago), there was a Russo-Finnish juxtaposition, with Sibelius and Prokofiev joined in artistic fraternity, though they stand today as citizens of enemy countries. The first was represented by his seventh symphony and the second by his film suite, "Lt. Kije."

No subscriber to the Boston Orchestra, or phonograph enthusiast, for that matter, requires to be told of the style and virtuosity with which Mr. Koussevitzky fills the patterns of these works. Nevertheless there seemed to be an added surge of power in his playing of the symphony, a more pointed humor in the treatment of Prokofiev's memorial to a mythical hero which made the ear tingle.

Even for those who consider this symphony a repetitious, unsatisfactory restatement of much that can be found elsewhere in Sibelius (the writer is one of them) there was much to absorb the attention in the mere physical sound of the instruments, the superb blending of them by the conductor. The series was concluded by a stunningly forceful and virile performance of the Tchaikovsky fifth symphony.

The patrons of the Saturday evening program were accompanied to their chairs by a shower which ceased soon after the concert began, but probably contributed to hold the attendance down to a mere 9,000. It began with the "London Symphony" of Vaughan Williams, proceeded with the Samuel Barber violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and concluded with two Wagner excerpts.

There has been no discussion of plans for next season's series as yet, the hazard of long-distance planning in these days being what it is. According to semi-official sources, it is not likely that the organization will embark on any ambitious plans of expansion in length of festival or variety of offerings, however.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 18 1941

13,000 Hear Last Concert of Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Leads Works of Russian and Finnish Composers

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 18.—The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close yesterday afternoon with the performance of three works before an audience estimated at 13,000. This brings the total attendance for the whole series to 106,000 persons, quite a handful of customers for any three-week festival.

If America had been looking forward to the day when a music festival of universal appeal, offering everything in the field of the art, this is at least the nucleus for it, and the credit may be laid largely to the tireless efforts of Serge Koussevitzky.

As far as yesterday's program went, Mr. Koussevitzky proved eminently in the vein, speaking for his program devising and for the magnificent performances accorded the music by his men of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

Scores of Implications.

Witness the combination of pieces played: The Sibelius Seventh Symphony, the Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite and the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky. There are implications by the score—and that's no pun—in the assortment. Sibelius, the Finn, whose country is fighting that of Prokofieff, the Russian, and mixed up in the proceedings is another Russian, Tschaikowsky, who came long before modern political associations.

Be that as it may, there was splendid playing all through. Perhaps, there may have been some who took their Prokofieff with a touch of "so what?", but they certainly could not have missed the delicious irony running rampant in the music. And if they did—so what?

Sibelius originally called this one movement work of his a Fantasia Sinfonica, which seems better suited to it. Symphonies in one movement don't jell, speaking of titles. Anyway, that's the way it is and who's to change it now?

The Sibelius genius is at work here, and no mistake. The manner in which he takes simple themes, puts them through the most sinuous weavings and, at the same time, makes sense and perfectly fine music is something for the younger generations of composers to look up to.

* * *

Four-Piece Program.

The Saturday night concert offered a four-number list. To open there was the Vaughan Williams London Symphony. This was followed by the Samuel Barber Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt essaying the solo part and, finally, two Wagnerian items, the prelude to Parsifal and the overture to Tannhaeuser.

Mr. Barber is a composer to watch. Not that he hasn't done enough to have warranted watching all along. He is now the proud possessor of several important performances of works of his and, no doubt, more coming.

The Concerto, which Miss Posselt and the orchestra, not to forget Mr. Koussevitzky, did unqualified justice to, is a finely knit, thoroughly workmanlike job of writing and the best feature of all is the individuality that shines through its intricate web.

The London Symphony needs no encomiums at this late date. One may only report that under the tender ministrations of Mr. Koussevitzky it emerged in all its picturesque, yet somber beauty.

* * *

Wagner Well Treated.

Wagner is one composer who rarely gets a bad reading from the Bostonians. You can imagine the splendor of their playing in the Parsifal and Tannhaeuser pieces.

The crowds here have enjoyed the programs immensely. In fact, great numbers of people make Tanglewood their day-long headquarters, surveying the beauties of the scenery, and, so to speak, those of the music. In more ways than one the Festival has been a huge success.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 18 1941

The Note Book

By J. H.

The Uncrowned King

IT was my privilege and pleasure to have a front seat directly in front of Koussevitzky the night of the benefit, and thus to study him at close range. What a man! Into direction he throws, unreservedly, everything he has and that is a very great deal. His facial expressions are a study. There is perfect unity in all he does, every motion of a hand, every wiggle of a finger, every word spoken above the tumult of the night, every gesture, has its significant meaning. Nothing is wasted. Such energy, such poise, such action, such tempo! And to read a score and to sense what was in the mind and heart and spirit of the composer way back there over the reach of the musical years! What temerity, what confidence, what perfect confidence, what insight and understanding, what weird prescience! Interpretation attains apogee here. I cannot think of the Festival without the contribution of this inexplicable and matchless man. He commands many of the absolutes. One of these, and not the least, is harmony. I wish I could marshal language that, in some measure, would illustrate his genius and words that would be the mirror of his fame.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 18 1941

Boston Ladies and Stadium Sadies Tchaikowsky Fans Under the Sky

By HENRY SIMON

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 18.—A couple of weeks ago Mark Schubart and Martin Harris made a brief survey for PM and found that overwhelmingly the most popular composer at Lewisohn Stadium this summer was Tchaikowsky. Apparently the same truth holds for the carriage trade at the Berkshire Festival, which closed here yesterday afternoon, as for the subway and bus trade at City College. The afternoon's last number was the Tchaikowsky Fifth Symphony, and by far the largest crowd that had ever attended one of these concerts turned up—an estimated 13,000. Almost half of these had no seats, but sprawled on the grass outside the shed on blankets, overcoats and newspapers.

"It's always like that," said one of the festival officials. "Maybe you think Tchaikowsky is old hat [I don't], but he certainly packs 'em in."

The fact that it was a beautiful, cool Sunday afternoon may also have had something to do with it. Again, it might have been the fact that conductor Serge Koussevitzky squeezes the last ounce of sentiment and drama from symphonies—that is, the last ounce he can without becoming mawkish.

Changing the time and exaggerating retards isn't out of bounds for him, but it's got to sound good. With his magnificent orchestra and the perfect acoustics of the music shed, it always does. The fashionable audience stood up on its hind legs at the end—or at least on its benches—and cheered and yelled as Mr. Koussevitzky, nattily but unconductorially dressed in a smart brown business suit, amiably waved farewell.

For Maestro Koussevitzky's a great showman as well as a great conductor. His movements interpret the music for the audience, even though that is not his purpose in making them. When he wants the band to play more loudly and with passion, his forearm develops a violent circular motion so that the sound seems to be shaken right out of his sleeve. He signals entrances with his left arm, like a southpaw catching a runner off third, beating time simultaneously with his right. He faces the first fiddles or turns to the basses squarely and dramatically—and he sings along. Loud, too, in baritone that is nearer the pitch than Toscanini's tenor.

He's a good program-builder. The first half of yesterday afternoon's bill contrasted the one-movement Sibelius Seventh and the Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije suite. The symphony is a long, sturdy and rather somber "profession of faith," as the composer called it; the suite is derived from one of the most engaging and wittiest scores ever written for a motion picture. Top that off with the Tchaikowsky Fifth and you have earnestness, humor and drama in about ideal proportions for a closing concert.

Saturday night he didn't have quite the same luck, for the new Samuel Barber violin concerto, very ably played by Ruth Posselt, lacked dramatic contrast with the Vaughan Williams London Symphony that preceded it. Preliminary rain and the less popular program held the crowd down to 9000, not a bad showing, considering. But Mr. Koussevitzky, aided by clearing weather, sent everyone home in a glow with a Tannhauser overture the like of which I have never heard for richness of sound and building up of climax.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
AUG 18 1941

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 18 1941

Berkshire Festival Ends As 13,000 Overflow Shed For Russo-Finn Concert

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., August 17—(AP)—The eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which broke records for attendance, came to a close today with Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony presenting a Russo-Finnish program.

Although the "Music Shed" at Tanglewood seats only 6,000 persons, there were 13,000 in the audience which spread a hundred yards back on the lawn.

This year's series of nine concerts were attended by 87,000 persons—exceeding last year's record by 20,000. In addition, a benefit performance last Friday drew 8,500, and 10,500 persons heard the three Saturday morning rehearsals, at which Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, gave brief comment on the music played.

The extreme interest shown by town folk in the festival is demonstrated by the way year-'round residents, and even some of the summer visitors, open their homes to persons unable to find accommodations in such historic inns as the Red Lion Inn here and the Curtis Inn at Lenox. One Lenox householder this week rented each of his eight rooms, and with his wife slept on cots in the woodshed.

Today's wildly applausive audience heard a cohesive and brilliant interpretation of Sibelius's Seventh Symphony, a performance which once again established Dr. Koussevitzky as the high priest of Sibelius in the country.

Before intermission there was Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite. The festival came to a rousing close with the Fifth Tchaikowsky Symphony—another of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites, and for a good reason. It is music which he invariably recreates fresh for the ears of his hearers, although it would be difficult to find music more familiar to concert goers.

Next year's festival certainly will be played, officials said today, unless international conditions unexpectedly interfere. "It depends on the fate of Hitler," one officer said this afternoon. The festival budget was met, with substantial margin to be put into improvements," he added.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 18 1941

Tanglewood Crowd Thunders Approval

Eighth Annual Berkshire Festival Closes With Record-Smashing Attendance

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The curtain on the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival was lowered yesterday afternoon with great difficulty.

Records Smashed

A record-sized audience just would not release the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader Serge Koussevitzky, from the cordial grasp of its unceasing applause. The final concert, the ninth in three week ends, offered a program which was mostly apple-pie for the crowds, judging from the way they ate it up, and it was just as luscious a dish for the orchestra, from the way the players attacked it: A Sibelius symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the Tschaikovsky fifth.

The attendance at the closing concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival smashed all records. It was more than 13,000 bringing the total for the nine concerts to 87,000. Counting the USO-British War Relief benefit Friday and the three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total attendance was about 106,000. Last year's attendance for the nine concerts was 67,000 and counting the benefit concert and three Saturday morning rehearsals, the grand total was about 87,000.

The weather for Tanglewood concerts naturally is an important element. There was cause to grumble at this final week end; Saturday night rain preceded the concert and a chill in the air pervaded the Shed for the duration of the program. Fortunately the audience had taken precautionary measures, but even then muffled coughs were noticeable all about. Yesterday afternoon the sky was bright and clear, but the temperature was not up to standard. The final brace of concerts, however, were the most generally satisfying of all. There has been comment, more than usual this year, about programs. The main point brought up was the withdrawal from early-announced lists of several pieces which would have been Festival first-times. But Saturday night, except for a couple of beautiful Wagner fragments, everything was new. Vaughn Williams "London" symphony opened the concert. Williams, like so many of his fellow English composers, seems to have mastered the cool,

The BSF President Speaks

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, right, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, photographed in the Shed with two friends at yesterday's intermission.

Festival

Continued From First Page

reposeful mood. Not that they do not have their turbulent moments, but they do have a distinguishable atmosphere at their command, and it was from this that the symphony drew some of its character. Williams states that the title is misleading; that "symphony by a Londoner" would be more to the point. The clear transparency of the music was executed with a sotto voce which, especially in the strings, remained remarkably round and balanced. The device of using the distant sound of the Westminster chimes as the final coda of the symphony is a master touch on Williams' part. There was a long moment of tense silence after the final sound had evaporated which indicated the spell which had been cast by the interpretation. There then followed one of those demonstrations which are part of the spectacle which is Tanglewood. Granted that the music merits all the approval, the combination of several elements at Festival concerts seems to remove inhibitions from men and women otherwise normally restrained or introversial. These wild expressions occurred twice more in this same evening. At the conclusion of the program and following the concerto for violin with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Barber's Concerto

The Barber violin concerto is of this year's vintage, having been introduced by Spalding in Philadelphia only six months ago. It is in three movements of which the first two are definite additions to the literature for the instruments. Of the last movement as much can not be said. A perpetual motion idea, even though played with meticulous technic by Miss Posselt, and equal virtuosity by the orchestra, it has not sufficient musical value. The other movements offer wide and grateful opportunities for the soloist, although there is not enough development matter. Miss Posselt played with opulent tone, a sure and facile left hand, and a bow, except for those instances where she was seduced into too much pressure in the many string-crossings of the first movement, which brought out a virile and confident expression of the music. Barber accompanied the soloist and the conductor from the wings on the unending recalls Miss Posselt won for herself and the music. Among the innumerable mutual felicitations, the soloist clasped the hand of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, to convey through him her appreciation of the orchestra's splendid accompaniment. He acknowledged it by a courtly gesture, a kiss of the hand, which had in it a delightfully unashamed extra fervor, the respectful esteem of a fellow artist with additional uxorious homage.

Yesterday afternoon the final demonstration following the Tschaikovsky symphony exceeded any that the most faithful Festival attendants could recall. There was reason for it, too. Koussevitzky laid his Tschaikovsky on with a trowel, with a prodigious extravagance which brought out the faintest delineation of its emotional pattern. The orchestra played as though doubly inspired. Climax after climax was reached with telling effect.

A Symphonic Fantasy

The Sibelius choice was the last symphony, the seventh. This is played in one movement without pause, and is not really a symphony. Sibelius once intended to label it a symphonic fantasy. It resembles most the form in which Richard Strauss wrote so successfully—the tone-poem. It rambles on without symphonic design, and suggests imaginative incidents which possibly the composer had in mind. This kind of music has a faculty which Virgil Thomson described once so aptly as having meditative possibilities. What could be more gratifying than to hear this type of music which, because of its indefiniteness, conjures up in each one's mind fictional excursions into lands of romance and adventure. Koussevitzky worked most arduously on this; he was in excellent voice, and in some of the pianissimo passages, the orchestra was plainly audible through his untrained baritone.

Prokofieff's huge joke "Lieutenat Kije" was played four years ago on a similar Sunday afternoon. Indeed this could not be half so much fun if played at night or completely indoors. The trumpet calls, heralding the approach, and later indicating the departure of this jolly but nonexistent character, came from the far edge of the adjoining field. The wit of this miniature suite was a perfect escape between the sober Sibelius and the self-pitying Tschaikovsky.

The history of this Festival will signal, first of all, the phenomenal attendance records, 87,000 in nine concerts. This will no doubt overshadow one feature which, nevertheless, is more important: The standard of performance. So long as the Boston orchestra and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky, continue to strive and to expend their best efforts, which happen to be about as good as there are on this planet, they will continue to merit all the unbelievable audiences and the lavish appreciation they have enjoyed.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 18 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends in Russo-Finnish Program

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 17—(AP) The eighth Berkshire symphonic festival, which broke records for attendance, came to a close today with Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony presenting a Russo-Finnish program.

Altnough the "music shed" at Tanglewood seats only 6,000 persons, there were 13,000 in the audience which spread a hundred yards back on the lawn.

This year's nine concerts were attended by 87,000 persons—exceeding last year's record by 20,000. In addition, a benefit performance last Friday drew 8,500, and 10,500 persons heard the three Saturday morning rehearsals, at which Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, furnished brief comment on the music played.

The extreme interest shown by town folk in the festival is demonstrated by the way year 'round residents, and even some of the summer visitors, open their homes to persons unable to find accomdations in such historic inns as the Red Lion inn here and the Curtis nn at Lenox. One Lenox householder this week rented each of his eight rooms, and with his wife slept on cots in the wood shed.

Today's wildly applausive audience, heard a cohesive and brilliant interpretation of Sibelius' seventh symphony, a performance which once again established Dr. Koussevitzky as the high priest of Sibelius in the country.

Before intermission there was Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite. The festival came to a rousing close with the Fifth Tchaikowksy symphony—another of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites, and for a good reason. It is music which he invariably recreates fresh for the ears of his hearers, although it would be difficult to find music more familiar to concert goers.

Next year's festival will certainly be held, officials said today, unless international conditions unexpectedly interfere. "It depends on the fate of Hitler," one officer said this afternoon. The festivale budget was met "with a substantial margin to be put into improvements," he added.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 18 1941

Berkshire Musical Festival Ends After Record Attendance

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17 (AP).—The eighth Berkshire symphonic festival, which broke records for attendance, came to a close today with Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony presenting a Russo-Finnish program. Altho the "music shed" at Tanglewood seats only 6,000 persons, there were 13,000 in the audience.

This year's nine concerts were attended by 87,000 persons—exceeding last year's record by 20,000. In addition, a benefit performance last Friday drew 8,500, and 10,500 persons heard the three Saturday morning rehearsals. Next year's festival will certainly be held, officials said today, unless international conditions unexpectedly interfere.

45.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 18 1941

Tanglewood Events Attended by 105,000

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Lenox, Mass. — Another Berkshire Festival, the eighth, is now history and in view of only those hazards which are now on the horizon, it is entirely possible that this was one of the peaks of the Tanglewood record.

Some 13,000 people heard the final concert on Sunday and they drove about 5,000 cars a total of a good many miles more than gasoline rationing would permit. However, the festival is now successfully concluded and it is too soon to worry about next year.

To dispose of the statistical angle, series A and B together drew 57,000 people and series C 30,000. Adding the number of those who came for the benefit concert on Friday and those who attended Saturday morning rehearsals, the figure rises to 105,000. Complete data is not yet available but the sum realized for British relief and USO will be in excess of $20,000, only slightly less than last year in spite of the rain.

Old Favorites

The final program comprised the Tanglewood favorites, Symphony No. 7 of Sibelius, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. It was the third appearance for each of them on these programs.

The Sibelius symphony was aptly accompanied by the susurrant obbligato of waving branches, for a strong breeze had sprung up. This work with repetition seems more and more to summarize the Sibelius dialect. Not only are there intimations of his other compositions to be heard but it is the acme of his style. Koussevitzky is the supreme Sibelius interpreter and his orchestra this time fulfilled all his demands.

Finn and Russian rubbed elbows in perfect amity on this program. The Prokofieff fantasy was as delightful as ever. There is an air of unreality about the offstage trumpet as played at Tanglewood that is just the right touch for this immortal characterization.

Heard From the Lawn

The Fifth of Tschaikowsky as done last year provoked such a deal of talk that it is easy to understand why it was programmed again. This time your reviewer as a professional obligation chose to hear the performance from the lawn with the idea of finding out how much the lawn sitters get for their $1.50. Of course, they can hear the music. But to say that they get full benefit of the detail and polish of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to pretend. Especially on a day like yesterday, with a breeze blowing, effects are frequently blurred or erased. But 6,000 music lovers (that was the number of general admissions Sunday) can't be wrong. And Tanglewood is a sort of elysium any way you look at it.

Saturday's Concert

Ruth Posselt garnered all the honors Saturday night. Playing Samuel Barber's Violin Concerto, she made an easy conquest of her audience. Dr. Koussevitzky paternally took her hand in both of his; with the composer all three exchanged felicitations. The concert master, who led the orchestra in applauding her, kissed the virtuoso's hand. (She happens to be Mrs. Richard Burgin).

With most violinists you first have to like violin playing before you like their particular brand of it, but Miss Posselt draws from her instrument consistently a stream of tone that is pleasurable and satisfying, without regard to its diction. It might be compared to the sensuous pleasure of listening to a euphonious and well-modulated voice speaking in a foreign tongue. But for those who do understand the tonal language, Miss Posselt's violin has an extraordinary eloquence. She is a sturdy player with a generous, warm-hearted tone. Mr. Barber's Concerto had a compelling advocate.

There is nothing esoteric about his composition. It is couched in simple, direct terms, melodically and harmonically, one of its fundaments being a reliance upon arpeggio material. It has zest, optimism and an engaging loquacity. The finale is an excellent display piece.

Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony" received an affectionate interpretation and was listened to raptly. The bell tones of Big Ben endow the closing bars with a drama now that was beyond the designs of the composer when he wrote this work. Although he repudiated a descriptive program published in its behalf this symphony cannot help but put the audience in a mood to look for literary suggestions. But it is one of the enduring rewards of music that the best of it permits us to hear what we want to hear, in other words to listen wishfully.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 18 1941

Record Audience Closes Berkshire Music Festival

13,000 Persons, Bringing Three-Series Total for Eighth Annual Event to 106,000, Give Serge Koussevitzky Most Enthusiastic Demonstration to Date at Tanglewood, Recalling Him to Stage Six Times at Conclusion of Sunday Afternoon's Sibelius-Prokofieff-Tschaikowski Program — 5,000 Cars Recorded.

A record-breaking attendance, 13,000 persons, marked Sunday afternoon's closing concert of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, where Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony orchestra in a triumphant finale, comprising compositions of Sibelius, Prokofieff and Tschaikowski.

Recalled Six Times

Demonstrative of the enthusiasm with which the audience received the final concert was the applause, cheering and handkerchief waving by which Koussevitzky was recalled to the stage six times. The demonstration has yet to be equalled at Tanglewood or any other Western Massachusetts music center.

The Sunday attendance figure, supplemented by an audience of 12,000 persons at Saturday's programs brought the total attendance for the past three weeks to 106,000, according to figures posted at the press headquarters by George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation.

Saturday night's concert, the last of the season's evening programs, found general admissions cut down by showers. By admission time, however, the skies had cleared. The program featured but one symphonic work, the London symphony by a contemporary composer, Ralph Vaughan Williams. Also included on the program were Samuel Barber's Concerto for violin and orchestra, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

Weather Favorable

Fair weather, however, favored yesterday afternoon's concert and the lawn audience outnumbered the patrons in the music shed by several hundred persons. Sibelius' Seventh symphony was separated from the rhapsodic fifth symphony of Tschaikowski by a witty contemporary production, "Lieutenant Kijie," by Serge Prokofieff. Smiles played over the faces of the attentive audience as the orchestra presented a musical biography of the mythical military officer of the Czar; but the emotions that greeted Koussevitzky's presentation of the Tschaikowski symphony were held in sacred reign until the completion of the piece, when the audience broke out with an exuberance hitherto not witnessed at Stockbridge. Six times Koussevitzky left the stage and six times he was recalled, each time acknowledging the acclaim with a dignified indifference of omnipotence which is his in all things musical at Tanglewood.

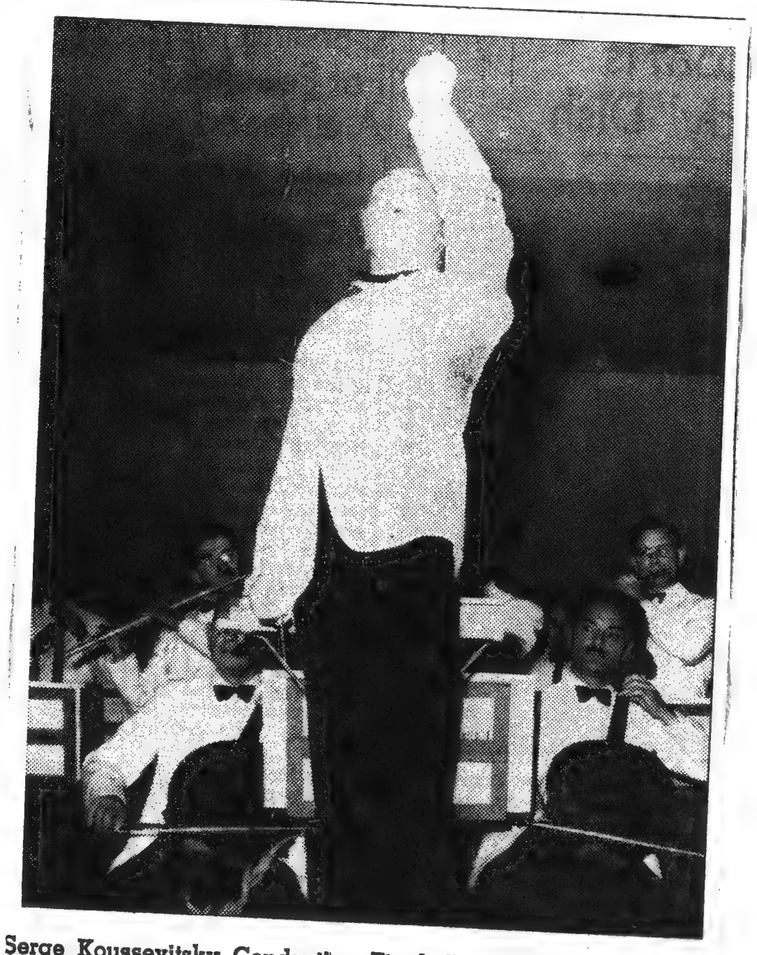
Saturday morning the rehearsal of the orchestra, which was open to the public, attracted several thousand persons. Various aspects of the music were commented on by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. Musical activity Saturday on the part of the students, most of whom were preparing for departure to their homes, was somewhat curtailed. All the same, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the members of the music department gave an informal concert in the theater-concert hall, with Paul Hindemith, resident instructor in composition, participating as both conductor and tambourinist. Others conducting the student orchestra were Malcolm Holmes and Leopold Schrade. Again Olin Downes served as commentator.

5,000 Automobiles

Late-comers to the Sunday concert were unable to find parking places for their cars in the regular parking lots, which were filled by more than 5,000 cars. They were compelled to leave their vehicles on the main road and make their way to the grounds afoot. At the conclusion of the concert double lines of cars covered the roads from Tanglewood to Pittsfield and Stockbridge for more than two hours.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 18 1941

Record Crowd Attends Final Concert In Berkshire Musical Festival



Serge Koussevitsky Conducting Final Concert At Tanglewood

Previous records of attendance at Tanglewood were broken yesterday when 13,000 persons converged at the Berkshire Music festival to hear Serge Koussevitsky conduct his final concert in the series of three weeks' performances given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. With only 6,008 seats in the shed, the crowd surging about on the lawns and seated within hearing distance of the building, was larged than that inside.

The total number of people who have been present at one or more concerts during the season, was set at 106,000 by George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation. The unprecedented popularity of the concerts caused the surmise that they will be extended to four weeks next year instead of the customary three.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky were feted last night at a dinner given at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox by Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Jr., of Boston. The seventh symphony of Sibelus and the fifth by Tschaikowsky were both on the program yesterday. At the conclusion of the last, which ended the series, the leader wasrepeatedly called back to the podium and given a great ovation. Programs and handkerchiefs were waved by the thousands who refused to leave their seats and the handclapping was tremendous.

Statistics for the season includes the fact that there was an excess of 29,000 people over last year. The British war Relief and U. S. O. benefit drew 87,000 and the three rehearsals were attended by 10,000

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 18 1941

13,000 Jam Tanglewood 1941 Finale

Record Crowd Goes Wild as Koussevitzky's Superb Bostonians Play Themselves 'Purple'

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17.—(Special.)—Toppling all attendance records for eight years, another Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end here today, as thousands cheered.

Thirteen thousand, to be exact, of whom more than 6000 were general admissions, strewing the Tanglewood lawns with their supine shapes and getting horizontally acquainted with music as it is made only by the Boston Symphony and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who invented this orchestra.

Eleven thousand had been the previous audience record, made only a week ago. Today, half an hour before the concert had begun, lines of cars two miles long, blocked all roads leading to the Festival, as they crept a foot at a time toward Sibelius, Prokofieff and Tschaikowsky.

This year's nine concerts, if you can stand more statistics, drew a total of 87,000 persons, or 20,000 more than in 1940.

The final work on the program had been Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. No one on this mortal coil conducts it with the emotional and orchestral showmanship of Dr. Koussevitzky. The vehemence with which he copes with it is that of Laocoon coping with the serpents and coming out on top. Since it was not only the last offering of the day but of the year, he spared the horses less than ever.

He had no more than dropped his hands after the overwhelming onrush of the last pages, when bedlam broke. Wild shouts of "Bravo!" rent the chilly air even before hand-clappers could bang their palms together in applause. Men and women leaped upon their chairs, yelled incoherently and waved their programs. What would constitute the gallery if there had been a gallery in Elie Saarinen's music shed, put fingers in their mouths and shrilled. Everybody kept it up for nearly half an hour. It was the kind of demonstration Dr. Koussevitsky could have produced, if he had been conducting the audience in a round of applause, instead of the orchestra.

13,000 Hopping Fanatics.

Instead, he was marching off and on stage like a little major, beaming, bowing and embracing the air. After all, he couldn't embrace 13,000 hopping fanatics.

The audience was letting off its love for Tschaikowsky and his incredible symphony, and for the Boston Orchestra which had played itself purple in the face. But most of all it was making mad kowtow to Dr. Koussevitzky, whom it loves that way, and it is a kind of demonstration that at once raises your hair, seizes you by the throat and brings tears to your eyes, for excitement and affection.

The whole concert had been about the best of the season's nine, in point of performance. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony have long been our superlative champions of Sibelius and practically sole proprietors of Prokofieff, and today they played the Seventh Symphony of the Finnish composer and the "Lieutenant Kije" Suite of the latter. The Sibelius selection, in which "no great themes are dragged through forests of firs'" (as Muriel Draper once said in Hartford) is not one of his most characteristic, however, and the audience has not ever been so excited by its wonderful Keatsian poetry, as by the enfabled First or heoric Fifth. Dr. Koussevitzky had set it forth with brilliance and the orchestra had carried on with every suavity, but the applause for it was almost perfunctory, as it had been last season.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 18 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Breaks Attendance Records

Ends Eighth Season With 13,000 Final At Concert; Estimate 95,500 at Ten Programs

LENOX, Aug. 18—The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed at the music shell at Tanglewood yesterday when an audience of 13,000 left the previous record of 11,000 for attendance, made last Sunday, far in the rear.

6,200 Outside Shed

Yesterday's vast crowd, in which 6,200 holders of general admission tickets sat on the benches on the outskirts of the music shed or camped on the lawn, carried the total for the entire festival well beyond the 1940 mark.

It was estimated 30,000 heard this week-end's three concerts of series C, and 57,000 had heard the six programs of series A and B in the preceding fortnight, making 87,000 in all for the nine festival programs, or 95,500 with the addition of those who attended last Friday's benefit. To this can be added the estimated total of 10,500 at the three Saturday morning semi-public rehearsals.

1940 Figures

In 1940, 67,000 heard the nine regular concerts and 10,000 attended the Friday benefit. Clear, cool weather had proved a stimulating factor in bringing forth that afternoon's record gathering and what was also, in all probability, a record number of cars on the roads.

For their closing program, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed Jean Sibelius's Seventh Symphony. Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony.

Applause after the playing of new music is more likely to be cordially polite than vigorously fervent, but a feature of last night's concert was the unusually extensive display of enthusiasm which followed the performance of Samuel Barber's violin concerto. The plaudits lasted for several minutes and the Pennsylvania composer was called to the stage to share several bows with Ruth Posselt, who was the soloist, and with Dr. Koussevitzky.

Miss Posselt's Playing

Miss Posselt, who is the wife of the Boston Symphony's concert master, Richard Burgin, is a young Boston violinist who has been heard in New York as recitalist and orchestral soloist and who in the latter capacity has introduced several modern concertos.

'Kije' Stands on Own Feet.

"Lieutenant Kije" remains about the only music composed as a setting for a movie, which can stand on its own feet, film or no. It is a sophisticated and precocious novelty, of course, but that does not remove its concert worth or effectiveness on a program of serious endeavor. I thought that the orchestra by and large was rather routine the first four sections, but in the fifth with its counter-clockwise themes, they worked with handsome clarity and wit.

I will no longer attempt to describe the wondrous ways in which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra work, Tschaikowsky's marvels to perform, the dominion and strength, the noble anguish they achieve. New this time, however, was the vein in which the third section was interpreted by Dr. Koussevitzky, who, eschewing the usual light brilliance that orchestras and conductors give it, played it with great subduement, and I thought brought it into the temper of the whole work better movement into such melancholic writing, as is customarily done, now seems patently wrong, as compared to the veiled and nostalgic interpretation of today.

Although today's concert was performed in an atmosphere of chill breezes and watery sunlight suggestive of autumn, it was a picnic compared to Saturday night's affair, which was the Laplander's dream of beatitude. Attendants at the Red Cross tent stood in expectation of cases of frost bite, and at the refreshment tent "One lump or two?" was not a query concerning sugar, but on the amount of ice forming in your coffee. Yet, believe it or not, hundreds lay wrapped in blankets on the rain-soaked ground. Perhaps they were waiting for the St. Bernards.

With such weather and night birds croaking about midst the encircling gloom, it was the perfect setting for Sibelius. However the program offered Vaughan Williams's "London" Symphony; Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violin, played by Ruth Posselt, so electrifyingly heard in Hartford last winter in the Hindemith concerto; the prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

It was all moderately well played, without being startling anywhere along. I still feel that the Vaughan Williams is pretentious pap, when all is said and done. The Barber proved to be tedious, murky, sweet and illogical, a rather aimless little serenade.

Miss Posselt played it seriously and well, however, whether she believed in it or not, and she received the heroine's accolade of applause. The Wagner excerpts sounded moody and fitful on the shivery air, which was, I think, rather nice and sent you home shaking your head and wondering what we are all coming to, anyway.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 18 1941

Thunderous Ovation Hails End of Berkshire Festival

—By JOSEPH J. HORAN

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival has come to a close amid the thunderous applause of thousands of music lovers who gathered in the Berkshire hills from all parts of the United States.

The cavernous stadium on the beautiful estate at Tanglewood (which the members of the festival committee deprecatingly call a "shed") will not resound to the tones of Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Mozart for another year. The baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, which led the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a program of nine concerts on a plane approaching perfection, will not be waved out-of-doors again until next July.

That the festival was a success, goes without saying. To this beautiful glade overlooking the Stockbridge Bowl, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," came more than 75,000 persons during the three weeks to hear music it is almost impossible to duplicate.

Society came with liveried chauffeurs and sat in the boxes. National figures like Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Governor Lehman arrived in the glare of photographers' flashlights. Enthusiastic supporters of the orchestra filled the chairs in the huge shed. But thousands more, lovers of good music all, scraped together the price of general admission and sat on the spacious lawns of the estate where perfect acoustics made their listening possible.

For the final weekend of the series, Dr. Koussevitzky again treated his listeners to a well balanced program of classicism and modernism. Saturday's program opened with "The London Symphony" by Vaughan Williams, a contemporary composer, continued with a concerto for violin and full orchestra by 31-year-old Samuel Barber of West Chester, Pa., and concluded with two well known numbers of Wagner, Prelude to Parsifal and Overture to Tannhauser.

Yesterday's schedule included Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite" of Prokofieff, a modern Soviet musician and Tchaikovsky's well known Fifth Symphony in E Minor.

In a program note, Mr. Williams has said that his symphony is to be taken as "absolute music" rather than a tonal portrait of London. In spite of this many listeners read into the music various impressions of the London capital, an impression that is strengthened particularly by the Westminister chime effect that he uses.

After a vague opening the symphony rapidly took form as it swung into the first movement. After employing the full resonant tones of the complete orchestra, it quiets down to a violin solo with harp accompaniment. The second movement is also somewhat vague until an English horn solo starts building the theme. In the scherzo the orchestral effects have a resemblance to a seething volcano. In the last movement there is an oriental influence in parts with changing moods and rhythms and a novel coda in which the orchestra moves to the slightest pianissimo rather than the conventional crashing end.

Miss Ruth Posselt, a comely blonde, who comes from Medford, Mass., was the soloist in the Barber Violin Concerto. She displayed a virtuosity with this instrument seldom found in women artists and made a graceful and attractive picture playing before the 100 men in the orchestra. Although Mr. Barber's opus received a tremendous ovation indicating that the audience received it well, it was one of the few pieces during the series that left this reviewer without any definite impression.

In contrast the two Wagner pieces that followed it showed the Boston at its best. Wagner, the master musical dramatist, always endows his music with a certain inescapable majesty that permits the orchestra to show the richness of tone and feeling which a symphonic unit can produce.

Sibelius, often classified as the greatest living composer, is nearer to following the classical style than the modern. His seventh symphony is in one movement and has one chief dominating subject — a fanfare, like theme which first appears in a solo trombone and recurs during the rest of the work.

This opus has been called a "consummate masterpiece of formal construction" and "a work of great expressive beauty, of a lofty grandeur and dignity, a truly Olympian serenity and repose which are unique in modern music." The work yesterday easily fitted these definitions.

The Prokofieff suite was originally compased as incidental music for a Soviet film, "Lieutenant Kije," a mythical character invented by czarist courtiers to cover the mistake of the czar. It displayed the usual whimsy for which Prokofieff has become famous.

Tchaikovsky's Fifth was at fitting finale to the series which opened two weeks ago with Beethoven's Fifth, both of which seem to be favorites of the Boston. This melodious, familiar symphony, superbly played by the Boston, hardly needs any comment. It was the epitome of symphonic beauty.

As the crowds left the Berkshires yesterday it was with the feeling that they had participated in a cultural gathering that had contributed much to the American way of life.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 18 1941

FINAL CONCERT OF B'KSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL WAS HELD

The final concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941, plus the perfect weather, brought one of the largest crowds of the Festival season to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., yesterday afternoon.

The big music shed was filled to overflowing, all available benches just outside the shed were packed, and on the vast lawn beyond the shed and benches were hundreds of people stretched out comfortably on steamer rubs, motor robes or what have you, or sitting in folding chairs which they themselves had carried to the concert.

The magnificent program, gloriously played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the faultless direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, was as follows: Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije Suite," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5. Enthusiasm at yesterday's concert was at an all-time high, and, as with the final wave of Koussevitsky's magic baton, the last notes of Tchaikovsky's immortal "Fifth" died away, the shed rang with cries of "Bravo," "Bravo," and with applause that was absolutely thunderous. Again and again was Dr. Koussevitsky recalled, always generously sharing with his orchestra his well deserved triumph. It seemed as if the vast audience could not let the great conductor go, but finaly from sheer weariness the most valiant applauders were forced to call it a day, and as the thousands, many with a definite feeling of nostalgia, filed out of the shed, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 passed into history.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
47 AUG 18 1941

ALL RECORDS FOR FESTIVAL ARE SMASHED

Final Concert at Tanglewood Brings Season Attendance to 106,000

By Williard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 18 — The current season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed yesterday afternoon with all attendance records broken. An audience of 13,000 occupied every available space within hearing distance of the music. This exceeds by 2000 the record crowd here on Aug. 9.

Statistics Given

For those interested in statistics it may be reported that the attendance at the nine concerts was 87,000. Count in the U. S. O. benefit, which drew 8500, and the three rehearsals, attended by 10,000, and a grand total of 106,000 is the result. Last year the attendance at the nine concerts was estimated at 67,000 and the benefit drew 10,000.

Already plans are under way for next season, Hitler or no Hitler. No definite plans have been decided upon but there are rumors and counter rumors ranging from the idea of an extra week of concerts to an extra week devoted to opera. It is interesting to note that during the six seasons Koussevitzky has conducted the festivals, the repertoire has broadened. Moderns stand side by side with the old war horses. Thus today Prokofieff, Sibelius and Tschaikowsky provided a dramatic program which closed the festival. It has also been noteworthy that the audiences this season have been predominantly youthful, with literally thousands of 'teen age boys and girls occupying the places within and without the music shed. It is therefore necessary to arrange programs with a goodly sprinkling of contemporary works that these young and avid musicians may know what is going on these days.

Two monumental works were on the program today, the seventh symphony of Sibelius and the fifth by Tschaikowsky. Both interpretations Dr. Koussevitzky has made particulary his own. It is difficult to think of a more impressive opening number than the seventh symphony which Sibelius was embued with an Olympian calm and expressive beauty. The playing of the brasses in the fanfare-like theme which dominated the work was truly magnificent.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," mythical figure during the regime of Czar Paul I, is ushered into the world by the voice of a single cornet, today played far outside the shed. The same muted voice returns Kije to the unsubstantial medium whence he was created. Like "Peter and the Wolf," played last season and the "Classical Symphony," this Prokofieff opus abounds in melodies, exciting rhythms and intriguing harmonies. The audience loved it.

To write of Koussevitzky's readings of Tschaikowsky is to rewrite what has been written countless times. He provided a monumental interpretation, one which fairly brought the audience to its feet at the close and resulted in a heart warming ovation for the conductor and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This has been a festival of great interpretations and perhaps this final interpretation may be called the greatest of them all.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 18 1941

Concert Series At Tanglewood Comes to Close

Nearly 13,000 Attend Boston Symphony Event In Berkshires

The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, yesterday brought to a close the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival in a program climaxed by Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

A record-breaking audience filled the 6,000 seats at the Music shed at Tanglewood and 7,000 places on the lawn which stretches behind it.

Last official reports have stated that more than 106,000 have attended the festival concerts and rehearsals this season, a record never before attained in the festival's seven years.

This year's nine concerts were attended by 87,000 persons—exceeding last year's record by 20-000. In addition, a benefit performance Friday drew 8,500, and 10,500 persons heard the three Saturday morning rehearsals, at which Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, furnished brief comment on the music played.

Ovation Seldom Surpassed

No symphony could have better climaxed the three weeks of festival concerts than the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky if only because it is one immediately associated with the name of Dr. Koussevitzky. If great performances of this work have emanated from both conductor and orchestra before, surely this one must stand as one of the finest, both in its surging spirit, the thrilling tonal effects, the deep and penetrating understandof the Russian who irrevocably changed an entire period of musical composition. The ovation which seemed to surge from an enrapt audience at the final, almost overpowering emotional measures has seldom been heard in any such intensity before.

Individuals Come To Fore

In more humorous vein, but in the practice of Dr. Koussevitzky to include on the festival as many contemporary works as possible, the satyric "Lieutenant Kije," an orchestral suite of Prokofieff, Opus 60, was performed. It was the one work on the program which allowed the individual instrumentalists of the orchestra to have a final opportunity for this season to display their own musical gifts.

A musical highpoint was also to be found in the translation of Sibelius' 'Seventh Symphony.'' Opus 105, a one-movement work which is already an important part of the repertoire of the conductor. Here is a work which bodes no comparison to a tone-poem or programmatic connotation.

Festival Budget Met

Next year's festival will certainly be held, officials said today, unless international conditions unexpectedly interfere. "It depends on the fate of Hitler," one officer said. The festival budget was met "with a substantial margin to be put into improvements," he added.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 18 1941

Festival Ends With 13,000 Present And Hints of Extra Week Next Year

Stockbridge, Aug. 18—With a superb afternoon concert, the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival closed yesterday after running up a record attendance for the day and for the nine-concert series. Including 8500 for the U. S. O. benefit Friday and 10,500 for three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total for the past three weeks has been 106,500, a gain of more than 50 per cent over the 67,000 figure for 1940.

Evidence of the growth of the festival, far beyond the dreams of its founders, was the presence of 13,000 people yesterday for the final program by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. [redacted]sevitzky. More people were outside the spacious shed than were inside. With a minimum admission fee of $1.50, the financial success of the festival can readily be adjudged on a par with its artistic level.

Last year a third series was added to the original pair and it would surprise no one if at the next annual meeting in the very near future, a fourth week were scheduled next season, war or no war. The Berkshire music center which has scheduled its summer courses to run six weeks, the last half concurrently with the festival, provides an operatic and choral nucleus for further elaboration of the festival, should it be thought desirable to branch off from the direction explicit in the title, the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Yesterday's program found the orchestra in fine fettle, perhaps because of the tremendous crowd, perhaps because it takes a Russian to conduct the Russians. The program included the Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije" suite, the Tchaikovsky Fifth symphony and the Sibelius Seventh symphony, not too far removed geographically from the Russians.

Another V Symphony

It may have been the Koussevitzky humor that caused the program to end with a "V" symphony—and a Russian one at that—for it was a "V" symphony—and a German one, Beethoven's of course, that was programmed the first night to let the world know where the sympathies of the festival lovers stood. Anyway, the Russians had the last word.

The Sibelius, the latest symphony to come from the contemporary Scandinavian giant, though there have been reports that two others were being revised, has become a great favorite since its completion in March, 1924. Written in one movement, it has a richness and inventiveness not always found in his earlier symphonies. Almost a throw back away from his rugged beginnings to composers of an earlier day, there is a typically Handelian flavor about parts of it though it is personal and individual to a marked degree.

From then on, the Russians took over. The Prokofieff suite, adapted from a Soviet movie, is a mad and merry bit of program music by the tongue-in-cheek contemporary. Koussevitzky has made it singularly his own, as it tells the story of the fictitious officer who had to be created immediately when the czar's tongue slipped and involuntarily coined the "Kije" name as he listed those who were to be decorated. No subordinate dared point out the mistake and the tale of the birth, romance, wedding, high life and death of the phantom is most amusing, abounding as it does with infectious tunes. The audience loved it.

The Tchaikovsky, to this reviewer, had but one flaw, despite the masterful reading. On the heels of the Prokofieff, it was disturbing to hear the same themes, colored by the same instruments, in the symphony. The juxtaposition of the compositions made complete surrender to the spell of the symphony more difficult than usual, though it came eventually, and the audience gave the leader and his men an unprecendented ovation at the conclusion.

Arrangements Excellent

Saturday night, the "London" symphony by the contemporary Ralph Vaughan Williams again accented the sympathetic slant of the festival, though honors seemed to go to Ruth Posselt, violinist and to Samuel Barber, composer. She, the wife of concertmaster Richard Burgin and a prime soloist in her own right, gave his "Concerto for Violin and orchestra" a dazzling performance. The Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhauser" brought the evening program to a most satisfactory close.

To end the story of this year's festival without a mention of the exceedingly fine arrangements in all departments would be ungrateful and unwarranted. Reviewers found every want supplied by George W. Edman and motorists had no worries about the parking problem because of the American Legion men, to mention but two of the more obvious phases of Berkshire cooperation. Those who are unaware of the growth of what is probably the highest grade music festival in the world right in their own back yard owe it to themselves to investigate next year—but investigate early.

J. H. D.

TIMES UNION
AUG 18 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

All Attendance Records Broken at 'Tanglewood'

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Triumphant fate as expressed in the "motto" of the final movement of Tschaikowsky's Fifth symphony brought the Berkshire Symphonic festival to a victorious close yesterday afternoon as the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Korssevitzky, bid farewell to the festival's most successfull feast of music.

All attendance records have been broken, but what is more important, the artistic results achieved have never been surpassed during the eight years in which "Tanglewood" has been the musical capital of the civilized world.

Friday's special program of musical events, the proceeds of approximately $20,000 being divided between the U. S. O. and British War relief, was an event in which the music lover could find something tailored to his individual taste. Operatic performances in the new theatre; orchestral works by members of the music school; speeches by noted educators in the great music shed with Mrs. Elanor Roosevelt, fully supplying the audience appeal, functioned perfectly despite a heavy rain. Special soloist was Albert Spalding, violinist, who gave a splendid performance of the Mendelssohn concerto while the magnificent playing of Tschaikowsky's stirring Overture "1812" sent a thoroughly happy audience out into the elements, completely satisfied.

The highlight of Saturday night's concert was the playing, by the orchestra of the English composer, Vaughn Williams' descriptive landscape, "A London Symphony."

Ruth Posselt was the instrumental solist on the program which introduced to many in the audience the concerto for violin and orchestra by the young American composer, Samuel Gardner. The concerto, completed a year ago was also perfectly understandable to the great audience and Miss Posselt displayed a warm, virile tone and technical skill of an unusually high degree; both of which gifts came into full realization, particularly in the virtuistic third movement.

If the musical vibrations emenating from "Tanglewood" during the past three weeks, the predominance of the "Fate" or "Victory" motif throughout, are not dissipated during transmition, a certain dictator in Europe is in for some very disturbing moments at the present writing.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 18 1941

Concert Series At Tanglewood Comes to Close

Nearly 13,000 Attend Boston Symphony Event In Berkshires

The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, yesterday brought to a close the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival in a program climaxed by Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

A record-breaking audience filled the 6,000 seats at the Music shed at Tanglewood and 7,000 places on the lawn which stretches behind it.

Last official reports have stated that more than 106,000 have attended the festival concerts and rehearsals this season, a record never before attained in the festival's seven years.

This year's nine concerts were attended by 87,000 persons—exceeding last year's record by 20-000. In addition, a benefit performance Friday drew 8,500, and 10,500 persons heard the three Saturday morning rehearsals, at which Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, furnished brief comment on the music played.

Ovation Seldom Surpassed

No symphony could have better climaxed the three weeks of festival concerts than the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky if only because it is one immediately associated with the name of Dr. Koussevitzky. If great performances of this work have emanated from both conductor and orchestra before, surely this one must stand as one of the finest, both in its surging spirit, the thrilling tonal effects, the deep and penetrating understandof the Russian who irrevocably changed an entire period of musical composition. The ovation which seemed to surge from an enrapt audience at the final, almost overpowering emotional measures has seldom been heard in any such intensity before.

Individuals Come To Fore

In more humorous vein, but in the practice of Dr. Koussevitzky to include on the festival as many contemporary works as possible, the satyric "Lieutenant Kije," an orchestral suite of Prokofieff, Opus 60, was performed. It was the one work on the program which allowed the individual instrumentalists of the orchestra to have a final opportunity for this season to display their own musical gifts.

A musical highpoint was also to be found in the translation of Sibelius' 'Seventh Symphony,'' Opus 105, a one-movement work which is already an important part of the repertoire of the conductor. Here is a work which bodes no comparison to a tone-poem or programmatic connotation.

Festival Budget Met

Next year's festival will certainly be held, officials said today, unless international conditions unexpectedly interfere. "It depends on the fate of Hitler," one officer said. The festival budget was met "with a substantial margin to be put into improvements," he added.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 18 1941

Festival Ends With 13,000 Present And Hints of Extra Week Next Year

Stockbridge, Aug. 18—With a superb afternoon concert, the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival closed yesterday after running up a record attendance for the day and for the nine-concert series. Including 8500 for the U. S. O. benefit Friday and 10,500 for three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total for the past three weeks has been 106,500, a gain of more than 50 per cent over the 67,000 figure for 1940.

Evidence of the growth of the festival, far beyond the dreams of its founders, was the presence of 13,000 people yesterday for the final program by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. [illegible]sevitzky. More people were outside the spacious shed than were inside. With a minimum admission fee of $1.50, the financial success of the festival can readily be adjudged on a par with its artistic level.

Last year a third series was added to the original pair and it would surprise no one if at the next annual meeting in the very near future, a fourth week were scheduled next season, war or no war. The Berkshire music center which has scheduled its summer courses to run six weeks, the last half concurrently with the festival, provides an operatic and choral nucleus for further elaboration of the festival, should it be thought desirable to branch off from the direction explicit in the title, the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Yesterday's program found the orchestra in fine fettle, perhaps because of the tremendous crowd, perhaps because it takes a Russian to conduct the Russians. The program included the Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije" suite, the Tchaikovsky Fifth symphony and the Sibelius Seventh symphony, not too far removed geographically from the Russians.

Another V Symphony

It may have been the Koussevitzky humor that caused the program to end with a "V" symphony—and a Russian one at that—for it was a "V" symphony—and a German one, Beethoven's of course, that was programmed the first night to let the world know where the sympathies of the festival lovers stood. Anyway, the Russians had the last word.

The Sibelius, the latest symphony to come from the contemporary Scandinavian giant, though there have been reports that two others were being revised, has become a great favorite since its completion in March, 1924. Written in one movement, it has a richness and inventiveness not always found in his earlier symphonies. Almost a throw back away from his rugged beginnings to composers of an earlier day, there is a typically Handelian flavor about parts of it though it is personal and individual to a marked degree.

From then on, the Russians took over. The Prokofieff suite, adapted from a Soviet movie, is a mad and merry bit of program music by the tongue-in-cheek contemporary. Koussevitzky has made it singularly his own, as it tells the story of the fictitious officer who had to be created immediately when the czar's tongue slipped and involuntarily coined the "Kije" name as he listed those who were to be decorated. No subordinate dared point out the mistake and the tale of the birth, romance, wedding, high life and death of the phantom is most amusing, abounding as it does with infectious tunes. The audience loved it.

The Tchaikovsky, to this reviewer, had but one flaw, despite the masterful reading. On the heels of the Prokofieff, it was disturbing to hear the same themes, colored by the same instruments, in the symphony. The juxtaposition of the compositions made complete surrender to the spell of the symphony more difficult than usual, though it came eventually, and the audience gave the leader and his men an unprecendented ovation at the conclusion.

Arrangements Excellent

Saturday night, the "London" symphony by the contemporary Ralph Vaughan Williams again accented the sympathetic slant of the festival, though honors seemed to go to Ruth Posselt, violinist and to Samuel Barber, composer. She, the wife of concertmaster Richard Burgin and a prime soloist in her own right, gave his "Concerto for Violin and orchestra" a dazzling performance. The Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhauser" brought the evening program to a most satisfactory close.

To end the story of this year's festival without a mention of the exceedingly fine arrangements in all departments would be ungrateful and unwarranted. Reviewers found every want supplied by George W. Edman and motorists had no worries about the parking problem because of the American Legion men, to mention but two of the more obvious phases of Berkshire cooperation. Those who are unaware of the growth of what is probably the highest grade music festival in the world right in their own back yard owe it to themselves to investigate next year—but investigate early.

L. B. D.

TIMES UNION
AUG 18 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

All Attendance Records Broken at 'Tanglewood'

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Triumphant fate as expressed in the "motto" of the final movement of Tschaikowsky's Fifth symphony brought the Berkshire Symphonic festival to a victorious close yesterday afternoon as the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Korssevitzky, bid farewell to the festival's most successfull feast of music.

All attendance records have been broken, but what is more important, the artistic results achieved have never been surpassed during the eight years in which "Tanglewood" has been the musical capital of the civilized world.

Friday's special program of musical events, the proceeds of approximately $20,000 being divided between the U. S. O. and British War relief, was an event in which the music lover could find something tailored to his individual taste. Operatic performances in the new theatre; orchestral works by members of the music school; speeches by noted educators in the great music shed with Mrs. Elanor Roosevelt, fully supplying the audience appeal, functioned perfectly despite a heavy rain. Special soloist was Albert Spalding, violinist, who gave a splendid performance of the Mendelssohn concerto while the magnificent playing of Tschaikowsky's stirring Overture "1812" sent a thoroughly happy audience out into the elements, completely satisfied.

The highlight of Saturday night's concert was the playing, by the orchestra of the English composer, Vaughn Williams' descriptive landscape, "A London Symphony."

Ruth Posselt was the instrumental solist on the program which introduced to many in the audience the concerto for violin and orchestra by the young American composer, Samuel Gardner. The concerto, completed a year ago was also perfectly understandable to the great audience and Miss Posselt displayed a warm, virile tone and technical skill of an unusually high degree; both of which gifts came into full realization, particularly in the virtuistic third movement.

If the musical vibrations emenating from "Tanglewood" during the past three weeks, the predominance of the "Fate" or "Victory" motif throughout, are not dissipated during transmition, a certain dictator in Europe is in for some very disturbing moments at the present writing.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 18 1941

49

Part of 13,000 at Final Berkshire Music Festival Concert Yesterday

Don Jose Browning Photo

No, this is not a scene made on the beach at Coney Island on a hot summer day . . . it is a portion of the crowd of more than 13,000 who attended the final concert yesterday at Tanglewood. The huge shed was filled to capacity and the overflow crowd did the next best thing; made themselves comfortable as best they could on the spacious green surrounding the music shed. Yesterday's concert was the concluding one of the series which began three weeks ago.

ALL RECORDS FOR FESTIVAL ARE SMASHED

Final Concert at Tanglewood Brings Season Attendance to 106,000

By Williard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17 — The current season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed this afternoon with all attendance records broken. An audience of 13,000 occupied every available space within hearing distance of the music. This exceeds by 2000 the record crowd here on Aug. 9.

Statistics Given

For those interested in statistics it may be reported that the attendance at the nine concerts was 87,000. Count in the U. S. O. benefit, which drew 3500, and the three rehearsals, attended by 10,000, and a grand total of 106,000 is the result. Last year the attendance at the nine concerts was estimated at 67,000 and the benefit drew 10,000.

Already plans are under way for next season, Hitler or no Hitler. No definite plans have been decided upon but there are rumors and counter rumors ranging from the idea of an extra week of concerts to an extra week devoted to opera. It is interesting to note that during the six seasons Koussevitzky has conducted the festivals, the repertoire has broadened. Moderns stand side by side with the old war horses. Thus today Prokofieff, Sibelius and Tschaikowsky provided a dramatic program which closed the festival. It has also been noteworthy that the audiences this season have been predominantly youthful, with literally thousands of 'teen age boys and girls occupying the places within and without the music shed. It is therefore necessary to arrange programs with a goodly sprinkling of contemporary works that these young and avid musicians may know what is going on these days.

Two monumental works were on the program today, the seventh symphony of Sibelius and the fifth by Tschaikowsky. Both interpretations Dr. Koussevitzky has made particulary his own. It is difficult to think of a more impressive opening number than the seventh symphony which Sibelius was embued with an Olympian calm and expressive beauty. The playing of the brasses in the fanfare-like theme which dominated the work was truly magnificent.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," mythical figure during the regime of Czar Paul I, is ushered into the world by the voice of a single cornet, today played far outside the shed. The same muted voice returns Kije to the unsubstantial medium whence he was created. Like "Peter and the Wolf," played last season and the "Classical Symphony," this Prokofieff opus abounds in melodies, exciting rhythms and intriguing harmonies. The audience loved it.

To write of Koussevitzky's readings of Tschaikowsky is to rewrite what has been written countless times. He provided a monumental interpretation, one which fairly brought the audience to its feet at the close and resulted in a heartwarming ovation for the conductor and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This has been a festival of great interpretations and perhaps this final interpretation may be called the greatest of them all.

Cleveland, Ohio Plain Dealer
AUG 19 1941

Rain Puts Damper on U.S.O. Aid

But Stockbridge Performance Gets Loyal Crowd

By WINSOR FRENCH

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.: Nature, to put it mildly, frowned on the efforts here to raise money for U. S. O. and British War Relief.

After weeks of work and planning for a gala program that was supposed to produce a considerable number of dollars, as well as to make a little history, the day broke dark, icy cold and rain driven. Any touring of the famous gardens was a matter not to be considered and in any case the blossoms were in the mud, not dust.

All day long, you can bet, the earnest committeemen and women studied the friendless skies and clouded hills—hoping for a break.

After all, the festivities were to commence in the early afternoon, continue until late at night and included everything from a picnic supper and country dancing on the lawn to a speech by Mrs. Roosevelt, martial music from the combined bands of the 26th Division, a concert in the Shed with Albert Spalding as soloist, and Miss Elsa Maxwell presiding over the drawing of the grab bag.

Well, there were picnic suppers, to be sure, but in the bleak, dismal rain. Some of the box holders crowded into the Theater-Concert Hall in the late afternoon to hear an invitational performance of Act II of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," streams of lorries brought young men in khaki to the depressed, drenched grounds and people tried to carry on just exactly as if they were in brilliant sunlight or a warm, soothing night.

No One Complained

No one sensibly dressed in evening clothes, though, and regardless of the weather station wagons turned out of drives in Pennington, Williamstown, Lee, Lanesboro and even Troy and Albany for the long drive over winding, slippery roads.

The state police were on hand to direct traffic—cheerful to the end—and no one complained over the unhappy fact the parking lots had been turned into fields of mud. Loyalty is the way I would describe it.

So promptly at 9 the gala concert began. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in the first movement of the Beethoven Fifth (V for Victory, please remember); Stanley Chapple took over the podium next with Holst's "Mars the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace." Mr. Chapple is young, wildly enthusiastic and in no time at all had the audience at his feet. I can't say as much for Holst.

Mr. Spalding had the weather against him—but he still played through the Mendelssohn concerto as if he hadn't a care in the world. The Festival Chorus followed him with a group of two madrigals and then Dr. Koussevitzky returned to conduct his own orchestra and the 26th Division bands through the "Overture 1812." The crowd, to be brief, went wild. Then lastly "The Star Spangled Banner"—with soaring voices struggling to remember the verses and the rain beating through the trees.

No Fireworks, But—

Obviously there could be no fireworks, but Elsa Maxwell, game to the end, took to the stage to draw lucky numbers from a huge drum. There was an English bicycle, a ton of coal to be delivered anywhere in the United States, season tickets to the 1942 Festival, a heifer (it went to Detroit, thank you) and just about everything else you can think of. A young man from Pittsfield drew what Elsa described as "a beautifully fitted lady's bag." Things like that happened all the time.

Just what the proceeds from all this will amount to remains to be seen. But everyone, the artists and celebrities who contributed their services, the youngsters who sold tickets, cigarettes and grab bag chances, the audience in raincoats, yellow slickers, or with rubber sheets wrapped around them; all deserve an individual pat on the back.

Odds and Ends About Everything

Len Hanna and the H. Chapman Roses arrive here this week and then down to the coast in a group to see Gertrude Lawrence revive her London success, "Behold We Live!" This at Dennis, and then to Westport where Tyrone Power is due back to give his all to "Lilliom."

About that. Twentieth Century-Fox will have to pick up the bill for any and all losses as a result of demanding Mr. Power's return to Hollywood for retakes. According to my scouts the frantic Mr. Wilson had a warrant out for the film star's arrest in the event he should leave the state.

Another Cleveland note. . . . Red Manning's voice suddenly coming through the static, clear as a bell, as I was driving back through the night from the relief concert. Red, it turned out, was going through his paces with the Pastor Orchestra at Cedar Point. Gave me quite a turn. So did Herman Pirchner the other night at about the same hour.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 18 1941

At Tanglewood Yesterday

(Gravelle Pictorial News)

Group seen at concluding concert of this year's Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Left to right: Mrs C. H. Moore, Mrs Ralph W. Eckfeldt, wife of Maj-Gen Eckfeldt of the 26th. division, Camp Edwards; Lieut-Col Charles H. Moore of the 26th division general's staff, Camp Edwards; Miss Olga Naumoff, niece of Mrs Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR
AUG 19 1941

Describes Music Festival At Berkshire Center

By IDA SHULMAN

The Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood," which is located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., terminated its second very successful season this past week. The season opened on July 7 and closed August 17. During this last week, the sixth of the session, the students and faculty of the Center brought their Summer's work to a brilliant climax. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Mozart's opera, "Cosi Fan Tutti," was presented by the opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky.

On Thursday evening, at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center Chorus, trained by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth, sang Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," with the Bosto Symphony under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Friday evening, the entire forces of the Center including the advanced orchestra, opera department, Boston Symphony Orchestra and bassed bands of 250 musicians from Ford Edward performed under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky for the benefit of the C. S. O. an British Relief.

The Music Center, this Summer, attracted students from every State in the U. S., South America, Canada and Europe. The enrollment increased over that of last year and hundreds of talented musicians auditioned for places in the advanced orchestra and opera department.

Dr. Paul Hindemith, internationally famous composer, directed the department for those students interested in general musical culture. These students participated in chamber music, choral, orchestral and lecture groups. Olin Downes, distinguished music critic of the New York Times, gave a series of lectures during the session in connection with this course.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Music Center is the guiding spirit and inspiration of "Tanglewood." The Center is his realization of a Mecca for all lovers of music; composer, performer and listener. Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during the last three weeks of the session, affords the students of the Center the invaluable opportunity of observing a master conductor and orchestra recreating the masterpieces of music in rehearsal as well as performance. The orchestra rehearses in the shed which seats 6,000, and invariably attracts earnest groups of music lovers. The performances of the festival week-end concerts have been attended by as many as 11,000 at a single performance.

The first chair men of the Symphony and many other world famous musicians are members of the distinguished faculty of the Berkshire Center. These men give advice and encouragement freely to those enrolled at the Center.

"Tanglewood," with its very lovely natural background, offers to the music lover a perfect setting for the enjoyment of the world's most beautiful music.

The Berkshire Music Center offers to the student a haven of inspiration for the creation and performance of his musical ideals.

Included in the group of music lovers from this community who attended this year's session were Miss Lois Saphir, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Chudnowsky, Mrs. Samuel Specter, Miss Muriel Specter and Miss Ida Shulman.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, a former resident of this community, is the executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and is secretary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TANGLEWOOD HAS A RECORD-BREAKING CROWD OF 13,000

Overflow Crowd Larger Than Main Audience — Four-Week Festival in 1942 Already Is Being Discussed

By A SPECIAL REPORTER

By A Special Reporter

Tanglewood, Aug. 17 — Thirteen thousand persons attended the ninth and final Tanglewood music festival concert this afternoon and broke all previous records. The previous maximum was 12,000, who were present Saturday night, the 9th. General admissions today were 6200. As the great music shed has 6008 seats, the overflow crowd was larger than the main audience. George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation, posted at press headquarters figures showing that the attendance at all musical events at Tanglewood the past three weeks has been 106,000. The grand total includes 8500 at last Friday night's benefit and 10,500 at three Saturday morning rehearsals.

Four-Week Event Discussed

On account of the unprecedented popularity of the concerts, already there is talk of a four-weeks' festival next year. It was discussed tonight at a dinner given in compliment to Dr and Mrs Serge Koussevitzky at Curtis hotel by Mr and Mrs Ernest B. Dane, Jr. of Boston. There were 50 guests. Mr Dane is chairman of the board of the Boston Symphony orchestra and several other directors now in Berkshire were present. It is said that several trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, also favor a four-weeks' festival.

At the conclusion of the final number, Tschaikowsky's symphony No 5 this afternoon, Dr Koussevitzky was given an extraordinary ovation. He was recalled to the stage six times while the great audience, refusing to leave, applauded and cheered. Hundreds of men and women stood on theater seats and waved programs and handkerchiefs. Never before has Tanglewood or any other musical center in Western Massachusetts witnessed such a remarkable demonstration.

David Sarnoff Attends

Noticed in a box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith were David Sarnoff, Miss Leslie Frick and Emilio Gorgorza with other guests. In a nearby box were Mr and Mrs Lytle Hull of New York. Mrs Hull is the former Mrs Vincent Astor. Myron C. Taylor, President Roosevelt's special envoy to the Vatican, and Mrs Taylor, who were in another box, are leaving Stockbridge tomorrow for New York. Mr Taylor said they expect to return next year.

With Mr and Mrs Halstead Lindsley of Lenox were Mr and Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord and Mrs Hepburn's son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Curtis Prout of Boston, who are staying with Mrs Henry Hollister Pease.

State Police Lieut William V. Shimkus of Northampton was in charge of 30 local and state police who controled the enormous traffic near Tanglewood this afternoon. There were said to have been 5000 cars on five parking areas.

Cleveland, Ohio Press
Aug 19, 1941

50

Rain Puts Damper on U.S.O. Aid

But Stockbridge Performance Gets Loyal Crowd

By WINSOR FRENCH

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.: Nature, to put it mildly, frowned on the efforts here to raise money for U. S. O. and British War Relief.

After weeks of work and planning for a gala program that was supposed to produce a considerable number of dollars, as well as to make a little history, the day broke dark, icy cold and rain driven. Any touring of the famous gardens was a matter not to be considered and in any case the blossoms were in the mud, not dust.

All day long, you can bet, the earnest committeemen and women studied the friendless skies and clouded hills—hoping for a break.

After all, the festivities were to commence in the early afternoon, continue until late at night and included everything from a picnic supper and country dancing on the lawn to a speech by Mrs. Roosevelt, martial music from the combined bands of the 26th Division, a concert in the Shed with Albert Spalding as soloist, and Miss Elsa Maxwell presiding over the drawing of the grab bag.

Well, there were picnic suppers, to be sure, but in the bleak, dismal rain. Some of the box holders crowded into the Theater-Concert Hall in the late afternoon to hear an invitational performance of Act II of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," streams of lorries brought young men in khaki to the depressed, drenched grounds and people tried to carry on just exactly as if they were in brilliant sunlight or a warm, soothing night.

No One Complained

No one sensibly dressed in evening clothes, though, and regardless of the weather station wagons turned out of drives in Bennington, Williamstown, Lee, Lanesboro and even Troy and Albany for the long drive over winding, slippery roads.

The state police were on hand to direct traffic—cheerful to the end—and no one complained over the unhappy fact the parking lots had been turned into fields of mud. Loyalty is the way I would describe it.

So promptly at 9 the gala concert began. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in the first movement of the Beethoven Fifth (V for Victory, please remember); Stanley Chapple took over the podium next with Holst's "Mars the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace." Mr. Chapple is young, wildly enthusiastic and in no time at all had the audience at his feet. I can't say as much for Holst.

Mr. Spalding had the weather against him—but he still played through the Mendelssohn concerto as if he hadn't a care in the world. The Festival Chorus followed him with a group of two madrigals and then Dr. Koussevitzky returned to conduct his own orchestra and the 26th Division bands through the "Overture 1812." The crowd, to be brief, went wild. Then lastly "The Star Spangled Banner"—with soaring voices struggling to remember the verses and the rain beating through the trees.

No Fireworks, But—

Obviously there could be no fireworks, but Elsa Maxwell, game to the end, took to the stage to draw lucky numbers from a huge drum. There was an English bicycle, a ton of coal to be delivered anywhere in the United States, season tickets to the 1942 Festival, a heifer (it went to Detroit, thank you) and just about everything else you can think of. A young man from Pittsfield drew what Elsa described as "a beautifully fitted lady's bag." Things like that happened all the time.

Just what the proceeds from all this will amount to remains to be seen. But everyone, the artists and celebrities who contributed their services, the youngsters who sold tickets, cigarettes and grab bag chances, the audience in raincoats, yellow slickers, or with rubber sheets wrapped around them; all deserve an individual pat on the back.

Odds and Ends About Everything

Len Hanna and the H. Chapman Roses arrive here this week and then down to the coast in a group to see Gertrude Lawrence revive her London success, "Behold We Live!"

This at Dennis, and then to Westport where Tyrone Power is due back to give his all to "Lilliom."

About that. Twentieth Century-Fox will have to pick up the bill for any and all losses as a result of demanding Mr. Power's return to Hollywood for retakes. According to my scouts the frantic Mr. Wilson had a warrant out for the film star's arrest in the event he should leave the state.

Another Cleveland note. . . . Red Manning's voice suddenly coming through the static, clear as a bell, as I was driving back through the night from the relief concert. Red, it turned out, was going through his paces with the Pastor Orchestra at Cedar Point. Gave me quite a turn. So did Herman Pirchner the other night at about the same hour.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 18 1941

At Tanglewood Yesterday

(Gravelle Pictorial News)

Group seen at concluding concert of this year's Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Left to right: Mrs C. H. Moore, Mrs Ralph W. Eckfeldt, wife of Maj-Gen Eckfeldt of the 26th. division, Camp Edwards; Lieut-Col Charles H. Moore of the 26th division general's staff, Camp Edwards; Miss Olga Naumoff, niece of Mrs Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR
AUG 19 1941

Describes Music Festival At Berkshire Center

By IDA SHULMAN

The Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood," which is located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., terminated its second very successful season this past week. The season opened on July 7 and closed August 17. During this last week, the sixth of the session, the students and faculty of the Center brought their Summer's work to a brilliant climax. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Mozart's opera, "Cosi Fan Tutti," was presented by the opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky.

On Thursday evening, at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center Chorus, trained by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth, sang Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," with the Bosto Symphony under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Friday evening, the entire forces of the Center including the advanced orchestra, opera department, Boston Symphony Orchestra and massed bands of 250 musicians from Ford Edward performed under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky for the benefit of the C. S. O. an British Relief.

The Music Center, this Summer, attracted students from every State in the U. S., South America, Canada and Europe. The enrollment increased over that of last year and hundreds of talented musicians auditioned for places in the advanced orchestra and opera department.

Dr. Paul Hindemith, internationally famous composer, directed the department for those students interested in general musical culture. These students participated in chamber music, choral, orchestral and lecture groups. Olin Downes, distinguished music critic of the New York Times, gave a series of lectures during the session in connection with this course.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Music Center is the guiding spirit and inspiration of "Tanglewood." The Center is his realization of a Mecca for all lovers of music; composer, performer and listener. Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during the last three weeks of the session, affords the students of the Center the invaluable opportunity of observing a master conductor and orchestra recreating the masterpieces of music in rehearsal as well as performance. The orchestra rehearses in the shed which seats 6,000, and invariably attracts earnest groups of music lovers. The performances of the festival week-end concerts have been attended by as many as 11,000 at a single performance.

The first chair men of the Symphony and many other world famous musicians are members of the distinguished faculty of the Berkshire Center. These men give advice and encouragement freely to those enrolled at the Center.

"Tanglewood," with its very lovely natural background, offers to the music lover a perfect setting for the enjoyment of the world's most beautiful music.

The Berkshire Music Center offers to the student a haven of inspiration for the creation and performance of his musical ideals.

Included in the group of music lovers from this community who attended this year's session were Miss Lois Saphir, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Chudnowsky, Mrs. Samuel Specter, Miss Muriel Specter and Miss Ida Shulman.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, a former resident of this community, is the executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, and is secretary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TANGLEWOOD HAS A RECORD-BREAKING CROWD OF 13,000

Overflow Crowd Larger Than Main Audience — Four-Week Festival in 1942 Already Is Being Discussed

By A SPECIAL REPORTER

By A Special Reporter

Tanglewood, Aug. 17 — Thirteen thousand persons attended the ninth and final Tanglewood music festival concert this afternoon and broke all previous records. The previous maximum was 12,000, who were present Saturday night, the 9th. General admissions today were 6200. As the great music shed has 6008 seats, the overflow crowd was larger than the main audience. George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation, posted at press headquarters figures showing that the attendance at all musical events at Tanglewood the past three weeks has been 106,000. The grand total includes 8500 at last Friday night's benefit and 10,500 at three Saturday morning rehearsals.

Four-Week Event Discussed

On account of the unprecedented popularity of the concerts, already there is talk of a four-weeks' festival next year. It was discussed tonight at a dinner given in compliment to Dr and Mrs Serge Koussevitzky at Curtis hotel by Mr and Mrs Ernest B. Dane, Jr. of Boston. There were 50 guests. Mr Dane is chairman of the board of the Boston Symphony orchestra and several other directors now in Berkshire were present. It is said that several trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, also favor a four-weeks' festival.

At the conclusion of the final number, Tschaikowsky's symphony No 5 this afternoon, Dr Koussevitzky was given an extraordinary ovation. He was recalled to the stage six times while the great audience, refusing to leave, applauded and cheered. Hundreds of men and women stood on theater seats and waved programs and handkerchiefs. Never before has Tanglewood or any other musical center in Western Massachusetts witnessed such a remarkable demonstration.

David Sarnoff Attends

Noticed in a box with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith were David Sarnoff, Miss Leslie Frick and Emilio Gorgorza with other guests. In a nearby box were Mr and Mrs Lytle Hull of New York. Mrs Hull is the former Mrs Vincent Astor. Myron C. Taylor, President Roosevelt's special envoy to the Vatican, and Mrs Taylor, who were in another box, are leaving Stockbridge tomorrow for New York. Mr Taylor said they expect to return next year.

With Mr and Mrs Halstead Lindsley of Lenox were Mr and Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord and Mrs Hepburn's son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Curtis Prout of Boston, who are staying with Mrs Henry Hollister Pease.

State Police Lieut William V. Shimkus of Northampton was in charge of 30 local and state police who controled the enormous traffic near Tanglewood this afternoon. There were said to have been 5000 cars on five parking areas.

REDUCTION

RATIO

17x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

A CUP OF TEA
They Also Serve
Who Only Wait
—Page 8

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

City Edition

Volume 50—No. 75 | Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 18, 1941. | 16 Pages— Price Three Cents

Blast Wrecks Ships; Retreating Reds Take Toll; 13,000 at Festival Boost Attendance to 106,000

Tanglewood Crowd Thunders Approval

Eighth Annual Berkshire Festival Closes With Record-Smashing Attendance

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The curtain on the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival was lowered yesterday afternoon with great difficulty.

Records Smashed

A record-sized audience just would not release the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky, from the cordial grasp of its unceasing applause. The final concert, the ninth in three week ends, offered a program which was mostly apple-pie for the crowds, judging from the way they ate it up, and it was just as luscious a dish for the orchestra, from the way the players attacked it: A Sibelius symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the Tschaikovsky fifth.

The attendance at the closing concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival smashed all records. It was more than 13,000 bringing the total for the nine concerts to 87,000. Counting the USO-British War Relief benefit Friday and the three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total attendance was about 106,000. Last year's attendance for the nine concerts was 67,000 and counting the benefit concert and three Saturday morning rehearsals, the grand total was about 87,000.

The weather for Tanglewood concerts naturally is an important element. There was cause to grumble at this final week end; Saturday night rain preceded the concert and a chill in the air pervaded the Shed for the duration of the program. Fortunately the audience had taken precautionary measures, but even then muffled coughs were noticeable all about. Yesterday afternoon the sky was bright and clear, but the temperature was not up to standard. The final brace of concerts, however, were the most generally satisfying of all. There has been comment, more than usual this year, about programs. The main point brought up was the withdrawal from early-announced lists of several pieces which would have been Festival first-times. But Saturday night, except for a couple of beautiful Wagner fragments, everything was new. Vaughn Williams "London" symphony opened the concert. Williams, like so many of his fellow English composers, seems to have mastered the cool,

Festival
Continued on Fifth Page

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

A CUP OF TEA
They Also Serve
Who Only Wait
—Page 8

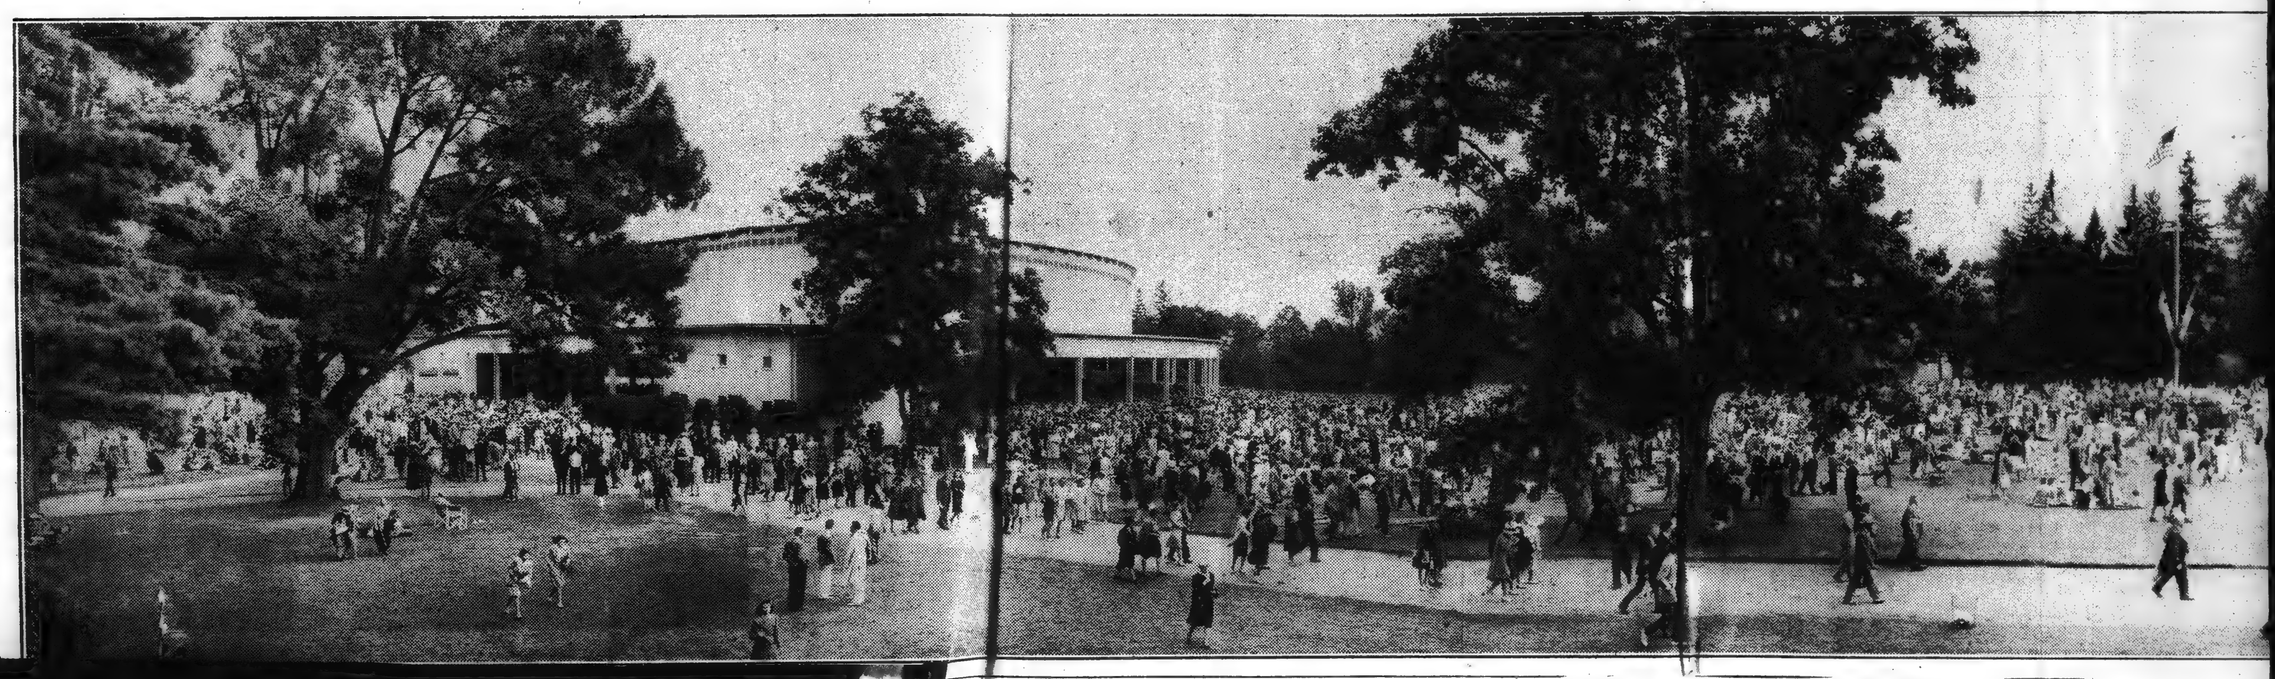
The Berkshire Evening Eagle

Cit
Edit

Volume 50—No. 75 | Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 18, 1941. | 16 Pages— Price

Blast Wrecks Ships; Retreating Reds Take T

13,000 at Festival Boost Attendance to 106,(



Tanglewood Crowd Thunders Approval

Eighth Annual Berkshire Festival Closes With Record-Smashing Attendance

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The curtain on the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival was lowered yesterday afternoon with great difficulty.

Records Smashed

A record-sized audience just would not release the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky, from the cordial grasp of its unceasing applause. The final concert, the ninth in three week ends, offered a program which was mostly apple-pie for the crowds, judging from the way they ate it up, and it was just as luscious a dish for the orchestra, from the way the players attacked it: A Sibelius symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the Tschaikovsky fifth.

The attendance at the closing concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival smashed all records. It was more than 13,000 bringing the total for the nine concerts to 87,000. Counting the USO-British War Relief benefit Friday and the three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total attendance was about 106,000. Last year's attendance for the nine concerts was 67,000 and counting the benefit concert and three Saturday morning rehearsals, the grand total was about 87,000.

The weather for Tanglewood concerts naturally is an important element. There was cause to grumble at this final week end; Saturday night rain preceded the concert and a chill in the air pervaded the Shed for the duration of the program. Fortunately the audience had taken precautionary measures, but even then muffled coughs were noticeable all about. Yesterday afternoon the sky was bright and clear, but the temperature was not up to standard. The final brace of concerts, however, were the most generally satisfying of all. There has been comment, more than usual this year, about programs. The main point brought up was the withdrawal from early-announced lists of several pieces which would have been Festival first-times. But Saturday night, except for a couple of beautiful Wagner fragments, everything was new. Vaughn Williams "London" symphony opened the concert. Williams, like so many of his fellow English composers, seems to have mastered the cool,

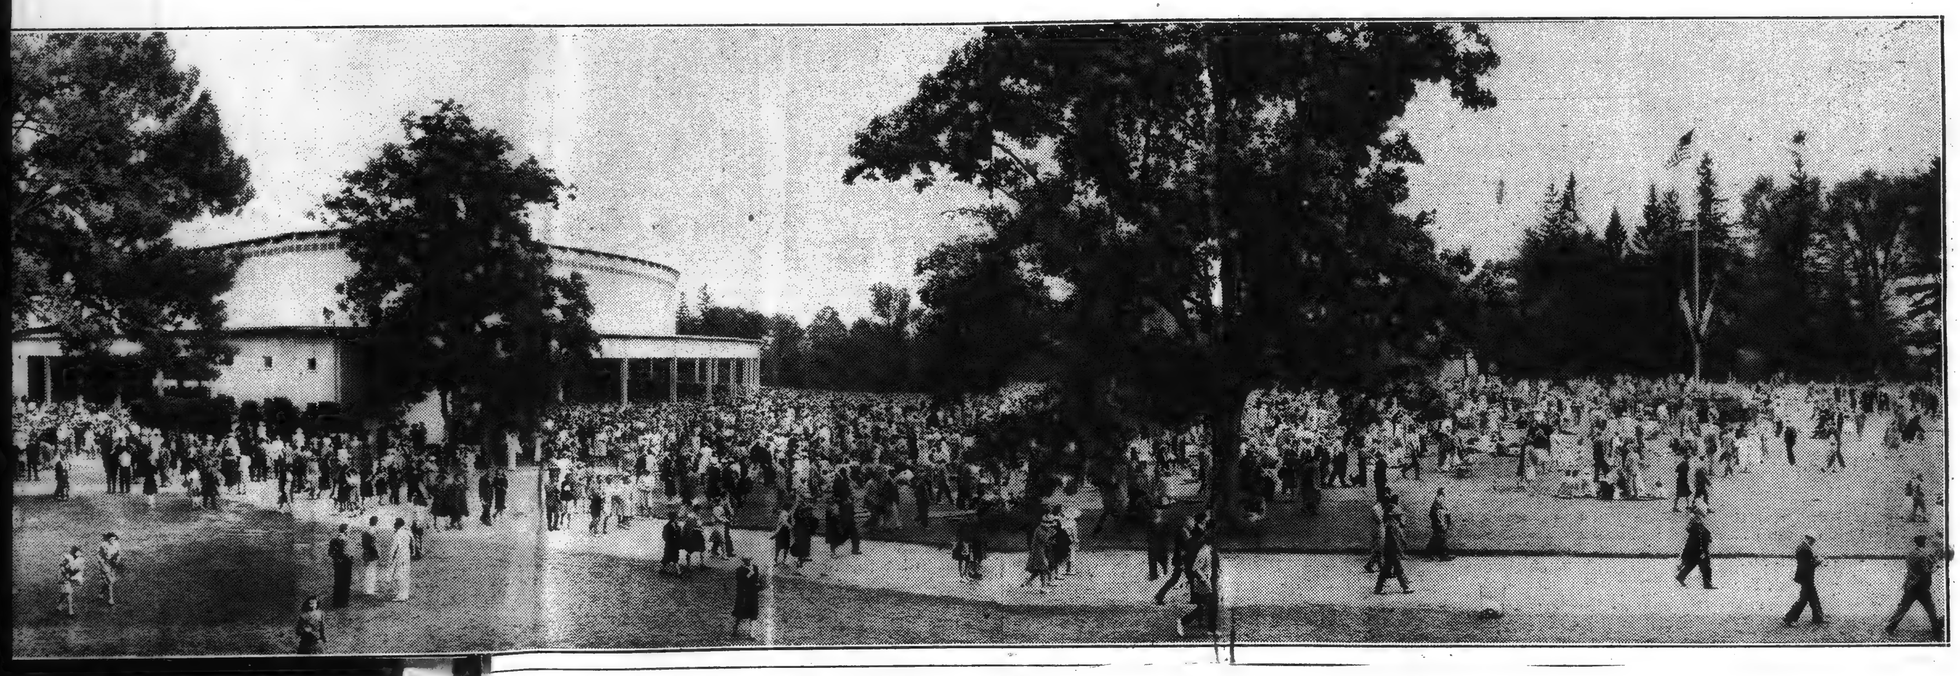
Festival
Continued on Fifth Page

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

City Edition

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Monday, August 18, 1941. 16 Pages— Price Three Cents

ecks Ships; Retreating Reds Take Toll; Festival Boost Attendance to 106,000



anglewood Crowd Thunders Approval

Eighth Annual Berkshire Festival Closes With Record-Smashing Attendance

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The curtain on the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival was lowered yesterday afternoon with great difficulty.

Records Smashed

A record-sized audience just would not release the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky, from the cordial grasp of its unceasing applause. The final concert, the ninth in three week ends, offered a program which was mostly apple-pie for the crowds, judging from the way they ate it up, and it was just as luscious a dish for the orchestra, from the way the players attacked it: A Sibelius symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the Tschaikovsky fifth.

The attendance at the closing concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival smashed all records. It was more than 13,000 bringing the total for the nine concerts to 87,000. Counting the USO-British War Relief benefit Friday and the three Saturday morning rehearsals, the total attendance was about 106,000. Last year's attendance for the nine concerts was 67,000 and counting the benefit concert and three Saturday morning rehearsals, the grand total was about 87,000.

The weather for Tanglewood concerts naturally is an important element. There was cause to grumble at this final week end; Saturday night rain preceded the concert and a chill in the air pervaded the Shed for the duration of the program. Fortunately the audience had taken precautionary measures, but even then muffled coughs were noticeable all about. Yesterday afternoon the sky was bright and clear, but the temperature was not up to standard. The final brace of concerts, however, were the most generally satisfying of all. There has been comment, more than usual this year, about programs. The main point brought up was the withdrawal from early-announced lists of several pieces which would have been Festival first-times. But Saturday night, except for a couple of beautiful Wagner fragments, everything was new. Vaughn Williams "London" symphony opened the concert. Williams, like so many of his fellow English composers, seems to have mastered the cool,

Festival

Continued on Fifth Page

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
AUG 19 1941

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 19 1941

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 19 1941

Checking Up on 'The Boys'

Mrs. Roosevelt Consults the President Concerning the Welfare of Elliott and Franklin.

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

HYDE PARK, MONDAY—Yesterday we had a quiet and peaceful Sunday. The high spot of the day was a talk with the president in Washington after his return. I shall be seeing him there on Tuesday evening, but I could hardly wait to hear some of the details of his trip and some news of our two sons. He did not know that the destroyer on which Franklin, Jr., is an ensign, would be anywhere near him, so it was a pleasant surprise when he was told it was part of the group of ships in attendance. I can well imagine what it meant to both Elliott and Franklin, Jr., to have this chance with their father.

MRS. ROOSEVELT.

I forgot to tell you yesterday about the gala benefit given under the auspices of the Berkshire music festival and the Boston symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., last Friday.

Not even the rain, which would ordinarily have spoiled most festivals, had any effect on this one. Crowds were there. The music was perfect and the speeches, including Lord Halifax's which had to be read since he could not be present to deliver it, seemed to give the audience pleasure.

We were whisked away for dinner with kind Mr. and Mrs. Myron Taylor and had a delightful time, though it nearly broke my heart to come in after Albert Spaulding had begun to play. We were able, however, to hear most of the evening concert and went home very happy that we had had the opportunity to take part in this benefit, given for our United Service Organizations and the British war relief.

Each time I go to these concerts, I am more and more impressed with the wonderful piece of work which Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith and her committee did in building the "shed," which is one of the pleasantest places I know of in which to listen to music.

I have just received a cook book, compiled by the American Friends of France, called "Specialties de la Maison." The preface is written by no less a person than Louis Bromfield and I must quote one statement: "A man indifferent to food not only is uncivilized, he is without a soul."

So it is fitting that the proceeds of the sale of this book should go to: "Help those who are fighting for civilization, and in civilization the art of cooking holds a high place." The illustrations by Alajalov will certainly catch your eye. I have chuckled long over the cow with the top hat and the duck with bonnet strings trailing behind her. The jacket, by Clement Hurd, should surely attract you so that you cannot pass by without buying this book for your cook book shelf.

(Copyright, 1941.)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 19 1941

A Brass Band Makes Fine Music

ALL ACCOUNTS agree that the music festival at Stockbridge for the benefit of our United Service Organization and the British War Relief was a stirring occasion.

The cosmopolitan nature of the program left out nobody, except, perhaps, the jitterbug. Most of us, let us be frank to admit, get more from the music of a good military band than from a symphony orchestra. And the bigger it is, and the louder it plays, and the harder is whangs the drums the better we like it.

Well, if there is anything that will stir the blood, it must have been that wonderful band of the Twenty-sixth Division which came up from Camp Edwards on Cape Cod to play on this occasion, two hundred fifty men—the very size of the aggregation quickens the pulse-beat.

Be it known that the military band did not essay any slumber song or love ditty. It went in for the "William Tell" overture and the Sousa marches, and the critics agree they made music, not just noise. High praise goes to Chester Earl Whiting who has trained the band.

You might think, however, that the great Koussevitsky, he of the pianissimo passages and tender nuances, might go through the motions of beating time when it came his turn to conduct the band. Not on your life! That isn't what makes a great artist, or a great conductor. Taubman, the "New York Times" music man on the scene, lets you know that Koussevitsky's music integrity would not let him do that. He turned over his Boston Symphony Orchestra to an assistant for the morning rehearsal, "and went down to the lakeside where the Army contingent was encamped to do some honest-to-goodness rehearsing." Now go on from there:

> He gave the boys the type of workout only high-priced symphonies get.
>
> And how the lads responded. They played with a gusto, rhythmic fire, and generous sonority that military bands must have if they are worth their salt. When they finished, the crowd rose and cheered, and well it might.

What did the band play for him? It played Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," and "Semper Fidelis," two of the most familiar band pieces. It must have stirred the soul of John Philip Sousa, conducting the Celestial Harp Orchestra, to hear coming up from the earth his own compositions played as they ought to be played.

Sousa himself could evoke such music, even though his men could play it in their sleep. Music need not become hackneyed, unless people let it become hackneyed. It can be as fresh and new after years as at its first public performance, if the soul of the conductor is in it; and if his soul is not in it, he will have a hard time to get from the players more than a mechanical, if meticulous performance.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 20 1941

Berkshire Festival Drew Record of 87,000 Persons And Gross of $70,000

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 19.

The Berkshire Festival closed its three-week season of nine concerts with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Kousevitzky Sunday (17), with a total attendance of 87,000 for the series, breaking last year's record of 67,000. Last weekend was attended by 29,000 people, with the largest crowd in the eight years history of the Festival present on Sunday (17), the total being 13,000.

Gross of the series was approximately $70,000 and a budget of $100,000 had been provided at the beginning of the year to insure against loss.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 19 1941

Tanglewood and Its Audience

Many of the friends of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith must have been amazed when she proposed eight years ago to put a symphony orchestra in a tent for a series of concerts on an estate in the heart of the Berkshire Hills. Yet their amazement then must be nothing compared to her amazement now over the development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Miss Smith is still the energetic guiding spirit of the undertaking, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is still, as it has been for six years past, its artistic core, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is still the presiding genius over all its multifarious activities.

Yet in all else the Festival is markedly different from what it was only a few years ago. The tent has given way to the widely curving commodius Music Shed, the grounds of Tanglewood now hold not only the aging Victorian mansion that looks over the lake but the rugged, simple, functional and colorful chamber music hall and the theater, and the general public has taken the Festival to its heart. This year it has come in greater numbers than ever before—nearly ninety thousand for the ten major events. It is an audience that does not bother to "dress" but does not mind if others do. It does not insist on seats but spreads over the broad lawns underneath sun or stars to hear the music. For lunch it asks nothing better than the sandwiches and cakes of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, which it eats wherever the view seems best. And although it gathers in festive spirit, it falls raptly quiet whenever the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky is raised, remaining so until the last note dies away, when it breaks into such applause as is never heard in the winter concert hall.

The audience has taken over Tanglewood, and Miss Smith, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have willy-nilly merely become agents of its bidding. Fortunately, whatever Dr. Koussevitzky does is heartily approved, and the chief problem now is to provide enough room and enough concerts for all who would attend. No lowering of the high standards thus far maintained is wanted. All that is needed to make the Festival of 1942 as successful as that of 1941 are perhaps another week of the music and a fair shake from Mr. Ickes in the matter of gasoline. If such are assured, let Miss Smith and Dr. Koussevitzky plan as they will. The audience, drawn from the nation over, will be on hand.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 20 1941

Interest In Music

Interest in good music is certainly not on the wane. In fact, there is ample to prove that interest in really good music has never before reached such a pitch in this country, nor probably in any other country.

Those who call this the "jazz-mad age" are merely judging by externals. More persons are interested in more music of all kinds, including jazz. The big point is the tremendous and growing enthusiasm for symphonic and operatic music on the part of persons who, if they had been born a century ago, would never have had a chance to hear either type of music.

A good demonstration of the way musical interest is growing may be found in the experience of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., this year. The Boston Symphony orchestra gives these summer programs at the Tanglewood Estate where the so-called "music shed" has been designed to seat 6,000 persons. At the final concert on Aug. 17, the actual attendance was 13,000, more than half the audience simply sprawling on the lawn and listening to the music from that vantage point.

The nine concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Stockbridge this year were attended by 87,000 persons, exceeding last year's record by 20,000. Considering that these concerts were given in the open country and that virtually the entire audience came from a distance, in some cases from hundreds of miles away, the attendance record is a most impressive proof of the growing enthusiasm of the best type of music in our country.

Incidentally the last concert featured Russian and Finnish music, the Finnish music of course being that of Sibelius.

The mixture of music from two warring countries on one program betrays the split sympathies of the United States in this particular case. Incidentally it would be interesting to know how much of the deep sympathy for Finland, felt in this country is based upon widespread admiration for the symphonies of Jan Sibelius.

Here is a case where a nation's music has spoken more eloquently for it than any other form of propaganda.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 20 1941

Fall Chill Cramps Festival

Writer Says Tanglewood Performance Lacks Seasoning

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: The third and last series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts commenced with Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10, in D Minor.

E. Power Biggs presided at what I thought was a rather squeaky organ; crowded against the back of the stage the members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus sat erect in their chairs, waiting for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" to come.

The rather funereal, and from my point of view uninspired music, floated through the vast Shed and I sat back in my place, waiting for it to run its course.

There had been no break in the premature, autumnal weather and all around me people made restless and inattentive by the cold were uneasy in their chairs. Lap robes suddenly appeared from nowhere, heavy top coats were draped over sheer, gossamer evening wraps and even the fireflies had disappeared.

Mainbocher, sitting next to me, took one look at Koussevitzky's short, gray dinner jacket and whispered, "Where does he think he is, the Roxy?" I simply prayed the Handel would be brief—feeling one of those helpless, schoolboy moods coming on where the most silly, unfunny things can reduce you to hysterical laughing.

Fortunately it was brief. And next came the magnificent, noble "Missa Solemnis." Rose Dirman, Hertha Glaz, John Priebe and Julius Huehn were the soloists. Far be it from me at this point to leap into chill, perilous seas of musical criticism but it seemed to me that nothing held together.

The choral background was ragged, magnificent moments dwindled into mediocrity and during the Sanctus something definitely terrible happened in the midst of a solo violin passage.

Something Happened

Rose Dirman's clear, beautiful soprano lost its way in the flight over the string section to the people listening beyond.

John Priebe's tenor solos seemed to come from thousands of miles away—vague and uncertain; and a pause of 25 minutes between the Gloria and Credo did nothing to sustain the mood. It is utter impertinence, obviously, for me to be sitting at a typewriter taking Koussevitzky to pieces.

I have no standards for judgment, but if emotional reactions may be forgiven, the only other time I heard the "Missa Solemnis" I was excited beyond describing. The Tanglewood performance, on the other hand, was like sitting down to a banquet of superb food cooked entirely without seasoning. And with long, disturbing waits between the courses.

Yet it apparently satisfied the multitudes. A brief note in the program requested the audience not to applaud. So time after time there were cries of "Bravo!" and at the conclusion I thought the steel rafters would tumble.

No—Elsa—No

And as usual the interval was a three-ring circus. Michael Bartlett was on hand, fresh from Cincinnati where he has been singing in opera with Grace Moore; Alfred Knopf, the publisher, wearing a suit bluer than a June sky, and any number of wonderful dowagers wearing everything from yellowing chinchilla to long, heavily embroidered mandarin coats, fresh from moth balls.

Elsa Maxwell, pursued by photographers—and loving it—fell gasping into a chair to announce she is staying in the Shaker colony at Lebanon. Now I have heard everything. The incredible, unpredictable Elsa stopping with those serene, gentle and simple people.

There are only 14 of them left, to be sure, but they still cling to their beliefs and their ancient little village in the green, Lebanon valley is like another world. The chaste, white rectangular dormitories, the great stone barn leaning against the side of a hill and tidy little gardens cared for by laughing, white-haired old ladies in sunbonnets.

Once upon a time they were a prosperous, thriving community—their rich, communal farms stretching the entire length of the valley. Today they still cling to the land, as well as their ideals, with absolute tenacity but the tempo of modern life has invaded their ranks and the orderly pattern of their existence. They are dying out and not as was the plan, hand-in-hand with civilization.

Now and then tourists still call at their doors, merely out of curiosity, or perhaps to buy children's clothes, quilted bedspreads, old-fashioned crocheted bean bags, or a wonderful candy they make from the roots of common swamp flag.

Otherwise they quietly dream out their lives undisturbed by the frantic racing of civilization, tolerant of everything, forever offering a haven to the persecuted and frowning only at marriage and the perpetuation of mankind. So picture, please the aggressive, worldly-wise Elsa settling herself by their firesides.

Seasons at End

But the inns for miles around are turning people away, so are the tourist homes and even the roadside camps. Consequently Miss Maxwell, who can take any situation in her stride, calmly set forth in the direction of the Shakers, knocked on a door without the slightest hesitancy and there you are. She loves it, they love it, and as I have said before, anything, absolutely anything, can happen.

So much for that. The concert for the U. S. O. and British War Relief and the two remaining weekend concerts will bring the Tanglewood season to a close and the countryside may return to its normal existence. Mrs. Roosevelt, Elsa Maxwell and Albert Spalding, sharing the honors with Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, and Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, are the stars and guests of honor, together with the Boston Symphony and the various other Berkshire Festival groups.

WOODSTOWN, N. J
MONITOR
8/21/41

"Think it Over"

By Rev. Frederick W. Brink

"The Art of Conduct"

"Time" Magazine recently reported a lecture on the art of conducting an orchestra, given between concerts by Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of Boston's Symphony Orchestra. Included in his lecture was these words: "You must conduct your lives in such a way that when you come out on the stage to lead yor orchestra you can truthfully say to yourself: Yes, I have the right to appear before these lovers of good music. They can watch me without shame. I have the right because my life and my work are clean."

If such a principle holds in the life of a musician, does not a similar one hold for every type of life? Must not the preacher, the school teacher, the business man, the physician, the farmer, the bus driver, and anyone else you wish to name hold a similar ideal before himself, or herself, saying: "Yes, I have the right to do my job without shame, because every part of my life and my work are clean."

THINK IT OVER.

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 21 1941

53

The Berkshire Music Festival

By GUSTAV KLEMM

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

SERGE ALEXANDROVITCH KOUSSEVITZKY must be a proud and happy man these days. In less than a decade this 67-year-old, Russian-born double-bass virtuoso and conductor has carried a big idea through to a reality that surely exceeds even his fondest expectations. From a modest beginning eight years ago the Berkshire Music Festival has grown to the point where it is broadly recognized as the most important summer musical event in the world.

In the summer of 1934 Koussevitzky gathered together his Boston Symphony Orchestra and journeyed westward to the gently rolling Berkshires. That summer three concerts were given in a horse-show ring under a tent on the Hanna Farm near Stockbridge, Mass. The concerts drew a total attendance of 12,000. By 1940 the number of concerts had been trebled and the nine concerts drew 72,000 people. This summer all records were broken and the nine concerts attracted audiences totaling almost 90,000. Already there is talk of adding a week and three more concerts to the festival next year.

—o—

There are two reasons for the undoubted success of these summer concerts. One is the superb Boston Symphony Orchestra and Koussevitzky. The other is the Shed, where the concerts are given, which seats and completely covers an audience of 6,500.

The concerts were given in this magnificent Shed for the first time in the summer of 1938. It was built, at a cost of $80,000, on Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate which receives its name from the tales written there by Hawthorne while he was a guest of the Tappan family, former owners of the property. The Shed resembles, from above, a huge slice of pie and the orchestra plays in a rectangular shell at the point of the slice. From any spot in the pavilion one may look off through the venerable pines, oaks and elms to the Stockbridge Bowl, a lovely lake around which border enormous estates which in turn are hemmed in by the Berkshires. Add a cool night and a benign, full moon and one has a setting which few spots can equal or even match.

Last summer the Berkshire Music Center was established, also under Koussevitzky. This summer school runs six weeks, the last three including the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first-chair men are members of the faculty. Last year there were 312 students; this year there were 340, of which 162 were men. The average age is 25. About one third are college graduates, most of them coming from New England institutions. Collective music-making is stressed, this leading to a large chorus and an advanced orchestra, numbering ninety players this season. Last year the main work prepared by the student body was the Bach B Minor Mass; this year it was the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.

—o—

Rehearsals go on from 8.30 in the morning until late in the afternoon, and the well-behaved visitor to Tanglewood may attend as many of them as he can manage to take in. Consider this busy little cross-section of Tanglewood which one visitor enjoyed: We arrived on the grounds around 3 o'clock. A quick glimpse at the impressive Shed and the Main House (an ancient, many-roomed cottage from whose open windows poured a bedlam of tooting flutes, brass and string quartets, piano scales and choral singing), we hurried on to the chamber-music hall, new this season and housing 500.

—o—

Here three student choruses and two small orchestras were busy at work rehearsing an antiphonal work by Schütz, a predecessor of Bach. Presiding over the entire ensemble was the shirt-sleeved Paul Hindemith, his assistants being G. Wallace Woodworth and Malcolm Holmes. A bit of this and we headed for the weird-looking theater-concert hall, also new this year and seating 1,200. Built at a cost of $40,000, it was designed by the Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, who is also responsible for the Shed and the chamber-music hall. We arrived in the midst of a piano rehearsal of Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte. This was being prepared, in English, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Met. The opera rehearsal ended about 4.25, and at 4.30 a lecture was given in the same auditorium by Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman Conservatory of Music, and one of the shining lights of American music.

Starting at 9 the next morning, there was a three-hour rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky. Debussy's "La Mer" was one of the items gone over, another being the Brahms B flat major piano concerto with Leonard Shure as soloist, this being in preparation for his performance the next day. As an added attraction, who should pop up at 12.30 but the sun-tanned, neatly slacked Tallulah Bankhead, who had arrived to whisk Serge off to lunch. Before he left the grounds, the Old Man (Tanglewood parlance) went, as is his daily custom, over to the Main House and took a quick look-see through the various classrooms.

—o—

Within the wire fence that hems the grounds, one finds a large refreshment tent, a streamlined trailer-truck containing telephone booths, a cafeteria, a first-aid tent, a large and well-stocked music shop—just about everything.

Vast spaces outside the grounds have been cleared for parking cars. The steady stream of traffic that heads for Tanglewood for each concert is beautifully handled by local members of the American Legion and the V. F. W. Scooting about on motorcycles are State policemen whose dapper, sky-blue uniforms make them look like chorus men in a Schubert operetta. There are cars from every State in the country. While cars bring the bulk of the customers, others arrive on foot, some with packs on their backs, by plane, by train and even by horseback.

Anywhere from two to four thousand general admission tickets are sold at each concert and the holders of these dispose themselves in the open as near to or far from the pavilion as they wish. Some bring blankets and cushions, others bring folding chairs. The acoustics are excellent and many of those outside the Shed hear their Beethoven or Mozart as they lie flat on their backs on blankets, gazing skyward and drinking in such beauty as exists in only a small part of the world today.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 21 1941

54.

Berkshire Festival a Brilliant Success

Bigger and Better Plans Made for Next Year

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: This is the last time I will be writing about music all summer. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has come to a close. More than 80,000 people flocked to Tanglewood during the prolonged session of nine concerts and on the last Sunday afternoon no less than $10,000 was take in at the box office in general admissions alone.

In other words you might say that Serge Koussevitzky and his companions in music have not only had a great success but that in eight short summers an American tradition has come into existence.

People from all over the United States have found their way to the Tanglewood gardens (before the war they came from abroad), busses, special trains, airplanes and practically every known manner of transportation except roller skates has been pressed into service, and quiet people living in little white houses along the roadsides have suddenly discovered their spare bedrooms can become gold mines in August.

So it is small wonder bigger and more elaborate plans are under way for next year. A four-week season has already been tentatively announced. In all probability there will be opera with the biggest stars available, and if this summer has been saturated with music, heaven alone knows what waits ahead.

Stockbridge and Lenox are already taking on the aspects of festival towns. The old New England traditions are struggling to survive but the annual invasion of the army of internationalists is making itself felt, and you can only hope the town fathers feel the money pouring into the coffers is a sufficient sop for the intrusion.

Posselt High Point

As far as I am concerned, the high point of the summer was reached by Ruth Posselt, the blonde, slender young violinist who made her debut at the age of 6 in Jordon Hall, Boston, going on to take Carnegie Hall by storm at the mature and ripened age of 9!

As the guest artist during the third series her contribution consisted of Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra—it was pouring rain when she stepped onto the stage and the atmospheric conditions were all against her; yet from the first magnificent sweep of her bow she was in complete authority.

And her reception was absolutely triumphant. Time after time the stamping, clapping, roaring audience brought her back to the stage until it appeared Koussevitzky would have to let down the bars and allow an encore.

Mr. Barber, also in the audience, was brought to the stage as well and the sustained applauding became even more deafening and determined.

But there were no encores, and after at least a full quarter of an hour of hysteria the audience reluctantly allowed Miss Posselt to depart.

Unquestionably she was the sensation of the festival. Very heart warming it must have been for Barber, too, although, as far as I can gather, his extremely brief career has been almost entirely one of triumphs. After studying composition with Rosario Scalero and singing with Emilio De Gogorza he calmly started forth by capturing the Prix De Rome in 1935 and the Pulitzer prize for music that and the following year. So Mr. Barber is an old hand when it comes to honors.

And, as far as I am concerned, everything that followed his concerto was anti-climactic. In spite of the fact that after a week of bleak, rainy autumnal weather, the skies cleared for the final concert—at last giving the people who like taking their music in open air a break. And you have never seen anything like the number of them who came to thaw out in brilliant sunlight against a background of Sibelius, Prokofieff and Tchaikovsky.

Mrs. Brock Pemberton, I should think, will win all the prizes for the unique costume—especially for the day when she appeared in slacks, red, white and blue ribbons in her hair and "God Bless America" spelled out on a broad belt in brass studs.

The beautiful Mrs. Sidney Howard was perhaps the most consistently best-dressed woman in the audience. At night she always wore black, a brief ermine coat, almost no jewelry and looked like an old Florentine painting. At the afternoon concerts she always arrived in a station wagon filled with sun-tanned youngsters—and looking the youngest and freshest of the lot.

Mrs. Roosevelt, Tallulah Bankhead and Elsa Maxwell were the sensations. Incidentally, Elsa, still going strong, motored over to the Cole Porter's after the final concert, went straight to the piano and without a note of music in front of her practically repeated the entire series of programs.

Rain or shine, Mrs. Cole Porter was always in her box well in advance of Koussevitzky's march to the podium—doing nothing to dim her reputation of being the most perfectly groomed woman in Manhattan. With her were sometimes the Lytle Hulls, frequently Mainbocher (who designs her clothes), the Tallyrands, refugees from France now, and Howard Sturges—also back from France where he has been working with the Quakers in the unoccupied areas.

Altogether it was a brilliant, exciting experience. I probably missed a lot, certainly any critical impressions I may have given would be better forgotten. The classic composers are certainly not my metier, but you can always try—and even learn.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, O.
POST
AUG 22 1941

EDITOR'S HOLIDAY

Berkshire Music Center Becomes American Salzburg

The Post editor has been visiting Quebec, New England and New York. Herewith is the last of a series of articles on his observations.

BY CARL D. GROAT
Editor, The Cincinnati Post

Cincinnati with its musical tradition—but also its difficulty of financing symphony and opera and getting impressive audiences—may look with envy on the Berkshire Music Center with its music school, and Symphonic Festival.

The Festival has just closed after breaking several records for attendance — 87,000 persons this season with a peak audience of 13,000 for the final offering. On an earlier week-end there had been 11,000 and 9000 attending on two successive evenings, surpassing anything in the past.

The Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., in the heart of the beautiful Berkshire Hills, bids fair to become a sort of "American Salzburg," even though the New York Stadium concerts are larger to date.

From every state in the union, cars are parked during the Festival.

The Berkshire Hills are crowded to overflowing for this event. Hotels cannot house all the visitors. Private estates are taking in guests (paying).

The publicity man told us that 2500 to 3000 used to be a good attendance, but this season the crowds have been so large that they spread out on the lawns before the "shed," happy at an opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony and its famed leader, Koussevitzky.

The Berkshire Music Center is on 200 acres overlooking a lake, donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. It is the old Tappan estate where Hawthorne and other early New England writers visited in the autumns. Here Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and the "House of the Seven Gables."

Now in the summer, enthusiastic musicians gather at the Center to drink of the inspiration of Koussevitzky. Advanced students and talented amateurs are given courses in music, opera, conducting. The Festival is a series of symphony concerts of surpassing brilliance.

We went to Tanglewood with a vague notion that perhaps someone had found the solution to presenting grade A music—on a break-even or profit basis. We were disillusioned. There are "angels" for this vast enterprise, wealthy Bostonians who support the symphony. However, the Festival itself took in enough to pay its way this season, what with 87,000 guests from everywhere—or 20,000 above last year's. The income, however, does not cover all the activities of the Center, and hence the Boston "angels," like Cincinnati "angels," have to dig for deficits. But, for the closing concert $10,000 was taken in for general admissions.

The Festival management is enthusiastic over the growth of the institution. It has been running nine years. Now, they say, musical appreciation is growing rapidly, and the attendance swells almost magically.

Tanglewood is ideally situated, less than 150 miles from Boston and New York, and drawing from such cities as Springfield, Pittsfield, Worcester, Albany, Troy. But in the audiences there are always guests from far away. We noted on the rehearsal forenoon we were there cars from Cincinnati, Washington state, Oregon, Iowa and Oklahoma just to mention a few.

Tanglewood and the Festival are something to make a music loving Cincinnatian green with envy.

CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
8/21/41

Chicopee Soldier Performs At Tanglewood Music Festival

(Courtesy Hol. Trans.-Telegram)

Pvt. Adolph M. Gawron of Chicopee, a member of the 182d Inf., is shown (third from the left) performing with the combined 250 piece band of the 26th Division which was conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Friday evening. All attendance records were broken at the current session of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which closed at Stockbridge Sunday.

The Berkshire Music Festival

Baltimore Sun. Aug. 21, 194

By GUSTAV KLEMM

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.

SERGE ALEXANDROVITCH KOUSSEVITZKY must be a proud and happy man these days. In less than a decade this 67-year-old, Russian-born double-bass virtuoso and conductor has carried a big idea through to a reality that surely exceeds even his fondest expectations. From a modest beginning eight years ago the Berkshire Music Festival has grown to the point where it is broadly recognized as the most important summer musical event in the world.

In the summer of 1934 Koussevitzky gathered together his Boston Symphony Orchestra and journeyed westward to the gently rolling Berkshires. That summer three concerts were given in a horse-show ring under a tent on the Hanna Farm near Stockbridge, Mass. The concerts drew a total attendance of 12,000. By 1940 the number of concerts had been trebled and the nine concerts drew 72,000 people. This summer all records were broken and the nine concerts attracted audiences totaling almost 90,000. Already there is talk of adding a week and three more concerts to the festival next year.

—o—

There are two reasons for the undoubted success of these summer concerts. One is the superb Boston Symphony Orchestra and Koussevitzky. The other is the Shed, where the concerts are given, which seats and completely covers an audience of 6,500.

The concerts were given in this magnificent Shed for the first time in the summer of 1938. It was built, at a cost of $80,000, on Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate which receives its name from the tales written there by Hawthorne while he was a guest of the Tappan family, former owners of the property. The Shed resembles, from above, a huge slice of pie and the orchestra plays in a rectangular shell at the point of the slice. From any spot in the pavilion one may look off through the venerable pines, oaks and elms to the Stockbridge Bowl, a lovely lake around which border enormous estates which in turn are hemmed in by the Berkshires. Add a cool night and a benign, full moon and one has a setting which few spots can equal or even match.

Last summer the Berkshire Music Center was established, also under Koussevitzky. This summer school runs six weeks, the last three including the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first-chair men are members of the faculty. Last year there were 312 students; this year there were 340, of which 162 were men. The average age is 25. About one third are college graduates, most of them coming from New England institutions. Collective music-making is stressed, this leading to a large chorus and an advanced orchestra, numbering ninety players this season. Last year the main work prepared by the student body was the Bach B Minor Mass; this year it was the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.

—o—

Rehearsals go on from 8.30 in the morning until late in the afternoon, and the well-behaved visitor to Tanglewood may attend as many of them as he can manage to take in. Consider this busy little cross-section of Tanglewood which one visitor enjoyed: We arrived on the grounds around 3 o'clock. A quick glimpse at the impressive Shed and the Main House (an ancient, many-roomed cottage from whose open windows poured a bedlam of tooting flutes, brass and string quartets, piano scales and choral singing), we hurried on to the chamber-music hall, new this season and housing 500.

—o—

Here three student choruses and two small orchestras were busy at work rehearsing an antiphonal work by Schütz, a predecessor of Bach. Presiding over the entire ensemble was the shirt-sleeved Paul Hindemith, his assistants being G. Wallace Woodworth and Malcolm Holmes. A bit of this and we headed for the weird-looking theater-concert hall, also new this year and seating 1,200. Built at a cost of $40,000, it was designed by the Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, who is also responsible for the Shed and the chamber-music hall. We arrived in the midst of a piano rehearsal of Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte. This was being prepared, in English, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Met. The opera rehearsal ended about 4.25, and at 4.30 a lecture was given in the same auditorium by Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman Conservatory of Music, and one of the shining lights of American music.

Starting at 9 the next morning, there was a three-hour rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky. Debussy's "La Mer" was one of the items gone over, another being the Brahms B flat major piano concerto with Leonard Shure as soloist, this being in preparation for his performance the next day. As an added attraction, who should pop up at 12.30 but the sun-tanned, neatly slacked Tallulah Bankhead, who had arrived to whisk Serge off to lunch. Before he left the grounds, the Old Man (Tanglewood parlance) went, as is his daily custom, over to the Main House and took a quick look-see through the various classrooms.

—o—

Within the wire fence that hems the grounds, one finds a large refreshment tent, a streamlined trailer-truck containing telephone booths, a cafeteria, a first-aid tent, a large and well-stocked music shop—just about everything.

Vast spaces outside the grounds have been cleared for parking cars. The steady stream of traffic that heads for Tanglewood for each concert is beautifully handled by local members of the American Legion and the V. F. W. Scooting about on motorcycles are State policemen whose dapper, sky-blue uniforms make them look like chorus men in a Schubert operetta. There are cars from every State in the country. While cars bring the bulk of the customers, others arrive on foot, some with packs on their backs, by plane, by train and even by horseback.

Anywhere from two to four thousand general admission tickets are sold at each concert and the holders of these dispose themselves in the open as near to or far from the pavilion as they wish. Some bring blankets and cushions, others bring folding chairs. The acoustics are excellent and many of those outside the Shed hear their Beethoven or Mozart as they lie flat on their backs on blankets, gazing skyward and drinking in such beauty as exists in only a small part of the world today.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHATHAM, N.Y
COURIER
7/24/41

CHANGES FOR TANGLEWOOD

When music lovers from the far reaches of the country arrive at Tanglewood for the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival July 31st, they may observe a number of interesting additions to Tanglewood's facilities.

Already in use by opera students attending the Berkshire Music Center is the new concert-theatre dedicated last Sunday, a new chamber music hall and four studios. The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eerio, of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Most unique is the theatre which seats 1,200. Its design is completely functional. Mr. Saarinen was the designer of the Festival's shed at Tanglewood.

The first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will find the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt director, joining in presenting the Villa Lobos Choror No. 10 and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." The rest of the program will include Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D Minor and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica." The concerts July 31 and Aug. 2 will be at 8:30 p. m. and the concert Sunday, Aug. 3, will be at 3:30 p. m.

Audiences at the eighth Festival will certainly equal those of last year according to advance reservations. Sales are 20 per cent ahead of last year, the Festival trustees stated today. Tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the Festival office in Stockbridge.

According to the Berkshire Hills Conference, there are plenty of rooms available within a radius of 10 to 25 miles from Tanglewood. Room reservations may be made by communicating with the Conference at Pittsfield or its Festival Accommodations Bureau in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

AUG 24 1941

NEXT ON OUR

. . . list was the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass. This was really the goal of our entire trip. It is a most beautiful place, an estate of 200 acres, that brought peace and contentment even without a note of music. Here one forgot the war, the hatred and greed of the nations overseas and revelled in the beauty of the Lake Mahkeenac and the Berkshire hills. But that was to come with the music. The first concert presented the orchestra in Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusic" very beautifully played. Next was Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, a vigorous work calling for every conceivable combination of instruments and harmonies. Dr. Hanson was present and appeared after the number.

FOLLOWING THE

. . . intermission, came the Brahms Piano concerto No. 2 with Leonard Shure, young California pianist, as soloist. His work was outstanding and we do not understand why he is not heard more often. He has a splendid combination of technic and musical good understanding, amazing strength and a firm, sure touch. The orchestra supplied a fine accompaniment and the entire number was superb. The concert closed with two Wagner numbers, Prelude to "Lohengrin," and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." More than 11,000 persons were in attendance at the concert, the music shed was full and many others were seated on the lawn.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON

. . . we went out to Tanglewood early, for it is a lovely place and we enjoyed the beautiful gardens and the lovely views of lake and mountains. There were many people there, some who had come as soon as the gates were opened to enjoy the out of doors before the concert and some even were having picnic dinners. There we had a glimpse of a most interesting sight. We had been told that there were many young people who had traveled on foot, carrying their packs on their backs, just as the students did at Salzburg in the days before Mr. Hitler decided to try force HIS brand of culture on the world. Here we saw some of them resting before the concert began.

ANOTHER HUGE

. . . crowd was present and a perfect afternoon brought forth keen enjoyment of fine music. The festival this year honored Mozart, whose death occurred 150 years ago. The Mozart number on Sunday was the beautiful Symphony in E Flat Major, brilliantly played by the Boston orchestra under Mr. Koussevitsky. Then followed Debussy's "La Mer," which was really the outstanding number of the afternoon. The third movement "Dialogue d event et re lemer." was especially fine. After the intermission came the well loved Brahms Symphony No. 1. It was all too short, altho it was late when the concert was over. It was estimated that about 33,000 persons heard the week-end concerts.

THERE ARE MANY

. . . more interesting things we would like to tell you about Tanglewood. More description of the place, and more about the people we saw there, but we are limited as to space. In New York we visited the Paderewski exhibit in Steinway hall and found it interesting altho depressing and we had a glimpse of the MacDowell colony at Peterboro, N. H. We also would like to tell you about the Ice ballet and many other things. But we have two more concerts to tell about.

THE MONTREAL

. . . symphony orchestra directed by Sir Ernest MacMillan presented a concert in the new music hall of the chalet on the top of Mount Royal. It was an exciting concert for many reasons. Sir Ernest is a magnificent conductor. He uses no score but draws the music from his men with ease. He played the Overture to "The Bartered Bride," "Dance Macabre" by Saint Saens, Grainger's "Londonderry Air," a beautiful presentation of Enesco's First Roumanian Rhapsody, Rimsky Korsakof's "Caprice Espagmol" and Boccherini's "Minuet," delightfully graceful. But the big event of the evening was the Beethoven Fifth Symphony.

CANADA IS AT

. . . war and the victory theme of the British is the opening theme of the Fifth Symphony, three short-notes and a long one. The entire audience of more than 8,000 was electrified as these notes boomed out and they sat as if entranced until Sir Ernest had taken the orchestra thru the entire symphony in a thrilling manner. We doubt if we have ever heard it played in like fashion. Perhaps it was the environment but we were as thrilled as the Canadians. The director was cheered to the echo after the conclusion of the symphony. People stood on the seats and fairly roared and shouted their approval. After the concert all during the long walk to the cars we heard people whistling or humming melodies from the symphony, some of them the opening theme, some of them the lovely second movement. It was an event not soon to be forgotten.

JAMES MELTON

. . . was the soloist with the Toronto Symphony orchestra in its concert at the arena of the university in that city. Here another capacity crowd greeted Mr. Melton and the orchestra conducted by Victor Kolar. People sat on the platform and almost on Mr. Melton's feet as he stood there and sang and sang. Melton sang the songs the folks knew and loved and which he sings the best of all. He sang "Short'nin' Bread," "Lindy Lou," "The Wandering Minstrel," "Summertime" from "Porgy and Bess," "Nobody Knows the Trouble," Schubert's Serenade and many, many others, for he was generous with encores. His excursions into the operatic field were not so good, but the people loved every note he sang. The orchestra played a popular program and was well received but it was Jimmy Melton who drew the crowd.

WE STILL WONDER

. . . why there is no summer concert series in the Tri-cities. Every city we visited had packed audiences to hear the music. The crowds were from all walks of life, from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, the First Lady of our land, at Tanglewood, to the little French girl in Montreal and every one enjoyed the music to the utmost. Those cities were as liable to storms and rains as Davenport but still every concert we attended was carried out as scheduled, without a storm or drop of rain. Altho we may not have distinguished soloists, or the Boston or Philadelphia orchestras perhaps some day the Tri-cities may have summer music.

55

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 24 1941

IT SEEMED that the amateur photographers and the professionals, too, had photographed that Music shed at Tanglewood where the Berkshire festival was held, from every possible angle. It remains for the Victor Record Review to picture this beautiful Summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the Berkshire Hills from another vantage point. It takes the curve on the outer edge, with the swirling lines making a gorgeous contrast to the straight posts, the black interior, and the masses of trees at the outer edge. I'll never be satisfied now until its possibilities have been explored for this letter. If I get one . . . and IF it comes out well, Jane, you'll see what I mean. There is still another brilliant portrait of Director Serge Koussevitzky.

Faithfully yours,

56

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 24 1941

AFTER THE FESTIVAL

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony to a rousing conclusion last Sunday afternoon in the Music Shed at Tanglewood and, after several minutes of listening to cheers and the more customary manual type of applause, left the platform. Most of the members of the five-figure audience, finally convinced that the conductor was not going to make a speech, departed for the parking fields. Some lingered to stroll about the lawn and the gardens, to admire the view centered about Stockbridge Bowl in the late afternoon sunlight, or to listen to an informal chorus camped upon the grass. Long lines of cars faced eastward toward Lenox and the Curtis Hotel; others faced southwestward on Route 183 toward Stockbridge and Great Barrington. The 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the eighth of this annual series, was over.

A Notable Achievement

To judge by the tenor of several observations heard by this commentator, most of the comments made upon the concert by the occupants of these cars were laudatory, and the general record of the festival and the summer season at Tanglewood must have been gratifying to all concerned in their direction. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and her colleagues on the festival board of trustees could contemplate both the large increase in the attendance, estimated at 20,000 for the nine regular concerts, and the undefinable but perceptible increase in the prestige of the series. Dr. Koussevitzky and the members and business heads of the Boston Symphony could realize with truth that the festival performances had been marked by this orchestra's prevalently high artistic standards and proclaimed them to new listeners. The teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center had reason to believe that the new school had become firmly established and continued to maintain a general spirit of musical idealism. The festival chorus, trained at the Center, had done notable work in mastering the exacting score of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis in a few weeks—a task which might have kept a major urban choral society busy for several months. The chorus, indeed, included an unusual number of trained musicians, with several of the Center's instructors in its ranks. Meanwhile, the very commendable singing of the Berkshire Musical Association in two of the concerts represented a community participation in the performances.

Much has been written about the concerts, and there is no reason to dwell further upon how effectively Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians can ride a familiar symphonic war horse, or how persuasively they can further the fortunes of less familiar and of new music. The fame of the festival is widespread; it has acquired an individuality and atmosphere of its own. No one now talks of it as a possible American Salzburg; the name of Tanglewood has its particular significance. And, at least so far, there has been no anticipation of the extra-musical chi-chi and artiness which had grown up around certain noted pre-war festivals abroad. Unless political conditions should intervene, the proposed increase of the festival schedule from nine to twelve concerts next summer would seem to be a logical step.

Character of Programs

But where will the festival go from here? Many would be glad to have it follow its present lines. Others point out that a festival, in the fullest sense of the term, should serve some purposes which cannot be served in the regular course of urban music-making. The concerts at Tanglewood are exceptional in their atmosphere and, among summer events, in their standards; they permit their patrons to listen to music without the handicap of the distractions and fatigues of everyday city life. But some observers have remarked that their repertoire is largely a cross-section of the Bostonians' regular winter programs in Symphony Hall. To illustrate this point, the thirty-three works performed this summer can be classified as follows:

Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century

Beethoven, Symphonies Nos. 3, 5; Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; Missa Solemnis.
Brahms, Symphonies Nos. 1, 4; Piano Concerto No. 2.
Handel, Organ Concerto No. 10, in D minor.
Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 13 (88).
Mozart, Symphonies in G minor and E flat major; Excerpts from Requiem; Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.
Mendelssohn, Italian Symphony.
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Capriccio Espagnol.
Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.
Wagner, Preludes to "Tannhaeuser," "Lohengrin," "Die Meistersinger" and "Parsifal."

Standard Modern Repertoire

Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, L'Apres-midi d'un Faune, La Mer.
Vaughan Williams, London Symphony.
Sibelius, Symphony No. 7.

Recent Works by European Composers

Hindemith, Violoncello Concerto.
Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" Suite.
Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

North and South American Works

Barber, Violin Concerto.
Copland, Quiet City.
Hanson, Symphony No. 2 (Romantic).
Villa-Lobos, Choros No. 10, "Rasga o Coracao."

This classification is not beyond cavil—Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," for instance, was composed in the 1890's—but it can serve to indicate the general distribution of the festival repertoire between the classic, romantic and modern, or between the more and the less familiar. Of the compositions played in the festival, the respective percentages in the above four classes were 60.6, 18.2, 9.1 and 12.1. Of those played in the 1940-'41 subscription series in Boston, the corresponding percentages were 47.6, 25.0, 16.7 and 14.7.

Developing the Repertoire

There is a difference between the requirements of a short series and of a long one, and Dr. Koussevitzky stands high among his colleagues as a program maker, seasoning his standard repertoire with a liberal while not indiscreet selection of American compositions or relatively modern European works. This policy was implied in six of the nine festival programs. Among those who might prefer to have the Tanglewood lists follow the general lines of those of Symphony Hall are concert-goers who spend their summers out of reach of urban outdoor series and welcome an opportunity to hear the music they love played by a first-class orchestra without having to await the next regular season. There are others whose permanent homes are much nearer to Lenox than to New York or Boston, and who find at Tanglewood one of their few convenient opportunities to listen to a major orchestra, except by the grace of the radio.

Still, without prejudice to such legitimate preferences, the programs might be made more able to serve certain purposes which could give the Tanglewood repertoire the exceptional distinction which now marks its atmosphere and surroundings. There may be room for a tactful increase in the proportion of contemporary works, which could be chosen according to some particular principle—say as a representative group of noteworthy compositions introduced by American orchestras during the previous season. This would not risk turning the series into a counterpart of the recent I. S. C. M. festival—a step which might make it all too easy to get reserved seats at the last moment. There is also seldom performed music of earlier generations which is worth hearing, or at least re-examination; romantic music ranging from Berlioz to Mahler; music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Or emphasis could be placed on the music of the subject of a recent or impending anniversary. This was done to some extent this summer in the case of Mozart, but with almost too much caution.

Twelve concerts is probably the largest number which the Boston Symphony can present at Tanglewood under present conditions. The regular season extends from October to the beginning of May; four-fifths of the orchestra's members play in the Pop concerts during May and June; many take part in Boston's free Esplanade concerts in July. Rehearsals at Tanglewood are long and intensive and, without at least one month off, it is doubtful whether the orchestra could continue to play with its present excellence and enthusiasm.

Operatic Possibilities

One or more features of value could, however, be added to the Tanglewood season without imposing extra work upon Dr. Koussevitzky or his orchestra. The Music Shed is not equipped for opera, and opera on a large scale would be better suited as the theme of a separate festival elsewhere. But the Berkshire Music Center's new theater might prove a very appropriate site for an opera series of a relatively intimate character, but yet could offer works of many types and periods, especially those which are not adapted to the Metropolitan's spaces. Such a series might be held before the main festival in July, or during the festival period on the unoccupied Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. There would doubtless be certain difficulties to be solved and adjustments to be made in relating this series to the work of the Center. Some observers feel, for instance, that more public performances might interfere with the opera department's basic training. But such performances could be intrusted to some of the many young American professional artists who are now handicapped by lack of outlets for their talent.

To indulge in a detailed elaboration of a suggestion such as this risks resembling an attempt to cross an unconstructed bridge, but the general question of the progress and development of the remarkable artistic institution at Tanglewood is one that calls for careful and mature consideration by all who have taken part in bringing it to its present auspicious importance.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 25 1941

OVERTONES

The choice of Aaron Copland to represent this country on an ensuing "cultural mission" to Latin America is welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm by at least one reviewer. As a significant proponent of the democratic ideal in the composition of music, none can surpass him. As a man, he embodies all of those qualities which we call the American ideal.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in his opening address to the Berkshire Music Center, of which Mr. Copland is a faculty member, asserted: "We well know that a man of action, in the true sense of the word, can only be called one whose actions are linked with the progress of the masses." Here, in brief, is a description of the man who is to represent the American composer among our southern neighbors. So completely does he reflect the spirit above quoted that one student said of him, "He is a man of the people."

Although Mr. Copland has achieved wide recognition as a composer, numbering among his works the musical scores to two movies, "Of Mice and Men" and "Our Town," the operetta, "Second Hurricane," and such symphonic scores as "Dance Symphony" and "El Salon Mexico," his championship of the contemporary American composer has given him a position in our national life enjoyed by few musicians. In the latter interest, he has written some of the most lucid articles on contemporary music to appear in any magazine, lectured throughout the country, released one of the most penetrating books on a better understanding of musical composition entitled "What to Listen for in Music," and been one of the most active sponsors of concerts of contemporary music.

Born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1900, Aaron Copland began his musical study when 13 years of age, under the tutelage of Victor Wittgenstein and Clarence Adler. To this piano study, he later added work under Rubin Goldmark in the elements of harmony. His rapid progress left no doubt of his innate musical aptitude, and a future career in this field was encouraged from the offset. In 1921, he left for Paris, there to study for three years with the eminent French teacher, Nadia Boulanger.

While a student under Mlle. Boulanger, Copland published the scherzo which has since outsold most of his later works, "Cat and the Mouse," a work which he sold outright at the time for $25. It was also his teacher that brought him to initial recognition in his home country, for Mlle. Boulanger, an organist as well as teacher of composition, was invited to appear as guest organ soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra, at which time she performed a Copland composition. Dr. Koussevitzky was so elated with the young man's writing that he has consistently sponsored his works ever since.

A Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship for two years afforded Copland an additional period of European study, study which resulted in "Music for the Theater" and his Piano Concerto. Upon his return to this country, he succeeded Paul Rosenfeld as lecturer at the New School for Social Research in New York city.

Lecturing, however, was temporarily abandoned when a $5,000 prize was offered him by the Victor Talking Machine company for his symphonic work, "Dance Symphony." In 1939, he resumed his lecture appearances, which he has incorporated with his many other musical activities ever since.

In addition to his personal writing and lecturing, Mr. Copland acted as a founder of the Yaddo Music festival, a sponsor of modern music in such concerts as the Copland-Session series, and an active protagonist for his contemporaries in such important groups as the League of Composers and the American Composers Alliance. To this, he has added his teaching services at the Berkshire Music center for two years of its duration to date.

The four-month tour which is now under way is under the sponsorship of the Committee for Inter-American Cultural Relations, an organization which functions through the offices of Nelson A. Rockefeller, the President's co-ordinator of Inter-American affairs.

CELINE KOESTER.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
7/24/41

REVISED PROGRAMS FOR BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ANNOUNCED

Eighth Annual Series of Concerts Opens July 31 at Tanglewood

Significantly, whether in keeping with the "V" campaign or not, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced today. They will include E. Power Biggs Aug. 14 in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the Festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimos and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the Festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, Festival trustees stated today. The Berkshire Hills Conference Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Accommodations Bureau.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 24 1941

A Protest for Tanglewood

To the Music Editor:

ON a recent Sunday afternoon, a group of us drove some sixty miles to hear the Boston Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival. The trip had been planned several months in advance—when the preliminary announcement of programs first appeared. There was to be played on this particular day a certain composition which we greatly desired to hear. Only one week before this day that composition was still on the program as given in your paper.

When we arrived at Tanglewood, we received the regular programs, and the composition was again listed. On a separate sheet of paper, included with the regular program, however, we found the actual program for that day—with the desired work conspicuous by its absence, and that is how the concert was finally presented.

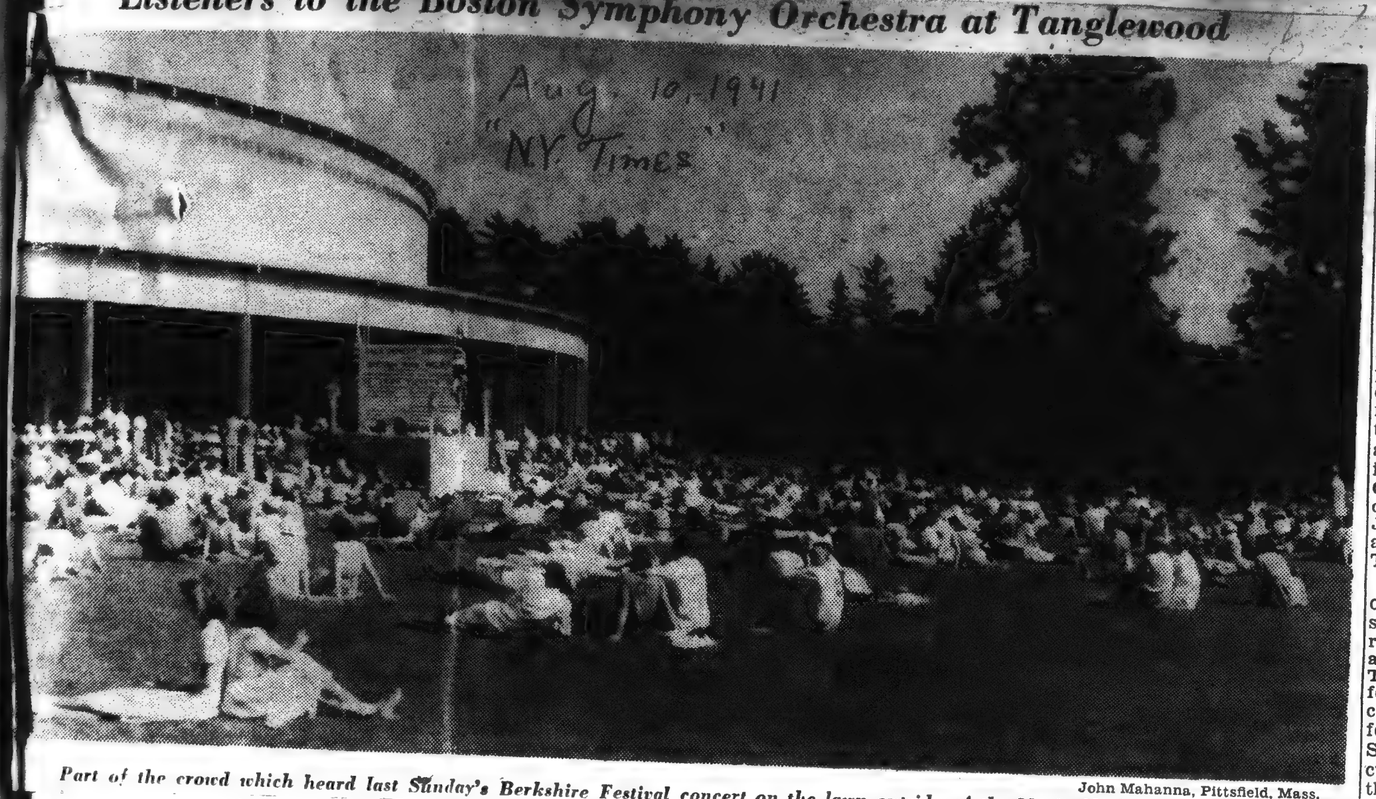
True, the original announcement said programs were "subject to change without notice." If, however, the powers that be saw fit to retain that composition on the program for some ten weeks, why did they suddenly see fit to delete it at the last moment? Is this an example of "artistic temperament," or are the directors laboring under the delusion that the element of surprise heightens one's enjoyment of a program?

If the directors have a valid basis for juggling programs in this fashion, we should very much like to hear it. We do not relish purchasing a "pig in a poke"—not at those prices. From our viewpoint, the program is at least as important as the performer. I am sure that a great fuss would have been made if a different orchestra or a different conductor had been substituted. Why may we not have the programs without changes?

DAVID B. KROMAN.
Schenectady, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1941.

Listeners to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood

Aug. 10, 1941
"N.Y. Times"



Part of the crowd which heard last Sunday's Berkshire Festival concert on the lawn outside of the Music Shed at Lenox, Mass.

John Mahanna, Pittsfield, Mass.

Koussevitzky To Lead Bands In Berkshires

Military Musicians Begin Benefit Event Friday; Festival Ends Aug. 17

Four concerts under Serge Koussevitzky's direction remain in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's schedule for the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The orchestra will also be heard Friday night in a large-scale benefit concert for the work of the United Service Organizations and for British War Relief. The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, directed by Herbert Graf, and the center's advanced orchestra will also contribute to the week's intensive activities at Tanglewood, presenting Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte" in English in the center's new theater and concert hall next Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the last concert of the festival's Series B today at 3:30. The program, which differs considerably from the one originally announced, consists of Mozart's symphony in E flat, Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms's first symphony. The following programs are announced for Series C.

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30

Concerto No. 10 for organ and orchestra, in D minor.....Handel
Soloist, E. Power Biggs
Missa Solemnis in D.....Beethoven
Berkshire Festival Chorus: Soloists: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass.

Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30

A London Symphony....Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto.....Samuel Barber
Soloist, Ruth Posselt
Prelude and Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser," Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30

Symphony No. 7.....Sibelius
"Lieutenant Kije" Suite.....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 5, in E minor..Tchaikovsky

Friday's benefit program will begin at 5:30 and extend until 11 o'clock or later. The opening event will be a concert by 250 musicians chosen from the bands of the 26th Division at Camp Edwards, who will camp by the shore of the lake. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct. Groups of the Berkshire Music Center will then present simultaneous demonstrations. The center's orchestra and chorus will present Lambert's "The Rio Grande"; the opera class will present scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Otello," "Falstaff" and Lortzing's "Czar and Carpenter," and instrumental ensembles will also be heard. Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung at the opening of a "Manifestation" with prominent speakers.

After a picnic supper and a fanfare the following program will be given in the Music Shed:

Symphony No. 5, first movement.Beethoven
Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting
Mars, Venus, from "The Planets"....Holst
Boston Symphony, Stanley Chapple conducting
Violin Concerto.....Mendelssohn
Boston Symphony, soloist, Albert Spalding
Singing by Festival Chorus
Overture, 1812 ..... Tchaikovsky
Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center
Orchestras and Bands of 26th Division, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

Drawing for prizes and a display of fireworks will complete the evening. Tickets and information both for the benefit and the regular festival concerts may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge or its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Boris Goldovsky will conduct the two performances of "Cosi fan tutte," with Dr. Graf in charge of the stage direction. Scenery and costumes have been designed by Richard Rychtarik and executed by the opera department's stagecraft students. A partial list of the singers in the alternating casts includes Emma Beldan and Maria San Filippo as Fiordiligi; Christine Johnson and Marjorie Phelps as Dorabella; Lois McMahon as Despina; George Tinker and Arthur Flemings as Ferrando; Donald Sayre as Guglielmo, and Frank Cappelli and Don Morgan as Don Alfonso. The text has been adapted from the Rev. Marmaduke Browne's translation.

At South Mountain, Pittsfield, a few miles north of Tanglewood, Harold Bauer and the South Mountain String Quartet will be heard on Friday at 4 o'clock in quartets by Arnold Bax and Hermann Hans Wetzler and the Franck piano quintet. Albert Spalding will be the assisting artist in the last concert of the series on Sunday afternoon, Aug.

A MUSICAL JOURNEY

By ROBERT LAWRENCE

A MUSIC critic on vacation is not so different from the traditional busman. He travels automatically wherever performances are being given and seeks out distant musical centers. Thus, on furlough last month, I heard concerts and opera across the country.

Most important of all summer institutions (excepting, of course, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival) is the series of concerts at Ravinia Park, near Chicago. The glories of that city have not been sufficiently sung, and its equestrian statues, wide sweep of park and limitless expanse of lakefront are little less exciting—at least to me—than the prospect from the Place de la Concorde. The atmosphere and performances at Ravinia Park, about twenty miles out on the north shore, are of a correspondingly high quality. Last summer I had heard the Chicago Symphony Orchestra give a concert there under the direction of John Barbirolli; this year the men again revealed their mettle with Sir Thomas Beecham presiding.

The pavilion at Ravinia, covered on top and open at the sides, has superb acoustics. Its natural surroundings are flowerbeds, meadows and woodland. In this setting Sir Thomas conducted a stunning performance of Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini," as well as an effective reading of Brahms's Third Symphony. The standards of execution and even the demeanor of the audition seemed of the finest.

Red Rocks and Music

Moving westward to Denver, I heard the performance of opera at near-by Central City, which have been described in dispatches to the Herald Tribune. There is another Colorado project still in the formative stage, which promises to lead the entire country in musical interest. Some twenty or thirty miles outside of Denver, where the Rocky Mountains begin, is an amphitheater known as Red Rocks. It receives its name from the stony formation peculiar to Colorado and — more specifically — from two gigantic boulders, which, like buttresses, frame the side of a natural bowl. All about are mountains, with picturesque valleys far below. Under the supervision of George Cranmer, Park Commissioner for Denver, work on this project has progressed to such a point that performances will probably be held there next summer. Unofficial events have already taken place during the last few months.

Red Rocks is built in a perfect slope. It has an open stage, flanked by a huge orchestra pit. Batteries of lights are built into the side of the hill. And, most remarkable of all, the stage has a background of natural cliff which achieves in material appearance what all the painted settings of the Valkyries' rock strive for in vain. On the morning of my visit I stood on the very top row of seats—a tremendous distance from the stage—and held a modulated conversation with Mr. Cranmer, who had placed himself far back on the stage itself. The acoustical properties of this bowl are remarkable. Sensitive in the extreme, they do not need the slightest amplification. The general setting is perfect for opera; the last touches of equipment are being installed in the dressing rooms and hidden ramps; and this new phenomenon, coupled with the Central City festival, ought to make Colorado one of the most important summer centers for music.

Slumber on the Pacific

Going still further west, I found San Francisco in a cultural slumber during the summer season. The Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo was scheduled to open at the opera early in August. In the mean while there were only open-air concerts in town, given by the National Youth Administration Orchestra. Across the bay, however, one could feel a hum of musical activity. The Budapest String Quartet offered an admirable Beethoven program in the auditorium of Mills College at Oakland. On the previous night a Mozart-Milhaud recital had been presented at the University of California (Berkeley) by Henri Temianka, violinist, and Darius Milhaud at the piano in his own work, "Album de Madame Bovary." Out at Leland Stanford still another series of concerts which I did not get to hear was being given by the Pro-Arte Quartet. Owing to the visit every summer of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, patroness of chamber music, the suburbs of San Francisco have become a haven for this type of performance. Audiences are intelligent and the whole scheme is notable.

By the way of contrast, summer emphasis in Los Angeles centers on symphony, ballet and opera, all produced at the Hollywood Bowl. Motion picture studios are given a place from time to time in the Bowl's schedule, and it was my lot to witness "Twentieth Century-Fox Night." Alfred Newman, chief of Fox's music staff, conducted an ambitious program containing his own "Blue Bird" suite and Debussy's "Iberia," and Edward Kilenyi, whose father is an arranger for the studio, appeared as soloist in the Liszt E flat major piano concerto.

Mr. Newman is a solid musician, and his score for the cinematic "Blue Bird" had charm. But, on first hearing, the Los Angeles Philharmonic did not seem to be an outstanding orchestra. Mr. Newman undoubtedly has a superior ensemble at the Twentieth Century studio. "Iberia," insufficiently rehearsed, did not come off well; the Liszt concerto, with Mr. Kilenyi playing brilliantly, fared better.

There is a constant source of musical interest in Hollywood that has to do with the scoring of new pictures. While I was there, an excellent Welsh choir had begun making a sound track for "How Green Is My Valley," soon to be completed. But the most stimulating music in town belonged to a theatrical production: Duke Ellington's all-Negro revue, "Jump for Joy." The show itself, although hilariously funny, is not yet balanced; but it has a finale which is unique in sheer crescendo and hypnotic rhythm.

Roar, Lion, Roar

The last leg of this journey took me to Cincinnati, where Grace Moore was singing her first Tosca. After wiring a news story on the merits of Miss Moore's first two acts, I found her concluding scene even more imposing. The voice rang out with splendor as she plunged from the parapet of the Castel Sant' Angelo, and her entire duet of liberation with Cavaradossi (ably sung by Michael Bartlett) revealed one of the finest lirico spinto voices of our time.

Physical conditions at the Cincinnati Summer Opera are both attractive and fantastic. Set in the midst of a zoological park, the structure is bordered on one side by a lake. Near-by are the animals, and on visiting an afternoon rehearsal of "Mignon," in which Gladys Swarthout, James Melton and Nicola Moscona were singing the trio of the third act, I heard the roaring of lions mingling with the sounds of the orchestra. This is not unusual for Cincinnati. Despite these biological interruptions, opera performances go smoothly and with a professional patina. The chorus is made up largely of Metropolitan veterans, and a full orchestra is employed.

At last, with this Odyssey completed, a return to New York, "A Symphony in D for the Dodgers" and Hans Wilhelm Steinberg.

CORRESPONDENTS' COLUMN

By VIRGIL THOMSON

Protesting Against Musical Patriotism

HARVARD'S Dr. A. T. Davison has recently addressed a Berkshire Festival audience on the subject of "Music in a Democracy," and the Boston Symphony management has thoughtfully forwarded me a copy of his speech. It is mostly a restatement of Dr. Davison's well known position of favor toward internationalist schools of musical composition, particularly the English (which is the least internationalist of them all), and of his even more celebrated theories about music education, which are (I think I summarize his argument correctly) that since the practice of music has no ethical value whatever, school children should not be taught to read notes, but that since the performance of music gives a profound satisfaction to the performer [modern ethics does recognize this interest as an ethical value], and that since such satisfaction is in direct proportion to the intrinsic beauty of the music performed [a fantastic assumption], musical activities in schools and (in the present emergency) Army camps should have their music "selected" for them by somebody with an eye (or ear) to its "answering the highest demands of beauty."

Well, maybe. Though the proposal smells rather of the textbook business to me. Nevertheless, the witty Doctor does make a pretty point, if not a novel one, on the subject of camp singing. "The Army," he says, "is repeating the same stupidities with regard to the administration of music which shamed us in the last war; and the country is being inundated with a tide of artistic mediocrity in the guise of democratic music, whose eventual recession is bound to be slow. Of the recent issues of cantatas and brief choral works devoted to democratic propaganda, I have already assembled a fair collection. They represent what might be expected. The texts are literary fungi that have sprung up over night; some of them, surely, the ugly results of the law of supply and demand; tawdry verses loaded with eagle-screaming Uncle Sammery; pious couplets set off by choral shouts of 'Liberty, America, Freedom' and similar ejaculations. As for the music, much of it appears to have been hastily composed, some of it is technically unsound, and practically all of it is based upon musical ideas that are inconsequential. It would take no mental giant to construct a syllogism proving that if this music is to represent democracy, then democracy is not worth saving.

"Are we, then, in the name of patriotism, to suffer a plague of third-rate choral music? And will the loyalty of every conductor whose self-respect forbids him to perform such music be viewed with suspicion? I believe that even now a man would, in certain circles, be considered a subversive rascal did he dare to comment slightingly on that high-born emanation of literary and musical fancy 'God Bless America.' I more than believe it; I know it, because I've tried it."

* * *

Band Scorer Scores Bands

WITH gusto Mr. Mayhew Lake offers elucidation of some problems involved in composing or arranging music for the military band.

"Dear Virgil Thomson:

. . . "Recently (in your column) I read, regarding the 'uplift of bands,' etc., that Maurice Ravel approved the band arrangement made of his 'Bolero.' (The arrangement was nothing to write home about—I made it.) The printed copies bear my name. I was conducting a band over Columbia network—I made the arrangement—first time 'Bolero' was aired by a band. Mr. Sousa called me up—I loaned him the score and he featured the number from then on. I also loaned the score to Edwin Franko Goldman. The American representatives of Ravel's publishers saw the commercial possibilities—my score was approved by Ravel. Also I received flattering letters from André Caplet (Opéra Comique), and Paul Dupont (Garde Républicaine Band).

"Garde Républicaine is, without doubt, the finest band in the world—I arrange for them all, so I know—it approximates a symphony orchestra. All colors are in full choirs—not made up of a conglomeration of duplicates (as all American bands are).

"With eighty-four men, every family group of instruments contains all voices of that family—each is a complete unit in itself. It would be a cinch to score a short program for any of these units—double reeds have a full ensemble, single reeds complete from E-flat clarinet down to contra-bass clarinet. Horns do not blather afterbeats (as they do here), because a section of altos is present. Trombones do not play tenor-horn parts, because there are tenor horns present. I could go on indefinitely with 'Why our bands sound like hell on anything except marches' (and I'm just as American as Plymouth Rock—and twice as thick?). An eighty-four-piece band here means a twenty-piece band with four times as many clarinets, horns, trombones and tubas—and eighty-four differences of opinion regarding pitch and tempo.

"To quote again: 'Most band music used to be dreadful stuff.' Granted! Most of it is now! But it is not 'dreadful' solely because of the arrangements. Much of the band music is 'dreadful' because a large proportion of band players throughout the country are either amateurs who use music for a sideline or professionals who are unable to make the grade in orchestras. Their leaders are usually cornet or clarinet players who, in some cases, become good performers but learned little or nothing about music.

"There have always been (and always will be) some very poor band arrangements and some putrid arrangements for orchestra, but it is silly to presume that Victor Herbert, Henry Hadley, Camille Saint-Saens, Maurice Ravel, Fritz Kreisler and so many other sticklers for details ever allowed anything to go to print without the most critical 'going over' on their part. I have letters from them and many, many others (of their class) thanking me for the transcriptions I made of their works, for band —at their request.

"There is no such animal as a 'band arranger.' The good arranger must know his orchestra first. Hadley never posed as a 'band arranger,' but he knew his orchestra, and both he and Herbert were the finest 'band arrangers' we have had. But well written scores are neither 'self-playing' nor 'self-conducting,' and the arranger is not responsible for some ambitious but poor third-horn player who aspires to shake a stick, whether he is beating circles for the Hog Callers Symphonic Band in Sour Puss, Okla., or misdirecting professionals in City Hall Park. One leader wrote that his harpist 'almost broke his fingers trying to play the harp part in "Princesse Jaune".' I suggested two alternatives: either he might learn to play or he might wait until he died and take it up with Saint-Saens, who wrote the part."

"To quote once more: 'Ideal would be a full band, with 'orchestral' strings added (not 'band' strings).' Now, that is something! Aside from '1812 Overture' and others where full orchestra is augmented by full band (my 'Symphony in Gold' brasses augmented the Philharmonic) will some kindly soul tell me: What instrument included in full band is NOT already employed in wood and brass choirs of a symphony orchestra? And (provided you add clarinets for balance) where could you find a band to play band music like the wood, brass and percussion of the Philharmonic? That's a 'band' with 'orchestral strings' added—so is every major symphony orchestra. Cordially, MAYHEW LAKE."

* * *

New C. P. Line

CLAIRE REIS has sent in a copy of a telegram received by the League of Composers from certain well known musicians of the U. S. S. R. She did not include a copy of her reply. Let us hope she turned off something a little less bombastic in sentiment and less hysterical in phraseology than the following:

"MOSCOU, JULY.

"LEAGUE OF COMPOSERS, 113 WEST FIFTY-SEVENTH STREET, NEW YORK:

"THE ENTIRE MULTIMILLION SOVIET PEOPLE ARE EXPERIENCING CREATIVE UPSURGE AND FIGHTING ENTHUSIASM IN THIS HOUR OF DECISIVE BATTLE AGAINST THE WORST ENEMY OF MANKIND STOP THE OUTRAGEOUSLY INSOLENT NAZI RULERS WHO HAVE ENSLAVED SEVERAL EUROPEAN NATIONS WILL MEET AN INGLORIOUS END IN THEIR MAD VENTURE AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION STOP COMPOSERS OF THE USSR CONSIDERING THEMSELVES MOBILIZED FOR THE RELENTLESS STRUGGLE AGAINST BLOODY FASCIST BARBARITY WHICH HAS PLUNGED HALF OF EUROPE INTO UTTER GLOOM AND DESOLATION APPEALS TO AMERICAN COMPOSERS WITH FRIENDLY GREETINGS AND AN ARDENT CALL TO MUSTER STILL CLOSER THE INTERNATIONAL RANKS OF DEFENDERS OF CULTURE IN THE JOINT STRUGGLE AGAINST THE COMMON FOE BY MEANS OF THE GREAT ART OF MUSIC.

"MYASKOVSKY, SHOSTAKOVITCH, PROKOFIEV, MURADELI, KHACHATURYAN, SHAPORIN, GLIERE, AND OTHERS."

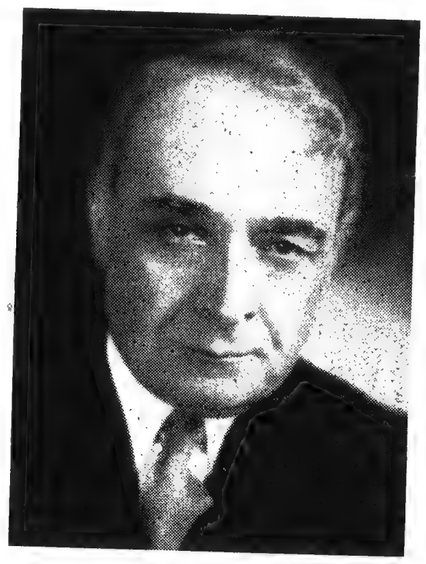
BROOKLINE, MASS
CHRONICLE
8/21/41

58.

Benefit Draws Throng To Tanglewood

by inez lind

Not even the pouring rain kept 8,000 music enthusiasts from attending the gala benefit for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief held last Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

The affair not only served the purpose of raising the very necessary funds for war relief but also gave visitors an opportunity to witness a demonstration of the everyday activities of the Berkshire Music Center. Tanglewood was "on parade" and never at any other time could a casual visitor get so complete a picture of what has already been accomplished nor fail to grasp the even greater possibilities of the future. Tanglewood is here to stay, taking its place with the great music centers of the world—places where music festivals are held annually, and where people may "live and work in music." The charm, peace and beauty of Tanglewood, together with the cultural values gained from even a visit for a day have captivated and fired the imagination of the music lovers of America.

On this particular day, and in spite of the inclement weather, thousands of cars from every State in the Union could be seen in the vast parking area at an early afternoon hour. On the grounds near the executive building and close to the little music store a tent had been put up where one could purchase hot coffee, sandwiches and other refreshments.

At four-thirty an unheralded and most enjoyable event took place in the new spacious theatre. The second act of Mozart's opera "Cosi Fan Tutte" ('Tis Women's Nature) was presented in English by the students of the opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf. The performance was excellent, comparing favorably with the better professional companies. Yes, all one needs is a voice, musical intelligence, youth and good health—and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center may be counted upon to do the rest.

The regular program began with a concert by the combined bands of the Twenty-Sixth Division, under the leadership of both Bandmaster Chester Earl Whiting and Dr. Koussevitzky. The stirring music, played by the 250 men, was wildly cheered by the delighted audience, as were the two conductors—especially Dr. Koussevitzky, when he conducted the great band in Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

"Berkshire Music Center on Parade" offered simultaneous performances of a huge orchestra and chorus in the Music Shed, opera in the Theatre and trios and sextettes in the Chamber Music Hall under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky. The difficulty was to decide which to attend and which to forego. Because of the continued rain, our decision was to remain in the Shed. Here, youthful, talented and efficient conductors offered Stravinsky, Lambert and Borodin. During the playing of one of these selections, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and her secretary quietly slipped into a pair of vacant seats directly in front of us. Mrs. Roosevelt wore a long, light camel's hair coat which was later laid aside for a white fox fur piece which was very effective over her black dress when she appeared on the platform.

Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Festival, opened the "Manifestation" in the Music Shed, introducing the chairman, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, of Williams College, who, in turn, introduced Dr. Lewis Perry of Phillips Exeter Academy and Mrs. Roosevelt, the guest of honor. Mrs. Roosevelt read her speech in a clear voice and only towards the end, in referring to the absence of Lord Halifax, did she mention any topics of the day—and then only to say that she was happy that the two great English-speaking nations were joined together to build a better world. Mr. Jerome Green, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, read the speech of Lord Halifax.

"Alleluia," composed by Randall Thompson, was beautifully sung by the Festival Chorus with G. Wallace Woodworth conducting.

The next event was a picnic supper which was to have been served on the lawn. Because of rain, however, the throngs had to content themselves with box lunches, eaten wherever a shelter could be found. The spirit was excellent, though, and no one seemed to mind the change.

The formal concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra began at nine o'clock and the opening number was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, dedicated to "Victory" and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. Mr. Stanley Chappel, faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted a second group, including the Mendelssohn Concerto with Albert Spalding as the soloist. Hugh Ross led the Festival Chorus during their singing of two lovely songs by Holst.

The concert program was concluded with the playing of Tchaikowsky's "Overture of 1812" by the full orchestra and sixty picked bandsmen of the Twenty-Sixth Division. The audience stood in their seats, cheered and shouted themselves hoarse. Dr. Koussevitzky finally succeeded in calming the audience and everyone joined in the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

It was all well worth traveling 150 miles for. Not the least of the thrill was to witness the parade of cars three miles long wending their way homewards in the darkness of the night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 24 1941

Young Artists

Music Editor, New York Herald Tribune:

In reviewing the Berkshire Festival concert of Aug. 9 at which Leonard Shure was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Robert Lawrence, of this paper, asks, "But should not the most celebrated soloist available have been engaged for a festival of this kind?"

I wish to protest emphatically against this question and to ask, in turn: How, except through important and successful public appearances, should an artist become celebrated?

Mr. Lawrence duly records both the importance and success of the performance in question, and his disagreement with the public in its enthusiastic acclaim is, of course, entirely within his province as an independent critic. By raising the issue of fame, however, he seems to me to be encouraging the musical public to take a backward step.

In the world of music as it is today a young artist is dependent to some extent upon newspaper reviews, and it goes without saying that adverse press comment (upon musical grounds) is an inevitable hazard of this system. But it is quite another matter to disparage the initiative of a conductor such as Dr. Koussevitzky who, with the independence and integrity characteristic of him, chooses a soloist because of his own artistic considerations.

Very truly yours,
LEOPOLD MANNES.
Edgartown, Mass., Aug. 16, 1941.

There is no point of debate with Mr. Mannes when he claims that young artists should be given every possible opportunity for public appearances—and important appearances. It would seem, however, that this ought to come about in a regular winter series, with a festival, such as that at Tanglewood, reserved as one of the awaited climaxes in an artist's career.

I hardly think that, at festival time, Mr. Mannes would enjoy hearing the Boston Symphony directed by a talented but not yet fully developed conductor to whom Dr. Koussevitzky had graciously yielded his baton for the occasion. The situation in regard to soloists, under such imposing auspices, is no less exacting. A Horowitz, Rubinstein or Serkin, all gloriously associated with the Brahms B-flat major concerto, would have demonstrated most clearly by a Tanglewood appearance the obligations of the Berkshire Festival to its public, and their practical fulfillment.

By all means let young conductors, young instrumentalists be heard. We need them; they are our future resource. But for a series that is supposed to rule American standards of performance it might be well for Dr. Koussevitzky to engage the most eminent artists who, at the peak of their interpretative powers, could make a concerto heard at Tanglewood live in the memory.

R. L.

CORRESPONDENTS' COLUMN

By VIRGIL THOMSON

Protesting Against Musical Patriotism

HARVARD'S Dr. A. T. Davison has recently addressed a Berkshire Festival audience on the subject of "Music in a Democracy," and the Boston Symphony management has thoughtfully forwarded me a copy of his speech. It is mostly a restatement of Dr. Davison's well known position of favor toward internationalist schools of musical composition, particularly the English (which is the least internationalist of them all), and of his even more celebrated theories about music education, which are (I think I summarize his argument correctly) that since the practice of music has no ethical value whatever, school children should not be taught to read notes, but that since the performance of music gives a profound satisfaction to the performer [modern ethics does recognize this interest as an ethical value], and that since such satisfaction is in direct proportion to the intrinsic beauty of the music performed [a fantastic assumption], musical activities in schools and (in the present emergency) Army camps should have their music "selected" for them by somebody with an eye (or ear) to its "answering the highest demands of beauty."

Well, maybe. Though the proposal smells rather of the textbook business to me. Nevertheless, the witty Doctor does make a pretty point, if not a novel one, on the subject of camp singing. "The Army," he says, "is repeating the same stupidities with regard to the administration of music which shamed us in the last war; and the country is being inundated with a tide of artistic mediocrity in the guise of democratic music, whose eventual recession is bound to be slow. Of the recent issues of cantatas and brief choral works devoted to democratic propaganda, I have already assembled a fair collection. They represent what might be expected. The texts are literary fungi that have sprung up over night; some of them, surely, the ugly results of the law of supply and demand; tawdry verses loaded with eagle-screaming Uncle Sammery; pious couplets set off by choral shouts of 'Liberty, America, Freedom' and similar ejaculations. As for the music, much of it appears to have been hastily composed, some of it is technically unsound, and practically all of it is based upon musical ideas that are inconsequential. It would take no mental giant to construct a syllogism proving that if this music is to represent democracy, then democracy is not worth saving.

"Must we, then, in the name of patriotism, to suffer a plague of third-rate choral music? And will the loyalty of every conductor whose self-respect forbids him to perform such music be viewed with suspicion? I believe that even now a man would, in certain circles, be considered a subversive rascal did he dare to comment slightingly on that high-born emanation of literary and musical fancy 'God Bless America.' I more than believe it; I know it, because I've tried it."

* * *

Band Scorer Scores Bands

WITH gusto Mr. Mayhew Lake offers elucidation of some problems involved in composing or arranging music for the military band.

"Dear Virgil Thomson:

. . . "Recently (in your column) I read, regarding the 'uplift of bands,' etc., that Maurice Ravel approved the band arrangement made of his 'Bolero.' (The arrangement was nothing to write home about—I made it.) The printed copies bear my name. I was conducting a band over Columbia network—I made the arrangement—first time 'Bolero' was aired by a band. Mr. Sousa called me up—I loaned him the score and he featured the number from then on. I also loaned the score to Edwin Franko Goldman. The American representatives of Ravel's publishers saw the commercial possibilities—my score was approved by Ravel. Also I received flattering letters from André Caplet (Opéra Comique), and Paul Dupont (Garde Républicaine Band).

"Garde Républicaine is, without doubt, the finest band in the world—I arrange for them all, so I know—it approximates a symphony orchestra. All colors are in full choirs—not made up of a conglomeration of duplicates (as all American bands are).

"With eighty-four men, every family group of instruments contains all voices of that family—each is a complete unit in itself. It would be a cinch to score a short program for any of these units—double reeds have a full ensemble, single reeds complete from E-flat clarinet down to contra-bass clarinet. Horns do not blather afterbeats (as they do here), because a section of altos is present. Trombones do not play tenor-horn parts, because there are tenor horns present. I could go on indefinitely with 'Why our bands sound like hell on anything except marches' (and I'm just as American as Plymouth Rock—and twice as thick?). An eighty-four-piece band here means a twenty-piece band with four times as many clarinets, horns, trombones and tubas—and eighty-four differences of opinion regarding pitch and tempo.

"To quote again: 'Most band music used to be dreadful stuff.' Granted! Most of it is now! But it is not 'dreadful' solely because of the arrangements. Much of the band music is 'dreadful' because a large proportion of band players throughout the country are either amateurs who use music for a sideline or professionals who are unable to make the grade in orchestras. Their leaders are usually cornet or clarinet players who, in some cases, become good performers but learned little or nothing about music.

"There have always been (and always will be) some very poor band arrangements and some putrid arrangements for orchestra, but it is silly to presume that Victor Herbert, Henry Hadley, Camille Saint-Saens, Maurice Ravel, Fritz Kreisler and so many other sticklers for details ever allowed anything to go to print without the most critical 'going over' on their part. I have letters from them and many, many others (of their class) thanking me for the transcriptions I made of their works, for band—at their request.

"There is no such animal as a 'band arranger.' The good arranger must know his orchestra first. Hadley never posed as a 'band arranger,' but he knew his orchestra, and both he and Herbert were the finest 'band arrangers' we have had. But well written scores are neither 'self-playing' nor 'self-conducting,' and the arranger is not responsible for some ambitious but poor third-horn player who aspires to shake a stick, whether he is beating circles for the Hog Callers Symphonic Band in Sour Puss, Okla., or misdirecting professionals in City Hall Park. One leader wrote that his harpist 'almost broke his fingers trying to play the harp part in "Princesse Jaune".' I suggested two alternatives: either he might learn to play or he might wait until he died and take it up with Saint-Saens, who wrote the part."

"To quote once more: 'Ideal would be a full band, with 'orchestral' strings added (not 'band' strings).' Now, that is something! Aside from '1812 Overture' and others where full orchestra is augmented by full band (my 'Symphony in Gold' brasses augmented the Philharmonic) will some kindly soul tell me: What instrument included in full band is NOT already employed in wood and brass choirs of a symphony orchestra? And (provided you add clarinets for balance) where could you find a band to play band music like the wood, brass and percussion of the Philharmonic? That's a 'band' with 'orchestral strings' added—so is every major symphony orchestra. Cordially,

MAYHEW LAKE."

* * *

New C. P. Line

CLAIRE REIS has sent in a copy of a telegram received by the League of Composers from certain well known musicians of the U. S. S. R. She did not include a copy of her reply. Let us hope she turned off something a little less bombastic in sentiment and less hysterical in phraseology than the following:

"MOSCOU, JULY.

"LEAGUE OF COMPOSERS, 113 WEST FIFTY-SEVENTH STREET, NEW YORK:

"THE ENTIRE MULTIMILLION SOVIET PEOPLE ARE EXPERIENCING CREATIVE UPSURGE AND FIGHTING ENTHUSIASM IN THIS HOUR OF DECISIVE BATTLE AGAINST THE WORST ENEMY OF MANKIND STOP THE OUTRAGEOUSLY INSOLENT NAZI RULERS WHO HAVE ENSLAVED SEVERAL EUROPEAN NATIONS WILL MEET AN INGLORIOUS END IN THEIR MAD VENTURE AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION STOP COMPOSERS OF THE USSR CONSIDERING THEMSELVES MOBILIZED FOR THE RELENTLESS STRUGGLE AGAINST BLOODY FASCIST BARBARITY WHICH HAS PLUNGED HALF OF EUROPE INTO UTTER GLOOM AND DESOLATION APPEALS TO AMERICAN COMPOSERS WITH FRIENDLY GREETINGS AND AN ARDENT CALL TO MUSTER STILL CLOSER THE INTERNATIONAL RANKS OF DEFENDERS OF CULTURE IN THE JOINT STRUGGLE AGAINST THE COMMON FOE BY MEANS OF THE GREAT ART OF MUSIC.

"MYASKOVSKY, SHOSTAKOVITCH, PROKOFIEV, MURADELI, KHACHATURYAN, SHAPORIN, GLIERE, AND OTHERS."

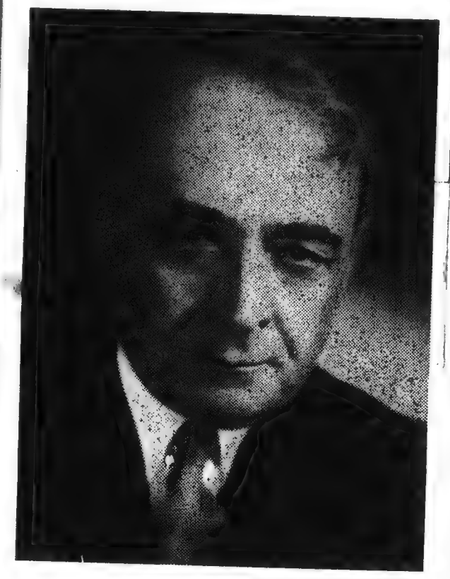
BROOKLINE, MASS
CHRONICLE
3/21/41

58.

Benefit Draws Throng To Tanglewood

by inez lind

Not even the pouring rain kept 8,000 music enthusiasts from attending the gala benefit for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief held last Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

The affair not only served the purpose of raising the very necessary funds for war relief but also gave visitors an opportunity to witness a demonstration of the everyday activities of the Berkshire Music Center. Tanglewood was "on parade" and never at any other time could a casual visitor get so complete a picture of what has already been accomplished nor fail to grasp the even greater possibilities of the future. Tanglewood is here to stay, taking its place with the great music centers of the world—places where music festivals are held annually, and where people may "live and work in music." The charm, peace and beauty of Tanglewood, together with the cultural values gained from even a visit for a day have captivated and fired the imagination of the music lovers of America.

On this particular day, and in spite of the inclement weather, thousands of cars from every State in the Union could be seen in the vast parking area at an early afternoon hour. On the grounds near the executive building and close to the little music store a tent had been put up where one could purchase hot coffee, sandwiches and other refreshments.

At four-thirty an unheralded and most enjoyable event took place in the new spacious theatre. The second act of Mozart's opera "Cosi Fan Tutte" ('Tis Women's Nature) was presented in English by the students of the opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf. The performance was excellent, comparing favorably with the better professional companies. Yes, all one needs is a voice, musical intelligence, youth and good health—and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center may be counted upon to do the rest.

The regular program began with a concert by the combined bands of the Twenty-Sixth Division, under the leadership of both Bandmaster Chester Earl Whiting and Dr. Koussevitzky. The stirring music, played by the 250 men, was wildly cheered by the delighted audience, as were the two conductors—especially Dr. Koussevitzky, when he conducted the great band in Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

"Berkshire Music Center on Parade" offered simultaneous performances of a huge orchestra and chorus in the Music Shed, opera in the Theatre and trios and sextettes in the Chamber Music Hall under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky. The difficulty was to decide which to attend and which to forego. Because of the continued rain, our decision was to remain in the Shed. Here, youthful, talented and efficient conductors offered Stravinsky, Lambert and Borodin. During the playing of one of these selections, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and her secretary quietly slipped into a pair of vacant seats directly in front of us. Mrs. Roosevelt wore a long, light camel's hair coat which was later laid aside for a white fox fur piece which was very effective over her black dress when she appeared on the platform.

Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Festival, opened the "Manifestation" in the Music Shed, introducing the chairman, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, of Williams College, who, in turn, introduced Dr. Lewis Perry of Phillips Exeter Academy and Mrs. Roosevelt, the guest of honor. Mrs. Roosevelt read her speech in a clear voice and only towards the end, in referring to the absence of Lord Halifax, did she mention any topics of the day—and then only to say that she was happy that the two great English-speaking nations were joined together to build a better world. Mr. Jerome Green, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, read the speech of Lord Halifax.

"Alleluia," composed by Randall Thompson, was beautifully sung by the Festival Chorus with G. Wallace Woodworth conducting.

The next event was a picnic supper which was to have been served on the lawn. Because of rain, however, the throngs had to content themselves with box lunches, eaten wherever a shelter could be found. The spirit was excellent, though, and no one seemed to mind the change.

The formal concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra began at nine o'clock and the opening number was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, dedicated to "Victory" and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. Mr. Stanley Chappel, faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted a second group, including the Mendelssohn Concerto with Albert Spalding as the soloist. Hugh Ross led the Festival Chorus during their singing of two lovely songs by Holst.

The concert program was concluded with the playing of Tchaikowsky's "Overture of 1812" by the full orchestra and sixty picked bandsmen of the Twenty-Sixth Division. The audience stood in their seats, cheered and shouted themselves hoarse. Dr. Koussevitzky finally succeeded in calming the audience and everyone joined in the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

It was all well worth traveling 150 miles for. Not the least of the thrill was to witness the parade of cars three miles long wending their way homewards in the darkness of the night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 24 1941

Young Artists

Music Editor, New York Herald Tribune:

In reviewing the Berkshire Festival concert of Aug. 9 at which Leonard Shure was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Robert Lawrence, of this paper, asks, "But should not the most celebrated soloist available have been engaged for a festival of this kind?"

I wish to protest emphatically against this question and to ask, in turn: How, except through important and successful public appearances, should an artist become celebrated?

Mr. Lawrence duly records both the importance and success of the performance in question, and his disagreement with the public in its enthusiastic acclaim is, of course, entirely within his province as an independent critic. By raising the issue of fame, however, he seems to me to be encouraging the musical public to take a backward step.

In the world of music as it is today a young artist is dependent to some extent upon newspaper reviews, and it goes without saying that adverse press comment (upon musical grounds) is an inevitable hazard of this system. But it is quite another matter to disparage the initiative of a conductor such as Dr. Koussevitzky who, with the independence and integrity characteristic of him, chooses a soloist because of his own artistic considerations.

Very truly yours,
LEOPOLD MANNES.
Edgartown, Mass., Aug. 16, 1941.

There is no point of debate with Mr. Mannes when he claims that young artists should be given every possible opportunity for public appearances—and important appearances. It would seem, however, that this ought to come about in a regular winter series, with a festival, such as that at Tanglewood, reserved as one of the awaited climaxes in an artist's career.

I hardly think that, at festival time, Mr. Mannes would enjoy hearing the Boston Symphony directed by a talented but not yet fully developed conductor to whom Dr. Koussevitzky had graciously yielded his baton for the occasion. The situation in regard to soloists, under such imposing auspices, is no less exacting. A Horowitz, Rubinstein or Serkin, all gloriously associated with the Brahms B-flat major concerto, would have demonstrated most clearly by a Tanglewood appearance the obligations of the Berkshire Festival to its public, and their practical fulfillment.

By all means let young conductors, young instrumentalists be heard. We need them; they are our future resource. But for a series that is supposed to rule American standards of performance it might be well for Dr. Koussevitzky to engage the most eminent artists who, at the peak of their interpretative powers, could make a concerto heard at Tanglewood live in the memory.

R. L.

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N.Y.
TELEGRAM
AUG 24 1941

Sunday Chatter

By Marion Stocker

VACATION TRIPS add much to a town's society. They're as effective as a new coat of paint to a house, or a becoming new hat to a woman, in reviving self-interest and the interest of others.

Wanderers return to their old stamping grounds brimming with fresh experiences and the desire to tell about them. Conversation thrives!

* * *

SINCE WE FIRST heard about the Berkshire Music Festival several years ago, we've wondered just what the unique institution was like. At last our curiosity has been satisfied. Helen Kinsman (Mrs. Richard E.) and her daughter, Mary, attended for a week this year (Aug. 5-12) and describe the rustic music center in glowing terms.

The buildings and outdoor stadium—"The Shed"—are situated on a 200-acre estate, "Tanglewood," which was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks in 1937. "Tanglewood," near Stockbridge, Mass., was a gathering place of American literary notables in that distant past when New England "flowered," and at a little red house there, long since destroyed by fire, Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of the Seven Gables."

Beginning the last week in July, the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky, gives three concerts weekly for three weeks in the out door stadium, under the stars. Reservations must be booked early in the spring since popularity of the festival has become nation-wide.

"The Shed," erected in 1938 to replace hired canvass, holds about 8,000 people. Approximately 1,000 more gather for each concert on grounds of the scenic preserve, often to picnic while they listen to the distant music, said Helen.

Two years ago Mr. Koussevitzky realized a special dream when the Berkshire Music Center, a school for "living and working in music," was inaugurated there. Now approximately 350 students attend the three-week study sessions which overlap the concert period. Among instructors is Elmira's old friend, Gregor Piatigorsky, the famed cellist who played here last fall. He is in charge of the chamber music department. Mrs. Kinsman and Mary sought him out and chatted with him a few minutes—"but he was a little under the weather, poor thing." Helen added, ". . . suffering with a bad head cold."

* * *

THE ATMOSPHERE of the place is very informal, said the Kinsmans, who, like other guests, stayed at a nearby inn. White sports clothes were the vogue—until one day Tallulah Bankhead, who was playing at the Stockbridge summer theater, arrived on the scene wearing a handsome dark green slacks suit. "It was perfectly astonishing how soon thereafter green slacks suits by the dozens appeared on the grounds!" Helen chuckled.

The Kinsmans had the good luck to witness the meeting of Miss Bankhead and Conductor Koussevitsky — which, they say, was as cordial and informal as the reunion of two old school chums. This candid shot snapped by Mary, confirms their description.

Beauty of the old estate, its majestic elms and lanes of pines outlined by flood lights at night, and the unexcelled music of the Boston symphony flowing through twilight, is never forgotten by those who attend, says Helen. For some of this year's guests, however, most exciting event of the festival was Mrs. Roosevelt's attendance the evening of Aug. 7. The First Lady and a party had motored up from Hyde Park.

"You never saw such a commotion!" said Helen. "Two-thirds of the audience stood up and craned its necks; and even members of the orchestra lost their dignity and crowded to the platform's edge to stare at the President's wife!"

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK
AUG 25 1941

Newsweek by Pat Terry

Koussevitzky of Tanglewood

MUSIC

Grand Climax at Tanglewood: Benefit for USO and Britain

If a music lover has lurked behind every bush and shrub in the blue Berkshire hills this summer, the inhabitants of Lenox, Mass., and vicinity must tip their hats to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival has attracted the largest audience in its history.

In good weather and bad, record-breaking crowds have flocked to the great streamlined shed at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home, for nine concerts and numerous public rehearsals spaced over three weeks. And for six weeks 340 students, selected for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center from more than 800 applicants in 40 states and several South American countries, have listened and practiced in the fan-shaped tan shed and in the new $40,000 Theater Concert Hall, designed by the Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen to seat 1,172. A smaller Chamber Music Concert Hall, similar in design, is also new this year and intended primarily for student use.

Like the festival itself, the course of study was climaxed last Friday when the students, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the violinist Albert Spalding, and 250 men in the combined bands of the 26th Division of the United States Army at Camp Edwards pooled their efforts in a mammoth USO and British War Relief Society benefit which began at 5:30 in the afternoon and continued, with a pause for supper, all evening. Band, operatic, orchestral, choral, and chamber music made up the varied program, which, despite a steady drizzling rain, attracted an audience of 8,000, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The benefit netted some $20,000 and like other Tanglewood programs was notable for the number of young people present. And for the final concert on the sunny Sunday which followed, a record turnout of 13,000 brought the total attendance to the 87,000 mark.

Begun eight years ago when part of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony played in the Dan Hanna cow pasture on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac, the Berkshire Festival has become America's No. 1 summer music celebration—and, if only by default, therefore the leading summer music festival now held anywhere in the world.

This Clipping From
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
AUG 24 1941

59.

By John Mason

America Comes of Age—No Anti-German Musical Hysteria

Berkshire Festival Program Proves That Nation Is Becoming Tolerant at Last

Music, being what it is, changes with the decades, answers to this and that fad, follows in channels grooved by the Strabinskys and the Shostakovitches of the world.

This is natural and wholesome; without this change—whether it be for good or bad—music would become a stale art.

It is equally true that musicians change with the years; and the change that has taken place in the past decade is all for the better. The narrow-minded attitude which dominated our musicians 20 years ago has been overwhelmed by a wave of common sense and understanding.

I refer to the tolerance with which America today regards the music of Richard Wagner, in particular, and also of the German symphonic composers. None of that anti-German hysteria which swept Tannhauser and Lohengrin out of our opera houses during the first World War!

This must warm the hearts of such musicians as Serge Koussevitsky, whose humanitarian ideas of music are so pronounced as to be almost eccentric.

At his Berkshire festival program on August 6, the Boston symphony conductor led the orchestra in all-German works. In the audience was Mrs. Roosevelt, who drove 50 miles from Hyde Park to acclaim the music of Teutonic geniuses.

During the festival, now closed, Wagner was performed five times, which is a festival record.

Praise be, it begins to look as if we are coming of age; looking at life and the arts with a broad mind and a warm heart, and not through the distrustful eyes of cranks and crackpots.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
AUG 24 1941

Mountain Music

More than a score of Poughkeepsians journeyed far last Sunday to witness the final outdoor concert of the season at Tanglewood, the great music center in the Berkshires.

The Boston Symphony, under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, enthralled a crowd of 12,000 which overflowed the music shed by more than double its capacity. Hundreds of persons sat on blankets during the afternoon concert, and at the close, shouted, clapped and roared its approval of the orchestra and its director.

The success of the venture at Tanglewood has been remarkable from the start. At the beginning of the venture there was considerable doubt whether the music shed built to accommodate 6,000 could ever be filled. Yet within three years the fame of the festival has spread to such an extent that all the surrounding lawn is pressed into service so that at least 12,000 can get within ear distance of the musical event.

The artistic and popular success of these concerts is probably due to the fact that the greatest artists in the world gather there for the summer festival. In addition, hundreds of young Americans who had been accustomed to spend their summers studying in Europe were forced to stay at home and the Berkshire music masters were able to offer them instruction from eminent masters under ideal vacation conditions.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 25 1941

Protest for Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

On a recent Sunday afternoon, a group of us drove some 60 miles to hear the Boston Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival. The trip had been planned several months in advance—when the preliminary announcement of programs first appeared. There was to be played on this particular day a certain composition which we greatly desired to hear. Only one week before this day that composition was still on the program.

When we arrived at Tanglewood we received the regular programs and the composition was again listed. On a separate sheet of paper, included with the regular program, however, we found the actual program for that day—with the desired work conspicuous by its absence, and that is how the concert was finally presented.

True, the original announcement said programs were "subject to change without notice." If, however, the powers that be saw fit to retain that composition on the program for some ten weeks, why did they suddenly see fit to delete it at the last moment? Is this an example of "artistic temperament," or are the directors laboring under the delusion that the element of surprise heightens one's enjoyment of a program?

If the directors have a valid basis for juggling programs in this fashion, we should very much like to hear it. We do not relish purchasing a "pig in a poke"—not at those prices. From our viewpoint, the program is at least as important as the performer. I am sure that a great fuss would have been made if a different orchestra or a different conductor had been substituted. Why may we not have the programs without changes?

DAVID B. KROMAN.
Schenectady, N. Y.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 23 1941

Symphonic Crowds

It would have seemed an almost impossible piece of news a few years ago that any great musical organization like the Boston Symphony orchestra could draw 11,000 people to a concert at a country spot like its Tanglewood music shed in the Berkshires, after a long series of previous concerts had been given. The success of this superb enterprise is a wonderful tribute to this grand organization, and its most distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. It also proves the enormous hold which symphonic music of the highest type is getting on the general public. The program for this concert was not exceptional for popular appeal, although it included one of the Tschaikowsky symphonies, which have a tremendous power to arouse popular enthusiasm. The young people are stirred by symphonic music as they never used to be, due largely to radio music and their training in school bands and orchestras. The Berkshire music festival should count as one of the finest of those cultural institutions that make Massachusetts exceptional among the states.

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N.Y.
TELEGRAM
AUG 24 1941

Sunday Chatter

By Marion Stocker

VACATION TRIPS add much to a town's society. They're as effective as a new coat of paint to a house, or a becoming new hat to a woman, in reviving self-interest and the interest of others.

Wanderers return to their old stamping grounds brimming with fresh experiences and the desire to tell about them. Conversation thrives!

• • •

SINCE WE FIRST heard about the Berkshire Music Festival several years ago, we've wondered just what the unique institution was like. At last our curiosity has been satisfied. Helen Kinsman (Mrs. Richard E.) and her daughter, Mary, attended for a week this year (Aug. 5-12) and describe the rustic music center in glowing terms.

The buildings and outdoor stadium—"The Shed"—are situated on a 200-acre estate, "Tanglewood," which was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks in 1937. "Tanglewood," near Stockbridge, Mass., was a gathering place of American literary notables in that distant past when New England "flowered," and at a little red house there, long since destroyed by fire, Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of the Seven Gables."

Beginning the last week in July, the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky, gives three concerts weekly for three weeks in the out door stadium, under the stars. Reservations must be booked early in the spring since popularity of the festival has become nation-wide.

"The Shed," erected in 1938 to replace hired canvass, holds about 8,000 people. Approximately 1,000 more gather for each concert on grounds of the scenic preserve, often to picnic while they listen to the distant music, said Helen.

Two years ago Mr. Koussevitzky realized a special dream when the Berkshire Music Center, a school for "living and working in music," was inaugurated there. Now approximately 350 students attend the three-week study sessions which overlap the concert period. Among instructors is Elmira's old friend, Gregor Piatigorsky, the famed cellist who played here last fall. He is in charge of the chamber music department. Mrs. Kinsman and Mary sought him out and chatted with him a few minutes—"but he was a little under the weather, poor thing," Helen added, "... suffering with a bad head cold."

• • •

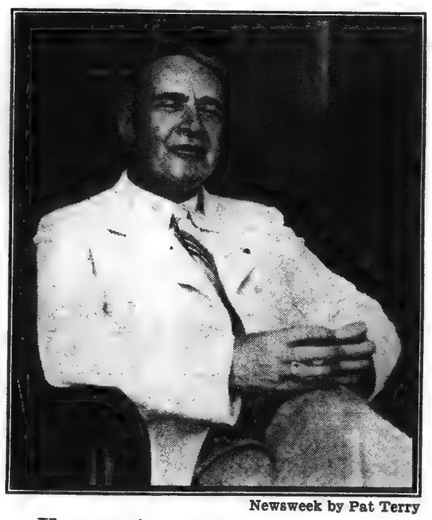
THE ATMOSPHERE of the place is very informal, said the Kinsmans, who, like other guests, stayed at a nearby inn. White sports clothes were the vogue—until one day Tallulah Bankhead, who was playing at the Stockbridge summer theater, arrived on the scene wearing a handsome dark green slacks suit. "It was perfectly astonishing how soon thereafter green slacks suits by the dozens appeared on the grounds!" Helen chuckled.

The Kinsmans had the good luck to witness the meeting of Miss Bankhead and Conductor Koussevitsky — which, they say, was as cordial and informal as the reunion of two old school chums. This candid shot snapped by Mary, confirms their description.

Beauty of the old estate, its majestic elms and lanes of pines outlined by flood lights at night, and the unexcelled music of the Boston symphony flowing through twilight, is never forgotten by those who attend, says Helen. For some of this year's guests, however, most exciting event of the festival was Mrs. Roosevelt's attendance the evening of Aug. 7. The First Lady and a party had motored up from Hyde Park.

"You never saw such a commotion!" said Helen. "Two-thirds of the audience stood up and craned its necks; and even members of the orchestra lost their dignity and crowded to the platform's edge to stare at the President's wife!"

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK
AUG 25 1941



Newsweek by Pat Terry

Koussevitzky of Tanglewood

MUSIC

Grand Climax at Tanglewood: Benefit for USO and Britain

If a music lover has lurked behind every bush and shrub in the blue Berkshire hills this summer, the inhabitants of Lenox, Mass., and vicinity must tip their hats to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival has attracted the largest audience in its history.

In good weather and bad, record-breaking crowds have flocked to the great streamlined shed at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home, for nine concerts and numerous public rehearsals spaced over three weeks. And for six weeks 340 students, selected for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center from more than 800 applicants in 40 states and several South American countries, have listened and practiced in the fan-shaped tan shed and in the new $40,000 Theater Concert Hall, designed by the Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen to seat 1,172. A smaller Chamber Music Concert Hall, similar in design, is also new this year and intended primarily for student use.

Like the festival itself, the course of study was climaxed last Friday when the students, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the violinist Albert Spalding, and 250 men in the combined bands of the 26th Division of the United States Army at Camp Edwards pooled their efforts in a mammoth USO and British War Relief Society benefit which began at 5:30 in the afternoon and continued, with a pause for supper, all evening. Band, operatic, orchestral, choral, and chamber music made up the varied program, which, despite a steady drizzling rain, attracted an audience of 8,000, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The benefit netted some $20,000 and like other Tanglewood programs was notable for the number of young people present. And for the final concert on the sunny Sunday which followed, a record turnout of 13,000 brought the total attendance to the 87,000 mark.

Begun eight years ago when part of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony played in the Dan Hanna cow pasture on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac, the Berkshire Festival has become America's No. 1 summer music celebration—and, if only by default, therefore the leading summer music festival now held anywhere in the world.

This Clipping From
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
AUG 24 1941

59.

By John Mason

America Comes of Age—No Anti-German Musical Hysteria

Berkshire Festival Program Proves That Nation Is Becoming Tolerant at Last

Music, being what it is, changes with the decades, answers to this and that fad, follows in channels grooved by the Strabinskys and the Shostakovitches of the world.

This is natural and wholesome; without this change—whether it be for good or bad—music would become a stale art.

It is equally true that musicians change with the years; and the change that has taken place in the past decade is all for the better. The narrow-minded attitude which dominated our musicians 20 years ago has been overwhelmed by a wave of common sense and understanding.

I refer to the tolerance with which America today regards the music of Richard Wagner, in particular, and also of the German symphonic composers. None of that anti-German hysteria which swept Tannhauser and Lohengrin out of our opera houses during the first World War!

This must warm the hearts of such musicians as Serge Koussevitsky, whose humanitarian ideas of music are so pronounced as to be almost eccentric.

At his Berkshire festival program on August 6, the Boston symphony conductor led the orchestra in all-German works. In the audience was Mrs. Roosevelt, who drove 50 miles from Hyde Park to acclaim the music of Teutonic geniuses.

During the festival, now closed, Wagner was performed five times, which is a festival record.

Praise be, it begins to look as if we are coming of age; looking at life and the arts with a broad mind and a warm heart, and not through the distrustful eyes of cranks and crackpots.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
AUG 24 1941

Mountain Music

More than a score of Poughkeepsians journeyed far last Sunday to witness the final outdoor concert of the season at Tanglewood, the great music center in the Berkshires.

The Boston Symphony, under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, enthralled a crowd of 12,000 which overflowed the music shed by more than double its capacity. Hundreds of persons sat on blankets during the afternoon concert, and at the close, shouted, clapped and roared its approval of the orchestra and its director.

The success of the venture at Tanglewood has been remarkable from the start. At the beginning of the venture there was considerable doubt whether the music shed built to accommodate 6,000 could ever be filled. Yet within three years the fame of the festival has spread to such an extent that all the surrounding lawn is pressed into service so that at least 12,000 can get within ear distance of the musical event.

The artistic and popular success of these concerts is probably due to the fact that the greatest artists in the world gather there for the summer festival. In addition, hundreds of young Americans who had been accustomed to spend their summers studying in Europe were forced to stay at home and the Berkshire music masters were able to offer them instruction from eminent masters under ideal vacation conditions.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 25 1941

Protest for Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

On a recent Sunday afternoon, a group of us drove some 60 miles to hear the Boston Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival. The trip had been planned several months in advance—when the preliminary announcement of programs first appeared. There was to be played on this particular day a certain composition which we greatly desired to hear. Only one week before this day that composition was still on the program.

When we arrived at Tanglewood we received the regular programs and the composition was again listed. On a separate sheet of paper, included with the regular program, however, we found the actual program for that day—with the desired work conspicuous by its absence, and that is how the concert was finally presented.

True, the original announcement said programs were "subject to change without notice." If, however, the powers that be saw fit to retain that composition on the program for some ten weeks, why did they suddenly see fit to delete it at the last moment? Is this an example of "artistic temperament," or are the directors laboring under the delusion that the element of surprise heightens one's enjoyment of a program?

If the directors have a valid basis for juggling programs in this fashion, we should very much like to hear it. We do not relish purchasing a "pig in a poke"—not at those prices. From our viewpoint, the program is at least as important as the performer. I am sure that a great fuss would have been made if a different orchestra or a different conductor had been substituted. Why may we not have the programs without changes?

DAVID B. KROMAN,
Schenectady, N. Y.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 23 1941

Symphonic Crowds

It would have seemed an almost impossible piece of news a few years ago that any great musical organization like the Boston Symphony orchestra could draw 11,000 people to a concert at a country spot like its Tanglewood music shed in the Berkshires, after a long series of previous concerts had been given. The success of this superb enterprise is a wonderful tribute to this grand organization, and its most distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. It also proves the enormous hold which symphonic music of the highest type is getting on the general public. The program for this concert was not exceptional for popular appeal, although it included one of the Tschaikowsky symphonies, which have a tremendous power to arouse popular enthusiasm. The young people are stirred by symphonic music as they never used to be, due largely to radio music and their training in school bands and orchestras. The Berkshire music festival should count as one of the finest of those cultural institutions that make Massachusetts exceptional among the states.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 25 1941

Music:

— Backward Glances — At the Tanglewood Festival

By Carl E. Lindstrom

Comes time to cast a backward glance at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, reviewed in these columns as events unfolded, but hardly so as to give a long perspective of a festival that in more ways than one set new high marks for Tanglewood.

Of most immediate concern is the likelihood that under an economy which even now threatens us, it is not likely that a series of such magnitude as this could be held next summer. Gasoline consumption alone would prohibit that. Except there be automobiles, there is no Tanglewood.

NORA FAUCHALD, Norwegian American soprano who has sung in Hartford several times, will be a soloist at the Gordon String Quartet concert in Falls Village Wednesday at 3:30 p. m.

The enormous strides made this year should not beguile anyone into thinking that similar progress can be made indefinitely. There is, after all, a limit. It might be possible perhaps actually to crowd on the grounds twice 13,000 people but soundings made at the last concert proved to this reviewer that acoustical bounds have been reached. If these were ordinary open air concerts, where a nominal admission was charged and where people gathered as much for sociability's sake as anything, it would be different; but winter season prices are charged —for winter quality of music, it is true—and $1.50 is a good deal of money to pay just to have occasional bars come floating by the ears on whatever zephyrs may be stirring.

This is neither a circus nor a summer band concert.

* * *

The tremendous popularity of Tanglewood has also had its effect upon the programs. For such crowds as these, a common denominator must be found in the universally appealing works of Tschaikowsky, the melodiousness of the better known Brahms, the brilliance of post-Romantic French composers, familiar Mozart and familiar Beethoven.

Choral works have not represented the peak of Tanglewood. So far have been heard a concert given over solely to excerpts from "Die Walkuere," a performance of the Choral Symphony, of the Bach B minor Mass, excerpts from Mozart's Requiem Mass and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. Relatively large audiences have heard all of these, but not so large as those which attended the purely symphonic concerts.

This is no place to discuss Koussevitzky's ability as a choral conductor. He is not one to attempt what he cannot do and do well, but it must be conceded that he has his superiors in the realization of any of the above mentioned works. For one thing, he has delegated most of his choral direction to other hands than his except for the final rehearsals. As a leader he thinks in instrumental and not in choral terms.

There must, however, be some diversity of material in order to make this the kind of festival that Dr. Koussevitzky has visioned. And it is just as important to have definite and idealized performances of choral works as it is to obtain festival performances of the symphonic masterpieces. The Tanglewood concerts have now achieved the broadest possible base commensurate with festival standards. To go any farther in the direction of sheer magnitude is to get into the stadium and excursion class.

* * *

There have been important things going on at Tanglewood that the public knows very little about. During the past few years, it has had only the briefest glimpse of what the Music Center has accomplished and that in a somewhat casual way as details of the gala benefit concerts that Dr. Koussevitzky has featured. Tanglewood-on-Parade has given the public just enough to whet the appetite. As a matter of fact, some of the more important activities have not been public at all. For two seasons there have been semi-private performances of opera, last year in the garden where Handel's "Acis and Galatea" was given an open-air performance; this year in the theater-concert hall when an elaborately mounted version of Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte" was performed in English.

The Music Center has been tremendously successful, there having been this year twice as many student applicants as it was possible to accept.

* * *

The phenomenon of Tanglewood has been the quick growth of the festival with a record of virtually no error, miscalculation, overshooting or undershooting the mark. This has called for a genius in organizing, the identity of whom is not apparent, even to those who are in a position to observe the inner workings. The central idea, the dream, was Koussevitzky's, as everyone knows, but the actual organization work and executive direction has been so smooth, so perfect, that the guiding hand has seldom been apparent.

Anyone who knows him at all will not minimize the part played by George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a familiar figure on the grounds, usually engaged in pleasant conversation with the uncounted friends of the Boston Orchestra but to imagine that his duties are of a social nature is to misunderstand his abilities.

* * *

Just how he guides, directs, orders, will never be known, but one seemingly trivial incident is about as good an illustration as comes to hand, of how the man's personality and quiet sense of orderliness invest everything with which the Boston Orchestra has anything to do.

A couple of seasons ago when Tanglewood had just begun its expansion, when the Saarinen auditorium was new, your correspondent was talking with friends about a half hour before one of the concerts was scheduled to begin. From the distance came the sound, though ever so faintly, of a hammer pounding somewhere in the distance. It would hardly have been noticed at all except crossed Mr. Judd's face. With the remark: "That shouldn't be," he excused himself. Almost immediately the hammering stopped. There was yet quite a while before concert time and not a great many people were gathered but the evidence of a job tardily done was not to be countenanced.

* * *

The press delegation will have much cause to be grateful to George W. Edman, clerk of the Berkshire Festival, whose ministrations to the wants of more newsmen than you can shake a stick at, has been in itself a marvel of efficiency and courtesy.

George Edman always had the answers to any questions a newsman, critic or photographer could ask, and he was always the easiest man to be found before, after and during a concert.

Of course, there are many others who had a great deal to do with the success of the festival, including the volunteer workers of the Berkshire American Legion Post who directed traffic and the volunteer ushers who have consistently been models of even tempered efficiency.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 31 1941

Report From New England---

MUSIC AT TANGLEWOOD STIMULATING

By GEORGE HAGE

ALMA BORNEMAN'S account of her musical summer hadn't arrived when the letters from two other traveling Columbus musicians were printed on this page last Sunday, but the mail has since brought her colorful description of Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, and the stimulating activity in that famous music center. So, to continue our policy of figuratively hitch-hiking along with these more fortunate wanderers, we'll offer the local violinist's letter in full:

Pittsford, Mass.

Dear George:

This, my annual visit to the Berkshires, has been a great stimulus. The environment gives one much inspiration, and I am enjoying my playing at the Congregational Church.

There have been more concerts this year (nine in all) by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at picturesque Tanglewood, and several "firsts" have been played by the South Mountain String Quartet, of which Kathleen Parlow, with whom I am continuing my studies, is first violinist! The quartet plays in the Temple of Music, which is just nine miles from Tanglewood.

The best chamber music in the world is played here during their series of eight concerts. They have had such well-known artists as Harold Bauer and Katherine Bacon, pianists; Marcel Grandjany, harpist; Albert Sprague Coolidge, violist (he is son of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, founder of these quartet concerts), and Mary Hill Doolittle, the English cellist, as assisting artists.

\+ \+ \+

Bombshell

Among the "firsts" played by the quartet are Henk Badings' Quartet in C minor, which was a bombshell! Badings is a Hollander who has lived in Java, which may well explain the source of some of his ideas of tom-tom effects and weird, sepulchral voo-doo business. It was good to hear because it is not reminiscent of any other music.

The Boston Symphony gave a dramatic interpretation of Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony. This, his second symphony, was first presented in 1930 as a feature of the Boston orchestra's 50th anniversary celebration. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" was one of the highlights of the festival, and is one of the towering compositions. He dedicated it to the Archduke Rudolf and on the first page he inscribed the sentiment, "From my innermost soul—may it go to your heart as well." The work has profound humility and intense sincerity—the soloists were Rose Derman, soprano; Hertha Glatz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass.

Repose

The Vaughn- William "London Symphony," which opened the Series C programs, was played here for the first time, although it was introduced to America with Albert Coates directing in 1920. Williams, like so many of his fellow English composers, seems to have mastered the cool, reposeful mood. They have a distinguishable atmosphere at their command, and it was from this that the symphony drew some of its character. The device of using the distant sound of the Westminster chimes as the final coda of the symphony is a master touch on Williams' part. There was a long moment of tense silence after the final sound had evaporated, which indicated the spell which had been cast by the interpretation.

Columbus should feel fortunate to have a great organization like the Boston Symphony coming to her this season.

Among the notables I have met at the concerts are Efrem Zimbalist, Mishel Piastro and Albert Spalding, violinist, and Mme. Louise Homer. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Frances Perkins and Lowell Thomas were among those attending.

I shall be back in Columbus Wednesday, Sept. 3, to begin my season of teaching and playing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
APR 30 1941

A Neutral Reports

This newspaper has so often and so liberally hailed the purposes and achievements of the Pioneer Valley Symphony it was almost with relief yesterday that it hastened to reprint the views of another. Relief, because its parochial interest and pride might have misled its evaluation.

If a New York city newspaper has previously sent its critic to hear music this side of the Berkshire hills, we have not heard of it. On rare occasions such critics may have sought out the Boston Symphony in its winter haunts as well as their known indulgence in the delights of the summer festival at Stockbridge. The trip to Northfield on Saturday alone scored strongly for those who have worked so hard musically and otherwise for the Pioneer association.

Virgil Thomson, the Herald-Tribune's critic, was so uniformly cheering in his comments here after the concert that at least some with whom he chatted feared it might be mere blandishment. They waited with some trepidation for his considered and published opinion. The printed word was as heartily commendatory for the orchestra and Conductor Harold A. Leslie as the spoken comment had been.

To those who brought the organization to the attention of Mr. Thomson and to him for perception of merit not measured by size or tradition, the association owes a great deal. It is one thing to be convinced of doing well and making progress and another to find the effort so impresses an outside expert of professional standing. The orchestra members are not paid for their work, except by such words as these. The many friends who have contributed time and money to enable these first two seasons are thereby repaid.

One further service Mr. Thomson, or other disinterested critics could render. From their experience they could make a detailed analysis of the orchestra in performance. It surely has weaknesses as well as the strengths which have been recognized. Its life surely should not be circumscribed by too rigid devotion to the refinement of musical art (its chief objective should remain as enabling regional musicians to play to regional audiences). Yet with the position it is attaining, it cannot long be denied the penetrating evaluation which is the crucible of the arts.

61.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1941

TANGLWOOD OPENS ITS SECOND SERIES IN MUSIC FESTIVAL

Boston Symphony Aided by Excellent Chorus in Presenting Mozart Commemorative Program — Beethoven Symphony Given

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 7—Tonight's concert opened the second three-concert series in the Berkshire Symphonic festival, and the work of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the festival chorus under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky was not less admirable than at the previous concerts. The tonal effect was also enhanced by the perfect weather, with little humidity by summer standards which the festival has enjoyed thus far.

The program of the finest offered this year, was in two parts, the first half made up of orchestral and choral music by Mozart, in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of his death, and the second half to a superb performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. This titanic work was in striking contrast with the moving beauty of Mozart's G minor symphony with which the Mozart memorial program opened, and between them yawns one of the widest gulfs in musical history.

Like his contemporary and friend, Haydn, Mozart could throw off symphonies of surpassing beauty, seemingly without effort; after the "Eroica" the writing of a symphony became a colossal task which frightened the greatest of composers. The G-minor is as charming and perfect as music can be, and its pathos goes deep, too, notably in the slow movement. But the "Eroica" is earthshaking, and its grandeur makes up for the lack of the perfect symmetrical form which Beethoven attained in his C-minor symphony.

The program followed the principle closely adhered to in the early festivals in being made up of the greatest and most famous work, but the recent creation of a promising festival chorus makes possible a wider application of this principle. The choral part of the tribute to Mozart was a selection of the famous "Requiem" which he wrote while dying. The numbers given, all for chorus, were "Requiem," "Dies Irae," "Rex Tremendae Majestatis," "Confutatis," "Lacrimosa" and "Domine Jesu."

The performance of this sublime music was deeply impressive and gave the best chance thus far to appraise the work and program of the chorus which has been one of the most valuable outgrowths of the Tanglewood music center. Its tone quality was resonant and good, the men's voices perhaps rather overbalancing the sopranos and altos, which is unusual. The precision and firmness of the attack of the several voices deserved much praise, and so did the earnestness and musical feeling of the singers. The interpretation reflects much credit on the training given by the conductor of the chorus, Horace Hunt.

More Than Half of Boxes For Benefit Now Sold

Tanglewood, Aug. 7—More than half the boxes have been sold for the benefit to be given for the U. S. O. and the British War Relief at Tanglewood on the 15th by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Berkshire Music center. There is likewise a brisk demand for general admission tickets.

One of the many features will be the appearance of a 250-piece band from Camp Edwards to be led by Dr Koussevitzky. Capt Herman Hoffman of the 180th field artillery and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, chief bandmaster of the 26th diyision, have been at Tanglewood to make arrangements for the band to bivouac on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac.

The governors of all the New England states and trustees of the festival and the orchestra invite everyone from everywhere to join to help make this manifestation a tremendous success.

On the grounds at Tanglewood will be served a New England supper of baked beans and brown bread or salads and cold cuts with desserts and hot and cold drinks. The price will be moderate and a liberal amount of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will the money from the refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington.

During the evening attractive prizes will be awarded.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 28 1941

The Berkshire Festival

The termination of another Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in western Massachusetts gives new credence to the belief of its sponsors that this annual summer event will continue to expand until the title, "the American Salzburg," bestowed by its well-wishers, becomes more than a provincial boast.

Certainly a native institution along the lines of Europe's traditional music festivals is needed. Today, under Nazi supervision, Salzburg is become a hollow travesty of Austria's pre-anschluss center of musical art. Bayreuth, consecrated to Wagnerian productions, has fared better, of course, but its performances are sadly impaired by the absence of such illustrious conductors as Toscanini and Bruno Walter.

At Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony Orchestra have dedicated their energies to the cultivation of native composers, conductors, instrumentalists and concert artists. Dorothy Maynor, the distinguished Negro singer, was a Koussevitzky "discovery" of some years ago; no doubt many other aspiring artists will enjoy the encouragement afforded them by the music center. Youngstown has been interested to note that the two conductors of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, Carmine and Michael Ficocelli, both have participated in the festival activities with auspicious results.

One by-product of the Tanglewood program is certain to be a fostering of public interest in works by American composers. The time has passed when our native music, between the milestones of Edward MacDowell and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," was a polite academic blank. Such men as Charles Ives, Aaron Copland, Roy Harris, Howard Hanson, Samuel Barber, Walter Piston and many others, have infused new vigor and audacity into American music. This renaissance is significant because it occurs when cultural activities abroad have all but ceased. Besides being the arsenal of democracy, America thus assumes the role of custodian and continuer of a great musical heritage.

This Clipping From DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 25 1941

A Cultural Milestone

Far in the quiet of the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts a cultural milestone in the life of America is being fashioned. It is the Berkshire Music Centre, the third effort made during recent years to create an American Salzburg and one which, this time, seems to carry the promise of complete success.

Lenox is the little place where the musical celebrities of America are gathering this Summer and which has become the Mecca of the musically minded. The greatest artists of the New World and the Old are appearing there, the greatest of the conductors and the finest of the symphonies with Serge Koussevitzky as the grand patron if not the principal entrepreneur.

The Berkshire Music Centre takes on new significance as American composers, steadily forging to the front are being subjected to the ordeal of a public reaction. But it is also a rendezvous for American performers and playing organizations as well as to the brilliant products of other countries who, by instinct or otherwise, succeeded in fleeing the Nazi terror which debases art and which throws some of the greatest interpreters of music into the concentration camps simply because of their non-Aryanism.

The new Berkshire Hills enterprise is important because it seems to underline the fact that America has become the greatest music centre of the world.

62.

Tanglewood Tales

Yesterday's crowd of 13,000 broke more than a mere attendance record. Among other things, the amount of camera film exposed probably ran the World's Fair a close second. The man or woman without a camera was the exception. The day's champion was an earnest gentleman bowed down by three miniatures. There was one known casualty. An amateur, finding the 16-foot stepladder loaned to The Eagle by Superintendent of Tanglewood Ward J. Gaston abandoned for the moment, climbed to the top, snapped a picture and fell off. Witnesses report that he calmly brushed himself off and walked away under his own power.

* * *

The three photographers who worked from the colonnade roof during intermission—again through the courtesy of Superintendent Gaston—were Howard Babbitt of The Eagle, Don Jose Browning of the Springfield Union and Arthur Palme of Pittsfield, who was on his own.

* * *

The general admission army arrived early yesterday. By 2.45, three-quarers of an hour before the concert started, the benches around the colonnade were virtually filled. A lot of people came early and stayed late. The magnificent view from the south lawn over Stockbridge Bowl drew hundreds who came early and brought their lunches. Others brought supper along and thus avoided the departing jam which, incidentally, was exceedingly well handled by the Legion and the state police. All previous plans for clearing the parking areas had to go by the boards since the total number of cars exceeded the maximum load. And yet the grounds were cleared in approximately 40 minutes.

* * *

The Union Station last night was a lodging house for at least four Boston residents, who missed the 8.11 (DST) train going back home out of Pittsfield. Two girls slept in the women's lounge until 3.30 AM (DST) when the next train for Boston came through and a third was given a berth in the baggage room. Another girl took a train to Albany and there she boarded the sleeper to Boston so she wouldn't be too tired for work this morning.

* * *

The receipts for the USO-British war relief benefit continue to come in. The total gross now is about $21,000. From the Hampden Brewing Company today came a deposit of $226.50.

* * *

Barbara, Jenifer and Higginson Gould, children of Mr. and Mrs. John H. P. Gould, who live next door to Tanglewood, spotted automobiles from every state in the Union in the parking areas.

* * *

Miss Susan Danreuther of Lee and Detroit, Mich., who won the heifer, Sky Farm Lena (or $150 in cash) in the draw at the benefit Friday has elected to take the cash. The prize was donated by Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont and Rye, N. Y.

* * *

"Hold two on the grass for me," was the request telegraphed from a resident of Bridgeport, Conn. The Festival office was somewhat in doubt, because the message was sent from Bridgeport at 4 PM yesterday.

* * *

A number of people whose minds were running in similar channels yesterday, remarked that the steel construction of the Shed is filled with "V's," the British symbol for victory.

Another View of the Tanglewood Crowd

From the great Shed extending beyond the refreshment tent of the Thursday Morning Club and into the Hawthorne pines, people wandered about the Festival grounds long before the opening of yesterday's concert.

The BSF President Speaks

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, right, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, photographed in the Shed with two friends at yesterday's intermission.

An Artist Takes Her Bow

Miss Ruth Posselt, soloist Saturday night, was given a warm reception on a cool night. On the left is her husband, Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visibly pleased at the performance and the reception. Sharing in the applause are the composer, Samuel Barber, young American, and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky.

Festival

Continued From First Page

reposeful mood. Not that they do not have their turbulent moments, but they do have a distinguishable atmosphere at their command, and it was from this that the symphony drew some of its character. Williams states that the title is misleading; that "symphony by a Londoner" would be more to the point. The clear transparency of the music was executed with a sotto voce which, especially in the strings, remained remarkably round and balanced. The device of using the distant sound of the Westminster chimes as the final coda of the symphony is a master touch on Williams' part. There was a long moment of tense silence after the final sound had evaporated which indicated the spell which had been cast by the interpretation. There then followed one of those demonstrations which are part of the spectacle which is Tanglewood. Granted that the music merits all the approval, the combination of several elements at Festival concerts seems to remove inhibitions from men and women otherwise normally restrained or introversial. These wild expressions occurred twice more in this same evening. At the conclusion of the program and following the concerto for violin with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Barber's Concerto

The Barber violin concerto is of this year's vintage, having been introduced by Spalding in Philadelphia only six months ago. It is in three movements of which the first two are definite additions to the literature for the instruments. Of the last movement as much can not be said. A perpetual motion idea, even though played with meticulous technic by Miss Posselt, and equal virtuosity by the orchestra, it has not sufficient musical value. The other movements offer wide and grateful opportunities for the soloist, although there is not enough development matter. Miss Posselt played with opulent tone, a sure and facile left hand, and a bow, except for those instances where she was seduced into too much pressure in the many string-crossings of the first movement, which brought out a virile and confident expression of the music. Barber accompanied the soloist and the conductor from the wings on the unending recalls Miss Posselt won for herself and the music. Among the innumerable mutual felicitations, the soloist clasped the hand of the concert-master, Richard Burgin, to convey through him her appreciation of the orchestra's splendid accompaniment. He acknowledged it by a courtly gesture, a kiss of the hand, which had in it a delightfully unashamed extra fervor, the respectful esteem of a fellow artist with additional uxorious homage.

Yesterday afternoon the final demonstration following the Tschaikovsky symphony exceeded any that the most faithful Festival attendants could recall. There was reason for it, too. Koussevitzky laid his Tschaikovsky on with a trowel, with a prodigious extravagance which brought out the faintest delineation of its emotional pattern. The orchestra played as though doubly inspired. Climax after climax was reached with telling effect.

A Symphonic Fantasy

The Sibelius choice was the last symphony, the seventh. This is played in one movement without pause, and is not really a symphony. Sibelius once intended to label it a symphonic fantasy. It resembles most the form in which Richard Strauss wrote so successfully—the tone-poem. It rambles on without symphonic design, and suggests imaginative incidents which possibly the composer had in mind. This kind of music has a faculty which Virgil Thomson described once so aptly as having meditative possibilities. What could be more gratifying than to hear this type of music which, because of its indefiniteness, conjures up in each one's mind fictional excursions into lands of romance and adventure. Koussevitzky worked most arduously on this; he was in excellent voice, and in some of the pianissimo passages, the orchestra was plainly audible through his untrained baritone.

Prokofieff's huge joke "Lieutenat Kije" was played four years ago on a similar Sunday afternoon. Indeed this could not be half so much fun if played at night or completely indoors. The trumpet calls, heralding the approach, and later indicating the departure of this jolly but non-existent character, came from the far edge of the adjoining field. The wit of this miniature suite was a perfect escape between the sober Sibelius and the self-pitying Tschaikovsky.

The history of this Festival will signal, first of all, the phenomenal attendance records, 87,000 in nine concerts. This will no doubt overshadow one feature which, nevertheless, is more important: The standard of performance. So long as the Boston orchestra and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky, continue to strive and to expend their best efforts, which happen to be about as good as there are on this planet, they will continue to merit all the unbelievable audiences and the lavish appreciation they have enjoyed.

The Berkshire Evening Eagle Saturday

Roosevelt-Churchill Meeting Colors Benefit Addresses

First Lady Says Nations Are Joined

Lord Halifax Sends Message Of Gratitude

The historic meeting at sea between President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill colored the manifestation ceremonies during last night's USO-British relief benefit at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, one of the principal speakers, referred to the already famous eight points at the end of her talk, saying, "I would say to Lord Halifax if he were here, how happy I am that the two great English-speaking nations are joined together, not only in war aims, but in the determination to build from the chaos which now reigns, a better world for the future, and that they include as their partners all people who freely determine their own government, and who try within their borders to increase the well-being of all their citizens. May the new goal which we have set for ourselves make us humble in a knowledge of our own shortcomings, give us tolerance for the shortcomings of others and increase our courage and determination that men of good-will everywhere working together can achieve even the dreams of mankind."

Greene Reads Halifax Talk

The speech of Lord Halifax, read by Jerome D. Greene of the benefit committee after Lord Beaverbrook's arrival in Washington had made it imperative that the British ambassador stay at the capital, closed with an anecdote of an American boy who for many months has been sending 50 cents a week to the British relief fund.

"Here, I think," Lord Halifax wrote, "is an example, and I know that it does not stand alone, both of devotion and sacrifice freely offered which should inspire us all, who believe in those principles just expressed in such arresting language on behalf of our two nations by the President and the prime minister, and for which the United States and the British commonwealth of nations today stand."

Lord Halifax said that "This musical festival has long been famous and its fame has spread beyond the borders of America," and that "the gracious presence of Mrs. Roosevelt confirms the significance of what you have done and of all that this festival stands for in the musical and artistic life of New England where the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, have given such a lead."

After expressing his gratitude to the Festival and Boston Symphony Orchestra, joint sponsors of the benefit, Lord Halifax paid tribute to the work of America in behalf of "those who in Great Britain have lost nearly everything they had."

"Everything seems to have been thought of," he said, "from Red Cross supplies to clothes for small children. Much of it, as we know, has been provided by those who have found time for this work from the hours that would otherwise have been free for rest and recreation."

Another tribute to the Festival came from Mrs. Roosevelt, who said that "I am very happy to be here today to pay tribute to all those who have made this Festival possible. First I should like to say what a remarkable achievement I think it is for Miss Robinson Smith and her women's committee to conceive and put through the idea of a festival such as this. They are responsible for the first efforts, and for the final bringing here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Their vision has made an achievement possible that transcends the mere joy of the concerts . . ."

Mrs. Roosevelt called the development of an appreciation of the arts in a people "a sign that the people are coming of age" and said that she "can not help feeling that the government has had something to do with the wide dissemination of knowledge among the people of the arts . . ."

Dr. Koussevitzky Speaks

In his speech, Dr. Koussevitzky pointed out that "We are witnessing, and in some degree we participate in, the act of stretching a hand of hope and help across the ocean; the open hand of America holding the torch of freedom against the clenched and threatening hand of despotism and destruction.

"It is significant that our manifestation takes place in the heart of New England, and that today in New England the cause of old England and the cause of America are merged into one.

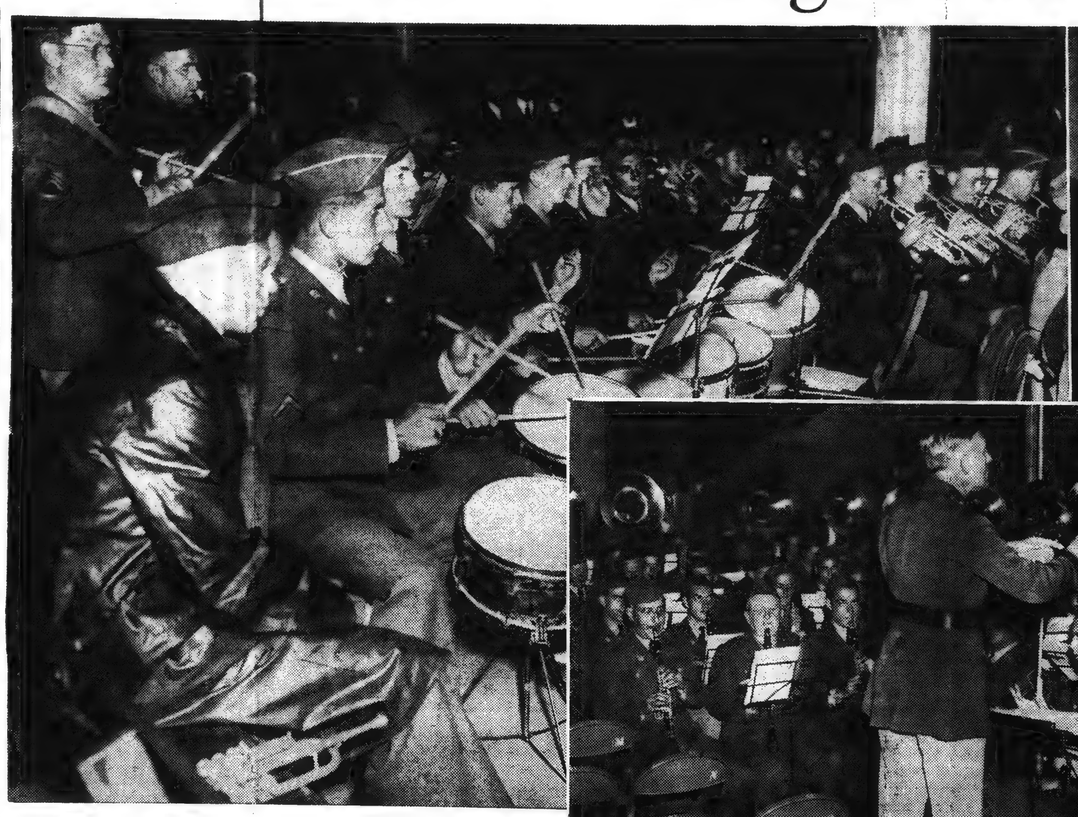
"No one can deny that the spirit of the people of England is a great example in the history of the world. But let us not forget that the undaunted spirit of a people is proof of their faith in the justice of their cause. The English nation holds that faith. In standing by and voicing our belief in England, we are helping our own nation. For the victory of freedom is also the victory of truth."

Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, paid high tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky, saying "In these days when America is so slowly coming alive, you are a rare man, rare in that you are capable of feeling excitement . . . In this Shed we have heard the sacrificial call of democracy and freedom. Here in America we shall 'nobly save or meanly lose the last best hope of the earth.' For all that you have contributed to the American drama, we thank you, Serge Koussevitzky."

President James Phinney Baxter 3d of Williams College presided over the ceremonies. In his introductory remarks, he called Dr. Koussevitzky a "symbol of a way of life that has been challenged, a way of life that must survive," and recalled a prophetic statement made in 1894 by Adm. Mahan that some day Britain's control of the seas would be threatened, but that joint action by Britain and the United States would be invincible.

Among those seated on the platform during the ceremonies were Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony; Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and Norman H. Davis, national chairman of the American Red Cross.

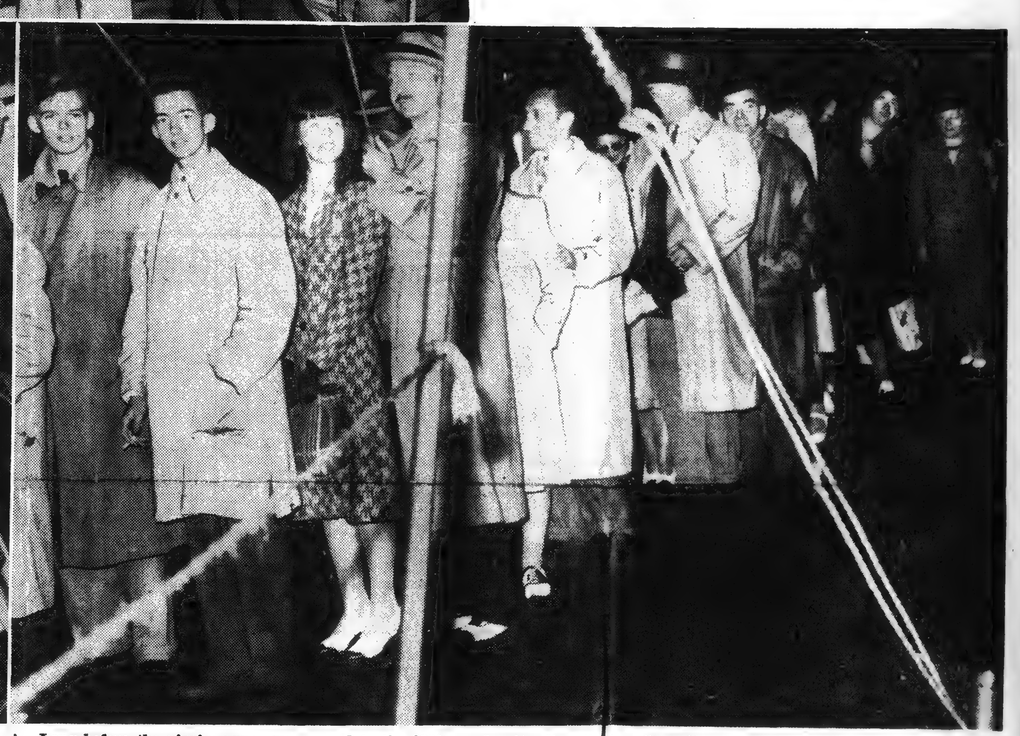
Messages of regret for their inability to be present were read from Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, and Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia of New York.



The drum section of the Army bands with the apparent exception of the player in the foreground were at their busiest during the storm passage of "William Tell" overture.

Above, Mrs. Roosevelt opens her address. On the platform, left to right: Dr. Koussevitzky, President Baxter of Williams, and Albert G. Milbank, general counsel for British War Relief. At left, Chester Earl Whiting directs the combined 26th Division bands.

Former Atty. Gen. Paul A. Dever of Cambridge attended the benefit event after spending the day with friends at the races in Saratoga Springs. Shown here enjoying the concert program in the Shed are, left to right, Judge Charles T. Cavanaugh of Boston, Mr. Dever, Dennis E. Sullivan and John J. Kennedy of Boston.



Long before the picnic supper was served to the 8000 people attending the benefit, a line formed east of the Country Wagon brought to Tanglewood by Louis Ritter of Darien, Conn. Men and women stood patiently in line awaiting their turn to buy one of the picnic suppers which featured baked beans.

Musical Offerings at Benefit Prepared With Usual Care

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Berkshire Music Center and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made the great and courteous gesture to the huge audience which came to Tanglewood yesterday of preparing all the various offerings with the same care they expend on all their other concerts. The thousands who bought tickets to help raise funds for the United Service Organization campaign and for the British relief were baffled by the wide choice open to them.

The crowd started coming early, in spite of the unfavorable weather. By the time the 250 musicians from the combined Camp Edwards bands were ready to play, at 5.30, the attendance was already large. It would be a toss-up to ascertain which event most pleased Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Orchestra conductor—leading the uniformed men in their spirited marches, making his short little address at the beginning of the manifestation, or leading the combined student and professional orchestras and military bands in the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The program moved with promptness and efficiency, except for the weather, which at best relented to the merest film of spray, but never quite abandoned the idea of dropping some moisture from above. By the time several thousand feet had milled about, coming from the parking lots, going to the theatre for the opera fragments, to the little hall for the chamber music, and to the Shed for the main bouts, with incidental expeditions to the lunch tents and the booths set up in the fields for raffle tickets, the ground resembled a garage which specializes in changing your car's oil.

Brought Lunch

Countless parties had prepared and brought their lunch and nothing could prevent them from enjoying it. The men of the orchestra with their families and friends were scattered throughout the Shed during the early events of the program, in which they did not participate, and they picnicked with all the other groups who, in default of nice dry, warm lawns on which to spread their blankets, improvised the necessary equipment.

The parade of the various activities of the school, which is now in its second year in conjunction with the concerts of the Festival, was witnessed and heard by full halls all over the lot. The ....in concert, at 9, consisted of the performance of the first movement of the V symphony of Beethoven, two excerpts from "The Planets" of Gustav Holst, one referring to war, the other to peace, the rousing "1812" overture of Tschaikovsky, all placed on the program with especial significance, with, in addition, the Mendelssohn concerto for violin and orch.. a played brilliantly by Albert Spalding, and two choral numbers lead by Hugh Ross.

Just before the manifestation got under way, Mrs. Roosevelt was serenaded by the Music Center chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth.

Tanglewood

Walter Hendl was on the podium for the first movement of Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor. Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra and chorus in Lambert's "The Rio Grande," with Alexander Peloquin at the piano and Vera Brinkoff singing the alto solo. The Shed program closed with Thor Johnson conducting Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite.

At the same time, the opera department filled the new theatre for excerpts from five operas. The orchestra being busy in the Shed, the singers had to be content with piano accompaniment. Although part of the audience probably attended to keep out of the rain, their aims in this direction were not wholly realized, since the weather streamed in through the set-back openings in the roof, drenching about every 10th row and prompting some visitors to open umbrellas.

The audience was called to the manifestation ceremonies with a fanfare played by a double octette from the Boston Symphony conducted by Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. After the speakers and special guests had come on the stage to the applause of a standing audience, G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the Center choral department, led his chorus through Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed especially for the Center and sung for the first time at last year's benefit program.

Dr. Koussevitzky Speaks

Dr. Koussevitzky then spoke briefly and introduced Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College, who presided over the remainder of the speaking program. He was interrupted when he first started by plaintive calls from the rear of the Shed to stay close to the microphone. Mrs. Roosevelt, next to speak, forestalled comment by saying she would welcome it if she could not be heard.

Mrs. Roosevelt's tribute to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith "and her committee" for the original idea of the Festival and for its success, both musically and as a "symbol of unity," was followed by an address by Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips Exeter Academy, and the reading of Viscount Halifax's message by Jerome D. Greene of the benefit committee.

At the conclusion of the manifestation, the program adjourned for an hour and a half while the audience had supper and refreshments. The staffs of the supper, beer and refreshment tents had to interrupt their busy evening more than once to spill little lakes that accumulated in the folds of their tents.

The main concert started at 9 and ran to 10.30, ending with the rousing "Overture 1812" of Tschaikowsky played by the combined Boston Symphony and Music Center Orchestras and selected sections of the 26th Division bands.

Final event of the evening was the drawing of prizes, held in the Shed because of the weather, with Elsa Maxwell drawing the numbers. This morning, Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox, chairman of the prize committee, reported that $4027.87 had been turned over to Henry W. Dwight, treasurer of the benefit. The sum is $1327 more than last year, a gain which prompted Mrs. Schenck to voice her "profound gratitude" for the work done by her huge army of ticket-sellers.

The benefit came to a stirring end with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the orchestras and band, with Dr. Koussevitzky dividing his conducting efforts between the musicians and his thunderously singing audience. They provided an adequate substitute for the fireworks, which had to be canceled because of the weather.

Elsa Maxwell Has Good Time Watching Others Get Prizes

Elsa Maxwell, Cafe Society's idea girl, had what she called "the time of my life" awarding 22 prizes at the drawing on the stage of the music Shed at last night's benefit event for the United Service Organizations and British war relief. Although official reports have not been made by the prize committee, it is understood more than $3000 was realized in the sale of tickets.

Assisted on the platform by Albert Spalding, celebrated violinist and Mrs. Frederick Schenck Jr. of Lenox, chairman of the prize committee, Miss Maxwell dipped into the revolving barrel containing more than 8000 tickets and awarded prizes to the following:—

Model of shed, H. G. Ellis of Torrington, Conn.; woman's green sweater, Mrs. Franklin Couch of Dalton; white hand bag, Gordon Simpson of Symphony Hall, Boston; Lucrezia Bori fan, Bella Reingold of Dorchester; picture of bust of Paderewski with autograph, Mrs. Donald MacPherson of Pittsfield; heifer (or $150 in cash), Miss Susan Dannreuther of Lee and Detroit, Mich., a student at the Berkshire Music Center; two dinners at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, A. F. Cullen of Pittsfield; Raleigh bicycle, Sylvia Ginsberg of Camp Allegro, Pittsfield; photograph of Albert Spalding, Mrs. F. W. Sypher of Pittsfield; ton of coal, deliver anywhere in the United States, Richard Edgerton of Pilot Knob, N. Y.; fitted traveling bag, Mrs. Ralph Cook of Pittsfield; autograph of a record by Fritz Kreisler, Mrs. J. H. Silvia of West Hartford, Conn.; Magnavox playfellow phonograph, E. Blocker of Stockbridge; cocker spaniel puppy, Norah Duffy of Pawling, N. Y.; one dozen pair of nylon stockings, J. L. Huntington of Hadley; year's subscription to Fortune Magazine, Pauline Sulvia of Hartford, Conn.; photograph of Koussevitzky and Piatigorsky, H. G. Tosi of Brighton; GE portable radio, Miss M. R. Clark of Stockbridge; golf clubs, woods, Donald Newman of Falls Village; Brahms' Fourth Symphony recording, Rev. George Gardner Monks, headmaster of the Lenox School for Boys; $50 defense bond, Jean McCam of Springfield; two season tickets to 1942 Festival series, Alicision Pyne of Bernardsville, N. Y.

64.

New England Sketchbook

By Jack FROST

Where Hawthorne Wrote Now Music Plays

"la Mer" by De Bussy

The circular music shed at Tanglewood, looking much like a stadium from without, and most efficiently arranged within, is shown in the top sketch. Typical of the thousands who make the pilgrimage to Stockbridge, Mass., during this symphonic festival are the smiling young ladies in the foreground of this sketch, Virginia King and Barbara Lacouline of Springfield, who drove up and back the same day. Cars from all over America were present.

Beloved Serge Koussevitzky himself is shown at the bottom left, and the thumbnails at the right show him in characteristic poses, while the woman and children, riveted to their seats by rapt enjoyment of the music of the Boston Symphonic Orchestra, are depicted at the bottom right of the cut.

It is inspiring no end, this listening to the great music of the world in an attractive vernal setting. It is a fine place to meet friends and acquaintances.

Adding to the atmosphere is the feeling of Nathaniel Hawthorne's one-time presence, evoking happy memories of the choice stories from his pen which certainly found inspiration here.

Olin Downes, the New York Times music critic, is the pleasantly informed intermission commentator.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARPERS BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 15 1941

MR. GIRAUD FOSTER,
THE GRAND OLD MAN OF LENOX,
AND OWNER OF "BELLE FONTAINE"

MRS. GEORGE CABOT
AT THE JOHN CABOTS
AFTER A CONCERT.
BEHIND HER: CHAUNCEY LOOMIS

MRS. JOHN NICHOLAS BROWN

THE VAST SHED AT TANGLEWOOD,
OPEN-SIDED FOR COMFORT AND THE BENEFIT OF GRASS-SITTERS

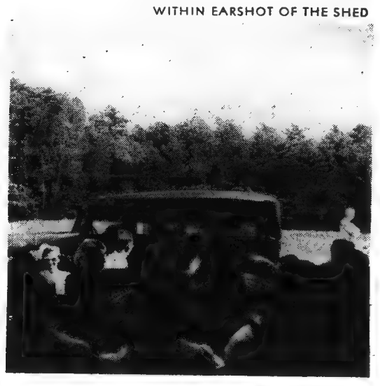
MRS. HENRY WHITE'S CAR—
THE ONLY ONE ALLOWED TO PARK
WITHIN EARSHOT OF THE SHED



ARTIST ALBERT STERNER
CHATS WITH A YOUNG FRIEND

TEN PHOTOS BY JEROME ZERBE

H. S. BABBITT, JR.

THE FIRST LADY GREETS KOUSSEVITZKY

SUN AND GRASS, AND AIR FULL OF MUSIC

MRS. ANSON PHELPS STOKES

MAYOR JOHN SHEPARD, JR.,
OF PALM BEACH IN HIS INEVITABLE BLUE BERET

MRS. HENRY HYDE, NEE MIMI DE LA GRANGE

THE WORLD GOES TO THE BERKSHIRES

• From the thirty-first of July until the seventeenth of August, there was not a bed to be found in the Berkshires. At least not within miles of Stockbridge, and Pittsfield and Lee and Lenox. Last-minute-men tucked themselves up on sun-porch settees, or in deserted chauffeurs' quarters, on guest-filled estates; inns and hotels bulged at the sides. Hours before Koussevitzky lifted his baton to conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra in Haydn's Symphony in G Major, which opened the Festival, the roads for miles around bristled with cars, parking areas were crammed with licenses reading New York, Ohio, Kansas, Wyoming. The fever lasted for eighteen days—the nine concerts (given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons) were interspersed with departures and arrivals, with tennis parties, and cocktail parties, and enormous al-fresco dinner parties; with dashes to rehearsals by holders of the special tickets issued to musical students and members only.

The audience that gathers at the great open-sided Tanglewood shed divides itself into three parts: the boxholders, the orchestra sitters (both a great mixture of full dress, half dress, and just print dress) . . . and the grass sitters, who arrive by the thousands with rugs and pillows, and picnics to eat on the grass on the good spot they've reserved by arriving early. When the music begins, they lie back, close their eyes, hold hands if they please, and listen to the music under conditions that are as perfect as can be imagined. It is an audience made up of an amazing mixture of people—Eleanor Roosevelt, who was there for two concerts; Morgenthaus, Bullitts, Choates, Colts, Griswolds, Harknesses, and Schermerhorns; music lovers and musicians; artists and dancers; college professors and music-bitten newspapermen; and pretty Boston debutantes.

• Hits of the festival this year: The record attendance—there were thirteen thousand at one concert, six thousand in the shed, seven thousand on the grass . . . Leonard Shure playing Brahms's Piano Concerto in B flat . . . the absolutely matchless performance of Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony . . . The British Gala given August fifteenth for the benefit of British Relief, when the military band from Camp Edward joined with the orchestra—at the end, when they played the "Star Spangled Banner," thirteen thousand people burst out singing.

Berkshire Festival Opera Hearings Delight Throngs As Season Closes

By ROSALYN KROKOVER

LENOX, MASS.—The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, was brought to a close on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 17. That the series was a popular success can scarcely be disputed; all attendance records were broken and over 13,000 persons jammed the grounds for the closing concert. A total of 87,000 attended the series, an increase of 20,000 persons over last year's 67,000. The income far exceeded the expense.

In some minds, however, there was a doubt whether the maximum artistic results had been obtained. The chief fault seemed to be in the program-making, for not only were the stock works of the Boston Symphony's winter repertoire repeated, but offerings played many times in previous Festival seasons were performed again.

Thus the original hopes of an "American Salzburg" are evaporating into a realization that the concerts largely consist of hackneyed material and are of small lasting value. A few novelties were present but most were unimportant, and the music lover took little away that he was not already well acquainted with.

One of the more interesting concerts was that presented on Aug. 7, for it contained excerpts from Mozart's Requiem, a work seldom performed today. Also on the program were Beethoven's Eroica Symphony and (announced at the last moment) Mozart's G minor Symphony. The Aug. 9 program presented a piano soloist when Leonard Shure played the Brahms Second Concerto. Hanson's Romantic Symphony also was heard then, as were Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (played in the 1938 Festival) and Wagner's Preludes to Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger (both previously presented in 1936 and 1939).

DR. CHARLES A. SINK CONGRATULATES GEORGE E. JUDD, manager of the Boston Symphony, at the Berkshire Music Festival.

It is difficult to appraise Shure's interpretation on this occasion because of the difficulties encountered when the piano is heard in an out-door performance. However, his grasp of the work was apparent in the playing of the first few pages. Perhaps his best playing was in the third movement when the more tender sentiments of Brahms were interpreted with just the right feeling for the master. The audience gave the pianist unqualified, warm appreciation.

Program Suddenly Altered

Many music lovers were especially interested in the announced program of Aug. 10, for it contained one of Koussevitzky's specialties—Debussy's La Mer—and two fine works not heard very often—Mozart's delicious A major Symphony and the Fantastique of Berlioz. For no obvious reason, the program was suddenly changed, Brahms' First Symphony (it had been played on the Festival concerts of 1937, 1939, and 1940) being substituted for the Berlioz work, and Mozart's overdone E flat (played in 1937 and 1940) for the A major. It is true that La Mer was gloriously presented as only Koussevitzky can do it, but the fact still remains that an interesting program was turned into one that is duplicated any number of times during the music season.

The three concerts of series C which brought the Festival to a close presented more varied fare. Thursday evening brought a performance of Handel's D minor Organ Concerto with E. Power Biggs as the capable soloist, and a complete version of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. Soloists in the latter were Rose Dirman (soprano), Hertha Glaz (contralto), John Priebe (tenor), and Julius Huehn (bass). Richard Burgin played the violin passages in the Benedictus, and E. Power Biggs was at the organ. The choir was that of the Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed mostly of the students of the music center and native singers. Trained by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth, they displayed a fine ensemble and a uniform attack. Koussevitzky was at his best, and the result was one of the highlights of the Festival.

War Benefit Stirs 8,000

On Friday evening, Aug. 15, a benefit concert was presented for USO and British War Relief. In spite of miserable weather, the benefit netted about $20,000 as about 8,000 persons arrived for the day-long program. A lengthy program had been arranged, and nearly all was carried through. At 5:30, a band of 250 players drawn from musicians of the 26th Division started the ball rolling with some marches. Koussevitzky then directed the band in Semper Fidelis and The Stars and Stripes Forever. It can be said that never has the music shed resounded to greater applause. Following this, simultaneous performances were presented by students of the music center. Walter Hendl, Leonard Bernstein and Thor Johnson conducted the student orchestra in works by Borodin, Lambert, and Stravinsky, while in the opera house members of the operatic department were presenting operatic excerpts. All this was but a beginning; later events included fanfares, choral works, speeches by Koussevitzky, Dr. Phinney Baxter, Mrs. Roosevelt, and Dr. Louis Perry, who read a message by Viscount Halifax. Then there was supper and refreshments, more music played by a monster aggregate consisting of the Boston Orchestra, the student orchestras, and the bands of the 26th Division. The final event of the evening came when Elsa Maxwell drew numbers in the prize lottery.

Barber's Work Introduced

Settling down to business, the orchestral program for the following day was made up of Vaughan Williams' London Symphony, Samuel Barber's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and two Wagner excerpts, the Prelude to Parsifal and Tannhäuser Overture. The London Symphony was brilliantly and sensitively performed. Barber's new violin concerto received one of the most prolonged ovations accorded to any work played thus far. It is in three movements, and is constructed on classic lines with the exception of the finale—a presto, "in moto perpetuo." Well scored and neatly proportioned, its best movement appears to be the melodious first. The discursive andante meanders along in a contemplative fashion, and the final presto ends in a display of fireworks. Ruth Posselt's rendition was splendid from all aspects—it was replete with virtuosity, tonally ingratiating, and imaginative in conception.

For the final concert Koussevitzky played the Sibelius Seventh Symphony (heard in 1937 and 1940) instead of the originally announced Sixth, Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite (played in 1938), and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony (played in 1937 and 1939).

It was suggested in these pages last month that perhaps the most important part of the Festival would eventually be found in the Music Center. The concerts presented by the students would seem to bear this out. This summer was different from other Festival seasons in that the musically minded visitor, if he wished, could have heard something every day during his stay in the Berkshires.

A SCENE FROM MOZART'S COSI FAN TUTTE as presented by the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department on the evenings of Aug. 12-13.

Three concerts a week were presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and on the other days there always could be heard student recitals of opera, chamber music, or orchestral programs, in the shed, chamber music hall, or opera house. A typical program of orchestra music would be the one presented on August 8, which comprised the Borodin B minor Symphony, the Bach E major Violin Concerto, the Piston Concertino for piano and orchestra, and Gardner Read's Prelude and Toccata. This is a fine, well balanced program of real interest, and is typical of those presented by the orchestra.

This reviewer heard excellent performances of works like the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, Poulenc's Horn Trio, Fauré's Piano Quartet, Mozart's Clarinet Quintet, and many others. And then there were perhaps the crowning achievements of the students' work—two performances of Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte, sung in English, staged by Dr. Herbert Graf, designed by Richard Rychtarik, and with the orchestra under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

Of the two casts, that heard on August 12 was somewhat more spirited vocally and acted decidedly better, but the other also had many points of merit.

The conception was mature, and the young singers showed themselves capable vocalists and, in several cases, real stylists. Tasteful sets helped enhance the production, though the lighting could have been better on several occasions.

As it was, if the best features of the two performances were put together, the result would not disgrace the Metropolitan.

LEON CARSON, president of the New York Singing Teachers' Association, at the Berkshire Festival.

Tanglewood Tales ~ ~ New Version

Eugene Bonner

THE very name "Tanglewood" is evocative to all true Americans. For several generations young people, in school and out, have received their early knowledge of mythological personages from Nathaniel Hawthorne's immortal Tanglewood Tales—deathless legends told in simple and lucid prose. Now, years later, more tales are being told, this time in music, in the same surroundings which inspired the former ones.

The First Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inaugurated by the late Henry Hadley and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, was a comparatively simple affair compared to the tremendously important and comprehensive institution it has now become. Beginning in 1934 with a series of three concerts given by sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Hadley, it has grown into a sort of American edition of Bayreuth or Salzburg with symphonic music taking the place of the operatic performances of the European festivals.

The first two Berkshire festivals (1934-35) were given in the outdoor horse-show ring on the Dan R. Hanna farm in Stockbridge, a stage with orchestral shell and 500 benches sufficing. These were both directed by Dr. Hadley who, owing to ill health, was forced to resign in September 1935. It was then that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was approached, and the idea of the festivals and their potentialities appealing to him, arrangements were made for that noted conductor to direct the third festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was engaged and the three concerts in 1936 were held at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Stockbridge and Lenox. This time a large tent seating 5000 was erected to insure patrons against the hazards of bad weather, that bete noir of outdoor performance in all localities—except perhaps California!

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED

The third festival was thus held, but it was felt by Dr. Koussevitzky and the trustees that a more permanent structure than a tent was imperative. This of course necessitated a permanent site. The problem was royally solved by Mrs. Gorham Brooks who presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra with her splendid estate of Tanglewood whose name had been immortalized in American literature by Hawthorne who had lived and worked there. A campaign was organized to raise money for the construction of a building which would protect both orchestra and audiences from the elements. The drive was successful and the money raised, the tent making its last appearance at the 1937 festival which was held for the first time in its own bailiwick of Tanglewood.

By the summer of 1938 the new building was ready. Called simply "The Music Shed" or "The Shed" for short, this unique structure is a fan-shaped affair, open at the sides and covering an acre and a half of ground. It has a seating capacity of a little over 6000 and its outer curve measures more were beautifully played, the performance of "The Faun" being a superlatively fine one. The Villa-Lobos work, first heard in New York ten years ago and also done at a World's Fair Brazilian concert in 1939, proved both interesting and stimulating, the orchestra being supplemented by the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus which did its part nobly.

Tanglewood Tales

(Continued from page 12)

Saturday night's program consisted of Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony," Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3, and the Symphony No. 5 of Shostakovitch. This concert was sheer perfection throughout, interest centering naturally in the Russian work which impresses one anew with each hearing; definitely one of the most convincing of modern compositions, it was superbly played by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

vided a fine rousing finale to the afternoon's proceedings.

Taken altogether, advantages and drawbacks noted, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is one of the most satisfactory musical enterprises ever established in this country. Its practical value is inestimable and its entertainment quotient incomparable. It has grown, slowly but surely, from a purely local affair into something that may easily become a national, or even international, institution. Notwithstanding a certain air of fashionable affluence, inevitable under the circumstances, the atmosphere in the main is democratic and pleasantly informal, while the scores of young people in sport-shirts and slacks sprawling on the grass around the Shed gives a nice picnic touch to the whole.

Perhaps America can develop its own Bayreuth or Salzburg after all—we'll see!

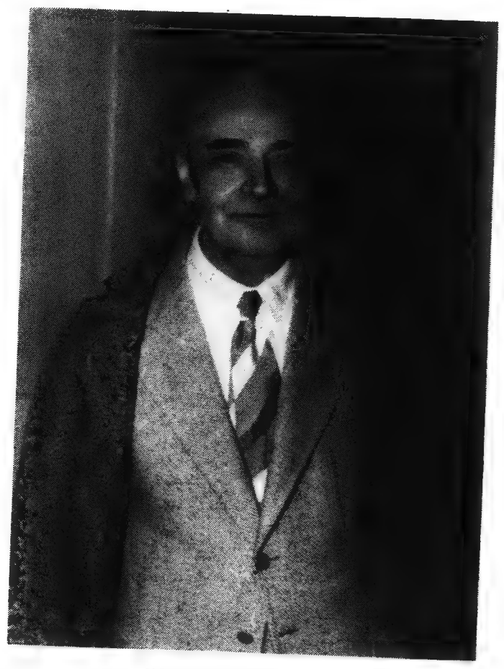
The final concert of the series on Sunday afternoon brought forth the before-mentioned record crowd which heard a fine, if somewhat uneven, performance of the Brahms Fourth Symphony, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," a curious little work for trumpet, English horn and strings, Hindemith's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, and the "Capriccio Espagnol" of Rimsky-Korsakoff. The Copland piece, an outgrowth of the incidental music composed for the play by Irwin Shaw in 1939, is atmospheric and provocative, the trumpet and English horn being skillfully used against the string background. The Hindemith concerto is ingeniously contrived and not without a certain lyricism but, oddly enough, the solo part for cello is tortuous and ineffective, even when played by such an artist as Gregor Piatigorsky. A spirited reading of the Rimsky-Korsakoff caprice pro-

68

Tanglewood: Investment

Opportunity for professional refining draws musical youth from North and South America

by Gardner Read



"THE DOCTOR"

MY HITCH-HIKING technique failed me but once in my six weeks at the 1941 Berkshire Music Center. That hot afternoon I decided to write this article. Perched on a stone fence, in brief intermission for my abused hill-climbing feet, I asked myself, "Why are we here?

That same question—which induced this attempt to voice what some 350 of us were feeling and absorbing in the heart of the Berkshires—Aaron Copland asked me when I came for my first composition lesson. "Why do you want to work with me this summer? You are older than the other student composers. You already have an established reputation, with major performances all the time, and undoubtedly you seem to know what you are doing musically and technically."

HEMISPHERIC MECCA

But Chavez had sent his Mexican Indian composition pupil Blas Galindo from Mexico City. Dai-Kong Lee, Hawaiian-born composer, had come from Honolulu; Composer Barbara Pentland and Violinist Althea Alimonda from points far apart as Canada and Brazil. This year's Prix de Rome winner, Harold Shapiro, was there; Thor Johnson, too, from his winter's work as director of the University of Michigan and Grand Rapids orchestras, Richard Whitney from his post as conductor of the Louisville Symphony, and Richard Duncan from the Omaha Little Symphony. Every member of the advanced orchestra was a performer of distinction enough to have played in Stokowski's Youth Orchestra, the Pittsburgh and Indianapolis Symphonies, the Rochester Philharmonic and Chicago Civic Orchestra. Scholarships for young students of singular achievement had been given by the Curtis Institute of Music, the Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts, the Eastman and Juilliard Schools of Music, the New England Conservatory. ASCAP, the Rockefeller Foundation, the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and many clubs and private donors had made it possible for the best of more than 700 applicants to spend a summer at the Center.

And that, simply enough, is the answer to "Why are we here?" The Berkshire Music Center is a superlative school for those who know where they are going in professional music.

CONCEIVED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, conceived the idea of such a school. Because of the Center, the Festival is assured of even more extraordinary concerts in years to come—more good music to play, capable new performers and conductors, and an increasingly large and intelligent audience.

What categories of musicians arrived for the second—the 1941—session? They fall into the three established professional groups — composers, conductors, performers — and advanced amateurs. The magnetic center, with Koussevitzky at the helm, is of course orchestral; but this year orchestra divided honors generously with opera, chorus, chamber orchestra, and ensembles.

What do they do, these picked young musicians, after a winter's grind in the big music schools or professional orchestras? They could, of course, be agreeably lazy, for distractions are many. Over my head in St. Joseph's Hall (the nearby Cranwell School dormitory, which is lent to the Center for each summer) was a tuba player whose rumblings invariably descended through the ceiling at the very moment I was perspiring over a muted string effect. There is the heady beauty of the Berkshire Mountains, at which one could look all the long sunlit hours under the guise of accumulating inspiration; or, set in their green circle, that tiny gem of a lake for midafternoon swimming, Stockbridge Bowl. Jacob's Pillow, Music Mountain, and the Stockbridge Playhouse are remarkable excuses for the postponement of "woodshedding" Brahms or Hindemith or one's own work. Tanglewood, near the site of the Hawthorne house at the Center, is the starting point for a dozen pilgrimages with historic or fictional lures.

The Koussevitzkys themselves offered one most agreeable distraction, a party in the garden of their beautiful home overlooking the Tanglewood estate. Faculty and students met over ice cream molds and other delectables, and no new symphonies were finished during reception hours, at least. . . . . Yet most Centerites spent most of their waking hours making music, listening to music, or talking about music.

Composers in Copland's class (seven fortunate ones out of countless applicants) usually spent their mornings at their own work or auditing orchestra rehearsals. The Music Center Advanced Orchestra worked in the new theater—concert hall, designed by the eminent Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen. The Boston Symphony rehearsed in the huge Music Shed, scene of the three series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts. "Sitting in," by the way, is not usually a privilege accorded other festival-goers, who must crowd into the one public rehearsal on Saturday morning, when Olin Downes discusses the music then on the stands.

COMPOSER'S REGIMEN

Two afternoons a week the Copland group had class sessions. On one, we analyzed the major orchestral works then in rehearsal by the student orchestra, dubbed the "B.S.O." by students and faculty. On the other, we discussed special problems of orchestration applied to such contemporary fields as radio and movie music. One afternoon Copland gave us a passage in Of Mice and Men, told us to score it in our own style, and then showed us his score. Each of us, in addition to his class work, had an hour and a half private lesson each week. We composed as we could —frequently not as consistently as was desirable. Evenings we often came back to Tangle-

in Musical Futures

wood for concerts, and on afternoons we heard lectures on pre-sixteenth-century music by Olin Downes and other talks by such festival guests as Howard Hanson, on hand for a performance of his Romantic Symphony.

Tall, lanky, sophisticated, easy—Copland was a direct foil for Hindemith, who was small, bald, roly-poly, mild-mannered. The eminent contrapuntalist and his flock of eight worked in a veritable frenzy of concern with all aspects of the twelve-tone technic and other systems of contemporaneous musical expression.

WORKOUT FOR CONDUCTORS

Conductors were divided by careful auditions into two groups — active and auditing. The active inner circle spent the morning session on alternate weeks with the advanced orchestra and the afternoon session with the chamber orchestra. The former they conducted in the Center's weekly public concerts—and no prep school literature, either, but such solid fare as Liszt's Faust Symphony, Borodin's Second Symphony, Strauss' Don Juan, and Stravinsky's Petroushka Suite. Life was not for them, however, a matter of blissfully waving a stub baton before their eighty-five young colleagues of the orchestra. At any moment "the Doctor" (as Koussevitzky was affectionately called) might rise with a storm of extra-verbal emotion to show what he would get out of the work in hand. "More varm!" he would say. "Play it more varm!" or "Dot iss bad—you take eet too fest!"

Auditioning conductors spent half of both rehearsal periods on baton technique and analysis of the scores in rehearsal, half in watching the active conductors get their daily comeuppance.

Almost all instrumentalists who could make the grade were in the advanced orchestra, which, in addition to performing under the various student conductors, gave two concerts under Koussevitzky himself. (It was no secret that their playing of Mozart's G Minor Symphony under the Doctor's direction surpassed in beauty and elan even that of the B.S.O., which performed the work a few weeks later on one of the Festival series). Many orchestra members elected chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky and Jesus Maria Sanroma, and few of them missed the opportunity of private lessons with the first-chair men of the Boston Symphony.

Opera students came from Juilliard, Eastman, and Curtis for work under Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. And work they did—on short scenes from Mozart and Verdi operas for weekly performances, and on a double performance (with two casts) of Cosi Fan Tutte for the final week.

CHORAL CORNUCOPIA

Choral students were concerned mostly with the choral conducting classes of Hugh Ross of Schola Cantorum fame, and smaller groups which under the guidance of Hindemith delved into the rich literature of fifteenth and sixteenth century music. Most chorus members came from the Music and Culture Department of the Center, a group of public and private school music teachers and advanced amateurs who wished to spend the season in a musical atmosphere, but not in too intensive study. As chorus members, they participated in the Festival performances of the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven, parts of the Mozart Requiem, and Lambert's Rio Grande. And all, of course, were privileged to attend the daily rehearsals of the B.S.O. for the coming Festival concerts.

But what did they get out of it—they, Edgar Curtis from Scotland, and Alejandro Zaggara, friendly young flutist from Colombia, and Mercelo Montecino from Chile, and all the rest of us?

BENEFITS

We got the experience of study, performance, and creative work under musicians among the best the world offers. We had the stimulation of putting our efforts under the every-day surveillance of the most critical masters. Even while the orchestra players were following the baton of a student conductor, they were equally aware of the Doctor ready to pounce.

Even more important than experience (which can be had elsewhere) and stimulation (which, if need be, can consist solely of the inner spark) was the crystallization through challenge of techniques and attitudes toward one's art. Copland and I were at sword's points for some days because he called me a romanticist (that to A.C. being synonymous with anathema). But it did make me question whether or not my music was a bit too lush, too complex, for contemporaneous expression. It made me sure that if I were standing my own ground, it was with reason. The same acid test was applied to techniques and attitudes of conductors and instrumentalists; what stood the test—whether

(Please turn to page 22)

The author of this article, who won a scholarship in Aaron Copland's composition class at the Berkshire Music Center last summer, is known throughout the Americas as a gifted young composer. His works, many of which have been published, have been heard frequently over the radio and in concerts of the New York, Chicago, Boston, Rochester, Cincinnati, and Buenos Aires orchestras. Mr. Read, who has won the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Prize and was twice given the Juilliard publication award, is teaching at the St. Louis Institute of Music.

"Bet it hurts him more than it does us," laugh these youngsters who have just had a going over by Koussevitzky out in the shed (background).

This Clipping From
HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1941

Artist Completes Folio Of Harvard Athletes

ROCKPORT, Mass.—(U.P.)—It's a long stretch from first, violin to third base but Donald C. Greason, artist, has successfully bridged the gap.

Greason, whose studies of the Boston Symphony orchestra won him fame, has concluded a folio of paintings and drawings made on the "playing fields of Harvard."

Greason, whose studies of the tween his choice of subjects. Grace and rhythm, he says, are as characteristic of football as they are of playing the viola.

His athletic series are described as catching the "staccato tension of football, the adagio grace of baseball, the smooth rhythm of the oarsman, the classical movements of the track meet—weaving them into a unified body of painting which would constitute a major work of art."

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 7)

technique, interpretation, or style—is what was worth keeping.

MUSICAL MELTING POT

Especially significant is the manner in which such a melting pot as Tanglewood negates the provincialism which impedes the artist. He meets other musicians; he talks over mutual problems, and learns what they are doing. He respects their achievements, and works ahead with their vision added to his own.

And finally—to be most practical—the Berkshire Music Center affords those contacts which are indispensable to any young musician who wants to make a place for himself as a composer, performer, or conductor. I, for instance was fortunate enough to have a performance at the Music Center, when Leonard Bernstein, one of Koussevitzky's stars gave my Prelude and Toccata a brilliant reading. Thus I was afforded an opportunity to analyze it for Copland's composition class, the auditors' conducting class, and Copland's public lecture on the orchestral literature of the week.

If ever young conductors were privileged to meet their future orchestras, young artists their audiences, and composers their conductors, radio station managers, and teachers — that focus of opportunity is the Berkshire Music Center.

n Musical Futures

wood for concerts, and on afternoons we heard lectures on pre-sixteenth-century music by Olin Downes and other talks by such festival guests as Howard Hanson, on hand for a performance of his Romantic Symphony.

Tall, lanky, sophisticated, easy—Copland was a direct foil for Hindemith, who was small, bald, roly-poly, mild-mannered. The eminent contrapuntalist and his flock of eight worked in a veritable frenzy of concern with all aspects of the twelve-tone technic and other systems of contemporaneous musical expression.

WORKOUT FOR CONDUCTORS

Conductors were divided by careful auditions into two groups—active and auditing. The active inner circle spent the morning session on alternate weeks with the advanced orchestra and the afternoon session with the chamber orchestra. The former they conducted in the Center's weekly public concerts—and no prep school literature, either, but such solid fare as Liszt's Faust Symphony, Borodin's Second Symphony, Strauss' Don Juan, and Stravinsky's Petroushka Suite. Life was not for them, however, a matter of blissfully waving a stub baton before their eighty-five young colleagues of the orchestra. At any moment "the Doctor" (as Koussevitzky was affectionately called) might rise with a storm of extra-verbal emotion to show what he would get out of the work in hand. "More varm!" he would say. "Play it more varm!" or "Dot iss bad—you take eet too fest!"

Auditioning conductors spent half of both rehearsal periods on baton technique and analysis of the scores in rehearsal, half in watching the active conductors get their daily comeuppance.

Almost all instrumentalists who could make the grade were in the advanced orchestra, which, in addition to performing under the various student conductors, gave two concerts under Koussevitzky himself. (It was no secret that their playing of Mozart's G Minor Symphony under the Doctor's direction surpassed in beauty and elan even that of the B.S.O., which performed the work a few weeks later on one of the Festival series). Many orchestra members elected chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky and Jesus Maria Sanroma, and few of them missed the opportunity of private lessons with the first-chair men of the Boston Symphony.

Opera students came from Juilliard, Eastman, and Curtis for work under Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. And work they did—on short scenes from Mozart and Verdi operas for weekly performances, and on a double performance (with two casts) of Cosi Fan Tutte for the final week.

CHORAL CORNUCOPIA

Choral students were concerned mostly with the choral conducting classes of Hugh Ross of Schola Cantorum fame, and smaller groups which under the guidance of Hindemith delved into the rich literature of fifteenth and sixteenth century music. Most chorus members came from the Music and Culture Department of the Center, a group of public and private school music teachers and advanced amateurs who wished to spend the season in a musical atmosphere, but not in too intensive study. As chorus members, they participated in the Festival performances of the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven, parts of the Mozart Requiem, and Lambert's Rio Grande. And all, of course, were privileged to attend the daily rehearsals of the B.S.O. for the coming Festival concerts.

But what did they get out of it—they, Edgar Curtis from Scotland, and Alejandro Zaggara, friendly young flutist from Colombia, and Mercelo Montecino from Chile, and all the rest of us?

BENEFITS

We got the experience of study, performance, and creative work under musicians among the best the world offers. We had the stimulation of putting our efforts under the every-day surveillance of the most critical masters. Even while the orchestra players were following the baton of a student conductor, they were equally aware of the Doctor ready to pounce.

Even more important than experience (which can be had elsewhere) and stimulation (which, if need be, can consist solely of the inner spark) was the crystallization through challenge of techniques and attitudes toward one's art. Copland and I were at sword's points for some days because he called me a romanticist (that to A.C. being synonymous with anathema). But it did make me question whether or not my music was a bit too lush, too complex, for contemporaneous expression. It made me sure that if I were standing my own ground, it was with reason. The same acid test was applied to techniques and attitudes of conductors and instrumentalists; what stood the test—whether

(Please turn to page 22)

The author of this article, who won a scholarship in Aaron Copland's composition class at the Berkshire Music Center last summer, is known throughout the Americas as a gifted young composer. His works, many of which have been published, have been heard frequently over the radio and in concerts of the New York, Chicago, Boston, Rochester, Cincinnati, and Buenos Aires orchestras. Mr. Read, who has won the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Prize and was twice given the Juilliard publication award, is teaching at the St. Louis Institute of Music.

"Bet it hurts him more than it does us," laugh these youngsters who have just had a going over by Koussevitzky out in the shed (background).

This Clipping From
HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1941

Artist Completes Folio Of Harvard Athletes

ROCKPORT, Mass.—(U.P.)—It's a long stretch from first, violin to third base but Donald C. Greason, artist, has successfully bridged the gap.

Greason, whose studies of the Boston Symphony orchestra won him fame, has concluded a folio of paintings and drawings made on the "playing fields of Harvard."

Greason, whose studies of the tween his choice of subjects. Grace and rhythm, he says, are as characteristic of football as they are of playing the viola.

His athletic series are described as catching the "staccato tension of football, the adagio grace of baseball, the smooth rhythm of the oarsman, the classical movements of the track meet—weaving them into a unified body of painting which would constitute a major work of art."

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 7)

technique, interpretation, or style—is what was worth keeping.

MUSICAL MELTING POT

Especially significant is the manner in which such a melting pot as Tanglewood negates the provincialism which impedes the artist. He meets other musicians; he talks over mutual problems, and learns what they are doing. He respects their achievements, and works ahead with their vision added to his own.

And finally—to be most practical—the Berkshire Music Center affords those contacts which are indispensable to any young musician who wants to make a place for himself as a composer, performer, or conductor. I, for instance was fortunate enough to have a performance at the Music Center, when Leonard Bernstein, one of Koussevitzky's stars gave my Prelude and Toccata a brilliant reading. Thus I was afforded an opportunity to analyze it for Copland's composition class, the auditors' conducting class, and Copland's public lecture on the orchestral literature of the week.

If ever young conductors were privileged to meet their future orchestras, young artists their audiences, and composers their conductors, radio station managers, and teachers—that focus of opportunity is the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
OCT 16 1941

Federated Music Clubs To Rebuild Famous Home

"The Little Red House" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works will be rebuilt by the National Federation of Music Clubs as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra and a permanent memorial to the distinguished novelist, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Maine, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, jointly announced Saturday. The original structure was destroyed by fire June 22, 1890.

The decision to rebuild the former Hawthorne home and present it to the music center established by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in 1940 was made by the board of directors of the federation at the recent meeting in Cincinnati, but public announcement was deferred until Mrs. Gannett had had an opportunity to confer with Dr. Koussevitsky on plans.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his immediate delight at the project, saying that in his opinion it will lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famed both as the Berkshire Music center and as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, two institutions destined to become more and more important in the musical life of the nation in the years to come.

National Shrine

"Tanglewood has become a national shrine of world renown," he said, "where free peoples may live and work in music and where music lovers may come to listen. The rebuilding of the Hawthorne house will add to its lustre; will constitute yet another attraction which will draw men and women who have a love for the best in music, in art and in literature to this haven in the Berkshires which has been a center of so much of the intellectual life of America in the past."

As rebuilt by the federation, "The Little Red House" will be almost an exact replica of the one in which the Hawthorne family lived and where the novelist wrote his second great romance, "The House of Seven Gables," and spun the fascinating tales of his "Wonder Book."

Hawthorne moved to the Berkshires in the spring of 1850, when a political overturn had lost him his position as surveyor at the Salem custom house, and the family lived there until November, 1851, their stay being cut short by the novelist's delicate health, which did not easily surmount the rigors of the winter climate. During their residence their third daughter, Rose, was born.

Although Hawthorne has always been regarded as a somewhat solitary figure, the small red cottage which he rented from William Aspinwall Tappan, owner of Tanglewood, became during the year and a half of his residence a gathering place for the literati of the neighborhood. Herman Melville often drove over from his home, Arrowhead, in Pittsfield. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Catherine Sedgwick, and the actress, Fannie Kemble Butler, were other frequent visitors.

Nature Lover

Although Hawthorne did not like the climate, he was very responsive to the beauty of his surroundings, and one of his most matchless descriptive passages reads: "The sunsets of the winter are incomparably splendid, and when the ground is covered with snow, no brilliancy of tint expressible by words can come within an infinite distance of the effect . . . And yet the face of nature can never look more beautiful than in May when Monument mountain and its brethren are green, and the lightness of the tint takes away something from their massiveness and ponderosity and they respond with livelier effect to the shine and shade of the sky. Each tree then stands out in its individuality of hue."

In this setting the Hawthorne House will be rebuilt at Tanglewood by federated music clubs from coast to coast as a gathering place where all visitors to the Berkshire Music Festival will be welcome.

Architects will at once begin work on the plans, and it is hoped that the structure can be completed by the summer of 1942.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
OCT 15 1941

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
OCT 21 1941

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 24 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
OCT 12 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
OCT 13 1941

AMARILLO, TEX.
NEWS

EL DORADO, ARK.
NEWS

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
OCT 16 1941

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
OCT 12 1941

ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH-HERALD
OCT 26 1941

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
OCT 19 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
OCT 26 1941

Music Center to Get Hawthorne House

"The Little Red house" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works will be rebuilt by the National Federation of Music Clubs as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra, and a permanent memorial to the distinguished novelist, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, have announced. The original structure was destroyed by fire June 22, 1890.

The decision to rebuild the former Hawthorne home and present it to the music center established by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in 1940 was made by the board of directors of the federation at the recent meeting in Cincinnati, but public announcement was deferred until Mrs Gannett had had an opportunity to confer with Dr Koussevitzky on plans.

Dr Koussevitzky expressed his immediate delight at the project, saying that in his opinion it will lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famed both as the Berkshire Music center and as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, two institutions destined to become more and more important in the musical life of the nation in the years to come.

"Tanglewood has become a national shrine of world renown," he said, "where free peoples may live and work in music and where music lovers may come to listen. The rebuilding of the Hawthorne house will add to its luster; will constitute yet another attraction which will draw men and women who have a love for the best in music, in art and in literature to this haven in the Berkshires which has been a center of so much of the intellectual life of America in the past."

As rebuilt by the federation, "The Little Red house" will be almost an exact replica of the one in which the Hawthorne family lived and where the novelist wrote his second great romance "The House of Seven Gables," and spun the fascinating tales of his "Wonder Book."

Hawthorne moved to the Berkshires in the spring of 1850, when a political overturn had lost him his position as surveyor at the Salem customhouse, and the family lived there until November, 1851, their stay being cut short by the novelists's delicate health, which did not easily surmount the rigors of the winter climate. During their residence their third daughter, Rose, was born.

Although Hawthorne has always been regarded as a somewhat solitary figure, the small red cottage which he rented from William Aspinwall Tappan, owner of Tanglewood, became during the year and a half of his residence a gathering place for the literati of the neighborhood. Herman Melville often drove over from his home, Arrowhead, in Pittsfield Oliver Wendell Holmes, Catherine Sedgwick, and the actress, Fannie Kemble Butler, were other frequent visitors.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
OCT 11 1941

SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS
OCT 19 1941

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
OCT 13 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
OCT 13 1941

'Little Red House' to Rise As Hawthorne Memorial

By The Associated Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 12—A reproduction of the "Little Red House" where Nathaliel Hawthorne lived and wrote for a time in the Berkshire Hills will be built at Tanglewood as a memorial to him. Fire destroyed the original cottage in 1890.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, state that the federation will erect the Hawthorne memorial as a gift to the symphony.

Tanglewood is the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has a major role.

This Clipping From
SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
HERALD
OCT 12 1941

MOSELEY WINNER OF SCHOLARSHIP

Carlos Moseley, son of Mrs. Helen D. Moseley, has won a scholarship with Olga Samaroff - Stokowski through the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music and will study with her this winter in New York.

Mr. Mosely was piano soloist in the Brahms B flat concerto at Tanglewood last summer with the Berkshire Music center orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. He studied during the su[redacted] J. M. Sanroma.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
OCT 11 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
OCT 11 1941

SOFT PEDAL

Walter Damrosch will be at the piano for a couple of his excerpts from his "Cyrano de Bergerac" at the Town Hall recital of Thomas L. Thomas late this month...Santos Ojeda, 21-year-old Cuban pianist, is the first Latin-American to win a Juilliard Graduate School Fellowship . . . The National Federation of Music Clubs is rebuilding the "Little Red House" at Tanglewood, where Hawthorne wrote, his "Tanglewood Tales," as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Gag of the Week: On his birthday Alfred Wallenstein got a singing telephone call. Halfway through "Happy Birthday," Wallenstein said: "All right, operator, that's enough, thanks." An anguished wail on the other end of the wire informed him that the singer was soprano Vivian della Chiesa.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

OCT 11 1941

Replica of Hawthorne House To Be Built at Tanglewood

The National Federation of Music clubs will rebuild "The Little Red House" at Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works, it was announced today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., federation president. The original structure was destroyed by fire June 22, 1890.

The rebuilt house will be a gift to the orchestra and a permanent memorial to the novelist, according to plans made by the federation's directors at Cincinnati and later consented to by Dr. Koussevetzky. "The Little Red House" will be almost an exact replica of the one in which the novelist wrote his second great romance. "The House of Seven Gables" and spun the tales of his "Wonder Book." Architests will begin work on the plans at once and it is hoped the structure can be completed by next summer.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his immediate delight at the project, saying that in his opinion it will lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famed both as the Berkshire music center and as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

"Tanglewood has become a national shrine of world renown," he said, "where free peoples may live and work in music and where music lovers may come to listen. The rebuilding of the Hawthorne house will add to its lustre; will constitute yet another attraction which will draw men and women who have a love for the best in music, in art and in literature to this haven in the Berkshires which has been a center of so much of the intellectual life of America in the past."

Hawthorne moved to the Berkshires in the spring of 1850, when a political overturn had lost him his position as surveyor at the Salem customhouse, and the family lived there until November, 1851, their stay being cut short by the novelist's delicate health, which did not easily surmount the rigors of the winter climate. During their residence their third daughter, Rose, was born.

Although Hawthorne has already been regarded as a somewhat solitary figure, the small red cottage which he rented from William Aspinwall Tappan, owner of Tanglewood, became during the year and a half of his residence a gathering place for the literati of the neighborhood. Herman Melville often drove over from his home, Arrowhead, in Pittsfield. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Catherine Sedgwick, and the actress, Fannie Kemble Butler, were other frequent visitors.

Although Hawthorne did not like the climate, he was very responsive to the beauty of his surroundings, and one of his most matchless descriptive passages reads: "The sunsets of the winter are incomparably splendid, and when the ground is covered with snow, no brilliancy of tint expressible by words can come within an infinite distance of the effect . . . And yet the face of nature can never look more beautiful than in May when Monument mountain and its brethren are green, and the lightness of the tint takes away something from their massiveness and ponderosity and they respond with livelier effect to the shine and shade of the sky. Each tree then stands out in its individuality of hue."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

OCT 12 1941

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

OCT 17 1941

TORONTO, CANADA
GLOBE & MAIL

OCT 18 1941

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

OCT 18 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
OCT 25 1941

Berkshire Festival Attendance Set Officially at 83,037

An official attendance of 83,037, or 14,000 more than 1940 for the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer was reported at the eighth anunal meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., this week.

The second series of concerts had the largest attendance, 29,075. The third series had 28,710, and for the first series the attendance was 25,252. The smallest attendance was for the opening night, 7,044 or 1,000 more than the capacity of the shed, while the final concert had the greatest attendance, 12,064. Patrons, members and subscribers accounted for 44 percent of the attendance, while there were 25,660 general admissions.

$19,000 At Benefit

The gala benefit at Tanglewood for the USO and the British War Relief was reported to have made net proceeds of about $19,000, so that the two beneficiaries will receive $9,500 each.

Miss Elizabeth Pixley's report as first aid chairman showed 109 persons treated at the first aid tent compared with 75 in 1940. There were 5 persons stung by bees, 8 were treated for blisters on their heels, there were 33 calls for aspirin; one man went to the tent because he was afraid of crowds. His wife was summoned and she took him to the place where they were staying in Lebanon, N. Y.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 27 1941

For Victor, Richard Korn, who studied conducting with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood this summer, directs eight members of the Alumni Orchestra of the National Orchestral Association in Mozart's seldom-heard Serenade No. 11 in E flat major. The serenade is for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, and is as charming as all Mozart music is bound to be, filled as it is with tunes and rhythms. For Mozart fans it is a natural.

Jose Iturbi gives us a new recording of Beethoven's mighty third piano concerto in C minor. The orchestra is the Rochester Philharmonic which Iturbi conducts from the piano. It is a good interpretation of the work, but whether the best one, it is not for this reviewer to say. It takes a better critic than he is to draw the fine line. Victor is the recording company.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

OCT 19 1941

71

as a permanent memorial to

Nathaniel Hawthorne, the National Federation of Music Clubs has announced it will rebuild "the little red house" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires and present it as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra for the music center established by the orchestra there last year. The original structure was destroyed by fire in 1890. The project will, in the opinion of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famous as the Berkshire music center and home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

ROCKLAND, ME
COURIER
9/16/41

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

Curiosity about the establishment of the Berkshire Festival led me to do some "looking," with good results. Tanglewood, where the Festival is held annually (this year was the eighth), is located between Lenox and Stockbridge, in the Berkshires where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." Started in 1934 by the late Dr. Henry Hadley and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith as a series of Summer-time symphonic concerts, the festival has grown into an established enterprise, with its own permanent buildings. Last year, it was still further expanded by the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center, where talented young people may study music under the principals of the orchestra and opera dramatics under Dr. Herbert Graf. Dr. Koussevikitzky is director of the center and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, is assistant director.

For the first two years men from the New York Philharmonic played under Dr. Hadley in a horse-show ring on a nearby estate. The third year a new site was chosen, a larger tent obtained, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra invited. In 1937, Mrs. Gorham Brooks of New York presented Tanglewood to the orchestra as a permanent Summer home. A new shell was built here, and the number of concerts increased to six, one of which was to be an all-Wagner night. With the night came a cloudburst with which even the percussive Wagner could not compete. Then and there was born the idea of a permanent weatherproof building. Adapted from plans drawn by Elliel Saarinen, famous Finnish born architect, now located in this country, this structure is unique in musical architecture. Shaped like a fan, with the stage at the handle end, it seats 6000, while 3000 more can stand in the cononnades. It was christened The Music Shed. Its acoustic reflector was designed by Prof. Fay of M.I.T., and its organ by G. Donald Harrison.

At one of the 1939 concerts Dr. Koussevitzky presented Dorothy Maynor to American music lovers, and each season sees many notable

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

OCT 12 1941

Helen Oles Tells Of Berkshire Center

By Suzanne Martin

With typical New England sobriety, they named it "The Shed," that acoustically perfect, pie-shaped pavilion that is part of Serge Koussevitzky's life - long dream, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

Helen Louise Oles, Seattle pianist returned from the East recently full of superlatives for the Symphonic Festival.

Fast becoming a tourist mecca, even compared by Henry Simon of PM to the Salzburg Festival, the development in the Berkshire Hills is the center for orchestral music Mrs. Oles describes as without a flaw.

"Koussevitzky is supreme," she said. "The music of the Boston Symphony working under a great conductor in such beautiful surroundings was an experience I have never had before."

Dr. Koussevitzky's chief aim, he tells his students, is interpretation. He wants to make the center an intellectual vacationland, where artists and dramatists will come, as well as musicians.

DISCUSSION LIVELY

"Just strolling around the gardens, you could hear small groups earnestly discussing music. People cluster and hold forth under the refreshment tent," said Mrs. Oles. "They come from everywhere. Even the homes in the little towns neighboring the center are thrown open to accommodate the crowds."

For like a landslide, the success of the festival's orchestral performances have encouraged the creation of an opera house. And less than a dozen miles away at Lee is an international dance festival. In an idyllic setting of natural beauty, advanced students form opera, orchestra, chamber music ensembles, study composition and conducting; general students form a festival chorus and attend lectures on the history of music.

All of them, following Dr. Koussevitzky's belief that all should work under the persuasion of actual performances, attend the festival's nine concerts. They open in July, close at summer's end.

NOTED MEMBERS

On the distinguished faculty are people like Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Herbert Graf, Paul Hindemith, Gregor Piatigorsky. Most of all, there is Dr. Koussevitzky.

The Berkshires weren't the only musical experience of Mrs. Oles this summer, however. From her duo-piano concert with John Hopper in Los Angeles in July, she went to Ithaca to study with her old teacher, Egon Petri. She describes the Dutch piano master as pedagogically inclined, not spectacularly, but technically showy. Noted as a great Liszt player, Petri played a concert in Town Hall last winter that was a fabulous phenomena to even the most fussy.

Although connected with Cornell University, Petri teaches in his home in the European fashion, the class which Mrs. Oles joined meeting with him from 8:30 in the morning until nearly 6.

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
OCT 19 1941

Choir Director, Organist Named

Rev. C. Oral Lowe, pastor of Boyd Memorial Christian church, has announced appointment of W. R. Wiant and Emma Dunbar as permanent choir director and organist of the church. Mr. Wiant, beginning his third year as conductor of the Charleston Civic orchestra, has led choirs in Moundsville and McMechen, and conducted the Civic chorus in the former city for four years. During the summer, while a student at the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood, Mass., he studied orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and choral conducting under Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum, New York.

Miss Dunbar studied piano and organ locally as well as at Peabody institute in Baltimore, Md., and Curtis institute in Philadelphia, Pa. She was formerly assistant organist at Bream Memorial church. In January, she will appear as soloist with the Civic orchestra, playing a Poulenc organ concerto.

This Clipping From
GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS
OCT 26 1941

72

MUSICAL NOTES

BY SUSAN McGEE BARKSDALE

Requests have been made that we announce the opera that opens the Metropolitan season this year. Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro" is chosen for the opening performance, according to announcement by Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan.

Up to date we were unable to learn whether the entire cast had been selected, since his only comment was: "The cast of the opening 'Marriage of Figaro' on November 24, will be a familiar one, duplicating that of various performances of this work in the last two years.

This is the first time that a Mozart work has ever been presented before on an opening night, according to records of the past 57 opera seasons.

MEMORIAL TO AUTHOR

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, president of the National Federation of Music clubs, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, recently announced that the "Little Red House" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works, will be rebuilt by the national federation as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra, and as a memorial to the distinguished author.

The decision to rebuild the former Hawthorne home and present it to the music center established by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in 1940, was made by the board of directors of the federation at the recent meeting in Cincinnati, but public announcement was deferred until Mrs. Gannett had had the opportunity to confer with Dr. Koussevitzky on plans.

CONDUCTOR DELIGHTED

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his immediate delight at the project, saying that in his opinion it will lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famed both as the Berkshire music center and as the music home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, two institutions destined to become more and more important in the musical life of the nation in years to come.

"Tanglewood has become a national shrine of world renown," he said, "where free peoples live and work and where music lovers may come and listen."

"The rebuilding of the Hawthorne house will add to its lustre; will constitute yet another attraction which will draw men and women who have a love for the best in music, in art and in literature to this haven in the Berkshires which has been a center of so much of the intellectual life of America in the past."

As rebuilt by the federation, "the Little Red House" will be almost an exact replica of the one in which the Hawthorne family lived and where the novelist wrote his second great romance, "The House of Seven Gables," and spun the fascinating tales of his "Wonder Book."

RESPONSIVE TO BEAUTY

Although Hawthorne did not like the climate, he was very responsive to the beauty of his surroundings, and one of his matchless passages reads: "The sunsets of the winter are incomparably splendid, and when the ground is covered with snow, no brilliancy of tint expressible by words can come within an infinite distance of the effect. And yet the face of nature can never look more beautiful than in May, when Monument mountain and its brethern are green, and the lightness of the tint takes away something from their massiveness and ponderosity and they respond with livelier effect to the shine and shade of the sky. Each tree then stands out in its individuality of hue."

In this setting the Hawthorne house will be rebuilt at Tanglewood by federated music clubs from coast to coast as a gathering place where all visitors to the Berkshire Music festival will be welcome. The original structure was destroyed by fire June 22, 1890.

Architects will at once begin work on the plans, and it is hoped that the structure can be completed by the summer of 1942.

BRIEF COMMENTS

The National Symphony orchestra, under direction of Hans Kindler, is presenting 13 new works this season. One will be performed for the first time, four will receive their world premieres, and four will be heard for the first time in Washington. Seven of these works are by American composers. . . . A machine called a "Keynograph" has been recently invented by Adolf L. Schrijver. It can be attached to a piano and prints the notes as they are played. The markings on the machine are similar to notes on piano player rolls. . . . Four public piano seminars are to be conducted by Harold Bauer at the Manhattan School of Music next month. Popular prices will be charged. . . . At the presentation of all orchestra concerts at Carnegie hall this season, there will be an American flag on each side of the stage, and the "Star Spangled Banner" will be sung. . . . Mary Cardwell Dawson of Pittsburgh, has organized the Negro National society, and it will make its bow to the public on October 30 with a performance of Verdi's "Aida." . . . As its 1941-42 premiere concert on the all-star concert series, the Atlanta Music club selected the celebrated pianist, Sergei Rachmaninoff who gave a program last Saturday evening at the City auditorium.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
OCT 23 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
OCT 26 1941

Plans for 1942 Festival Series To Be Known Soon

Finance Committee, at Annual Meeting, Reports Concert Discussions With Boston Symphony Orchestra

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
OCT 25 1941

At the eighth annual meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., yesterday afternoon, the finance committee reported that it had been discussing arrangements for future seasons at Tanglewood with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and expected to have a definite announcement soon.

The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was re-elected president; Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, treasurer and George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk. Laurence R. Connor of Pittsfield was elected vice president to succeed the late Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee and New York. Mr. Connor is also chairman of the finance committee.

Trustees re-elected were: Miss Robinson Smith, Mr. Edman, Mrs. Myron Taylor of New York, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of Stockbridge and New York, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont and Rye, N. Y., William L. Bull of Lenox.

14,000 More Attended

The official attendance for the nine concerts the past summer as recorded from ticket stubs, was 83,037, or 14,000 more than in 1940. The second series of concerts had the largest attendance, 29,075, and then came the third, 28,710, and for the first series, the attendance was 25,252. The smallest attendance was for the opening night, 7044 or 1000 more than the capacity of the shed, while the final concert had the greatest attendance, 12,064. Patrons, members and subscribers accounted for 44 per cent of the attendance while there were 25,660 general admissions.

These statistics and many others were contained in the president's report. Other reports were submitted by Joseph Franz and Peter Malevsky on the grounds and the shed; by Mr. Dwight, Mr. Connor, Mrs. Bruce Crane as head of the Festival Clubs, and Mr. Edman, as clerk and director of publicity. Reports were read from Miss Alice Riggs as chairman of the Layman's Music Course; Fred N. Cummings, in charge of parking; Willard M. Sistare, as chairman of ushers; Miss Elizabeth Y. Pixley, Red Red Cross first aid chairman. Resolutions were adopted thanking all the volunteers who helped make 1941 season a success.

The publicity report showed that 60,000 words were sent out from Tanglewood for newspapers by Western Union during the period of the Festival, an increase of 10,000 over last year.

Benefit Proceeds $19,000

Mr. Edman, reporting on the gala benefit at Tanglewood for the USO and the British War Relief said that the net proceeds were about $19,000 so that the the two beneficiaries would receive $9500 each.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
OCT 11 1941

73

Music and Musicians

By WILLIAM G. KING.

The musical occasion of the coming week undoubtedly will be the opening performance of The New Opera Company at the 44th Street Theater on Tuesday night. Much has been written of the aims and ideals of the new organization, with which all who are concerned about the development of the lyric theater in America must find themselves in agreement; and there is every reason to hope that the company's achievements will measure up to them.

Danilova

Who will appear in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo's "Magic Swan," to be presented for the first time at the Metropolitan Opera House on Monday.

The New Opera Company, like the long-established Metropolitan, will begin its season with a Mozart work—the gay and delightful "Cosi fan Tutte." (The Met, you will recall, has chosen "Nozze di Figaro" for its first performance on November 24.) It is highly suitable that the country's oldest and youngest opera-companies should thus pay tribute to the genius of Salzburg, for this year brings the 150th anniversary of his death. And the New Opera Company, through Fritz Busch, the eminent conductor who will make his American operatic debut on Tuesday, Lothar Wallerstein, the distinguished stage-director and others of its personnel, may lay claim to inheriting some of the glory of the vanished Salzburg Festivals.

* * *

As all too frequently happens in the season's rush, local music patrons will find themselves forced to make a choice of major attractions on Tuesday, for on that evening the Philadelphia Orchestra also begins its 1941-42 season here with a Carnegie Hall concert. Other outstanding events of the week include the premiere of "Magic Swan," a reworking of the unfamiliar third act of the Tchaikovsky - Petipa "Lac des Cygnes," by Alexandra Federova, which will be presented by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo at the Metropolitan Opera House on Monday evening; the first performance in America of "Chronica," by the Jooss Ballet at Maxine Elliott's Theater on Thursday; and the Thursday, Friday and Saturday concerts of the second week of the Philharmonic-Symphony's 100th anniversary season, under the direction of Leopold Stokowski.

The Jooss Ballet, by the way, will end its five week run on October 25.

* * *

The second annual Leventritt award, established in memory of Edgar M. Leventritt, goes to twenty-two-year-old Erno Valasek, violinist. The award carries with it an appearance as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Valasek will play with that ensemble under the direction of Eugene Goossens on February 15. He comes from Cleveland, Ohio, where he studied with C. V. Rychlik. Since his removal to New York, he has been a pupil of Adolfo Betti. Last year's Leventritt award went to Sidney Foster, pianist. . . .

Anis Fuleihan, whose "Epithalamium" variations for piano and strings will have its first New York hearing at the hands of the Farbman Symphonietta and Edith Schiller at Town Hall on Friday evening, has returned to the city from the Connecticut hideaway in which he has been working for more than a year. The past summer has been a fruitful one for him. It saw the completion of a Divertimento for orchestra, which may have its first performance later this season by the Pittsburgh Symphony, under Fritz Reiner; his second String Quartet, and several two-piano pieces. At the moment, Mr. Fuleihan is scoring a Concertino, commissioned by the Indianapolis Symphony, and working on a cello sonata for Maurice Eisenberg. . . .

Kenneth Klein, head of Town Hall's concert department, announces an important change in this year's Town Hall Endowment Series. Joseph Szigeti, the violinist, instead of Richard Tauber, tenor, will give the first of these recitals on November 5. Mr. Tauber, now a British subject, has been unable to arrange transportation to this country because of the war. Other artists who will take part in the series are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; the Platoff Don Cossack Chorus; Lotte Lehmann, soprano; Jose Iturbi, pianist, and Lawrence Tibbett, baritone. . . .

"The Little Red House" at Tanglewood, scene of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," will be rebuilt by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which owns the Tanglewood estate. The original "Little Red House" was destroyed by fire in 1890. Hawthorne rented the house from William A. Tappan, then owner of Tanglewood, in the spring of 1850. . . .

The New York Federation of Music Clubs has extended the deadline of its young composers' contest from October 15 to January 15, 1942. Prizes will be awarded for the two best songs (music and lyrics) and for the two best lyrics submitted. . . . Gyorgy Sandor, Hungarian pianist, leaves today to begin his fall tour with a recital in Winnepeg. . . . Did you know that Igor Schwetzoff, choreographer for the New Opera Company (and creator of several major works in the repertories of various ballet companies) is also a prize-winning author? His autobiography, published in this country by Harper's under the title "Russian Somersault" captured a $5,000 literary award in England.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 11 1941

74

Where Nathaniel Hawthorne Lived

This picture of Hawthorne's home, taken before 1890, shows the old house which stood at Tanglewood.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is to donate the replica of the little red house, are shown at the site, marked by a bronze plaque.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's Cottage To Be Rebuilt

Replica To Be Gift to Boston Symphony Orchestra From National Federation of Music Clubs

The little red house at Tanglewood where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived briefly but wrought some of his outstanding works, is to be rebuilt on or near the original foundations through the interest of Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. The cottage burned June 22, 1890 but the foundations remain. Near the site on Hawthorne Street, is a boulder and a bronze plaque bearing the inscription:

Near this spot stood Tanglewood, the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived from the spring of 1850 to the autumn of 1851. Here he wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book." Here his daughter Rose was born. The house was destroyed by fire in June 1890.

Exact Replica

The building will be a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will have the exact proportions of the original cottage. It will be adapted for use by the Berkshire Music Center, established by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in the summer of 1940. It will be a shrine to which Berkshire Symphonic Festival patrons will be welcome. Arrangements for the gift were discussed recently when Mrs. Gannett was the guest of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at his home in Lenox.

Enthusiastic over the interest shown by the National Federation of Music Clubs, Dr. Koussevitzky declared today that the gift, significant of itself, is one more tangible expression for Tanglewood as the home of the Festival and the music center. "The two are one," he said, "and the gift is for both great institutions, destined to become more and more entwined and more important in the artistic life of the nation as years go by. Tanglewood has become more than a local institution, although the importance of local support cannot be minimized. It has become a national shrine of world renown where free peoples may live and work in music and where people may come and listen."

Literary Shrine

Although Hawthorne was a solitary man, the little red house which he had rented from William Aspinwall Tappan, owner of Tanglewood, became eventually a meeting place of the literati living in the Berkshires. Among his friends were Herman Melville who drove over from his home, Arrowhead, in Pittsfield; Oliver Wendell Holmes, Catherine Sedgwick, then near the end of her literary labors and a resident of Lenox and Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler, brilliant actress, also a resident of Lenox.

Politics led indirectly to Hawthorne's coming to the Berkshires. In 1845 he had been named surveyor of the Salem customhouse. But in 1849 Gen. Zachary Taylor was elected president and off went Hawthorne's head. To his brother-in-law, Horace Mann, he wrote on Aug. 8, 1849:

"My surveyorship is lost and I have no expectation, nor any desire of regaining it—I mean as soon as possible—that is to say, as soon as I can find a cheap, pleasant and healthy residence—to remove into the country and bid farewell to this abominable city."

Before coming to the Berkshires in the summer of 1850, Hawthorne had written "The Scarlet Letter," living in the meanwhile on the meager savings set aside by his devoted wife, Sophie Peabody Hawthorne. He found Lenox bustling with lawyers, because the town was then the county seat. Hawthorne was 46 years old, 25 years out of Bowdoin College. Despite the success of his first romance, he was worried over the haphazard means at his command to support his family. He was also mourning the recent death of his mother.

Felt Remote Here

Hawthorne was not immediately impressed by the beauties of the countryside nor by the opportunities of comradeship. A year after his arrival, he wrote to Longfellow:

"Here I feel remote and quite beyond companionship."

And he was so shy, he once leaped over a stone wall in Lenox to avoid meeting some of the villagers.

No doubt Dr. Holmes tried to cheer up his friend when he drove over from Pittsfield and Hawthorne held his horse in front of the little red house. Said Holmes:

"Is there another man in all America who has ever had so great an honor as to have the author of 'The Scarlet Letter' hold his horse?"

His Description

Hawthorne wrote an exquisite description of the cottage and its surroundings indicating that his earlier impressions had changed. This description follows in part:

"The house stands on a gently sloping eminence, a short distance away, in the lap of the valley is a beautiful lake (Stockbridge Bowl) reflecting a perfect image of its own wooded banks and of the summits of the more distant hills as it gleamed in glass tranquility without the trace of a winged breeze on any part of its bosom. There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods.

"And beyond Monument, the Dome (Mount Everett) of Taconic whose round head is more distinct than ever in winter when snow patches are visible, but which generally is a dark blue unvaried mountain top. There are many nearer hills which border the valley, and this intervening hill country is rugged. The sunsets of the winter are incomparably splendid and when the ground is covered with snow, no brilliancy of tint expressible by words can come within an infinite distance of the effect . . . And yet the face of nature can never look more beautiful than in May when Monument and its brethren are green; and the lightness of the tint takes away something from their massiveness and ponderosity and they respond with livelier effect to the shine and shade of the sky. Each tree then stands out in its own individuality of hue."

Wrote at House

In the little red house, Hawthorne wrote his second great romance, "The House of Seven Gables," a grim treatise on the Second Commandment. Then followed "The Snow Image" and "The Wonder Book," in which he calls himself to his children, "the silent man."

The Hawthorne family left the cottage Nov. 21, 1851, in a blinding snowstorm. When they arrived, they were but four, Mr. and Mrs. Hawthorne, their two children, Una and Julian. When they departed, they were five, a third child, Rose, having been born in the little red house.

The rigors of climate caused the family's departure. To a friend the frail Hawthorne wrote:

"I do not feel at home among these hills and should not like to consider myself permanently settled here. I am continually catching cold and am none so vigorous as I used to be on the seacoast. The same is the case with my wife."

This Clipping From
BAY CITY, MICH
TIMES

NOV 22 1941

Music Classes at Tanglewood to Be Enlarged

LENOX, Mass. — (U.P.) — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established 1 ast summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture, is designed for "students" with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totalled 312 students selected from 29 states and Canada.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

NOV 26 1941

Contract Talk Holds Up Symphonic Ticket Sale

Negotiations Expected To Be Completed in Few Days—Counsel Discussing Agreement

Postponement of the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's annual campaign for memberships in the county, the first phase of which usually is completed early in September, has been the result of extended negotiations between officials of the Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra toward a new contract. The original five-year agreement expired this year.

The arrangement between the two organizations is somewhat complex because the Tanglewood property is owned by the Boston Symphony while the Shed is owned by the Festival which uses the land under lease.

Counsel for both boards of trustees have been working for several months on a contract which will be mutually acceptable and it is hoped to reach a final agreement within a few days.

Considerable public interest has been aroused in the situation, in Berkshire because of the absence of the usual autumn campaign for memberships and in New York because many applicants for tickets at the Festival office there have been informed that no applications could as yet be taken.

NOV 27 1941
N. ADAMS, MASS.
Transcript

SUMMER CONCERT CONTRACT AWAITED

Festival Subscription Drive Held Up

DUE IN FEW DAYS

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation and Boston Symphony Lawyers in Huddle.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival corporation and the Boston Symphony orchestra have not yet reached an agreement on a new contract for the summer concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, it was disclosed today.

The five-year contract under which the Boston orchestra directed by Serge Koussevizky has played a Tanglewood each season since 1937, expired this year and while attorneys for both the Festival corporation and the orchestra have been working for several months on a new agreement which would be mutually acceptable, no contract has yet been executed. Festival corporation officers revealed yesterday, however, that they hope the negotiations may be brought to a satisfactory conclusion within a few days.

Reports current during the 1941 Festival season at Tanglewood were that Dr. Koussevitzky would seek increased compensation under the new contract. No official declaration has been made on this point, however.

An effect of the failure of the two organizations to agree to terms has been the postponement of the annual Festival subscription campaign which usually opens in November. The acceptance of subscriptions for the 1942 series of concerts will not be started until the new contract has been signed.

The arrangement between the Festival and the orchestra is made somewhat complex by the fact that the orchestra owns the Tanglewood property, while the music shed on the property is owned by the Festival which uses the land under lease. Berkshire Music Center buildings also erected on the estate are owned by the orchestra. These circumstances have led to the general assumption that the two organizations would work out some mutually agreeable terms and that there would be no dissolution of the present partnership.

STAMFORD, CONN
ADVOCATE
12/5/41

Scholarships Offered For Musical Skill

New Haven, Dec. 5.—A nation-wide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Centre awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search was announced by Miss Ruth M. Ferry of this city, national chairman of young artists auditions for the Federation.

Miss Ferry, who will also supervise the Biennial Young Artists Auditions, climaxing at the Biennial Convention in Detroit in the Spring of 1943 with the presentation of $1,000 awards to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist, said that the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to further encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage in the field.

The same State and district mechanism which is employed in the now famous Biennial Young Artists Auditions will be used for the string contest, with State contests held between Feb. 1 and 15, district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6, and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13, and Monday, March 23, respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with State contest chairmen by January 25, 1942.

Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to August 16, 1942. If necessary additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
DEC 2-1941

PRIZES ANNOUNCED FOR TANGLEWOOD

National Federation of Music Clubs Offers Three $100 Scholarships — Contests to Choose Winners.

Three $100 scholarships covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood during the 1942 summer season are offered by the National Federation of Music clubs in a nationwide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments, according to an announcement by Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Ct., national chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the federation.

The winners will be selected by means of state contests to be held between Feb. 1 and 15, district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6 and national finals in New York and Chicago on March 13 and 23 respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with the state contest chairman by Jan. 25, 1942. Mrs. Ethel M. Wright of 18 Jackson street, Littleton, is the Massachusetts chairman.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and chamber music instruction under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 4- 1941

Auditions Scheduled For Young Musicians

During the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Rochester next Monday auditions will be held for those who wish to join the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center next summer. It will be the third term of the school, inaugurated by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 16.

The auditions will be supervised by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, and other members of the faculty. Auditions will be given at the Eastman School of Music at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m.

This Clipping From
TOWANDA, PA.
REVIEW
DEC 3-1941

SCHOLARSHIPS TO BE AWARDED

Nation-Wide Talent Hunt in Young Artists Auditions.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 2 — A nationwide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search was announced today by Miss Ruth M. Ferry of this city, National Chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the Federation.

Miss Ferry, who will also supervise the Biennial Young Artists Auditions, climaxing at the Biennial convention in Detroit in the Spring of 1943 with the presentation of $1,000 awards to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist, said that the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to further encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage in the field.

The same state and district mechanism which is employed in the now famous Biennial Young Artists Auditions will be used for the string contest, with state contests held between February 1 and 15, district contests between February 20 and March 6, and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13, and Monday, March 23 respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with State Contest Chairmen by January 25, 1942.

Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to August 16, 1942. If necessary additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and other conductors and participate in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under the direction of Mr. Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 8- 1941

AUDITIONS TO BE HELD.

During the pending visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Columbus, Ohio, Friday, auditions will be held for those who wish to apply for the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center next summer. This will be the third term of the school inaugurated by the orchestra, of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director, and which will be held at Tanglewood from July 5 to August 16 next. The auditions will be supervised by Richard Burgin, the concert master, and other members of the faculty, which consists of symphony players. They will take place in Memorial Hall at 2:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
DEC 3-1941

Tanglewood Prizes Are Announced

Music Club Offers Three Scholarships In Strings

Three $100 scholarships covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood during the 1942 summer season are offered by the National Federation of Music clubs in a nation-wide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments, according to an announcement by Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Conn., national chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the federation.

The winners will be selected by means of state contests to be held between Feb. 1 and 15, district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6 and national finals in New York and Chicago on March 13 and 23 respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with the state contest chairman by Jan. 25, 1942. Mrs. Ethel M. Wright of 18 Jackson Street, Littleton, is the Massachusetts chairman.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
DEC 4- 1941

Scholarships Offered Young Musicians

TO assist in the hunt for young, talented performers of stringed instruments, the National Federation of Music Clubs is sponsoring a nationwide competition for the award of three scholarships at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Mrs. James Brayshaw of 800 North Harrison Street, Wilmington, was announced as the chairman of the auditions for contestants from Delaware. Complete details concerning the competition may be obtained from her.

Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Conn., national chairman of young artists auditions for the federation, in announcing the competition for the Berkshire scholarships, said the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a shortage in this field.

The contest is similar to the biennial young artists auditions. Applications must be filed with the state contest chairman by Jan. 25. The state contests will be held between Feb. 1 and 15, the district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6, and the national finals in New York on March 13 and in Chicago on March 23.

Each of the three contest winners will be given a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 16. They will rehearse with the advanced orchestra of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, participate in one symphony concert each week, receive coaching from faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and chamber music instruction under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
DEC 7- 1941

Chance To Win Scholarships

A NATIONWIDE talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments, with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search, was announced this week by Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Conn., national chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the Federation of Music clubs. Mrs. R. A. Herbruck of Dayton is Ohio contest chairman for the Young Artists Auditions.

Miss Ferry, who will also supervise the biennial Young Artists Auditions, climaxing at the biennial convention in Detroit in the spring of 1943 with the presentation of $1000 awards to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist, said that the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to further encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage in the field.

The same state and district mechanism which is employed in the now famous biennial Young Artists Auditions will be used for the string contest, with state contests held between Feb. 1 and 15, district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6, and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13, and Monday, March 23, respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with state contest chairmen by Jan. 25, 1942. In this area candidates should contact Mrs. Herbruck.

Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 16, 1942. If necessary additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native-born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and chamber music instruction under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
DEC 7 - 1941

MUSIC WORLD . .

By Isabelle Workman Evans

A nationwide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search was announced by Ruth M. Ferry of this city, National Chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the Federation of Music Clubs. Miss Ferry, who will also supervise the Biennial Young Artists Auditions, climaxing at the Biennial Convention in Detroit in the spring of 1943 with the presentation of $1,000 awards to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist, said that the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to further encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage in the field.

The same state and district mechanism which is employed in the now famous Biennial Young Artists Auditions will be used for the string contest, with state contests held between February 1st and 15th, district contests between February 20th and March 6th, and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13th, and Monday, March 23 respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with state contest chairman by January 25, 1942. Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, from July 5th to August 16, 1942. If necessary additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of seventeen and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewod under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under direction of Mr. Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Chamber Music Concert

When the Trio of New York gives the second concert in the Buffalo Chamber Music Society series tomorrow evening in Kleinhans Music Hall, it will be the first time in a number of years that a piano trio has been presented by the society. The members of the trio, Danil Karpilowsky, violinist, Felix Salmond, cellist, and Carl Friedberg, pianist, "are not only excellent musicians in their own rights," writes the New York Times, but "they have become happily matched in the subtle elements —temperamental, esthetic, technical—that are the sine qua non of chamber music worthy of the name —they form, in effect, a single instrument of musical interpretation." The following program is selected from among the most interesting in trio literature:

Trio in B flat, Opus 99 ..... Schubert
Variations on a Song: Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu ..... Beethoven
Trio in B flat K 502 ..... Mozart
Trio in C major, Opus 87 ..... Brahms

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
DEC 8 - 1941

Moment Musicale

By Maud L. Welin

THE annual musical of the Afternoon and Evening Alliances of All Souls' Unitarian Church was held Friday night, with Dr. Elmer A. Tidmarsh, organist and E. Fred Morris, baritone, appearing before a near-capacity audience. Dr. Tidmarsh offered the music of Bach, Boccherini, Widor, Debussy, Liszt, Schumann and Wagner. Mr. Morris' program included a group of Schubert, Handel, Thiman and Bach-Gounod. Mrs. O. A. Tilton accompanied the vocalist.

A social hour in the church parlors followed, with Mrs. J. H. Ansteensen and Mrs. Milton Strehle in charge of refreshments. Assisting were Mrs. James Wheeler, Mrs. B. H. Thelin, Mrs. Gerald Nye Perkins, Mrs. Avery Cooley, Mrs. Louis Navias, Mrs. H. A. Winne, Mrs. G. A. Wallenstrom, Mrs. Heinz Zielinski, Mrs. Fred Sarchet, Mrs. Sture Malmberg, Mrs. Maynard Agens, Mrs. W. T. Allen, Mrs. Eugene Rochow, Mrs. H. K. Hoyt, Mrs. E. R. Toynton, Mrs. W. H. Mahoney, Mrs. C. V. Christensen and Mrs. John Horn.

A NATIONWIDE talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments, with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood in the Berkshires, awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search has been announced by the National Federation of Music Clubs. State contests will be held between February 1 and 15; district contests between February 20 and March 6 and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13 and Monday, March 23, respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with State Contest Chairmen by January 25, 1942. Mrs. E. H. Cahill, 118 West 57th Street, New York City, is chairman for New York State entries.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate n one symphony concert each week. They will also receive selective coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony. Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Center from July 5 to August 16, 1942. If necessary additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

Boston Symphony Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give the fifth concert in the Zadah B. Berry Series next Tuesday evening in Kleinhans Music Hall. Mrs. Berry asks her patrons to be in their seats not later than 8.30 as the Beethoven Symphony, which opens the program takes three-quarters of an hour to play, and no one will be seated during its performance. The program will be:

Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major Eroica ..... Beethoven
Allegro con brio
Marcia funebre: Adagio Assai
Scherzo: Allegro vivace: trio
Finale: Allegro
Essay for Orchestra ..... Barber
Pictures at an Exhibition ..... Moussorgsky (Arr. for orchestra by Maurice Ravel)
Promenade — Gnomus — Il Vecchio Castello
Tuileries—Bydlo—Ballet of Chicks in their shells
Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle—Limoges—The marketplace
Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua)
The Hut on Fowls' Legs—The great Gate at Kiev.

Standing room for this concert

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1941

Mostly About People

PAULY

Berkshire Music Center Audition To Be Held Here This Week

By KARL B. PAULY

IN connection with the visit to Columbus of the Boston Symphony orchestra, auditions will be held at Memorial Hall on Friday afternoon for young people who wish to apply for the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center next summer.

Having spent one glorious day at the music center near Lenox, Mass., last summer where we observed this great educational and cultural project in operation, this columnist looks upon this opportunity afforded student musicians as one of the finest things available to young America.

Next summer's session will be the third term of the school inaugurated by the Boston Symphony, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is the director. It will be held at Tanglewood, the beautiful wooded countryside on the shores of a picture lake, nestled in the blue-green Berkshires, where there are all the facilities for intensive study, natural surroundings, under the guidance of great teachers.

The Columbus auditions on Friday will be supervised by Richard Burgin, concert master, and other members of the faculty, which consists of Boston Symphony players. Next summer's school will be held at Tanglewood from July 5 to Aug. 16.

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
DEC 13 1941

Morning Gossip

BEFORE SNOW

Here a portent broods not dread, nor fear, only the gray
turn of the year.
Through the gaunt trees
patrolling the west
uncetrain clouds bar
a vast unrest.
The air broods soft
as a great cat's paw
but the fur bodes cold
and stings like a claw.

Once the snow falls
there will be peace . . .
so the taut heart strains
before release.
—Sister M. Maura, S. S. N. d.

* * *

The Berkshire Music Center will open its third season at Lenox, Mass., on July 5, 1942. Serge Koussevitzky will again be its director and Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, is a new addition to the faculty.

Mr. Stravinsky will instruct a class in conducting at the Summer school. Other newcomers to the faculty will be Ifor Jones, director of the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, who will join Hugh Ross in training the chorus, and Dr. R. Mills Silby, music director of St. Ignatius Loyola, New York, who will also assist Mr. Ross.

The center will be open for six weeks and will follow the same general lines of the first two seasons, with small departments for conducting, orchestral and chamber music playing, composition and opera for those interested in professional careers and a large department of music and culture for music students, teachers and amateurs. Members of the large department will again form the festival chorus, which will sing Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth symphony with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Special lecturers engaged for the center next season are Archibald T. Davison, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard University; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Lucien Price, editorial writer of The Boston Globe, and Deems Taylor, composer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 10 1941

MUSIC GROUP SETS BERKSHIRE OPENING

Center to Begin Third Season at Lenox, Mass., on July 5— Koussevitzky Directs Again

STRAVINSKY ON FACULTY

Composer Will Hold a Class in Conducting—Ifor Jones Also Joins School

The Berkshire Music Center will open its third season at Lenox, Mass., on July 5, 1942, the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced yesterday. Serge Koussevitzky will again be its director and Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, is a new addition to the faculty.

Mr. Stravinsky will instruct a class in conducting at the Summer school. Other newcomers to the faculty will be Ifor Jones, director of the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, who will join Hugh Ross in training the chorus, and Dr. R. Mills Silby, music director of St. Ignatius Loyola, this city, who will also assist Mr. Ross.

The center will be open for six weeks and will follow the same general lines of the first two seasons, with small departments for conducting, orchestral and chamber music playing, composition and opera for those interested in professional careers and a large department of music and culture for music students, teachers and amateurs. Members of the large department will again form the festival chorus, which will sing Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth symphony with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Special lecturers engaged for the center next season are Archibald T. Davison, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard University; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Lucien Price, editorial writer of The Boston Globe, and Deems Taylor, composer.

This Clipping From
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL
DEC 21 1941

Stringed Instrument Contest Announced

The National Federation of Music Clubs has announced a contest in stringed instruments, with scholarships at the Berkshire Music center in the summer of 1942 for the three national winners. This scholarship covers all activities of those in the orchestra and chamber music work, including all lectures, attendance at certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and ti[redacted] the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

String players between the ages of 17 and 30 who are planning to follow a musical career and who need financial assistance may compete. The state contest will be held between Feb. 1 and Feb. 15. The winners of the state contests will proceed to the district contests to be held between Feb. 20 and March 6. The final auditions will be held in Chicago on Monday, March 23, for winners of the district contests. Further information may be secured from the state contest chairman, Margaret E. Scruggs, Milwaukee-Downer college. Applications to enter must be filed with her not later than Jan. 25, 1942.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 15 1941

Hawthorne Shrine Given to Orchestra

"The Little Red House" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works will be rebuilt by the National Federation of Music Clubs as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a permanentn memorial to the distinguished novelist.

The announcement was made by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, president of the N.F.M.C. The original structure was destroyed by fire June 22, 1890.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his immediate delight at the project, saying that in his opinion it will lend further distinction to Tanglewood, already famed both as the Berkshire Music Center and as the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, two institutions destined to become more and more important in the musical life of the nation in the years to come.

This Clipping From
LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL

Music Notes

Central high school music department will present "Music for Everybody" at West Junior high school auditorium Wednesday evening at 8:15 o'clock. The choir will present the first half of the program and the band will provide the more popular aspects following. Christmas songs will include the French carol, "Angels We Have Heard on High," the Serbian Crib carol, "Husking Carol," "All My Heart This Night Rejoices", among others. Russell W. Switzer and his assistant, Vernon Ebersoll, will be in charge.

* * *

The weekly Monday afternoon broadcast over WKAR at 2 o'clock sponsored by the Michigan Federation of Music Clubs will consist of a recital by Mrs. Donald Hoffman, pianist, and Mrs. Robert Burnham, soprano, both of Matinee Musicale. Mrs. Christian Herrmann, president of the Federation is in charge of all these programs.

* * *

Beatrice Brody Larsen is singing the contralto solos in "The Messiah" this afternoon at 3:30 with the Benton Harbor community chorus of 300 in the armory of that city.

* * *

Soloists for the presentation of "Christmas "Oratorio" by Saint-Saens to be given Sunday evening, December 21, in the First Baptist church will be Miss Edna Burdell McFadden, soprano; Mrs. Ben M. Barendse, Grand Rapids, contralto; Mrs. Harold S. Cole, mezzo-soprano; Carl Hoover, tenor, and Culmer Peterson, Grand Rapids, baritone. Mrs. Elizabeth B. Van Campen will direct with Henry I. Chambers, organist.

* * *

Carroll Glenn, 22-year-old violinist, winner of the 1941 Young Artists award in the Los Angeles contests will appear on the Philharmonic hour this afternoon playing a Sibelius concerto with Arthur Rodinzki conducting. Contests for stringed instruments are announced by those in charge of the Young Artist contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs with awards of $100 for the three best players to be applied on scholarships at Berkshire Music Centre, Tanglewood, Mass. Applications are to be filed with state representatives not later than January 25. Mrs. Christian Herrmann may be contacted for this state. Rich experiences in playing under Koussevitizky, coaching under Piatigorsky and individual instruction from members of the Boston symphony accompany this award.

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE
DEC 1[illegible]

SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
DEC 21 1941

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
DEC 28 1941

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
DEC 21 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 14 1941

Stravinsky Joins Berkshire Center For 1942 Season

Boston, Mass., Dec. 13.

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, the summer school at Lenox, Mass., directed by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces its third season at Tanglewood, from July 5 to Aug. 16.

Igor Stravinsky, the Russian composer, has joined the faculty and will take a class in composition, as will also Aaron Copland, who has been active in the school since it was founded. Ifor Jones, director of the Bach choir of Bethlehem, Pa., will join Hugh Ross in the training of the chorus, which will prepare Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Dr. R. Mills Silby, music director of St. Ignatius Loyola of New York, will assist in the large chorus and direct choral groups.

Special lectures will include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Deems Taylor, composer and lecturer; Lucien Price, editorial writer of The Boston Globe, and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty.

The center has five departments, orchestral and choral conducting, advanced orchestra and chamber music, composition, opera and music and culture.

The orchestral conducting classes will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple. The choral conducting classes will be in charge of Hugh Ross and Ifor Jones. The advanced orchestra will be under Richard Burgin, Stanley Chappel and other conductors Gregor Piatigorsky will again be in charge of the chamber music.

The opera department again will be directed by Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. The faculty includes 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
DEC 16 1941

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 12 1941

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
DEC 13 1941

LANCASTER, PA.
SUNDAY NEWS
DEC 21 1941

GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE
DEC 23 1941

BELOIT, WIS.
NEWS
DEC 22 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
DEC 24 1941

Federation To Sponsor Music Contest

A nationwide talent hunt for performers on stringed instruments with a trio of scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center awaiting the three ablest musicians discovered in the search, was announced recently by Miss Ruth M. Ferry, of New Haven, Conn., national chairman of young artists auditions for the federation.

Miss Ferry, who will also supervise the biennial young artists auditions, climaxing at the biennial convention in Detroit in the spring of 1943 with the presentation of $1,000 awards to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist, said that the underlying purpose of the contest for strings is to further encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage in the field.

The same state and district mechanism which is employed in the now famous biennial young artists auditions will be used for the string contest, with state contests held between February 1 and 15, district contests between February 20 and March 6, and national finals in New York and Chicago Friday, March 13, and Monday, March 23, respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with state contest chairmen by January 25, 1942.

Scholarships

Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship covering study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to August 16, 1942. If necessary, additional money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native born or naturalized Americans between the ages of 17 and 30 who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors and participate in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive sectional coaching from instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and chamber music instruction under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The merits of competitors in state and district contests will be adjudged by musicians of the highest caliber, and members of the Boston Symphony will select the national winners.

Members of the Young Artists Auditions committee, who will supervise the contest, are Miss Ruth M. Ferry, New Haven, chairman; Miss Louise H. Armstrong, Portland, Maine; Mrs. Fred A. Gillette, Houston, Texas; Mrs. Charles H. Pascoe, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Additional information regarding the contest may be obtained from Mrs. R. A. Herbruck, state contest chairman.

AMARILLO, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 19 194[illegible]

SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES
DEC 21 1941

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 21 1941

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 21 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
DEC 17 1941

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 10 1941

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
DEC 20 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
DEC 20 1941

77

The World of Music

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—(UP)—Arturo Toscanini is somewhat awe-inspiring to audiences when he directs an orchestra in the concert hall. His majestic presence, his silvery crown of hair, his expressive hands and, above all, his magnetic personality create an unforgettable atmosphere. In rehearsal, he is even more terrific. What the audience sees and hears is a finished, smooth performance. It is the culmination of many hours of work and strain on the part of the maestro and the men under him. The preparation of a symphonic work, if it is to meet Toscanini's standards, is equivalent in a small way to "blood, sweat and tears."

Toscanini always has had an abhorrence of outsiders at rehearsals. Last week, three or four members of the press were permitted to steal unobtrusively into Carnegie Hall to watch him make a Victor recording of the Brahms First Symphony with the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra.

It was a fascinating experience. For one thing, it was the day Germany and Italy had declared war on the United States and the maestro was emotionally upset. In world gone mad, he demanded perfection in the music.

In a mixture of Italian and not too-perfect English, he explained his wishes to the intent members of the orchestra, illustrating by humming or singing certain passages. It was the slow movement he was working on.

Finally, he led the men in a preliminary rehearsal. It was not good enough. He pointed out certain points for improvement and it was tried again. This time he seemed more satisfied and called for a performance to be recorded. The scurrying of technicians and engineers ceased. The maestro's super-sensitive ears caught the faint sound of footsteps in a corridor outside the auditorium — inaudible to anyone else — and the offender presumably was put in his proper place.

In dead silence, a red signal light appeared by the podium and the orchetsra was "on the wax." At its conclusion, the embryo record, was played back, amplified to concert volume, while conductor and players listened with intent ears to what they had accomplished.

A few times Toscanini writhed impatiently or made dissatisfied gestures. The orchestra, some of them soundlessly bowing or fingering their instruments in pantomime, tried to conform to his musical wants. They realized the first recording would not do.

It did not. The red light went off and after more rehearsing, with particular attention to certain passages, it was tried again. This time the maestro was satisfied and signaled to the control room. There was relief almost comical in the voice which announced, "No playback." Everyone relaxed.

This took approximately an hour and a quarter, and it was only one movement in the four of the symphony.

* * *

THE Berkshire Music Center, summer school at Lenox, Mass., directed by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will hold its third season at Tanglewood from July 5 to Aug. 16 of 1942.

Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, has joined the faculty and will have a class in composition, as will Aaron Copeland, who has been active in the school since it was founded. Ifor Jones, director of the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pa., will join Hugh Ross in the training of the chorus, which will prepare Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Special lecturers will include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Deems Taylor, composer and lecturer; Lucien Price, editorial writer of the Boston Globe, and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty.

The center has four departments for those who expect to have musical careers — orchestral and choral conducting; advanced orchestra and chamber music; composition, and opera. The fifth and largest, the department of music and culture, is intended for those less interested in professional performance. It will give music students, teachers, college students and others an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music.

WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
JOURNAL
DEC 21 1941

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
DEC 21 1941

NILES, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 27 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 10 1941

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
DEC 21 1941

SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES
DEC 21 1941

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER
DEC 21 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
DEC. 21 1941

National String Players' Contest Is Announced

Three Scholarships Offered at Berkshire Music Center

A national contest for performers on stringed instruments, with scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center as prizes for the three winning musicians, has been announced by Ruth Ferry, national chairman of Young Artists Auditions for the Federation of Music Clubs.

State competitions for string players are to be held between Feb. 1 and 15; district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6 and national finals in New York and Chicago on Friday, March 13, and Monday, March 23, respectively. Applications for entry must be filed with State Contest Chairmen by Jan. 25, 1942. The administrative mechanism is the same as that of the Young Artists Auditions.

Each of the three contest winners will be presented with a $100 scholarship, covering the cost of study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 16, 1942. If necessary, money will be made available to pay living expenses.

The contest is open to native-born or naturalized Americans between the ages of seventeen and thirty, who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Serge Koussevitzky and other conductors, and take part in one symphony concert every week. They are also to receive sectional coaching from faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky.

Further information about the contest may be obtained from Mrs. E. H. Cahill, 118 West Fifty-seventh Street.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
DEC 23 1941

Tanglewood Announcement Expected Soon

Music Seen as Needed To Help Bolster Morale

No official announcements have come either from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival nor the Boston Symphony Orchestra about plans for 1942 at Tanglewood, but it has been indicated that some sort of an announcement will be forthcoming at the turn of the year.

It is known that both boards are anxious to go ahead with plans for next year if their efforts will not interfere with America's war effort. The recent meeting of managers of the major symphony orchestras in New York may give some indication of which way the wind is blowing. The managers were of the opinion that the war would have no adverse effect on musical activity.

At the New York meeting it was recalled that the Stadium Concerts in New York were started in 1918 for the benefit of soldiers and sailors and to bolster civilian morale generally.

At the managers' meeting it was agreed that interest in music and consequent attendance at concerts is likely to increase as the result of a desire to leave the horror of war with spiritual diversion.

Reports Optimistic

The conference was informal, for the purpose of exchanging information. All reports were optimistic, despite the temporary slump which came with the first few days of the war. The theatres suffered similarly, it was pointed out, but already have made a strong comeback.

Orchestras represented at the meeting were those of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, New York, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Detroit; Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Rochester, Washington, Indianapolis and Kansas City. Recalling the experience of 1917-18, a spokesman for the managers said:

"During war-time, according to past experience and present indications, music would be more necessary than ever before to sustain civilian morale. The only immediate problem is that of the blackout, problem which up to now has touched only the Pacific coast. This is being solved locally by substituting afternoon concerts, wherever possible, for evening events."

None of the large open air symphonic organizations has considered cancelling next summer's programs. They include the Lewisohn Stadium in New York, Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia, the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, and the concerts in Chicago, St. Louis and Cleveland.

The spokesman for the managers said that conscription so far has not affected seriously orchestra personnel, but that they will not seek exemption for players subject to call.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
DEC 14 1941

THREE $100 PRIZES will be awarded by the National Federation of Music Clubs, covering study at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to the best vocalist, violinist and pianist in the Young Artists Auditions starting Feb. 1. Information may be secured from Miss Belle Loper Slater, 81 Manor street, Hamden.

The contest is for Americans between 17 and 30 years old who desire music careers. Winners will receive coaching from members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will rehearse under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
DEC 21 1941

MUSIC CONTESTS ARE SCHEDULED

State Event First, Then District Competition

A COLORFUL summer of study is in store for three talented musicians of the string instrument group who win the national Federation of Music club's scholarships of $100 each to the Berkshire Music Center, Lennox, Mass.

Mrs. W. H. Wooldridge of Altus is state chairman for the music contest. The musicians will first enter a state contest, and then the district event. The plan is to make recordings of performances of district winners to submit to a national committee which will choose the cholarship winners.

The closing date for the filing of application is January 25, 1942, and all requests for information will be addressed to Mrs. Wooldridge. The first contest is scheduled for around February 15.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music center is located at Tanglewood in the Berkshires—one of America's most significant literary shrines as well as a haven for serious musicians. It was made famous by Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," and recently the National Federation decided to rebuild the little red house at Tanglewood, the former home of the distinguished American novelist, as a memoriam to Hawthorne and as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra, which established the music center.

The original "little Red House" was destroyed by fire in 1890. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony, said that the building of the Hawthorne home, about which Mrs. Hawthorne was known to have said, "We seem to have such a large house inside, although outside the little reddest thing looks like the smallest of 10-feet houses," would add much to the luster of the music center.

* * *

"TANGLEWOOD has become a national shrine of world renown," the conductor said, "where free peoples live and work in music and where music lovers may come to listen. The rebuilding of the Hawthorne house will constitute yet another attraction which will draw men and women who have a love for the best in music, in art and in literature to this haven in the Berkshires which has been a center of so much of the intellectual life of America in the past."

The house will be a summer studio in the Berkshire Center and winners of the music contest will be abie, perhaps, to gain inspiration from the knowledge that such distinguished personages of America's past as James Russell Lowell, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Longfellow, Bryant and Hawthorne himself, have been inspired in the same surroundings.

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
DEC 23 1941

Down the Scale

By RUTH K. NOLAN

Recorded music of church chimes will open and close the carol singing at 7 P. M. tomorrow on Scarsdale's Village Green. Helen Parker Ford has provided a loudspeaker for the broadcast. Mayor Kenneth C. Hogate will welcome the carolers. The Rev. Edward C. Boynton of the Congregational Church will give the invocation and Dr. George W. Smyth the benediction. The Scarsdale High School Band, under the direction of George Hubbard, will play for the singing, sponsored by the Town Club.

Edgemont residents will gather around a lighted tree on the shore of Crane Lake at 7:30. Frank H. Dunsmore, musical director of the Edgemont School, will conduct the singing and Mrs. Charles R. Van Anden will accompany on the organ.

On Sunday evening the residents of Strathmore held a Christmas pageant, which was followed by the singing of carols.

The annual holiday guest night of the studio of Caroline Beeson Fry will be held at 2 Orchard Parkway, at 8:15 next Monday evening.

Lucie Bigelow Rosen, thereminist, who appeared in a benefit concert at Katonah recently, will give a Town Hall recital on Sunday evening, Jan. 18. Frank Chatterton will accompany at the piano.

Westchester music students should start now to prepare for the national contest for performers on string instruments. The Federation of Music Clubs will award scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer to the three winning musicians. State competitions for string players will be held between Feb. 1 and 15; district contests between Feb. 20 and March 6; and national finals in New York and Chicago on March 13. Entry applications must be filed with the State contest chairman by Jan. 25.

Each of the three winners will receive a $100 scholarship covering the cost of study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. from July 5 to Aug. 16. If necessary, money also will be given for living expenses. The contest is open to all native-born or naturalized American citizens between the ages of 17 and 30, who contemplate music as a professional career. Winners will rehearse with the advanced orchestra at Tanglewood under Serge Koussevitsky, and other conductors, and will take part in one symphony concert each week. They will also receive coaching from faculty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music instruction under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky. Information may be obtained from Mrs. E. H. Cahill, 118 West 57th Street, New York.

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
DEC 11 1941

Music Memos

Of HELEN A. F. PENNIMAN

With the preliminary prospectus of the Berkshire Music Centre in hand, we find that Stanley Chapple, of the Peabody faculty, who is to conduct the Institute orchestra in a concert on Saturday evening, will again be an assistant of Serge Koussevitsky, the director. Mr. Chapple will both lecture and conduct, other famous names in the roster being Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Coplan, Hugh Ross, Olin Downs, Deems Taylor AND Igor Stravinsky. The term extends from July 5 to August 16, at Lenox, Mass.

Early among the Christmas concerts comes the carol singing by the Peabody Junior Choir in the court of the Walters gallery, on next Sunday afternoon at four o'clock, and again next Thursday evening, December 18, at 8.30.

At the Little Theatre, the International Operatic Film Festival is being held over for a second week, beginning December 13 — really good news.

On December 17 and 20, at Stieff Hall, Harry Patterson Hopkins, organist of North Baltimore Methodist Church, will give two electric organ recitals of Yuletide music, at 7.30 P. M. At the first recital, Mr. Hopkins will be assisted by the Forest Park School chorus, Genevieve Butler director, and at the second, the Strawbridge Church Glee Club, Jeannette Dowell, director, will sing carols. These recitals will be amplified to the public.

This Clipping From HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT
DEC 12 1941

The following announcement is from the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school, directed by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces its third season at Tanglewood, from July 5 to August 16 of 1942. Igor Stravinsky, the Russian composer, has joined the faculty and will take a class in composition, as will also Aaron Copland, who has been active in the school since it was founded. Ifor Jones, director of the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, will join Hugh Ross in the training of the chorus, which will prepare Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Dr. R. Mills Silby, music director of St. Ignatius Loyola, New York, will assist in the large chorus and direct choral groups.

Special lecturers will include Archibald T. Davison, professor of Choral Music at Harvard University; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Deems Taylor, composer and lecturer; Lucien Price, editorial writer of The Boston Globe; and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty.

Three $100 scholarships covering study at the Berkshire Music Center will be awarded to winners in the Nation-wide contest for performers on stringed instruments to be held by the National Federation of Music Clubs. The competition is open to American citizens between the ages of 17 and 30 contemplating music as a professional career, and is being offered to encourage the study of these instruments, since there is a notable shortage of string players in the field at present.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 13 1941

7

Berkshire Music Festival Extends Plans Despite the Increasing Burdens of War

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

IN THE midst of stern thoughts of war, this week's announcement of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 16, 1942, comes as a refreshing breath from a world far removed from wars and rumors of wars—the world of music and art.

The music center, conceived and directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has become, within its short existence, one of the potent influences in the musical life of this country. The idea of a permanent festival and music center germinated in Dr. Koussevitzky's active brain years ago in Russia, but his plans were knocked awry by the Revolution. The idea remained, and reached its realization in this country in 1940.

The student body is a picked one, only those with the highest records of study and accomplishment being accepted. Last Summer's enrollment of 338 represented 34 states, Hawaii, the District of Columbia and eight foreign countries.

Classes are in two divisions—the more advanced for the "specially gifted post-graduate who wishes to attain the highest standards of style and interpretation in performance," and the less advanced for those less generously gifted, perhaps, but eager to become acquainted "with the literature of music and the broad principles of the art."

The advanced division has four departments: Orchestral and choral conducting; advanced orchestra and chamber music; composition, and opera. The less-advanced division, called the Department of Music and Culture, will have a large chorus and smaller choral groups, its own symphony orchestra and chamber music groups, and classes in solfege and country dancing.

Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, will be on the faculty next Summer, and also Aaron Copland, American composer, active in the school since its founding. Ifor Jones, director of the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pa., will join Hugh Ross in training the chorus, which will prepare Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Dr. R. Mills Silby, music director of St. Ignatius Loyola, New York, also will assist with the chorus work.

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
JAN 3 1942

Words About Music

Music News

By Alice Beck.

How will the war effect music in the United States? Will blackouts and air-raids curtail concerts? Cities of the Pacific coast from Seattle to San Francisco have, since Dec. 7, received vocalists, pianists, violinists and symphony orchestras with sold out houses. It would seem that the west coast plans to enjoy its music and pursue a normal course in its concert curriculum. In New York the Metropolitan opera house, Carnegie hall and Town hall have made special arrangements for handling audiences in the event of an air-raid alarm or even an actual attack. At the annual conference of the managers of the country's major symphony orchestras held recently in New York the census of opinion among them was that the war, instead of dampening American orchestral life, will substantially increase the attendance at concerts for "the serenity of music assures us of the indestructible power of the spirit." Concerning concerts in a country that has felt the ravages of war since 1939, F. Bonavia writes from London: "Beethoven fills the huge Albert Hall every time. The appeal of Brahms and Mozart is hardly less powerful. There are always audiences for composers warranted to give the spiritual stimulus we derive from contact with great art." An interesting sidelight on the part that music may play in the war is the news that musical therapy for military camps and hospitals will be a part of the course in musical therapy to be conducted by Harriet Ayer Seymour, beginning this week, at the National Foundation of Musical Therapy in Steinway hall in New York.

The National Federation of Music clubs with which the Monday Musical club of Council Bluffs is affiliated is rebuilding "The Little Red House" at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, Mass., where Hawthorne wrote some of his greatest works, and will present it to the Boston Symphony orchestra. The Boston symphony presents a series of concerts every summer at Tanglewood.

An ancient musical custom in Switzerland called "star singing" will be celebrated this year as usual despite war alarms. "Star singing" is a custom connected with the feast of the "Three Kings" due on Jan. 6, an outgrowth of the Twelfth night celebrations of Shakespeare's day. In every village singing school children parade with a star bearer carrying beautifully decorated stars which rotate under the clever manipulation of the bearer.

Two recent books on American music worthy of special mention are "Traditional Music of America" by Ira W. Ford, and "Our Contemporary Composers" by John Tasker Howard. The latter volume is a comprehensive study of American composers in the 20th century. One of the composers is the late Mortimer Wilson, a native Iowan, who, during his lifetime achieved an imposing list of published works and left five symphonies in manuscript.

Voice students of Edith Flickinger who presented a Christmas program at her studio Monday evening were Rose Marie and Jeannine Tellander, Henry T. Jensen, Nancy Huber, Charles Johnson, Don Harrison, jr., Franklin Dalton, Carl Hakenson, Charles Binkly, Ed Wearin, Charles E Hall, Jack Meyers, Bill Henry Adams, Betty Rapp, Lucy Beal Stouffer, Betty Moser, Mary Helen Logan, Pat Moore and Elaine Olsen.

Assisting Martin Bush at his organ recital at the Joslyn Memorial Sunday at 4 o'clock will be John son Beam, violinist, accompanied by Ernest Ulmer.

—Buy Defense Bonds and Stamps—

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
JAN 3 - 1942

Scholarships Offered String Instrumentalists

APPLICATION may be made with Mrs. James Brayshaw, 800 North Harrison Street, before Jan. 25 for one of the three scholarships offered by the National Federation of Music Clubs for study at the Berkshire Music Festival next summer.

Any string instrument player in Delaware who is between the ages of 17 and 30 and is a citizen by birth or naturalization is eligible to enter the state contest which will be held between Feb. 1 and 15, as preliminary to the district and national competitions.

In its efforts to encourage the study of stringed instruments, the National Federation of Music Clubs will award three scholarship of $100 each to talented performers of the stringed instruments for study at the Berkshire Music Center located at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass. These will be given to the three persons receiving the highest rating, as the result of a nationwide contest, providing they also meet the requirements of the Center.

The scholarship pays the tuition fee for the 1942 summer session at the Center and covers all activities of those in orchestra and chamber music work, including all lectures, attendance at certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and tickets for the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

If necessary, an additional $100 will be available to each scholarship winner to defray living expenses.

Only those who intend to follow music as a career may compete, and contestants must be native citizens of the United States or must have secured their final naturalization papers before entering the contest. They must have reached their 17th birthday but not their 30th birthday by March 1.

No entrance fee is required for the state contest and winners in each contest must proceed to the next contest. District contests shall be held in all districts in which state winners have been declared, during the period from Feb. 20 to March 6. Final auditions will be held in New York on Friday, March 13, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra serving as judges.

Contestants will be required to play two compositions of his own choice, with accompaniment, but not necessarily from memory, to demonstrate his artistic ability, as well as scales, arpeggios, and sight-reading.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
JAN

Intermission---

By Elaine Huber

another historically important site in the saga of American music is to be restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs. The "little red house at Tanglewood," former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, is to be completely rebuilt as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music center. The house was destroyed by fire in 1890. Its replica will be an exact reproduction of the home where one of America's greatest novelists played host to many of the leading literary figures of his day.

' ' '

vitally interested in the project, Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, has volunteered his services in connection with the reconstruction. His firm specializes in colonial architecture and was in charge of one of the most famous of all colonial restoration projects, at Williamsburg, Va. The Tanglewood property was owned originally by his wife's family and was presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1936.

' ' '

results of guidance
through Karamu house of Cleveland, unique free Negro cultural center, are now on display in the galleries of Associated American Artists in New York, where paintings, sculpture and ceramics created by Negro students of the center are included. Art is one of the four main channels along which the center directs the creative ability of its people, the others being theater, dance and music. Karamu's program, based upon recognition of the American Negro as a great potential contributor to the growing American culture compounded from the heritage of its many peoples, was founded in 1915 by Rowena and Russell Jelliffe, who continue to direct the organization. It is supported entirely by contributions of educational foundations and private philanthropists, and annually serves more than 2,200, ranging in age from five to 60 years. Outstanding personalities of the country are on the sponsoring board for the exhibition, headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

' ' '

having made his debut
at the Metropolitan as a result of winning in last year's Auditions of the Air, Lansing Hatfield will have a word of encouragement for the three young singers who will compete on the NBC program today at 5 p. m. Frances Greer, soprano of Piggott, Ark.; Joseph Victor Laderoute, tenor of Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, and Edward Gertz, baritone of Buffalo, N. Y., will be heard.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JAN 7 - 1942

WPA Musicians Schedule Tchaikovsky Experiment

P. I. Tchaikovsky, who has been ribbed, robbed, ridiculed and revered as much as any composer one could mention, will be the subject of an unusual experiment by the WPA Music Project on Sunday night.

At a concert in Gilbert Stuart Junior high school, his B-flat minor piano concerto will be played straight by the WPA Symphony Orchestra and then will be swung by the WPA Swing Unit, in the improved version known as "Concerto for Two," by Jack Lawrence.

Alexandre Peloquin, of Woonsocket, will be soloist with the orchestra, which will be conducted by Edward Caffier. Louis Altieri directs the swing unit.

Mr. Peloquin has played almost 25 times with the orchestra in Rhode Island cities and towns. Twice he has been winner of scholarships offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Centre. At the Centre's regular concert he was soloist in "Rio Grande," and repeated at the British relief concert in August, before an audience of 8000. In the past decade, no pupil of Jesus Maria Sanroma, Boston Symphony pianist, has had so high a rating as Mr. Peloquin.

"If the swinging of classics will make the man in the street realize that so-called high-brow music has melodies not only to be admired, but liked to the point of being whistled or hummed," Mr. Peloquin says, "then let the jazz bands reorchestrate Bach, Debussy, and Tchaikovsky with added rhythm and saxophone; soon the concert artist may find a larger and more encouraging audience awaiting his interpretation of those old masters who had more 'life' than he expected."

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
JAN 11 1942

80

Music News and Views

By C. B. MACKLIN

CATHERINE MAE DAVIS IS THE third of the young artists chosen by the Oklahoma Symphony society for appearance with the WPA orchestra directed by Victor Alessandro. She will play the Mozart concerto No. 4. in D major, at the Oklahoma club, Tuesday, January 13.

This young violinist apparently bristles with accomplishments. She is at present a student at the University of Oklahoma, planning to go to the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., after completing her work at O. U. She has played a large number of the classic concertos as well as the Lalo "Espagnol," Saint Saens and Vieutemps. She also has done a good deal of radio work, and has given some six recitals.

Three Divertissements of Ibert, Deems Taylor's Jabberwocky, and the Beethoven "Prometheus" will complete the program.

NEXT ON THE LIST WILL BE THE CONcert of the Symphony Society's WPA orchestra Sunday, January 18, at 3:15 p. m. in Municipal auditorium.

The important matter in connection with this concert is the playing of the Beethoven Fifth symphony in C minor, the opening motif of which has become in some incomprehensible way the symbol of allied victory. There is no doubt that the choice of this number will prove a source of tremendous enthusiasm on the part of the audience, because it is the piece of the hour at present.

Another feature, if only for the oddity of the name, will be three dances from the ballet. La Guiablesse, and we confess we don't know what one of those is. Composer is William Grant Still.

Of great interest is the appearance of the women's chorus of Oklahoma University on this program under the direction of Lara Hoggard, who has maintained the high choral standard of the university and possibly raised it.

DUBERT DENNIS ANNOUNCES THE APpearance of John Houston, organist, of Dallas, under the auspices of the Oklahoma City chapter of the American Guild of Organists. The date is tentatively set for March 3. Details later.

OKLAHOMA SYMPHONIC CHOIR, UNDER Carlton Martin's direction, is scheduled for a concert at Weatherford, February 23, and also for an appearance quite soon in Seminole. The choir presented a good will program Thursday evening at Douglass highschool, featuring the Beethoven Ninth symphony (choral section) and groups of a cappella numbers.

RECENT REFERENCE TO SOME OF THE stuff which was foisted upon military camps during the last war under the guise of entertainment, reminds us that when we were recovering from the flu in convalescent hospital, we were treated, along with other convalescents, to a most monumental bore one Sunday afternoon.

There was, of course, no escape. He did a little of everything: preached a bit, joshed a bit, sang a bit—all way below par, and nothing at all to what we could have produced among the convalescents themselves, had they not preferred to lie quietly and get strong.

During a dramatic, though welcome pause in this chap's activities, a Swede in the bed next to ours leaned across and asked, in a stage whisper which could have been heard clear across the barracks:

"Mien Gott! Iss diss gombulsory?"

"Yes, it is compulsory, you idiot," we hissed back at him, "and close your divinely condemned mouth, will you?"

JOHN MOORE, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF piano at A. and M. college, Stillwater, made his New York debut at Town Hall last Friday afternoon, playing a Bach group to begin with and following with the Handel-Brahms variations and Fugue. He also played the Liszt B minor sonata, closing with a group by contemporary writers.

Moore has been on the music faculty at A. and M. since 1929. He is a student of Rudolph Ganz and Carl Preyer, and won a summer scholarship at the Mozarteum in Salzburg in 1935.

OKLAHOMA STUDENTS OF STRING INstruments may apply to Margaret Grant, executive secretary, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., if they are interested in entering the string players' scholarship contest, which will give the three national winners $100 in cash and the privilege of a summer's work in the center.

The chief value of the scholarship, however, is in the association with the advanced orchestra under direction of Koussevitzky, and much separate sectional work with other experts. The actual cash is less than any winner probably would pay out in the course of winning state, district and national contests, tires being what they are and railroad fares coming high. If to this is added the expense of food en route and probably some extra special knock-'em-dead clothes, it will be seen that $100 is not as big as it looks.

John Moore, assistant professor of piano at A. and M. college, Stillwater.

WITH THE COMING RESTRICTIONS UPON transportation it looks as though we may be forced back upon the simple life once more. Weekend trips and even the more or less regular evening jaunt of more miles than we used to cover in a week may be—probably will be—a thing of the past.

What to do, what to do?

We tried one the other night which we enjoyed so much that we pass it on for what it is worth. We met with friends and played music just for the fun of it. The evening went in no time, though all we did was haul out some almost forgotten music for four violins and piano and wade through it. All were pretty fair readers, but when the notes got too blue we would back up to a given point and start again. Great fun if you like it—the best fun in the world, in fact, if you like it.

And the next evening we and some other friends met and played no music at all, but instead a wild game called "Animal Grab," which is a sort of glorified Idiot's Delight. Noisy, rather, and a trifle exhausting for the old folk, but an excellent evening, on the whole.

The thought obtrudes that, because of this terrible thing which has come upon us, we may be seeing a good deal more of each other than we used to do, and that is all to the good. Much more of our entertainment will be gotten out of each other than formerly, and in our opinion, this is the best entertainment.

DO NOT FORGET LOUISE MEISZNER'S concert sponsored by the Ladies' Music club, Friday, January 23. This young American pianist comes with the very best of press notices by discriminating critics.

WHAT A SPLENDID JOB THAT O. C. U. a cappella choir did on their NBC broadcast last week.

We thought they sounded even better than at their concert here, the very high point being the Russian "Hymn Without Words." Here the choir attained a point of ethereal beauty hardly to be surpassed, not only in general effect but in technical detail. The balancing of the parts, the emphasizing of important "inside" notes, the blend of the humming voices—everything contributed to as finished a piece of work as we have ever heard on radio.

In vigorous and merry contrast was Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds," in which words were perfectly clear, even when the voices crossed with different words.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
JAN 9 - 1942

Architect Volunteers To Aid Tanglewood Project

Hawthorne Home To Be Rebuilt Under Music Federation Auspices

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, announces today that Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of the firm of Perry, Shaw and Hepburn, architects, of Boston, has volunteered his services in connection with the reconstruction of the Little Red House at Tanglewood, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The federation is sponsoring the rebuilding of this historic home, destroyed by fire in 1890, as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass.

Mr. Hepburn's firm specializes in Colonial architecture and was in charge of perhaps the most famous of all the Colonial restoration projects, the rebuilding of Williamsburg, Va., which restored it to the pre-Revolutionary appearance. Under Mr. Hepburn's direction, the Hawthorne house will be rebuilt in exact replica of the home where one of America's greatest novelists played host to many of the leading literary figures of his day.

Mr. Hepburn, a native of Pennsylvania, holds the degree of Bachelor of Science from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has been associated as a member of the firm of Perry, Shaw and Hepburn since 1923. He lives at Concord, Mass., for so long the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. His interest in the Tanglewood enterprise is prompted in considerable measure by the fact that the Tanglewood property on which the foundation of the former Hawthorne home was located, was owned originally by Mrs. Hepburn's family and was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

Continued

The Maine Federation of Music Clubs is especially interested in the enterprise as Hawthorne as graduated from Bowdoin College in the class with Henry W. Longfellow, and for many years made his home at South Casco.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
JAN 9 - 1942

CHATTER: Karl Von Wiegand, the Hearst correspondent who wrote enthusiastic dispatches from Shanghai in which he conceded the destruction of the Soviet armies, hasn't been heard from since his arrival in Manila, before the Jap attack. . . . Max Reinhardt now has a fractured arm. He broke it when he fell off a stage while directing a show. . . . Igor Stravinsky will teach composition at Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center this summer.

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
JAN - 1942

Auditions For Music Scholarships

Auditions for the three scholarships on stringed instruments to be given by the National Federation of Music clubs will be held in February. Applications should be sent in not later than January 15 to Mrs. Lafayette Strasburger, president of the South Carolina federation, 530 Congaree avenue, Columbia, or Mrs. Carl Summer, 1010 Pickens street, Columbia.

Only those who intend to follow music as a career may compete. Three scholarships of a hundred dollars each will be awarded to three, contestants, regardless of which instrument played. This scholarship, pays the tution fee for the 1942 session at the Bershire Music center and covers all activities of those in orchestra and chamber music work, including all lectures, attendants at certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra and tickets for nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphony festival. It does not include private lessons.

Contestants must have reached their seventeenth birthday but must not have reached their thirtieth birthday by March 1, 1942.

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
JAN 11 1942

80

Music News and Views

By C. B. MACKLIN

CATHERINE MAE DAVIS IS THE third of the young artists chosen by the Oklahoma Symphony society for appearance with the WPA orchestra directed by Victor Alessandro. She will play the Mozart concerto No. 4. in D major, at the Oklahoma club, Tuesday, January 13.

This young violinist apparently bristles with accomplishments. She is at present a student at the University of Oklahoma, planning to go to the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., after completing her work at O. U. She has played a large number of the classic concertos as well as the Lalo "Espagnol," Saint Saens and Vieutemps. She also has done a good deal of radio work, and has given some six recitals.

Three Divertissements of Ibert, Deems Taylor's Jabberwocky, and the Beethoven "Prometheus" will complete the program.

NEXT ON THE LIST WILL BE THE CONcert of the Symphony Society's WPA orchestra Sunday. January 18, at 3:15 p. m. in Municipal auditorium.

The important matter in connection with this concert is the playing of the Beethoven Fifth symphony in C minor, the opening motif of which has become in some incomprehensible way the symbol of allied victory. There is no doubt that the choice of this number will prove a source of tremendous enthusiasm on the part of the audience, because it is the piece of the hour at present.

Another feature, if only for the oddity of the name, will be three dances from the ballet, La Guiablesee, and we confess we don't know what one of those is. Composer is William Grant Still.

Of great interest is the appearance of the women's chorus of Oklahoma University on this program under the direction of Lara Hoggard, who has maintained the high choral standard of the university and possibly raised it.

DUBERT DENNIS ANNOUNCES THE APpearance of John Houston, organist, of Dallas, under the auspices of the Oklahoma City chapter of the American Guild of Organists. The date is tentatively set for March 3. Details later.

OKLAHOMA SYMPHONIC CHOIR, UNDER Carlton Martin's direction, is scheduled for a concert at Weatherford, February 23, and also for an appearance quite soon in Seminole. The choir presented a good will program Thursday evening at Douglass highschool, featuring the Beethoven Ninth symphony (choral section) and groups of a cappella numbers.

RECENT REFERENCE TO SOME OF THE stuff which was foisted upon military camps during the last war under the guise of entertainment, reminds us that when we were recovering from the flu in convalescent hospital, we were treated, along with other convalescents, to a most monumental bore one Sunday afternoon.

There was, of course, no escape. He did a little of everything: preached a bit, joshed a bit, sang a bit—all way below par, and nothing at all to what we could have produced among the convalescents themselves, had they not preferred to lie quietly and get strong.

During a dramatic, though welcome pause in this chap's activities, a Swede in the bed next to ours leaned across and asked, in a stage whisper which could have been heard clear across the barracks:

"Mien Gott! Iss diss gombulsory?"

"Yes, it is compulsory, you idiot," we hissed back at him, "and close your divinely condemned mouth, will you?"

JOHN MOORE, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF piano at A. and M. college, Stillwater, made his New York debut at Town Hall last Friday afternoon, playing a Bach group to begin with and following with the Handel-Brahms variations and Fugue. He also played the Liszt B minor sonata, closing with a group by contemporary writers.

Moore has been on the music faculty at A. and M. since 1929. He is a student of Rudolph Ganz and Carl Preyer, and won a summer scholarship at the Mozarteum in Salzburg in 1935.

OKLAHOMA STUDENTS OF STRING INstruments may apply to Margaret Grant, executive secretary, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., if they are interested in entering the string players' scholarship contest, which will give the three national winners $100 in cash and the privilege of a summer's work in the center.

The chief value of the scholarship, however, is in the association with the advanced orchestra under direction of Koussevitzky, and much separate sectional work with other experts. The actual cash is less than any winner probably would pay out in the course of winning state, district and national contests, tires being what they are and railroad fares coming high. If to this is added the expense of food en route and probably some extra special knock-'em-dead clothes, it will be seen that $100 is not as big as it looks.

John Moore, assistant professor of piano at A. and M. college, Stillwater.

WITH THE COMING RESTRICTIONS UPON transportation it looks as though we may be forced back upon the simple life once more. Weekend trips and even the more or less regular evening jaunt of more miles than we used to cover in a week may be—probably will be—a thing of the past.

What to do, what to do?

We tried one the other night which we enjoyed so much that we pass it on for what it is worth. We met with friends and played music just for the fun of it. The evening went in no time, though all we did was haul out some almost forgotten music for four violins and piano and wade through it. All were pretty fair readers, but when the notes got too blue we would back up to a given point and start again. Great fun if you like it—the best fun in the world, in fact, if you like it.

And the next evening we and some other friends met and played no music at all, but instead a wild game called "Animal Grab," which is a sort of glorified Idiot's Delight. Noisy, rather, and a trifle exhausting for the old folk, but an excellent evening, on the whole.

The thought obtrudes that, because of this terrible thing which has come upon us, we may be seeing a good deal more of each other than we used to do, and that is all to the good. Much more of our entertainment will be gotten out of each other than formerly, and in our opinion, this is the best entertainment.

DO NOT FORGET LOUISE MEISZNER'S concert sponsored by the Ladies' Music club, Friday, January 23. This young American pianist comes with the very best of press notices by discriminating critics.

WHAT A SPLENDID JOB THAT O. C. U. a cappella choir did on their NBC broadcast last week.

We thought they sounded even better than at their concert here, the very high point being the Russian "Hymn Without Words." Here the choir attained a point of ethereal beauty hardly to be surpassed, not only in general effect but in technical detail. The balancing of the parts, the emphasizing of important "inside" notes, the blend of the humming voices—everything contributed to as finished a piece of work as we have ever heard on radio.

In vigorous and merry contrast was Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds," in which words were perfectly clear, even when the voices crossed with different words.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
JAN 9 - 1942

Architect Volunteers To Aid Tanglewood Project

Hawthorne Home To Be Rebuilt Under Music Federation Auspices

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, announces today that Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of the firm of Perry, Shaw and Hepburn, architects, of Boston, has volunteered his services in connection with the reconstruction of the Little Red House at Tanglewood, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The federation is sponsoring the rebuilding of this historic home, destroyed by fire in 1890, as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass.

Mr. Hepburn's firm specializes in Colonial architecture and was in charge of perhaps the most famous of all the Colonial restoration projects, the rebuilding of Williamsburg, Va., which restored it to the pre-Revolutionary appearance. Under Mr. Hepburn's direction, the Hawthorne house will be rebuilt in exact replica of the home where one of America's greatest novelists played host to many of the leading literary figures of his day.

Mr. Hepburn, a native of Pennsylvania, holds the degree of Bachelor of Science from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has been associated as a member of the firm of Perry, Shaw and Hepburn since 1923. He lives at Concord, Mass., for so long the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. His interest in the Tanglewood enterprise is prompted in considerable measure by the fact that the Tanglewood property on which the foundation of the former Hawthorne home was located, was owned originally by Mrs. Hepburn's family and was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

The Maine Federation of Music Clubs is especially interested in the enterprise as Hawthorne as graduated from Bowdoin College in the class with Henry W. Longfellow, and for many years made his home at South Casco.

Continued

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
JAN 9 - 1942

CHATTER: Karl Von Wiegand, the Hearst correspondent who wrote enthusiastic dispatches from Shanghai in which he conceded the destruction of the Soviet armies, hasn't been heard from since his arrival in Manila, before the Jap attack. . . . Max Reinhardt now has a fractured arm. He broke it when he fell off a stage while directing a show. . . . Igor Stravinsky will teach composition at Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center this summer.

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
JAN 4 - 1942

Auditions For Music Scholarships

Auditions for the three scholarships on stringed instruments to be given by the National Federation of Music clubs will be held in February. Applications should be sent in not later than January 15 to Mrs. Lafayette Strasburger, president of the South Carolina federation, 530 Congaree avenue, Columbia, or Mrs. Carl Summer, 1010 Pickens street, Columbia.

Only those who intend to follow music as a career may compete. Three scholarships of a hundred dollars each will be awarded to three, contestants, regardless of which instrument played. This scholarship, pays the tution fee for the 1942 session at the Bershire Music center and covers all activities of those in orchestra and chamber music work, including all lectures, attendants at certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra and tickets for nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphony festival. It does not include private lessons.

Contestants must have reached their seventeenth birthday but must not have reached their thirtieth birthday by March 1, 1942.

This Clipping From
NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
JAN 11 1942

A. H. Hepburn To Give Time

Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of the firm of Perry Shaw and Hepburn, architects, of Boston, will known in Norfolk, has volunteered his services in connection with the reconstruction of the Little Red House at Tanglewood, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, by the National Federation of Music Clubs. This announcement was made by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Maine, president of the organization.

The Federation is sponsoring the rebuilding of this historic home, completely destroyed by fire in 1890, as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music Centre.

There is singular appropriateness in Mr. Hepburn's supervising the work since his firm specializes in colonial architecture and was in charge of perhaps the most famous of all the colonial restoration projects, the gigantic building enterprise at Williamsburg, Virginia, which restored the former colonial capital to its pre-Revolutionary appearance. He began his career as a partner of the firm of Taylor and Hepburn in Norfolk.

Under Mr. Hepburn's direction the Hawthorne house will be rebuilt in exact replica of the home where one of America's greatest novelists played host to many of the leading literary figures of his day.

This Clipping From
KANSAS CITY, MO.
JOURNAL
JAN 10 1942

Mrs. Frederick Shaw, state chairman of auditions for the National Federation of Music Clubs, has received a recent announcement of a nationwide contest for scholarships in stringed instruments—violin, viola, violoncello and bass viol. To further encourage the study of strings, the federation is offering three scholarships from July 5 to Aug. 16, 1942, at the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewoods," Lenox, Mass., opened in 1940 by the Boston Symphony and directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The aim of the center is to bring to talented players of already acquired technique a greater experience in ensemble playing. The work of principal interest to applicants for these scholarships is:

1. The advanced orchestra, which has reheahsals under Dr. Koussevitzky, sectional coaching under members of the Boston Symphony, and prepartion for one symphony concert each week.

2. Chamber music study under Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the symphony.

The state contest will be held in Kansas City early in February. The ages of contestants will be from 17 to 30; they must play two compositions of their own choice and demonstrate for the judges their ability to play scales, arpeggios and to sight-read. Only one winner from each state is allowed.

Final auditions will be held in New York City Friday, March 15, and in Chicago March 23.

No entrance fee is required, but the registrations must reach Mrs. Shaw, 3711 Mercier, Kansas City, Mo., not later than Jan. 25.

I memtioned this opportunity in these columns some weeks ago—I do hope lots of you students will try out for it. It is a marvelous offer.

This Clipp
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
JAN 7 - 1942

MUSIC PRIZES OFFERED

Berkshire Auditions Planned for This State

Columbia, Jan. 6.—Auditions for the three scholarships on stringed instruments to be given by the National Federation of Music clubs will be held in February. Applications should be sent in not later than January 15 to Mrs. Lafayette Strasburger, president of the South Carolina federation, 530 Congaree avenue, Columbia, or Mrs. Carl Summer, 1010 Pickens street, Columbia.

Only those who intend to follow music as a career may compete. Three scholarships of $100 each will be awarded. Each scholarship pays the tuition fee for the 1942 session at the Berkshire Music center and covers all activities of those in orchestra and chamber music work, including all lectures, attendance at certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra and tickets for nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphony festival. It does not include private lessons.

Contestants must have reached their seventeenth birthday and must not have reached their thirtieth birthday by March 1, 1942.

This Clipping From
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS
JAN 10 1942

* * *

The National Federation of Music Clubs is sponsoring the reconstruction of Nathaniel Hawthorne's former home, the Little Red House at Tanglewood, as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

A contest to select a talented young violinist between the ages of 16 and 22 for a year's scholarship at the Juilliard School of Music is jointly announced by the National Federation of Music Clubs, the National Broadcasting Co. and the Juilliard School.

* * *

A birthday party will be given on Jan. 19 for the Little Symphony Orchestra which Ernst Katz has founded and directed with serious young people on the East Side.

The Pan-Pacific Woman's Symphony Orchestra will appear in Pershing Square Thursday at 1 p. m. Under the direction of the regular conductor, Dr. Leonard Walker, the orchestra will play a short program of music chosen from the ABCD alliance. This is the only professional woman's orchestra in the entire West, its membership of 45 players comprising a variety of national backgrounds, but all are staunchly American citizens.

This Clipping From
BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
JAN 16 1942

Nat'l Music Clubs Sponsoring Three 1942 Scholarships

To further encourage the study of stringed instruments, the National Federation of Music Clubs is offering three scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center located at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5th to August 16th. These scholarships will be open only to performers on stringed instruments. The Berkshire Music Center was opened in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. Courses are offered in orchestral and choral conducting, orchestra and chamber music, etc. The work of principal interest to applicants for these scholarships is: 1. The advanced orchestra which has rehearsals under Dr. Koussevitsky, Mr. Burgin, Mr. Chapple, and advanced student conductors; sectional coaching under the instrumental faculty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. 2. Chamber music study under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Acceptance into the orchestra requires technical competence. The aim of the center is to bring to players of already acquired technique a greater experience in ensemble playing.

Contestants must be native citizens of the United States or must have secured their final naturalization papers before entering the contest. They must have reached their 17th birthday but must not have reached their 30th birthday by March 1st, 1942. Only those who intend to follow music as a career may compete. State contests will be held early in February. No entrance fee is required. Winners in each contest (state and district) are obligated to proceed to the next contest. Three scholarships of $100 each will be awarded to the three contestants receiving the highest rating in the National contest, which pays the tuition fee for the 1942 summer session at the center and covers all activities of those in orchestra and chamber music work.

Contestants will be required to play two compositions of his own choice, with accompaniment to demonstrate his artistic ability; and to demonstrate his ability in playing scales, arpeggios, and sight reading.

8 1

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 18 1942

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JAN 14 1942

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JAN 11 1942

ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
JAN 9 - 1942

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD
JAN 15 1942

MARSHALL, TEXAS
NEWS-MESSENGER
JAN 11 1942

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
JAN 19 1942

VENTURA, CALIF.
STAR-FREE-PRESS
JAN 10 1942

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
JAN 9 - 1942

This Clipping From
SANTA MONICA, CALIF.
OUTLOOK
JAN 8 1942

Viola Player, Only 19, With Big Orchestra

CLEVELAND (U.P.)—The Cleveland Symphony orchestra numbers among its complement of 82 distinguished artists and musicians this year a 19-year-old viola player.

Stanley Harris, youngest member of the orchestra, won a place in the orchestra after an audition before Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor.

Young Harris began his study of the violin and viola at the Cleveland Institute of Music and remained studying there on a continual scholarship basis through high school.

He has attended also the Berkshire Festival school in Tanglewood N. J., where he studied chamber music ensemble with Gregor Piatigorsky and Jesu Maria Sanroma, and has been playing in the festival orchestra under Sergei Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JAN 11 1942

Federation To Rebuild Red House

ANNOUNCEMENT that Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of the firm of Perry, Shaw and Hepburn, architects, of Boston, has volunteered his services in connection with the reconstruction of the Little House at Tanglewood, former home of Nathaniel Howthorne, by the National Federation of Music Clubs was made recently by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Maine, president of the organization.

The federation is sponsoring the rebuilding of this historic home, completely destroyed by fire in 1890, as a gift to the Boston Symphony orchestra for use as a summer studio by the Berkshire Music Centre.

There is singular appropriateness in Mr. Hepburn's supervising the work since his firm specializes in colonial architecture and was in charge of perhaps the most famous of all the colonial restoration projects, the gigantic building enterprise at Williamsburg, Virginia, which restored the former colonial capital to its pre-revolutionary appearance.

His interest in the Tanglewood enterprise is prompted in considered measure by the fact that the Tanglewood property, on which the foundations of the former Hawthorne home are located, was owned originally by Mrs. Hepburn's family and was presented to the Boston Sympathy Orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. Mrs. Hepburn has shown great interest in the development of the enterprise and Mr. Hepburn's association with the project of rebuilding the Hawthorne house is a natural sequence.

Violinists Play On Wednesday

Mabel, Earl and Carol Hopkins, violinists, will be heard at the Musical Interlude program to be presented Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Lazarus Music center. Helen Grace Jones has arranged the event. Mr. Hopkins is head of the violin department at Capital university and Mrs. Hopkins has the same post at Otterbein.

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
JAN 10 1942

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
JAN 11 1942

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JAN 5 - 1942

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
JAN 11 1942

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JAN 10 1942

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JAN 18 1942

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JAN 18 1942

3 Scholarships In Music Offered

National Federation of Music clubs announces provision of three new scholarships to the summer session of the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., competition to be open to young musicians who play stringed instruments.

Miss Bertha Foster, University of Miami, Coral Gables, is receiving applications from contestants, all of which must be submitted before Sunday, Jan. 25. The scholarships are open to players between the ages of 17 and 30, and cover the entire cost of tuition in the amount of $100. Private lessons or living conditions are not included.

Contestants will appear in a series of state, district, and national eliminations. Only one contestant from a state may be chosen to enter the district contests, and one from each district will appear in the national eliminations.

The Berkshire Music Center operates under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The summer session this year will last from July 5 through Aug. 16.

82.

1942

WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN

MAY 3 - 1941

MUSIC CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD TO BE ENLARGED

Lenox, Mass. (U.P.) — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture is designed for "students" with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totalled 312 ustdents selected from 29 states and Canada.

SANTA PAULA, CAL.
CHRONICLE

APR 21 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER TO BE LARGER

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.)—The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture, is designed for "students with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totaled 312 students selected from 29 states and Canada.

Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

MAY - 1941

FOR lovers of music, travel lines will again converge this summer upon Lenox, Massachusetts, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra in collaboration with the Berkshire Music Center will hold its 1941 Symphonic Festival — now become, by virtue of solid achievement and the turn of events, the 'first' festival of the world. The high point of the three weeks' program will be the performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. A complete opera will be presented in student production under the direction of Herbert Graf. And from classroom and studio, the results of quiet, intensive work in everything musical from conducting to country dancing will for a second year flow back into the main stream of American musical life.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Berkshire Board Cancels Concerts At Tanglewood

There will be no Tanglewood concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, announced today.

Miss Robinson Smith said the festival corporation, "very reluctantly and only after the most thorough consideration of all the facts now available," had acceded to the request of the orchestra's trustees that the nine concerts scheduled to begin July 30 should not be given.

Budget Difficulty Cited

Miss Robinson Smith explained that the agreement between the two parties provided that should either wish to gorego the concerts, the other must agree or assume all expenses of both organizations.

"It is of course impossible," she said, "for us to assume the orchestra's budget of approximately $85,000, in addition to our own budget, and we therefore have no alternative but to agree.

Reconsideration Possible

"We regret that we have been forced to make this decision now. But we have offered at any time up to June 15 to reconsider the issue and to discuss with the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the possibility of holding the concerts this summer on the basis of a budget for the orchestra comparable to the $62,500 budget which we guaranteed and paid them for the 1941 festival."

Miss Robinson Smith said the festival corporation had been making every effort to continue the concerts and had given "the most careful thought to all the problems and principles involved, both economic and patriotic."

Symphony Announces New Russian Works

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 9.

Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances: one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America, and the other by Nicolai Bereowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and a recent work of Aaron Copland, "A Lincoln Portrait."

Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past. The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall, 24 pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons. Subscriptions are now being taken for each of the four series.

DUBUQUE, IA.
TELEGRAPH HERALD

APR 29 1941

MUSIC TO SOOTHE EGLANTINE

Lenox, Mass.—(U.P.)—On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 3 - 1942

250 Students Are Enrolled At Berkshire Music Center

Formal Opening Under Auspices of Koussevitzky Music Foundation Sunday Afternoon

Two hundred fifty students will be on hand for the formal opening of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Sunday. The Center this year will be operated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky director. The opening exercises will be conducted in the concert hall starting at 4 PM.

The opening number will be the choral, "Now Thank We All Our God," by Bach.

After talks by Olin Downes of the New York Times, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mrs. Margaret Grant, the executive secretary, there will be the Shostakovitch quintet for piano and strings with Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins; Jean Lefranc, viola; Jean Bedetti, 'cello and Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano.

Public Concerts Planned

The school season will culminate during the last three weeks in concerts to be given by the student orchestra and chorus on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. The concerts to be in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival shed, will be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The opera department will offer two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be sung in English. Alternate casts will give performances Aug. 7 and 13.

This season of the Center represents a departure from musical tradition in this country. The Koussevitzky Music Foundation, under whose auspices the sessions are being held this summer, was recently incorporated "to develop musical talent and in every manner possible and by every agency, activity, means or instrumentality deemed advisable, to aid in the development of musical talent." The principles stem back into Dr. Koussevitzky's life and effort and continue his expenditure of time and resources for the development of musical art, particularly to composers and students.

In 1909 Dr. Koussevitzky and his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky founded a publishing house in Russia as a non-profit organization, whose main purpose was to aid promising composers who through the years had been at the mercy of music publishers. For a number of years the Edition Russe brought out the work of such composers as Prokofieff and Stravinsky. Similar work will be carried on by the new foundation. When it appeared there would be no Berkshire Music Center this year, the foundation was able to step in and assure the third season. All proceeds from the session will be used for maintenance of the Center and development of the foundation.

In addition to six orchestra concerts and the two opera performances, there will be a series of chamber music concerts Sunday mornings and lectures by noted musicians and critics. The foundation plans to enroll associates of the Center who will be entitled to attend every concert and public event at Tanglewood.

BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE

JUL 2 - 1942

VIOLA PLAYER, 19, WITH CLEVELAND SYMPHONY

Cleveland (UP) — The Cleveland Symphony orchestra numbers among its complement of 82 distinguished artists and musicians this year a 19-year-old viola player.

Stanley Harris, youngest member of the orchestra, won a place in the orchestra after an audition before Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor.

Young Harris began his study of the violin and viola at the Cleveland Institute of Music and remained studying there on a continual scholarship basis through high school.

He has attended also the Berkshire Festival school in Tanglewood, N. J., where he studied chamber music ensemble with Gregor Piatigorsky and Jesu Maria Sanroma, and has been playing in the festival orchestra under Serger Koussevitzky.

ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JUL - - 1942

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL has been canceled for this summer, a casualty of conditions due to the war. The Music Center, however, will function under a reorganization plan by which the school will be maintained by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., organized by Dr. Koussevitzky as a memorial to his wife, who died last February.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 4 - 1942

WAR ENDS FESTIVAL

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which for years has been attracting music lovers from all over the world each summer, is a war-time casualty, it was announced recently by the Berkshire (Mass.) Evening Eagle.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

JUL 5 - 1942

Russian Symphony Score Reaches U.S.

The "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich is getting about. Bound for the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts, where it will have a first American performance this summer by Koussevitski and his student orchestra, the composition left Russia by plane on April 9. From Teheran, it was motored to Cairo and came by plane from there to this country.

The score is printed on a roll of microfilm, 450 frames to the roll Toscanini will conduct the New York premiere of this work in October. Stokowski, who introduced both the fifth and sixth symphonies of Shostakovich, probably will conduct the seventh in an early fall concert of the NBC Symphony orchestra. If he does not, Toscanini will.

82.

1942

WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN

MAY 3 - 1941

MUSIC CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD TO BE ENLARGED

Lenox, Mass. (U.P) — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture is designed for "students" with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totalled 312 ustdents selected from 29 states and Canada.

SANTA PAULA, CAL.
CHRONICLE

APR 21 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER TO BE LARGER

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.)—The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture, is designed for "students with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totaled 312 students selected from 29 states and Canada.

Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

MAY -- 1941

FOR lovers of music, travel lines will again converge this summer upon Lenox, Massachusetts, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra in collaboration with the Berkshire Music Center will hold its 1941 Symphonic Festival — now become, by virtue of solid achievement and the turn of events, the 'first' festival of the world. The high point of the three weeks' program will be the performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. A complete opera will be presented in student production under the direction of Herbert Graf. And from classroom and studio, the results of quiet, intensive work in everything musical from conducting to country dancing will for a second year flow back into the main stream of American musical life..

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 25 1942

Berkshire Board Cancels Concerts At Tanglewood

There will be no Tanglewood concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, announced today.

Miss Robinson Smith said the festival corporation, "very reluctantly and only after the most thorough consideration of all the facts now available," had acceded to the request of the orchestra's trustees that the nine concerts scheduled to begin July 30 should not be given.

Budget Difficulty Cited

Miss Robinson Smith explained that the agreement between the two parties provided that should either wish to gorego the concerts, the other must agree or assume all expenses of both organizations.

"It is of course impossible," she said, "for us to assume the orchestra's budget of approximately $85,000, in addition to our own budget, and we therefore have no alternative but to agree.

Reconsideration Possible

"We regret that we have been forced to make this decision now. But we have offered at any time up to June 15 to reconsider the issue and to discuss with the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the possibility of holding the concerts this summer on the basis of a budget for the orchestra comparable to the $62,500 budget which we guaranteed and paid them for the 1941 festival."

Miss Robinson Smith said the festival corporation had been making every effort to continue the concerts and had given "the most careful thought to all the problems and principles involved, both economic and patriotic."

Symphony Announces New Russian Works

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 9.

Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances: one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America, and the other by Nicolai Bereowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and a recent work of Aaron Copland, "A Lincoln Portrait."

Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past. The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall, 24 pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons. Subscriptions are now being taken for each of the four series.

DUBUQUE, IA.
TELEGRAPH HERALD

APR 29 1941

MUSIC TO SOOTHE EGLANTINE

Lenox, Mass.—(U.P.)—On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 3 - 1942

250 Students Are Enrolled At Berkshire Music Center

Formal Opening Under Auspices of Koussevitzky Music Foundation Sunday Afternoon

Two hundred fifty students will be on hand for the formal opening of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Sunday. The Center this year will be operated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky director. The opening exercises will be conducted in the concert hall starting at 4 PM.

The opening number will be the choral, "Now Thank We All Our God," by Bach.

After talks by Olin Downes of the New York Times, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mrs. Margaret Grant, the executive secretary, there will be the Shostakovitch quintet for piano and strings with Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins; Jean Lefranc, viola; Jean Bedetti, 'cello and Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano.

Public Concerts Planned

The school season will culminate during the last three weeks in concerts to be given by the student orchestra and chorus on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. The concerts to be in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival shed, will be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The opera department will offer two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be sung in English. Alternate casts will give performances Aug. 7 and 13.

This season of the Center represents a departure from musical tradition in this country. The Koussevitzky Music Foundation, under whose auspices the sessions are being held this summer, was recently incorporated "to develop musical talent and in every manner possible and by every agency, activity, means or instrumentality deemed advisable, to aid in the development of musical talent." The principles stem back into Dr. Koussevitzky's life and effort and continue his expenditure of time and resources for the development of musical art, particularly to composers and students.

In 1909 Dr. Koussevitzky and his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky founded a publishing house in Russia as a non-profit organization, whose main purpose was to aid promising composers who through the years had been at the mercy of music publishers. For a number of years the Edition Russe brought out the work of such composers as Prokofieff and Stravinsky. Similar work will be carried on by the new foundation. When it appeared there would be no Berkshire Music Center this year, the foundation was able to step in and assure the third season. All proceeds from the session will be used for maintenance of the Center and development of the foundation.

In addition to six orchestra concerts and the two opera performances, there will be a series of chamber music concerts Sunday mornings and lectures by noted musicians and critics. The foundation plans to enroll associates of the Center who will be entitled to attend every concert and public event at Tanglewood.

BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE

JUL 2 - 1942

VIOLA PLAYER, 19, WITH CLEVELAND SYMPHONY

Cleveland (UP) — The Cleveland Symphony orchestra numbers among its complement of 82 distinguished artists and musicians this year a 19-year-old viola player.

Stanley Harris, youngest member of the orchestra, won a place in the orchestra after an audition before Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor.

Young Harris began his study of the violin and viola at the Cleveland Institute of Music and remained studying there on a continual scholarship basis through high school.

He has attended also the Berkshire Festival school in Tanglewood, N. J., where he studied chamber music ensemble with Gregor Piatigorsky and Jesu Maria Sanroma, and has been playing in the festival orchestra under Serger Koussevitzky.

ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JUL -- 1942

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL has been canceled for this summer, a casualty of conditions due to the war. The Music Center, however, will function under a reorganization plan by which the school will be maintained by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., organized by Dr. Koussevitzky as a memorial to his wife, who died last February.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 4 - 1942

WAR ENDS FESTIVAL

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which for years has been attracting music lovers from all over the world each summer, is a war-time casualty, it was announced recently by the Berkshire (Mass.) Evening Eagle.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

JUL 5 - 1942

Russian Symphony Score Reaches U.S.

The "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich is getting about. Bound for the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts, where it will have a first American performance this summer by Koussevitski and his student orchestra, the composition left Russia by plane on April 9. From Teheran, it was motored to Cairo and came by plane from there to this country.

The score is printed on a roll of microfilm, 450 frames to the roll Toscanini will conduct the New York premiere of this work in October. Stokowski, who introduced both the fifth and sixth symphonies of Shostakovich, probably will conduct the seventh in an early fall concert of the NBC Symphony orchestra. If he does not, Toscanini will.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 2 - 1942

'Round the Town

If there's a hole in a' your coats,
I rede you tent it:
A chield's amang you taking notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it.
—BURNS.

Well, to the accompaniment of more or less "heavy artillery", the welcome rain came at last yesterday in the early evening, and, to the joy of farmers and "dirt" gardeners, came and came and came, by the bucketful, and them some. . . . The parched lawns responded gaily, and everything took on a new lease of life . . . . It even pepped up the humans a bit, for the day had not been an exhilirating one . . . . Learn, from dyed-in-the-wool orchardists, that the coddling moth has ceased from coddling, and that now the railroad worm is pestering the apple with its not so delicate attentions. That poor apple, what a life it leads, what it goes through only, ultimately, to make a Roman holiday for someone . . . . Four cars carrying the Red Cross banner, and three for the Parish Aid Society of Christ church will be in the little parade which will precede the Red Cross-USO benefit to be held Fourth of July night on the lawn of St. Michael's Ukranian church . . . . Invitations were received in this city yesterday from the Trustees of the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, Serge Koussevitsky, director, and members of the faculty, to the opening exercises of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center, which will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Tea will be served in the garden following the exercises . . . . In a recent issue of the New York Sun, Charles Messer Stow, editor of the Antiques department of the Sun, speaking of the Junior Membership started by the New York State Historical Association and its publication of The Yorker, for High school students, says: "James E. Leath, president of the Columbia County Historical Society, writes that he has been planning such a magazine for a long time for the junior members of that society and possibly of adjoining county societies. He was gratified that Dr. Dixon Ryon Fox, president of the state association through Clifford Lord, editor of The Yorker, had started it on a statewide basis" . . . . Two tiny local girls were playing "house" out in the garden of the home of one of them, and, suddenly the mother heard her off-spring get off the following, puzzling bit: "Here we go round the mulberry bush. Pop goes the weasel. Amen." In a short time the daughter came into the house "Oh, we had a lovely time. We had tea and cakes, and I said "Grace." The puzzle was solved . . . . Speaking of nothing at all — can't something be done about conditions at the old Playhouse down on Warren street? As the column passed that shambles yesterday, the odor from the stagnant water was almost sickening . . . . The big Woolworth sign had its face washed yesterday, and the big letters took on additional "golden glint" . . . Mother, to small boy, as they stood looking at a group photograph in the Woolworth War Savings Stamps and Bonds window — "see your uncle Harry?" "Yes, I see Uncle Harry, and oh, Mummy, ain't he swell" . . . . This is the final week for this season of that homemade, fresh strawberry ice cream for which a certain Warren street ice creamery is justly noted. Next week, or perhaps by the Fourth, said ice creamery will start its homemade fresh peach ice cream which is second only to its fresh strawberry. Go to it, while the fresh fruits last . . . . The column is pinning a medal on Gray's dignified and patriotic

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 7 - 1942

Ask Music Association To Sing at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music association, which is made up largely of persons from the Pittsfield area, has been invited by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to join with the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center in the presentation of the Beethoven Choral symphony No. 9 Aug. 15 at Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is the director of the center. The music association, which is directed by Horace Hunt of Dalton, has joined with the Tanglewood chorus on previous occasions.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

JUL 5 - 1942

New Shostakovich Work On Berkshire Program

NEW YORK, JULY 4—(UP)—THE MUCH-HERALDED "Seventh Symphony" by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet Embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including eight horns, six trombones, six trumpets, two harps, piano, and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUL 5 - 1942

Musical Notes

Dorothy Radde Emery and Berenice Follis will preset Jeanne Rose, pianist, and John Schaffer, baritone, in a joint recital at 5 p. m. today at 2010 P Street. Miss Rose will play the first movement of Schubert's A major sonata, pieces by Bach and a group of modern compositions. Mr. Schaffer will sing a group of English songs, a group of French songs and the aria, "Avant de quitter ces lieux" from Gounod's "Faust."

* * * *

Anita Schade is preparing a course of lectures on musical subjects to be given next season before clubs and in her home. She will again spend late July and August in the Berkshires and intends to visit the Boston Orchestra's summer center at Tanglewood.

* * * *

Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of Washington Cathedral, will play a recital this afternoon after the 4 oclock evening service. The program includes: Prelude and Fugue in G major (Bach), Prelude (Frederick Jacobi), Chromatic Study on the Name of Bach (Walter Piston), Eclogue (Bernard Wagenaar), Grand Piece Symphonique (Franck).

* * * *

Three Twilight Musicales will be offered free to the pubic this week by D. Sterling Wheelwright, organist of Washington Chapel of Latter-Day Saints. A sonata by Felix Borovski will be analyzed as part of tomorrow's program at 8 p. m. Contrasts in preludes will be provided Wednesday with examples of Bach, Wagner, Guilmant and two American composers. Saturday's program includes "Chinese Boy with a Bamboo Flute," and Philip James' "Meditation a Sainte Clotilde," with Edna C. Wheelwright, soprano, contributing Rabey's "To You" and Grachaninov's "Over the Steppe."

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL

JUL - 1942

* * *

The war is not only bringing European artists to this country. There is cordiality apparently in encouraging little-known compositions from European composers. There has been much talk about Dmitri Shostakovich and his seventh symphony. It is to be played at the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The latter gentlemen, it is not perhaps generally known, has his own publishing house. A Lansing service man, Charles Eiferle, who had studied piano for several years before enlisting in the navy, is now in New York, and writing to friends here, comments on a Shostakovich concerto as played by the New York symphony. "This composer has a trick of introducing some very obvious and provincial little tunes in the middle of what is apparently serious music," he writes.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

JUL 2 - 1942

New England Welcome Extended Wilhelmina

Lee, Mass., July 2 (UP) — In traditionally informal New England fashion, the town of Lee has extended an official welcome to Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands who is spending the summer here in the Berkshires with her daughter and granddaughters.

Five townsmen including the three selectmen and President Edward S. Rogers of the Town Savings bank paid a pre-arranged call last night, exchanged greetings and had tea with the queen in the garden.

As part of their welcome, the group invited the queen and her daughter, Crown Princess Juliana, to attend the opening of the famed Berkshire Music Center at nearby Tanglewood Sunday.

One of the group was Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, famed British sculptor who designed the minute man statue at Lexington and now maintains a studio at Tyringham.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL - 1942

Q. What is the name of the estate in the Berkshires where the Boston Symphony performs during the summer?
R. D. J.

A. It is Tanglewood. Nathaniel Hawthorne's home at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. The estate was deeded to the Boston Symphony as a permanent summer home.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 2 - 1942

LEE EXTENDS WELCOME TO QUEEN WILHELMINA

Selectmen Among Visitors Who Call at Summer Home.

LEE, Mass., July 2.—(UP)—In traditionally informal New England fashion, the town of Lee has extended an official welcome to Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, who is spending the summer here in the Berkshires with her daughter and granddaughters.

Five townsmen, including the three selectmen and President Edward S. Rogers of the Town Savings bank, paid a pre-arranged call last night, exchanged greetings and had tea with the queen in the garden.

As part of their welcome, the group invited the queen and her daughter, Crown Princess Juliana, to attend the opening of the famed Berkshire music center at nearby Tanglewood, Sunday.

One of the group was sir Henry Hudson Kitson, famous British sculptor, who designed the Minute Man statue at Lexington and now maintains a studio at Tyringham.

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

JUN 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Conductor Calmly Faces $30,000 Loss

New York—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony, stands ready to lose $30,000 this summer without a quiver.

Koussevitzky has decided to assume personally the entire financial responsibility for his Berkshire music center, the school he founded two years ago as the result of the many years of planning a unique music venture of equal benefit to professional and dilettante.

$10,000 from Tuition

The school will cost $40,000 for the six weeks beginning July 5, of which only $10,000 will be met by tuition fees. "Unless friends help me, I may lose the remainder," Dr. Koussevitzky said today at his New York hotel. "If I must, I do so gladly.

"The extraordinary results the school has had in two years makes it essential that it continue."

Normally the music center functions as part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. After considerable bickering, the Festival was cancelled for this summer, leaving the school high and dry. The trustees of the Boston Symphony, who control Tanglewood, home of both school and Festival, have agreed to give Dr. Koussevitzky use of the equipment, he said today.

Rescue Mechanism

The mechanism of rescue is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, incorporated this spring in memory of the late Madame Koussevitzky. Designed primarily as a means of helping musicians, particularly composers, it will be used temporarily as a controlling organization for the school.

The Foundation has already commissioned three works by young composers, Dr. Koussevitzky said: A symphony from Nicolai Breezowsky, and operas from Samuel Barber and Benjamin Britton.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 5 - 1942

Koussevitzky Ready to Foot Music Center Summer Deficit

Boston Conductor Stands to Lose $30,000 of Own Money On Tanglewood School but 'If I Must, I Do So Gladly'—Friends' Help Invited

New York, June 4—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston symphony, stands ready to lose $30,000 this summer without a quiver.

Koussevitzky has decided to assume personally the entire financial responsibility for his Berkshire Music center, the school he founded two years ago as the result of many years of planning a unique music venture of equal benefit to professional and dilettante.

The school will cost $40,000 for the six weeks beginning July 5, of which only $10,000 will be met by tuition fees. "Unless friends help me, I may lose the remainder," Dr Koussevitzky said today at his New York hotel. "If I must, I do so gladly.

"The extraordinary results the school has had in two years makes it essential that it continue."

Normally the Music center functions as part of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. After considerable bickering, the festival was canceled for this summer, leaving the school high and dry. The trustees of the Boston symphony, who control Tanglewood, home of both school and festival, have agreed to give Dr Koussevitzky use of the equipment, he said today.

The mechanism of rescue is the Koussevitzky Music foundation, incorporated this spring in memory of the late Mrs Koussevitzky. Designed primarily as a means of helping musicians, particularly composers, it will be used temporarily as a controling organization for the school.

The foundation has already commissioned three works by young composers, Dr Koussevitzky said: A symphony from Nicolai Berezowsky, and operas from Samuel Barber and Benjamin Britton.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 6 - 1942

Music Society To Meet With Dr. Koussevitzky

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, will meet Wednesday night at 7.30 with members of the Berkshire Music Association at the parish house of the First Congregational Church. The music association has been invited by Dr. Koussevitzky to join with the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center in the presentation of the Beethoven choral symphony No. 9 on Saturday, Aug. 15, at Tanglewood. The music association chorus of which Horace Hunt of Dalton is director has joined with Dr. Koussevitzky in choral programs in previous Tanglewood seasons.

94

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 8 - 1942

MUSIC

Koussevitzky Carries On

By Carl E. Lindstrom

It seems to be characteristic of the most mettlesome musicians that they do not know when they are licked, a trait which commands universal admiration. Certainly Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was beaten in the issue of the Berkshire concerts so decisively that a lesser soul would have turned the key in the lock at Tanglewood and not even attempted to carry on the academic Music Center. Not so the willful and granitic Doctor.

One is reminded of the time when a storm washed out one of his tent concert, and he immediately demanded a weatherproof music shed. It was pointed out to him that one goes about these things slowly and that an $80,000 pavilion is not produced between seasons. Koussevitzky retorted that a pavilion would be built, or else . . . And that's how the pavilion got built.

So now he is going to have the Music Center, even if he has to pay for it himself. Toward a $40,000 budget for the six weeks beginning July 5, tuition fees will net about $10,000, leaving $30,000 to be underwritten by the persistent conductor if his friends do not proffer some financial assistance.

There is more to it than just his insistence upon carrying on what is, after all, a school not depending, like the Festival, upon gasoline and tires. There is also the fact that Koussevitzky will produce, as he had originally announced for the Festival, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's Magnificat in D. These will be presented by the school orchestra and singers, in the Music Shed itself, which it will cost $2,500 just to open. Admission will be charged.

Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" and Stravinsky's "Histoire d'un Soldat" will also be presented, so to that extent there will be a Festival after all.

* * *

Ezio Pinza, Metropolitan basso, has been released from Ellis Island, as you may have read. He has been there since Mar. 12, in custody as an enemy alien, although he had made premilinary application for American citizenship.

He made a statement to the effect that "Everyone I came in contact with—the Attorney General, the FBI, members of the board who conducted the hearing, the guards at Ellis Island—all of them gave me consideration and fair treatment."

There was no official comment as to why he was taken into custody or as to whether his release was absolute or conditioned on terms of a parole. That being the case, it may be permissible to speculate. This column is of the opinion that Mr. Pinza is as innocent of subversive activity as a newborn babe. He, like a good many other musicians, is doubtless emotional and doubtless talked too much.

* * *

Perhaps then, he, like Dr. Koussevitzky, was just behaving like a mettlesome musician

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 5 - 1942

SEASON OPENED AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Address by Dr Koussevitzky and Brief Program of Vocal and Instrumental Music Presented

Lenox, July 5—In the Music theater at historic Tanglewood, the third season of the Berkshire Music center was opened this afternoon. An audience of 800, many of whom were students, heard an address by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the founder, and a brief program of vocal and instrumental music. The opening announcement was made by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, and Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary, read a report, in which she said the registration is 253 from all over the country with an advanced orchestra of 95 and a music and cultural orchestra of 55 members, both of which will play in presentation of operas.

Quoting Frederick Nietzsche as saying: "Without music life would have been a mistake," Dr Koussevitzky said that music as a vitally essential force has existed at all times and added: "The cultural standing of a people, as we know, is determined by its creative potency in art more than in any other field and music of all the arts expresses the very depth and soul of a people. Like a living stream music ever finds its expression in the life of the individual, or the history of a whole country. Like a symbol of freedom it breaks barriers between nations and carries its message to the world. And it is the names and work of creative artists which mark an epoch and remain immortal.

"Particularly in Time of War"

"Today we have glowing evidence that music is regaining possession of the real cultural place that belonged to it in the past, before the inconceivable growth of a mechanistic civilization lowered the cultural values of musical art. Music cannot follow the path of formalistic artifice. If it submits to the overpowering force of mechanization it loses freedom of expression and the loss of freedom means also the loss of art. But if music refuses to be in subordination, if its aspires to freedom, it will resist conflicting forces and will eventually recapture the higher plane to which it belongs."

Dr Koussevitzky said that the decision of the Koussevitzky Music foundation to sponsor the third season of the Berkshire center gave him and associates overwhelming evidence of "how true, how vital and important it is to save our music center, particularly in time of war."

The Bach chorale, "Now Thank We All Our God," was sung by a group of students. A Shostakovitch quintet for piano and strings was played and Dr Koussevitzky led in singing "Star Spangled Banner" for the final number.

Dr. Koussevitzky Hopes To Aid County Students

Would Provide Scholarships For Berkshire Boys— Makes Appeal for Funds

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, president of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation Inc., hopes to find ways and means for providing a limited number of scholarships to Berkshire County music students of exceptional talent.

He disclosed this desire yesterday afternoon in answering a question during discussion with a group of businessmen who were called to the Wendell Hotel to hear his appeal for financial support of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a Koussevitzky venture. Dr. Koussevitzky anticipates a $30,000 deficit in operating the center this summer and hopes that Pittsfield friends will be able to subscribe $4000 to $5000 toward reduction of this loss.

Budget Is $40,000

Three hundred fifty pupils attend the music school at Tanglewood which operates on a budget of $40,000. Tuitions provide about $10,000. More than two-thirds of the students, Dr. Koussevitzky said, pay only part of the tuition and many of them have to be subsidized for food and lodging as well.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed regret that there would be no Festival this summer but said the decision was the only one that could be reached under the circumstances. He felt the carrying on of the music school would be a good thing for the continuity of the entire Tanglewood enterprise and make it easier to reopen the Festival concert series when conditions warrant.

Although no formal action was taken on Dr. Koussevitzky's financial appeal it is understood efforts will be made to raise Pittsfield's share of the deficit.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
JUL 6 - 1942

Reopening Of Metropolitan At Reduced Rates Assured

Seven-Dollar Top Price Appears Gone Forever; Berkshire Center Opens

By Helen Havener

The protracted debate over whether or not America's premiere temple of the opera, the Metropolitan, will reopen its doors for the season of 1942-1943 seems to have been settled. Barring a rain of German or Japanese bombs—and perhaps even they would not stop it—New York's operatic shrine will attract the usual procession of devotees during the fall and winter months—but at reduced prices.

And there is the nub of the situation. Opera at a seven dollar top is bowing out, in all probability permanently; and the most de luxe seats in the remodelled "Met" will be $5.00 next season. This is as yet considerably higher than New Opera Company prices, but the Metropolitan offers a larger stage, opportunity for more lavish stage effects, and the "name" singers who have over many decades given the Metropolitan Opera House its major claim to fame.

General Manager Edward Johnson has foregone a summer vacation and will toil during the coming weeks in New York's humid heat making ready for the opening, and the box office will be open all summer. Announcement of the reduced prices has already attracted a larger number of subscribers than ever before at so early a date.

Works With Student Orchestra

Big news of the week musically was the opening of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday with students from all parts of the country arriving for classes and many notables in attendance for the opening tea. Although Dr. Koussevitzky will be working with a student orchestra only this Summer instead of his usual brilliant galaxy of Boston Symphony musicians, there is keen interest in the student concerts which are expected to attract patrons from considerable distances.

The student concerts will be six in number—two a week for the last three weeks of the season. Participating in them will be the first students' orchestra, numbering 94 players, and the repertoire will be similar to that which has been given in previous seasons by the professional orchestra. High point of the season, as announced last week, will be the concert for Russian War Relief on August 14, which will be marked by the American concert premiere of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony (which will already have been radio premiered by Toscanini on July 19).

Mr. Koussevitzky will have with him at Tanglewood this Summer as instructors in the composition department Aaron Copland, one of America's best known modernists, and Bohuslav Martinu, Czech composer, replacing Igor Stravinsky, who had been expected to be guest composer, but made other arrangements during the period when it was thought that the Center might not open.

Many Hear Hofmann

That Josef Hofmann's popularity as a concert artist in New York remains undimmed was demonstrated this past week when Mr. Hofmann drew the top audience of the current season—14,000—to Lewisohn Stadium for his solo appearance with Fritz Reiner and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Hofmann flew from California for the concert, which marked Mr. Reiner's first appearance of the season as a Stadium conductor. The selection he offered was the solo part in Beethoven's Emperor Concerto and from all the critics it brought the acknowledgement that Hofmann, though diminutive in stature, is a veritable Titan among pianists. Encores are usually comparatively few at the Stadium as a matter of policy, but the audience would not relinquish its claims to Mr. Hofmann until he had three times returned to the platform, the first time to play Beethoven's Fury Over a Lost Penny. Other encores were: The Chopin A Major Polonaise, which the pianist performed as a tribute to his fellow countryman, the late Ignace Jan Paderewski, and Chopin's Minute Waltz.

Mr. Reiner, who is a considerable favorite with Stadium audiences, followed up the Hofmann program, on the succeeding night, July 1, with a program composed entirely of Russian and Wagnerian music. Moussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, now as familiar to the non-musical as to the musical public because of its inclusion in Walt Disney's Fantasia, and Shostakovich's First Symphony constituted the Russian portion of the program.

Wagner, whose compositions had been conspicuously absent from the first 10 concerts of the current season, was represented by the Preludes to Acts I and III of Lohengrin, the Good Friday music from Parsifal and excerpts from Act III of Die Meistersinger.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 14 1942

Strategic Retreat

An especially unhappy casualty of tire and gas economy this summer is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox. The enchanting site of the Music Shed, with its fine lawns and pines and vista of the Stockbridge Bowl could hardly have been called remote last season, but with its premise of personal motor transportation gone it suddenly becomes inaccessible to most of the large music-loving public that came to it from far and wide. Fortunately, the Berkshire Music Center will continue, underwritten by Serge Koussevitsky. This school's program will include six concerts at which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the Center's student orchestra and chorus on the Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon originally announced for the discontinued festival. Dr. Koussevitsky's resolution to continue this much—and it is a great deal—of a cultural enterprise of the greatest importance, deserves high praise and financial support from his public; a large one that is devoted to him personally and to his aims. The day will come soon again, we hope, when the growth of the festival and the Center will continue again at the rate it had been progressively showing through several brilliant seasons, when the war slowed it down. Dr. Koussevitsky is conducting a retreat in good order, with courage and generosity. By all means let him be given good support, moral and pecuniary. Make out your check to the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, Inc., Lenox, Mass.

MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS
JUN 27 1942

MUSIC AND ART

(By Prof. Thos. H. Hamilton)

Shellac is the material used in making phonograph records which is at present getting scarce. It is the product of a tiny insect which lives in India and secretes a resin which is gathered off the bark of trees. The insect itself is microscopic in size, about one-thirtieth of an inch long. Military demands for shellac, which is used in various implements of war, have caused the shortage.

Victor has recorded an abbreviated version of Rossini's sparkling opera, "The Barber of Seville." By judicious cuts the opera, which would take fifteen records for a complete version, has been reduced to a size which goes on eight twelve-inch records, which means sixteen sides playing about five minutes each. This makes about an hour and twenty minutes of music. The recording was done by the cast which toured the country so successfully last season under the management of Charles Wagner, best known of American musical managers, who managed John McCormack in his heyday, and who is well known in Monmouth as the manager of the Wagner Quartet.

Tanglewood, near Lenox, Massachusetts, has in the past few seasons become one of the important music centers of America during the summertime by reason of the Berkshire Music Festival conducted there by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This year, for some devious reason, the Orchestra will be unable to participate, but the music school will be held and the school orchestra and chorus will present some programs. Many of the best musicians in the country have taken advantage of the opportunity of doing advanced work there during past seasons, the opportunities being particularly fine in orchestral and choral conducting and in composition. On the faculty are such world-famous men as Koussevitzky, Stravinsky, Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland, and Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross is one of the most distinguished choral conductors of our day.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUN 28 1942

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUN 26 1942

Music Goes Ahead This Summer

NEW YORK, June 27.—(UP)—The much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including 8 horns, 6 trombones, 6 trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

✦ ✦ ✦

THE Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including A. G. M. A. (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

✦ ✦ ✦

THE concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which started their twenty-fifth summer season at Lewisohn stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia system from 8 to 8:55 p. m. (E. W.T.), beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Arthur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the Eastern seaboard. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER

JUN 30 1942

restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5,000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 28 1942

List Programs For Berkshire Music Festival

Several Leading Soloists to Play With Orchestra Directed By Koussevitzky

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday evening, Aug. 1—
Symphony in B Flat.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5...Shostakovitch

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2—
Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4 in F Minor ..... Tschaikowsky

Saturday evening, Aug. 8—
Symphony No. 3.....Hanson
Concerto for two pianos in E Flat .....Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in E Minor ..... Brahms

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9—
Symphony No. 1 in C Major ..... Beethoven
Tod und Verkarung...R. Strauss
Concerto for violin and orchestra in D .....Brahms
Two marches .....Sousa

Saturday, evening, Aug. 15—
Magnificat in D .....Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor ..... Beethoven

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16—
Symphony No. 25 in C Minor ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 7...Shostakovitch

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on Aug. 14, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the western hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composed during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment.

The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the center and the Koussevitzky Music foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the center.

Five departments will constitute the center. Dr. Koussevitzky himself will direct the class in orchestral conducting, assisted by Stanley Chapple. Hugh Ross and Ifor Jones will head the department of choral conducting. The advanced orchestra will work this year principally under Dr. Koussevitzky. Gregor Piatigorsky will direct the department of chamber music. Aaron Copland will offer advanced work in composition. The opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will have a course for singers as well as one in opera production for stage directors, conductors, designers, composers and librettists.

Music lovers who wish a summer of living and working in a completely musical atmosphere on the beautiful Tanglewood estate can still enroll in the department of music and culture, the largest department of the center. This has no entrance requirements and is designed for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This department will have its own orchestra and, chamber music groups and a chorus which will sing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's Magnificat in D in a concert under Dr. Koussevitzky. Dr. R. Mills Silby will direct a group in Gregorian chant and Aaron Copland a class in 20th century music.

Applications for admission to the center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5, and the session will continue until Aug. 16.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUN 28 1942

'All-Star' Concerts Announced

Atlanta's All-Star Concert Series, presented each winter at the municipal auditorium by the Atlanta Music Club, will include eight instead of seven performances for the 1942-43 season at the same cost to season subscribers. The Metropolitan Opera Company, however, is not included in the series.

The artists scheduled and the dates of their local appearances are announced as follows by Marvin McDonald, business manager of the Atlanta Music Club:

John Charles Thomas, baritone, Saturday night, October 24.

The Charles Wagner Opera Company in Puccini's "La Boheme," (in English), Friday night, November 6.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Saturday night, November 21.

Ballet Theater, Tuesday night, December 8.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, Tuesday night, January 19.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, Saturday night, February 13.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting and Claudio Arrau as piano soloist, February 23 or 24.

Helen Traubel, soprano, Wednesday night, March 24.

Many Old Favorites.

Most of the artists programmed are old friends to Atlanta audiences, Thomas, Horowitz, Heifetz, Ormandy and Traubel. But the Minneapolis with Maestro Mitropoulos and Soloist Arrau will make their local debut, as will the Ballet Theater and some of the stars of the Wagner Opera Company.

Mitropoulos's name is one of the most famous and colorful on the roster of eminent conductors in this country. A veteran also in the recording field, his signature on a Columbia album is promise of a superb reading, a distinguished performance. And to see him in action is an inspiring and at the same time amusing experience. His body is a short, stocky base from which is suspended giant arms capable of astonishing, rapid-fire acrobatics.

The 46-year-old native of Athens, Greece, has commanded the podium of the Minneapolis since 1937. Before this time he was already famous as a conductor of the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris which post he had held since 1932.

The pride and joy of Chile, Pianist Arrau, who established himself in the United States last season when he appeared in concert in Carnegie Hall, followed by 19 sell-out concerts in the east, has been financed by his country since he was a child prodigy. They sent him to Germany to study under the great Liszt disciple, Martin Krause. Since his 10 years there, he has acted as an official member of the Chilean diplomatic service.

Classic Dancers.

His most marked recognition in this country, perhaps, has come from Boston, where he appeared last winter as soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. So overwhelmingly awed was his capacity audience that he was recalled for another appearance within the month. (This is never done in Boston or Atlanta.)

The Ballet Theater will come to Atlanta this season greatly enriched by the addition of two classic dancers who are world renowned: Alicia Markova and Irina Baronova. Also the work of two great choreographers will be evidenced. They are Michel Fokine and Bronislava Nijinska, whose gifts have been annexed by the group since the war brought them to America.

Fokine's new ballet, "Bluebeard," will be presented here, one of a pair being prepared by him for the Ballet Theater's first continental tour. His star, the beautiful blond Baronova, was ballerina at 13 years of age with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. She may be remembered here for her performance in the United Artist's movie, "Florine." Her rival star, Markova, came to this country as England's representative dancer and to her is credited the "Giselle" to end all same. With her partner, Anton Dolin, the English male dancer who will appear here with her, she is reported to have created and sustained sensation of London.

Cast for the Puccini opera will include: Hilda Burke, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Armand Tokatyan, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone; Oscar Natzke, basso; George Rasely, tenor, and Giuseppe Bamboschek, conductor. Desire Defrere is stage director. An orchestra of 30 and a chorus of as many complete the production.

Reservations for the series may be made from now on at the Music Club's booth, 235 Peachtree, N. E.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

85

JUN 21 1942

MUSIC WORLD

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with the Center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatgorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday Evening, August 1st
Hayon—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.
Beethoven — Overture to Leonore No. 3.
Shostakovitch — Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday Afternoon, August 2d
Stravinsky — Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka.
Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4, in F Min.

Saturday Evening, August 8th
Hanson—Symphony No. 3.
Mozart—Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365).
Brahms—Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

Sunday Afternoon, August 9
Beethoven — Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21.
R. Strauss — Tod und Verklarung, Op. 24.
Brahms — Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Sousa—Two marches.

Saturday Evening, August 15th
Bach—Magnificat in D.
Beethoven — Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, August 16th
Mozart — Symphony No. 25 in G minor, K No. 183.
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on August 14th, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composd during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment. The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives of Windsor.

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the Center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the Center.

Applications for admission to the Center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5th, and the session will continue until August 16th.

The many Buffalo friends of Herbert Fromm will be interested in the information that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler played Mr. Fromm's composition, Palestinian March, in Boston Symphon Hall yesterday. Apparently thi talented musician's ability is being recognized by musicians and music lovers of Boston where the composer now resides.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUN 28 1942

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUN 26 1942

Music Goes Ahead This Summer

NEW YORK, June 27.—(UP)—The much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including 8 horns, 6 trombones, 6 trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

✦ ✦ ✦

THE Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including A. G. M. A. (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

✦ ✦ ✦

THE concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which started their twenty-fifth summer season at Lewisohn stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia system from 8 to 8:55 p. m. (E. W.T.), beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Arthur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the Eastern seaboard. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

JUN 28 1942

restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5,000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 22 1942

List Programs For Berkshire Music Festival

Several Leading Soloists to Play With Orchestra Directed By Koussevitzky

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday evening, Aug. 1—
Symphony in B Flat.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5...Shostakovitch

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2—
Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4 in F Minor ..... Tschaikowsky

Saturday evening, Aug. 8—
Symphony No. 3.....Hanson
Concerto for two pianos in E Flat .....Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in E Minor ..... Brahms

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9—
Symphony No. 1 in C Major ..... Beethoven
Tod und Verkarung...R. Strauss
Concerto for violin and orchestra in D .....Brahms
Two marches .....Sousa

Saturday, evening, Aug. 15—
Magnificat in D .....Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor ..... Beethoven

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16—
Symphony No. 25 in C Minor ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 7...Shostakovitch

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on Aug. 14, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the western hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composed during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment.

The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the center and the Koussevitzky Music foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the center.

Five departments will constitute the center. Dr. Koussevitzky himself will direct the class in orchestral conducting, assisted by Stanley Chapple. Hugh Ross and Ifor Jones will head the department of choral conducting. The advanced orchestra will work this year principally under Dr. Koussevitzky. Gregor Piatigorsky will direct the department of chamber music. Aaron Copland will offer advanced work in composition. The opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will have a course for singers as well as one in opera production for stage directors, conductors, designers, composers and librettists.

Music lovers who wish a summer of living and working in a completely musical atmosphere on the beautiful Tanglewood estate can still enroll in the department of music and culture, the largest department of the center. This has no entrance requirements and is designed for music students, college students, and amateurs. This de- will have its own orches- chamber music groups us which will sing Bee- Ninth Symphony and nificat in D in a con- Dr. Koussevitzky. Dr. y will direct a group in hant and Aaron Cop- a class in 20th century music.

Applications for admission to the center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5, and the session will continue until Aug. 16.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUN 28 1942

'All-Star' Concerts Announced

Atlanta's All-Star Concert Series, presented each winter at the municipal auditorium by the Atlanta Music Club, will include eight instead of seven performances for the 1942-43 season at the same cost to season subscribers. The Metropolitan Opera Company, however, is not included in the series.

The artists scheduled and the dates of their local appearances are announced as follows by Marvin McDonald, business manager of the Atlanta Music Club:

John Charles Thomas, baritone, Saturday night, October 24.

The Charles Wagner Opera Company in Puccini's "La Boheme," (in English), Friday night, November 6.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Saturday night, November 21.

Ballet Theater, Tuesday night, December 8.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, Tuesday night, January 19.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, Saturday night, February 13.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting and Claudio Arrau as piano soloist, February 23 or 24.

Helen Traubel, soprano, Wednesday night, March 24.

Many Old Favorites.

Most of the artists programmed are old friends to Atlanta audiences, Thomas, Horowitz, Heifetz, Ormandy and Traubel. But the Minneapolis with Maestro Mitropoulos and Soloist Arrau will make their local debut, as will the Ballet Theater and some of the stars of the Wagner Opera Company.

Mitropoulos's name is one of the most famous and colorful on the roster of eminent conductors in this country. A veteran also in the recording field, his signature on a Columbia album is promise of a superb reading, a distinguished performance. And to see him in action is an inspiring and at the same time amusing experience. His body is a short, stocky base from which is suspended giant arms capable of astonishing, rapid-fire acrobatics.

The 46-year-old native of Athens, Greece, has commanded the podium of the Minneapolis since 1937. Before this time he was already famous as a conductor of the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris which post he had held since 1932.

The pride and joy of Chile, Pianist Arrau, who established himself in the United States last season when he appeared in concert in Carnegie Hall, followed by 19 sell-out concerts in the east, has been financed by his country since he was a child prodigy. They sent him to Germany to study under the great Liszt disciple, Martin Krause. Since his 10 years there, he has acted as an official member of the Chilean diplomatic service.

Classic Dancers.

His most marked recognition in this country, perhaps, has come from Boston, where he appeared last winter as soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. So overwhelmingly awed was his capacity audience that he was recalled for another appearance within the month. (This is never done in Boston or Atlanta.)

The Ballet Theater will come to Atlanta this season greatly enriched by the addition of two classic dancers who are world renowned: Alicia Markova and Irina Baronova. Also the work of two great choreographers will be evidenced. They are Michel Fokine and Bronislava Nijinska, whose gifts have been annexed by the group since the war brought them to America.

Fokine's new ballet, "Bluebeard," will be presented here, one of a pair being prepared by him for the Ballet Theater's first continental tour. His star, the beautiful blond Baronova, was ballerina at 13 years of age with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. She may be remembered here for her performance in the United Artist's movie, "Florine." Her rival star, Markova, came to this country as England's representative dancer and to her is credited the "Giselle" to end all same. With her partner, Anton Dolin, the English male dancer who will appear here with her, she is reported to have created and sustained sensation of London.

Cast for the Puccini opera will include: Hilda Burke, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Armand Tokatyan, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone; Oscar Natzke, basso; George Rasely, tenor, and Giuseppe Bamboschek, conductor. Desire Defrere is stage director. An orchestra of 30 and a chorus of as many complete the production.

Reservations for the series may be made from now on at the Music Club's booth, 235 Peachtree, N. E.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

8 5

JUN 21 1942

Music World

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with the Center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatgorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday Evening, August 1st
Hayon—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.
Beethoven — Overture to Leonore No. 3.
Shostakovitch — Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday Afternoon, August 2d
Stravinsky — Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka.
Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4, in F Min.

Saturday Evening, August 8th
Hanson—Symphony No. 3.
Mozart—Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365).
Brahms—Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

Sunday Afternoon, August 9
Beethoven — Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21.
R. Strauss — Tod und Verklarung, Op. 24.
Brahms — Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Sousa—Two marches.

Saturday Evening, August 15th
Bach—Magnificat in D.
Beethoven — Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, August 16th
Mozart — Symphony No. 25 in G minor, K No. 183.
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on August 14th, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composd during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment. The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives of Windsor.

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the Center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the Center.

Applications for admission to the Center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5th, and the session will continue until August 16th.

The many Buffalo friends of Herbert Fromm will be interested in the information that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler played Mr. Fromm's composition, Palestinian March, in Boston Symphon Hall yesterday. Apparently thi talented musician's ability is being recognized by musicians and music lovers of Boston where the composer now resides.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUN 28 1942

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUN 28

Music Goes Ahead This Summer

NEW YORK, June 27.—(UP)—The much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including 8 horns, 6 trombones, 6 trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

+ + +

THE Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including A. G. M. A. (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

+ + +

THE concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which started their twenty-fifth summer season at Lewisohn stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia system from 8 to 8:55 p. m. (E. W.T.), beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on [illegible] Under the Stars will be given as usual this summer, beginning July 14, under wartime restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

Phonies Under the Stars will be given as usual this Summer, beginning July 4, under wartime restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5,000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 22 1942

List Programs For Berkshire Music Festival

Several Leading Soloists to Play With Orchestra Directed By Koussevitzky

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday evening, Aug. 1—
Symphony in B Flat.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5...Shostakovitch

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2—
Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4 in F Minor ..... Tschaikowsky

Saturday evening, Aug. 8—
Symphony No. 3.....Hanson
Concerto for two pianos in E Flat .....Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in E Minor ..... Brahms

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9—
Symphony No. 1 in C Major ..... Beethoven
Tod und Verkarung...R. Strauss
Concerto for violin and orchestra in D .....Brahms
Two marches .....Sousa

Saturday, evening, Aug. 15—
Magnificat in D .....Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor ..... Beethoven

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16—
Symphony No. 25 in C Minor ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 7...Shostakovitch

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on Aug. 14, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the western hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composed during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment.

The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the center and the Koussevitzky Music foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the center.

Five departments will constitute the center. Dr. Koussevitzky himself will direct the class in orchestral conducting, assisted by Stanley Chapple. Hugh Ross and Ifor Jones will head the department of choral conducting. The advanced orchestra will work this year principally under Dr. Koussevitzky. Gregor Piatigorsky will direct the department of chamber music. Aaron Copland will offer advanced work in composition. The opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will have a course for singers as well as one in opera production for stage directors, conductors, designers, composers and librettists.

Music lovers who wish a summer of living and working in a completely musical atmosphere on the beautiful Tanglewood estate can still enroll in the department of music and culture, the largest department of the center. This has no entrance requirements and is designed for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This department will have its own orchestra and, chamber music groups and a chorus which will sing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's Magnificat in D in a concert under Dr. Koussevitzky. Dr. R. Mills Silby will direct a group in Gregorian chant and Aaron Copland a class in 20th century music.

Applications for admission to the center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5, and the session will continue until Aug. 16.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUN 28 1942

'All-Star' Concerts Announced

Atlanta's All-Star Concert Series, presented each winter at the municipal auditorium by the Atlanta Music Club, will include eight instead of seven performances for the 1942-43 season at the same cost to season subscribers. The Metropolitan Opera Company, however, is not included in the series.

The artists scheduled and the dates of their local appearances are announced as follows by Marvin McDonald, business manager of the Atlanta Music Club:

John Charles Thomas, baritone, Saturday night, October 24.

The Charles Wagner Opera Company in Puccini's "La Boheme," (in English), Friday night, November 6.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Saturday night, November 21.

Ballet Theater, Tuesday night, December 8.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, Tuesday night, January 19.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, Saturday night, February 13.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting and Claudio Arrau as piano soloist, February 23 or 24.

Helen Traubel, soprano, Wednesday night, March 24.

Many Old Favorites.

Most of the artists programmed are old friends to Atlanta audiences, Thomas, Horowitz, Heifetz, Ormandy and Traubel. But the Minneapolis with Maestro Mitropoulos and Soloist Arrau will make their local debut, as will the Ballet Theater and some of the stars of the Wagner Opera Company.

Mitropoulos's name is one of the most famous and colorful on the roster of eminent conductors in this country. A veteran also in the recording field, his signature on a Columbia album is promise of a superb reading, a distinguished performance. And to see him in action is an inspiring and at the same time amusing experience. His body is a short, stocky base from which is suspended giant arms capable of astonishing, rapid-fire acrobatics.

The 46-year-old native of Athens, Greece, has commanded the podium of the Minneapolis since 1937. Before this time he was already famous as a conductor of the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris which post he had held since 1932.

The pride and joy of Chile, Pianist Arrau, who established himself in the United States last season when he appeared in concert in Carnegie Hall, followed by 19 sell-out concerts in the east, has been financed by his country since he was a child prodigy. They sent him to Germany to study under the great Liszt disciple, Martin Krause. Since his 10 years there, he has acted as an official member of the Chilean diplomatic service.

Classic Dancers.

His most marked recognition in this country, perhaps, has come from Boston, where he appeared last winter as soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. So overwhelmingly awed was his capacity audience that he was recalled for another appearance within the month. (This is never done in Boston or Atlanta.)

The Ballet Theater will come to Atlanta this season greatly enriched by the addition of two classic dancers who are world renowned: Alicia Markova and Irina Baronova. Also the work of two great choreographers will be evidenced. They are Michel Fokine and Bronislava Nijinska, whose gifts have been annexed by the group since the war brought them to America.

Fokine's new ballet, "Bluebeard," will be presented here, one of a pair being prepared by him for the Ballet Theater's first continental tour. His star, the beautiful blond Baronova, was ballerina at 13 years of age with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. She may be remembered here for her performance in the United Artist's movie, "Florine." Her rival star, Markova, came to this country as England's representative dancer and to her is credited the "Giselle" to end all same. With her partner, Anton Dolin, the English male dancer who will appear here with her, she is reported to have created and sustained sensation of London.

Cast for the Puccini opera will include: Hilda Burke, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Armand Tokatyan, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone; Oscar Natzke, basso; George Rasely, tenor, and Giuseppe Bamboschek, conductor. Desire Defrere is stage director. An orchestra of 30 and a chorus of as many complete the production.

Reservations for the series may be made from now on at the Music Club's booth, 235 Peachtree, N. E.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 21 1942

8 5

MUSIC WORLD

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with the Center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatgorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday Evening, August 1st
Hayon—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.
Beethoven — Overture to Leonore No. 3.
Shostakovitch — Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday Afternoon, August 2d
Stravinsky — Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka.
Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4, in F Min.

Saturday Evening, August 8th
Hanson—Symphony No. 3.
Mozart—Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365).
Brahms—Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

Sunday Afternoon, August 9
Beethoven — Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21.
R. Strauss — Tod und Verklarung, Op. 24.
Brahms — Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Sousa—Two marches.

Saturday Evening, August 15th
Bach—Magnificat in D.
Beethoven — Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, August 16th
Mozart — Symphony No. 25 in G minor, K No. 183.
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be given on August 14th, is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composd during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment. The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives of Windsor.

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the Center. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts given at the Center.

Applications for admission to the Center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Center will have its opening exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 5th, and the session will continue until August 16th.

The many Buffalo friends of Herbert Fromm will be interested in the information that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler played Mr. Fromm's composition, Palestinian March, in Boston Symphon Hall yesterday. Apparently thi talented musician's ability is being recognized by musicians and music lovers of Boston where the composer now resides.

86.

George Edman Resigns Post With Festival

Is Succeeded by Mrs. Bruce Crane As Clerk

LENOX—George W. Edman of Pittsfield resigned yesterday as clerk and trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. His resignation was accepted with regret and a committee is to be named to draft a resolution expressing appreciation for his services.

Henzel

GEORGE W. EDMAN
Festival accepts resignation with regret

Mr. Edman was one of the incorporators of the Festival when the charter was issued eight years ago and had been actively identified with the organization since its inception. He had also handled the Festival publicity. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton was named to succeed Mr. Edman.

Yesterday's meetings of the trustees was held at Wheatleigh in Lenox, the summer home of Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia. They approved action taken by the finance committee in its exchange of correspondence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the ultimate cancellation of this year's Tanglewood concerts.

At the meeting, the board voted to assume the expenses involved in opening and closing the Shed so that the huge concert auditorium could be used by Dr. Koussevitzky during the Berkshire Music Center season and for the series of weekend concerts planned by the conductor in August.

JEWISH INDEPENDENT
CLEVELAND, O.
6/19/42

Wins Scholarship Award

Ruth Stern, well known in Cleveland music circles has been awarded the scholarship in voice, which is sponsored by the Boston Symphony, Opera Department. Miss Stern is one of four women vocalists throughout the United States and Canada to receive this coveted award. In addition, the Ranney Scholarship in voice as well as a scholarship to Oberlin College in piano, have been given to Miss Stern.

Photo by Mario Rosel, New York
MISS RUTH STERN

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
JUN 9 - 1942

Themes and Variations

By Henry Simon

Musical Diary

Thursday, June 4.—For the first time met Serge Koussevitzky, heart and soul of the Boston Symphony, as well as its conductor. Got the impression of a musical idealist with a good sense of old-fashioned theater who nevertheless knows exactly what the financial score is. In a suite of the Savoy-Plaza Koussevitsky, still in deep mourning for his wife was host to the press. Gave out statement concerning the cancellation of the Berkshire Festival and the continuance of the Berkshire Music Center typewritten in florid, dramatic language that had a slight foreign accent. Between the lines of fervid patriotism lay the cry of an angry, partially frustrated musician in a money civilization. Then under some blunt questioning, led by Howard Taubman of the Times, he told exactly what the deficit was likely to be ($30,000), how much it would cost to open the shed ($2500), how much he had raised last year for buildings ($47,000), how he proposed to go about getting more this year. He seemed to like answering direct questions simply, ingenuously. But even with his thick Russian accent there never was a doubt that he knew exactly what to say and what not to say. No babe in the woods he.

* * *

Friday.—Saw Mrs. Miniver at the Music Hall, as moving a picture in its own particular way as the Eroica Symphony in its, though I think (and hope) it won't seem so 10 years from now. There's a sequence with a village chorale society singing madrigals with exactly the amateurish artistry I often have heard from similar groups in England—not a bit overdone. The background music, however, is cheap, neo-Tchaikowsky stuff, not at all worthy of the script writers, direction and cast. When the big Music Hall organ at the end blared out with Land of Hope and Glory and The White Cliffs of Dover, I felt ashamed for music. For a moment I thought that drama must be the more adult art—which is nonsense.

* * *

Saturday—Saw preview of Walt Disney's Bambi which translates into very handsome technicolor the sentiments of Felix Salten's original. That is a fine achievement in itself. The set songs by the late Frank Churchill borrow liberally from Grieg and Liszt, but there's one sequence which shows just how well symphonic music can be used in movies. A few pats of rain set a rhythm which then grows into a simple theme. As the storm gathers, this theme is taken up with added instruments as a round, then as the development section of a symphonic movement. When the storm subsides, the whole thing is unraveled again, the original little rhythm ending the piece with the last drops of rain. Very literal but very effective.

* * *

Sunday.—Over at the old Liederkranz Hall, Andre Kostelanetz broadcast a "portrait" of Mark Twain written by Jerome Kern. This is one of four portraits commissioned by the amiable little conductor, the others being Lincoln by Aaron Copland and La Guardia and Dorothy Thompson by Virgil Thomson. The first three were played a couple of weeks ago in Cincinnati, but this is the first time New York has heard any—New York and the rest of the country via Coca-Cola's Pause That Refreshes hour over CBS. Mr. Kostelanetz told me he thought it a fine piece of honest, unpretentious Americana, which seems to me good judgment, in spite of a prominent theme that Prokofieff might have written and the slick, overripe orchestration supplied by Amadeo Filippi. The orchestra sounded first rate in the studio and so did soprano-soloist Genevieve Rowe, an old Wallenstein standby, whom the local opera impresarios ought to start discovering soon.

COLUMBIA, MO.
MISSOURIAN
JUN 27 1942

The Berkshire Festival

MUSIC lovers in the East—and the country over, in fact—suffered their first major casualty of the war when it was announced that the annual outdoor Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held each summer at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been cancelled definitely.

War-time transportation restrictions are responsible for the enforced cancellation. The Tanglewood concerts are given each year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in the Berkshire hills of western Massachusetts. The patrons travel by automobile from the nearby seaboard states, and from all over the country. The tire shortage and gasoline rationing are not the only drawbacks; railroad facilities, too, are being limited except for essential use.

Musicians, though, will welcome the news that, although the nine scheduled concerts by the Boston Symphony have been cancelled, the Berkshire Music Center, formerly held in conjunction with the festival at Tanglewood, will carry on as usual. This includes courses in orchestral conducting, choral conducting, advanced orchestra, chamber music, composition and opera, sponsored by Dr. Koussevitzky, with the assistance of members of the Boston orchestra.

Another welcome note for the lovers of fine music was the announcement that the usual outdoor performances will be continued in New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, close to the eastern seaboard and much more accessible to the scene of the music festivals.

MONTCLAIR, N.J
TIMES
6/11/42

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is a war casualty. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced last week that the festival had been cancelled for the 1942 season, at the request of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tire and gasoline rationing led the orchestra to ask for the cancellation, and the festival officers agreed when it was found that no chartered buses would be allowed to take the audiences to and from the orchestra shed at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
JUL 27 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Will Aid War Bond Sales

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on Aug. 2, to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky. All the War Bond and Stamp Committees of Berkshire County are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert. Dr. Koussevitzky announces that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the ground at Tanglewood for 50 cents in War Stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a weekend of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. "A "victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in War Bonds.

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1,000 enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert. The "Festival of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The series will open on Saturday evening, Aug. 1, and will continue on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons until Aug. 16. On Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13, performances will be given in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by students in the opera department.

Olin Downes is presenting a series of four "lecture-concerts" on music forms on Saturday afternoons, assisted by student groups. Chamber music recitals are given in the new chamber music hall on Sunday evenings. The advance ticket sale points to large audiences at the festival; the concerts are grouped on week-ends to permit visitors to concentrate their musical enjoyment into a few days.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 6 1942

Berkshire Music Center At Tanglewood Opens

Impressive Exercises Are Held at Lenox; School Courses Will Start Today

PITTSFIELD, July 5—The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, opened this afternoon with impressive exercises in the theater. The courses of the school will commence tomorrow morning at 9, and beginning Aug. 1 an orchestra created of the advanced students and conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a series of concerts, in an effort to make up for the cancellation of the Berkshire Festival series.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, was chairman of this afternoon's exercises, introducing the members of the board, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary. A group composed of Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, and a quartet made up of Richard Burgin, first violin; Alfred Krips, second violin; Jean Lafranc, viola, and Jean Bedetti, cello, played the Shostakovitch quintet. A chorus under the direction of Hugh Ross sang Bach's chorale, "Now Thank We All Our God," and the exercises closed with the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner." Tea was served in the garden following the exercises.

Dr. Koussevitzky stressed in his address the importance of music in a world torn by war, while Mrs. Grant gave a few statistics regarding the school. This year, despite the war and obstacles to the operation of the third season of the school, there are 253 students, with 94 in the advanced orchestra and 55 in the so-called culture orchestra. Mrs. Grant listed the members of the faculty, which will include many well-known composers and conductors.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 18 1942

To Occupy House At Sanctuary

Mr. and Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo of Cambridge have leased the warden's cottage at the Sanctuary, Lenox, for the summer. Mr. Mazzeo, clarinetist, is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a member of the faculty at the Music Center.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 6 - 1942

Berkshire Music Center Opens for Third Season

Program Includes Message From Dr. Serge Koussevitzky—School Sessions Started This Morning

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The opening exercises for the third season of the Berkshire Music Center were held yesterday afternoon in the theatre at Tanglewood. A brief program, consisting of messages of greetings, statements of the purposes and ideals of the school, by Olin Downes, who acted as master of ceremonies, and Serge Koussevitzky was followed by a choice bit of music. The entire audience then moved to the gardens for tea.

In the brief but intense history of the few months since the close of last year's school session so much has happened to affect all similar educational projects that the mere fact, thanks to the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, that the schedule will be maintained betrays an herculean effort and a remarkably dauntless spirit.

Chorus Heard

As Dr. Koussevitzky laid down the script from which he had read his address, Hugh Ross, of the choral directing department of the school, brought the chorus to its feet from their seats near the front center of the audience and led them in an earnest declamation of the Bach Chorale "Now Thank We All Our God."

An informative report of a more factual nature by Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the school, revealed several of the proud accomplishments of past seasons' pupils. She also stated that the advanced orchestra would consist of 95 players, and that the second orchestra would include 55 pupils. Scholarships have been granted on a broad and wise basis and include three students from Mexico, one from Cuba and one from Brazil. The enrollment also includes pupils from Canada and Venezuela.

The concluding item on the program was a performance of the Shostakovitch quintet for piano and strings, played by Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins; Jean Lefranc, viola; Jean Bedetti, violoncello, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano, all section leaders of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

School Opens

At the beginning of the exercises the school faculty and the trustees took their places in three rows of seats on the platform. Dr. Koussevitzky introduced the trustees individually and, later, in his turn, Mr. Downes presented the faculty. In addition to the distinguished members of past seasons' terms the names of Bohuslav Martinu, the the Czecho-Slovakian composer, and Hugo Leichtentritt, celebrated musicologist, add lustre to a famous list. Martinu's fame preceded him to the Berkshires so long ago as 1928 when his viola quintet was played at the Berkshire festival sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

School sessions started this morning and public performances, showing the results of the various types and the calibre of the training and instruction, will start rolling off the production line almost immediately.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 28 1942

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER CONCERTS

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programmes just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Playing with the Center orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, famous duo-piano team.

The programmes are announced for the Saturday and Sunday concerts of August.

A Gala Benefit Concert for Russian War Relief (to be given in August), is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch, composed during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment.

The Opera Department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

MUSIC-DRAMA

By MALCOLM MILLER

"OUTWARD BOUND," a drama in three acts by Sutton Vane, presented by Robert Porterfield's Barter Theatre in the Civic Auditorium, Abingdon, Va., Thursday, June 25; staged by Daniel Blum; set by Henry May.

CAST

Scrubby ..... Alexander Ivo
Ann ..... Eleanor Anton
Henry ..... Frank E. Baxter
Mr. Prior ..... Colin Craig
Mrs. Clivedon-Banks... Elizabeth Moore
Rev. William Duke .... Lance Cunard
Mrs. Midget ..... Margaret Wycherly
Mr. Longley ..... Frank Gregory
Rev. Frank Thompson.. Charles Wallis

SCENE: The lounge room of a small ocean liner.

Margaret Wycherly's performance as "Mrs. Midget" in Barter Theatre's production of Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound" at Abingdon, Va., last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, will be long remembered as a rare artistic achievement.

Her quaintly attired "Mrs. Midget" was a sweet, lovable character, capable of flashes of fighting spirit when occasion demanded it. With eloquent use of pauses, with delicate vocal nuances and wonderfully expressive gestures, she etched a portrait of ineffable beauty. Her exit in the third act drew ovatious applause from the audience.

Czecho-Slovakia's Alexander Ivo gave a restrained, effective portrayal as "Scrubby," the steward of the "Outward Bound" mystery liner.

Eleanor Anton as "Ann," and Henry E. Baxter as "Henry," the two "half-ways," expressed the ingenuous, wistful spirit of the young lovers with delightful naivete.

As "Mr. Prior," the ne'er-do-well, Colin Craig gave an exciting characterization. His own personality seemed so completely submerged in the role that one completely forgot Colin Craig and thought only of the blighted "Mr. Prior."

Elizabeth Moore played the haughty, odious "Mr. Clivedon-Banks" to the hilt, almost drawing hisses from the audience. Her impersonation was so malevolent that she simply must be given a sympathetic part in the immediate future or risk being shunned by Abingdon's "madding crowds."

Lace Cunard was splendid as "Rev. William Duke." He gave pleasing expression to the quiet humor and philosophy of the rector, with never a touch to caricature or insincerity.

Frank Gregory's interpretation of successful, chicanerous big-business-man "Mr. Lingley," was realistic and convincing.

Charles Wallis was rather untraditional as "Rev. Frank Thompson," the "examiner." He played the part with understanding and his reading was good, but he was too young to invest the role with dominant authority.

Daniel Blum's direction developed a well balanced production, nicely sustained in tempo. However, Margaret Wycherly was the only member of the cast who meticulously (and unobtrusively) observed the fundamentals of stage technique in the execution of entrances, exits, movement and crosses.

ander Ivo, with set by Henry May.

It will open in the Abingdon Civic Auditorium this Thursday and play through Saturday with a matinee Saturday.

CAST

Leonora ..... Natalie Farmer
Florence ..... Doris Snyder
Peter ..... Mell Turner
Dwight ..... Geza Korvin Carpathi

The play opens with "Leonora Perrycoste," an attractive young English lady, at the telephone trying to learn the identity of a handsome American she has just met at a tea party.

In the midst of her naive inquiries, "Dwight Houston," the young American in question, appears in her flat, having been impelled to visit her by an urge similar to her own.

They are instantly off in a madcap adventure, loving each other but wondering. Just as they feel that they understand each other perfectly he is recalled to America. He proposes, she hesitates, they part—and then—(Oh, I don't want to tell all. Perhaps you can slip up to Abingdon to see this delightful comedy!)

Bob Porterfield says: "Use your cash for bonds and stamps and let your Victory Garden furnish you a laugh."

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction.

Several outstanding soloists have been engaged, including Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff' famed duo-piano team.

PROGRAMS

Saturday Night, August 1
Symphony in B-Flat, No. 102.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore, No. 3...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47..Shostakovitch

Sunday Afternoon, August 2
Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka.....
.....Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4, in F-minor.....
.....Tschaikowsky

Saturday Night, August 8
Symphony No. 3 .....Hanson
Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365) .....Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98 .....Brahms

Sunday Afternoon, August 9
Symphony No. 1 in C-major, Op. 21 .....Beethoven
Tod und Verklarung, Op. 24.....
.....R. Strauss
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D, Op. 77 .....Brahms
Two marches .....Sousa

Saturday Night, August 15
Magnificat in D.....Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125 .....Beethoven

Sunday Afternoon, August 16
Symphony No. 25 in C-minor, K. No. 183 .....Mozart
Symphony No. 7.....Shostakovitch

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

JUN 29 1942

87.

Music Notes

By MRS. GEORGE C. EICHHORN

In sponsoring the three performances of opera given on July 15 and 16 in Aycock auditorium by the North Carolina Festival Opera group, the War Service committee of the Euterpe club is filling a three-fold opportunity for service at this time.

With the study of opera in English under the direction of well-qualified, enthusiastic leaders, young singers of this state are being afforded musical opportunities of unusual promise. Up until a few years ago there were practically no schools or opera groups where young American singers could work and study in preparation for operatic appearances. One of the most heartening signs to be found in these troubled days is to be found in just such undertakings as this school for opera now in our midst. Americans have not been opera-going people, outside the few metropolitan centers. There are two possible explanations for this situation. The first is that most Americans aren't going to trouble themselves to sit through an evening of something of which they know not a word. Opera in foreign languages just doesn't appeal. The second reason is that many sincere American music-lovers have questioned whether opera in the form it has held for past generations is of interest to Americans.

The performances to be given here on July 15 and 16 bring direct answers to both of these questions. All performances will be given in English, and with the presentation of "A Tree On the Plains," the Bacon music-play, which will be having its second performance anywhere in its local presentation, a typically American scene and situation, with typically American folksongs, gospel hymns and contemporary jazz idioms, will be utilized.

The effect of presentations in English is already noticeable. One local leader remarked at the meeting last week, when decision of sponsorship was made, that the children in the neighborhood in which she lives have talked all winter, and are still talking, about the performance of "The Bartered Bride" given here last fall by the same Festival Opera group, under the sponsorship of the Euterpe club and the Greensboro Junior Civic association.

The War Service committee of the Euterpe club, in sponsoring the performances, goes forward in service begun last fall. Proceeds from the performance of "The Bartered Bride" were used toward the purchase of a piano sent to Ft. Bragg for use of men in the armed forces. Proceeds realized from the coming opera performances will be used in purchasing musical instruments, particularly spring-wound record players with supplies of records, to be used on troop transports and by the men in foreign service.

Mrs. C. R. Wharton, of Greensboro, who has just succeeded Mrs. James M. Daniels, of Lexington, as state war service chairman, under the supervision of Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Va., as national chairman, called particular attention to the need of the men while they are on the troop transports. Since no electrical equipment is permissible to these men, the small spring-wound record players, furnished by just such committees as are sponsoring the coming opera performances, stand out as a chief source of diversion and entertainment for men. Other cities in this state are bending their musical efforts toward similar war service, and the local club, which by virtue of being the oldest musical organization extant in the entire south is always accounted a musical leader, welcomes this opportunity for service.

The past weeks have brought the opening of the summer season of outdoor concerts throughout the nation. The National Symphony, Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor, opened its series of "Sunset Symphonies," playing from a barge moored in the Potomac river. Estimated attendance was 10,000.

In New York the Silver Jubilee of the Stadium Concerts, which were begun during the first act of world conflict, began on June 17, with Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland orchestra, leading the stadium orchestra. This was the second season thus opened by the dynamic conductor who enthralled local music-lovers when he led the Cleveland orchestra in its concert here this spring as one of the offerings of the Greensboro Civic Music association. A new system of lighting, approved by army inspectors and Mayor La Guardia, permitted the concerts to open without conflicting with army regulations. Blue lights are used on the stage, and are used elsewhere in the stadium. The lights on the musicians' stands remain unchanged. The hour of the concert has been moved up to 8 p. m. to take advantage of war-time.

The Cleveland orchestra's summer season will be given the large public auditorium in that city. Philadelphia announces that Eugene Ormandy will serve as honorary music director for the summer concerts given at Robin Hood Dell. Chicago will have two series of summer concerts; one is played by the Chicago symphony in Ravinia, and the other is the series of free concerts played at Grant park. Detroit will have a series of summer concerts at Belle Isle.

At Boston the 57th consecutive series of "Pops" concerts will be given this summer at the Esplanade.

Chief casualty of the rationing regulations is the great Berkshire festival, canceled as a war-time measure. Disappointed at the decision of leaders of the festival, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky immediately announced that the Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood would have a season of six weeks, including six orchestra concerts and two opera performances. The noted conductor assumed financial responsibility for the undertaking.

Edward T. Cone, Greensboro-born composer, whose donation of his score for his Sonata for Piano and Violin to the holograph collection at the library of Woman's college makes him a valued member of the group of North Carolina composers contributing to this collection, was one composer whose compositions were selected for second hearings by the New York Critics circle. The Cone number included in the Critics circle performances was his new chamber music composition.

The first annual award made by the Critics circle went to William Schuman for his Third Symphony. Mr. Schuman, who delivered several lectures in Greensboro and Durham in February at the time of the Student Composers programs, is receiving top-ranking consideration as a leading American composer.

Philip Jeffreys, talented Greensburgher who has been serving as accompanist for Gladys Swarthout, Felix Knight, Francia White and other noted concert artists in the past two years, is now serving in the armed forces, being a part of a new special division.

Suggestion to state officials troubled with surplus: How about that state music supervisor?

Continuing the analysis of popular songs: Try singing the words of "Long, Long Ago" to the popular hit of the day dealing with sitting-under-apple-trees.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUN 28 1942

Annual Symphony Festival Planned

When gas rationing made the annual festival of symphony at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., seem inadvisable this summer, Serge Koussevitzky overruled his directors and decided to present a series of concerts under auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which he controls.

The purpose of the foundation is the training of symphonists and conductors. Koussevitzky will use the two student orchestras, advanced and intermediate, and will limit public performances the first two weeks of August. He will have some eminent instrumentalists on his faculty, such as Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Luboschutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists. The opera department will present Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

Glenn Carew has resigned the post of organist and choir master at Grace Episcopal Church, Woodside, Md., and has been appointed organist at Foundry Methodist for the summer months.

88.

Seven Tanglewood Concerts Planned by Music Center

Benefit for Russian Relief Aug. 14—Men in Uniform To Be Admitted Free—Soloists Listed

That the Berkshires will not lack significant music this summer is evident from the programs just released by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts.

Playing with the Center Orchestra will be several outstanding soloists. The list thus far includes Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff (Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz), duo-piano team, who are once more spending the summer in West Stockbridge.

The programs announced are as follows:

Saturday Evening, Aug. 1:

Haydn—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.
Beethoven—Overture to Leonore No. 3.
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 2:

Stravinsky—Apollon Musagete, Petrouchka.
Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4 in F Min.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 8:

Hanson—Symphony No. 3.
Mozart—Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365).
Brahms—Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9:

Beethoven—Symphony No. 1 in C major Op. 21.
R. Strauss—Tod und Verklarung, Op. 24.
Brahms—Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D, Op. 77.
Sousa—Two marches.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 15:

Bach—Magnificat in D.
Beethoven—Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16:

Mozart—Symphony No. 25 in G minor, K. No. 183.
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief (to be given on Aug. 14), is another event listed among the activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The most exciting item will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the seventh symphony by Shostakovitch, composed during the past winter while Leningrad was under heavy bombardment.

The opera department will climax its activities during mid-August with two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The proceeds from these concerts will be used to defray the expenses of the Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which was recently organized to assist in the development of music and musical talent in America, and which will sponsor the 1942 season of the Center.

Five departments will constitute the Center. Dr. Koussevitzky himself will direct the class in orchestral conducting, assisted by Stanley Chapple. Hugh Ross and Ifor Jones will head the department of choral conducting. The advanced orchestra will work this year principally under Dr. Koussevitzky, Gregor Piatigorsky will direct the department of chamber music. Aaron Copland will offer advanced work in composition. The opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Boldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will have a course for singers as well as one in opera production for stage directors, conductors, designers, composers and librettists.

Music lovers who wish a summer of living and working in a completely musical atmosphere may still enroll in the department of music and culture, the largest department of the Center. This has no entrance requirement and is designed for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This department will have its own orchestra and chamber music groups, and a chorus which will sing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's Magnificat in D in a concert under Dr. Koussevitzky. Dr. R. Mills Silby will direct a group in Gregorian chant and Aaron Copland a class in 20th century music.

Applications for admission to the Center are still being received at the office of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox. The Center will have its opening exercises Sunday afternoon, July 5, and the session will continue until [illegible]

AUSTIN, TEXAS
STATESMAN

JUN 28 1942

Shostakovich Seventh Symphony To Be Given Performance Soon

NEW YORK, June 27.—(UP)—much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including 8 horns, 6 trombones, 6 trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

The Metropolitan opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including AGMA (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

The National Orchestral association announces that applications for membership in all sections of its training orchestra for the season of 1942-43 are now being accepted.

No tuition is charged. Instrumentalists who have sufficient technical background to pass the auditions which will be held in September will be given the opportunity to acquire a knowledge of orchestral routine and repertoire so that they may become candidates for positions in the regular orchestra. An outline of requirements and an application blank may be obtained from the association at 119 West 57th street, New York.

The concerts of the New York Philharmonic - Symphony, which started their 25th summer season at Lewisohn stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia System from 7 to 7:55 p. m., beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Artur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the Eastern seaboard. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUN 29 1942

The Music World

New York, June 29 (UP).—The much heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet Embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including eight horns, six trombones, six trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

The Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. "The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including AGMA (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

The National Orchestral Association announces that applications for membership in all sections of its training orchestra for the season of 1942-43 are now being accepted.

No tuition is charged. Instrumentalists who have sufficient technical background to pass the auditions which will be held in September will be given the opportunity to acquire a knowledge of orchestral routine and repertoire so that they may become candidates for positions in the regular orchestra. An outline of requirements and an application blank may be obtained from the association at 119 West 57th Street, New York.

The concerts of the New York Philharmonic - Symphony, which started their 25th summer season at Lewisohn Stadium last week, will be broadcast here after every Friday night over the Columbia System from 8 to 8:55 P. M., E. W. T., beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Artur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the eastern seabord. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

JUN 30 1942

Miss Doris Van de Bogart, supervisor of music in the schools of Bradford, Pa., who is spending a portion of the summer vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Van de Bogart, at their home on Rossman avenue, has enrolled in the Berkshire Institute of Music which will be held this year at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Dr. Serge Koussevitskey as director.

TALLADEGA, ALA.
DAILY HOME

JUN 29 1942

The World

NEW YORK—(UP)—Replacement of men players by women has not been found necessary so far because of military service demands, the national music council reports after a survey of the 16 major symphony organizations of the United States.

The council notes, however, that the continued calling up of men may alter the picture considerably during the coming season.

Of the major orchestras, Boston, New York, Cincinnati and Minneapolis have no women players, except and occasional second harpist when occasion demands.

Among the others, Pittsburgh has the most, with seven women musicians. San Francisco has five, Washington and Indianapolis four, Philadelphia three, Detroit ttwo and Chicago and Cleveland, Kansas City, Los Angles, Rochester and St Louis one each.

In no case has any woman player been with the orchestra for less than a year, and some range up to 9, 12 or 15 years.

* * *

The New Yorw Philharmonic-Symphony has completed its list of solists for the 1942-43 season. They include among the pianists, Claudio Arrau, Robert Casadesus, Jose Iturbi, Edward Kilenyi, Guiomar Novaes, Nadia Reisenberg, Arthur Rubinstein, Dudolph Serkin and Sergit Rachnmanioff. Violinists will be Fritb Kreisler, Nathan Milstein, Joseph Szigeti, Mishel Plastro and John Corigliano. 'Cellists will be Gregor Pittigorsky and Joseph Schuster.

Two young prize-winning painists also are scheduled for appearances. They will be the American who wins the third annual Leventritt award and the Brazilian winner of the Columbia concerts award.

Conductors during the 28 weeks as previously announced, will be Arturo Toscanini, Bruno Walker, Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Fritz Reiner and John Barbirolli.

* * *

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 1 1942

Music Center Calendar Is Revised

The revised calendar of programs for the second week at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, follows:

Tomorrow, at 8 PM, in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, forum, Aaron Copeland, moderator; topic, "What About Music Education for Amateurs?" free to public; Friday, 8.30 PM, in the theatre, concert by orchestra of Department 5, free; Saturday, 3 PM, in Music Shed, lecture by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, and concert; Sunday, 11 AM, in Chamber Music Hall, chamber music concert.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 15 1942

Violinist, 15, Wins Kelley Scholarship

23 Competitors Heard In Auditions In Seven States

Junior members of the Maine Federation of Music Clubs are interested in the announcement that to 15-year-old violinist, Genevieve Terry, daughter of Roland E. Terry, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Cheyenne, Wyo., goes the distinction of winning the 1942 Edgar Stillman Kelley Junior Scholarship of the National Federation of Music Clubs, named in honor of the 84-year-old dean of American composers.

After auditions involving 23 competitors in seven western states young Miss Terry was selected for this honor by a board of judges composed of Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and Cincinnati May Festival, Severin Eisenberg, artist member of the faculty of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and Emil Heermann, concertmaster of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and artist member of the faculty of the Cincinnati College of Music.

Miss Terry is the third teen-age musician to hold the scholarship, made possible by the penny contributions from the 60,000 junior members of the National Federation. Her predecessors were both pianists, David Smith, a student at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, in 1940, and Jean Graham of Chicago in 1941.

The scholarship comprises $250 in tuition fees, renewable annually on the basis of merit. Although a resident of Wyoming, the 1942 winner is a native of Denver and a pupil of Howard Smedley Reynolds of the Fine Arts Studio of that city, and entered the contest from Colorado. This is the fourth major award she has captured.

The three winners of scholarships in strings of the National Federation of Music Clubs, John Baldwin Fiasca of Milwaukee, Ruthabeth Krueger of Denver and Joseph Pepper of Bayonne, N. J., are now members of the student body of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., which opened July 5. The three young musicians, all violinists, were selected in nation wide competitions in which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra served as judges. The competitions were prompted by the serious shortage of skilled string performers, which is appreciably affecting the major orchestras of the country.

For this reason the Federation was especially pleased that the winner in the junior division was a violinist.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 13 [illegible]

MUSIC CENTER PLANS CONCERTS

Koussevitzky Group to End Season With Programs

To climax activities at the Berkshire Music Center's third season now on being sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., is a series of six concerts to be hold on three Saturday evenings, August 1, 8 and 15, and on three Sunday afternoons, August 2, 9 and 16.

The programs will be given by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and will include outstanding works by such composers as Haydn, Beethoven, Shostakovitch, Stravinsky, Martinu, Tchkaikowsky, Hanson, Mozart, Brahms, Copland, Franck, Sousa and Bach. Reserve seats for each of the six concerts may be obtained, and reservations may also be made for all activities being sponsored during the season.

Included in the Center's roster for the season are two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be given in English Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13. Also listed are five chamber music concerts to be held July 19 and 26, and August 2, 9 and 16, and four lecture-concerts to be presented by Olin Downes July 18 and 25, and August 1 and 8.

The center, which is sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, has become famous during the past two years as an institution which successfully aids in the development of the musical talent of the people of the nation. All proceeds from every performance are used for the general purposes of the Center and of the Foundation.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 11 1942

YOUNG MAN OF MOSCOW

WE ONCE believed Russia had killed off all her generals; it transpired we were wrong. It was also a widely-held fallacy that art could not flourish, or even survive, in the land of the Soviets, that writers, artists, musicians, disappeared with the Czars. On SUNDAY, JULY 19, Arturo Toscanini will give the lie to this popular misconception when he conducts the Seventh and latest symphony of brilliant young composer Dmitri Shostakovich (WEAF, 4:15 p.m.)

Hailed as one of Europe's foremost composers, 36-year-old Comrade Shostakovich was only 12 when the revolution broke out, soon developed into a very red Russian. His first symphony, written some six years later, was well received, but he was subsequently censured by the Soviet Government for the lack of subtlety expressed in his obviously propagandistic Second Third and Fourth symphonies. His Seventh, a product of the Siege of Leningrad, is dedicated "to our struggle against fascism, to our future victory, to my native city, Leningrad." The composer, now seeing service on the Russian front, declares the fundamental theme is devoted "to the ordinary Soviet citizens who have become heroes of this patriotic war."

The symphony's four movements cover 231 pages of music, take about 90 minutes to play. Alexei Tolstoy describes it as "One part renaissance, resurrection of beauty from ashes and ruins; the concluding part—worth living and fighting for—carries you on to beautiful cities and mountain summits of the future."

The score itself had as many adventures as its author. Written while "the bloody Hitlerite hordes were pressing toward the city, and all residents vowed to stop the arrogant foe," it was microfilmed and flown from Kuibyshev to Iran, thence to Cairo by car, on to the United States by plane. Toscanini and Serge Koussevitzky each received microfilm copies since they enjoy, respectively, radio and concert performance rights. The maestro's presentation on July 19 will, however, precede that planned by Koussevitzky for the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he is not as yet widely known in this country, Comrade Shostakovich may be remembered from his satirical opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," which was presented at the Metropolitan in February, 1935. On that occasion the all-too-realistic orchestral accompaniment to certain scenes turned New York's white-tied but generally broad-minded audience as red as the star of Russia.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

JUL 15 1942

* * *

Proximity of Royalty Adds To Berkshire Music Festival

There is quite a scramble among society leaders in Berkshire resorts to be among the first to have Queen Wilhemina of The Netherlands as their guest at one social function or another, and it will be a high feather in the cap of the successful hostess first able to have her majesty present at a soiree—for charity or otherwise.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, gave a tea in the garden of her Stockbridge home in compliment to Queen Wilhemina's daughter, Princess Juliana recently.

The third season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, bids fair to a brilliantly successful one with royalty and its entourage in the vicinity. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor, is presenting a series of six concerts arranged for the following Saturday nights at 8:30, and Sunday afternons at 3 p. m. in Tanglewood Shed: August 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. Two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (in English) will be given at 8:30 p. m. Aug. 7 and Aug. 13. There will be five chamber music concerts at 11 a. m. Sundays, July 19 and 26; Aug. 2, 9, and 16. Tour lecture concerts by Olin Downes will be given at 3 P. M. July 18, 25, Aug. 1 and 8.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

JUL 13 1942

Music News of Maine Interest

Several hundred people attended the first concert of the summer to be presented by the orchestra and band of the New England Music Camp at Sidney, on Lake Messalonskee, Sunday. Paul Wiggin, camp director, welcomed the visitors and assured them that these weekly free concrets would be continued all summer just as they have for the past five seasons. About half of the students have been at the camp before this year.

Sunday afternoon's program seemed to feature the brass players as there were numbers for brass alone on both the orchestra and band program. Particularly effective was the Chorale of Bach, arranged for brass instruments and played by the orchestra.

The program opened with the dignified Festal March by Cadman, played by the orchestra and its regular conductor, Albert W. Wassell. Then followed numbers in three different dance rhythms: first the lilting Gold and Silver Waltzes of Lehar; then Sevilla by Albeniz with its complicated Spanish rhythms; finally an Irish Jig from Hadley's Silhouettes.

The band program was opened by another Bach chorale from Sleepers Wake. Following that Albert I. Dorr, assistant conductor, and the band won more than casual applause with their performance of The Desert Song Overture by Romberg. Mr. Wiggin directed the band in a sympathetic performance of Schubert Selection. Also played by the band were Gloriole by Noble, the difficult Mardi Gras of Grofe, and Bagley's Imperial March.

Berkshire Festival of Music

Maine, in common with all New England music-lovers, will be glad to hear that the Festival of Music, under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, will be carried on this year, as in the two seasons past, at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be the director of the festival which he inaugurated in 1940.

The purposes of the Koussevitzky Foundation, a memorial to the late Natalie Koussevitzky, wife of Dr. Koussevitzky, as those who have followed this musical project know, are, in every way possible, to aid in the development of musical talent, to grant scholarships and fellowships in music to persons desiring musical education or opportunities, in need of and worthy of financial assistance, and the commissioning of musical composition.

Piatigorsky, the great cellist, who appeared in Auburn last winter in the Lewiston-Auburn Community concert series, is enthusiastic about this movement and expressed his intention of continuing his work there this summer, making this an exception to his plan of taking a vacation from musical activities this summer, believing, with Dr. Koussevitzky that "in time of war and crisis an especial effort must be made to preserve our music and art treasures." Mr. Piatigorsky has been a member of the staff of instructors two seasons.

The work of the various activities of the school will culminate in a series of six orchestra concerts, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, on the Saturday evenings of Aug. 1, 8 and 15 and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 2, 9 and 16, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, with soloists. The opera department will present two performances in English of Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor, the evening of Aug. 7 and 13. Five chamber music concerts will be given on Sunday mornings, July 19 and 26, and August 2, 9, and 16 and there will be four lecture-concerts by Olin Downes the Saturday afternoons of July 18 and 25 and August 1 and 8. Programs for the concerts will be announced later.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

JUL 15 [illegible]

TELLS OF COURSE AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CTR.

Miss Doris Van de Bogart, director of music in the schools of Bradford, Pa., who is taking the course at the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director, spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Van de Bogart at their home on Rossman avenue and, when interviewed, gave out the following information as to this summer's session at the Center.

There are 253 students at the Center this year, 65 men and 193 women. The chorus suffers somewhat from the lack of men, because while the women can play all of the instruments in the orchestra, they cannot sing tenor and bass.

There are students from Mexico Cuba, Brazil, Canada, Venezuela, and the United States.

There are 92 in the Advanced Orchestra and 60 in the Second Orchestra. The Advanced Orchestra, with Dr Koussevisky conducting, will play the Sunday afternoon concerts in place of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Second Orchestra will play the other concerts and will play for the opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor," now in rehearsal.

Miss Van de Bogart's interesting schedule at the Music Center is as follows and certainly gives her few idle moments:

9:30-10:45 a. m.—Chorus, madrigal group. 11:00-1245 — Chamber music small ensembles coached by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra 12:45-1:45—Lunch from the special "lunch wagon," eaten in fair weather, under the trees, 1-45-2:45—Gregorian Chant, with lectures by R. Mills Silby, director of music, St. Ignatius Loyola, New York City, 3:00-6:00—Second Orchestra, under Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer, 8:00-0:00—Big Chorus under the direction of Hugh Ross, director of the schola Cantorum, New York City, and Ifor Jones, director, Bethlehem Bach Choir. And so to bed!"

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 1 [illegible]

Pulitzer Prize Winner Among Center Students

LENOX—Prominent among students at the Berkshire Music Center this year is Lukas Foss who has returned for the third year on a full scholarship. He won this year's Pulitzer prize for his orchestral composition, entitled "Suite to the Tempest of Shakespeare," based on some stage music which he wrote two years ago for the New York Theatre Guild.

Mr. Foss who is 20, started to compose and to play the piano at seven years of age. While in Paris, he studied with teachers of the Conservatoire. In 1940, he was graduated from the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia where he studied conducting, composition, and piano. He was also the youngest graduate of that institute. His compositions are published at Schirmer's, New York, and have been played in concerts and over the radio.

Two years ago, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky accepted him as one of his four active conducting students. In his first concert this season, Mr. Foss will conduct the Mendelssohn piano concerto; the modern American work, "Billy the Kid," and a ballet suite by Aaron Copeland. The concert takes place Friday evening.

89.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 12 1942

The World

By Pie

Serg Koussevitzky had some telling words to say on the power of music in our lives—in the course of his address to the audience at the opening of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, near Pittsfield, Massachusetts? He also made some comments which can be challenged?

"The cultural standing of a people, as we know it, is determined by it creative potency in art more than in any other field, and music of all the arts expresses the very depth and soul of a people.

"Like a living stream, music ever finds its expression in the life of the individual, or the history of a whole country like a symbol of freedom, it breaks barriers between nations and carries its message to the world."

I cannot quite agree, however, with Mr. Koussevitzky's comment upon "a mechanistic civilation" having "lowered the cultural values of musical art."

What would have happened if our mechanical genius and progressiveness had not made this nation what it is to-day? Where would the Boston Symphony Orchestra be?

Where would all the other major and minor orchestras be if our mechanism had not put us at the head, financially as well as industrially, of every other nations? And how about our opera, music schools, and all other factors which have contributed to make us the foremost musical nation of all nations?

The good Dr. Koussevitzky seems to have slipped a cog.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

JUL 17 1942

In the Berkshires

While the music festival at Tanglewood has been abandoned this season, the music center, with its various courses of instruction, is active as usual. Dr. Koussevitzky has announced a series of concerts to be given by the student orchestra under his direction in August at the time of the usual festival. Those programs will be given on August 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. As all the students are capable musicians, above the ordinary and the results ought to be good. Distinguished artists chosen to appear on these programs include Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist and Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, the duo pianists. There will be a gala program for Russian relief on August 14 and two performances of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by the opera group. Novelty at the orchestral concerts will be one of the first performances in this country of the new Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch.

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON

JUL 5 - 1942

RCA conducted the negotiations which brought Dmitri Shostakovitch's 7th Symphony here by Clipper in microfilm. The score of the 95 minute work would weigh 40 pounds in paper form. Has musical circles excited—since the Russians gave the performance rights to Toscanini, Stokowski and Koussevitsky simultaneously!.. Elsa Maxwell, who (in several interviews) boasted: "I never go to night clubs" spent 5 hours in El Morrocco the other a. m....The Jack Hearst image is expected in October...J. Arthur Hirsch, the Canadian theater tycoon, is on the verge of surprising his intimates about his secret marriage to Virginia Weyman ...The LaMartinique management was stuck for a guest star last Sunday night. So it advertised (on Saturday) that it would have "The World's Greatest Comedian"...As a result several stars reserved ringside locations to find out who THAT was...A clever trick. Of course, all obliged when called on.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
JUL 15 1942

Violinist, 15, Wins Kelley Scholarship

23 Competitors Heard In Auditions In Seven States

Junior members of the Maine Federation of Music Clubs are interested in the announcement that to 15-year-old violinist, Genevieve Terry, daughter of Roland B. Terry, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Cheyenne, Wyo., goes the distinction of winning the 1942 Edgar Stillman Kelley Junior Scholarship of the National Federation of Music Clubs, named in honor of the 84-year-old dean of American composers.

After auditions involving 23 competitors in seven western states young Miss Terry was selected for this honor by a board of judges composed of Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and Cincinnati May Festival, Severin Eisenberg, artist member of the faculty of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and Emil Heermann, concertmaster of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and artist member of the faculty of the Cincinnati College of Music.

Miss Terry is the third teen-age musician to hold the scholarship, made possible by the penny contributions from the 60,000 junior members of the National Federation. Her predecessors were both pianists, David Smith, a student at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, in 1940, and Jean Graham of Chicago in 1941.

The scholarship comprises $250 in tuition fees, renewable annually on the basis of merit. Although a resident of Wyoming, the 1942 winner is a native of Denver and a pupil of Howard Smedley Reynolds of the Fine Arts Studio of that city, and entered the contest from Colorado. This is the fourth major award she has captured.

The three winners of scholarships in strings of the National Federation of Music Clubs, John Baldwin Fiasca of Milwaukee, Ruthabeth Krueger of Denver and Joseph Pepper of Bayonne, N. J., are now members of the student body of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., which opened July 5. The three young musicians, all violinists, were selected in nation wide competitions in which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra served as judges. The competitions were prompted by the serious shortage of skilled string performers, which is appreciably affecting the major orchestras of the country.

For this reason the Federation was especially pleased that the winner in the junior division was a violinist.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
JUL 13 1942

MUSIC CENTER PLANS CONCERTS

Koussevitzky Group to End Season With Programs

To climax activities at the Berkshire Music Center's third season now on being sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., is a series of six concerts to be hold on three Saturday evenings, August 1, 8 and 15, and on three Sunday afternoons, August 2, 9 and 16.

The programs will be given by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and will include outstanding works by such composers as Haydn, Beethoven, Shostakovitch, Stravinsky, Martinu, Tchkaikowsky, Hanson, Mozart, Brahms, Copland, Franck, Sousa and Bach. Reserve seats for each of the six concerts may be obtained, and reservations may also be made for all activities being sponsored during the season.

Included in the Center's roster for the season are two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be given in English Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13. Also listed are five chamber music concerts to be held July 19 and 26, and August 2, 9 and 16, and four lecture-concerts to be presented by Olin Downes July 18 and 25, and August 1 and 8.

The center, which is sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, has become famous during the past two years as an institution which successfully aids in the development of the musical talent of the people of the nation. All proceeds from every performance are used for the general purposes of the Center and of the Foundation.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 11 1942

YOUNG MAN OF MOSCOW

WE ONCE believed Russia had killed off all her generals; it transpired we were wrong. It was also a widely-held fallacy that art could not flourish, or even survive, in the land of the Soviets, that writers, artists, musicians, disappeared with the Czars. On SUNDAY, JULY 19, Arturo Toscanini will give the lie to this popular misconception when he conducts the Seventh and latest symphony of brilliant young composer Dmitri Shostakovich (WEAF, 4:15 p.m.)

Hailed as one of Europe's foremost composers, 36-year-old Comrade Shostakovich was only 12 when the revolution broke out, soon developed into a very red Russian. His first symphony, written some six years later, was well received, but he was subsequently censured by the Soviet Government for the lack of subtlety expressed in his obviously propagandistic Second, Third and Fourth symphonies. His Seventh, a product of the Siege of Leningrad, is dedicated "to our struggle against fascism, to our future victory, to my native city, Leningrad." The composer, now seeing service on the Russian front, declares the fundamental theme is devoted "to the ordinary Soviet citizens who have become heroes of this patriotic war."

The symphony's four movements cover 231 pages of music, take about 90 minutes to play. Alexei Tolstoy describes it as "One part renaissance, resurrection of beauty from ashes and ruins; the concluding part—worth living and fighting for—carries you on to beautiful cities and mountain summits of the future."

The score itself had as many adventures as its author. Written while "the bloody Hitlerite hordes were pressing toward the city, and all residents vowed to stop the arrogant foe," it was microfilmed and flown from Kuibyshev to Iran, thence to Cairo by car, on to the United States by plane. Toscanini and Serge Koussevitzky each received microfilm copies since they enjoy, respectively, radio and concert performance rights. The maestro's presentation on July 19 will, however, precede that planned by Koussevitzky for the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he is not as yet widely known in this country, Comrade Shostakovich may be remembered from his satirical opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," which was presented at the Metropolitan in February, 1935. On that occasion the all-too-realistic orchestral accompaniment to certain scenes turned New York's white-tied but generally broad-minded audience as red as the star of Russia.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
JUL 15 1942

Proximity of Royalty Adds To Berkshire Music Festival

There is quite a scramble among society leaders in Berkshire resorts to be among the first to have Queen Wilhemina of The Netherlands as their guest at one social function or another, and it will be a high feather in the cap of the successful hostess first able to have her majesty present at a soiree—for charity or otherwise.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, gave a tea in the garden of her Stockbridge home in compliment to Queen Wilhemina's daughter, Princess Juliana recently.

The third season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, bids fair to a brilliantly successful one with royalty and its entourage in the vicinity. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor, is presenting a series of six concerts arranged for the following Saturday nights at 8:30, and Sunday afternons at 3 p. m. in Tanglewood Shed: August 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. Two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (in English) will be given at 8:30 p. m. Aug. 7 and Aug. 13. There will be five chamber music concerts at 11 a. m. Sundays, July 19 and 26; Aug. 2, 9, and 16. Tour lecture concerts by Olin Downes will be given at 3 P. M. July 18, 25, Aug. 1 and 8.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL
JUL 13 1942

Music News of Maine Interest

Several hundred people attended the first concert of the summer to be presented by the orchestra and band of the New England Music Camp at Sidney, on Lake Messalonskee, Sunday. Paul Wiggin, camp director, welcomed the visitors and assured them that these weekly free concrets would be continued all summer just as they have for the past five seasons. About half of the students have been at the camp before this year.

Sunday afternoon's program seemed to feature the brass players as there were numbers for brass alone on both the orchestra and band program. Particularly effective was the Chorale of Bach, arranged for brass instruments and played by the orchestra.

The program opened with the dignified Festal March by Cadman, played by the orchestra and its regular conductor, Albert W. Wassell. Then followed numbers in three different dance rhythms: first the lilting Gold and Silver Waltzes of Lehar; then Sevilla by Albeniz with its complicated Spanish rhythms; finally an Irish Jig from Hadley's Silhouettes.

The band program was opened by another Bach chorale from Sleepers Wake. Following that Albert I. Dorr, assistant conductor, and the band won more than casual applause with their performance of The Desert Song Overture by Romberg. Mr. Wiggin directed the band in a sympathetic performance of Schubert Selection. Also played by the band were Gloriole by Noble, the difficult Mardi Gras of Grofe, and Bagley's Imperial March.

Berkshire Festival of Music

Maine, in common with all New England music-lovers, will be glad to hear that the Festival of Music, under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, will be carried on this year, as in the two seasons past, at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be the director of the festival which he inaugurated in 1940.

The purposes of the Koussevitzky Foundation, a memorial to the late Natalie Koussevitzky, wife of Dr. Koussevitzky, as those who have followed this musical project know, are, in every way possible, to aid in the development of musical talent, to grant scholarships and fellowships in music to persons desiring musical education or opportunities, in need of and worthy of financial assistance, and the commissioning of musical composition.

Piatigorsky, the great cellist, who appeared in Auburn last winter in the Lewiston-Auburn Community concert series, is enthusiastic about this movement and expressed his intention of continuing his work there this summer, making this an exception to his plan of taking a vacation from musical activities this summer, believing, with Dr. Koussevitzky that "in time of war and crisis an especial effort must be made to preserve our music and art treasures." Mr. Piatigorsky has been a member of the staff of instructors two seasons.

The work of the various activities of the school will culminate in a series of six orchestra concerts, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, on the Saturday evenings of Aug. 1, 8 and 15 and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 2, 9 and 16, the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, with soloists. The opera department will present two performances in English of Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor, the evening of Aug. 7 and 13. Five chamber music concerts will be given on Sunday mornings, July 19 and 26, and August 2, 9, and 16 and there will be four lecture-concerts by Olin Downes the Saturday afternoons of July 18 and 25 and August 1 and 8. Programs for the concerts will be announced later.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER
JUL 15 1942

TELLS OF COURSE AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CTR.

Miss Doris Van de Bogart, director of music in the schools of Bradford, Pa., who is taking the course at the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director, spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Van de Bogart at their home on Rossman avenue and, when interviewed, gave out the following information as to this summer's session at the Center.

There are 258 students at the Center this year, 65 men and 193 women. The chorus suffers somewhat from the lack of men, because while the women can play all of the instruments in the orchestra, they cannot sing tenor and bass.

There are students from Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Canada, Venezuela, and the United States.

There are 92 in the Advanced Orchestra and 60 in the Second Orchestra. The Advanced Orchestra, with Dr. Koussevisky conducting, will play the Sunday afternoon concerts in place of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Second Orchestra will play the other concerts and will play for the opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor," now in rehearsal.

Miss Van de Bogart's interesting schedule at the Music Center is as follows and certainly gives her few idle moments:

9:30-10:45 a. m.—Chorus, madrigal group. 11:00-1245 — Chamber music, small ensembles coached by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra 12:45-1:45—Lunch from the special "lunch wagon," eaten in fair weather, under the trees. 1-45-2:45—Gregorian Chant, with lectures by R. Mills Silby, director of music, St. Ignatius Loyola, New York City. 3:00-6:00—Second Orchestra, under Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer, 8:00-10:00—Big Chorus under the direction of Hugh Ross, director of the schola Cantorum, New York City, and Ifor Jones, director, Bethlehem Bach Choir. And so to bed!"

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 14 1942

Pulitzer Prize Winner Among Center Students

LENOX—Prominent among students at the Berkshire Music Center this year is Lukas Foss who has returned for the third year on a full scholarship. He won this year's Pulitzer prize for his orchestral composition, entitled "Suite to the Tempest of Shakespeare," based on some stage music which he wrote two years ago for the New York Theatre Guild.

Mr. Foss who is 20, started to compose and to play the piano at seven years of age. While in Paris, he studied with teachers of the Conservatoire. In 1940, he was graduated from the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia where he studied conducting, composition, and piano. He was also the youngest graduate of that institute. His compositions are published at Schirmer's, New York, and have been played in concerts and over the radio.

Two years ago, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky accepted him as one of his four active conducting students. In his first concert this season, Mr. Foss will conduct the Mendelssohn piano concerto; the modern American work, "Billy the Kid," and a ballet suite by Aaron Copeland. The concert takes place Friday evening.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 12 1942

The World

By Pier

Serg Koussevitsky had some telling words [illegible]y on the power of music in our lives—in the course of his address to the audience at the opening of the third season of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, near Pittsfield, Massachusetts? He also made some comments which can be challenged?

"The cultural standing of a people, as we know it, is determined by it creative potency in art more than in any other field, and music of all the arts expresses the very depth and soul of a people.

"Like a living stream, music ever finds its expression in the life of the individual, or the history of a whole country like a symbol of freedom, it breaks barriers between nations and carries its message to the world."

I cannot quite agree, however, with Mr. Koussevitzky's comment upon "a mechanistic civilation" having "lowered the cultural values of musical art."

What would have happened if our mechanical genius and progressiveness had not made this nation what it is to-day? Where would the Boston Symphony Orchestra be?

Where would all the other major and minor orchestras be if our mechanism had not put us at the head, financially as well as industrially, of every other nations? And how about our opera, music schools, and all other factors which have contributed to make us the foremost musical nation of all nations?

The good Dr. Koussevitzky seems to have slipped a cog.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
JUL 14 1942

In the Berkshires

While the music festival at Tanglewood has been abandoned this season, the music center, with its various courses of instruction, is active as usual. Dr. Koussevitzky has announced a series of concerts to be given by the student orchestra under his direction in August at the time of the usual festival. Those programs will be given on August 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16. As all the students are capable musicians, above the ordinary and the results ought to be good. Distinguished artists chosen to appear on these programs include Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist and Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, the duo pianists. There will be a gala program for Russian relief on August 14 and two performances of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by the opera group. Novelty at the orchestral concerts will be one of the first performances in this country of the new Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch.

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON
JUL 5 - 1942

RCA conducted the negotiations which brought Dmitri Shostakovitch's 7th Symphony here by Clipper in microfilm. The score of the 95 minute work would weigh 40 pounds in paper form. Has musical circles excited—since the Russians gave the performance rights to Toscanini, Stokowski and Koussevitsky simultaneously!... Elsa Maxwell, who (in several interviews) boasted: "I never go to night clubs" spent 5 hours in El Morrocco the other a. m.... The Jack Hearst image is expected in October... J. Arthur Hirsch, the Canadian theater tycoon, is on the verge of surprising his intimates about his secret marriage to Virginia Weyman ...The LaMartinique management was stuck for a guest star last Sunday night. So it advertised (on Saturday) that it would have "The World's Greatest Comedian"... As a result several stars reserved ringside locations to find out who THAT was... A clever trick. Of course, all obliged when called on.

90.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
JUL 1 21942

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 11.—(UP)—The first American performance of Dmitri Shostakovich's "war symphony"—the seventh—will be given by the NBC Symphony orchestra under Arturo Toscanini on Sunday, July 19, it is announced by the National Broadcasting company.

The program will be broadcast from 4:15 to 6 p. m., E. W. T., over a national hook-up. It will be carried by short wave to the rest of the world.

The first public concert performance, as previously announced, will be by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Music center in Massachusetts during August, and will be followed by one led by Toscanini with the New York Philharmonic-symphony at Carnegie Hall in October.

The symphony, written by the young soviet composer under fire during the German siege of Leningrad last year, runs about an hour and-a-half and calls for an enlarged orchestra. It was first performed, in Kuibishev last March, but has not been heard outside Russia. The score, reproduced on microfilm, was brought here by airplane and is being enlarged for distribution to the instrumentalists of the orchestra.

A new recording of Beethoven's mellow Eighth Symphony, by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony, has been brought out by Victor on its July list. A Toscanini recording of this masterpiece was needed and it is superbly done. The reproduction is first rate. It comes in an album of three 12-inch records.

The 19th annual festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music will be held at the Greek theater on the campus of the University of California at Berkeley on August 8 and 9. Werner Janssen will conduct the Janssen Symphony orchestra in a presentation of new works of the world's leading composers, selected by an international jury which includes Aaron Copland, American composer.

Jose Iturbi and his sister, Amparo Novarro, will be heard in duo-piano recital during this season of symphonic concerts in Hollywood Bowl, which starts next week. Iturbi will conduct from the piano at the joint concert, scheduled for August 18.

Leopold Stokowski will conduct the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra at its first summer season in Pasadena, an extension of the Hollywood Bowl series.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 16 1942

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
COURIER
7/16/42

FESTIVAL CONCERTS

Series of Programs Is Announced by Conductor Koussevitzky.

In a folder sent out to the public this week the Berkshire Music Center announces a Festival of Music to be presented under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation with Serge Koussevitzky as director and conductor. The performances are by the Berkshire Music Center students and faculty, which last week opened for its third season.

The work of the various activities of the school will culminate in a series of six orchestra concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The opera department will present two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor"; Chamber Music concerts will be given on five Sunday mornings and Olin Downes will present a series of four "lecture-concerts" on Saturday afternoons.

The Koussevitzky Music Foundation is a non-profit organization, whose main aim is to aid in developing musical talent. All proceeds from these performances will be used for the general purposes of the Center and of the Foundation. The purposes of the group as stated in the certificate of incorporation, are: "in every way possible . . . to aid in the development of musical talent; to grant scholarships and fellowships in music . . . to persons who desire musical education or opportunities, who may be in need of financial assistance to commence or continue their musical education, and who are deemed worthy thereof." It was organized by Dr. Koussevitzky in memory of his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky.

The chamber music concerts are to be given on Sunday mornings at 11:00 o'clock on July 19, July 26, August 2, 9 and 16. Mr. Downes will present his lecture concerts on Saturday afternoons at 3:00 o'clock on July 18, July 25, August 1 and 8. The opera performances are to be at 8:30 o'clock on Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13.

Concert programs will be at 8:30 o'clock on Saturday evening and at 3:00 o'clock on Sundays. The programs follow: Saturday, August 1, Symphony in B-flat, No. 102 (Haydn), Overture to Leonore, No. 3 (Beethoven). Symphony No. 5, Op. 47 (Shostakovitch); Sunday, August 2, Appollon Musagete (Stravinsky), Concerto Grosso (Martinu), Symphony No. 4 in F minor (Tschaikovsky); Saturday, August 8, Symphony No. 3 (Hanson), Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (Mozart) with Luboshutz and Nemenoff as soloists, Symphony No. 4 in E-minor (Brahms); Sunday, August 9, Quiet City (Copland), Symphony in D-minor (Franck), Violin Concerto (Tschaikovsky) with Ruth Posselt, soloist, Two Marches (Sousa); Saturday, August 15, Magnificat in D (Bach); Symphony No. 9 in D minor (Beethoven); Sunday, Aug. 16, Symphony No. 25 in G minor (Mozart), Symphony No. 7 (Shostakovitch).

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR
JUL 1 7 1942

Berkshire Music Center Announces Concerts

Music lovers in this community will be interested in the announcement that the Berkshire Music Center will start its third season at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., with four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on July 18 and 25 and August 1 and 8.

Five chamber music concerts are scheduled for Sunday mornings on July 19 and 26 and August 2, 9 and 16. On Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13, there will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor." Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 17 1942

Opera and Concert Programs For Tanglewood Announced

Dr. Koussevitzky Offers Opera, Symphony and Chamber Music Events, Also Membership Plan

LENOX—Serge Koussevitzky, has announced the programs for the Berkshire Music Center's six symphonic concert programs to be given in the Shed at Tanglewood starting Aug. 1. He likewise has announced two opera performances, Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English for Aug. 7 and Aug. 13 at 8.30 PM. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the large student orchestra for the symphony concerts.

Five chamber music concerts will be given Sunday evenings, July 19, and 26 and Aug. 2, 9 and 16 at 8.30 and four lecture-concerts by Olin Downes on Saturday afternoons, July 18 and 25 and Aug. 1 and 8 at 3. Tickets for these two events are limited to 200 by the capacity of the chamber music hall.

Free to Men in Uniform

In making the announcement, Dr. Koussevitzky called attention to associate memberships in the Center at a moderate fee which admits to all these events. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all concerts.

In addition to these events included in the Center's "festival of music," there will be a benefit concert for Russian relief and the USO on Aug. 14.

The programs for the six symphony concerts will be as follows:

Saturday Evening, Aug. 1
Haydn ..... Symphony in B-flat, No. 102
Beethoven .. Overture to Leonore, No. 3
Shostakovitch .. Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 2
Stravinsky ..... Apollon Musagete
Martinu ..... Concerto Grosso..
Tchaikovsky..Symphony No. 4, in F-minor

Saturday Evening, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart..Concerto in E-flat (K. No. 365) For two pianos
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms.SymphonNo. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Copland ..... Quiet City
Franck ..... Symphony in D-minor
Tchaikovsky ..... Violin Concerto
Soloist—Ruth Posselt.
Sousa ..... Two marches

Saturday Evening, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven. Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Symphon No. 25 in G-minor, K. No. 183
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

Tanglewood Programs Open To Public

Festival Planned By Center—Chamber Music Sundays

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox during the next five weeks.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestral concerts to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons—beginning on Aug. 1. Works from the great repertorie will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian war relief concert on Friday evening, Aug. 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Eeventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be presented on Aug. 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

There will be five chamber music concerts under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday evenings at 8.30, July 19, 26, Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms on Saturday afternoons, July 25, Aug. 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances. At two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for week ends so music lovers can go to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the Center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations.

The Berkshire Music Center already is well under way on its third season with an enrollment of almost 260 students, made up of the most gifted young musicans in this country. Coming from states as far away as California and Florida, included for the second year are five students from Latin America.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
COURIER
7/16/42

CONCERTS WILL GO ON.

Although the customary music festival is, for this year, as dead as the dodo bird, a war-time substitution in the form of a competent Berkshire Music Center orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky of world fame, will give a series on the same dates and at the same place. Thus the advance notice to the music world, published first in this newspaper on May 28 to the effect that although the festival was cancelled there would be concerts, has been verified.

The orchestra will consist of instructors (regular members of the Boston Symphony) and students. It will have the approval not only of Dr. Koussevitzky but of the country's best music critics from the New York newspapers. The place will again be Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The schedule will be somewhat shortened from the original plan of the Boston orchestra, in that three Saturday evening concerts and three Sunday afternoon performances will be presented, instead of the nine scheduled concerts of the symphonic orchestra. In addition to the concerts, however, there will be a performance of the "Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts on Sunday mornings, and four lecture concerts Saturday afternoons.

Those who bemoaned the demise of the festival, and who are genuine music devotees, now can have their melodic souls refreshed, Boston Symphony or no Boston Symphony.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 17 1942

5-Week Music Festival Set At Lenox

Berkshire Center Will Be Opened This Sunday

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks. Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons, beginning August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orcchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed.

The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief concert on Friday evening August 14, at which the event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be given on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26; August 2, 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs of the center will be a series of four lecture-concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8 and 15. These will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center, with the privilege or attending all concerts and school performances. Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 16 1942

Berkshire Center Plans Complete Music Festival

Programs to Be More Varied than Ever at Lenox

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the Center a richer and more varied festival than ever.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons—beginning Aug. 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed.

The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief Concert on Friday evening, Aug. 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera and Chamber Music

Opera performances will be given on Aug. 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, Aug. 2, 9, and 16. A departure from past programs will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, Aug. 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for weekends so that music lovers can journey to Tanglewood for several events. This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the Center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances. Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

260 Enrolled

The Berkshire Music Center is already well under way on its third season with a surprisingly large enrollment of almost 260 students. Coming from states as far away as California and Florida and including for the second year five students from Latin America.

At the exercises opening the current season, Dr. Koussevitzky declared that if ever there was a time to speak of and to work for music it is now. "It is during the troubled periods in history that those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture stand in the front rank, battling to help an endangered humanity. America has a great responsibility towards the agonized European world. She holds her traditions and culture from the old world, and has now been given the flaming torch of all the suffering and oppressed peoples to carry, to keep burning until the time of peace. And America will be able to restore the cultural wealth which was entrusted to her, and which she alone can save from destruction."

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
JUL 19 1942

Student Musicians, Young Artist Contest, Is Listed

FULL details of the 1943 biennial contests for student musicians and young artists, sponsored by the Ohio and National Federation of Music clubs, have been announced by Mrs. R. A. Herbruck, Ridgeway drive, Dayton, O., chairman of contests for Ohio and the Great Lakes district. Information and bulletins giving the required musical numbers, rules and regulations regarding all auditions may be obtained by addressing Mrs. Herbruck, who is receiving applications for entrance in the preliminary state contests to be held before March 1, 1943.

Young Artist Awards

The young artist awards, $1,000 each, will be open, as in previous years, to contestants between 21 and 30 years of age. They will be given to the outstanding violinist, pianist, man or woman singer selected by a jury of nationally and internationally famous judges at the biennial convention of the federation to be held in Detroit opening April 28, 1943, after state and district contests have narrowed down the number of competitors to a potential 16 in each classification.

The better instrumentalist of the two final biennial winners will receive in addition to a cash award, the Schubert Memorial award, which comprises appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston and the Philadelphia orchestra in Philadelphia.

Student musicians, aged 18 to 23, may compete in piano, violin, violincello, organ, woman's and man's voice, the winners receiving state awards and official certificates which will be presented by Mrs. Guy Gannett, president of the National federation. Contests for student musicians and with the district.

Brilliant Artists

Brilliant achievements of young artist winners in recent federation contests have attracted unusually favorable attention to thoese biennial events. Carroll Glenn, 22-year-old violinist winner at the Los Angeles convention in 1941 has 16 bookings with major orchestras as well as innumerable recital engagements as the aftermath of her first season as a young artist winner. Eleanor Steber and Margaret Harshaw have won Metropolitan Opera auditions awards; Mary Lida Bowen will sing the stellar role in the world premiere of Dr. Walter Damrosch's new opera, "The Opera Clock," Nov. 3 in New York. Among the successful American concert artists who have won in biennial contests in the past are: Robert Weeds, Dalles Franz, Phyllis Kraeuter, Genevieve Rowe, Jacques Abram, Ida Krehm, Hilda Burke and Kathryn Meisle.

Artist sponsors for the contests are as follows: Harold Bauer, Paul Althouse, Mabel Garrison, Beryl Rubinstein, Hugo Kortschalk, Hans Hess, Palmer Christian and Mme. Louise Homer. Bruno Walter, distinguished conductor, is the new president of the Schubert Memorial.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 17 1942

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS TOMORROW

Curtailed Because of War Conditions

AT TANGLEWOOD

Olin Downes to Give First in Series of Four Lectures—Chamber Music Concert Sunday.

The opening feature of the 1942 Berkshire Music Festival, curtailed this year because of war conditions, will be presented tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood where Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give the first in a series of four lecture-concerts, to be followed Sunday evening by the first in a series of chamber music concerts.

Tomorrow's program will consist of lectures on "Plain Chant" and "Motet" and will be illustrated by groups of students of the Berkshire Music Center, which is under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. E. Power Biggs, will be organ soloist. Sunday's program will include a Beethoven Trio in C Minor, the Kodaly Quartet No. 2, and the Schubert Quartet in A. Minor.

The Festival will culminate in six symphony concerts by a student orchestra conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, the first of which will be given Aug. 1, and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." The student orchestra is made up of about 100 players.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 18 1942

Tanglewood Changes Chamber Music Hour

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood has stated that its chamber music concerts, erroneously announced for Sundays at 11 a. m., will be presented Sunday evenings at 8:30. The dates are: July 19 and 26, and Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

Other concerts remain as announced.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION
JUL 14 1942

MUSIC CENTER PLANS CONCERTS

Koussevitzky Group to End Season With Programs

To climax activities at the Berkshire Music Center's third season now on being sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., is a series of six concerts to be hold on three Saturday evenings, August 1, 8 and 15, and on three Sunday afternoons, August 2, 9 and 16.

The programs will be given by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and will include outstanding works by such composers as Haydn, Beethoven, Shostakovitch, Stravinsky, Martinu, Tchkaikowsky, Hanson, Mozart, Brahms, Copland, Franck, Sousa and Bach. Reserve seats for each of the six concerts may be obtained, and reservations may also be made for all activities being sponsored during the season.

Included in the Center's roster for the season are two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be given in English Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13. Also listed are five chamber music concerts to be held July 19 and 26, and August 2, 9 and 16, and four lecture-concerts to be presented by Olin Downes July 18 and 25, and August 1 and 8.

The center, which is sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, has become famous during the past two years as an institution which successfully aids in the development of the musical talent of the people of the nation. All proceeds from every performance are used for the general purposes of the Center and of the Foundation.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 1[illegible] 1942

Tanglewood Concerts

Certainly music is not dead in the Berkshires.

Through the initiative and the courage of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, there will be many interesting programs at Tanglewood which rightly are called a "festival of music," to take the place of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Opera, symphony concerts by a well drilled and capable orchestra of 104 members and chamber music are offered.

Dr. Koussevitzky has no illusions about the effect of gas rationing and the desire to save rubber which will necessarily limit the number of people who can come to Tanglewood from a great distance. At the same time, he is confident that Berkshire music lovers and others knowing the value of Tanglewood not only as a national shrine but as a Berkshire asset, will support his endeavors. Justly, he hopes everyone who can, will come, and that people will double up in their cars to make it possible for neighbors and friends to enjoy the programs.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUL 17 1942

EDITORIAL COMMENT ABOUT KOUSSEVITZKY MUSIC FOUNDATION

In a world at war when man's genius seems bent only on destruction—it is good to know that we do have among us men who still have the souls of artists. The fields of art and culture must remain in our civilization as green oases in a forbidding desert of man's destructiveness.—Worcester Telegram.

clined to smile a good deal, Miss Maynor has ideas about church music she is willing to share. "It seems to me," she says, "that the day of raucous jig-time 'hymns' is past. Any music that 'sticks out' in a religious service is likely to be bad. The mood of a church is worshipful, and anything that detracts from the mood has no place in it. And nobody knows better than I how difficult it is for a church that is not wealthy to have the right music. When I was a student in Philadelphia I worked with such a choir—we finally aroused so much interest that we made a rule to rehearse two and a half hours from the time the latest member arrived. Next we added a second rehearsal every week. Then we had good music."

Aside from the revival of general interest, Miss Maynor thinks the Westminster Choir School, of which John Finley Williamson is head, is perhaps the best influence in church music today. "You can't produce good music, religious or otherwise, without training," she says. It's too bad it won't just grow—but it won't."

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
JUL 16 1942

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO HAVE 6 CONCERTS

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Berkshires.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons—beginning on Aug. 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief Concert on Friday evening, Aug. 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be given on Aug. 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the Opera Department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, August 2, 9 and 16.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 16 1942

VARIED FESTIVAL OF MUSIC SLATED FOR TANGLEWOOD

Music Center to Present Six Orchestra Concerts, Two Opera Performances, Five Chamber Music Concerts

Lenox, July 15—A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music center here during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music foundation, founded recently by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center which this year offers to the public a more varied festival than ever before.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons, beginning on August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr Koussevitzky's baton at a Russian War Relief concert on Friday evening, August 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera and Chamber Music

Opera performances will be given on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, August 2, 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs of the center will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for weekends so that music lovers may come to Tanglewood for several events. This year, for the first time, the public may buy associate memberships in the center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music foundation and the Berkshire Music center, both nonprofit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free.

92.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUL 19 1942

Koussevitzky Foundation Gives Festival Concerts At Berkshire Music Center

LENOX, MASS.—A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Massachusetts, during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the Center which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Berkshires.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons—beginning on August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief concert on Friday evening, August 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

OPERA performances will be given on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the Opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, August 2, 9, and 16.

A departure from past programs of the Center will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8, and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for week-ends so that music lovers can journey to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase Associate memberships in the Center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER is already well under way on its third season with a surprisingly large enrollment of almost 260 students, made up of the most gifted young musicians in this country. Coming from states as far away as California and Florida, the group includes for the second year five students from Latin America.

Held on what is declared by visitors to be the most beautiful campus setting in this country, on the magnificent Tanglewood estate near Lenox, the Berkshire Music Center in its first two sessions proved the worth of Dr. Koussevitzky's plan for a school of music both for advanced students who could in no other place in this country find an opportunity for ensemble work under the direction of an outstanding conductor and a faculty of experienced orchestra players and also for the large group of music lovers and amateurs who wished to spend a summer period in an inspiring musical atmosphere. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival had added much to the attractiveness and stimulation of such a school. When the Berkshire Festival was cancelled, Dr. Koussevitzky's broad vision answered the challenge.

THE result is the 1942 Festival of Music to be given under his direction. At the exercises opening the current session he declared that if ever there was a time to speak of and to work for music it is now. "It is during the troubled periods in history that those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture stand in the front rank, battling to help an endangered humanity. America has a great responsibility towards the agonized European world. She holds her traditions and culture from the old world, and has now been given the flaming torch of all the suffering and oppressed peoples to carry, to keep burning until the time of peace. And America will be able to restore the cultural wealth which was entrusted to her, and which she alone can save from destruction."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 18 1942

Chamber Music Tomorrow at Tanglewood

First of Series At Music Center Planned by Piatigorsky

At Tanglewood tomorrow evening at 8.30 will be given the first of a series of chamber music concerts under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky. The program will feature a Beethoven trio in C minor, the Kodaly Quartet No. 2 and the Schubert quartet in A minor.

The first student orchestra which will play during the Berkshire Music Center's festival under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, next month, now numbers 104 members.

The series of "What About?" forum meetings, held Wednesday evenings in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library, with Aaron Copland, well-known composer as moderator, have attracted large audiences. The first meeting was a discussion on "What About Opera?" The second was, "What About Music Education for Non-Professionals: or Is Music Appreciation a Racket?"

Associate memberships provide admission for all the Tanglewood concerts.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 18 1942

BERKSHIRES HELPING TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL

Communities Set Up Transportation Scheme to Assist Music Lovers

Lenox, July 18—At the festival of music slated at Tanglewood during the next four weeks the transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighboring communities.

Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space, will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Community cooperation will thus be a huge supplement to the regular public transportation facilities. Local hotel managers are cooperating in this mobilization in order to assure transportation for their guests.

This afternoon Olin Downes, noted music critic of the New York Times, gave the first of a series of four lecture-concerts. Tomorrow evening, the first of a series of chamber music concerts will feature a Beethoven trio in C Minor, the Kodaly quartet No 2, and the Schubert quartet in A Minor.

The series of "What About?" forum meetings, held Wednesday evenings in Sedgwick hall, Lenox library, with Aaron Copland, well-known composer, as moderator, have attracted large audiences. The first meeting was a discussion on "What about opera?" The second was "What about music education for non-professionals: or is music appreciation a racket?"

The festival will culminate in the six symphony concerts by a student orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 19 1942

FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD

The Berkshire Music Center, of which Serge Koussevitzy is director, announces that the first in a series of Chamber Music Concerts there, at Lennox, Mass., will take place tonight. Featured will be a Beethoven Trio in C Minor, the Kodaly Quartet No. 2 and the Schubert Quartet in A Minor.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
JUL 18 1942

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

RADIO WILL CARRY RUSSIAN WAR-BORN SYMPHONY TO ALL WORLD TOMORROW

The name in music at the moment is Shostakovich.

It's probable that no symphony ever will have been listened to by so many people at one time as will the Western Hemisphere premiere of this young Russian's No. 7, tomorrow. It will be broadcast to the world from 4:15 to 6 P. M. The actual playing time is about 90 minutes.

Drama surrounds the debut of the opus, as it did its creation. It was written under flame and fire of the Nazi attack on Leningrad.

Reproduced in 35 millimeter microfilm prints, the scene and parts—after a long series of international negotiations—were sent by plane from Kuibyshev (April 9) to Teheran, Iran, and thence by auto it was taken to Cairo, from where it was brought to this country by plane.

Under Toscanini

The nation's leading conductors have fought for the honor of conducting its first performance here. Toscanini won and the N. B. C. Orchestra under his baton will perform it tomorrow.

Koussevitzky, without even waiting to see the score, secured the first concert-performance rights in the Western hemisphere. He will conduct it at Tanglewood, August 14.

Stokowski and Rodzinski also bid for the glory, but the latter didn't even get a look-in. Four years ago Toscanini had been offered the first performance of Shostakovich's Fifth, and he declined it. N. B. C. handed him the score of the Seventh very uncertainly. He scrutinized the notes with his near-sighted eyes, and, as he turned the pages, commented: "Very interesting and most effective". He looked further, and said: "Magnificent!"

The amazing reception accorded the seventh symphony upon its world premiere in Moscow on March 29 emphasizes the importance of tomorrow's performance.

It is scored for a mammoth orchestra. There are a number of instrumental and scoring innovations. For example, 8 horns—an unorthodox requirement—are called for. The 4 movements are Allegretto, Moderato poco Allegretto, Adagio, and Allegro non troppo. Strictly, we are told, it is more a symphonic suite than a symphony. There is little development of its bold themes.

Musical observers have hailed the symphony as setting into music the fight of freedom-loving peoples against Axis barbarism. The work is hailed as a living history, an eloquest sermon and a belligerent challenge to threatening and invading hordes.

Dmitri Shostakovich himself, who is only 36, attributes his new symphony to: "the events of 1941—war: This does not mean that it gives a naturalistic imitation of war. My Seventh Symphony is devoted to the ordinary Soviet citizens who have become heroes of this patriotic war. That is the fundamental theme."

An idea of the effect of the symphony on a listener can be obtained by the following excerpt from Alexie Tolstoy's description of the Moscow performance:

"The symphony just touches, just drifts across the great path of humanity's progress. One part of it is renaissance, resurrection of beauty from ashes and ruins. But the symphony's concluding part takes you into the future, the magnificent world with its ideas and passions. It is worth living for and fighting for. . . ."

It is interesting to note that Shostakovich composed the symphony last year between tours of duty digging trenches in the outskirts of Leningrad and fire-watching on the roof of the Conservatory. One does not usually think of the muses communing with mortals under such circumstances.

Anticipation is high—higher than it's been since the first Manhattan performance of "Parsifal" in 1903.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
9 1942

THE BERKSHIRE . . . music center is well under way on its third season with an enrollment of about 260 students, made up of young musicians from states as far away as California and Florida and a group of five from Latin America. The usual series of six concerts on three week-ends in August will call many music lovers to the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., altho the usual Berkshire festival is not being held. All proceeds from the concerts this year and from the two opera performances will be devoted to the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music center, both non profit organizations.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD
JUL 19 1942

ADD X CARDS—Berkshire Festival will be business-as-usual this Summer, with the student ork but Koussevitzky conducting as usual . . . three Saturday night concerts start Aug. 1, chamber music starts tonight, also two performances of Merry Wives of Windsor Aug. 7 and Aug. 18.

Super John A. Young is on a whale of a vacation, fishing in New Hampshire . . . Kay Oliver McKeon's sister will be next to the altar, but not for another year says Anne.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 19 1942

Koussevitsky Ready to Pay Festival Cost

Serge Koussevitsky will carry on the Berkshire Festival at his own expense this summer; or rather, he will divert to that purpose income of the Koussevitzky Foundation, which he controls.

The purpose of the Foundation is to develop and promote musical talent both creative and executive, and it is Koussevitsky's conviction that the summer orchestral conducting school in connection with the Berkshire Festival has proved one of the most valuable contributions to music education in the country.

In the past the Koussevitzky Foundation has commissioned such composers as Samuel Barber, Nicolai Berezowsky, Benjamin Britain and Bohuslav Martinu. This season two natives are to be represented on the Tanglewood programs—Howard Hanson, with his Third Symphony, which was reviewed in the Times-Herald on the occasion of its performance in the American Festival at Rochester, N. Y., and Aaron Copland's "Quiet City."

There will be three Saturday evening concerts this summer, three Sunday afternoon concerts and two opera performances, all under Koussevitzky's baton. The first Saturday concert will present Haydn's B-Flat Symphony, Beethoven's "Lenora" Overture No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovich, August 1; August 8, Hanson's Third Symphony, Brahm's Fourth Symphony and Mozart's Concerto for two pianos; August 15, Bach's "Magnificat" in D, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The Sunday matinees will bring to hearing Stravinsky's "Apollon Musagete," Concerto Grosso on Martinu, and Tschaikowsky's Concerto for violin, with the American, Ruth Posselt, as soloist. August 9; Mozart's G Minor Symphony, Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony August 16.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be sung in English August 7 and 13.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1942

Music Festival Begins At Berkshire Center

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Six Tanglewood Events

The Berkshire Music Center will hold a festival next month at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, with a schedule including six concerts by the center's orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the Music Shed. The program, including certain revisions since the original announcement, will be:

Saturday, Aug. 1, 8:30: Haydn, Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 2, 3 o'clock: Stravinsky, Apollon Musagete; Martinu, Concerto Grosso; Tschaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Saturday, Aug. 8, 8:30: Hanson, Symphony No. 3; Mozart, Concerto in E flat for two pianos (soloists, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff); Brahms, Symphony No. 4.

Sunday, Aug. 9, 3: Copland, Quiet City; Franck, Symphony in D minor; Tschaikovsky, Violin Concerto (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Sousa, Two marches.

Saturday, Aug. 15, 8:30: Bach, Magnificat in D; Beethoven, Symphony No. 9 (with Berkshire Music Center Chorus).

Sunday, Aug. 16, 3: Mozart, Symphony in G minor, No. 25 (K. 183); Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 7.

The Shostakovitch seventh symphony, which will be broadcast under Arturo Toscanini's direction this afternoon, will have its American concert premiere at Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky on Friday night, Aug. 14, in a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief.

Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by the center's opera department on Friday, Aug. 7, and Thursday, Aug. 13, at 8:30. Five chamber music concerts will be given on Sunday evenings at 8:30 o'clock, today, July 26 and Aug. 2, 9 and 16. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give four lecture-concerts on Saturday at 3. One was held yesterday, the others are scheduled for July 25, Aug. 1 and 8. Associate memberships admitting their holders to all the concerts and lectures (except for the Russian benefit) and one of the opera performances may be obtained for $16.50 and $11. Single seats will also be on sale.

The proceeds will be shared by the Koussevitzky Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both nonprofit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to the concerts.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 26 1942

TANGLEWOOD HAS UNIQUE PLAN TO TRANSPORT GUESTS

Those Driving to Concerts Who Have Space in Autos Are to Stop at 'Passenger Stations' in Each Town

Stockbridge, July 18—The festival of music to be held at Tanglewood during the next four weeks makes the third session of the Berkshire Music center unique. Rehearsals now in progress show that playing under Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the center, is an incentive to the 100 members of the advanced orchestra to perform with unprecedented enthusiasm. As a result, Dr Koussevitzky finds that he has under his baton an orchestra whose six concerts will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth.

The transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighborhood communities. Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Local hotel managers are cooperating in this mobilization to assure transportation for their guests.

Tomorrow evening the first of a series of chamber music concerts will feature a Beethoven trio in C minor, the Kodaly quartet No 2, and the Schubert quartet in A minor.

The series of "What About?" forum meetings, held Wednesday evenings in Sedgewick hall at Lenox library, with Aaron Copland, well-wnown composer, as moderator, have attracted large audiences. The first meeting was a discussion on "What about opera?" The second was "What about music education for nonprofessionals, or, is music appreciation a racket?"

The festival will culminate in the six sympohny concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
JUL 19 1942

Sharps and Flats

Myra Kinch and her dance company are creating interest in the modern dance at the Los Angeles campus of the University of California. Last Wednesday afternoon a large audience of summer session students gathered for a largely comic pantomime program danced to the music of Manuel Galea.

Paul Wittgenstein, the one-armed pianist, was the inspiration for a modern program in the First Congregational Church July 10 which attracted the attention of musicians. The program: Franz Schmidt, Toccata; Marion Bauer, prelude; Eugene Goossens, "Philomel;" Samuel Barber, "Sleep Now;" Virgil Thompson, "Five Phrases From the Song of Solomon" (for voice and percussion played by Paul Pisk and sung by Fern Sayre," and Walter Bright, "Fantasy."

Felix Sitjar, the young violinist who was hurt in a railroad accident on his way to Curtis Institute last winter, has returned to his home in Los Angeles and is playing in the first violin section of the California Junior Symphony.

The Berkshire Music Center Boston Symphony concerts had to be called off this summer but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has arranged six concerts to be given at Tanglewood by the students of the center under his direction. The orchestra will have as soloist Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 1. The last, Aug. 16, will include the first American performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony. The opera department will climax its activities with two performances of Nicolai's "Merry Wives."

Emilio Osta, pianist, and his sister, Teresita, dancer, gave joint programs in several auditoriums during a recent visit to their home city after a Latin-American tour. Osta plays the music of Spanish origin as it should be played, cleanly, brilliantly, precisely and definitely dependent upon rhythms. His work has that unexpectedness of good improvisations, is romantic and easy to listen to without thought of the technical work that makes it so enjoyable.

Guidi Scipioni, concertmaster of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, is visiting in Los Angeles. He was with Toscanini in New York several years, and was concertmaster for the Queen's Hall Orchestra in London when Oboeist Henri De Busscher of the Los Angeles Philharmonic was playing there.—I. M. J.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
JUL 19 1942

Koussevitzky's Plans For Berkshire Festival

For those who want to attend the Berkshire music festival, which is being sponsored by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to replace the canceled series by the Boston Symphony, here are the wheres, whens and how muches:

There will be six concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, conducted, of course, by Dr. Koussevitzky. They will be heard on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16.

Prices for the orchestral concerts are $2.20 for reserved seats for one concert; $1.10 for unreserved seats for one concert; reserved seats for all six concerts, $13.20; unreserved seats for all six concerts; $6.60.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1942

Toscanini to Pay Tribute to Russians

To Conduct Symphony Written Under Fire of Nazi Guns

By JOHN SELBY.
[Wide World Arts Editor.]

NEW YORK, July 18.—Arturo Toscanini, who reverses the custom and hibernates as a rule through the summers, emerges temporarily from retirement at 4:15 o'clock Sunday for a hands-across-the-sea gesture toward Russia.

He will conduct for WEAF the first American performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh and most important symphony—90 minutes of music composed literally under the fire of German guns.

Sent to Five Conductors.

The symphony was sent on microfilm to five conductors in North America — Koussevitzky, Toscanini, Ormandy, Stokowski, and Chavez, the Mexican. First to produce it is Toscanini, using the N. B. C. symphony.

The symphony is designed, Shostakovitch has cabled friends in this country, to celebrate the plain people of Russia.

A road over Lake Ladoga's ice was said to have been the only supply line into Lenigrad through the siege. It was built by the people of the city, who, before the Nazis knew what was up, had fortified a strip of marshland east of the city and built a road over it.

Where the marsh ended, the lake began, and the road was run in a 50-mile loop over the ice to connect with the Moscow railroad, out of the Germans' reach. Every day 200,000 people of Leningrad worked on the road—at one or another time 2,800,000 of Leningrad's 3,000,000 people had a share in the job.

Many Make Contributions.

"I hope, and believe," Shostakovitch cabled, "that my symphony's first American performance will be for the benefit of Russian war relief, which is doing so many fine things for my people."

Since the invited audience which will hear Toscanini's performance will sit in famous studio 8-H, tickets cannot be sold. A large number of ticket holders has contributed $100 a pair, just the same. And Edward C. Carter, president of Russian war relief, will help Tosconini break another precedent.

Mr. Carter will make a speech on the program, something that Toscanini always has viewed with alarm, to put it mildly.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUL 18 1942

TANGLEWOOD SOLVES TRANSPORT PROBLEM

Car Owners in Near-By Towns to Accommodate Music Patrons

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 17—The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, where a music festival is to be held the coming four weeks with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as director, has found a method of transporting patrons from neighboring communities including Lenox, Pittsfield, Stockbridge and Great Barrington.

A plan has been devised whereby a festival concert ticket will entitle the holder to a seat in a Tanglewood-bound privately owned car, whose operator would stop at a central clearing point in each community.

The Music Center management has applied to Federal recreational transportation authorities in Boston for special permits to allow the Berkshire Street Railway Company to run buses to the Center. The nearest point to Tanglewood on regular bus routes is Curtis Hotel, a mile distant.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1942

Shostakovitch Outlines Aim of 7th Symphony

It Expresses Russia at War, He Tells U. S. on Eve of Broadcast Here Today

Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra completed rehearsals yesterday afternoon for the first American performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony, which will be broadcast from the National Broadcasting Company's Radio City Studio 8-H over the WEAF network between 4:15 and 6 o'clock today. In connection with this performance the following message from the Russian composer was received yesterday by his American distributors, the Am-Rus Music Corporation:

"Before the performance of my seventh symphony I would like to share some of my thoughts with my friends and listeners overseas. The symphony is being performed by an orchestra conducted by the brilliant master Arturo Toscanini on a day when freedom-loving nations are waging battle against the common enemy, Hitlerism. When I was working on the seventh symphony, my thoughts were of hatred of the enemy and love of people—of the ideals of progressive mankind and of our coming victory.

"I wrote my symphony in my native city of Leningrad in those days when the enemy tore at the gates of this beautiful city. My music is my weapon and I have endeavored to vest my symphony with those feelings which grip our people. We fight for light against darkness, for freedom against tyranny, for humanism against barbarity. Hitlerism is the enemy of culture and civilization—and during these grim and strenuous days our culture and art must not stand aside from this historical fight. Let us muster all our strength for an active and decisive struggle in the name of triumph and righteousness."

Mr. Toscanini received yesterday the following telegram from the composer:

"Dear Friend: I am happy that you will conduct my seventh symphony. I am confident that with your consummate inherent talent and superlative skill you will convey to the public of democratic America the concepts which I have endeavored to embody in the work. Unfortunately the circumstances are such that I am unable to come to America to hear your brilliant rendition. I send you my sincerest greetings and best wishes for your good health and happiness."

Mr. Toscanini and the members of the orchestra sent a congratulatory cable to Mr. Shostakovitch yesterday afternoon from the studio.

The symphony was first played in Kubyshev, Russia, last March 1, and later in Moscow and Leningrad. The first performance outside of Russia was at the Albert Hall, London, on June 29. The first American concert performance will be at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Friday night, Aug. 14, under Serge Koussevitzky.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
JUL 19 1942

Miss McCann Writes From Berkshires

MOST of the credit for the continuance of the activities at the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood should be given to Serge Koussevitsky, according to a letter from Miss Eleanor McCann, in charge of music at the Dayton Art Institute, who is attending the center sessions. While the festival itself has been cancelled, a number of programs will be continued under the sponsorship of the Kousevitzki Music foundation.

Highlight of the opening session, said Miss McCann, was the performance of the quintet for piano and strings, by Shostakovitch, which was played by Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Richard Burgin, violinist; Alfred Krips, violinist; Jean Lefranc, violist, and Jean Bedetti, cellist.

In an address to the audience, Dr. Koussevitzki named the new board of directors of the Koussevitzki foundation which made the present summer session possible despite the inroads in audiences made by the war. The new directors are unusual, he said, because they are not millionaires but musicians. They include Mrs. Charles Mitchell, pianist; Aaron Copeland, composer and lecturer; Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Gregor Piatigorsky, world famed cellist, and Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester.

Dr. Koussevitzki spoke of the great need in the world for music. He said music is needed now more than ever when the whole world is shaken in regard to culture and art—even to life itself. He stressed the fact that music is a symbol that breaks down barriers between nations—that it could help bring peace. To the students of the center he said in conclusion, "You hold the torch of culture in your hands. Guard it so that you can restore it when peace comes!"

94.

PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL
JUL 19 1942

Berkshire Music Center Festival Will Carry On

LENOX, Mass., July 18.—A full-fledged festival of music will be held at the Berkshire Music center at Lenox during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitsky Music foundation formed recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center.

Foremost on the list is the series of six concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky beginning August 1 with an orchestra of 96 advanced students. Appearing as soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violinist and Lubohutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists.

Opera performances will be given August 7 and 13. Two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera company and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, New England Conservatory of Music, will sing Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of the center's department. Olin Downes, noted music critic, will give a series of lectures on various types of musical forms illustrated by student performances.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center with the privilege of attending all concerts. Men in uniform will be admitted free.

Proceeds this season will go to the Koussevitzky Music foundation and the Berkshire Music center, both non-profit organizations.

National Music Council Reports on Orchestras

Replacement of men players by women has not been found necessary so far because of military service demands, the National Music Council reports after a survey of the 16 major symphonies of the United States. The council notes, however, that the continued calling up of men may alter the picture considerably during the coming season.

The Boston, New York, Cincinnati and Minneapolis orchestras have no women players except an occasional second harpist. Others have from one to five.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 21 1942

DEDICATE CONCERT TO SALE OF BONDS

Koussevitzky Sets Aside Aug. 2 Tanglewood Program for War Stamp Drive — Morgenthau May be Speaker.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and also director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will dedicate the Aug. 2 concert, the second in the series of six starting Aug. 1, to the Treasury department's campaign for the sale of war bonds and stamps, it was announced today in Pittsfield by Mrs. George Edman.

It is expected, although not definitely announced as yet, that Secretary of the U. S. Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., will be the principal speaker for the benefit.

Going further toward material support, it was revealed that each ticket stub will be redeemed for 50 cents worth of stamps before and after the concert. Tickets will be placed on sale in this city as well as in the other cities and towns in the county soon although local officials knew nothing of the scheme today. Mrs. Donald M. MacPherson of Pittsfield, county chairman of the women's division of the committee handling war bonds, has made the arrangements for this unique feature of the concert. The Center orchestra, whic will play under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, is composed of 104 pieces.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 18 1942

OPENING EVENT IS SLATED TODAY AT TANGLEWOOD

Lecture-Concert Series Will Open; Chamber Music Program Tomorrow

STOCKBRIDGE, July 18—The Festival of Music to be held at Tanglewood during the next four weeks makes the third session of the Berkshire Music Center unique. Rehearsals now in progress show that playing under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center, is an incentive to the 100 members of the advanced orchestra to perform with unprecedented enthusiasm. As a result, Dr. Koussevitzky finds that he has under his baton an orchestra whose six concerts will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth.

Transportation Plan

The transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation-scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighboring communities. Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Community cooperation will thus be a hugh supplement to the regular public transportation facilities. Local hotel managers are cooperating in this mobilization in order to assure transportation for their guests.

The opening event of the festival will be this afternoon, when Olin Downes, noted music critic of the New York Times, will give the first of a series of four lecture-concerts. The first will be on the subject of Plain Chant and Motet, illustrated by student groups, with E. Power Biggs, the eminent organist, as soloist.

Tomorrow evening, the first of a series of Chamber Music Concerts will feature a Beethoven Trio in C Minor, the Kodaly Quartet No. 2, and the Schubert Quartet in A Minor.

The series of "What About?" Forum meetings, held Wednesday evenings in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library, with Aaron Copland, well known composer as moderator, have attracted large audiences. The first meeting was a discussion on "What about opera?" The second was "What about music education for non-professionls: or is music appreciation a racket?"

The Festival will culminate in the six symphony concerts conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai "Merry Wives of Windsor."

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
JUL 19 1942

THE KOUSSEVITSKY . . . Music Foundation was founded by Dr. Koussevitsky in memory of his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitsky, but the motivating aim of the Foundation goes back into the early musical life of Dr. Koussevitsky, for in 1909 he and Madame Koussevitsky founded the Music Publishing House of Edition Russe to protect gifted composers from exploitation by commercial publishing houses. The works of such composers as Serge Prokofieff and Igor Stravinsky were introduced to the public under the Edition Russe imprint. The Foundation was organized to continue this aim, Dr. Koussevitsky believing that in time of war and crisis a special effort must be made to preserve music and art treasures.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
JUL 19 1942

While the Boston Orchestra has canceled the annual Berkshire Festival this summer because of transportation difficulties, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., will present a festival of its own from August 1 to 16 inclusive. The Center Orchestra, conducted by Sergi Koussevitzki, will play three Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concerts. There will be five chamber music concerts on the Sunday mornings of July 19 and 26, August 2, 9 and 16; and two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English on Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUL 18 1942

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAMS OPEN TO PUBLIC

Festival Planned by Berkshire Music Center at Lenox — Chamber Music To Be Offered on Sundays.

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestral concerts to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoons—beginning on August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, due-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian war relief concert on Friday evening, August 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Eleventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be presented on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

There will be five chamber music concerts under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday evenings at 8:30 o'clock, July 19, 26, August 2, 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances. At two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for week ends so music lovers can go to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the Center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations.

The Berkshire Music Center already is well under way on its third season with an enrollment of almost 260 students, made up of the most gifted young musicians in this country. Coming from states as far away as California and Florida, included for the second year are five students from Latin America.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
JUL 19 1942

A Brave Challenge

Having given up the famous Summer festival by his Boston orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky is making a brave challenge with his second best forces. Advanced students from all over the country who are bearing the banner of music alone cannot but rise to establishment of "green oases in a forbidding desert of man's destructiveness," as an editorial in one newspaper has put it.

Neighbors of the Lenox vicinity furnish the soloists. When Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, played here in a Civic Music Association concert, Madame Nemenoff said: "Why didn't you come to see us? We have a house in the Berkshires." They will appear with the student orchestra Saturday night, Aug. 8, in Mozart's two-piano concerto in E-flat (K. No. 365) while Ruth Posselt, wife of Richard Burgin, concert-meister of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and on the Summer faculty, will play in the Tschaikowsky violin concerto Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9.

* * *

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 20 1942

Music Center Lists Varied Program

Lenox, Mass.—A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center, which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Berkshires.

Foremost is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday nights and three Sunday afternoons — beginning Aug. 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra also will appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief Concert on Friday night, Aug. 14, at which the greatest event will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakavitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be given Aug. 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of New England Conservatory of Music.

Five Chamber Music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, Aug. 2; 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, Aug. 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances. At two of these program Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

The programs have been arranged for weekends so music lovers can journey to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds at Tanglewood will be devoted to the purposes of Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

The Berkshire Music Center already is well under way on its third season with a large enrollment of almost 260 students, made up of many gifted young musicians. Coming from states as far away as California and Florida, the group includes for the second year five students from Latin America.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 20 1942

Berkshire Music Festival Transportation Plan Is Made Known

A festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the Center which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Berkshires.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday nights and three Sunday afternoons—beginning on Aug. 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian War Relief Concert on Friday evening, Aug. 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera performances will be given on Aug. 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the Opera Department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music. Five Chamber Music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the Center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

A departure from past programs of the Center will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, Aug. 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

Programs have been arranged for week-ends so that music lovers can journey to Tanglwood for several events. This year, for the first time, the public may purchase assicoate membership in the Center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances. Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

The transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighboring communities. Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Community cooperation will thus be a hugh supplement to the regular public transportation facilities. Local hotel managers are cooperating in this mobilization in order to assure transportation for their guests.

At Music Camp

Interlochen, Mich., July 20.—Howard Hanson, distinguished composer and the director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, will conduct the Interlochen orchestra Sunday, July 26, in his own famous Nordic Symphony. Hanson's appearance highlights the American emphasis of the 1942 Interlochen Bowl season. "American music," he says, "has breadth, simplicity, vigor, a dynamic sweep, and—at least sometimes—a sense of humor."

Sunday afternoon Hanson will lead the Interlochen Band in the andante movement of his Romantic Symphony, as arranged by Norman Goldberg, former Interlochen student, and in the love duet from his opera, Merrymount.

A second guest artist of the day will be Jacob Evanson, Pittsburgh music supervisor known as the founder of the Flint, Mich., a capella high school choir. He will lead the Interlochen Choir in a program including Negro and folk songs.

Ensemble music will feature the faculty concert Thursday, July 23. The only solo numbers will be clarinet works performed by Gustave Langenus, New York teacher. Millard Taylor of the Washington symphony (D. C.), Mihail Stolarevsky of the Cincinnati symphony, and Otto Zimmerman of the NBC symphony are among the players who will appear in five and seven instrument string ensembles arranged by Percy Grainger.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 will conclude this concert.

The Interlochen operetta workshop, under the direction of George Rasely, will present the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta Pinafore Aug. 8—the first production of this kind undertaken by the National Music Camp.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 20 1942

Olin Downes Speaker at Music Festival

The festival of music, which began Saturday at Tanglewood, and which will continue during the next four weeks makes the third session of the Berkshire Music center unique. Rehearsals now in progress show that playing under Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the center, is an incentive to the 100 members of the advanced orchestra to perform with unprecedented enthusiasm. As a result, Dr. Koussevitzky finds that he has under his baton an orchestra whose six concerts will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth.

Transportation Plan

The transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighboring communities. Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Community co-operation will thus be a huge supplement to the regular public transportation facilities. Local hotel managers are co-operating in this mobilization in order to assure transportation for their guests.

Festival Opens

The opening event of the festival Saturday afternoon was one of a series of four lecture-concerts by Olin Downes, noted music critic of the New York Times. His talk was on plain chant and motet, illustrated by student groups, with E. Power Biggs, the eminent organist, as soloist.

Last evening the first of a series of chamber music concerts featured a Beethoven Trio in C Minor, the Kodaly Quartet No. 2, and the Schubert Quartet in A Minor.

The series of "What About?" forum meetings, held Wednesday evenings in Sedgwick hall, Lenox library, with Aaron Copland, well known composer as moderator, have attracted large audiences. The first meeting was a discussion on "What About Opera?" The second was "What About Music Education for Non-Professionals: or Is Music Appreciation a Racket?"

The festival will culminate in the six symphony concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y
SENTINEL
7/23/42

HELEN BULLIS, 16, YOUNGEST MEMBER AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Helen Bullis, sixteen year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph S. Bullis of Leverich street, has the distinction of being the youngest participant in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The talented young cellist received a scholarship for the six weeks season and is playing in a string quartet and the advanced orchestra under direction of Koussevitzky.

As a member of the Hempstead High School Symphony Orchestra, where she holds the first cello desk, she has frequently appeared as soloist. She also played throughout the county with the Bullis String Quartet, composed of Helen and her sisters. For the past season she has been studying at the Kierna Zillotti School in New York.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 23 1942

TANGLEWOOD PLANS WAR BOND CONCERT

Koussevitzky to Dedicate Music Center Program On August 3

Lenox, July 23—On Sunday, August 2, at 3 p. m. at the Berkshire Music center of Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor, will dedicate a concert to the United States treasury department's war bond campaign. It is expected that Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr., will address the concert audience at the concert shed.

Mr Koussevitzky has selected as his program for that day two notable Sousa marches, Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, which will be played by Miss Ruth Posselt, and Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony.

The Berkshire Music center is contributing to the war bond drive 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert and the women's division of the war savings committee for Berkshire county, under the chairmanship of Mrs Donald F. McPherson, is working up a program of bond and stamp selling promotions which will combine to offer an outstanding program for the treasury.

In view of the fact that regular train and bus accommodations are still available to Lenox and that there are plenty of excellent rooming accommodations available, it will be possible for music lovers from all over Massachusetts and New York to enjoy a weekend amid the beauties of the Berkshires while attending the Koussevitzky concert and aiding in the war bond drive.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS

JUL 24 1942

Concert Backs Bonds

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky dedicates the first Sunday afternoon Berkshire Music Center Concert at Tanglewood, Aug. 2, to the War Bond Campaign. Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will speak.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 23 1942

Tanglewood Concert Aids War Bond Drive

Serge Koussevitzky will dedicate the Berkshire Music Center concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Sunday, August 2, at 3 p. m. to the U. S. Treasury Department's war bond campaign. It is expected that Secretary of the Treasury Henury Morgenthau jr., will address the concert audience at the concert shed. Fifty per cent of the proceeds of the concert will be contributed to the war bond drive. The program will include two Sousa marches, a Tschaikowsky violin concerto and the same composer's Fourth Symphony.

LA PORTE, IND.
HERALD-ARGUS

JUL 21 1942

The World of Music

New York—(UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopanist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicholai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
COURIER
7/23/42

BENEFIT CONCERT

Tanglewood Program on August 2 Will Benefit War Savings Sale.

The second in the series of six concerts to be presented at Tanglewood on Sunday afternoon, August 2, is to be a war bond and stamp sales benefit, dedicated to the United States treasury war bond campaign. In addition to advertising and promoting the sale of war stamps, the concert will actively sell stamps, for the stub of each ticket sold may be redeemed at the concert for 50 cents in war savings stamps.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, has taken an active interest in planning the affair and it is expected that Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury, will be the principal speaker. Before and after the concert and during intermissions, bonds and stamps will be sold at booths and by young people about the Tanglewood grounds.

Tickets may be obtained in Great Barrington from Mrs. Almon P. Culver, Mrs. John H. C. Church, Mrs. John Dodge Peters, the Berkshire Inn, and the war savings booth in front of the Woolworth store. Mrs. Peters is local chairman of the war savings committee. Reserved tickets are for seats in the box section at the Tanglewood Music shed.

The Sunday afternoon concert, which starts at 3:00 o'clock, will be the second of a series of six that the Berkshire Music Center orchestra of 104 pieces will give under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 22 1942

WAR BOND SELLING AT TANGLEWOOD

Concert On August 2 to Be Devoted to Aiding Sales—Secretary Morgenthau May Be Speaker

Pittsfield, July 21—Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, will dedicate the concert at Tanglewood on August 2 to the United States treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury, will be the principal speaker.

Going farther than merely dedicating the concert to the promotion of the sale of war bonds and stamps, Dr Koussevitzy has announced that the stub of each ticket sold may be redeemed at the concert for 50 cents in war savings stamps. Before and after the concert and during intermissions bonds and stamps will be sold at booths and by young people about the Tanglewood grounds.

The program will be the second of a series of six that the Berkshire Music Center orchestra of 104 pieces, conducted by Dr Koussevitzy, will give as a festival of music on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning August 1.

Mrs Donald F. McPherson, chairman of the Berkshire county women's committee for the sale of war bonds and stamps, is heading the committee on arrangements. Her assistants will include the county executive board and town committee for the sale of stamps and bonds. Tickets are on sale at stores and booths where stamps and bonds are sold.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 23 1942

TANGLEWOOD PLANS WAR BOND CONCERT

Koussevitzky to Dedicate Music Center Program On August 3 to the U. S. Treasury's Campaign

Lenox, July 22—On Sunday, August 2, at 3 p. m. at the Berkshire Music center of Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor, will dedicate a concert to the United States treasury department's war bond campaign. It is expected that Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., will address the concert audience at the concert shed.

Mr Koussevitzky has selected as his program for that day two notable Sousa marches, Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, which will be played by Miss Ruth Posselt, and Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony.

The Berkshire Music center is contributing to the war bond drive 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert and the women's division of the war savings committee for Berkshire county, under the chairmanship of Mrs Donald F. McPherson, is working up a program of bond and stamp selling promotions which will combine to offer an outstanding program for the treasury.

In view of the fact that regular train and bus accommodations are still available to Lenox and that there are plenty of excellent rooming accommodations available, it will be possible for music lovers from all over Massachusetts and New York to enjoy a weekend amid the beauties of the Berkshires while attending the Koussevitzky concert and aiding in the war bond drive.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 22 1942

Dedicates Berkshire Concert To War Bond Campaign

Koussevitzky Says Morgenthau Probably Will Be Speaker at Tanglewood on Aug. 2

PITTSFIELD, July 21—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, will dedicate the concert at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, on Aug. 2 to the U. S. Treasury War Bond Campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the principal speaker.

Going farther than merely dedicating the concert to the promotion of the sale of war bonds and stamps, Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of each ticket sold may be redeemed at the concert for 50 cents in war savings stamps. Before and after intermission bonds and stamps will be sold at booths and by young people about the Tanglewood grounds.

The concert will be the second of a series of six that the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra of 104 pieces, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, will give as a festival of music on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons beginning Aug. 1.

Mrs. Donald M. McPherson, chairman of the Berkshire County Women's Committee for the sale of war bonds and stamps, is heading the committee on arrangements. Her assistants will include the county executive board and town committees for the sale of stamps and bonds.

Tickets are on sale at stores and booths where stamps and bonds are sold.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 19 1942

The Berkshire Music Center, now in its third season, has an enrollment of almost 260 students, including some from California and Florida, and five from Latin America. The enrollment represents a drop of 100 from last season, but the sponsors are surprised and gratified that it should be as large as it is.

96.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

JUL 24 1942

Full Details Given For Young Artists' Audition

Full details of the contests through which four young American artists will win $1,000 cash awards in the spring of 1943 have been announced by Miss Ruth Ferry of New Haven, Conn., chairman of young artists' audition for the National Federation of Music clubs.

The awards will be open, as in previous years, to contestants between 21 and 30 years of age. They will be given to the outstanding violinist, pianist, man and woman singer selected by a jury of nationally and internationally famous judges at the biennial convention of the federation in Detroit late in April and early in May, 1943, after state and district contests have narrowed down the number of competitors to a potential 16 in such classification.

Harold Bauer, concert pianist, Richard Burgin of the Boston symphony orchestra, Mabel Garrison, formerly of the Metropolitan opera, and Paul Althouse, Metropolitan basso, are the artist-sponsors for the piano, violin and female and male voice classifications, respectively, and have selected a repertoire, obtainable through state and district contest chairmen, with which the contestants must familiarize themselves in part before

...le provides for ...gin by March 1, ...nclusion of dis... ...ter than 30 days before the national contest, which will be held during the biennial convention opening April 28, 1943.

The better instrumentalist among the two biennial winners will receive in addition to a cash award the Schubert memorial award, which comprises appearances with the Boston symphony orchestra in Boston and the Philadelphia orchestra in Philadelphia.

Coincidentally with the young artists' contest, state and district contests will be held for student musicians between 18 and 23 years of age, with the districts providing their own awards. Mrs. Fred A. Gillette of Houston, Tex., is national chairman of these events and the sponsors are Beryl Rubenstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin; Hans Hess, violincello; Palmer Christian, organ; Mme. Louise Homer, woman's voice; and Frank Ribb, man's voice.

Brilliant achievements of young artist winners in recent federation contests have attracted unusually favorable attention to these biennial events. Carroll Glenn, violinist, of Chester, S. C., winner at the Los Angeles convention of 1941, has 14 bookings with major orchestras as well as innumerable recital engagements as the aftermath of her first season as a young artist winner.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1942

The World Of Music

NEW YORK (U.P.) — Dr. Serge Koussevitsky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 69 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-panist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert verformance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 24 1942

War Bond Drive At Berkshire Center

Morgenthau Will Speak Aug. 2 at Tanglewood

On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, at 3 o'clock, at the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Serge Koussevitzky, famed director and conductor, will dedicate a concert to the U. S. Treasury Department's War Bond campaign. It is expected that Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., will address the concert audience at the concert shed on the grounds of Tanglewood.

Mr. Koussevitzky has selected as his program for that day two notable Sousa marches; Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, which will be played by Miss Ruth Possett, and Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony.

The Berkshire Music Center is contributing to the War Bond drive 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert and the Women's Division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, are working up a vast program of bond and stamp selling promotions which will combine to offer an outstanding program for the Treasury.

Regular train and bus accommodations are still available to Lenox and there are plenty of excellent rooming accommodations available, so that it will be possible for music lovers from all over Massachusetts and New York to enjoy a week-end amid the beauties of the Berkshires and while attending the outstanding Koussevitzky concert air in the all-important War Bond drive.

Secretary Morgenthau has expressed himself as highly pleased with the cooperation extended by Mr. Koussevitzky and officers of the Berkshire Music Center.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 25 1942

Concert Has Link to War Bond Drive

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood Aug. 2 to the War Bond campaign.

It is expected that Treasury Secretary Morgenthau will speak. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center. Ruth Posselt will be the soloist in the Tschaikowsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony, by Tschaikowsky.

War bond and stamp committees of Berkshire County are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and will sell stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Dr. Koussecitzky announces the stub of every ticket sold for the concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share your gas," which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood. Information booths are being set up in eight centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the festival is fortunate in that regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a weekend of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in war bonds.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 24 1942

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT TO AID BOND CAMPAIGN

Koussevitzky Will Dedicate His Second Program to Drive

Serge Koussevitzky's second concert at the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday, Aug. 2, will be dedicated to the Treasury Department's war bond campaign. Half the proceeds will be turned over to the Treasury, and Bonds and Stamps will be sold at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to address the audience, which will include 1,000 service men the conductor has invited from Westover Field.

The program has been changed to suit the occasion. Two modern works, Stravinsky's "Appolon Musagete" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso, will be replaced by two Sousa marches and the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist. The other work will be Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony.

The Bond and Stamp selling promotion being worked out in connection with the concert is being conducted by the women's division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson. "Victory" lunches will be on sale on the grounds, with the proceeds being invested in War Bonds.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 25 1942

FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD TO AID BOND SALE

Morgenthau May Speak at Koussevitzky Program on Sunday, Aug. 2

LENOX, July 25—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on Aug. 2, to the United States Treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will speak, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Stubs Good for Stamps

All the war bond and stamp committees of Berkshire County are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Dr. Koussevitsky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community co-operation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transporation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "Victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in war bonds.

Westover Men Invited

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1000 enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert.

The "Festive of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction. The series will open on Saturday evening, Aug. 1, and will continue on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons until Aug. 16. On Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13, performances will be given in English of Nicholai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by students in the opera department.

Olin Downes is presenting a series of four "lecture-concerts" on music forms on Saturday afternoons, assisted by student groups. Chamber music recitals are given in the new Chamber Music Hall on Sunday evenings.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 24 1942

Russian Relief Office Sells Varied Items

One of the most attractive shopping centers in Washington is the Russian War Relief Office at 1218 Connecticut Ave. NW.

All the proceeds of sales are donated for shipment of medical supplies to Russia.

For the culinary minded there is an attractive yellow-bound cookbook composed of recipes of individuals in public life, including a Russian recipe for "Pelmeny" by Serge Koussevitzky; a recipe for "Boef a la Stronganoff" by Lawrence Tibbett, and many others.

There are books of all kinds, especially those having to do with Russia and Russian people; art objects and paintings, and novelties.

The collection of Russian dolls delight children and grownups alike.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 23 1942

Robert Briggs Wins Scholarship At Tanglewood

Robert Briggs

Robert Briggs, young Pittsfield trombone player, has ben awarded scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center, it was announced today.

A native of Pittsfield, the young musician has played with virtually every local volunteer musical group, including the Stanley Club Junior Symphony Orchestra, the Pittsfield High School band and the Pittsfield Symphony Orchestra. Locally he has studied under Alphonse Pelletier, while in the past year at the New England Conservatory in Boston he has been a student under John Coffey, base

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

JUL 25 1942

BOND SALE TO BE AIDED BY BERKSHIRE CONCERT

Lenox, Mass., July 25. — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on August 2 to the United States Treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tschaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tschaikovsky.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Festival Scheduled

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks, contrary to previous announcements. The festival was reported called off last month.

One of the first acts of the Koussevitky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Kerkshires.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoon—beginning August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian war relief concert on Friday evening, August 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera Performances.

Opera performances will be given on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, August 2, 9, and 16.

A departure from past programs of the center will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

Programs on Weekends.

The programs have been arranged for weekends so that music lovers can journey to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUL 26 1942

THE BERKSHIRE

. . . Music center at Tanglewood has found a method of transporting patrons from surrounding communities to the music events. The purchase of a festival concert ticket entitles the holder to a seat in a Tanglewood-bound privately owned car, whose operator will stop at a central clearing point in each of the communities. The Music Center management has also appealed to the federal recreation for special permits to allow the Berkshire Street Railway company to run buses to the center. The nearest point now is more than a mile distant.

96.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

JUL 24 1942

Full Details Given For Young Artists' Audition

Full details of the contests through which four young American artists will win $1,000 cash awards in the spring of 1943 have been announced by Miss Ruth Ferry of New Haven, Conn., chairman of young artists' audition for the National Federation of Music clubs.

The awards will be open, as in previous years, to contestants between 21 and 30 years of age. They will be given to the outstanding violinist, pianist, man and woman singer selected by a jury of nationally and internationally famous judges at the biennial convention of the federation in Detroit late in April and early in May, 1943, after state and district contests have narrowed down the number of competitors to a potential 16 in such classification.

Harold Bauer, concert pianist, Richard Burgin of the Boston symphony orchestra, Mabel Garrison, formerly of the Metropolitan opera, and Paul Althouse, Metropolitan basso, are the artist-sponsors for the piano, violin and female and male voice classifications, respectively, and have selected a repertoire, obtainable through state and district contest chairmen, with which the contestants must familiarize themselves in part before entering the contest.

The time schedule provides for state contests to begin by March 1, 1943, and for the conclusion of district contests not later than 30 days before the national contest, which will be held during the biennial convention opening April 28, 1943.

The better instrumentalist among the two biennial winners will receive in addition to a cash award the Schubert memorial award, which comprises appearances with the Boston symphony orchestra in Boston and the Philadelphia orchestra in Philadelphia.

Coincidentally with the young artists' contest, state and district contests will be held for student musicians between 18 and 23 years of age, with the districts providing their own awards. Mrs. Fred A. Gillette of Houston, Tex., is national chairman of these events and the sponsors are Beryl Rubenstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin; Hans Hess, violincello; Palmer Christian, organ; Mme. Louise Homer, woman's voice; and Frank Ribb, man's voice.

Brilliant achievements of young artist winners in recent federation contests have attracted unusually favorable attention to these biennial events. Carroll Glenn, violinist, of Chester, S. C., winner at the Los Angeles convention of 1941, has 14 bookings with major orchestras as well as innumerable recital engagements as the aftermath of her first season as a young artist winner.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1942

The Lens

NEW YORK ... rge Koussevitsky's ... Music Center at L... ...s started its sum... ...estival, to continue on ... ...s until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 69 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-panist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert verformance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 24 1942

War Bond Drive At Berkshire Center

Morgenthau Will Speak Aug. 2 at Tanglewood

On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, at 3 o'clock, at the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Serge Koussevitzky, famed director and conductor, will dedicate a concert to the U. S. Treasury Department's War Bond campaign. It is expected that Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., will address the concert audience at the concert shed on the grounds of Tanglewood.

Mr. Koussevitzky has selected as his program for that day two notable Sousa marches; Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, which will be played by Miss Ruth Possett, and Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony.

The Berkshire Music Center is contributing to the War Bond drive 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert and the Women's Division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, are working up a vast program of bond and stamp selling promotions which will combine to offer an outstanding program for the Treasury.

Regular train and bus accommodations are still available to Lenox and there are plenty of excellent rooming accommodations available, so that it will be possible for music lovers from all over Massachusetts and New York to enjoy a week-end amid the beauties of the Berkshires and while attending the outstanding Koussevitzky concert air in the all-important War Bond drive.

Secretary Morgenthau has expressed himself as highly pleased with the cooperation extended by Mr. Koussevitzky and officers of the Berkshire Music Center.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 25 1942

Concert Has Link to War Bond Drive

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood Aug. 2 to the War Bond campaign.

It is expected that Treasury Secretary Morgenthau will speak. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center. Ruth Posselt will be the soloist in the Tschaikowsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony, by Tschaikowsky.

War bond and stamp committees of Berkshire County are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and will sell stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Dr. Koussecitzky announces the stub of every ticket sold for the concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share your gas," which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood. Information booths are being set up in eight centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the festival is fortunate in that regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a weekend of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in war bonds.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 24 1942

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT TO AID BOND CAMPAIGN

Koussevitzky Will Dedicate His Second Program to Drive

Serge Koussevitzky's second concert at the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday, Aug. 2, will be dedicated to the Treasury Department's war bond campaign. Half the proceeds will be turned over to the Treasury, and Bonds and Stamps will be sold at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to address the audience, which will include 1,000 service men the conductor has invited from Westover Field.

The program has been changed to suit the occasion. Two modern works, Stravinsky's "Appolon Musagete" and Martinu's Concerto Grosso, will be replaced by two Sousa marches and the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist. The other work will be Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony.

The Bond and Stamp selling promotion being worked out in connection with the concert is being conducted by the women's division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson. "Victory" lunches will be on sale on the grounds, with the proceeds being invested in War Bonds.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 25 1942

FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD TO AID BOND SALE

Morgenthau May Speak at Koussevitzky Program on Sunday, Aug. 2

LENOX, July 25—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on Aug. 2, to the United States Treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will speak, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Stubs Good for Stamps

All the war bond and stamp committees of Berkshire County are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Dr. Koussevitsky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community co-operation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transporation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "Victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in war bonds.

Westover Men Invited

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1000 enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert.

The "Festive of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction. The series will open on Saturday evening, Aug. 1, and will continue on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons until Aug. 16. On Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13, performances will be given in English of Nicholai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by students in the opera department.

Olin Downes is presenting a series of four "lecture-concerts" on music forms on Saturday afternoons, assisted by student groups. Chamber music recitals are given in the new Chamber Music Hall on Sunday evenings.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 24 1942

Russian Relief Office Sells Varied Items

One of the most attractive shopping centers in Washington is the Russian War Relief Office at 1218 Connecticut Ave. NW.

All the proceeds of sales are donated for shipment of medical supplies to Russia.

For the culinary minded there is an attractive yellow-bound cookbook composed of recipes of individuals in public life, including a Russian recipe for "Pelmeny" by Serge Koussevitzky; a recipe for "Beef a la Stronganoff" by Lawrence Tibbett, and many others.

There are books of all kinds, especially those having to do with Russia and Russian people; art objects and paintings, and novelties.

The collection of Russian dolls delight children and grownups alike.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 23 1942

Robert Briggs Wins Scholarship At Tanglewood

Robert Briggs

Robert Briggs, young Pittsfield trombone player, has ben awarded a scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center, it was announced today.

A native of Pittsfield, the young musician has played with virtually every local volunteer musical group, including the Stanley Club Junior Symphony Orchestra, the Pittsfield High School band and the Pittsfield Symphony Orchestra. Locally he has studied under Alphonse Pelletier, while in the past year at the New England Conservatory in Boston he has been a student under John Coffey, base

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

JUL 25 1942

BOND SALE TO BE AIDED BY BERKSHIRE CONCERT

Lenox, Mass., July 25. — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on August 2 to the United States Treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tschaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tschaikovsky.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Festival Scheduled

A full-fledged festival of music will take place at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., during the next five weeks, contrary to previous announcements. The festival was reported called off last month.

One of the first acts of the Koussevitky Music Foundation, founded recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center which this year offers to the public a richer and more varied festival than ever before presented in the Kerkshires.

Foremost on the list is the series of six orchestra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on three Saturday evenings and three Sunday afternoon—beginning August 1. Works from the great repertoire will be performed by an orchestra of 96 advanced students chosen from the whole country, with whom Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear. These concerts will take place in the Tanglewood Shed. The orchestra will also appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton at a gala Russian war relief concert on Friday evening, August 14, at which the greatest event of the evening will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, and the appearance of several outstanding soloists.

Opera Performances.

Opera performances will be given on August 7 and 13, when Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of this department at the center, on Sunday mornings, July 19, 26, August 2, 9, and 16.

A departure from past programs of the center will be a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes on various types of musical forms, given on Saturday afternoons, July 25, August 1, 8 and 15. These lectures will be illustrated by student performances; at two of these programs Yves Tinayre will be the soloist.

Programs on Weekends.

The programs have been arranged for weekends so that music lovers can journey to Tanglewood for several events.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center, with the privilege of attending all concerts and school performances.

Proceeds from all events at Tanglewood this season will be devoted to the purposes of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Berkshire Music Center, both non-profit organizations. Men in uniform will be admitted free to all the concerts.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUL 26 1942

THE BERKSHIRE

. . . Music center at Tanglewood has found a method of transporting patrons from surrounding communities to the music events. The purchase of a festival concert ticket entitles the holder to a seat in a Tanglewood-bound privately owned car, whose operator will stop at a central clearing point in each of the communities. The Music Center management has also appealed to the federal recreation for special permits to allow the Berkshire Street Railway company to run buses to the center. The nearest point now is more than a mile distant.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Music Unit Activities to Continue Under Koussevitzky

Series of Concerts Planned; Operas, Lecture-Recitals Also Listed At Lenox, Mass., Center

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Although war conditions necessitated calling off the 1942 Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" near Lenox, Mass., activities of the Berkshire Music Center will continue under auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation of which Serge Koussevitzky is director and conductor.

This excellently conceived Foundation is a memorial to Dr. Koussevitzky's wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky. Both founded the music publishing house of Edition Russe in 1909 to protect gifted composers from exploitation by commercial publishing firms. Prokofieff and Stravinsky works were introduced to the public by the Koussevitzky establishment.

Mr. Lewando

The Foundation aims to continue this policy. Composers invited to execute commissions include Samuel Barber, Nicolai Berezowski, Benjamin Britten and Bohuslav Martinu.

Among the interesting concerts to be given are the six performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, three consecutive braces of week-end events to be presented on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

The first of these occure on Aug. 1. The program embraces Haydn's B-flat symphony (102); Beethoven's 3rd Leonore overture and Shostakovitch's 5th symphony. Next Sunday's list includes Apollon Musagette, Stravinsky; Concerto Grosso, Martinu, and Tschaikowsky's 4th symphony.

The Aug. 8 offerings are Hanson's 3rd symphony, Mozart's two-piano E-flat concerto, (K-365) played by Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and Brahms 4th symphony. For the Aug. 9 concert the program comprises Copland's Quiet City, Franck's D-minor symphony, and Tschaikowsky's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Bach's Magnificat in D, and Beethoven's 9th symphony are the performance highlights for Aug. 15. The final orchestra concert on Aug. 16 will feature Mozart's G-minor symphony and Shostakovitch's new "war symphony," his 7th. This work was broadcast last Sunday by the NBC Symphony Orchestra led by Arturo Toscanini.

In addition to the foregoing orchestral events, two opera offerings of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English, are listed for the evenings of Aug. 7 and 13; also, five chamber music recitals on the agenda for Sundays at 11 a. m. These were inaugurated last week. The second is scheduled for today. Remaining events will be given on Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

Rounding out the general program are the four lecture-recitals on Saturday afternoons presented by Olin Downes. Two have already been given. The final two occur Aug. 1 and 8.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 26 1942

Quarter Notes

THIS WEEK'S FARE for Cincinnati's 21st season of Zoo summer opera consists of "Rigoletto," today and Thursday; "Mignon," Tuesday and Friday; "Hansel and Gretel" and "Pagliacci," Wednesday and Saturday.

Edward S. Babcox of Akron sends a card from Chautauqua, N. Y., where he and Mrs. Babcock are fortunate enough to hear much of the six weeks of music every summer. "Ed" writes that the orchestra has a magnificent program for the season. It opened with James Melton, tenor, as soloist, and Ernest Hutcheson, pianist, "gave a superb recital." The Chautauqua Symphony orchestra is conducted by Albert Stoessel.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., continues its summer music festival on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Beginning Aug. 1 there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. On Aug. 16 Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Westerr Hemisphere of Shostakovich's new Seventh symphony, given its premiere American performance in a broadcast last Sunday afternoor by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra.

Moment Musicale

By Maud L. Welin

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Saturday night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky. A series of six concerts will be given this season under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Founded by Dr. Koussevitzky in momery of his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky, the motivating aim of the foundation goes back into the musical life of Dr. Konssevitzky, for in 1909 he and Madame Koussevitzky founded the music publishing house of "Edition Russe." The works of such composers as Serge Prokofieff and Igor Stravinsky were introduced to the public under the "Edition Russe" inprint.

The foundation was organized to aid in the development of musical talent. This year the organization is carrying on the third season of the center as one of its initial activities and in addition has commissioned Samuel Barber, Nicolai Berezowski, Benjamin Britten and Bohuslav Martinu to write works especially for the foundation.

The work of the various activities of the school culminates in the series of six orchestra concerts, to be given on consecutive Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, starting Saturday. The opera department will present two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." August 7 and August 13. Chamber music concerts have been scheduled five Sunday mornings. Those August 2, 9 and 16 remain. Olin Downes is presenting a series of four lecture-concerts on Saturday afternoons, concluding August 1 and 8.

Saturday's program includes the Haydn Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Beethoven's Overture to "Leonone," No. 3 and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday at 3 p. m. the orchestra will present Stravinsky's "Apollon Musagete"; a Concerto Grosso by Martinu and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share you gas," in conjunction with the festival. To insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, arrangements are being made to fill empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

THE 14th annual National Gymanfa Ganu, or Singing Festival, of the National Gymanfa Ganu Association of the United States and Canada will be held in Utica September 6. Arrangements are being made for a group of delegates from St. David's Society of Schenectady to attend. Seventy organizations throughout the United States already have enrolled for the festival.

The Gymanfa Ganu, in its present form less than a century old, is devoted to four-part singing of hymns and anthems. The beginnings of the institution were humble, in little chapels and churches. After the regular service was over the congregation would remain for an hour of song. Unaccompanied by any instrument, for the Puritan spirit was never stronger in New England than in old Wales, led by a leader who sounded the pitch without even a tuning fork, the congregation would be drilled for the forthcoming Gymanfa. For months a few selected hymns and an anthem or two would be rehearsed; then, in a common meeting place, congregations of one neighborhood or denomination would render unitedly the selections prepared.

It is believed that part singing had its origin and early development among the Welsh. The historian Giraldus, writing in 1188, speaks of their skill in vocal music, which they sang in parts, and not, as elsewhere was the custom, in unison.

St. David's Society of this city, which was chartered in February, 1932, always has featured part singing of hymns and anthems on the annual Spring celebrations of St. David's Day. Charles M. Hughes is president and Jane Griffith, secretary, of the organization here.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1942

Mrs. Gannett On Committee For Berkshire Music Center Fete

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of this City, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, is a member of the committee for the gala benefit of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14. Invited to serve on the committee by Serge Koussevitzky, president of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., Mrs. Gannett will go to Tanglewood Aug. 8, and remain through the 16th, her special interest being the three scholarship students of the National Federation at the center, Ruthabeth Krueger, John Baldwin Fiasca, and Joseph Pepper, all violinists, who won summer scholarships in a contest conducted by the federation.

The benefit Aug. 14, which will be attended by several Maine music lovers, will be a great event in musical history because in addition to presenting the first concert performance of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony at Tanglewood, it will be a demonstration of the remarkable achievement of the youthful Music Center Orchestra of 104 members chosen from the most gifted young American musicians from all parts of the Country.

The concert will likewise be an event of international significance. The Soviet Ambassador and Princess Juliana of the Netherlands have accepted invitations to attend.

Through similar benefits in former years, the people of America have contributed generously to the war effort. This year all will have the opportunity for the first time of contributing direct aid to the gallant people of the Soviet Union. The Symphony by Shostakovitch was sent by microflim from Russia, his most recent work depicting Russia at war. He is one of the greatest of modern composers.

Edward Carter, president, Russian War Relief, Inc., is chairman of the committee on which Mrs. Gannett is serving.

Mrs. Gannett is also announcing that Donald M. Payson of Falmouth Foreside has been appointed one of the directors of The Little Red House project of the National Federation at Tanglewood. He is the only director from Maine. The project is for the restoration of the Nathaniel Hawthorne House, known as the little Red House at Tanglewood, the original house having been burned in 1892. The house will be rebuilt on the remaining foundation, and will closely follow the architecture of the original house. When completed the house will be used for studios and as a meeting place for Federation members. It was in this house that Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1942

Music World

By E. S. Van Olinda

The second Victory Sing at Washington park, which was postponed last week owing to the thunderstorm which broke just before the 4 o'clock hour of starting, will be held this afternoon at the same time, weather permitting.

The Albany High school summer band, directed by Joel Dolven will be heard in a number of patriotic selections while the community sing will be under the direction of Frank Bailey, on the music faculty of the Albany Public school system. Floyd Walter, chairman of the executive committee of the Albany project will preside at the console of the Hammond organ.

The first of six symphony concerts by the advanced students of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation will be held next Saturday evening, August 1, in the Tanglewood Music shed near Stockbridge, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, president of the foundation and conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will direct the group. The programs for the coming week-end are as follows.

SATURDAY EVENING

Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore, No. 3.....Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47...Shostakovitch

SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Appolon Musagete .....Stravinsky
Concerto Grosso .....Martinu
Symphony No. 4, in F-minor..Tchaikowsky

On Saturday afternoon, August 1, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give the third of four lecture recitals at 3 p. m., and on Sunday evening, August 2 at 8:30 p. m. there will be given the third in a series of five chamber music concerts. As the seating capacity of the hall used for the lectures and chamber music concerts is limited, the sale of tickets (55c each) has been restricted to 500. Reservations may be made by addressing the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 26 1942

Musical Digest:

Koussevitzky Offers First Public Date

New Shostakovitch Symphony Studied In the Berkshires

By Erich Fritsch.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week ends until Aug 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of ninety-six advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives of Windsor, five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Music Festival

THE FESTIVAL of Music to be held at Tanglewood, Lee, during the next four weeks makes the third session of the Berkshire Music Center unique. Rehearsals now in progress show that playing under Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, is an incentive to the 100 members of the advanced orchestra to perform with unprecedented enthusiasm. As a result, Dr. Koussevitzky finds that he was under his baton an orchestra whose six concerts will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth.

The Festival will culminate in the six symphony concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," starting Saturday evening, Aug. 1. The Sunday afternoon concert that weekend will devote half the proceeds to the War Bond Drive.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 24 1942

Concert to Aid Bond Sale

Berkshire Festival Program Aug. 2 Dedicated to Treasury Drive

Serge Koussevitzky has dedicated the second orchestral concert of the Berkshire Music Center's festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, to the Treasury Department's war-bond campaign, it was announced yesterday. Henry Morgenthau jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to address the audience. The program to be played by the center's orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction includes two Sousa marches, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist.

The center will contribute 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert to the bond campaign, and the women's division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, of which Mrs. Donald F. McPherson is chairman, is preparing an intensive promotion campaign for war bonds and stamps.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Music Unit Activities to Continue Under Koussevitzky

Series of Concerts Planned; Operas, Lecture-Recitals Also Listed At Lenox, Mass., Center

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Although war conditions necessitated calling off the 1942 Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" near Lenox, Mass., activities of the Berkshire Music Center will continue under auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation of which Serge Koussevitzky is director and conductor.

This excellently conceived Foundation is a memorial to Dr. Koussevitzky's wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky. Both founded the music publishing house of Edition Russe in 1909 to protect gifted composers from exploitation by commercial publishing firms. Prokofieff and Stravinsky works were introduced to the public by the Koussevitzky establishment.

Mr. Lewando

The Foundation aims to continue this policy. Composers invited to execute commissions include Samuel Barber, Nicolai Berezowski, Benjamin Britten and Bohuslav Martinu.

Among the interesting concerts to be given are the six performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, three consecutive braces of week-end events to be presented on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

The first of these occure on Aug. 1. The program embraces Haydn's B-flat symphony (102); Beethoven's 3rd Leonore overture and Shostakovitch's 5th symphony. Next Sunday's list includes Apollon Musagette, Stravinsky; Concerto Grosso, Martinu, and Tschaikowsky's 4th symphony.

The Aug. 8 offerings are Hanson's 3rd symphony, Mozart's two-piano E-flat concerto, (K-365) played by Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and Brahms 4th symphony. For the Aug. 9 concert the program comprises Copland's Quiet City, Franck's D-minor symphony, and Tschaikowsky's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist.

Bach's Magnificat in D, and Beethoven's 9th symphony are the performance highlights for Aug. 15. The final orchestra concert on Aug. 16 will feature Mozart's G-minor symphony and Shostakovitch's new "war symphony," his 7th. This work was broadcast last Sunday by the NBC Symphony Orchestra led by Arturo Toscanini.

In addition to the foregoing orchestral events, two opera offerings of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English, are listed for the evenings of Aug. 7 and 13; also, five chamber music recitals on the agenda for Sundays at 11 a. m. These were inaugurated last week. The second is scheduled for today. Remaining events will be given on Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

Rounding out the general program are the four lecture-recitals on Saturday afternoons presented by Olin Downes. Two have already been given. The final two occur Aug. 1 and 8.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1942

Mrs. Gannett On Committee For Berkshire Music Center Fete

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of this City, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, is a member of the committee for the gala benefit of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14. Invited to serve on the committee by Serge Koussevitzky, president of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., Mrs. Gannett will go to Tanglewood Aug. 8, and remain through the 16th, her special interest being the three scholarship students of the National Federation at the center, Ruthabeth Krueger, John Baldwin Fiasca, and Joseph Pepper, all violinists, who won summer scholarships in a contest conducted by the federation.

The benefit Aug. 14, which will be attended by several Maine music lovers, will be a great event in musical history because in addition to presenting the first concert performance of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony at Tanglewood, it will be a demonstration of the remarkable achievement of the youthful Music Center Orchestra of 104 members chosen from the most gifted young American musicians from all parts of the Country.

The concert will likewise be an event of international significance. The Soviet Ambassador and Princess Juliana of the Netherlands have accepted invitations to attend.

Through similar benefits in former years, the people of America have contributed generously to the war effort. This year all will have the opportunity for the first time of contributing direct aid to the gallant people of the Soviet Union. The Symphony by Shostakovitch was sent by microflim from Russia, his most recent work depicting Russia at war. He is one of the greatest of modern composers.

Edward Carter, president, Russian War Relief, Inc., is chairman of the committee on which Mrs. Gannett is serving.

Mrs. Gannett is also announcing that Donald M. Payson of Falmouth Foreside has been appointed one of the directors of The Little Red House project of the National Federation at Tanglewood. He is the only director from Maine. The project is for the restoration of the Nathaniel Hawthorne House, known as the little Red House at Tanglewood, the original house having been burned in 1892. The house will be rebuilt on the remaining foundation, and will closely follow the architecture of the original house. When completed the house will be used for studios and as a meeting place for Federation members. It was in this house that Hawthorne wrote his Tanglewood Tales.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 26 1942

Quarter Notes

THIS WEEK'S FARE for Cincinnati's 21st season of Zoo summer opera consists of "Rigoletto," today and Thursday; "Mignon," Tuesday and Friday; "Hansel and Gretel" and "Pagliacci," Wednesday and Saturday.

Edward S. Babcox of Akron sends a card from Chautauqua, N. Y., where he and Mrs. Babcock are fortunate enough to hear much of the six weeks of music every summer. "Ed" writes that the orchestra has a magnificent program for the season. It opened with James Melton, tenor, as soloist, and Ernest Hutcheson, pianist, "gave a superb recital." The Chautauqua Symphony orchestra is conducted by Albert Stoessel.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., continues its summer music festival on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Beginning Aug. 1 there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. On Aug. 16 Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovich's new Seventh symphony, given its premiere American performance in a broadcast last Sunday afternoon by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra.

Moment Musicale

By Maud L. Welin

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Saturday night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky. A series of six concerts will be given this season under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Founded by Dr. Koussevitzky in momery of his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitzky, the motivating aim of the foundation goes back into the musical life of Dr. Konssevitzky, for in 1909 he and Madame Koussevitzky founded the music publishing house of "Edition Russe." The works of such composers as Serge Prokofieff and Igor Stravinsky were introduced to the public under the "Edition Russe" inprint.

The foundation was organized to aid in the development of musical talent. This year the organization is carrying on the third season of the center as one of its initial activities and in addition has commissioned Samuel Barber, Nicolai Berezowski, Benjamin Britten and Bohuslav Martinu to write works especially for the foundation.

The work of the various activities of the school culminates in the series of six orchestra concerts, to be given on consecutive Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, starting Saturday. The opera department will present two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." August 7 and August 13. Chamber music concerts have been scheduled five Sunday mornings. Those August 2, 9 and 16 remain. Olin Downes is presenting a series of four lecture-concerts on Saturday afternoons, concluding August 1 and 8.

Saturday's program includes the Haydn Symphony in B flat, No. 102; Beethoven's Overture to "Leonone," No. 3 and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Sunday at 3 p. m. the orchestra will present Stravinsky's "Apollon Musagete"; a Concerto Grosso by Martinu and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community cooperation to "share you gas," in conjunction with the festival. To insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, arrangements are being made to fill empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire County, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

THE 14th annual National Gymanfa Ganu, or Singing Festival, of the National Gymanfa Ganu Association of the United States and Canada will be held in Utica September 6. Arrangements are being made for a group of delegates from St. David's Society of Schenectady to attend. Seventy organizations throughout the United States already have enrolled for the festival.

The Gymanfa Ganu, in its present form less than a century old, is devoted to four-part singing of hymns and anthems. The beginnings of the institution were humble, in little chapels and churches. After the regular service was over the congregation would remain for an hour of song. Unaccompanied by any instrument, for the Puritan spirit was never stronger in New England than in old Wales, led by a leader who sounded the pitch without even a tuning fork, the congregation would be drilled for the forthcoming Gymanfa. For months a few selected hymns and an anthem or two would be rehearsed; then, in a common meeting place, congregations of one neighborhood or denomination would render unitedly the selections prepared.

It is believed that part singing had its origin and early development among the Welsh. The historian Giraldus, writing in 1188, speaks of their skill in vocal music, which they sang in parts, and not, as elsewhere was the custom, in unison.

St. David's Society of this city, which was chartered in February, 1932, always has featured part singing of hymns and anthems on the annual Spring celebrations of St. David's Day. Charles M. Hughes is president and Jane Griffith, secretary, of the organization here.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1942

Music World

By E. S. Van Olinda

The second Victory Sing at Washington park, which was postponed last week owing to the thunderstorm which broke just before the 4 o'clock hour of starting, will be held this afternoon at the same time, weather permitting.

The Albany High school summer band, directed by Joel Dolven will be heard in a number of patriotic selections while the community sing will be under the direction of Frank Bailey, on the music faculty of the Albany Public school system. Floyd Walter, chairman of the executive committee of the Albany project will preside at the console of the Hammond organ.

The first of six symphony concerts by the advanced students of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation will be held next Saturday evening, August 1, in the Tanglewood Music shed near Stockbridge, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, president of the foundation and conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will direct the group. The programs for the coming weekend are as follows.

SATURDAY EVENING

Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.....Haydn
Overture to Leonore, No. 3.....Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47...Shostakovitch

SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Appolon Musagete .....Stravinsky
Concerto Grosso .....Martinu
Symphony No. 4, in F-minor..Tchaikowsky

On Saturday afternoon, August 1, Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will give the third of four lecture recitals at 3 p. m., and on Sunday evening, August 2 at 8:30 p. m. there will be given the third in a series of five chamber music concerts. As the seating capacity of the hall used for the lectures and chamber music concerts is limited, the sale of tickets (55c each) has been restricted to 500. Reservations may be made by addressing the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 26 1942

97.

Musical Digest:

Koussevitzky Offers First Public Date

New Shostakovitch Symphony Studied In the Berkshires

By Erich Fritsch.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week ends until Aug 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of ninety-six advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives of Windsor, five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1942

Berkshire Music Festival

THE FESTIVAL of Music to be held at Tanglewood, Lee, during the next four weeks makes the third session of the Berkshire Music Center unique. Rehearsals now in progress show that playing under Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, is an incentive to the 100 members of the advanced orchestra to perform with unprecedented enthusiasm. As a result, Dr. Koussevitzky finds that he was under his baton an orchestra whose six concerts will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth.

The Festival will culminate in the six symphony concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and two performances in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," starting Saturday evening, Aug. 1. The Sunday afternoon concert that weekend will devote half the proceeds to the War Bond Drive.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 24 1942

Concert to Aid Bond Sale

Berkshire Festival Program Aug. 2 Dedicated to Treasury Drive

Serge Koussevitzky has dedicated the second orchestral concert of the Berkshire Music Center's festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, to the Treasury Department's war-bond campaign, it was announced yesterday. Henry Morgenthau jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to address the audience. The program to be played by the center's orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction includes two Sousa marches, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist.

The center will contribute 50 per cent of the proceeds of the concert to the bond campaign, and the women's division of the War Savings Committee for Berkshire County, of which Mrs. Donald F. McPherson is chairman, is preparing an intensive promotion campaign for war bonds and stamps.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 26 1942

CENTER CONCERTS BEGIN SATURDAY

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Series of Six by Student Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the first of a series of six concerts by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra Saturday evening at 8.30 in the Tanglewood shed. Haydn's Symphony in B-flat, No 102, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, No 3, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No 5 will be offered. The second concert next Sunday afternoon at 3 will include Apollon Musagete by Stravinsky. Concerto Grosso by Martinu and Symphony No 4 in F-minor by Tschaikowsky.

The 100 members of the advanced orchestra course at the center comprise the ensemble that will be heard in the concerts. Rehearsals have convinced Dr Koussevitzky that the series will be a remarkable demonstration of the musical capacities of American youth

The transportation problem is being solved by a unique community transportation scheme which will assure rides to and from Tanglewood from neighboring communities. Local committees in Lenox, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield, Great Barrington and adjoining towns, realizing the value of these concerts to the community, have developed a plan by which those driving their cars to the concert and having extra space will stop at central clearing points in each town. A ticket to a festival concert will entitle the holder to a ride to and from Tanglewood. Community cooperation will thus be a huge supplement to the regular public transportation facilities. Local hotel managers are cooperating in this mobilization in order to assure transportation for their guests.

Dr Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert to the United States treasury war bond campaign. Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury, is expected to speak at that time. All the war bond and stamp committees of Berkshire county are cooperating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert. Dr Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "victory" lunch can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in war bonds. An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover field to send a thousand enlisted men to be guests of Dr Koussevitzky at the concert.

MUNCIE, IND.
PRESS
Star

JUL 26 1942

The World Of Music

By LOUIS F. KEEMLE

NEW YORK, July 25 (U.P.)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning August 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

* * *

Edwin McArthur, American conductor, is offering a prize to the person who can suggest a suitable English language substitute for the term "maestro" customarily applied to conductors regardless of their nationality. The prize is a pair of season tickets to the symphony orchestra playing nearest the winner's home.

McArthur wants an existing English word or a coined one which could be used as a salutation to the conductor without appearing awkward, as the obvious substitutions of "master" or "conductor" would. McArthur says "maestro" may be just another of those European words which cannot be suitably translated, but has hope that some ingenious American music lover may volunteer a logical substitute.

* * *

The International Society for Contemporary Music will hold its 19th festival on the campus of the University of California at Berkeley from August 1 to 9. There will be seven programs, presenting 35 works by 34 composers. The Janssen Symphony Orchestra of Los Angeles and the Budapest String Quartet will be among the organizations represented. It will be the second time the International Society has held its festival in the United States, the previous one having been in New York two years ago. The war has precluded its presentation in most other countries.

* * *

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 26 1942

Russian War Relief Shop A Quaint Spot

The Russian War Relief office located at 1218 Connecticut Ave. NW., offers for sale a variety of interesting merchandise. It is possible simultaneously to satisfy not only one's aesthetic or practical tastes, but also, in doing so, to aid substantially in furthering the cause of relief to our worthy ally. All the proceeds from articles sold are devoted to the immediate shipment of medical supplies to Russia.

For The Gourmets

The culinary-minded will be delighted with an attractive, yellow-bound cookbook compiled of recipes contributed by many outstanding individuals in public life. For example, there is an enchanting dish called "Pelmeny" which is described with gusto by its author, Serge Koussevitzky. Lawrence Tibbett holds forth with a new idea on "Beef a la Stronganoff." All those with a little initiative and a spirit of adventure will find their dollar well spent indeed.

The novelty department has several styles of lapel decorations. One especially enterprising design has a tiny white and gold parachute jumper, ballooning toward earth with a handsome streamer carrying the auspicious message, "Happy Landing."

Many Books

The book section is expanding rapidly. Two best-sellers are Margaret Bourke-White's latest collection of photographs entitled "Shooting the Russian War," and Poliakov's thrilling diary of the Soviet soldier called "Russians Don't Surrender."

The art lover will find the exhibition of water colors and oils contributed by well-known artists.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 26 1942

Aid Bond Campaign

Tanglewood Concert Dedicated to Drive

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood, on August 2, to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign.

It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury, will speak and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikowsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikowsky.

All the War Bond and Stamp committees of Berkshire county are co-operating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling tickets at their stamp booths ing stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

REDEEM STUBS

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in War Stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community co-operation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglegood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight of the principal centers of Berkshire county, where information about transportation and accommodations will be collected and disseminated. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a week-end of music available.

Those attending the concert are invited to bring picnic lunches to eat on the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "Victory lunch" can be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in War Bonds.

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send a thousand enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert.

SIX CONCERTS

The "Festival of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The series will open on Saturday evening, August 1, and will continue on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons until August 16. On Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13, performances will be given in English of Nicholai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by the students in the opera department.

Olin Downes is presenting a series of four "lecture concerts" on music forms on Saturday afternoons, assisted by student groups. Chamber music recitals are given in the new Chamber Music hall on Sunday evenings.

The advance ticket sale points to large audiences at the Fesival; the concerts are grouped on week-ends to permit visitors to concentrate their musical enjoyment into a few days. Confidence that the American music-loving public will "whip" the transportation problem in their quest for music, as British music lovers have done for several years, assures the community that this summer will be a notable one in Berkshire music history.

PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

JUL 26 1942

Jean Handzlik At Berkshire Opera School

Former Portland Contralto Awarded Leading Role in Summer Production

Jean Handzlik, former Portland contralto, is attending the opera school of the Berkshire music center at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., on a scholarship. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is director of the center and Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera company heads the opera school.

Miss Handzlik is singing the leading contralto role in one of the productions of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which is being given twice this season at the center.

During May and June the Portland singer appeared in a season of Victor Herbert operettas at the Paper Mill Playhouse at Millburn, N. J., and she will return there August 16. Last winter she was a soloist at St. Bartholomews church in New York in Mozart's "Glory, Praise and Power" for the American Guild of Organists. She was a finalist in the auditions for the Naumburg award. Her radio work has been under Stokowsky and Leopold Spitalny.

Miss Hanzlik has been engaged by the New Opera company for autumn appearances. She will study at the Curtis institute on a scholarship with Elisabeth Schumann.

MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

JUL 26 1942

Though the Berkshire Festival in its traditional form has been suspended for the duration, the zeal and determination of Serge Koussevitsky have provided a very satisfying substitute. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, composed entirely of students because the faculty are all Boston Symphony members and as such are barred from playing in the group, begins on Saturday a series of six major concerts under the leadership of the famous conductor. The first program includes works of Haydn, Beethoven and Shostakovich.

As you know, the Berkshire chamber music series is already under way, and has its second concert today. In addition, there will be a Saturday afternoon lecture concert by Olin Downes.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 26 1942

Concert Reservations

Reservations have been made at all Berkshire hotels for six concerts that students of the Berkshire Music Center are to give at Tanglewood for three weeks starting next Saturday night, August 1. Mrs Donald F. McPherson, head of the war bond sale at Tanglewood, Sunday, August 2, is returning to Pittsfield tomorrow from Chicago where she has been spending a week. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., secretary of the treasury, is to attend the concert at Tanglewood August 2 and give a brief address.

Rev Dr Anson Phelps Stokes is to be the preacher at tomorrow's sunset Episcopal church service in the gardens of Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh, Lenox.

Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone and Mrs Stone were recent dinner guests of Mrs Winthrop E. Stone, sister-in-law of the chief justice, at Sheffield inn, where she has been staying before she opens her cottage on Under Mountain road.

Mrs Henry K. White and daughter, Judith, of 250 Beacon street, Boston, are visiting Mrs White's parents, Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt at Overmead, Pittsfield.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

JUL 27 1942

Berkshire Concert To Aid Bond Drive

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on August 2, to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign. It is expected that Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker at this time, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for 50 cents in War Stamps.

DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

JUL 26 1942

Festival Starts In Berkshires

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duapianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war" Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUL 26 1942

Two Centennials for the Berkshires

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass. —This South Berkshire community of 5,700 inhabitants is to celebrate two centennial anniversaries in September. One is the arrival of the first railroad train on the old Housatonic Railroad on Sept. 28. This train brought passengers from Canaan, Conn., and Sheffield to attend the first fair of the Housatonic Agricultural Society, which was held Sept. 28 and 29, 1842.

There will be six days of racing with a parade, in which hay wagons, carryalls, coaches, and other horse-drawn vehicles will be featured. War bonds and stamps will be used for prizes for victory gardens and there will be civilian defense demonstrations. Edward J. Carroll of Springfield now controls the agricultural society.

Great Barrington's first train arrived while the villagers were at breakfast and they all hastened out for the sight. From that time a regular passenger service was maintained between Great Barrington and Bridgeport.

Another Great Barrington institution that is more than a century old is The Berkshire Courier, which has been published as a weekly paper continuously since Oct. 16, 1834. Maitland P. Foster is now its publisher and Paul W. Foster editor.

The three-day men's golf tournament of Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, starts on Friday.

Starting next Saturday evening, six concerts are to be given over three week-ends at Tanglewood by students of Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct an orchestra of 104 pieces.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 27 1942

Berkshire Event To Benefit War Bond Campaign

Morgenthau Expected to Speak At Tanglewood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood Aug. 2 to the United States Treasury war bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

All the war bond and stamp commitees of Berkshire County are co-operating in selling tickets at their stamp boths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Stub Redeemable in Stamps

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds for 50 cents in war stamps.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has begun the organization of a plan of community co-operation to "share your gas" which will insure transportation to and from Tanglewood, by arranging that there will be no empty seats in private cars going to the concert. Central information booths are being set up in eight centers of Berkshire County. Although no special or extra train service is available, the Festival is fortunate in that the regular train schedules maintained to Lenox and Pittsfield from Boston, New York and Albany still make a weekend of music available.

1,000 Fliers Invited

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send a thousand enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert.

The "Festival of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction from Aug. 1 to 16. On Aug. 7 and 13 performances will be given of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by students in the opera department.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 26 1942

Festival Opens In Berkshires Saturday Night

Concert Next Sunday at Tanglewood Dedicated to War-Bond Campaign

The festival series of six concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky's direction begins next Saturday night at 8:30 with a program consisting of Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for next Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, at 3 o'clock includes two Sousa marches, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist.

Next Sunday's concert has been dedicated to the United States Treasury's war bond campaign and Henry Morgenthau jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to speak. Stamps will be sold at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert and the stub of every ticket sold for this program will be redeemable on the grounds of Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps. The Berkshire Hills Conference is organizing a community co-operation plan to provide transportation in private cars going to the concerts, and booths to collect and provide about transportation and accommodations will be set up in eight of the principal Berkshire County centers. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1,000 enlisted men to be the conductor's guests at next Sunday's concert.

The other orchestral concerts will be held on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Chamber music programs will be given at Tanglewood tonight and the next three Sunday evenings. Olin Downes, assisted by student groups, will give lecture-concerts next Saturday and the following Saturday afternoon. Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be sung in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13.

Regular trains on the New Haven Railroad leave the Grand Central Station on Saturdays at 8:15 a. m. and 12:45 and 3:40 p. m., arriving at Lenox at 12:37, 4:53 and 7:43 p. m. After Sunday's concert, trains will leave Lenox at 5:41 and 7:41 p. m., arriving in New York at 9:38 and 11:32.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 26 1942

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT TO BENEFIT TREASURY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is dedicating the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on August 2, to the United States Treasury War Bond campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker at this time, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be the soloist in the Tschaikowsky violin concerto. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by Tschaikowsky.

Persons attending the concert have been invited to bring picnic lunches to the spacious Tanglewood estate. A "Victory lunch" may be procured on the grounds, the proceeds to be invested in War Bonds.

Service Men Invited

An invitation has been extended to the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1,000 enlisted men to be the guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the concert.

The "Festival of Music" at Tanglewood will include six orchestra concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The series will open on Saturday evening, August 1, and will continue on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons until August 16. On Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13, performances will be given in English of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" by students in the opera department.

Downes To Speak

Olin Downes is presenting a series of four "lecture-concerts" on music forms on Saturday afternoons, assisted by student groups. Chamber music recitals are given in the new Chamber Music hall on Sunday evenings.

"The advance ticket sale points to large audiences at the Festival; the concerts are grouped on weekends to permit visitors to concentrate their musical enjoyment into a few days. Confidence that the American music-loving public will "whip" the transportation problem in their quest for music, as British music lovers have done for several years, assures this community that this summer will be a notable one in Berkshire music history," the management says.

SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
JUL 28 1942

NEW YORK.— (LP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist, will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1942

"Share Car" Plan Is Falling Down

Berkshire Conference Says Few Offers Received

PITTSFIELD, July 27—Tanglewood may be offering through Serge Koussevitzky and his student orchestra an excellent series of concerts, starting Saturday night, but the proposed "share your car" plan of the Berkshire Hills Conference is falling down.

The conference reported today that it had received few offers from motorists to take others to the concerts, although it had received many requests for transportation. So-called ride centers have been established in towns of the county where motorists and would-be passengers may register.

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovzky and Richard Rychtarik, presented scenes from five operas tonight at the theater.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 26 1942

Festival Becomes Center

New York, July 25.—(U.P.)

DR. SERGE Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to contine on week ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 26 1942

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY CONCERT FUND FOR BOND DRIVE

Lenox, Mass., July 25.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will dedicate the first Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood on August 2, to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign. It is expected that Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the speaker at this time, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra of 104 advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center in the program. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, will be the soloist in the Tchiakowsky violin concert. Also on the program will be two Sousa marches and the Fourth Symphony by chiakowsky.

All the War Bond and Stamp Committes of Berkshire County are co-operating in selling tickets at their stamp booths and in selling stamps at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky has announced that the stub of every ticket sold for this concert will be redeemable on the grounds at Tanglewood for fifty cents in War Stamps.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1942

Boston Symphony Likely To Play Here as Planned

Community Concerts, Junior League Note Petrillo Threat Reported Only Indirectly

Because they have not been informed from any source, other than news stories, that bringing the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium will result in James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' Union, banning the hall to all union musicians, officials of the Springfield Community Concerts and Junior League yesterday decided to continue as planned and it therefore appears that the Boston Symphony will play here as one of the Community Concerts announced series.

Those who met yesterday were Atty. Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts; Mrs. John H. Mitchell, chairman of the program committee, and Mrs. Russell F. Swett, chairman of the Junior League concert committee.

The first indication that the Boston Symphony might not play here was contained in a tentative routing of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra which had Springfield on its itinerary. Later word filtered unofficially into the city that James Petrillo had said that he would ban any hall used by the Boston players and would not permit any musicians within his organization to perform in them. This would mean an entire disruption of not only the Community Concerts, but the Wagner series, as the majority of musicians belongs to the union. However, no official word has come from the czar of the Musicians Union who is now under fire from several sources, particularly for his recent banning from the air of the Student Orchestra at Interlochen, Mich.

It is possible that, if any official information should reach the officials of the Springfield Community Concerts that the rest of their program would be banned by Petrillo, changes would be made, but until such word comes, the group has decided to continue as planned. There is always the possibility that the Boston Symphony players may become unionized, it is said.

99.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 27 1942

Music Festival In Berkshires Opens Saturday

Special to the Telegram

BOSTON, July 26.—The festival series of six concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, by the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center under Serge Koussevitzky's direction begins Saturday night at 8.30 with a program consisting of Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for next Sunday afternoon, Aug. 2, at 3 o'clock includes two Sousa marches, Tchaikowsky's fourth symphony and Tschaikowski's fourth symphony and Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist.

To Aid Bond Drive

Next Sunday's concert has been dedicated to the United States Treasury's war bond campaign and Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to speak. Stamps will be sold at Tanglewood on the afternoon of the concert and the stub of every ticket sold for this program will be redeemable on the grounds of Tanglewood for 50 cents in war stamps. The Berkshire Hills Conference is organizing a community co-operation plan to provide transportation in private cars going to the concerts, and booths to collect and provide about transportation and accommodations will be set up in eight of the principle Berkshire County centers. Dr. Koussevitzky has invited the commanding officer at Westover Field to send 1000 enlisted men to be the conductor's guests at next Sunday's concert.

The other orchestra concerts will be held on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Chamber music programs will be given at Tanglewood tonight and the next three Sunday evenings. Olin Downes, assisted by student groups, will give lecture-concerts next Saturday and the following Saturday afternoons. Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be sung in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13.

100

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 28 1942

SOCIETY TODAY

Russian War Relief Activities Occupy the Edward C. Carters

By LAURA HAZARD BROWN.

Whether in New York or at their farm in Lee, Mass., the Edward C. Carters and their daughter, Ruth, are occupied with the activities of Russian War Relief. The family barn at Sunset Farm has been converted into a series of offices. While on week days the Carter headquarters are at the organization's New York office, week ends are spent in the barn and are devoted to conferences. Mr. Carter, president of the Russian Relief, is also serving as chairman of the concert committee which is sponsoring the American concert premiere of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, to be conducted by Koussevitzky on Aug. 14 at Tanglewood. The Berkshire Music Center is just five miles from the Carters' 48-acre farm.

Mrs. Carter, who met and was married to her husband while traveling through India, heads the women's division of the relief society, and Ruth serves as secretary to her father.

"Our most vital concern is to continue the shipment of sulfa drugs and medical supplies to the front to restore the Russian wounded," Mrs. Carter said, adding that "more than 83 per cent of the wounded are returned to battle."

The Carters, who have five round-the-world trips to their credit, have visited Russia every two years since the beginning of the first five-year plan there in 1929. Time and work permitting, they plan to head for Lee, lock the barn doors and enjoy a short vacation which Mr. Carter hopes will coincide with that of his son John, who is working as merchandise manager of a department store in Nashville. John is expected to be drafted. The youngest son, William, works for the Federal Communications Commission in Washington.

Since 1926 Mr. Carter has served as secretary to the Institute of Pacific Relations and has traveled extensively to the member countries. Mrs. Carter, sister of Ruth Draper, monologist, is a graduate of Barnard. For 12 years she was a member of the national board and world committee of the YWCA and was at one time chairman of the New York State League of Women Voters.

Not only is Ruth her father's secretary but she admits to being a maid-of-all-work around the farm. Following her graduation from the Berkshire Business School, she joined her father on a round-the-world trip, arriving in Peiping a day before the Sino-Japanese war broke out. Tall and brunette, she wears no makeup.

* * *

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 29 1942

MORIN TO REVIEW BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

(Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic, will review the concerts of the Berkshire Festival of Music, at Tanglewood, Lenox, for this newspaper—Editor.)

LENOX, July 28.—Dedicated to the U. S. War Bond and Stamp campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Berkshire Festival of Music will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky next Sunday afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of of over fifty girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of Stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a fifty cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr. Koussevitzky is said to be highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of over one hundred young musicians whom he has gathered from more than thirty states, and whom, he asserts, represent the most talented youth of the country. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past Winter and Spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will be presented Saturday evening at 8.30 o'clock, when Dr. Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovich.

The famous Seventh Symphony of Shostakovich will be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere at the Gala Benefit to be given here on Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 28 1942

In Berkshire Music Center Classes

Three winners of scholarships in strings of the National Federation of Music Clubs, John Baldwin Fiasca of Milwaukee, Wis., Ruthabeth Krueger of Denver, Col., and Joseph Pepper of Bayonne, N. J., are among the student body of Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The young musicians, all violinists, were selected in nationwide competitions in which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra served as judges. Competitions were prompted by the serious shortage of skilled string performers, which is appreciably affecting the major orchestras of the country.

SANTA PAULA, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

JUL 29 1942

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK (U.P.)—The much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet Embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussetvitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including 8 horns, 6 trombones, 6 trumphets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

* * *

The National Orchestral Association announces that applications for membership in all sections of its training orchestra for the season of 1942-43 are now being accepted.

No tuition is charged. Instrumentalists who have sufficient technical background to pass the auditions which will be held in September will be given the opportunity to acquire a knowledge of orchestral routine and repertoire so that they may become candidates for positions in the regular orchestra. An outline of require-

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 28 1942

First Tanglewood Concert To Sound Call of Freedom

Dr. Koussevitzky To Note Anniversary Of Famous Sermon in Lenox by Rev. W. E. Channing

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has fittingly chosen the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven for the opening program of his festival of music at Tanglewood Saturday evening. For the ringing call of freedom found in that overture is an appropriate recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event.

One hundred years ago, on Aug. 1, 1842, Rev. William Ellery Channing delivered in the Lenox Congregational Church his last public address—"dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire" — on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands. The oration still ranks as one of the major addresses of American history. One listener wrote: "He had never spoken to his fellow men more powerfully than in this Sermon on the Mount."

In the printed version of his address, Channing referred to the delight he found "in the magnificent scenery of this region, in its peaceful and prosperous villages, and in the rare intelligence and virtues of the friends whose hospitality I have here enjoyed."

Men and Women of Berkshire

In his apostrophe, he sounded a call that has significance today: "A new reverence for humanity—a new feeling of brotherhood—is among the signs of the times. Before this, all oppressions are to fall. Society, silently pervaded by this, is to change its aspect of universal warfare for peace."

When next Saturday Serge Koussevitzky directs his new orchestra of 105 talented young musicians in the Leonore Overture, in an anniversary program dedicated "to the men and women of the Berkshires," the call for a new freedom will be heard in the Tanglewood Shed.

The program next Sunday will also be dedicated to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr. Koussevitzky will honor in his first Sunday afternoon concert the United States Treasury's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time, Ruth Posselt will play the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. Also on the program will be the Franck Symphony in D Minor, and two stirring Sousa marches.

The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth at Tanglewood will be redeemable for a 50-cent war savings stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given war bonds. A "victory ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

On Aug. 14, another "gala benefit" will be held, with a program lasting from 5 in the afternoon until 11 in the evening. All proceeds will go to Russian war relief. At the concert in the Tanglewood Shed that evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr. Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1942

Dinner for Dr. Koussevitzky

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Honored in Berkshires

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 27.—Miss Alice Clapp, of Washington, was hostess at a dinner at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, tonight in honor of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Other guests were Mrs. Henry White Cannon, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Chapple, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mrs. Charles A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. George W. Seligman, Mrs. Margaret Grant, Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatigorsky, Mr. Aaron Copland and Mr. Henry Gregor.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. C. Church were buffet supper hosts at Bonny Bank, Great Barrington, tonight to their granddaughter, Miss Mary de Windt, and Mr. William Archer Speers, New York, who are to be married tomorrow at St. James Church.

Lady Salter has Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Davis, of New York, as guests at Hickory Farm, Tyringham.

Mrs. John Dodge Peters was a buffet luncheon hostess at Edgeholm, Great Barrington.

Mrs. William Felton Barnett gave a luncheon at Sky Farm, North Egremont, before the Great Barrington Garden Club party at Mrs. Charles Champion's lodge, North Egremont.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 31 1942

The big question this coming month concerns the future of the Berkshire Music festival. Despite the presence of Dr Koussevitzky himself at Tanglewood and although the student orchestra includes outstanding material which will have expert assistance in the way of soloists, there is a certain blight on the project due to the gas and tire shortage.

* * *

There'll be a vital necessity for doubling up for those who plan to visit the music center during the next three weekends. Tomorrow night, the Third "Leonore" overture will begin the festival while Sunday afternoon's program will be high lighted by Ruth Posselt's playing of the Tschaikowsky Violin concerto.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

JUL 29 1942

The World of Music

NEW YORK. (UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Beginning August 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new "Seventh ('war') Symphony."

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's " The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

GREENVILLE, MICH.
NEWS

JUL 28 1942

NEW YORK—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopanist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakoviteh's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

JUL 29 1942

Tanglewood Will Have First Sunday Concert August 2

Lenox, July 29.—Dedicated to the War bond and Stamp campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood festival of music will be conducted by Dr. Serg Koussevitzky next Sunday afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikovsky Concerto, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Beckshire county selling concert tickets. A group of over fifty girls will sell War stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr. Koussevitzky is highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of over one hundred young musicians whom he has gathered from over thirty states, and who represent the most talented youth of the country. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the festival of music will take place next Saturday evening, August 1 at 8.30 o'clock when Dr. Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The famous Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given on Aug. 14 for Russian war relief.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 29 1942

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS SATURDAY

Koussevitzky to Direct 105-Piece Orchestra

AT TANGLEWOOD

Little Interest in Car Pooling Shown Here—Total of Six Concerts Planned

The 1942 Festival of Music at Tanglewood at Stockbridge, replacing the former Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the Boston Symphony orchestra under Director Serge Koussevitsky has presented several summers, will open Saturday evening at 8.30 o'clock, when Dr. Koussevitzky will direct his orchestra of 105 young students in the third Leonore overture of Beethoven.

Up until today, the local car-pool headquarters, the Richmond hotel, had received only one or two inquiries. The plan was for persons desiring rides, as well as those who had extra room in their cars, to register at the hotel, where effort would be made to get the two parties together, but thus far, little interest has been shown.

A total of six concerts will be offered on three successive Saturday nights, and three Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock in the Tanglewood shed. Through the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which is made up of a large number of pupils studying in many musical fields under the noted conductor, has been allowed the use of the Tanglewood estate and music shed.

Saturday night's program also will include Haydn's symphony in G major and the fifth symphony by Shostakovitch. Sunday's program will be dedicated to the United States treasury war bond campaign, and each ticket stub presented at the stamp booth will be exchanged for 50 cents worth of war stamps.

Also included in the 1942 Festival of Music are two opera performances of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" on this Friday night and Thursday night of next week at 8.30 o'clock. Five chamber music concerts on Sunday evenings at 8.30 o'clock are being given, the third of which will be this Sunday. The third in a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be given Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

At a gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for the Russian relief society, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony, which has been under rehearsal for the past week.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 29 1942

Tanglewood Concert Saturday Falls On Momentous Anniversary

Exactly a Century Ago William Ellery Channing Pleaded at Lenox for Enslaved Peoples

Lenox, July 29—Dr Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the third Leonore overture of Beethoven for the opening program of his festival of music at Tanglewood Saturday evening. The ringing call of freedom found in that overture is an appropriate recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event, it was pointed out today.

One hundred years ago, on August 1, 1842, William Ellery Channing delivered in the Lenox Congregational church his last public address—"dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire"—on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands.

In the printed version of his address, Channing referred to the delight he found "in the magnificent scenery of this region, in its peaceful and prosperous villages, and in the rare intelligence and virtues of the friends whose hospitality I have here enjoyed."

In his apostrophe, he declared, "A new reverence for humanity—a new feeling of brotherhood—is among the signs of the times. Before this, all oppressions are to fall. Society, silently pervaded by this, is to change its aspect of universal warfare for peace."

The program by the student orchestra Sunday, August 2, will also be dedicated to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr Koussevitzky will honor in his first Sunday afternoon concert the United States treasury's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time Ruth Posselt will play the Tchaikovsky Violin concerto. Also on the program will be the Franck Symphony in D Minor, and two stirring Sousa marches.

On August 14, another famous "Gala Benefit" will be held, with a program lasting from five in the afternoon until eleven in the evening. All proceeds will go to Russian war relief. At the concert in the Tanglewood shed that evening, Dr Koussevitzky will present the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1942

DR KOUSSEVITZKY GUEST OF HONOR

Miss Clapp Entertains at Curtis Hotel — Several Other Items of Social Interest in Berkshire

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 27—Miss Alice Clapp of Washington was hostess for a dinner party at Curtis hotel, Lenox, tonight in honor of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. The other guests were Mrs Henry White Cannon, Mrs Charles A. Weyerhaeuser, Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Mrs Margaret Grant, Mrs George W. Seligman, Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr and Mrs Stanley Chapple, Mr and Mrs Richard Burgin, Mr and Mrs Gregor Piatgorsky, Aaron Copeland and Henry Gregor.

Mrs William Felton Barrett entertained at luncheon at Sky farm, North Egremont, and later her guests went to a garden party given by Mrs Charles Champion at her North Egremont lodge.

Princess Diane R. Eristavi was a luncheon hostess at Laurel Mere, Stockbridge. Her guests included her mother, Mrs George Otis Rockwood, Count and Countess Hans C. Seherr Thoss, Mrs William Penn Cresson and Rev Edmund Randolph Laine.

Mr and Mrs John H. C. Church had a buffet supper tonight at Bonny bank, Great Barrington, for their granddaughter, Miss Mary de Windt and William Archer Speers, New York, who are to be married tomorrow at 12.45 at St James Episcopal church with Rev Edward C. M. Tower officiating. Miss Anne de Windt is to be her sister's maid of honor. A wedding breakfast for the two families will be served at the West avenue home of Mr and Mrs de Windt.

Mr and Mrs Livingston T. Dickason, Misses Anne, Elizabeth and Katherine Dickason, Short Hills, N. J., and Mrs Lascelles C. Maxwell, Rye, N. Y., are with Mr and Mrs George Greer at Mepal manor, New Marlboro, and they entertained at dinner for them tonight. Mrs J. Macy Willets, who has Mrs J. Henry Carson of New York as a guest had the same group at luncheon at Cassilis farm, New Marlboro.

Mr and Mrs Kenneth N. Hill and daughters, Judith and Lee Hill, of 9 South Mountain road, Pittsfield, are leaving tomorrow for two weeks' stay at Martha's Vineyard.

Rev Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., of Columbus, O., yesterday afternoon at Trinity Episcopal church, Lenox, christened Daniel Lindley Hatch, son of his brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs John Davis Hatch, Jr., (Olivia Phelps Stokes), of Albany, N. Y. Later there was a tea at Brook farm, the home of Rev Dr and Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes. Canon and Mrs Stokes were the honored guests at a supper given by Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh last night following the sunset service in Wheatleigh gardens.

Mr and Mrs Ernest Howes of Palm Beach are with Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., at Belvoir terrace, Lenox, and Mrs Shepard had a luncheon party of 12 Saturday in their honor at Mahkeenac Boat club.

Stonover, 45-acre Lenox estate of the late Miss Mary Parsons on Yokun avenue is to be sold at auction Saturday, August 8, at 2.30 p. m. by Joseph P. Day of New York. The property has been in the Parsons family 70 years.

Mrs Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen, Jr., was the honored guest at a luncheon given yesterday by her mother, Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge. Mr Frelinghuysen is in the army.

CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL-REPUBLIC

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK — (UP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 28 1942

The Music World

New York, July 28 (UP).—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Mus Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshi Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopianists will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 29 1942

Koussevitzky to Conduct At Tanglewood Event

Dedicated to the war bond and stamp campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky August 2. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of 50 girls will sell war stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent war stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr. Koussevitzky is highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place Saturday evening, August 1, at 8:30 o'clock, when Dr. Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonora, No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The famous Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit on August 14 for Russian war relief.

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1942

The World of Music

New York, (UP) Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Miss., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 28 1942

Pioneer Valley Assn. Asks Co-operation of Drivers to Koussevitsky Concerts

The Pioneer Valley Association asks that people driving to any of the Koussevitsky concerts in August assist the Berkshire Hills committees by taking carless ticket holders in their automobiles.

A committee of the Berkshire Hills Conference wants to make arrangements for transportation of a number of music lovers from the Curtis Hotel in Lenox to the concert grounds, a mile and one-half distance; and return of these people to Lenox where they can secure railroad or bus transportation.

The Pioneer Valley Association asks that people attending the concerts from Greenfield, Northampton, Springfield, Holyoke or other towns in the Valley, who will have room in their automobiles for even one person, advise Miss Shoemaker at the Nonotuck Building, Northampton.

The Koussevitsky Music Foundation concerts will be held on Saturday evenings, Aug. 1, 8, and 15, at 8.30 and on Sundays, Aug. 2, 9, and 16 at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Koussevitsky assumed the financing of these concerts to continue the celebrated Music Festival, that each summer attracts thousands to the Berkshires.

The success of the restricted program depends in a large part on the generosity of people driving to the concerts.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 30 1942

Little Interest in Tanglewood

Gas Shortage and Fact That Boston Symphony Will Not Play Are Factors

There are indications that not many people from this area will attend the six concerts by the student orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky which will be given at Tanglewood during August. Indeed, there has been no specific effort on the part of the Festival Association or any local group to stir up interest in these concerts.

The travel situation, being what it is, has caused many people to give the possibility of attending the concerts little thought. Aside from the gas and tire rationing, one hears so many stories of crowded busses and overcrowded trains that people feel it is hardly worthwhile to make the effort and undergo the inconveniences of the 100 miles round trip.

Another reason for lack of interest is the fact that the Boston Symphony is not to play. Fine as any student orchestra might be, people hereabouts remain faithful to the Boston players.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 29 1942

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS SATURDAY

Koussevitzky to Direct 105-Piece Orchestra

AT TANGLEWOOD

Little Interest in Car Pooling Shown Here—Total of Six Concerts Planned

The 1942 Festival of Music at Tanglewood at Stockbridge, replacing the former Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the Boston Symphony orchestra under Director Serge Koussevitsky has presented several summers, will open Saturday evening at 8.30 o'clock, when Dr. Koussevitzky will direct his orchestra of 105 young students in the third Leonore overture of Beethoven.

Up until today, the local car-pool headquarters, the Richmond hotel, had received only one or two inquiries. The plan was for persons desiring rides, as well as those who had extra room in their cars, to register at the hotel, where effort would be made to get the two parties together, but thus far, little interest has been shown.

A total of six concerts will be offered on three successive Saturday nights, and three Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock in the Tanglewood shed. Through the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which is made up of a large number of pupils studying in many musical fields under the noted conductor, has been allowed the use of the Tanglewood estate and music shed.

Saturday night's program also will include Haydn's symphony in G major and the fifth symphony by Shostakovitch. Sunday's program will be dedicated to the United States treasury war bond campaign, and each ticket stub presented at the stamp booth will be exchanged for 50 cents worth of war stamps.

Also included in the 1942 Festival of Music are two opera performances of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" on this Friday night and Thursday night of next week at 8.30 o'clock. Five chamber music concerts on Sunday evenings at 8.30 o'clock are being given, the third of which will be this Sunday. The third in a series of four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will be given Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

At a gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for the Russian relief society, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony, which has been under rehearsal for the past week.

GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1942

The World...

...ess Dis

New York, (UP) Dr. Se... Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Miss., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 29 1942

Tanglewood Concert Saturday Falls On Momentous Anniversary

Exactly a Century Ago William Ellery Channing Pleaded at Lenox for Enslaved Peoples

Lenox, July 29—Dr Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the third Leonore overture of Beethoven for the opening program of his festival of music at Tanglewood Saturday evening. The ringing call of freedom found in that overture is an appropriate recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event, it was pointed out today.

One hundred years ago, on August 1, 1842, William Ellery Channing delivered in the Lenox Congregational church his last public address—"dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire"—on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands.

In the printed version of his address, Channing referred to the delight he found "in the magnificent scenery of this region, in its peaceful and prosperous villages, and in the rare intelligence and virtues of the friends whose hospitality I have here enjoyed."

In his apostrophe, he declared, "A new reverence for humanity—a new feeling of brotherhood—is among the signs of the times. Before this, all oppressions are to fall. Society, silently pervaded by this, is to change its aspect of universal warfare for peace."

The program by the student orchestra Sunday, August 2, will also be dedicated to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr Koussevitzky will honor in his first Sunday afternoon concert the United States treasury's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time Ruth Posselt will play the Tchaikovsky Violin concerto. Also on the program will be the Franck Symphony in D Minor, and two stirring Sousa marches.

On August 14, another famous "Gala Benefit" will be held, with a program lasting from five in the afternoon until eleven in the evening. All proceeds will go to Russian war relief. At the concert in the Tanglewood shed that evening, Dr Koussevitzky will present the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL-REPUBLIC

...2

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK — (UP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitsky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUL 28 1942

The Music World

New York, July 28 (UP).—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Mus... Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to co... tinue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshi... Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopianists will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 29 1942

Koussevitzky to Conduct At Tanglewood Event

Dedicated to the war bond and stamp campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky August 2. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of 50 girls will sell war stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent war stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr. Koussevitzky is highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place Saturday evening, August 1, at 8:30 o'clock, when Dr. Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonora, No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The famous Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit on August 14 for Russian war relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 30 1942

Little Interest in Tanglewood

Gas Shortage and Fact That Boston Symphony Will Not Play Are Factors

There are indications that not many people from this area will attend the six concerts by the student orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky which will be given at Tanglewood during August. Indeed, there has been no specific effort on the part of the Festival Association or any local group to stir up interest in these concerts.

The travel situation, being what it is, has caused many people to give the possibility of attending the concerts little thought. Aside from the gas and tire rationing, one hears so many stories of crowded busses and overcrowded trains that people feel it is hardly worthwhile to make the effort and undergo the inconveniences of the 100 miles round trip.

Another reason for lack of interest is the fact that the Boston Symphony is not to play. Fine as any student orchestra might be, people hereabouts remain faithful to the Boston players.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 28 1942

Pioneer Valley Assn. Asks Co-operation of Drivers to Koussevitsky Concerts

The Pioneer Valley Association asks that people driving to any of the Koussevitsky concerts in August assist the Berkshire Hills committees by taking carless ticket holders in their automobiles.

A committee of the Berkshire Hills Conference wants to make arrangements for transportation of a number of music lovers from the Curtis Hotel in Lenox to the concert grounds, a mile and one-half distance; and return of these people to Lenox where they can secure railroad or bus transportation.

The Pioneer Valley Association asks that people attending the concerts from Greenfield, Northampton, Springfield, Holyoke or other towns in the Valley, who will have room in their automobiles for even one person, advise Miss Shoemaker at the Nonotuck Building, Northampton.

The Koussevitsky Music Foundation concerts will be held on Saturday evenings, Aug. 1, 8, and 15, at 8.30 and on Sundays, Aug. 2, 9, and 16 at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Koussevitsky assumed the financing of these concerts to continue the celebrated Music Festival, that each summer attracts thousands to the Berkshires.

The success of the restricted program depends in a large part on the generosity of people driving to the concerts.

101

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1942

DR KOUSSEVITZKY GUEST OF HONOR

Miss Clapp Entertains at Curtis Hotel — Several Other Items of Social Interest in Berkshire

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 27—Miss Alice Clapp of Washington was hostess for a dinner party at Curtis hotel, Lenox, tonight in honor of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. The other guests were Mrs Henry White Cannon, Mrs Charles A. Weyerhaeuser, Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Mrs Margaret Grant, Mrs George W. Seligman, Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr and Mrs Stanley Chapple, Mr and Mrs Richard Burgin, Mr and Mrs Gregor Piatgorsky, Aaron Copeland and Henry Gregor.

Mrs William Felton Barrett entertained at luncheon at Sky farm, North Egremont, and later her guests went to a garden party given by Mrs Charles Champion at her North Egremont lodge.

Princess Diane R. Eristavi was a luncheon hostess at Laurel Mere, Stockbridge. Her guests included her mother, Mrs George Otis Rockwood, Count and Countess Hans C. Seherr Thoss, Mrs William Penn Cresson and Rev Edmund Randolph Laine.

Mr and Mrs John H. C. Church had a buffet supper tonight at Bonny bank, Great Barrington, for their granddaughter, Miss Mary de Windt and William Archer Speers, New York, who are to be married tomorrow at 12.45 at St James Episcopal church with Rev Edward C. M. Tower officiating. Miss Anne de Windt is to be her sister's maid of honor. A wedding breakfast for the two families will be served at the West avenue home of Mr and Mrs de Windt.

Mr and Mrs Livingston T. Dickason, Misses Anne, Elizabeth and Katherine Dickason, Short Hills, N. J., and Mrs Lascelles C. Maxwell, Rye, N. Y., are with Mr and Mrs George Greer at Mepal manor, New Marlboro, and they entertained at dinner for them tonight. Mrs J. Macy Willets, who has Mrs J. Henry Carson of New York as a guest had the same group at luncheon at Cassilis farm, New Marlboro.

Mr and Mrs Kenneth N. Hill and daughters, Judith and Lee Hill, of 9 South Mountain road, Pittsfield, are leaving tomorrow for two weeks' stay at Martha's Vineyard.

Rev Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., of Columbus, O., yesterday afternoon at Trinity Episcopal church, Lenox, christened Daniel Lindley Hatch, son of his brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs John Davis Hatch, Jr., (Olivia Phelps Stokes), of Albany, N. Y. Later there was a tea at Brook farm, the home of Rev Dr and Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes. Canon and Mrs Stokes were the honored guests at a supper given by Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh last night following the sunset service in Wheatleigh gardens.

Mr and Mrs Ernest Howes of Palm Beach are with Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., at Belvoir terrace, Lenox, and Mrs Shepard had a luncheon party of 12 Saturday in their honor at Mahkeenac Boat club.

Stonover, 45-acre Lenox estate of the late Miss Mary Parsons on Yokun avenue is to be sold at auction Saturday, August 8, at 2.30 p. m. by Joseph P. Day of New York. The property has been in the Parsons family 70 years.

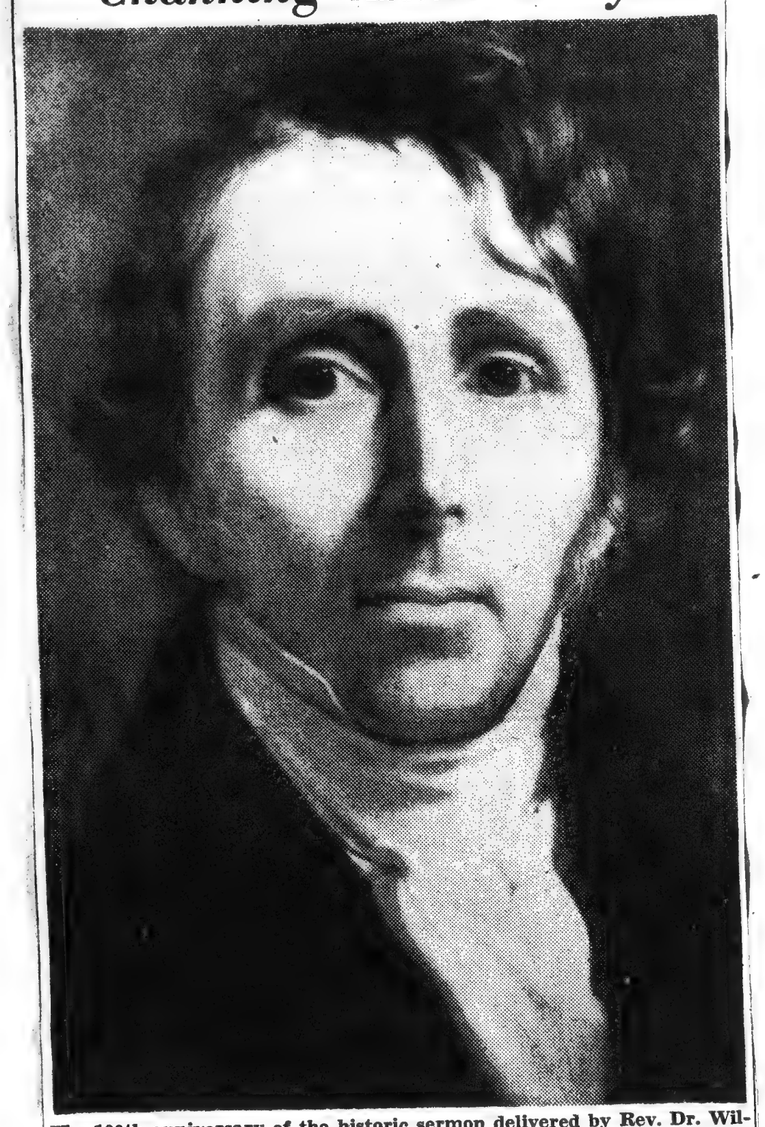
Mrs Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen, Jr., was the honored guest at a luncheon given yesterday by her mother, Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge. Mr Frelinghuysen is in the army.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 31 1942

102.

Channing Anniversary



The 100th anniversary of the historic sermon delivered by Rev. Dr. William Ellery Channing at Lenox will be marked tomorrow by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The conductor has dedicated tomorrow's concert to "the men and women of Berkshire" as Dr. Channing dedicated his sermon delivered on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies. Mrs. Hadley Channing, widow of a descendant of Dr. Channing, is living at Valley Head in Lenox for the summer. Of her four children, a son, William Ellery Channing, named for the famed clergyman, now is with the British forces in Egypt. This picture of Dr. Channing was taken from a painting by Gambardella.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 30 1942

Freedom Will Be Theme of Music Fete

W. E. Channing To Be Honored At Stockbridge

The struggle for freedom will be the theme of the opening concert at the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., Saturday evening when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky wil conduct the orchestra in a presentation of the Leonore Overture, No. 3 as the first number.

Sounding a call for liberty, this piece of music will mark the spirit of the concert which is being dedicated to William Ellery Channing, a champion of free men, who delivered one of his most famous orations on freedom at the Congregational church in Lenox Aug. 1, 1842, exactly 100 years to the day before the date of the concert.

War Stamp Sale Contest To Be Held

When Dr. Koussevitzky directs his new orchestra of 105 talented young musicians in the overture, in an anniversary program dedicated "to the men and women of the Berkshires," the call for a new freedom will be heard in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The program Sunday will be dedicated also to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr. Koussevitzky will honor the U. S. Treasury Department's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time, Ruth Posselt will be heard as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. Also on the program will be the Frank Symphony in D minor and two Sousa marches.

The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth will be redeemable for a 50 cent stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given war savings bonds. A "Victory ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

The gala benefit for Russian War Relief will be held Aug. 14 with a program lasting from 5 to 11 p. m. At the evening concert in the Music Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr. Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 3 - 1942

Price Gives "Theme With Variations"

Music Center Discourse Given on "Creative Process"

Lucien Price, writer and editor of Marblehead and Boston, gave the first of two lectures to students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and friends at Sedgwick Hall in Lenox last night on the subject, "The Creative Process."

Mr. Price called his discourse a "Theme With Variations." He discussed the solution of problems by the subconscious, the primary task of learning to concentrate and incorporation of technical skill with the primary creative process of the artist, the first three variations. Michelangelo in describing his method in sculpture said he "loosed" his statue from the marble That is, "the form of his figure was so clear, to his mind, that mallet and chisel were merely freeing it from extraneous material," said Mr. Price.

A fourth variation suggested by Beethoven was illustrated, said Mr. Price, by the advice given by the composer to his pupil, Archduke Rudolph when he said:

"Let your imperial highness continue specially to accustom yourself to note down at once, when at the pianoforte, any ideas that may come to you. . . . By such means not only will the imagination be strengthened but one learns also how to fix at the moment the most out-of-the-way ideas."

"By doing something about the first idea, we get another idea and so on until the ideas come in floods," added Mr. Price. "Thus the price of inspiration may be effort."

Mr. Price illustrated his fifth variation by a quotation from Richard Wagner concerning his composition of "Das Rheingold." It was in 1853, while Wagner was a political exile from Germany and was wandering about Europe seeking refuge. He had been looking for a favorable external environment only to be told by his "creative daimon" to "go home and go to work." The favorable environment was within himself.

The sixth variation, Mr. Price said was suggested by Goethe who said: "No productiveness of the highest kind, no remarkable discovery, no great thought that bears fruit and has results, is in the power of anyone; such things are above earthly control. Man must consider them as an unexpected gift from above. . . ."

"So the true artist," said Mr. Price, "is a ouija board of the celestial creator." But he warned that "God will send victuals, but he will not cook the dinner."

Mr. Price was introduced "as one of the great thinkers of our day," by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center. At the conclusion of the address, there was a lengthly discussion period.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

JUL 31 1942

Music Festival To Bring Visitors To the Berkshires

Six Concerts Will Be Presented by Orchestra.

Special to THE NEW YORK SUN.

Berkshire Hills, Mass., July 31.—Many reservations have been made at all Berkshire hotels, and the Curtis, at Lenox, already filled, has rejected applicants for the coming three week ends of music at Tanglewood.

Starting tomorrow evening, six concerts will be presented by an orchestra of 104 Music Center students. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. Sunday will be war bond and stamp day, in charge of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Chicago and Pittsfield. Saturday concerts will begin at 8:30 P. M., and those on Sunday at 3:30 P. M., in the music shed. Box seats alone are reserved.

Dr. and Mrs. Walter W. Palmer of New York are to have a picnic party Sunday night at Council Rock on their Four Brooks Farm estate, Tyringham. The boulder was so named because two centuries ago Indians assembled there for peace and war councils. Dr. Palmer who is in the Government war service in Washington, comes to Tyringham for an occasional week end.

Arrivals for the season at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, include Mrs. F. O. Kraemer, Mrs. Alfred J. Petti, Brooklyn, N. Y. Miss Elizabeth O'Neill, Miss Margaret Birmingham, New York; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Campbell, Short Hills, N. J.

At Curtis Hotel, Lenox, are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph May, Mrs. George McCracken, Mrs. Edith Thwaite, New York. Mrs. C. Wickliffe Yulee is to return to the Curtis on Saturday from Bar Harbor.

Mr. and Mrs. Royal Wyman Treadway were honored with a first wedding anniversary dinner at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Heaton Ives Treadway. Mr. and Mrs. G. DeWitt Williamson, Mrs. R. P. Buchanan, New York, are at the Red Lion.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 30 1942

BERKSHIRE EVENT TO BE RECOGNIZED AT TANGLEWOOD

Opening Concert Saturday to Epitomize Channing's Historic Address in Third Leonore Overture

Lenox, July 29—Dr Serge Koussevitzky has fittingly chosen the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven for the opening program of his festival of music at Tanglewood Saturday evening. The ringing call of freedom found in that overture is an appropriate recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event.

One hundred years ago, on August 1, 1842, William Emery Channing delivered in the Lenox Congregational church his last public address—"dedicated to the men of women of Berkshire"—on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands. The oration still rangs as one of the major addresses of American history.

The program on Sunday also will be dedicated to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr Koussevitzky will honor in his first Sunday afternoon concert the United States treasury's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time, Ruth Posselt will play the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto. Also on the program will be the Franck Symphony in D Minor, and two stirring Sousa marches.

The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth at Tanglewood will be redeemable for a 50-cent defense stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given war bonds. A "victory ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

On August 14, another famous benefit will be held, with a program lasting from 5 in the afternoon until 11 in the evening. All proceeds will go to Russian War relief. At the concert in the Tanglewood shed that evening, Dr Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 30 1942

Koussevitzky To 'Pay Piper' Himself at Concert

LENOX, Mass.-AP-When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much, of his own funds, was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" Overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 30 1942

YOUTH CONCERT SERIES TO OPEN AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Will Direct 105 Musical Students Saturday Night

PITTSFIELD, July 29—Something new will be tried out at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, when Serge Koussevitzky will raise his baton to open a series of six concerts. The Boston Orchestra will be absent, but in its stead will be 105 young musicians who are studying at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, a venture carried on despite the refusal of the Boston Orchestra's trustees to back it.

Out of Student Class

Probably the audience, if it wasn't told, could not of itself tell whether the Boston Orchestra was playing. If the student orchestra is anything like last year's similar organization, its opening concert will be well worth the trouble of attending, what with gas rationing and crowded busses. In fact, some have doubt that the orchestra could be called "student," for many of its members have reached that stage of excellence which make them professionals, and not a few are playing in other orchestras.

The six concerts will be on successive Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, starting this week end Sunday's program will be dedicated to a war bond and stamp sale. Not only will young women strive to sell the Government's bonds and stamps, but the stub of every ticket to the concert will be good for one 50-cent stamp.

The program Saturday night will open with the Haydn symphony in B flat, No. 102. Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" will follow and the concert will close with the playing of the Shostakovitch 5th symphony.

Tribute to Russia

Continuing his tribute to his homeland, Russia, and to her defense against the Nazi invaders, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Tschaikowsky violin concerto to feature his Sunday afternoon concert. The concerto will be played by Ruth Posselt, wife of the concert master of the Boston Orchestra, Richard Burgin. There will also be two Sousa marches and the program will close with the Franck symphony in D minor.

Transportation to the concerts may cause some trouble, but the Berkshire Hills Conference is endeavoring to make up auto parties, thus relieving the crowded bus facilities.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 30 1942

TO PRESENT OPERA AT MUSIC CENTER

One Performance Aug. 7, Other Aug. 13

BY FULL STAFF

Orchestra and Chorus to Assist in Presentation of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

The opera division of the Berkshire Music center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, at Tanglewood, one a week from tomorrow night and the other Aug. 13. The entire personnel of the Music center, including the orchestra and chorus, will participate in the opera.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the center and conductor of the student's orchestra of 105 pieces, has announced several changes in the original program for the symphony concerts, the first of which will be given Saturday night, followed by another which is for the war bond campaign benefit on Sunday afternoon.

The revised programs for the six concerts follows: Aug. 1, Haydn, Symphony in G-major, No. 88; Beethoven, Overture to Leonore, No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Aug. 2, Sousa, Two Marches; Tchaikovsky, Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4 in F-Minor.

Aug. 8, Hanson, Symphony No. 3; Mozart, Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat with Luboshutz and Nemenoff as soloists; Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E-Minor, Op. 98.

Aug. 9, Handel, Concerto Grosso; Martinu, Concerto Grosso; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Aug. 15, Bach, Magnificat in D; Beethoven, Symphony No. 9 in D-Minor, Op. 125.

Aug. 16, Copland, Quiet City; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 7.

RED BANK, N. J.
STANDARD

Concert Expert Soldier Leader

Private Thors Johnson Led Ranking Bands

FORT MONMOUTH — A brilliant conductor before he enlisted in the Army of the United States, Private Thor Johnson will make his debut as Army conductor Sunday when he directs the Signal Corps Replacement Training Center Band.

Band concerts, which are held every Sunday from 3:30 to 4:30 p. m., in the Service Club Park, are open to all soldiers and their guests. Private Johnson ordinarily plays the French horn in the band which he will direct.

A former professor of music at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Johnson, who is only 29, has twice been guest conductor of the famed Philadelphia Symphonic Orchestra. During 1940-41, he was a student under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A slight, bespectacled artist, Private Johnson was originator and director of the Mozart Festival in Ashville, N. C., and of the Little Symphony at Michigan, which has given 350 concerts in 25 states under his baton. A graduate of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, he hails from Winston-Salem, N. C.

While at Michigan, he was conductor of the Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra and director and conductor of the University Symphony of 90 pieces and the University Choral Union of 300 voices.

MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

AUG 2 - 1942

Saturday—Chicago, outdoor performance of "Carmen" at Soldier's Field with Gladys Swarthout in title role and John Charles Thomas as Escamillo; Berkshire Music Center, final lecture concert by Olin Downes, third orchestral program; New York City, Spitalny Orchestra, Summer Symphony, Lewisohn stadium concert by Philharmonic under Werner Josten with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist in Mendelssohn G Minor Piano Concerto, Sedgwick House gathering for experienced folk dancers.

Says Mary Jarman Nelson in the Etude magazine for August, "Regarding amateur music in general: soldiers would rather make it than listen to it. Who wouldn't?"

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN

AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Center To Present Opera

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theater Concert hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, the 7th, and Thursday evening, the 13th.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are cooperating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:—

Saturday evening, the 8th:—
Hanson .....Symphony No 3
Mozart ..Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No 365)
Soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff
Brahms..Symphony No 4 in E-minor, Op 98

Sunday afternoon, the 9th:—
Handel .....Concerto Grosso
Martinu .....Concerto Grosso
Tchaikovsky .....Symphony No 4

Saturday evening, the 15th:—
Bach .....Magnificat in D
Beethoven.Symphony No 9 in D-minor, Op. 125

Sunday afternoon, the 16th:—
Copland .....Quiet City
Shostakovitch .....Symphony No 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on the 14th, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the Manifestation, several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The famous draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian War Relief.

Dedicated to the war bond and stamp campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky this afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tchaikovsky concerto, Dr Koussevitzky will also lead the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire county selling concert tickets. A group of over 50 girls will sell war stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50-cent war stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr Koussevitzky is highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of over 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from over 30 states, and who represent the most talented youth of the country. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the past winter and spring.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 30 1942

Tanglewood Events Have Freedom Theme

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven for the opening program of his Festival of Music at Tanglewood Saturday evening.

The ringing call of freedom found in that overture is recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event.

On Aug. 1, 1842, William Emery Channing delivered in the Lenox Congregational Church his last public address—"dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire"—on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the Emancipation of Slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands. The oration still ranks as one of the major addresses of American history.

When on Saturday Koussevitzky directs his new orchestra of 105 talented young musicians in the Leonore Overtrue, in an anniversary program dedicated "to the men and women of the Berkshires", the call for a new freedom will be heard in the Tanglewood Shed.

The program on Sunday will also be dedicated to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr. Koussevitzky will honor the United States Treasury's War Bond and Stamp Campaign. The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth at Tanglewood will be redeemable for a 50 cent defense stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given war bonds. A "Victory Ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

On Aug. 14, another famous "Gala Benefit" will be held, with a program lasting from 5 until 11 p. m. All proceeds will go to Russian War Relief. At the concert in the Tanglewood Shed that evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widly discussed Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony.

NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

AUG - 1942

They Panned a Genius

So Says Koussevitzky of Critics Who Roasted Shostakovich Symphony

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—Music critics who panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview yesterday.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven" and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion" and was "anti-climatic." Other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 2 - 1942

Tonight will bring the start of the Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitky. Four additional programs are scheduled for Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons during this month, and two representations of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," an opera rarely heard and seen in this country. Arrangements for transportation to Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., include reservations for 1000 enlisted men as Mr. Koussevitzky's guests at tomorow night's concert.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

AUG 2 1942

Koussevitzky Defends Shostakovich's Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.— (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Lenigrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained trick," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

AUG - 1942

Conductor Irked by Criticism of Russian Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL

Koussevitzky Carries On a Work That He Began Two Years Ago

By OLIN DOWNES

THERE will be held this afternoon at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, Mass., the opening exercises of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center. The event has more than ordinary significance. It betokens as courageous and public spirited an act as any musician in America could have to his credit in this time of national crisis. For Dr. Koussevitzky, with the devotion to the musician's ideals which always has characterized him, and with a complete realization of what the preservation of the creative forces of art mean at this time to the nation of which he is a citizen, has personally taken full financial responsibility for the operation and expenses of the institution which he founded two seasons ago—a very considerable sum for any private purse today—and has seen to it that the Berkshire Music Center offers a broader program of music education and culture in this, its season, than ever before in its history.

Everything for the Students

None of the necessary economies or retrenchments which circumstances have made advisable has been permitted to affect this sovereign purpose in which the director of the institution has been fully supported by all the members of his faculty and every one concerned with its activities. Everything for the students and for a system of instruction which has profited by the experiments and experiences of past seasons, but nothing for the nonessential purposes or ornamentation or propaganda! That is the attitude and the policy. It goes without saying that in an institution which aims at modern, direct and, if necessary, unconventional approach to methods of artistic education there are problems to be met each season, new ideas to be tested in the crucible of experience. That is the characteristic of every great creative effort, and it will be met at the Center in the spirit of the director when he told a certain lecturer at the opening season that if he didn't do a good job he would be fired and that if the director didn't do a good job he would fire himself! That is the kind of offensive that is needed.

If one were giving partisan praise to a man or an institution by these words, they would not be said. The considerations involved in the course Dr. Koussevitzky is taking can well be taken to heart by artists and those who support art through the length and breadth of the nation.

To Protect Art

For if ever there was a time when it was necessary to protect and propagate the musical art, and make it a living force in the life of the people, it is now. In the words of the director, "It is during the troubled periods of history that those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture stand in the front rank, battling to help an endangered humanity." In the face of these issues, matters of personal advantage or material security become a completely secondary affair. The duty of the musician in the war to be waged on his vitally important front is perfectly clear, and not a matter to be adjusted after due examination of the business risks of the undertaking. We have a war to win on many fronts, which demands the very most of energy, courage and sacrifice that we can bring to the business. And after the destruction and horror we shall have a peace to win, the issue of which will be more dubious, and will fundamentally depend upon the amount of intelligence and of morality that can be brought to the task. In this crisis, too, America must contribute all she has of strength and spiritual vision to the solution, and these things have directly to do with the realizations of the art that a distinguished musician is striving, with every resource that he has, to bring us.

Unnamed Supporters

Details of the activities at the Center are of less importance in this place than the central fact of its maintenance and its continued activities on this plane, and here warm acknowledgment is due friends and supporters, some of them unnamed, who have come to Dr. Koussevitzky's assistance in his project. It will be remembered that for its first two seasons the Berkshire Music Center was sponsored by the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the school's term ran concurrently in its last weeks with the three-week season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. This season, when war conditions and gasoline shortage made it impossible, the Symphonic Festival has been abandoned, and the Boston Symphony found that it had not funds available to guarantee the expenses of the Center. But it has extended to Dr. Koussevitzky the use of Tanglewood and its administration building and teaching equipment for his use, and the Berkshire Festival Association, through its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, has not only conditioned the great Music Shed with its stage and organ and full equipment for concerts or other musical activities and presented these facilities to Dr. Koussevitzky for the Summer; it also has given active and sympathetic support to his plans for certain activities of the student body which cannot fail to be of artistic importance for the community.

There Will Be Concerts

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is suspended, but the Music Center, now functioning under the aegis of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., will have some compensatory offerings accessible to the music-loving public. These include six concerts to be given, two a week, on dates parallel to those of the recent seasons of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra will be the first students orchestra of the Center, numbering ninety-four players. The repertory will be very similar to that of the erstwhile festivals and the special concert, to be given for the benefit of the Russian War Relief, on Aug. 14, will be the occasion of the first concert performance in America of Shostakovich's Seventh symphony. An immense work, ninety minutes in length, which for many months conductors have been fighting for the privilege of introducing in this country. Toscanini's radio première takes place July 19. The Berkshire Music Center gives the work its first American concert performance. The proceeds of this concert go to the benefit of the Russian War Relief, and in spite of transportation difficulties it will doubtless attract a large audience. By the standards of the Center's first orchestra of last Summer, which were very high, its leading of this season should be able, particularly under a master of orchestral technique, to give highly representative interpretations. It will be entirely of students, although twenty-two leading members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on Dr. Koussevitzky's faculty. They are not permitted by existing arrangements to take part in the concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky, after examination of the applicants for the orchestra this season, is confident that he will have, if anything, a better student orchestra than last year, and that he will not need them.

Working Plans

The second orchestra of the Center, with an odd fifty players of secondary capacities, is for training purposes, and for the performance of compositions attended by a group of students who listen while others of special instrumental skills play the music that is studied. But this is also a stamping ground for the preliminary exercises of the young conductors who study at the school, of whom there will be four this season. The compositions class of fourteen members is headed by Aaron Copland and by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer whose music has had wide acceptance of late seasons, and who will replace Igor Stravinsky, who was expected to be the guest composer of the Center this season. Other contractual arrangements which Mr. Stravinsky was forced to complete made his acceptance of Koussevitzky's necessarily belated official invitation an impossibility. There will also be Sunday morning concerts of chamber music given under the supervision of Gregor Piatagorsky, a performanec of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" in English by the opera department under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan, and certain lecture-concerts, with uncommon programs of old and new music, events to which the public, as well as the student membership of the Center, will be admitted. A plan is afoot to sell course tickets, at low prices, for all these occasions. It will be seen that the Center will be of service not only to its students but to the Berkshire community.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

AUG 2 - 1942

The World Of Music

NEW YORK—(U.P.)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its Summer festival, to continue on weekends until Aug. 10. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Starting yesterday there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-panist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 6 - 1942

Russian Benefit At Tanglewood

Mrs Hollis M. Carlisle, Chairman of Local Committee, Making Plans

Mrs Hollis Moore Carlisle of Severn street, Longmeadow, is chairman of the Greater Springfield committee making plans for the gala Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th. Mrs Carlisle attended a meeting yesterday at which Dr Serge Koussevitzky spoke on the program [redacted].

Highlight of the affair will be the playing of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony. Similar to the benefit last year, the program will start at 5 o'clock with concerts given by the various units of the Berkshire Music center. There will be a lawn party followed by the evening concert.

Distinguished guests attending will include Dorothy Maynor, celebrated soprano who was discovered by Dr Koussevitzky,, Dorothy Thompson, columnist and lecturer, and Albert Spalding, conductor.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

[redacted]

CONCERTS OPENED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Conducts the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at First of Tanglewood Series

2,500 IN THE AUDIENCE

'Share-Your-Gas' Plan an Aid —Shostakovich, Beethoven and Haydn on Program

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—The first of a series of concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky in the music shed here at Tanglewood tonight, under the auspices of the Koussevitsky Music Foundations, Inc. Coming after a serene, sunshiny day, the concert attracted an audience of 2,500 persons, an encouraging attendance in view of the prevailing transportation handicaps.

For this initial event Dr. Koussevitzky had devised a noble and admirably balanced program consisting of representative compositions from the different centuries. It comprised Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3, and the Fifth symphony of Shostakovich.

The Beethoven masterpiece, which occupied the central position on the list, had been specially chosen for the occasion because of its message, so appropriate at this time, of the surging joy of mankind at release from tyranny and oppression.

Shostakovich on Program

No less carefully selected was the Shostakovich symphony, a work by a compatriot of the conductor, voicing significantly the present aspirations of the Russian people.

Under ordinary circumstances, the ninth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra would have opened here last night, with Dr. Koussevitzky at the helm, but because of the war crisis this was not feasible.

Instead, Dr. Koussevitzky decided to give six concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center on his own responsibility, believing this course of action imperative to help maintain public morale under existing world conditions.

Through the courtesy of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which owns the Tanglewood properties, and of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation was granted the use this Summer of the Tanglewood estate and the music shed.

Financed by Koussevitzky

But Dr. Koussevitzky financed the series of concerts to be given on three successive Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, and it is from the Berkshire Music Center, which is being carried on this Summer by the recently organized Koussevitzky Music Foundation, that the young American students who form the orchestra were selected.

These students hail from thirty-five States of this country and their average age is less than 20 years. They comprise less in number than half of the total enrollment of the music center, which this year amounts to 260, six of whom come from South America and were sent to the school by the Division of Cultural Relations of the State Department.

The majority of the 110 players in the orchestra are attending the center for the first time this Summer, but some of its personnel had been in the ensemble last year and the year before. The expert performance by the students of the difficult works presented last night was a striking demonstration of what can be accomplished for gifted young musicians in a short space of time by a man with Dr. Koussevitzky's vision and high artistic and humanitarian ideals.

The delighted audience, which strenuously applauded the impressive interpretations, came to the music shed in private cars, and even a hayrick. Every car was filled to capacity, in consequence of a "share your gas" plan of community cooperation assuring no empty seats in the machines.

Half of Boxes Sold

This year the reserved seats for the concerts are all situated in the boxes, which contain a total of 516 chairs. The rest of the seats are open to general admission. Half of the boxes have been sold to date for the season. Reservations have been received from many parts of the country.

In addition to the orchestral concerts, other attractions are slated for the present series. This afternoon a featured event was a lecture by Olin Downes on folk songs, madrigals and early instrumental music, which was held in the chamber music hall at the center before a capacity audience.

The second orchestral concert, tomorrow afternoon, will be dedicated to the United States Treasury's war bond and stamp campaign, and all stubs of entrance tickets will be redeemable for a fifty-cent defense stamp.

Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, who was scheduled to give an address at this concert, has been detained in Washington, and in his place Roy Dickinson Welch, consulting expert to the Treasury Department and former Professor of Music at Princeton University, will be the speaker.

After the concert a program will be offered at 8:30 P. M. in the Chamber Music Hall by students in the chamber music classes of the center.

Other events scheduled for the season include two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," further lectures by Mr. Downes, chamber music concerts, and a gala benefit concert for Russian war relief on Aug. 14, at which Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovich's Seventh symphony. The work will be repeated at the final "international" concert.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Praises Symphony Of Shostakovich

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Having a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

Koussevitzky Directs Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire's Social Season Reaches Peak of Interest At Tanglewood's Festival

Notables Fill Boxes as Dr Serge Koussevitzky Opens Music Series, Conducting Orchestra of 104 Students From 30 States — Today Will Be 'Treasury Day' — Guests Arrive From Many Places to Enjoy War-Limited Program — Few Other Events Listed During This Period and These Are Chiefly at Golf Clubs Where Annual Tournaments Provide Diversion

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 1—Tanglewood's Festival of Music given by the Berkshire Music Center, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, opened tonight in the great music shed between Lenox and Stockbridge. For society it took first place among events of the season and the boxes were well filled. Many waited to see how the first concert "went over" before buying seats for the series of six concerts over three weekends by an orchestra of 104 students from 30 states.

Among the Box-Holders

Among the box-holders for one or all of the series are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival that built the music shed; Mr and Mrs David T. Dana, Mr and Mrs John Nicholas Brown, Mr and Mrs Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Zenas Crane Colt, Mr and Mrs Seton Henry (Josephine W. Drexel), Lady Salter of London and Tyringham, wife of Sir Arthur Salter, chairman of the British Purchasing commission at Washington.

Mark A. DeWolfe Howe of Louisburg Square, Boston; Mrs Bartow Crocker, Mr and Mrs Philip R. Allen, Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Mrs Benjamin Walworth Arnold (Elizabeth Van Rensselaer), Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Mrs William Norton Bullard, Mr and Mrs Lowell Thomas, Mrs E. Norman Scott, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs William E. Cushing, Mrs Edward Thaw, Mr Charles E. Stanton

[illegible]son. day at F. Mc- Court le of h 50 king war tzky each ticket or admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent war stamp on the grounds.

Tanglewood is attracting many visitors as in other years. Rich in history and tradition it dates back 95 years to 1847 when William Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, bought several farms which he merged into a gentleman's estate. In 1938 Tappan's granddaughter, Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra and it is now the leading American shrine of music.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
AUG 2 - 1942

U. S. Conductor Defends Soviet's New Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview Saturday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony brew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics however, praised it unreservedly.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 2 [illegible]

Koussevitzky Pans Music Critics Asserts Shostakovich Is Genius

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP.)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet composer "Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so appraised the young Russian musician during an intreview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composr since Bethoven with such trmendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

With a malicious gleam in his eye, Dr. Koussevitzky went on to quote critics' reviews of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony at the time it was first performed.

"The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfuly long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line," he read.

"Well," the conductor smiled, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature.

"And it sems to be that the critics of today make the same mistake about Shostakovich.

"His work banal? They mistake popularity for banality. Program music? The Eroica is program music. Berlioz's greatest music is program music. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven is program music, and the Pastoral (of Beethoven), one of the greates pieces of program music, is also one of the greatest pieces of music of all time."

3000 Trek to Lenox For Music's Sake

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP.)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars, at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides, some 3000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire syphonic festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, was music for its own sake. The audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians, from Dr. Koussevitzky's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Takes Sharp Issue With Seventh Symphony's Critics

Conductor Declares Composer Shostakovich Is Genius Who Possesses Greatest Appeal to Masses

Lenox, Aug. 1—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Aussian musicial during in young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic."

Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "that had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian War relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center will play.

Recalls Other Reviews

With a malicious gleam in his eye, Dr Koussevitzky went on to quote critics' reviews of Beethoven's Eroica symphony at the time it was first performed.

"'The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfully long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line,'" he read.

"Well," the conductor smiled, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature.

"And it seems to me that the critics of today make the same mistake about Shostakovich."

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Centre to Give "Merry Wives"

Lenox, Mass., July 31.—The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Centre, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the Opera Department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Festival Under Way

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning today, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopanist will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

* * *

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Praises Symphony Of Shostakovich

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Having a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

Koussevitzky Directs Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tor[illegible] program will be playe[illegible] rehe[illegible] son[illegible] c[illegible]

etup Is Urged By Ramspeck

Should Be Nationwide or Abandoned, Con-

sically or[illegible]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Takes Sharp Issue With Seventh Symphony's Critics

Conductor Declares Composer Shostakovich Is Genius Who Possesses Greatest Appeal to Masses

Lenox, Aug. 1—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Aussian musicial during in young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic."

Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "that had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian War relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center will play.

Recalls Other Reviews

With a malicious gleam in his eye, Dr Koussevitzky went on to quote critics' reviews of Beethoven's Eroica symphony at the time it was first performed.

"'The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfully long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line,'" he read.

"Well," the conductor smiled, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature.

"And it seems to me that the critics of today make the same mistake about Shostakovich."

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire's Social Season Reaches Peak of Interest At Tanglewood's Festival

Notables Fill Boxes as Dr Serge Koussevitzky Opens Music Series, Conducting Orchestra of 104 Students From 30 States — Today Will Be 'Treasury Day' — Guests Arrive From Many Places to Enjoy War-Limited Program — Few Other Events Listed During This Period and These Are Chiefly at Golf Clubs Where Annual Tournaments Provide Diversion

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 1—Tanglewood's Festival of Music given by the Berkshire Music Center, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, opened tonight in the great music shed between Lenox and Stockbridge. For society it took first place among events of the season and the boxes were well filled. Many waited to see how the first concert "went over" before buying seats for the series of six concerts over three weekends by an orchestra of 104 students from 30 states.

Among the Box-Holders

Among the box-holders for one or all of the series are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival that built the music shed; Mr and Mrs David T. Dana, Mr and Mrs John Nicholas Brown, Mr and Mrs Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Zenas Crane Colt, Mr and Mrs Seton Henry (Josephine W. Drexel), Lady Salter of London and Tyringham, wife of Sir Arthur Salter, chairman of the British Purchasing commission at Washington.

Mark A. DeWolfe Howe of Louisburg Square, Boston; Mrs Bartow Crocker, Mr and Mrs Philip R. Allen, Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Mrs Benjamin Walworth Arnold (Elizabeth Van Rensselaer), Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Mrs William Norton Bullard, Mr and Mrs Lowell Thomas, Mrs E. Norman Scott, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs William E. Cushing, Mrs Edward Thaw, Mr and Mrs Elmer Rice, Mrs Charles E. Mitchell. Mrs Katherine Stanton Jones, Mrs Kenneth F. Simpson.

Tomorrow is to be Treasury day at Tanglewood with Mrs Donald F. McPherson of Chicago, Ill., and Court Hill, Pittsfield, in charge of a sale of war bonds and stamps, in which 50 girls will take part. Those making the largest sales will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of each ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent war stamp on the grounds.

Tanglewood is attracting many visitors as in other years. Rich in history and tradition it dates back 95 years to 1847 when William Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, bought several farms which he merged into a gentleman's estate. In 1938 Tappan's granddaughter, Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, gave the property to the Boston Symphony orchestra and it is now the leading American shrine of music.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Centre to Give "Merry Wives"

Lenox, Mass., July 31.—The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Centre, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the Opera Department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pans Music Critics Asserts Shostakovich Is Genius

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP.)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet composer "Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so appraised the young Russian musician during an intreview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composr since Bethoven with such trmendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

With a malicious gleam in his eye, Dr. Koussevitzky went on to quote critics' reviews of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony at the time it was first performed.

"The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfuly long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line," he read.

"Well," the conductor smiled, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature.

"And it sems to be that the critics of today make the same mistake about Shostakovich.

"His work banal? They mistake popularity for banality. Program music? The Eroica is program music. Berlioz's greatest music is program music. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven is program music, and the Pastoral (of Beethoven), one of the greates pieces of program music, is also one of the greatest pieces of music of all time."

3000 Trek to Lenox For Music's Sake

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP.)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars, at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides, some 3000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire syphonic festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, was music for its own sake. The audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians. from Dr. Koussevitzky's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
AUG 2 - 1942

U. S. Conductor Defends Soviet's New Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview Saturday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony brew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics however, praised it unreservedly.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Festival Under Way

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until August 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning today, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duopanist will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

* * *

106.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 1 194

Berkshire Center Concerts Start, At $30,000 Loss

LENOX (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds, was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Conductor Flays Critics For Panning Red Composer

LENOX, Mass., Ang. 1.—(Associated Press.) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written During Siege

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

None Since Beethoven

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center will play.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 1 - 1942

Students Will Be Ushers

Students at Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, are to be ushers for the festival of six concerts which starts tomorrow at 8.30 p. m. Special officers from Lenox and Stockbridge police departments and two from Pittsfield will have charge of parking. Berkshire Street Railway company has been granted a permit to operate extra busses on its regular routes, which will leave passengers at the nearest point, Curtis hotel, Lenox. From that point to Tanglewood a shuttle service is to be furnished. Busses also will meet the New York city express at Lenox station tomorrow night to convey concert patrons to Tanglewood. This service was arranged by Pittsfield office, Berkshire Hills conference.

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
AUG 2 - 1942

Symphony Maps Season

Not a 'Luxury,' but 'Civic Need'

As a "civic need" rather than a "luxury" during wartime, the Omaha Little Symphony orchestra will open its concert season on November 16 with Albert Spalding, violinist, as guest artist.

Other dates for the season are January 25 and March 29, according to Miss Eileen Keliher-Jeffers, newly elected president of the Omaha Civic Music association recently incorporated to sponsor the orchestra as a civic venture, with offices at the Joslyn Memorial.

The orchestra is composed of local talent, supported by the people of Omaha and of neighboring communities, and is pledged to their enjoyment.

Reports received by officers of the association tell of orchestras of this kind which still are treasured in London and other cities abroad.

Going into its third successive year, the Little Symphony, composed of 45 members, again will be directed by Richard E. Duncan, protege of Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony. The Duncans are expected back this week-end from a holiday at Burntside lodge, Ely, Minn.

As usual a Strauss waltz, or a comparable selection, will be featured at each concert. This year's concert program will offer a great variety of music, it's said.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 1 - 1942

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY SEES IT THROUGH

It's Costing Him $30,000, but the Concert Goes On.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (A. P.).—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight at the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he will be not only directing the 105-piece orchestra, but "paying the piper" to the tune of perhaps $30,000.

Dr. Koussevitzky decided several months ago to spend that much of his own funds when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of an expected lack of patronage as a result of the war. Declaring that "art must died last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed for three hours a day—and sometimes longer—since July 5. The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts to be given over three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax. This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1942

Russ Composer Called Greatest Since Beethoven

Koussevitzky Takes Issue With Some Critics

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. — (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
AUG 1 - 1942

OPERA IS PLANNED AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Lenox, Mass.—The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

Symphony concerts will be given at Tanglewood on Saturday evening, Aug. 8; Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9; Saturday evening, Aug. 15; Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 1942

Prof. Roy Welch To Speak At Tanglewood Tomorrow

Special Assistant to Morgenthau To Be Here for War Bond Benefit Concert

Prof. Roy D. Welch, head of the music department at Princeton University and special assistant to Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau Jr., will speak briefly tomorrow afternoon at the war bond benefit concert at Tanglewood. Former head of the music department at Smith College, Prof. Welch has been heard many times in Pittsfield.

The concert to be given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra of 105 players starting at 3 has been dedicated to the U. S. Treasury war bond campaign.

Bonds will be sold at booths on the Tanglewood grounds by a group of women headed by Mrs. Louise T. McGill of Pittsfield. Helping her will be Miss Kathleen Noonan, Miss Hortense Platt, Miss Barbara Williams and Miss Helen Klose. Stubs of all tickets will be good for a war stamp.

Grounds will open at 1 o'clock and at that hour it will be possible to buy light refreshments of sandwiches, coffee and milk. Because of the war, the menu will not be as extensive as other years.

Eben O. Kimball of Lee hopes to have his horses with ray racks to help transport persons from the monument in Lenox to Tanglewood. This will be in addition to other transportation arrangements being made to accommodate persons who come by regular busses to the center of Lenox.

The concert tonight will begin at 8.30.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
AUG 2 - 1942

EAST THUMBS ITS WAY TO CONCERT

Koussevitzky Puts on One-Man Music Show in Berkshire Hills

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. (AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire symphonic festival which was cancelled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

NO PARKING JAMS

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstances an audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians—recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the Third Leonore Overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's capable leadership.

STRINGS ACT UP

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch, of Washington, on the treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck symphony, the Tschaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Second Concert In Berkshires

Fine Music and Good Golf Stimulate War Bond Buying in Busy Season

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass.—This afternoon's concert at Tanglewood, the second in three week-end series of six arranged by the Berkshire Music Center, has been dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp campaign. Ruth Posselt, violinist, will appear as soloist in the Tchaikovsky concerto. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra of 104 musicians from thirty States in two Sousa marches and the Franck symphony in D minor.

Fifty girls are to compete in selling War Stamps on the grounds, and those making the maximum sales will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a fifty cent War Stamp on the grounds. The sale is under the direction of Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Chicago and Pittsfield, whose Berkshire organization already has sold more than $5,500,000 in War Bonds.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1942

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 1 1942

Music Festival Opens Tonight

Kousseevitzky Ready To Take $30,000 Loss.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1, (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much, of his own funds, was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 Festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian Relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 1 - 1942

CONCERT SERIES OPENS TONIGHT AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Underwriting Musical Event to Tune of $30,000

LENOX, Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

Would Save Art

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

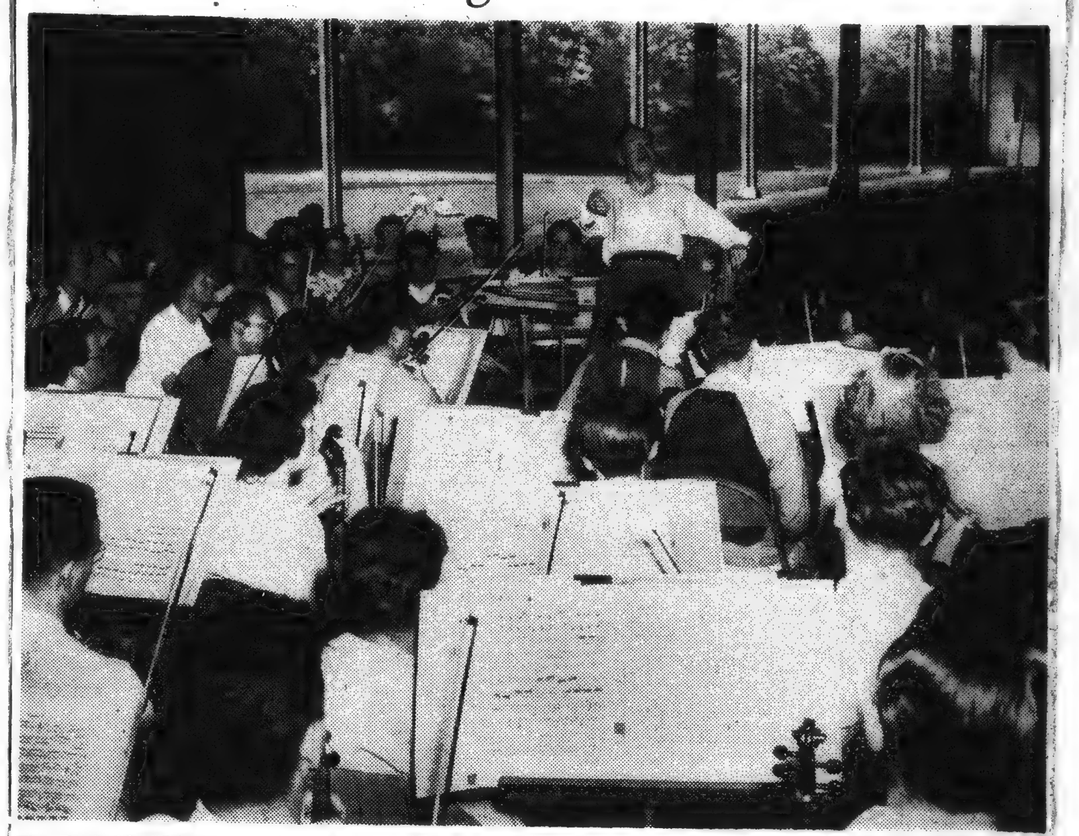
The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

107

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 1 1942

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1942

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

FRESNO, CALIF.
BEE

AUG 1 - 1942

Conductor Underwrites Boston Concert Costs

LENOX (Mass.), Aug. 1.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105 piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7 and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

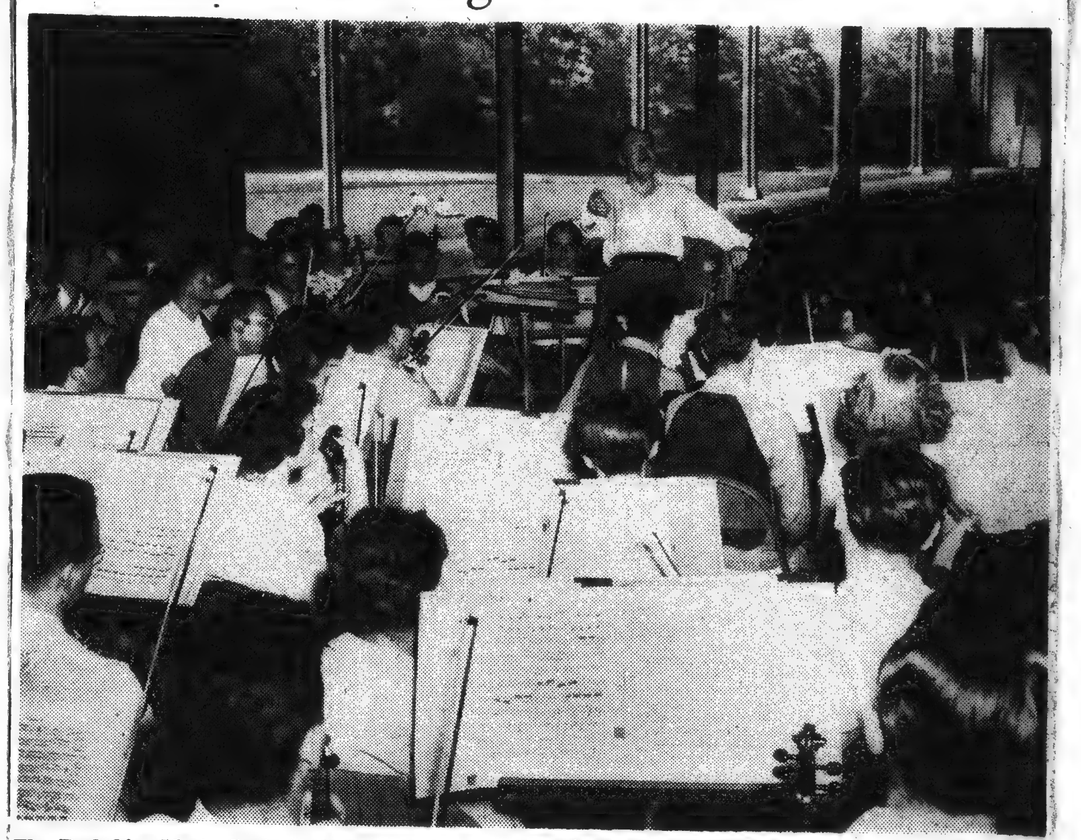
Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 1942

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

Best Seller May Force Whirlaway

CHICAGO, Aug. 1, (INS)—Whirlaway, greatest money winner the turf has ever known, was scheduled to go to the post at Arlington Park today as the feature attraction of the $25,000 Arlington Handicap.

The big race shared the limelight with two $7,500 stake races, [illegible] 15-12, managed to regain the victory road when they opened their series with the Tigers in Detroit with a 7-6 victory for Rex Hughson, who chalked up his 12th win of the season.

Tony Lupien led the Boston attack by getting a homer, double and single and both Ted Williams and Pete Fox clouted the Detroit pitching twice. One of Williams' safe blows was his 23rd homer of the season.

Hughson lasted through the eighth and then gave way to Bill Butland, who permitted the Tigers two runs on one hit in the finale.

Broadway Charley Wagner, who has a 9-9 record, will attempt to get beyond the .500 mark today when the Sockers start him against Hal Newhouser, who has been charged with eight setbacks against four wins.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1942

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 1 1942

Serge Koussevitzky 'Pays Piper' Himself For Concert Series

LENOX, Mass. –(AP)– When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms. Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

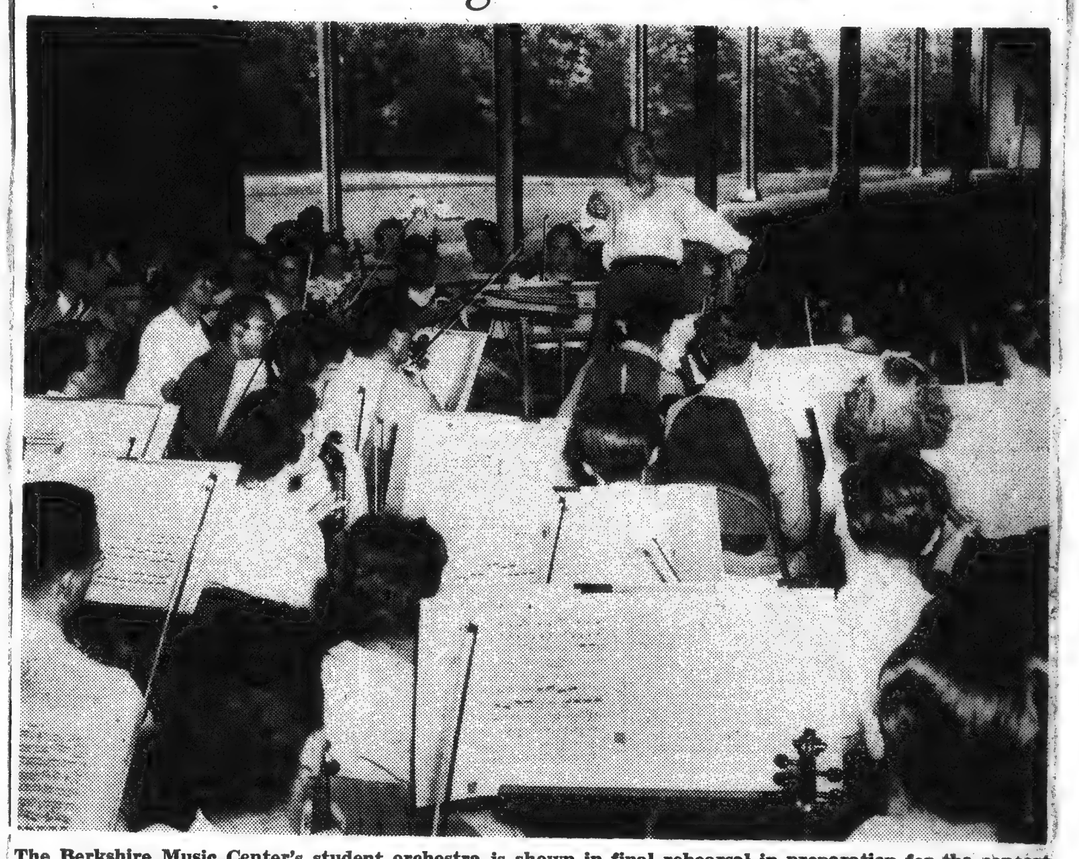
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 1942

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1942

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION

AUG - 1942

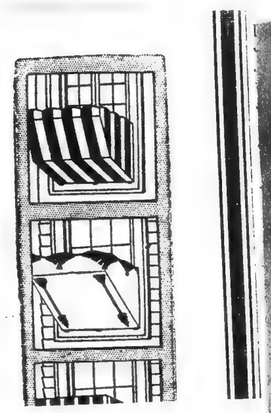
Orchestra Leader 'Pays The Piper'

Lenox, Mass (AP)—When Ser Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonig on the first of a series of concer at the Berkshire Music Center, he not only be directing the 105-pie orchestra, but will be "paying t piper" himself to the unmusic tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that mu of his own funds was made by Koussevitzky several months a when the Boston Symphony trust and the management of the Be shire Music Festival called off plans for the 1942 festival beca of the difficulty of travel and expected lack of patronage beca of the war.

Declaring that "art must die l in a war," the Boston conduc agreed to underwrite the whole of whatever concerts he could g at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be pla by an orchestra which has rehe ed three hours daily—and so times longer—since July 5.



CO
O
A

Kous
M

LENC
Kousse
on the
the Ber only be tra, but himself
haps $3

The d
his own
sevitzky
Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests wil speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky wil lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

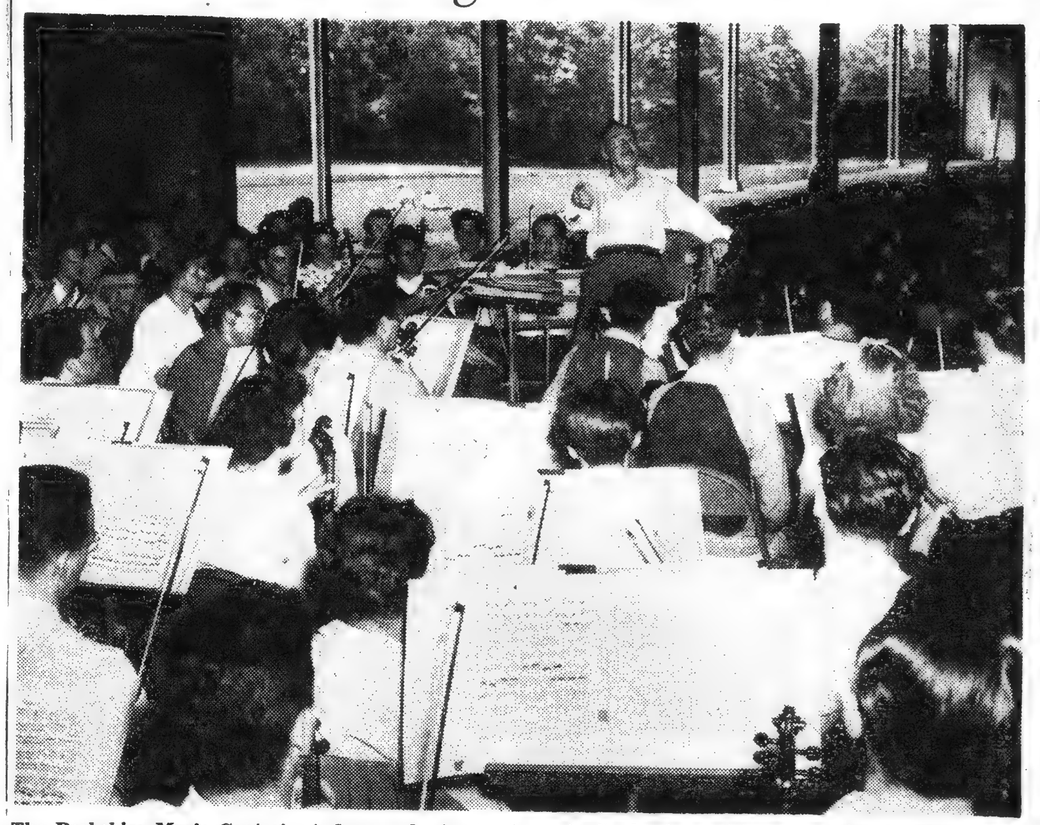
The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

107.

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG - 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff: Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 1942

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

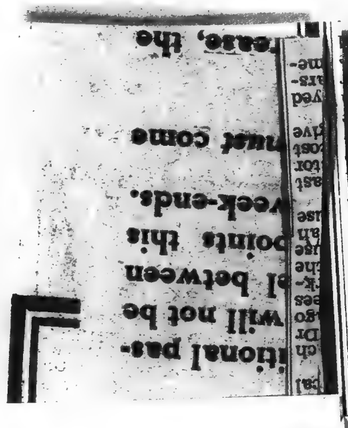
AUG 1 - 1942

Lenox Concert Continuance Costs Conductor $30,000

LENOX, MASS.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music festival called off plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the music center.



Kous
M

LENO
Koussev
on the f
the Berl
only be tra, but himself
haps $3

The
his own
sevitzky
Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

15-12, managed to regain the victory road when they opened their

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8

Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms. Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9

Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15

Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16

Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

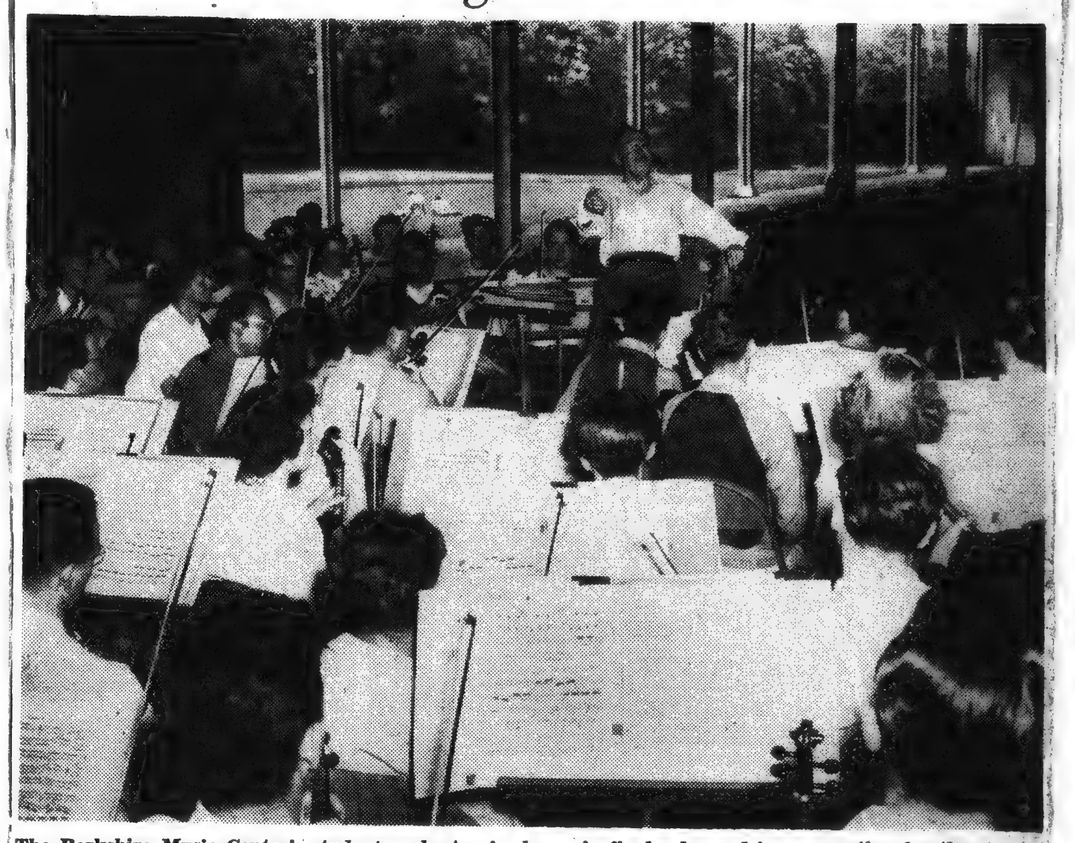
The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

107

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 1942

Kousevitzky Spends $30,000 to Keep Art Living Through War

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitsky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105 piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr Koussevitsky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever converts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K. No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests wil speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky wil lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

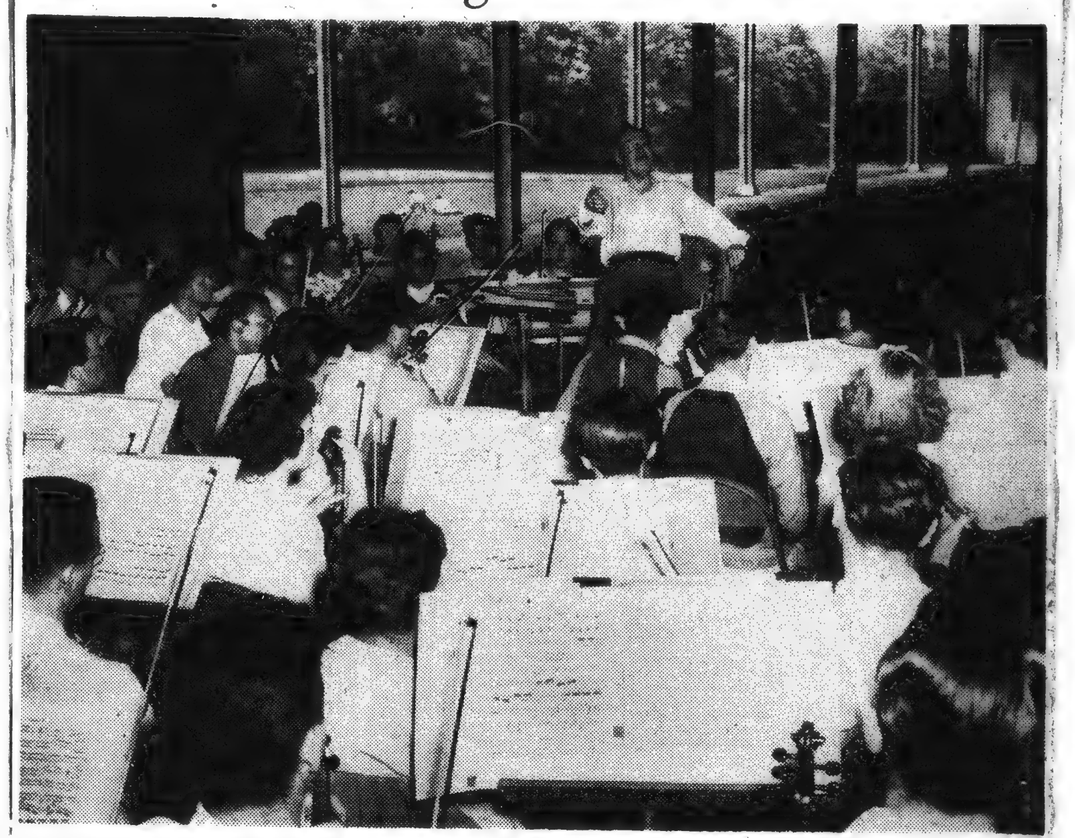
The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

HICKORY, N. C.
RECORD

AUG 1 1942

Koussevitsky Puts Up $30,000 Of Own Money In Concerts

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105 piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer—since July 5.

Kou

LEN
Kouss
on the
the Be only b tra, bu himself
haps $

The
his ow sevitzk
Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

15-12, managed to regain the victory road when they opened their

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Plans Opera Performances

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" Scheduled Aug. 7 and 13

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating with the opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

Saturday Night, Aug. 8
Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart .. Concerto in E flat (K, No 365) For two pianos.
Soloists—Luboshutz and Nemenoff.
Brahms. Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 9
Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grossoo
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

Saturday Night, Aug. 15
Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Op. 125.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 16
Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Symphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the manifestation several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a special supplementary concert. The draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. All proceeds will go to the Russian war relief.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG

Koussevitzky to Conduct In Berkshire Opening

Leads Center's Students Tonight in Symphonic Program

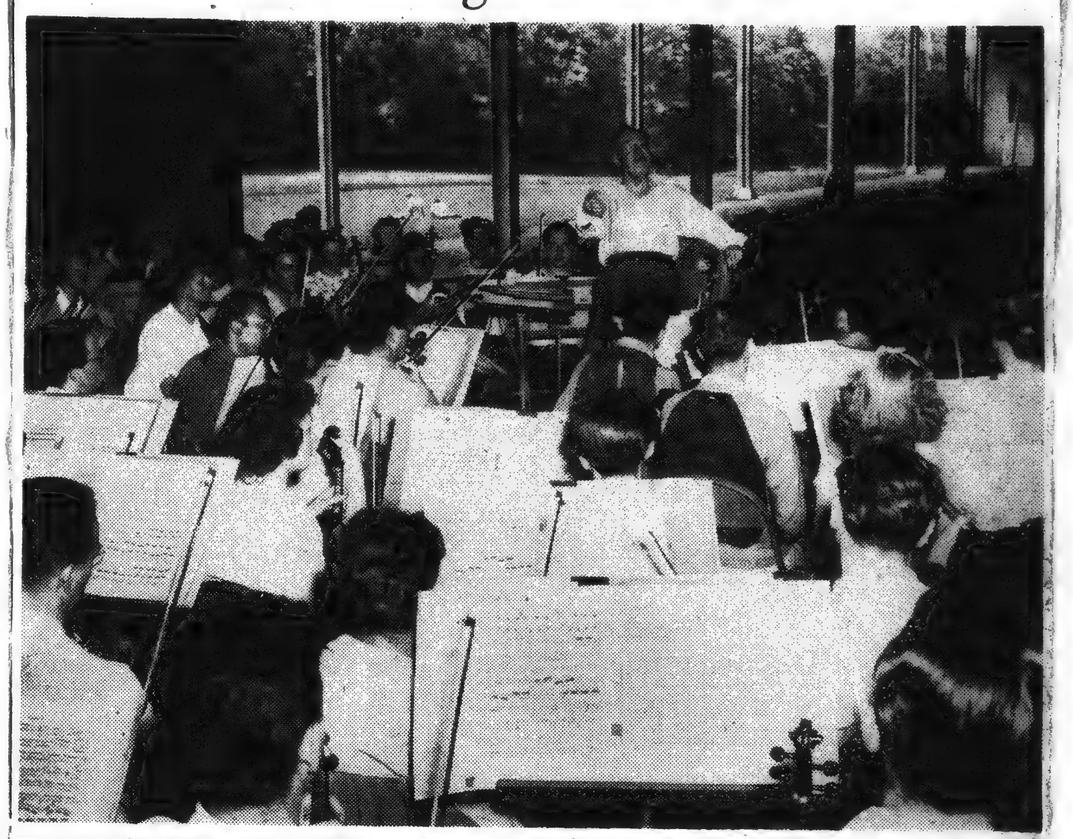
The music festival to be presented by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Haydn's symphony in G major and Shostakovitch's fifth symphony. The program for the second concert, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, consists of two Sousa marches, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department war bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of each ticket will be redeemable at Tanglewood for a 50-cent war stamp.

The remaining four orchestral concerts will be held on Saturdays and Sundays, Aug. 8, 9, 15 and 16. Olin Downes, assisted by a student group, will give a lecture-concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, and a chamber music program will be performed tomorrow evening. Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be performed in English on Friday night, Aug. 7, and Thursday night, Aug. 13. This festival replaces the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was called off this year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 1942

107

Rehearsing for Concerts



The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra is shown in final rehearsal in preparation for the concert to be given tonight and tomorrow in the Shed at Tanglewood.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG

Concert to Aid Sale of Bonds

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzy tomorrow afternoon. With Ruth Posselt, violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tschaikowsky Concerto, Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of more than 50 girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a 50 cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about his orchestra of more than 100 young musicians whom he has gathered from more than 30 states. Each member of the group was chosen after exacting auditions conducted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the past winter and spring.

The opening concert of the Festival of Music will take place tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Koussevitzky's program will include the Haydn Symphony in G Major, Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, and the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch will be given its first concert performance in the western hemisphere at the gala benefit to be given Aug. 14 for Russian War Relief.

A decision to spend $30,000 of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 1942

All Tanglewood Forces Combining For Opera Events

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 7, and Thursday evening, Aug. 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are co-operating in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are: Saturday evening, Aug. 8: Hanson's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365), soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9: Handel's Concerto Grosso, Martinu's Concerto Grosso, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday evening, Aug. 15: Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16: Copland's Quiet City and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 p. m.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays the Piper In Name of Art

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 — (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Tanglewood Musicians To Play Here

Boston Symphony Artists To Appear for Local Music School

The Pittsfield Community Music School has obtained the services of a group of Boston musicians for a benefit concert at the Berkshire

LOUIS SPEYER
English horn player of Boston Orchestra.

Museum the evening of Aug. 10. Jean Bedetti, first 'cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Louis Speyer, English horn and oboe player with the same orchestra, and Leonard Bernstein, pianist, promising young conductor, will appear in a joint concert. The entire proceeds go to the local school.

The concert has been made possible through the generosity of the artists themselves and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Louis Speyer, a native of Paris, graduated from the Paris Conservatory with the first prize in oboe. After playing in the great cities of France he came to this country with the French Army Band in 1918. After his first solo appearance he was offered a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has been a member ever since, playing English horn and oboe. He plays as soloist and with the orchestra and is prominent in chamber music.

Jean Bedetti learned to play the cello under the tutelage of his father, who was professor in the conservatory at Lyons. After graduating from the Paris Conservatory, he became the first cellist of the Opera Comique and of the Concert Colonne. He played as soloist with these orchestras and in many of the capitals of Europe. He has been a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra 23 years and as first cellist, he has played solo with them many times.

Leonard Bernstein is 23. He is a graduate of Harvard College and the Curtis Institute of Music, has studied piano with Heinrich Gebhard and Madame Vengerova and conducting with Fritz Reiner and Dr. Koussevitzky. He was a member of Dr. Koussevitzky's first class in conducting at Tanglewood in 1940, again in 1941, and now is on the faculty as assistant after a winter spent with Dr. Koussevitzky studying in Boston. He has made many appearances as a concert pianist but now devotes most of his time to conducting.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 2 1942

Jerome D. Greene of Cambridge, president of Boston Symphony orchestra trustees, is at Curtis hotel, Lenox, for the Tanglewood Music festival. Others there are Mr and Mrs Joseph May, Mrs Ryder Breed, Miss Emily Lynch, Mrs George McCracken, Mrs J. E. Murphy, Mrs R. H. Bodwell of New York. Winners at the weekly invitation bridge party at the Curtis were Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, Mrs David Dows, Jr., Mrs Clinton O. Jones, Mrs George W. Seligman, Miss Mary McGuinness, Mrs Elizabeth Davis.

(Continued On Page 2-C)

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1942

Symphony Leader Finances Concerts

LENOX, Aug. 1 (AP) — When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps thirty thousand dollars.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program will be played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily — and sometimes longer — since July 5.

The music will include Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the Third "Leonore" Overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically or even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's New Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE

AUG 1 - 1942

World Of Music

NEW YORK—Aug. 1.—(UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its Summer music festival, to continue on weekends until August 16th. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning today, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of ninety six advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16th, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives Of Windsor, five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN-REGISTER

AUG 1 - 1942

Symphony Will Benefit Russian War Relief

The first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, Aug. 14, by Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War relief. The orchestra, which will appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, will number 100 players.

In addition to the performance of the Seventh Symphony on Aug 14, several outstanding soloists will appear on the evening's program.

Tickets for the event may be obtained from local committees of Russian War Relief, Inc., or at National Headquarters, 11 East 35th Street, New York.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

AUG 2 - 1942

New Triumph for Koussevitzky—

DOWAGERS THUMB RIDE TO SYMPHONY CONCERT

LENOX, MASS.—(AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons Saturday night attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire symphonic festival which was cancelled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians—recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of cooperation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brife address from Roy Dickenson Welch, of Washington, on the Treasury's bond campaign.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 2 1942

3,000 Hear Red Artist

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire symphonic festival which was cancelled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of co-operation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch, of Washington, on the Treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Frank symphony, the Tchaikowsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Pays Own Money to Keep Music Festival Alive

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton Saturday night on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he not only was directing the 105 piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Saturday night's program was played with brilliance by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam. War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, and by many men in uniform.

There will be six other concerts.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Defends Symphony Of Soviet Composer Shostakovitch

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found falt with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Great Appeal Cited

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremenodus appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

Quotes Critics

With a malicious gleam in his eye, Dr. Koussevitzky went on to quote critics' reviews of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony at the time it was first performed.

"The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfully long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line," he read.

"Well," the conductor smiled, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature.

"And it seems to me that the critics of today make the same mistake about Shostakovich.

"His work banal? They mistake popularity for banality. Program music? The Eroica is program music. Berlioz's greatest music is program music. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven is program music, and the Pastoral (of Beethoven), one of the greatest pieces of program music, is also one of the greatest pieces of music of all time."

HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Draws 3000, Some Afoot, To Tanglewood Festival

Shining, Chauffeured Cars and Segregated Parking Area Are Missing in This Year's Version of World-Famous Event.

By Associated Press.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3000 persons Saturday night attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire symphonic festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for boxholders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 100 young musicians—recruited from Doctor Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, molded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Doctor Koussevitzky's capable leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the treasury's bond campaign.

The program Sunday afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Doctor Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

house had been searched once it was probable that detectives would not return," Captain Childers said.

"And that was good psychology," he added.

The 15-by-8-inch entrance to Coneys' cove was so carefully concealed that "anybody could have missed it," the captain said. It was one of three ceiling panels in a closet. Coneys blocked it shut with a wooden stick when officers were in the house, and sometimes sat on it for good measure.

"I stood under it myself when I was searching the house for clues," the captain said. "We never suspected at the time that a man was hiding above our heads."

Coneys was taken to the second floor of the house today for another look at the entrance to his home of the past 10 months.

"I'm glad to be out of there," was Coneys' comment.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1942

3,000 Attend First Concert Of Koussevitzky's Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—(AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival which was cancelled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstances the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians—recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of cooperation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch, of Washington, on the Treasury's bond campaign.

The program Sunday afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa Marches.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitsky Assails Critics of New Shostakovich Symphony

By the Associated Press

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician in an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music.' Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitsky, Saying 'Music Must Live,' Underwrites Entire Symphony Series

LENOX, MASS. AUG. 1. —(AP). —When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he not only was directing the 105-piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program was played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music included Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the Third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week-ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Defends Work Of Russian as Music Genius

LENOX, Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with critics of the symphony.

Written During Siege

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

A Musical Master

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1942

3,000 Make Pilgrimage To Hear Berkshire Music

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance, the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestraal material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of cooperation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the Treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky violin concert, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

AUG 2 - 1942

Boston Conductor Praises Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Draws 3000, Some Afoot, To Tanglewood Festival

Shining, Chauffeured Cars and Segregated Parking Area Are Missing in This Year's Version of World-Famous Event.

By Associated Press.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3000 persons Saturday night attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire symphonic festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for boxholders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 100 young musicians—recruited from Doctor Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, molded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Doctor Koussevitzky's capable leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the treasury's bond campaign.

The program Sunday afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Doctor Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

house had been searched once it was probable that detectives would not return," Captain Childers said.

"And that was good psychology," he added.

The 15-by-8-inch entrance to Coneys' cove was so carefully concealed that "anybody could have missed it," the captain said. It was one of three ceiling panels in a closet. Coneys blocked it shut with a wooden stick when officers were in the house, and sometimes sat on it for good measure.

"I stood under it myself when I was searching the house for clues," the captain said. "We never suspected at the time that a man was hiding above our heads."

Coneys was taken to the second floor of the house today for another look at the entrance to his home of the past 10 months.

"I'm glad to be out of there," was Coneys' comment.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Defends Work Of Russian as Music Genius

LENOX, Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with critics of the symphony.

Written During Siege

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

A Musical Master

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitsky Assails Critics of New Shostakovich Symphony

By the Associated Press

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician in an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music.' Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1942

3,000 Attend First Concert Of Koussevitzky's Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—(AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival which was cancelled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstances the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians—recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore Overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of cooperation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch, of Washington, on the Treasury's bond campaign.

The program Sunday afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa Marches.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitsky, Saying 'Music Must Live,' Underwrites Entire Symphony Series

LENOX, MASS, AUG. 1. —(AP). —When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he not only was directing the 105-piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program was played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music included Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, the Third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The other six concerts, divided among three week-ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1942

3,000 Make Pilgrimage To Hear Berkshire Music

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance, the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestraal material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of cooperation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the Treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky violin concert, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

AUG 2 - 1942

Boston Conductor Praises Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

1101

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1942

4000 Attend Brilliant Berkshire Concert to Aid War Bond Sales

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 2.—Brilliance was the keynote of the second Berkshire Music Center symphony concert in "Tanglewood Shed" today. The student orchestra of one hundred, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, accompanied a gripping performance of Tschaikowsky's "Violin Concerto in D Major," played by Ruth Posselt. The remainder of the program included the Cesar Franck "D Minor Symphony" and marches by John Philip Sousa. There was an attendance of four thousand.

This concert was dedicated to the United States Treasury War Bond campaign, and it fittingly opened with two stirring marches by the United States Marines' former great bandmaster, Sousa. "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever" convey Koussevitsky's admirable interest in just causes, patriotic and otherwise.

Patriotic Objective

The very existence of this educational foundation is due inspirationally and financially to him. Apart from the unexcelled advantages to the students themselves, two of these concerts at least will provide the occasion for the sale of War Bonds and Stamps as well as a gala benefit for Russian war relief. It should be added that the Koussevitsky foundation is a non-profit organization.

In the interest of the sale of War Bonds, Roy D. Welch, as personal representative of Secretary Morgenthau, was introduced by Koussevitsky and addressed the audience. He referred to Koussevitsky as "the personification of the Spirit of Tanglewood," and added "our energies at Tanglewood have succeeded in maintaining those ideals in which we Americans believe."

Ruth Posselt Praised

Ruth Posselt may well be classed in the first violinistic ranks. We have on other occasions critically admired her gifts, for her appearance in Worcester's Friends of Music concert last Winter was an outstanding success. Later that season we heard her give a glittering performance of the Barber "Violin Concerto" with the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall.

However, it was during the more familiar Tschaikowsky "Concerto in D Major, Opus 35" that we more fully appreciated her far-reaching skill. Here is a young artist whose technical resources are more than vaguely reminiscent of such technics as those of Heifetz, Menuhin and Elman.

Execution Graceful

Her tone, phrasing and general approach are confident. In fact, she has grace of execution that would almost seem impossible when confronted with the final "allegro" of the Tschaikowsky "Concerto." We can not attribute the lack of effectiveness of the orchestral introduction to the efforts of this young orchestra, for inherently the music is pompous and affected.

On the contrary, the orchestra is to be complimented upon a highly pliable and balanced background. This "concerto" is primarily sensuous, intended to display the performers' pyro-technics and awe the audience. This afternoon it did all of these things, in addition to which it revealed deep poetic insight in the brief "Canzonetta" which precedes the final technical avalanche. It should be honestly admitted, however, that many of the violinists' softer tones were occasionally suppressed by excessive background.

Student Orchestra

Most concert habitues have heard the Cesar Franck "Symphony in D Minor" performed by many of the great orchestras. One could not conscientiously be indiscriminate in comparisons. The fact is that this is a student orchestra. However, when compared to other similar organizations (college and the large second group of symphony orchestras) it must be acknowledged that Koussevitsky was able to lead these young people in an unusually accurate, unified expose of this major work. There were a number of high spots.

We again wish to call attention to the string section, this time the lower strings who so frequently recite the important themes. The harp opening to the second movement (played by Janet Remington and Cecilia de Majo) and the violin pizzicato were neat and concise. The haunting but treacherous English horn solo (played by Joseph Rizzo) of this same "allegretto" movement was entirely competent.

The final "allegro non troppo" was compelling. The subtle Cesar Franck modulations were smoothly enacted. And even more important, the sudden changes from exultant sections to hushed quietness were effected with precision. There is vast power in this work when it is so played, and this afternoon, whatever the performance lacked in tonal or rhythmic exactness was compensated for in a refreshingly youthful abandon to which the work of this quiet, modest master willingly applied itself.

Third Chamber Music Concert Given

LENOX, Aug. 2.—An important division of the concert curriculum of the Berkshire Music Center Festival is a series of five chamber music concerts presented by talented students of the foundation. The third in this series took place tonight at "Tanglewood" in the Chamber Music Hall. It was attended by 250.

The program confined itself to romantic and modern realms—the composers were Faure, Brahms and Hindemith.

The "Quartet in C Minor, Opus 15," is no better known than most of the works of Faure, yet it fairly breathes that typical subtle charm which the French composers so well feel and transmit. It was played by Rita Laplante, piano; Lillian Levy, violin; Abrham Skervick, viola; Robert Ripley, 'cello.

The Hindemith "Woodwind Quartet, Opus 24 No. 2" was of special interest. It is an exacting score. Its performers were Kenneth Emery, flute; John Holmes, oboe; David Glazer, clarinet; Harold Meek, horn; Ira Leventer, bassoon. This work was written 20 years ago when Hindemith was called a "cultural Bolshevik" by the Third Reich because of the implied satire in the music of his late twenties, in which period this quintet was written. It has a full measure of this element, and tonight's performance conveyed it.

Seymour Lipkin, piano; Jacob Krachmalnick, violin; Marion Davies, 'cello—performed the Brahms "B Major Trio, Opus 8." It must be remembered that this work was completed during Brahms twentieth year. At this point in his creative career, he had far from mastered the technic of instrumental combinations—thus it is not a completely gratifying work to perform, particularly when it lacks the utmost in rhythmic co-ordination as it did tonight. Notably in the "Scherzo" movement. We wish to make special mention of Mr. Krachmalnick's violin performance which further emphasized his excellence as concertmaster of the Center's symphony orchestra.

CONDUCTOR APPLAUDS

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky joins Sunday afternoon's audience at the special U. S. Treasury benefit at Tanglewood in Lenox in applauding Ruth Posselt, violinist, after her solo performance with the student orchestra.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky's Student Orchestra Wins Praise

Large Audience Attends Second Concert at Berkshire Center in Lenox

LENOX, Aug. 2—The second in a series of six concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the music shed at Tanglewood this afternoon, before a surprisingly large audience, considering gasoline rationing and tire shortages. The first concert was given last night when between 2500 and 3000 almost filled the forward part of the mammoth shed and this afternoon the audience was quite a bit larger.

Today's program, benefited the Nation's war bond sale. Every purchased ticket was good for 50 cents worth of war savings stamps, which really brought the cost of the concert down to a pretty nominal figure. Furthermore booths were placed about the lawn, staffed by Mrs. Louis T. McGill of Pittsfield and a corps of aids, for the sale of bonds, and the program selected by Dr. Koussevitzky was in the popular and patriotic vein.

It opened with two Sousa marches, played as only an orchestra whose average age is less than 21 can play them. They were "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." The soloist was the too-seldom heard violinist, Ruth Posselt, whose fiery rendition of the Tschaikowsky concerto in D major was something to be long remembered, and the program closed with Cesar Franck's ever popular symphony in D minor.

Last night the series commenced with the Haydn G-major symphony, No. 88, followed by Beethoven's overture to "Leonore," No. 3, and closed with the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony, a program made up of works of three different centuries.

From the opening adagio of the Haydn, the audience knew that Koussevitzky had no inferior orchestra under his command. It played with a sparkle and dash which is many times missing in a professional orchestra, and while there may have been moments of lack of finesse, particularly in soft passages, the music was at all times enjoyable and sometimes thrilling.

From the amount of applause, and the shouts of "bravo" after every number, one was made doubtful of the sense of discrimination of the audience. In fact, the cheering was fully as vociferous as it has been in previous festivals when the Boston Orchestra played, and did not seem to vary in degree between one piece and another which might indicate that the "heils" were for the conductor rather than the orchestra. Be this as it may. Dr. Koussevitzky was generous in sharing the acclaim with his charges, causing them to stand several times and accept the applause.

Under ordinary circumstances, the ninth Berkshire Symphonic Festival of concerts by the Boston Orchestra would have opened last Thursday night, and continued through last night and this afternoon. But, because of the war, the trustees of the orchestra and the festival felt this not feasible, so Dr. Koussevitzky proceeded on his own.

Continuing his Berkshire Music Center, he decided to use the so-called student orchestra for six concerts, and the results of last night and today would indicate that his decision was justified. Whether the Boston Orchestra would have drawn a larger audience at necessarily larger ticket prices is a matter of conjecture.

While all hail is being given the conductor, it should be borne in mind that the musicians he directed last night cannot in every particular be called students. They have been drawn from many states, and many schools, and some of them have been playing professionally for some years. To be sure, the good doctor has whipped them into an enviable ensemble through long rehearsals during the past three weeks but he did not teach them how to handle their instruments so ably.

Events at the Berkshire Music Center continued tonight when chamber music was heard in the chamber music hall. Friday the opera department will give "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the theater, and Saturday night the orchestra will give the third in its series, with Lubochutz and Nemenoff, pianists, as soloists in the Mosart concerto for two pianos. Other works on the program will be the Hanson Symphony No. 3 and the Fourth Symphony by Brahms.

BARRE, VT.
TIMES

AUG 3 1942

PRAISES YOUNG ORCHESTRA.

About 4,000 People Heard Koussevitzky's Young Musicians

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP) — The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, carshared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton university music department, speaking for the treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston symphony, then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

AUG 3 - 1942

4,000 Delighted With Concert by Youth Orchestra

BY JOHN SELBY

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2. (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread thru the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result, an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

Mozart Festival Is Memorable Success

Maynor, Posselt, Casadesus Appear in Tanglewood—Koussevitzky Is Honored on 70th Birthday

By GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

LENOX, MASS.

FIFTEEN hundred persons attended the opening of the Tanglewood Mozart Festival, a rather remarkable number, in view of the fact that the ODT had forbidden buses to run from Lenox to Tanglewood.

The festival, which was held on the week ends of July 29 and Aug. 5, was given in the small Opera-Concert Hall as the larger Music Shed was still boarded up from last winter. This smaller hall, set in flowering plants, shrubs and trees, with its splendid acoustics, was an ideal place for performances of music by Mozart. As an orchestra of only 30 was used, some of the overflow audience was seated on the stage.

The opening concert on Saturday was given although rain threatened. The tone quality of the orchestra in the Symphony in A, K. 201 and in the Divertimento for Strings and Two Horns, K. 287, was thoroughly delightful. Following the intermission, Dorothy Maynor was heard in "L'amero, saro costante" from "Il Re Pastore", "Ach ich fühl's" from "The Magic Flute", the recitative "Ch'io mi scordi di te" and the rondo "Non temer, amato bene" with violin obbligatos by Richard Burgin, and piano obbligatos by Bernard Zighera.

Miss Maynor appeared to have some difficulty in projecting her top notes with the freedom and clarity evident when she made her first appearance here. On the other hand, her voice has gained in depth and volume. Her simplicity of manner during the ovation which was accorded her completely won the admiration of her audience. The concert closed with a performance of the Symphony in C, K. 338. The program on Sunday afternoon, including a performance of the Concerto in E-flat for two pianos and orchestra, played by Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, was temporarily interrupted by a short, violent storm, but was continued as soon as the weather cleared. An ovation such as has seldom been heard at Tanglewood was given the performers at the conclusion of the concerto. A beautiful performance of the "Haffner" Symphony opened the program, followed by the Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the Symphony in G minor.

David Nilsson

Dorothy Maynor

Ruth Posselt

Dr. Koussevitzky Chats with Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz

The concluding concerts of the festival brought the Violin Concerto in D, (K. 218) with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the "Coronation" Concerto, Robert Casadesus soloist; and miscellaneous orchestral items including the Symphony in G minor (K. 183); Symphony in E-flat major (K. 543) and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

It is hinted that the success of the festival this year encourages the resumption of the large one next year, but unless there is a definite change for the better in transportation facilities and living conditions such a procedure seems very unwise. The Mozart Festival was planned by the trustees of the Boston Symphony as a fitting tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky's 70th birthday on July 26, and it aptly provided a climax to his 20 years as conductor of the orchestra.

Fiedler Is Honored by Boston Pops Orchestra

BOSTON — Commemorating Arthur Fiedler's completion of 15 years continuous service as conductor of the Boston Pop Concerts, the orchestra members presented him with a leather brief case at the final rehearsal of the season. The presentation speech was made by Melvin Bryant, chairman of the orchestra committee and a member of the violin section of the Boston Symphony since 1918. G. M. S.

and works by Berlioz, Weber, Verdi and Grainger.

Seven years ago, Mr. Fiedler inaugurated the Wednesday morning Children's Concerts as part of the Esplanade season. The first program in the present series of four concerts brought out more than 4,000 youngsters and their adult companions on July 26. Mr. Fiedler is quick to seize upon an opportunity to bestow praise where it is due. He suddenly turned to the children and requested all "Paper Troopers" to rise, whereupon he conducted a special "salute" improvised for the occasion by himself and his musicians, a thrilling moment in the lives of the kiddies standing stiffly at attention.

Mr. Fiedler announced that the three remaining programs would be based upon requests from the children themselves. One of them lists Sousa's "Washington Post" March, Rossini's overture to "La Gazza Ladra", two movements from Haydn's Symphony No. 88, and other works by Saint-Saëns, Strauss and Wagner. The commentator for these morning concerts is Nicholas A. Rasetzki.

Among the guest conductors who have appeared at the evening concerts have been Charles O'Connell who conducted on July 26 and Solomon Braslavsky who conducted the Spar Choral Group on Aug. 4, when Selma Kramer was soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2.

Boston Pops End Successful Season

Fifty-Ninth Series of Concerts Is Given Under Fiedler

BOSTON—The 59th season of the Boston Pops has come to a triumphant close. For more than two months Symphony Hall was virtually sold out. A larger percentage of guest conductors have taken over this year, but the program standards established by Mr. Fiedler have been satisfactorily maintained.

The "Old Timers' Night" which Carlos Pinfield, orchestra member, has conducted for several seasons, was by popular demand given a repeat performance with slight variations but still giving the oldsters their favorites such as Cailliet's amusing Variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel", "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight", (peculiarly appropriate since 'sumer is icumen in' this year in Boston with unusual ardor), the "Southern Roses" Waltz by Strauss, "Turkey in the Straw" by Guion, and other favorites. Jacobus Langendoen, first cellist of the orchestra, gave pleasure at the repeat performance in Paladilhe's "Chanson Russe".

A first venture by Pops into music exclusively oriental in import if not in actuality was accomplished by Eugene Plotnikoff, guest conductor, and Fadwa Kurban, Syrian soprano. Goldmark's ballet music from the "Queen of Sheba", Rubinstein's overture on "Anthony and Cleopatra", Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" No. 2, which as most people know stems from the East Indian and Egyptian, were among the orchestral items listed. The soloist, who was warmly received, offered the Bell Song from "Lakmé" and a pair of songs by Acabgi.

The closing week brought first performances in Boston of a "March in Time of War" by Roy Harris and an "American Concertette" for piano and orchestra by Morton Gould, with Bernhard Weiser as soloist. Mr. Weiser reappeared twice on the closing night in a repeat performance of the Gould work and in the first movement of the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Piano Concerto. Mr. Gould's Concertette is a musicianly piece of writing, with the accent on the lighter, more amusing aspect of his art. The Harris march proved to have rhythmic interest. Mr. Fiedler has set forth good orchestral fare, obviously appreciated by the huge audiences that have included thousands of men and women in uniform.

GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

Dr. Wallace Goodrich Again Heads Victory Concerts

BOSTON.—Dr. Wallace Goodrich, Director Emeritus of the New England Conservatory of Music, is to be chairman of the Victory Concerts Committee for the year 1944-45. Solomon Bravslavsky will continue as secretary.

Artists who have already contributed their services are Rudolf Serkin and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Frances Greer and Eleanor Steber, vocalists; the Stradivarius String Quartet and the Boston String Quartet. It is also probable that Ezio Pinza, baritone, will give one concert. The Victory Concerts are given for the enjoyment of members of our armed forces.

Boston Launches Esplanade Concerts

Fiedler Leads Opening Performance at Hatch Memorial Shell

BOSTON. — The Boston Symphony players comprising the Pops orchestra moved recently from Symphony Hall to the Hatch Memorial Music Shell on the Storrow Embankment of the Charles River where they opened the Esplanade Concerts on July 20. These concerts, founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929, have been given continuously each Summer, Mr. Fiedler conducting, unless by exception, a "guest" appeared. No admission is charged. For a dime the concessionnaire will hand you a folding chair which you may set up any place your fancy dictates. If you prefer, you may bring your own chair, toggle-stick, steamer rug or even a newspaper.

Placed conveniently are mobile Fund Boxes into which, if you choose, you may drop a voluntary contribution. In addition to the Fund Boxes, checks from public spirited citizens provide substantial amounts.

The opening brought 20,000 persons. Introduced by Eugene C. Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission, Lieut. Gov. Horace T. Cahill brought the greetings of the Commonwealth, after which Mr. Fiedler carried forward a program which included Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, an excerpt from the Bach Cantata 140, the Prelude to "Le Déluge" by Saint-Saëns during which Gaston Elcus played the solo violin, the "Salute to Our Fighting Forces" by Peter Bodge

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Head Lauds Red Composer

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a 'genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and 'anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of reputation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without a doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; He is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center will play.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Wins Praise for Group

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestra's" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result as estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in the achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war saving stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

Mozart Festival Is Memorable Success

Maynor, Posselt, Casadesus Appear in Tanglewood—Koussevitzky Is Honored on 70th Birthday

By GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

LENOX, MASS.

FIFTEEN hundred persons attended the opening of the Tanglewood Mozart Festival, a rather remarkable number, in view of the fact that the ODT had forbidden buses to run from Lenox to Tanglewood.

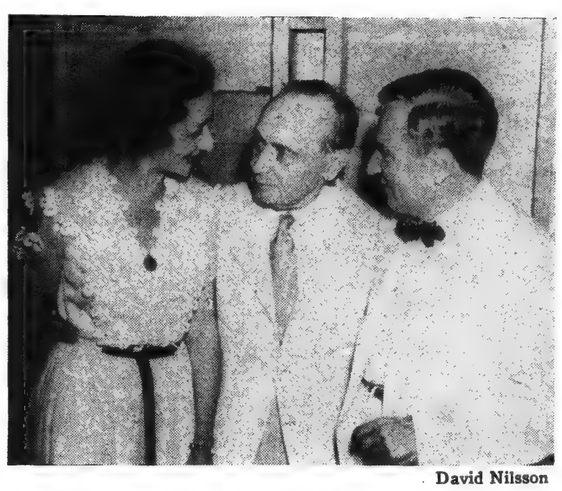
The festival, which was held on the week ends of July 29 and Aug. 5, was given in the small Opera-Concert Hall as the larger Music Shed was still boarded up from last winter. This smaller hall, set in flowering plants, shrubs and trees, with its splendid acoustics, was an ideal place for performances of music by Mozart. As an orchestra of only 30 was used, some of the overflow audience was seated on the stage.

The opening concert on Saturday was given although rain threatened. The tone quality of the orchestra in the Symphony in A, K. 201 and in the Divertimento for Strings and Two Horns, K. 287, was thoroughly delightful. Following the intermission, Dorothy Maynor was heard in "L'amero, saro costante" from "Il Re Pastore", "Ach ich fühl's" from "The Magic Flute", the recitative "Ch'io mi scordi di te" and the rondo "Non temer, amato bene" with violin obbligatos by Richard Burgin, and piano obbligatos by Bernard Zighera.

Miss Maynor appeared to have some difficulty in projecting her top notes with the freedom and clarity evident when she made her first appearance here. On the other hand, her voice has gained in depth and volume. Her simplicity of manner during the ovation which was accorded her completely won the admiration of her audience. The concert closed with a performance of the Symphony in C, K. 338. The program on Sunday afternoon, including a performance of the Concerto in E-flat for two pianos and orchestra, played by Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, was temporarily interrupted by a short, violent storm, but was continued as soon as the weather cleared. An ovation such as has seldom been heard at Tanglewood was given the performers at the conclusion of the concerto. A beautiful performance of the "Haffner" Symphony opened the program, followed by the Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the Symphony in G minor.

The concluding concerts of the festival brought the Violin Concerto in D, (K. 218) with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the "Coronation" Concerto, Robert Casadesus soloist; and miscellaneous orchestral items including the Symphony in G minor (K. 183); Symphony in E-flat major (K. 543) and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

It is hinted that the success of the festival this year encourages the resumption of the large one next year, but unless there is a definite change for the better in transportation facilities and living conditions such a procedure seems very unwise. The Mozart Festival was planned by the trustees of the Boston Symphony as a fitting tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky's 70th birthday on July 26, and it aptly provided a climax to his 20 years as conductor of the orchestra.



David Nilsson

Dorothy Maynor

Ruth Posselt

Dr. Koussevitzky Chats with Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz

Fiedler Is Honored by Boston Pops Orchestra

BOSTON — Commemorating Arthur Fiedler's completion of 15 years continuous service as conductor of the Boston Pop Concerts, the orchestra members presented him with a leather brief case at the final rehearsal of the season. The presentation speech was made by Melvin Bryant, chairman of the orchestra committee and a member of the violin section of the Boston Symphony since 1918. G. M. S.

Boston Pops End Successful Season

Fifty-Ninth Series of Concerts Is Given Under Fiedler

BOSTON.—The 59th season of the Boston Pops has come to a triumphant close. For more than two months Symphony Hall was virtually sold out. A larger percentage of guest conductors have taken over this year, but the program standards established by Mr. Fiedler have been satisfactorily maintained.

The "Old Timers' Night" which Carlos Pinfield, orchestra member, has conducted for several seasons, was by popular demand given a repeat performance with slight variations but still giving the oldsters their favorites such as Cailliet's amusing Variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel", "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight", (peculiarly appropriate since 'sumer is icumen in' this year in Boston with unusual ardor), the "Southern Roses" Waltz by Strauss, "Turkey in the Straw" by Guion, and other favorites. Jacobus Langendoen, first cellist of the orchestra, gave pleasure at the repeat performance in Paladilhe's "Chanson Russe".

A first venture by Pops into music exclusively oriental in import if not in actuality was accomplished by Eugene Plotnikoff, guest conductor, and Fadwa Kurban, Syrian soprano. Goldmark's ballet music from the "Queen of Sheba", Rubinstein's overture on "Anthony and Cleopatra", Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" No. 2, which as most people know stems from the East Indian and Egyptian, were among the orchestral items listed. The soloist, who was warmly received, offered the Bell Song from "Lakmé" and a pair of songs by Acabgi.

The closing week brought first performances in Boston of a "March in Time of War" by Roy Harris and an "American Concertette" for piano and orchestra by Morton Gould, with Bernhard Weiser as soloist. Mr. Weiser reappeared twice on the closing night in a repeat performance of the Gould work and in the first movement of the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Piano Concerto. Mr. Gould's Concertette is a musicianly piece of writing, with the accent on the lighter, more amusing aspect of his art. The Harris march proved to have rhythmic interest. Mr. Fiedler has set forth good orchestral fare, obviously appreciated by the huge audiences that have included thousands of men and women in uniform.

GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

Dr. Wallace Goodrich Again Heads Victory Concerts

BOSTON.—Dr. Wallace Goodrich, Director Emeritus of the New England Conservatory of Music, is to be chairman of the Victory Concerts Committee for the year 1944-45. Solomon Bravslavsky will continue as secretary.

Artists who have already contributed their services are Rudolf Serkin and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Frances Greer and Eleanor Steber, vocalists; the Stradivarius String Quartet and the Boston String Quartet. It is also probable that Ezio Pinza, baritone, will give one concert. The Victory Concerts are given for the enjoyment of members of our armed forces.

Boston Launches Esplanade Concerts

Fiedler Leads Opening Performance at Hatch Memorial Shell

BOSTON. — The Boston Symphony players comprising the Pops orchestra moved recently from Symphony Hall to the Hatch Memorial Music Shell on the Storrow Embankment of the Charles River where they opened the Esplanade Concerts on July 20. These concerts, founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929, have been given continuously each Summer, Mr. Fiedler conducting, unless by exception, a "guest" appeared. No admission is charged. For a dime the concessionnaire will hand you a folding chair which you may set up any place your fancy dictates. If you prefer, you may bring your own chair, toggle-stick, steamer rug or even a newspaper.

Placed conveniently are mobile Fund Boxes into which, if you choose, you may drop a voluntary contribution. In addition to the Fund Boxes, checks from public spirited citizens provide substantial amounts.

The opening brought 20,000 persons. Introduced by Eugene C. Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission, Lieut. Gov. Horace T. Cahill brought the greetings of the Commonwealth, after which Mr. Fiedler carried forward a program which included Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, an excerpt from the Bach Cantata 140, the Prelude to "Le Déluge" by Saint-Saëns during which Gaston Elcus played the solo violin, the "Salute to Our Fighting Forces" by Peter Bodge and works by Berlioz, Weber, Verdi and Grainger.

Seven years ago, Mr. Fiedler inaugurated the Wednesday morning Children's Concerts as part of the Esplanade season. The first program in the present series of four concerts brought out more than 4,000 youngsters and their adult companions on July 26. Mr. Fiedler is quick to seize upon an opportunity to bestow praise where it is due. He suddenly turned to the children and requested all "Paper Troopers" to rise, whereupon he conducted a special "salute" improvised for the occasion by himself and his musicians, a thrilling moment in the lives of the kiddies standing stiffly at attention.

Mr. Fiedler announced that the three remaining programs would be based upon requests from the children themselves. One of them lists Sousa's "Washington Post" March, Rossini's overture to "La Gazza Ladra", two movements from Haydn's Symphony No. 88, and other works by Saint-Saëns, Strauss and Wagner. The commentator for these morning concerts is Nicholas A. Rasetzki.

Among the guest conductors who have appeared at the evening concerts have been Charles O'Connell who conducted on July 26 and Solomon Braslavsky who conducted the Spar Choral Group on Aug. 4, when Selma Kramer was soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Head Lauds Red Composer

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a 'genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of reputation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without a doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; He is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center will play.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Wins Praise for Group

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestra's" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result as estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in the achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war saving stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with hay-wagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Hills Colony Attends Opening of Tanglewood Festival

Many Boxholders for Annual Concert Series Listed; Memorial Service for the Rev. W. H. Phelps at Monterey Congregational Church Today

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 1.—Tanglewood's Festival of Music given by the Berkshire Music Center, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, opened tonight in the music shed midway between Lenox and Stockbridge. Among the boxholders for the series of six concerts extending over three week ends are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which built the music shed; Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown, Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt and Mrs. E. Norman Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton, New York, have arranged for the annual memorial service at Monterey Congregational Church tomorrow for her grandfather, the Rev. Winthrop H. Phelps, pastor of the church from 1856 to 1860. In 1861 he enlisted in the 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery as a chaplain and served until the end of the Civil War. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton have as guests at Brookmead the Misses Gladys Williamson and Anne Crews and Captain Webster Palham, of Raleigh, N. C., for whom they entertained at dinner tonight

Mrs. June Giles, Forest Hills, L. I., gave a birthday party yesterday at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for her daughter, Miss Jo Ann Giles. Others in the group were the Misses J. Caryl Bloodgood, Patricia Cole, Barbara Cullen, Marge Abel, Patricia McLean and Ann Behrer. Berkshire Inn arrivals include the Rev. Coleman Sullivan, Bridgeport, Conn.; Miss Elizabeth McNeill, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Litton, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hartman, Miss Margaret Birmingham, New York; Mrs. Alfred J. Pettl, Mrs. F. O. Kraemer, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Lewis, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Mills, Yonkers, N. Y.; and Mrs. J. W. Robson; White Plains, N. Y.

Curtis Hotel, Lenox, held its weekly invitation bridge party and prize winners were Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. David Dows, jr., Miss Mary McGuinness, Miss Elizabeth Davis, Mr. George W. Seligman and Mr. Clinton O. Jones. Newcomers at the Curtis include Mrs. Ryder Breed, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph May, Mrs. George McCracken, the Misses Emily Lynch, Frances Whittlesey and Edith Thwaite, New York. Mrs. C. Wickliffe Yulee is back at the Curtis from Bar Harbor.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. G. DeWitt Williamson, Mrs. R. P. Buchanan and Mrs. Herbert Roberts, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Malley, New Haven, Conn., and Miss Marion K. Sard, Albany.

Among arrivals at Brookbend Inn, Monterey, are Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Germayne, Mrs. J. Alfred Rohmer and the Misses Frances M. O'Connor; Eleanor Atkins, Corinne Prevot and Marjorie Senff, New York.

Newcomers at Egremont Tavern, South Egremont, include Dr. and Mrs. William Pitt Baldwin, New Haven, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Young and Mrs. Lester Wittenberg, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.
NONPAREIL
AUG 2 - 1942

Shostakovich's Symphonies

A contemporary Russian composer whose works are appearing more and more frequently on American concert programs is Vladimir Shostakovich. His Fifth symphony, heard within the past week at Ravinia park, played by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, is an attempt on the part of the composer to present in music the revolutionary ideals of the soviet state. The symphony has been described as a "well realized and an economically and exactly expressed work of art." Shostakovich's Seventh symphony, recently completed and sent to the United States for publication, is the composer's effort to convey the impact on man of the tremendous events of the present day. It is to have a hearing soon at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., where it will be performed by the Boston symphony orchestra.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1942

Benefit Concert For Berkshires

Russian War Relief to Gain By Tanglewood Performance Led by Koussevitzky

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—Governor Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit concert for Russian war relief to be given at Tanglewood next Friday. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and members of the orchestra, comprising students of the Berkshire Music Center, are donating their services.

On the general committee are Edward Clark Carter, chairman, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Jerome D. Greene, Hugh Cabot and Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College. The box committee includes Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Sidney C. Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller and Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue.

Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Barrett at Sky Farm, North Egremont, will give a lecture Monday on "A Potpourri of Gardening" at the Berkshire Garden Center, Stockbridge, of which Mrs. Barrett is president.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, president of Richmond Garden Club, who will be at the tea table at the Garden Center tea Monday, gave a luncheon today at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, for Mrs. King. Among the other guests were Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Brace W. Paddock, Mrs. George O. Forbes and Mrs. Rodney Procter.

The reception committee for the annual members' night at Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Tuesday, includes Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, chairman; Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Mrs. David T. Dana Jr., Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, Mrs. George S. Reynolds, Mrs. Loring G. Robbins, Mrs. Charles W. Power, Mrs. John Barker, Mrs. Charles J. Kittredge, Mrs. Stanley P. Benton and Mrs. Robert D. Bardwell.

The Wyantenuck Country Club, of which Rodney S. Jarvis is president, held its annual meeting today. The Pittsfield Country Club held its annual golf tournament ball tonight.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton of New York gave a reception tonight at Brookmead, Monterey, for their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan White, Mrs. George Moeschen of New York and the Misses Gladys Williamson and Anne Crews of Raleigh, N. C.

Arrivals at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, include Princess Eugenia Ruspoli, Baron and Baroness Edouard de Rothschild, Mrs. Henry White Cannon, Mrs. David Dows, Mrs. C. Wickliff Yulee, Mrs. Henry C. Cryder, Mr. and Mrs. Morton J. Henry, Miss Harriet K. Welles, Mrs. Sidney Harris, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister and Miss Alice Clapp.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 5 - 1942

COMMITTEES NAMED FOR TANGLEWOOD FETE

Gov Saltonstall Honorary Chairman for Russian War Relief Concert

Gov Leverett Saltonstall will be honorary chairman for the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th.

There will be a full program starting at 5 with Dr Serge Koussevitzky, students and faculty of the Berkshire Music center giving their services for the event. A feature of the day will be the first concert performance of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony in the western hemisphere. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct.

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, inc., will be the active chairman for the benefit. Honorary vice-chairman will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Mrs Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee and serving with her are Mrs Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, Mrs Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mr and Mrs George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs Carlos M. de-Heredia of Lenox, Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the general ticket committee.

Hugh Cabot of Boston and Dr James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college, are included on the general committee.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1942

OFF the

By ED EDST

U. S. MUSIC. Critics of Amer interested in these facts gle Symphony Orchestras" by Marg S. Hettinger. American conce symphonic music than any oth 45,000 orchestras in the U. S music. More than 250 of these fledged symphonic groups. Six budget of $100,000 or more yea best. Three (the New York P the Boston Symphony and the are better than any in Europe $600,000 a year. None of them QUESTION. Whatever became line of pencils (they were ma were trademarked "Mikado"?

SCOOP. A favorite newspaperi foreign correspondent who cab received a message from his b back: "Congratulations on yo story." The next day the cor cable from his boss: "Your stor

FOR MEN ONLY. Husbands, t wants you to do tasks around are always wanting husbands African proverb: "Work only ruins a man."

WHISTLERS MUTTER. Girls craft plant squelched the mal give long whistles as they passed by. They did the same thing in reverse. One girl would say: "Look at Tarzan, there, would you?" Another would follow up with: "Some build that guy's got." The whistlers couldn't take it and shut up.

REWRITE JOB. The Golden Rule as rewritten by Bernard Shaw: "Do not do unto others as you would that they should do unto you. Their tastes may not be the same."

HALFWAY. 'Way, 'way back in 1906 a suffragette was defined thusly: "One who has ceased to be a lady and not yet become a gentleman."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Music Center in Berkshires to Carry On

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Despite gasoline and tire rationing, the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, is carrying on under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who is to have a festival of music there consisting of six concerts over three week-ends starting last night. There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English. Dr. Koussevitzky has a student orchestra of 104 musicians from 30 states.

Today is treasury day at Tanglewood with the sale of war bonds and stamps directed by Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Chicago. She is having 50 girls participate in a contest, in which those making the largest sales will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music foundation. Mrs. McPherson has just returned to Pittsfield from Chicago. Her sister, Mrs. Perry M. Shepard, and Miss Deborah S. Shepard of Geneva, N. Y., are at the McPherson summer home, Court Hill, Pittsfield.

Mrs. Francis King [Louisa Yeomans] of South Hartford, N. Y., will arrive Thursday for a visit with Mrs. William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

The Berkshire Garden center, Stockbridge, of which Mrs. Barrett, the former Margery Barker of Chicago, is president, also continues to function. An authority on gardening, Mrs. King has written that the center with its trial and herb gardens, orchard, and buildings "make with their surroundings a group as stimulating and charming as any gardens and garden rooms I have ever seen."

Kimball Salisbury of Lake Forest has enlisted in the navy following a visit with his mother, Mrs. Warren [illegible]field. [illegible] York, [illegible]f the Stockbridge club, of which Princess Diane R. Eristavi is chairman.

Mrs. John Bryant, Brookline, Mass., is visiting her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George O. Forbes, at Orchard farm, North Egremont.

"The History of Garden Clubs," written by Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, was the subject of a questionnaire at a garden party given this week by Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge, formerly of Milwaukee, at Guestwick, Pittsfield. Mrs. Dodge attended a luncheon party given by Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. Florence Bannard Adams of Northampton at Pittsfield.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Dowagers Have to Thumb Rides But 3000 Music-Lovers Get to Festival

(The Associated Press)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motorcars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the Third Leonore Overture of Beethoven and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestra material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of co-operation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Assails Critics Of Young Russian Composer

By the Associated Press.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's tolling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion" and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Berkshire Hills Colony Attends Opening of Tanglewood Festival

Many Boxholders for Annual Concert Series Listed; Memorial Service for the Rev. W. H. Phelps at Monterey Congregational Church Today

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 1.—Tanglewood's Festival of Music given by the Berkshire Music Center, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, opened tonight in the music shed midway between Lenox and Stockbridge. Among the boxholders for the series of six concerts extending over three week ends are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which built the music shed; Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown, Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt and Mrs. E. Norman Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton, New York, have arranged for the annual memorial service at Monterey Congregational Church tomorrow for her grandfather, the Rev. Winthrop H. Phelps, pastor of the church from 1856 to 1860. In 1861 he enlisted in the 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery as a chaplain and served until the end of the Civil War. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton have as guests at Brookmead the Misses Gladys Williamson and Anne Crews and Captain Webster Palham, of Raleigh, N. C., for whom they entertained at dinner tonight

Mrs. June Giles, Forest Hills, L. I., gave a birthday party yesterday at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for her daughter, Miss Jo Ann Giles. Others in the group were the Misses J. Caryl Bloodgood, Patricia Cole, Barbara Cullen, Marge Abel, Patricia McLean and Ann Behrer. Berkshire Inn arrivals include the Rev. Coleman Sullivan, Bridgeport, Conn.; Miss Elizabeth McNeill, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Litton, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hartman, Miss Margaret Birmingham, New York; Mrs. Alfred J. Petti, Mrs. F. O. Kraemer, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Lewis, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Mills, Yonkers, N. Y.; and Mrs. J. W. Robson; White Plains, N. Y.

Curtis Hotel, Lenox, held its weekly invitation bridge party and prize winners were Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. David Dows, jr., Miss Mary McGuinness, Miss Elizabeth Davis, Mr. George W. Seligman and Mr. Clinton O. Jones. Newcomers at the Curtis include Mrs. Ryder Breed, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph May, Mrs. George McCracken, the Misses Emily Lynch, Frances Whittlesey and Edith Thwaite, New York. Mrs. C. Wickliffe Yulee is back at the Curtis from Bar Harbor.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. G. DeWitt Williamson, Mrs. R. P. Buchanan and Mrs. Herbert Roberts, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Malley, New Haven, Conn., and Miss Marion K. Sard, Albany.

Among arrivals at Brookbend Inn, Monterey, are Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Germayne, Mrs. J. Alfred Rohmer and the Misses Frances M. O'Connor; Eleanor Atkins, Corinne Prevot and Marjorie Senff, New York.

Newcomers at Egremont Tavern, South Egremont, include Dr. and Mrs. William Pitt Baldwin, New Haven, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Young and Mrs. Lester Wittenberg, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.
NONPAREIL
AUG 2 - 1942

Shostakovich's Symphonies

A contemporary Russian composer whose works are appearing more and more frequently on American concert programs is Vladimir Shostakovich. His Fifth symphony, heard within the past week at Ravinia park, played by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, is an attempt on the part of the composer to present in music the revolutionary ideals of the soviet state. The symphony has been described as a "well realized and an economically and exactly expressed work of art." Shostakovich's Seventh symphony, recently completed and sent to the United States for publication, is the composer's effort to convey the impact on man of the tremendous events of the present day. It is to have a hearing soon at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., where it will be performed by the Boston symphony orchestra.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1942

...Beach Parties
...nal Entertaining
...in Surf and Pool After Re...
...Relief Activities
...New York Times.
...12. 8—The Summer season at Na...
...th every available house occupie...
...d inns filled to capacity.
...h of beach is the chief attractio...
...picnics replacing more formal en...
...tertaining. The Dunes Club is th...
...social center and sees large gather...
...ings of colonists each morning fo...
...surf bathing or a plunge in th...
...swimming pool for relaxation fro...
...Red Cross or other activities i...
...connection with war relief work...
...These gatherings are usually fo...
...lowed by small informal luncheo...
...parties on the club's spacious...
...mpkins.
Bert Morgan

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 5 - 1942

COMMITTEES NAMED FOR TANGLEWOOD FETE

Gov Saltonstall Honorary Chairman for Russian War Relief Concert

Gov Leverett Saltonstall will be honorary chairman for the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th.

There will be a full program starting at 5 with Dr Serge Koussevitzky, students and faculty of the Berkshire Music center giving their services for the event. A feature of the day will be the first concert performance of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony in the western hemisphere. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct.

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, inc., will be the active chairman for the benefit. Honorary vice-chairman will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Mrs Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee and serving with her are Mrs Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, Mrs Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mr and Mrs George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs Carlos M. de-Heredia of Lenox, Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the general ticket committee.

Hugh Cabot of Boston and Dr James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college, are included on the general committee.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1942

OFF the CUFF

By ED EDSTROM

U. S. MUSIC. Critics of American culture might be interested in these facts gleaned from "America's Symphony Orchestras" by Margaret Grant and Herman S. Hettinger. American concert listeners get more symphonic music than any others. There are nearly 45,000 orchestras in the U. S. devoted to classical music. More than 250 of these are permanent, full-fledged symphonic groups. Sixteen of these have a budget of $100,000 or more yearly and rival Europe's best. Three (the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra) are better than any in Europe and each costs over $600,000 a year. None of them make a dime.

QUESTION. Whatever became of the widely known line of pencils (they were made in America) which were trademarked "Mikado"?

SCOOP. A favorite newspaperman story concerns the foreign correspondent who cabled home a story and received a message from his boss patting him on the back: "Congratulations on your wonderful exclusive story." The next day the correspondent got another cable from his boss: "Your story still exclusive. Why?"

FOR MEN ONLY. Husbands, the next time your wife wants you to do tasks around the house that wives are always wanting husbands to do, quote to her this African proverb: "Work only tires a woman, but it ruins a man."

WHISTLERS MUTTER. Girls at a Santa Monica aircraft plant squelched the male employes who would give long whistles as they passed by. They did the same thing in reverse. One girl would say: "Look at Tarzan, there, would you?" Another would follow up with: "Some build that guy's got." The whistlers couldn't take it and shut up.

REWRITE JOB. The Golden Rule as rewritten by Bernard Shaw: "Do not do unto others as you would that they should do unto you. Their tastes may not be the same."

HALFWAY. 'Way, 'way back in 1906 a suffragette was defined thusly: "One who has ceased to be a lady and not yet become a gentleman."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Music Center in Berkshires to Carry On

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Despite gasoline and tire rationing, the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, is carrying on under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who is to have a festival of music there consisting of six concerts over three week-ends starting last night. There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English. Dr. Koussevitzky has a student orchestra of 104 musicians from 30 states.

Today is treasury day at Tanglewood with the sale of war bonds and stamps directed by Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Chicago. She is having 50 girls participate in a contest, in which those making the largest sales will be given war bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music foundation. Mrs. McPherson has just returned to Pittsfield from Chicago. Her sister, Mrs. Perry M. Shepard, and Miss Deborah S. Shepard of Geneva, N. Y., are at the McPherson summer home, Court Hill, Pittsfield.

Mrs. Francis King [Louisa Yeomans] of South Hartford, N. Y., will arrive Thursday for a visit with Mrs. William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

The Berkshire Garden center, Stockbridge, of which Mrs. Barrett, the former Margery Barker of Chicago, is president, also continues to function. An authority on gardening, Mrs. King has written that the center with its trial and herb gardens, orchard, and buildings "make with their surroundings a group as stimulating and charming as any gardens and garden rooms I have ever seen."

Kimball Salisbury of Lake Forest has enlisted in the navy following a visit with his mother, Mrs. Warren M. Salisbury, at Tor court, Pittsfield.

George Allen Holloway, New York, is on the tennis committee of the Stockbridge club, of which Princess Diane R. Eristavi is chairman.

Mrs. John Bryant, Brookline, Mass., is visiting her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George O. Forbes, at Orchard farm, North Egremont.

"The History of Garden Clubs," written by Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, was the subject of a questionnaire at a garden party given this week by Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge, formerly of Milwaukee, at Guestwick, Pittsfield. Mrs. Dodge attended a luncheon party given by Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. Florence Bannard Adams of Northampton at Pittsfield.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Dowagers Have to Thumb Rides But 3000 Music-Lovers Get to Festival

(The Associated Press)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motorcars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some 3000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world-famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp and circumstance the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the Third Leonore Overture of Beethoven and Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestra material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability, especially one of the oboes and the first horn.

The spirit of the playing was one of co-operation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address from Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the treasury's bond campaign.

The program tomorrow afternoon, also to be given in the wedge-shaped music shed lent Dr. Koussevitzky by the old festival management, will include the Franck Symphony, the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and, for the first time in such surroundings, a couple of Sousa marches.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Assails Critics Of Young Russian Composer

By the Associated Press.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion" and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It

ss Riddled by 20

appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The

3,000 Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival

Worcester, Mass, Telegram

Koussevitzky Conducts Student Orchestra In Program of Haydn and Shostakovitch

By RAYMOND MORIN

Aug. 6 '42

LENOX, Aug. 1.—Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Center Symphony Orchestra eloquently began a series of six Festival of Music concerts tonight before a Tanglewood shed audience of 3000. The student orchestra of 105 earnestly followed musical paths that extended from the exquisite lace-work of Haydn to the more austere mutterings of Shostakovitch.

The setting is unique even among stadiums of music, for in place of industrial or skyscraper backgrounds, one looks out upon the beautiful Berkshire Hills of Lenox and Stockbridge. In spite of special transportation permission granted by the Office of Civilian Defense in Washington, "Tanglewood" is accessible by shuttle service only from nearby towns. Therefore, it may be assumed that the attendance (many of them Worcesterites) is made up largely of true music devotees.

As the Haydn symphony progressed it had begun to darken as if preparing a change of setting for the Beethoven "Leonore Overture, No. 3" and the more narrative "Fifth Symphony" of Shostakovitch. At night, the stage is illuminated by glaring overhead lights which somehow seem to give clearer perspective to motion than in a concert hall. From some sections of the shed, there is a brief overlapping of sound which does tend to emphasize tonal contrasts. It will be interesting to hear the effect upon the harmonic confusions of the Stravinsky, Hanson and Copland works to be heard later.

Significance of Concerts

This year there is a penetrating significance to this three-year-old Berkshire Center enterprise. Sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, its purpose is "to aid in every way possible in the development of musical talent, and in time of war to preserve music and art treasures." Judging from tonight's reactions its ideals will be fully supported.

The vast arena, populated by nation-wide pilgrimage, resounded first to Koussevitzky's unusually slow, stately performance of the "Star Spangled Banner." The impression he creates is not one of obligatory prologue but of profound respect.

The program formally began with the Haydn "Symphony in G Major, No. 88." It is interesting to note that last Summer Koussevitzky also assigned the opening opus to "Papa Haydn." We are again impelled to comment upon the finesse with which the conductor spins Haydn's scores. The light, "foot-tapping" pulse never becomes "metronomic," melodies sing cheerfully, and a general atmosphere of holiday spirit prevails.

String Section Good

As Haydn wrote the "Songs of the Child," so Beethoven wrote "Songs of the Man." The latter's "Third Overture to Leonore" faithfully illustrated the school's high standards of instruction. It is a mature work that calls for meticulous performance. Special mention should be made of the string section in general and of the first violins in particular. Evidentally the superb string ensemble playing which Koussevitzky has achieved with the Boston Symphony has proven infectious to this younger organization. The wood-wind choir produced clear, balanced tones, and with the exception of occasional tonal or rhythmic imprecisions, it was a commendable performance.

Russian Composer

Although Dmitri Shostakovitch is but 36, he is Russia's most authentic musical biographer. His first symphony, which will be played at the forthcoming Worcester Festival, and the Fifth Symphony, which was played tonight, commemorated two epochs of American-Russian collaboration. His Seventh Symphony, which was recently given a much discussed world premiere will close this series of concerts.

Koussevitzky's skill in conducting Russian scores is undeniable. The bucolic, romantic tendency of the "Fifth Symphony" compared to the sardonic agitation of the "First Symphony" was unfolded, but we did recall more forceful performances, which is natural since these young musicians are here to gain experiences.

Concerts to Come

The balance of the festival will include five more symphony concerts, three chamber music concerts, and two performances of Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor," sung in English. Among the assisting artists who are known to Worcester are Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo pianists, who achieved great success in a Civic Music concert two seasons ago—Ruth Posselt, violinist, who delighted a Worcester Friends of Music audience last season—Jesus Maria Sanroma, who has made many Worcester appearances, and Bernard Zighera, who conducted his orchestral group at the Art Museum last Spring.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

AUG 4 - 1942

Bikes, Trucks and Thumbs Bring Music Lovers to Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—(AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers thumbed rides—some 3,000 persons tonight attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic festival, proved to be music for its own sake. Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for boxholders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

The audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

AUG 5 - 1942

At Tanglewood

Reports of the opening concerts over the week-end by the student orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshires show that Dr. Koussevitzky in a few weeks has moulded the group of young musicians into a sensitive and spirited ensemble. An audience of 4000 enjoyed the Sunday concert. And that is a large attendance considering the transportation problem which prevented the customary Berkshire Festival this year. The second series of concerts comes this week-end. And some changes in the programs have been made. On Saturday evening symphonies by Hanson and Brahms will be played and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, the duo pianists, who have become such favorites in Lowell will play with the orchestra the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in E flat. On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 9, compositions by Handel, Martinu and Tschaikowsky are on the program.

The performance of the new Seventh Symphony by Shostakovitch is scheduled for Sunday afteroon, Aug. 16. Friday afternoon, Aug. 14, there will be a special concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief.

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Underwrites Music Series

May Lose $30,000 but He Is Determined 'Art Must Die Last'

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire music center, he not only was directing the 105-piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps 30 thousand dollars.

Koussevitzky

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boson Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

He Stands Losses

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost.

Arriving on bicycles, on foot in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides—some three thousand attended.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities.

The audience heard an orchestra of young musicians — recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performanes of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven, and Dmitri Shostakovich's Fifth symphony.

Strings Are Damp

The orchestra, moulded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section can remember.

The spirit of the playing was one of co-operation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

Will Play Shostakovich

The other six concerts, divided among three week-ends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of August 14 will be the climax.

This will be performance of Shostakovich's new Seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

AUG 2 - 1942

IN LENOX, MASS., Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, a series which would not have materialized except for the fact that the conductor donated "as an outright gift" $30,000 from his own bank account to keep the series, an annual event, going. Serge said: "In war, art must die last." . . . IN NEWARK, N. J., Dr. Leopold W. Brandenburg, accused of performing a rare operation in an attempt to change the fingerprints of a wanted criminal, was convicted by a Federal jury. He faces three years in prison and a $500 fine . . .

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Deplores Panning of Shostakovich

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Siege of Leningrad

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment is being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of disputation, Dr. Koussevitsky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has.

"Melody Without End"

"He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14th for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The Student Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 2 - 1942

Shostakovich 7th Played by Koussevitzky

The first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, August 14, by Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The orchestra, which will appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton will number 110 players.

The symphony was greeted by tremendous popular acclaim after its initial American presentation by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC radio orchestra. The Berkshire Music Festival performance will be the public's first opportunity to hear this much-discussed work first-hand.

In a recent cable Shostakovich said "I hope that its first American performance will be for the benefit of Russian War Relief, which is doing so many fine things for my people." The composers' wish is being granted, under the supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky, who previously had conducted another benefit for Russian War Relief.

The story of the Seventh Symphony has become present-day history. Dedicated by Shostakovich to his own beleaguered city of Leningrad, where he composed it between hours of duty as a volunteer fire fighter during months of siege and danger, it was given its world premiere in the Soviet "second capital," Kuibyshev. The score was then placed on microfilm and flown to the United States.

In addition to the performance of the Seventh Symphony on August 14, several outstanding soloists will appear on the evening's program. The concert, which will take place in the Tanglewood Shed, will have several preliminary features. Starting at 5 P.M., there will be chamber music by students of the Berkshire Music Center, and also a light opera performance. From 7 to 8 P.M., the Great Barrington Wednesday Morning Club will serve a baked bean supper on the green.

Tickets for the event may be obtained at local committees of Russian War Relief, Inc., or at national headquarters, 11 East 35th St., New York City.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Leads Series In Berkshires

Today's Concert to Aid Stamp Campaign; Two Performances of Opera

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the second program of the center's music festival today at 3 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program includes two marches by John Philip Sousa, Cesar Franck's symphony and Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as the soloist. This concert is dedicated to the Treasury Department's bond and stamp campaign, and the stub of every ticket will be redeemable for a 50-cent war stamp at the Tanglewood stamp booth.

Next Friday night, the center's opera department, directed by Dr. Herbert Graf, will give Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English in the Tanglewood Theater Concert Hall. This will be repeated on Thursday night, Aug. 13.

The revised list of programs to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky in the remaining regular festival concerts is:

Saturday, Aug. 8, 8:30: Symphony No. 3, Manson; Two-Piano Concerto in E flat (K. 365), Mozart (Soloists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Neemenoff); Symphony No. 4, Brahms.

Sunday, Aug. 9, 3: Concerto Grosso, Handel; Concerto Grosso, Martinu; Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky.

Saturday, Aug. 15, 8:30: Magnificat in D, Bach; Symphony No. 9, Beethoven (with Berkshire Festival Chorus).

Sunday, Aug. 16, 3: Copland, Quiet City, Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 7.

The special benefit program on Friday night, Aug. 14, for Russian War Relief, will follow the general lines of the festival benefits in 1940 and 1941. Beginning at 5, the various activities of the center will be demonstrated, and prominent speakers will be heard in the "Manifestation." In the evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra, of 110 players, in the American concert premiere of Shostakovitch's seventh symphony, which was first heard here July 19 in a radio concert of the N. B. C. Symphony under Arturo Toscanini. Supper will be served between 7 and 8 o'clock.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
AUG 2 - 1942

Hitch-Hike, Ride Bikes to Hear Symphonv

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

War Brings Eastern Music Festival Down to Earth

LENOX, MASS. (AP)—Arriving on bicycles, on foot, in trucks and in packed motor cars—at least two dowagers were reported to have thumbed rides — some 3,000 persons Saturday night attended the first concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood.

KOUSSEVITZKY.

This year's program, taking the place of the world famous Berkshire Symphonic festival, which was canceled because of war restrictions, proved to be music for its own sake.

Gone were the elaborate refreshment tents, the segregated parking area for box-holders, the hundreds of shining chauffeured cars, the long lists of celebrities and the inevitable parking jam.

In place of the measured pomp, the audience heard an orchestra of 105 young musicians—recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center—give remarkable performances of Haydn's symphony No. 88, the third Leonore overture of Beethoven and Dmitri Shostakovich's fifth symphony.

The orchestra molded into shape in less than four weeks of daily rehearsals, played with brilliance under Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent leadership.

There was a little difficulty with the strings, a hangover from one of the dampest weeks this section of the Berkshires can remember. But most of the orchestral material, assembled from 35 states, demonstrated exceptional ability.

The spirit of the playing was one of co-operation, rather than of musical dictatorship, and the results were precise, clever and trigger-keen.

War conditions were reflected on the grounds by an elaborate war stamp organization of 50 girls, by many men in uniform, and by a brief address on the war bond campaign.

★ ★ ★

When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview Saturday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written in Siege.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music."

Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics," however, praised it unreservedly.

Feeling.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said, "Musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times.

"It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses.

"No one since Beethoven has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has.

Melody.

"He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center will play.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1942

SOME 3000 CHEER KOUSSEVITZKY AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Come by Foot, Bicycles and Trucks to Attend First of Six Concerts at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 1—An audience of nearly 3000 stood and cheered for 15 minutes tonight at the close of the first of six symphony concerts by the Berkshire Music Center students, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, at the Tanglewood music shed.

The crowd, unexpected because of transportation difficulties, had arrived by foot, bicycle, truck and—in some cases—automobile. But the traffic jams which had marked previous Tanglewood concerts were absent from the scene, with further signs of war conditions in the many uniforms seen about the grounds, in the selling of war stamps by a group of 50 girls, in an address by Roy Dickenson Welch of Washington on the treasury's bond campaign.

Overcome by Emotion

The completion of the Shostakovitch Fifth symphony found the unexpectedly large audience calling persistently for "more." Dr Koussevitzky was overcome with emotion and tears were streaming down his face during the intermission.

"I am immensely pleased," he said. "The confidence I have in American youth to make good on an occasion like this has been more than justified. These boys and girls whom I first met four weeks ago have shown a fine spirit of initiative, and a superb longing to learn what has been taught at this musical center. I am too gratified for words."

The performance of the Shostakovitch symphony was a major triumph for the young musicians. Comments of the audience were heard to the effect that the Boston Symphony itself had not played the fourth movement, in particular—the allegro non troppo—more effectively, and that the New York Philharmonic should come to Tanglewood to hear the students.

Considering that Mr Koussevitzky had rehearsed the orchestra for little more than a month, the results were nothing short of amazing. The enthusiasm of the audience was expressed not entirely for the concert itself, superb as it was, but also in appreciation of the continuation of a musical event that is sorely needed in these times.

Like Students' Work

The fact that there was a group of 105 students, both boys and girls, and not the Boston Symphony players themselves composing the orchestra, seemed to highten the enjoyment rather than detract from it.

While the coloring and phrasing of the older musicians might have made the concert a more finished musical event, the spirit, virtuosity and energy of the young players made it a very exciting one.

The program opened with a monthly rendered Haydn Symphony in G Major, No 88. This was followed by the Overture to Leonore, No 3, Opus 72, by Beethoven. After intermission came the most effective work of the evening, the Shostakovitch Fifth.

Outstanding in the performance of this last was the solo work of the concertmaster, and the spontaneity of the orchestra as a whole.

Second Concert Today

The second concert in the series will be given tomorrow afternoon at 3, with the following program: Two Sousa marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever"; the Tchaikowsky concerto for violin in D major, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Boxes which had the only reserved seats were about 50 per cent occupied. The entire rear section of the music shed back of the boxes was roped off and more than two-thirds of the seats in front with capacity of 3000 were taken. There were fully 400 cars in the parking space. In view of the transportation difficulties the size of the audience was considered remarkable.

Although box holders were less numerous than in other years many notables were present. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was accompanied by Miss Miriam Oliver. Noticed with Lady Salter of London were Miss Barbara Van Agnew of that city. In another box was Baroness Humbert De Viry, formerly of Savoie, France. Also noticed were Baron and Baroness Edouard De Rothschild, formerly of Paris, with many from the Lenox and Stockbridge colony. It was predicted tonight there will be a much larger audience for the "treasury day" program tomorrow afternoon starting at 3.

M. R. B.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1942

Red Composer Ranked With Beethoven

By the Associated Press

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," ays Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Depicts Leningrad Siege

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anticlimatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

Greatest Since Beethoven

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center will play.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
AUG

'He's a Genius,' Conductor Tells Shostakovich Music Critics

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics," however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center will play.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 5 - 1942

COMMITTEES NAMED FOR TANGLEWOOD FETE

Gov Saltonstall Honorary Chairman for Russian War Relief Concert

Gov Leverett Saltonstall will be honorary chairman for the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th.

There will be a full program starting at 5 with Dr Serge Koussevitzky, students and faculty of the Berkshire Music center giving their services for the event. A feature of the day will be the first concert performance of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony in the western hemisphere. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct.

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, inc., will be the active chairman for the benefit. Honorary vice-chairman will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Mrs Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee and serving with her are Mrs Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, Mrs Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mr and Mrs George W. Edman of Pittsfield. Mrs William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia of Lenox, Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the general ticket committee.

Hugh Cabot of Boston and Dr James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college, are included on the general committee.

CUSHING, OKLA.
CITIZEN
AUG 2 - 1942

● World of Music

NEW YORK (UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lennox, Mass., has started its summer music festival, to continue on week-ends until Aug. 16. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning Aug. 1, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of 96 advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianist will appear as soloists. At the concert of Aug. 16, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," five chamber music concerts and four lectured

CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES
AUG 3 1942

CONDUCTOR OF SYMPHONY PAYS FOR PRIVILEGE

Serge Koussevitzky Spends $30,000 of Own Funds to Keep Alive Boston Musical Festival

TO FINANCE OTHERS

Underwrites Cost of Concerts He Gives; Says Art Must Die Last in War

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton tonight on the first of a serious of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he was not only directing the 105-piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Art Must Be Last War Victim

Declaring that "art must die last in a war," the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he would give at the famous music center.

Tonight's program was played by an orchestra which had rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music included Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, the third "Leonore" overture of Beethover, and Dmitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony.

Six Concerts Planned

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1942

NEW SYMPHONY DRAWS SUPPORT

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who posseses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music centers will play.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

AUG 8 1942

Conductor Of Boston Symphony Orchestra Hails Red Composer

Shostakovitch Had Drawn Attack Of Some Music Critics

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitsky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Leads Students At Tanglewood

Plays Haydn, Beethoven and Shostakovitch Works in Berkshire Festival

By Francis B. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—The symphonic portion of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood began here tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Center's Student Orchestra of over 100 young musicians in Haydn's symphony in G Major No. 88, Beethoven's third Leonore Overture and Dmitri Shostakovitch's 5th Symphony. After a showery Friday, the weather cleared and was ideal for music making in the semi-outdoor conditions of the Tanglewood music shed.

This festival is the first to be presented by the Center now in third season on its own account, but it is the ninth symphonic festival to be held in this region, the seventh to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, the sixth to take place on the Tanglewood estate and the fifth in the music shed. Except that the Center's first student orchestra is playing instead of the Boston Symphony and that there are six concerts instead of nine, it is similar to the regular Berkshire Symphonic Festival which had to be given up this summer because of transportation difficulties. Most of the travel in this area is by private automobile, and after gasoline rationing was added to the already existing tire problem, the already completed plans for that festival were canceled.

Meanwhile, the Boston Symphony Orchestra found itself unable to continue its support of the Berkshire Music Center, and this also would have been discontinued had not Dr. Koussevitzky, its director, offered to take the financial responsibility for the school this summer. The present session is under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., organized by the conductor both to sponsor the school and for other musical causes such as the assistance to American composers. The proceeds of the present festival are shared by the school and the foundation, which enjoys the use of the music shed and the Tanglewood estate by courtesy of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees. The festival trustees, headed by Gertrude Robinson Smith, also have co-operated by preparing the shed for these concerts.

Thus the story of summer orchestral music in this region continues unbroken. The vexing transportation problem is being met as far as possible by co-operative use of private cars and by increased bus service. The bus company, unable to obtain permission from Washington to add a route not on its regular schedule, had to leave its passengers in the center of Lenox, with private cars and other vehicles, including a hay wagon, pressed into service for the remaining mile to Tanglewood.

The orchestra is composed of students and young professionals from more than thirty states. They were chosen after exacting auditions for study with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony players on the Center's faculty. They have been rehearsing daily for three weeks. Comment on their playing tonight must await tomorrow's review, but comment upon their work in rehearsal has been enthusiastic. The Center has another orchestra representing its less specialized department of music and culture, which plays under student conductors.

Another public activity today was the third lecture recital in Olin Downe's series this afternoon, when a small vocal group did notable work in early polyphonic music. A chamber music program tomorrow night offers Faure's C minor piano quintet, Hindemith's second woodwind quartet and Brahms's B-major trio.

Tomorrow afternoon's symphony concert is dedicated to the Treasury's war stamp campaign. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau jr. will not be here for his expected visit, but Roy Dickinson Welch, of Princeton University, who is consulting expert for music to the Treasury Department, will speak.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Sees Music Taking Big Role in Wartime

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, believes that musicians have an important rôle during the war and accordingly has issued the following appeal to American musicians:

"We, the musicians of the great American democracy, must fully participate in the gigantic struggle for the highest human values our glorious country and her allies are engaged in. We must share the joys and sorrows, the achievements and toils, the victories and defeats, finally, the necessary sacrifice involved in the struggle. 'Business as usual' and fight for our advantages must, for the duration of the war, give way to the privilege of serving the country to the maximum of our efforts, regardless of any profit. Without any remuneration we must add to our ordinary duties the extraordinary ones.

"By the consoling power of music we must lighten the sorrows of all those who lose their dear ones in the tragic conflict. The sublime joy of music must be accessible to all who need it in this trying moment of history. This great service can be discharged by musicians individually and collectively by giving the performances in all these places for all these groups.

"We must become new bards, new Orpheuses — inspiring, invigorating, ennobling, and consoling. In this way we can help the attainment of the grand immediate objective—victory."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1942

RUSSIAN RELIEF CONCERT FRIDAY

Saltonstall is Honorary Chairman

AT TANGLEWOOD

Feature of Day to be Performance of Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony —Baxter on Committee

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall will be honorary chairman for the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th.

There will be a full program starting at 5 o'clock, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, students and faculty of the Berkshire Music center giving their services for the event. A feature of the day will be the first concert performance of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony in the western hemisphere. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, Inc., will be the active chairman for the benefit. Honorary vice-chairman will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Hugh Cabot of Boston and Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college, are included on the general committee.

Mrs. Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee and serving with her are Mrs. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, Mrs. Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the general ticket committee.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Rebukes Critics Of Shostakovitch 7th Symphony

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP).—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of the Soviet composer, Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician, in an interview today in which he took sharp isue with some critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody wihout end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1942

Music in the Berkshires

THE WAR has brought a ban on elaborate or spectacular events such as the now famous annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The picture is not without its brighter side however, for it has impelled Dr. Koussevitzky to bring forward the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, brilliant students auditioned all over the country for acceptance in this unique Summer conservatory in the Berkshires, in a series of concerts he has called the Berkshire Music Festival.

The opening concert took place last night, with the usual array of metropolitan critics in attendance, Raymond Morin, music critic of this newspaper representing the Telegram, and Worcester, for the series of concerts and their supplementary musical events.

Dedicated to the War Bond and Stamp Campaign, the first Sunday afternoon concert in the Tanglewood Festival of Music will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky this afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. With Ruth Posselt, famous violinist, appearing as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in two Sousa Marches and the Franck Symphony in D Minor.

For the past week, more than a score of committees have been at work in Berkshire County selling concert tickets. A group of over fifty girls will sell War Stamps on the grounds in a contest in which those selling the largest amounts of stamps will be given War Bonds donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The stub of every ticket of admission will be exchangeable for a fifty cent War Stamp on the Tanglewood grounds.

After three weeks of daily rehearsals, Dr. Koussevitzky is highly enthusiastic about his orchestra of over one hundred young musicians whom he has gathered from over thirty states, and who represent the most talented youth of the country.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1942

Koussevitzky is to Sit For Portrait by Greer

A portrait of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Bostor Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music center, will be painted by Bernard I. Green, and proceeds from the sale of the picture will be turned over to Russian relief.

Mr. Green, who is spending the summer at Lenox, while his wife, a graduate of the Juilliard school of music is taking courses at the Center, is art director at the Thomas Jefferson high school in New York city. Many of his paintings have been hung in various galleries.

Newton [illegible]

AUG 2 1942

Koussevitzky Sees Merit In Shostakovich

Lenox, Mass. (AP).—When some music critic panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "Genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Drew Some Criticism

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation. Dr. Koussevitzky said that "Musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times; it is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has; he is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER
AUG 2 1942

Famed Conductor Jumps To Defense of Comp

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

DULUTH, MINN.
NEWS TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Symphony Praised By Koussevitzky

LENOX, Miss. — (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of "a genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conducted of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview yesterday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism yesterday will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
AUG 2 - 1942

COMPOSER'S WORK HAILED

Dr. Koussevitzky Compares Dmitri Shostakovich To Beethoven

Takes Issue With Those Who Panned Seventh Symphony

[By the Associated Press]

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, Soviet composer, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

"Without Doubt A Genius"

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music."

Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times.

Lauds Aesthetic Sense

"It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has.

"He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
AUG 2 1942

Conductor Giving A Costly Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Doctor Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war", the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

GOTHAM LIFE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 2 - 1942

Shostakovich 7th Symphony

The first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, Aug. 14, by Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The orchestra, which will appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, will number 110 players.

The symphony was greeted by tremendous popular acclaim after its initial American presentation by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC radio orchestra. The Berkshire Music Festival performance will be the public's first opportunity to hear this much-discussed work first-hand.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 3 - 1942

STUDENT MUSICIANS UNDER KOUSSEVITZKY DRAW MUCH APPLAUSE

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3, (AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players who Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton university music department, speaking for the treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Russian Composer Is Termed Genius

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICI
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Raps Critics Of Red Writer's Symphony

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview yesterday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses.

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 3 1942

STUDENT CONCERT ATTRACTS 4000

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music centre. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

116.

OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER
AUG 2 1942

Famed Conductor Jumps To Defense of Comp

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
AUG 2 - 1942

COMPOSER'S WORK HAILED

Dr. Koussevitzky Compares Dmitri Shostakovich To Beethoven

Takes Issue With Those Who Panned Seventh Symphony

[By the Associated Press]

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, Soviet composer, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

"Without Doubt A Genius"

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music."

Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times.

Lauds Aesthetic Sense

"It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has.

"He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

GOTHAM LIFE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 2 - 1942

Shostakovich 7th Symphony

The first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, Aug. 14, by Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The orchestra, which will appear under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, will number 110 players.

The symphony was greeted by tremendous popular acclaim after its initial American presentation by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC radio orchestra. The Berkshire Music Festival performance will be the public's first opportunity to hear this much-discussed work first-hand.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 3 - 1942

STUDENT MUSICIANS UNDER KOUSSEVITZKY DRAW MUCH APPLAUSE

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3, (AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players who Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton university music department, speaking for the treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICL
AUG 2 - 1942

Koussevitzky Raps Critics Of Red Writer's Symphony

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview yesterday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses.

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 3 - 1942

STUDENT CONCERT ATTRACTS 4000

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music centre. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

DULUTH, MINN.
NEWS TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1942

Symphony Praised By Koussevitzky

LENOX, Miss. — (AP) — When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of "a genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conducted of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview yesterday in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism yesterday will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
AUG 2 1942

Conductor Giving A Costly Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifts his baton tonight on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he'll not only be directing the 105-piece orchestra, but will be "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Doctor Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire music festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war", the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1942

Russian Composer Is Termed Genius

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer, since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitzky will give the first American concert performance of the work here Aug. 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky's Student Orchestra Termed Superb

Audiences Numbering Nearly 3,000 Persons Each Time Hear Berkshire Music Foundation Orchestra of 104 Pieces in First and Second Program of Six-Concert Series During Week-End—Even Hay-Wagon Used for Transportation—Koussevitzky in Tears of Joy as His "Confidence in Youth is Justified."

Audiences numbering nearly 3,000 persons each time heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conduct his Berkshire Music Foundation orchestra of 104 pieces in the first and second programs of their six-concert series Saturday night and yesterday afternoon in the music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, and critics proclaimed the performance of the student ensemble, which has rehearsed for little more than four weeks, as superb.

Vehicles of All Kinds

The crowd, which was not expected to be as large as those which formerly assembled to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra perform under Dr. Koussevitzky, because of obvious war-caused difficulties, exceeded all estimates, and arrived by every known transportation means—horse, bicycle, foot, truck and in some cases, automobile. The usual parking lot congestion was conspicuously absent in the two first concerts. Buses were run from Pittsfield and south-county points to Lenox, and a shuttle service provided by Lenox volunteers carried these persons to Tanglewood, employing every conceivable means—even to a hay wagon.

At the close of the first concert Saturday night, the audience stood and cheered for 15 minutes, and Dr. Koussevitzky addressed them, saying "I am immensely pleased. The confidence I have in American youth," he said with tears streaming down his face, "to make good on an occasion like this has been more than justified. These boys and girls whom I first met four weeks ago have shown a fine spirit of initiative, and a superb longing to learn what has been taught at this music center. I am too gratified for words."

Shostakovitch Triumph

The performance of the Shostakovitch Fifth symphony was a triumph for the young musicians, and the enthusiasm of the audience was expressed not only for the concert in itself, but also in appreciation of the continuation of the great Tanglewood music events. The program opened with the Haydn symphony in G major, No. 88. This was followed by the overture to Leonore No. 3, Opus, 72, by Beethoven. After an intermission came the most effective work of the evening, the Shostakovitch Fifth. Outstanding in the performance of this last, was the solo work of the concertmaster and the spontaneity of the orchestra as a whole.

Boxes which had the only reserved seats were about 50 per cent filled. The entire rear section of the music shed back of the boxes was roped off and more than two-thirds of the seats in front with a capacity of 3,000 were taken. There were about 400 cars in the parking lot.

The performance yesterday afternoon of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony was the highlight of the program. Contributing to the brilliance of the program was the performance of the Tschaikowski concerto in D major with Ruth Posselt of Boston as violin soloist. In the opening selections, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever," two Sousa marches, Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated his capabilities as a bandmaster. These popular compositions lost their hackneyed flavor, anad emerged from his treatment with crisp rhythms and fresh contrasts. Yesterday was "Treasury day," set apart especially for the sale of war bonds and stamps, and after the first number of the program, Prof. Roy D. Welch of the Princeton music faculty spoke. Ticket stubs were redeemable for one stamp, and a group of 50 girls sold stamps and bonds on the grounds.

Opera Aug. 13

The opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English, on Friday evening of this week and Thursday, the 13th. A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. During the evening performance, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh symphony.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Wins Praise For Student Orchestra; Sunday Audience Is 4,000

Lenox, Mass., August 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Saving Stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the bus line in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on August 14, and concerts the next two days.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 3 - 1942

Noted Conductor's Student Orchestra Drew Much Applause

Lenox, Mass (AP)—Talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked tó Tanglewood.

BOUGHT WAR STAMPS

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University Music department, speaking for the Treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
AUG 3 - 1942

Finest Youth Orchestra in Nation Heard

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Doctor Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Doctor Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
AUG 3 - 1942

4,000 Cheer Youth Orchestra At Lenox, Mass., Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2 —(AP)— The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestra's" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnierese of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation yb stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

AMHERST, MASS
RECORD
8/5/42

The Merry Wives of Windsor' to be Given At Tanglewood

The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are cooperating with the Opera Department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Student Orchestra Wins Praise

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire Music Centre. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and perhaps 4,000 persons turned out for the Sunday concert.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University music department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
AUG 3 - 1942

'Youth Orchestra' Scores at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country. The first concert, Saturday night, indicated this was the case.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Frank symphony. But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnierese of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation yb stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky's Student Orchestra Termed Superb

Audiences Numbering Nearly 3,000 Persons Each Time Hear Berkshire Music Foundation Orchestra of 104 Pieces in First and Second Program of Six-Concert Series During Week-End—Even Hay-Wagon Used for Transportation—Koussevitzky in Tears of Joy as His "Confidence in Youth is Justified."

Audiences numbering nearly 3,000 persons each time heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conduct his Berkshire Music Foundation orchestra of 104 pieces in the first and second programs of their six-concert series Saturday night and yesterday afternoon in the music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, and critics proclaimed the performance of the student ensemble, which has rehearsed for little more than four weeks, as superb.

Vehicles of All Kinds

The crowd, which was not expected to be as large as those which formerly assembled to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra perform under Dr. Koussevitzky, because of obvious war-caused difficulties, exceeded all estimates, and arrived by every known transportation means—horse, bicycle, foot, truck and in some cases, automobile. The usual parking lot congestion was conspicuously absent in the two first concerts. Buses were run from Pittsfield and south-county points to Lenox, and a shuttle service provided by Lenox volunteers carried these persons to Tanglewood, employing every conceivable means—even to a hay wagon.

At the close of the first concert Saturday night, the audience stood and cheered for 15 minutes, and Dr. Koussevitzky addressed them, saying "I am immensely pleased. The confidence I have in American youth," he said with tears streaming down his face, "to make good on an occasion like this has been more than justified. These boys and girls whom I first met four weeks ago have shown a fine spirit of initiative, and a superb longing to learn what has been taught at this music center. I am too gratified for words."

Shostakovitch Triumph

The performance of the Shostakovitch Fifth symphony was a triumph for the young musicians, and the enthusiasm of the audience was expressed not only for the concert in itself, but also in appreciation of the continuation of the great Tanglewood music events. The program opened with the Haydn symphony in G major, No. 88. This was followed by the overture to Leonore No. 3, Opus. 72, by Beethoven. After an intermission came the most effective work of the evening, the Shostakovitch Fifth. Outstanding in the performance of this last, was the solo work of the concertmaster and the spontaneity of the orchestra as a whole.

Boxes which had the only reserved seats were about 50 per cent filled. The entire rear section of the music shed back of the boxes was roped off and more than two-thirds of the seats in front with a capacity of 3,000 were taken. There were about 400 cars in the parking lot.

The performance yesterday afternoon of the Caesar Franck D minor symphony was the highlight of the program. Contributing to the brilliance of the program was the performance of the Tchaikowski concerto in D major with Ruth Posselt of Boston as violin soloist. In the opening selections, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever," two Sousa marches, Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated his capabilities as a bandmaster. These popular compositions lost their hackneyed flavor, anad emerged from his treatment with crisp rhythms and fresh contrasts. Yesterday was "Treasury day," set apart especially for the sale of war bonds and stamps, and after the first number of the program, Prof. Roy D. Welch of the Princeton music faculty spoke. Ticket stubs were redeemable for one stamp, and a group of 50 girls sold stamps and bonds on the grounds.

Opera Aug. 13

The opera department under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in English, on Friday evening of this week and Thursday, the 13th. A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian war relief will be held on Aug. 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. During the evening performance, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh symphony.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Wins Praise For Student Orchestra; Sunday Audience Is 4,000

Lenox, Mass., August 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Saving Stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the bus line in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on August 14, and concerts the next two days.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 3 - 1942

Noted Conductor's Student Orchestra Drew Much Applause

Lenox, Mass (AP)—Talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

BOUGHT WAR STAMPS

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University Music department, speaking for the Treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
AUG 3 - 1942

Finest Youth Orchestra in Nation Heard

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Doctor Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Doctor Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
AUG 3 - 1942

4,000 Cheer Youth Orchestra At Lenox, Mass., Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2 —(AP)— The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestra's" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation yb stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

AMHERST, MASS
RECORD
8/5/42

The Merry Wives of Windsor' to be Given At Tanglewood

The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, on Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras. The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are cooperating with the Opera Department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Student Orchestra Wins Praise

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire Music Centre. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and perhaps 4,000 persons turned out for the Sunday concert.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University music department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
AUG 3 - 1942

'Youth Orchestra' Scores at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country. The first concert, Saturday night, indicated this was the case.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Frank symphony. But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation yb stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1942

Tanglewood Concert Draws Applause

Serge Koussevitzky's 105 Young Musicians Play Before 4,000

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced cleartoned and accurate musical instrument.

Series To Continue Next Saturday, Sunday

There were no tricks involved in this achievement. No "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the bus line in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 3 - 1942

KOUSSEVITZKY'S STUDENT GROUP WINS PRAISE

Large Audience Attends Second Concert at Berkshire Center

LENOX, Aug. 3—The second in a series of six concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the music shed at Tanglewood yesterday, before a surprisingly large audience, considering gasoline rationing and tire shortages. The first concert was given Saturday night when between 2500 and 3000 almost filled the forward part of the mammoth shed and yesterday the audience was quite a bit larger.

The program benefited the Nation's war bond sale. Every purchased ticket was good for 50 cents worth of war savings stamps, which really brought the cost of the concert down to a pretty nominal figure. Furthermore booths were placed about the lawn, staffed by Mrs. Louis T. McGill of Pittsfield and a corps of aids, for the sale of bonds, and the pro-and "Stars and Stripes Forever." The soloist was the too-seldom heard violinist, Ruth Posselt, whose fiery rendition of the Tschaikowsky concerto in D major was something to be long remembered, and the program closed with Cesar Franck's ever popular symphony in D minor.

The series commenced with the Haydn G-major symphony, No. 88, followed by Beethoven's overture to "Leonore," No. 3, and closed with the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony, a program made up of works of three different centuries.

From the opening adagio of the Haydn, the audience knew that Koussevitzky had no inferior orchestra under his command. It played with a sparkle and dash which is many times missing in a professional orchestra, and while there may have been moments of lack of finesse, particularly in soft passages, the music was at all times enjoyable and sometimes thrilling.

From the amount of applause, and the shouts of "bravo" after every number, one was made doubtful of the sense of discrimination of the audience. In fact, the cheering was fully as vociferous as it has been in previous festivals when the Boston Orchestra played, and did not seem to vary in degree between one piece and another which might indicate that the "heils" were for the conductor rather than the orchestra. Be this as it may, Dr. Koussevitzky was generous in sharing the acclaim with his charges, causing them to stand several times and accept the applause.

Under ordinary circumstances, the ninth Berkshire Symphonic Festival of concerts by the Boston Orchestra would have opened last Thursday night and continued through Sunday. But, because of the war, the trustees of the orchestra and the festival felt this not feasible, so Dr. Koussevitzky proceeded on his own.

Continuing his Berkshire Music Center, he decided to use the so-called student orchestra for six concerts, and the results of last night and today would indicate that his decision was justified. Whether the Boston Orchestra would have drawn a larger audience at necessarily larger ticket prices is a matter of conjecture.

While all hail is being given the conductor, it should be borne in mind tha the musicians be directed Saturday cannot be in every particular be drawn from many states, and many schools, and some of them have been playing professionally for some years. To be sure, the good doctor has whipped them into an enviable ensemble through long rehearsals during the past three weeks but he did not teach them how to handle their instruments so ably.

Events at the Berkshire Music Center continued last night when chamber music was heard in the chamber music hall. Friday the opera department will give "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the theater, and Saturday night the orchestra will give the third in its series, with Luboschutz and Nemenoff, pianists, as soloists in the Mosart concerto for two pianos. Other works on the program will be the Hanson Symphony No. 3 and the Fourth Symphony by Brahms.

D. L. C.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

AUG 3 - 1942

Young Players Draw Applause

Koussevitzky's Orchestra Performs Before 4,000 In Its Second Appearance

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's Student Orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire Music Center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and perhaps 4,000 persons turned out for the Sunday concert.

Between their rounds of applause they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University Music Department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony Orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck Symphony. They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1942

Student Orchestra Well Received

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bough corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University music department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikvosky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 3 - 1942

New Conductor Announced

Announcement of the appointment of a new conductor for the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe has been made this week. Gregor Fittelberg, former conductor of the Warsaw Philharmonic, who was bombed out of the Polish capital in the air blitz of 1939, will succeed to the post in early October, just before the popular dancing troupe opens its pre-opera ballet season at the Metropolitan. Audiences throughout the Country will have an opportunity to size up the new conductor before he assumes these duties, however, as he conducted for the weekly Radio City Music Hall broadcast on Sunday (August 2) and is slated for radio guest appearances with the NBC Symphony on August 22 and 29.

Fittelberg is sure to have great appeal for American audiences when it becomes known that he assisted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as guest conductor in Russia in 1920, and took over the latter's post as leader of the Imperial Orchestra after Dr. Koussevitzky left for Paris.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 3 - 1942

They say that when Musician Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton for the concert at the Berkshire music center, he was paying his own piper to the tune of about $30,000. We've known other musicians to make sacrifice for their art, but never in such an amount.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1942

Berkshire Music Center Festival Has Fine Start

Opening Concert Dedication to "The Men and Women of Berkshire", Recalls Historic Sermon at Lenox

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

LENOX, Aug. 3—Serge Koussevitzky dedicated the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Center Festival Saturday night to "The men and women of Berkshire." In so doing, he honored Dr. William Ellery Channing who delivered a historic sermon at Lenox exactly one hundred years ago, which he also dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire."

This address spread the fame of the Berkshires. It was given on the eighth anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies. He said in part. "Christianity is the world. A new comprehension of the Christian spirit, a new feeling of brotherhood—these are among the signs of our times." Co-incidentally, a War Bond campaign was conducted at Sunday afternoon's symphony concert, and Aug. 14 there is to be a gala benefit for Rusisan war relief.

By dint of two days' telephoning, special permission was granted to run special busses into nearby towns. This had to be obtained from the Office of Defense Transportation in Wasington, however, the last few miles of travel to the "Tanglewood Shed" must be made by shuttle service. This failed to dampen the enthusiasm of three thousand who attended Saturday night's concert.

It was the first of six concerts extending through Aug. 16. In addition, there are to be three chamber music concerts and two performances of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," sung in English. Saturday night's concert included the Haydn "Sonata in G Major, No. 88" Beethoven's third overture to "Leonore" and the Shostakovitch "Fifth Symphony."

Worcester concert-goers will recall the soloists heard — Ruth Posselt, violinist, appeared in the Friends of Music series last season; Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, achieved great success in a civic music concert two seasons ago; Jesus Maria Sanroma has been heard many times in Worcester; Bernard Zighera appeared at the Art Museum last Spring with his orchestral group.

This Summer School of Music was founded by Koussevitsky in memory of his wife, the late Natalie Koussevitsky. The enthusiastic support is due in part, at least, to its purpose which is to assist young aspiring musicians in every way possible by scholarship and fellowships. There is a present enrollment of about 200. Of these, 105 perform in the orchestra. These students assemble from all parts of the country, and judging from the first night's performance, are the most gifted players of the various institutions from which they come.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 3 - 1942

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitsky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitsky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton university music department, speaking for the treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitsky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL

AUG 3 1942

KOUSSEVITZKY STUDENTS WIN ACCLAIM AT LENOX

By the Associated Press.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and perhaps 4,000 persons turned out for the Sunday concert.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University music department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians' began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony Orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR

AUG 4 -

Concerts Announced For Music Center

The week-end concerts at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., which started Saturday evening, Aug. 1 and will continue through Sunday afternoon Aug. 16 are being well attended this season in spite of gas rationing according to reports from the Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitzky is the director and conductor.

The concert scheduled for this Saturday evening will feature selections by Hanson, Mozart and Brahms. The concert Sunday afternoon will feature compositions by Copland, Franck and Tchaikovsky with Ruth Poselt as the soloist.

Student Orchestra Wins Approval at Tanglewood

Pittsfield, Mass
Berkshire Eagle
Aug. 3-42

Young Musicians Under Koussevitzky Received Enthusiastically by Week End Audiences of 3000 and 4000

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The first two of the six concerts scheduled for the final three weeks of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood were given yesterday afternoon and Saturday evening by an orchestra of more than 100 of the most advanced students of the school under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After the second concert yesterday afternoon there were time and opportunity to assay and estimate some features of "the Great Experiment." With our lives and all our activities affected and altered by present conditions, it took courage and undauntable will for Dr. Koussevitzky to carry on at Tanglewood this year. Probably the best and the immediate answer to our curiosity about the whole project was the remarkable enthusiasm of the near-4000 audience which was reluctant to leave after yesterday's final chord in the Cesar Franck symphony.

Many Walk to Concert

With favorable weather at both concerts, crowds of some 3000 Saturday evening, and surely more than a thousand more yesterday afternoon, started arriving early for both concerts. Predominantly youthful, colorful and buoyant in spirit and aspect, the music-lovers had converged on the Center grounds from all roads, in cars, on bikes, and plenty afoot. Offers of lifts by the few whose cars were not fully filled were even declined by some who figured they had ample time to walk the nautical mile from Lenox village down the easy slope to the concert grounds, so pleasant was the day, and, in so many cases, according to our eye, the companions.

There were less control and supervision of the mechanics of parking and ushering than in the previous big years, but withal there was no confusion, so evident was the cooperative spirit. The section in front of the boxes filled quickly, steadily and compactly, like an expert packer laying choice morsels in a package for a boy in the service. The reserved seats formed an enclosing border for the milling crowds who gradually untangled into the far-spreading rows of blue chairs.

The orchestra members, betraying their excitement and inexperience only by the eagerness of their expressions and possibly an overzealous instant of final intense blowing or bowing, spread out over the huge stage a full hundred strong, one-third, it seemed, young ladies.

The entrance of Koussevitzky was the signal for a demonstration as it had been on Saturday night for a greeting in which vociferous- [illegible] ed record and remembrance. The devotion of those on the Center school roster who were not in the orchestra, accounted possibly for the nucleus of the cordiality of the greeting, and for the applause and recalls after every performance, lacking in discrimination after a while. But the audience, in larger proportion of Berkshire than in previous summers, are acquainted with the vicissitudes and vagaries preceding this year's session, took a willing hand and audible voice in the show of approval and appreciation of the herculean efforts involved in preparing and presenting these concerts.

The presence of the students in the audience made itself heard, as it had been seen, immediately when the rousing performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" was sounded to begin both concerts. The strong, clear, able voices of the young choristers were everywhere in evidence, and in accord with the conductor's baton, as he faced the people and invited their participation, the national anthem became a moving episode in a program as unusual as it was stimulating.

Dedicating the program yesterday to the United States Treasury war bond campaign, Koussevitzky broke precedents right and left by beginning the afternoon with a couple of Sousa's rigorous marches: "Semper Fidelis" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever." The contrasts and variety with which he filled these familiar and stalwart tunes made them unbelievably stirring. Dr. Koussevitzky then introduced Roy Dickinson Welch, former professor of music at Smith in Northampton, later in a similar capacity at Princeton, now assistant to and, in this instance, substituting for Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury department. He acknowledged the Treasury's appreciation of the dedication with especially aptness and delivered a message commending the lofty purposes of this series as compatible with the national war effort.

Saturday Night Concert

The program Saturday night consisted of members familiar to Tanglewood audiences, chosen from the best-known of the Boston Symphony's repertory, but to the student members of the Center's orchestra much of it probably was first acquaintance. What Koussevitzky had achieved, therefore, was doubly impressve. Ths was one of the very rare instances where a conductor of lofty eminence had worked and trained an assemblage of inexperienced orchestral players. At the first impressive bars of the introduction of the Haydn G Major symphony, No. 88, what he had accomplished became evident. Not merely precision, but an understanding expressed by taste and finesse, a performance of zestful vigor and tender, graceful molding; an orchestra of extraordinary alertness, intent on doing its best, even to the swift vibrato by the double-bass section; jumping the gun in their eagerness; restraining themselves in piano passages to near-vanishment; but releasing a full-throated vivid tone on demand.

The Haydn was a wise choice to introduce the orchestra; its beauties become so gratefully noticeable with even less preparation. The 'cello section in the Largo made their instruments sing with unsurpassed refinement and unity. The "Leonore" overture, No. 3, of Beethoven remained on the same high level of distinction. After intermission came the fifth symphony of the man-of-the-hour musically, Dimitri Shostakovitch. This was presented at Tanglewood one year ago, lacking one day, by the Boston Orchestra. Its acceptance by an increasing circle of music-lovers accounts in a measure for the exciting anticipation with which performances, the first to concert audiences in America (at Tanglewood on Friday the 14th and Sunday the 16th) are awaited.

To an orchestra of Saturday night's calibre, individually able but collectively inexperienced, such a symphony, as the fifth, presents both extra difficulties and several compensating advantages. Demands for sustained passages, especially in the higher registers of the violins, as well as in the whole orchestra, require mature and canny craftsmanship. Passages of intricate brilliance and knotty technique are snaps for such a band. The tremendous contrasts, such as the calm following the all-out bombardment in the last movement, come off beautifully. May we never need a more vigorous and capable corps of percussion players.

The huge orchestra required by Shostakovitch makes some of the parts indistinguishable when the stew is at its most turbulent boiling point, whereas when he makes use of more meagre and thus more transuadent combinations, the performers are in unprotected full view. They withstood the ordeal of the spot-light with entire competence.

Ruth Posselt

Ruth Posselt of Cambridge was the soloist in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto yesterday afternoon, and she won a magnificent ovation. The audience, recalling her splendid performance of the new Barber concerto last year, was glad to hear her in an established work. She played with immaculate technic, full and beautiful tone, and an exemplary sense of style and poise. Her measured phrasing made everything crystal clear, and over the admirably controlled accompaniment of Koussavitzky's orchestra she dominated without excess of force nor undue rhythmic accentuation. She was recalled time after time.

The Franck Climax

The concert came to a close with the Franck symphony. That the orchestra executed the demands of its famous leader was evident; whether he was justified in calling on them for such violent contrasts in Franck is a debatable matter. Between the seismic disturbances and the weak piano passages was an awfully wide expanse, wider than would be tolerated in a championship match, but probably permissible under the prevailing ground rules. The spirit of the performance was mighty thrilling, and whets the interest to hear the programs of the coming two week ends.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Student Orchestra Wins Praise

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire Music Centre. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and perhaps 4,000 persons turned out for the Sunday concert.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University music department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1942

ENLISTING the services of Oscar Levant and Jane Froman, with Alexander Smallens conducting, the Lewisohn Stadium concerts will give its annual George Gershwin program tomorrow night. The concluding program of the Stadium's silver jubilee season of concerts takes place Tuesday.

Complete programs for the current week in New York and for the concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in the Berkshires follow:

AT TANGLEWOOD

Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky

Today, 3 P. M.

Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano

Concerto Grosso .....Martinu
Concertpiece for piano, Op. 79...Weber
Symphony, No. 4.....Tchaikovsky

Thursday, 8:30 P. M.

The Merry Wives of Windsor, opera by Nicolai, will be sung in English.

De Bellis

Harriet Henders sings Tuesday in Havdn's "Creation."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1942

Two Programs Are Performed In Berkshires

5,900 Attend First Public Offerings at Tanglewood; $3,000 War Bonds Sold

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—Scoring a remarkable artistic and popular success, the Berkshire Music Center's Student Orchestra gave its first two public performances under Serge Koussevitzky's direction last night and this afteroon in the Tanglewood Music Shed. Saturday's program offered Haydn's 88th Symphony in G major, Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and Dmitri Shostakovitch's work played in the Center's first festival week end.

This afternoon two of Sousa's best known marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever," provided a stirring preface for two familiar romantic works, Tchaikovsky's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist and Cèsar Franck's Symphony. Saturday's attendance was 2,600, today's was estimated at 3,300—a good figure in view of current transport restrictions and the fact that the orchestra's merits were not yet known.

Today's concert was dedicated to the Treasury's War Stamp and Bond campaign, and girls living in this area competed to sell the greatest number of stamps.

Roy Dickinson Welch, professor of music at Princeton University, consulting expert for the Treasury, made a short address. Once the concepts upon which our government is based are attacked, he said, and the foundations threatened, the whole structure is shaken. It was because Dr. Koussevitzky and his associates realize this so sharply that today's concert was dedicated to one of the government's major efforts to keep this structure intact, he said. The sale of bonds and stamps was over $3,000.

Half of Players Women

The orchestra is composed of graduate students and young professional musicians. Nearly one-half of its more than 100 members are women. It presented a youthful appearance to the eye; it also gave an impression of youth to the ear in the infectious spirit, the intentness and enthusiasm of its playing. With this élan and momentum, a lack of polish could readily have been condoned, bu there was no need of making allowances on this account.

The prevailing standard of individual performances was high; some of the young musicians displayed a particularly exceptional talent which foreshadowed a distinguished career as first-desk members of our major professional orchestras. This is not, however, merely a group of talented young players. It is a fine, sensitive and well integrated orchestra, and for this one must undoubtedly thank the guidance and inspiration of Dr. Koussevitzky as well as the receptivity of the musicians.

Both concerts as a whole deserved high praise, but the performance of the exacting Shoetakovitch score was a particularly memorqable achievement. There was rich sonority, yith entire transparency of medium, vividness of color and finesse of shading, and notable projection of the various tonal perspectives which mark this score. One could also laud the balance and proportion between the various choirs, the unity and precision of the playing and the persuasive realization of the emotions of this notable work.

From Haydn to Sousa

Only one or two minor slips were perceptible in the two performances. Points where one might dissent from a particular reading were those of interretative conception rather than of execution. For the Haydn Symphony, for instance, while the general medium was laudably clear, the fortes were almost too massive and sometimes too underscored; the Franckian interpretation went to a certain excess in the matter of nuances of rhythm and pace. But this was not a question of the actual playing.

The Beethoven overture was unusually; likewise, the Sousa marches, in which a Tanglewood record for decibels must have been achieved. The accompaniment to the Tchaikovsky concerto was laudable for its expert co-ordination and judiciously wrought balance of volume with the playing of the soloist. Miss Posselt, in her turn, merited admiration for her technical skill, consistently meritorious quality of tone and interpretative taste and musicianship. The performance as a whole challenged favorable comparison with the playing of a first class metropolitan orchestra in its best form.

A chamber-music program was played at Tanglewood tonight. The next orchestral concerts will be held next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Meanwhile, next Friday night, the Center's opera department will give Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the Center's opera house.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1942

3,000 Sunday Crowd At Berkshire Concert

LENOX — An audience of 3000 persons attended Sunday the second of six symphony concerts by the student orchestra of 104 pieces from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music center. A portion of the rear section of seats back of the boxes was opened for the throng, which was considerably larger than for the initial concert Saturday night.

Although the Berkshire Street Railway company provided extra bus service it was little patronized because most of the festival attendants used their own cars.

OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

AUG 3 [illegible]

Second Koussevitzky Concert 'Superlative'

By John Selby

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest youth orchestras ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated four thousand persons assembled in the famous music shed and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 3 [illegible]

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT BRINGS 3000 PATRONS

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 3—An audience of fully 3000 persons attended yesterday the second of six symphony concerts by the student orchestra of 104 pieces from Dr Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music center. A portion of the rear section of seats back of the boxes was opened for the throng, which was considerably larger than for the initial concret last night.

Although the Berkshire Street Railway company provided extra bus service it was little patronized because most of the festival attendants used their own cars. Supt Thomas E. MacDonald said tonight that 50 went from Pittsfield today in two extra busses and only 25 last night. Four extras from south Berkshire arrived at the Curtis hotel, Lenox, last night in plenty of time to get to Tanglewood, but the four carried only 12 passengers.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 3 - 1942

YOUTH ORCHESTRA REVEALS ABILITY

Group Led by Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Proves It's One of Finest in U. S.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Centre spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

Marches On Program

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tireless, devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

Concerto is Real Test

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

106

One-Man Music Festival Is Commended 'Superlative'

By John Selby

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest youth orchestras ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

Four Thousand Applaud

As a result an estimated four thousand persons assembled in the famous music shed and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

No Tricks to It

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1942

Young Players' Music Cheered At Tanglewood

Student Orchestra, Formed Month Ago, One of Best of Kind, Is Consensus

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result, an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautiful balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tireless devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war saving stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the treasury department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywaggons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST-JOURNAL

AUG 3 1942

KOUSSEVITSKY FOR THE DEFENSE

Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, presented in this country a week ago Sunday for the first time, received on the whole an unfavorable reception from the music critics. Fairly representative of the adverse criticism—some critics praised it warmly—is the review written by Olin Downes, distinguished critic of the New York Times.

"This symphony," he wrote, "is far from a work of sustained greatness, either of ideas, workmanship or taste. That it has its great movements is unarguable. * * * But much of the score is windy, inflated, put together, in places, with a crudeness which is no help at all to material that is often thin, commonplace in its nature and too long drawn out. Nor do the presence of certain tricks, perfectly obvious tricks, which are derivations and imitations, put a better face on the matter."

However, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, comes to the defense of his Russian colleague with the assertion that his symphony is the work "of a genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven." He thinks that the critics who today reject the work will some day be sorry for what they wrote. That is very possible. Richard Wagner's first works were condemned by almost every critic in Germany. But when Dr. Koussevitsky compares Shostakovich with Beethoven he is going pretty far.

One might also ask the distinguished Bostonian conductor whether the "appeal to the masses" is in any way determinative of the real value of a composition and of a composer's genius. If both these things be so, then George M. Cohan is head and shoulders above even Beethoven, for old Ludwig's work does not appeal to the masses. One may suspect that kinship of blood and patriotism have somewhat influenced Dr. Koussevitsky's defense of the Soviet composer, whose genius, however, cannot be denied in view of the distinguished work he has already done.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky One-Man Music Festival Thrills Huge Throng

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitsky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitsky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

Program.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschaikovsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

Concerto Is Test.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky Concerto. The soloist had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on August 14, and concerts the next two days.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

AUG 3 - 1942

Soviet Opera Held Work of Rare Genius

Shostakovich Has No Peer Since Beethoven, Says Koussevitsky

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shortakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Kousselvitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Target of Critics

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion" and was "anti-climactic." Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Having a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

Enthusiastic Praise

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greaest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Dr. Koussevitsky will give the first American concert performance of the work here August 14 for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center will play.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

AUG 3 - 1942

Haywagons Aid in Transporting 4,000 to Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—Ir haywagon, by bicycles, truck shared cars and afoot came 4,00(music lovers to hear the second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festical at Tankle-wood this afternoon featuring one of the finest 'youth' orchestras ever assembled.

The haywagons were stationed a the busline in Lenox by the War Stamp sales committee to add one more means of transportation to the concert grounds which were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps.

Every ticket purchaser was en titled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Savings Stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch from the Treasry Department in Washington made a bond appea from the stage.

Many people jogged to the concert gates picnic-style this afternoon after last night's concert spread word of the enthusiasm with which the opening audience received the playing of the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center.

The program began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a Franck symhony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully baalnced clear-toned and accurate musical instru

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 3 - 1942

Koussevitzky Youth Group Is Acclaimed by 4000

By JOHN SELBY

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (A. P.).—The second concert of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Mr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Centre spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

4000 ATTEND MATINEE

As a result an estimated 4000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

MUSICIANSHIP UNUSUAL

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate.

The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

SELL WAR STAMPS

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Savings Stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot and in shared cars.

HAYWAGONS ALSO USED

Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on Aug. 14, and concerts the next two days.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 1 1942

Koussevitzky Enthusiastic Over Shostakovitch Seventh

Predicts Controversial Work Will Be Recognized as Great Symphony

By a Staff Reporter

TANGLEWOOD. — Acclaiming Dmitri Shostakovitch as "the greatest master of musical material" and the possessor of "the most tremendous appeal to the masses" of any composer since Beethoven, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, in an interview today flayed the judgment of American music critics who had found considerable fault with Shostakovitch's widely-discussed new Seventh Symphony.

The symphony will be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 14, as part of the concert for the benefit of Russian war relief.

Critics based their opinions of the Seventh, which was written largely in Leningrad while the city was under siege by the Nazis, on the recent radio performance. Despite selective approbation by some most critics characterized parts of it variously as "banal," "program music," "uneven," "lacking proportion," anti-climactic, containing "tricks," and comparable in its first movement to Ravel's "Bolero," which was described in this direct connection as a "bore" when heard for the third time.

To such remarks, and to the even more damning criticism that the Shostakovitch Seventh "will in due course pass, and be remembered much less than the events that gave rise to it,"—Dr. Koussevitzky waved an equally damning and passionate hand of refutation. Simply and sincerely, this work is to him one of the great symphonies of the world, and will come to be recognized as such.

Predicting forcefully that "the musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will in the nearest future strongly regret what they have said," the conductor declared that "to make such criticisms of the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but several—in fact, many—times. Therefore, any definitive criticism of a work like the Seventh Symphony is a very dangerous thing . . . they will regret it, I know, just as many critics in the past have regretted what they said about Brahms and many others."

Recalls "Eroica" Criticisms

Emphasizing this point, Dr. Koussevitzky told his interviewer that he had had the opportunity of reading, in a collection owned by a friend, the criticisms written about Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony at the time it was first performed.

"Here is what they said," he continued with an almost malicious gleam in his eyes: "The music is absolutely banal, not original, stolen from Haydn for the most part, awfully long, dull, poorly modulated, particularly banal in its melodic line."

"Well," the conductor pointed out smilingly, "today this symphony is admitted by all critics and musicians to be one of the greatest symphonies existing in musical literature."

"And it seems to me," he declared, "that the critics of today made just the same mistake about Shostakovitch, because my deepest feeling is that there has never been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses.

"Banal? They mistake popularity for banality! Program music? The 'Eroica' is program music! Berlioz's greatest music is program music. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven is program music, and the Pastoral, one of the greatest pieces of program music, is also one of the greatest pieces of music of all time."

Rising and pacing the floor as his emotion for the Russian composer's music broke forth, Dr. Koussevitzky spoke glowingly:

"No one since Beethoven has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material, that Shostakovitch has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth, he knows everything he wants, he is the boss of what he desires to do. He has melody without end. His language is as rich as the world. His emotion is absolutely universal.

"His latest work is as great as the greatest work he has given us. The First, the Fifth and the Seventh are each a world of beauty and emotion."

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 2 - 1942

Music World

By E. S. Van Olinda

The Opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will present two performances of Nicholai's amusing and fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in English, in the Theatre Concert hall at Tanglewood on Friday evening, August 7, and Thursday evening, August 13.

This classic setting of Shakespeare's immortal play, which enjoyed immense popularity for nearly a century, has of recent years been somewhat neglected, though the overture remained a standard feature of the concert repertoire of all orchestras.

The entire personnel of the Tanglewood forces, including the orchestra and the chorus, are cooperating with Opera department in this production. Two complete casts of principals have been chosen from among the finest young voices heard in auditions throughout this country. Special sets, as well as a new English translation, will be among the features to be presented.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky announces several changes in the program announced for the second and third series of symphony concerts to be given at Tanglewood. The revised programs are:

SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 8

Hanson ..... Symphony No. 3
Mozart—Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat (K. No. 365)
Soloists: Luboshutz and Nemenoff
Brahms—Symphony No. 4 in E-minor, Op. 98

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 9

Handel ..... Concerto Grosso
Martinu ..... Concerto Grosso
Tchaikovsky ..... Symphony No. 4

SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 15

Bach ..... Magnificat in D
Beethoven—Symphony No. 9 in D-minor, Op. 125

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 16

Copland ..... Quiet City
Shostakovitch ..... Smyphony No. 7

A gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief will be held on August 14, beginning at 5 o'clock. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be "on parade" and at the Manifestation, several prominent guests will speak. At the concert that evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will lead his orchestra of 105 talented advanced students at Tanglewood in the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the controversial Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Several outstanding soloists will take part in a spe

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 3 - 1942

121

Student Orchestra Draws 4,000 at Second Concert

Koussevitzky's Musicians at Tanglewood Wildly Cheered as They Prove Excellence

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighborhood communities today.

4,000 Attend Concert

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tschakowsky's violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago, these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced, clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

No Tricks in Achievement

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof of real accomplishment.

Bond Appeal Made

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Savings Stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Bond Appeal Made

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox. Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on August 14th, and concerts the next two days.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1942

WILL PERFORM SHOSTAKOVITCH AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky to Give Symphony Concert Debut at Benefit

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 4—Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, Inc., will be chairman of the gala benefit at Tunglewood on Aug. 14 for Russian war relief. Mr. Carter is a summer resident of Lee.

Cosponsor of the benefit will be the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center will join in giving the extensive program which will start at 5 p. m.

Seventh Symphony

One of the features of the day will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman for the occasion, and the honorary vice-president will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robbinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Members of the general committee include Hugh Cabot of Boston, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the ticket committee.

Mrs. Johnson is chairman of the box committee, and serving with her are Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mable Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs. Crane, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox, Mrs. Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield and Mrs. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 3 - 1942

4000 Cheer Tanglewood Orchestra

Second Performance By Young Musicians Under Serge Koussevitzky at Lenox Praised

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzy's one-man music festival at Tanglewood this afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert last night indicated this was the case. And word o fthe superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4000 persons assembled in the famous music shed this afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual, to say the least. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

Meet Real Test.

The real test today came in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times, but this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50 cent war saving stamp. and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the Treasury Department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Today's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with haywagons at the busline in Lenox Many people jogged up to the gates picnic-style.

The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The last week will include a Russian benefit on August 14, and concerts the next two days.

MUSIC Tanglewood Opens; Quartet Continues

Carl E. Lindstrom Hartford Times
Aug. 2 - 42 Conn.

Lenox, Mass.—In the early 1920's a series of orchestral concerts in Paris, because of the fact that they were initiated by and were under the sole sponsorship of the conductor, became known as the Concerts Koussevitzky. There was probably no other name for the performances which the great Russian leader undertook in his early days when he engaged a river boat and transported his players up and down the Volga bringing to the people music of a kind that they had never before heard.

For the series of six concerts at Tanglewood, the first two of which were given Saturday night and Sunday afternoon there could be no more suitable description than to revive the term Koussevitsky Concerts.

In spite of the fact that the familiar banner announcing the "Berkshire Symphony Festival" is stretched across the main street of Lenox and while the familiar Tanglewood pavilion has been reopened, this is not the Berkshire Festival in any sense of the word.

An audience of about 2,500 was on hand for the opening. The Pittsfield Legionnaires were not there to direct traffic; there wasn't traffic enough for them. There were no special buses for the reason that they were neither allowable nor needed. The maroon markers of Massachusetts were so universal that your observer felt guilty with his Connecticut plates. The refreshment stand was not there because, so they say, bottled sodas were not to be had.

* * *

Perhaps all this may seem to have very little to do with music, but music, we learn, is sensitive to its circumstances and there were ghostly suggestions all around of the brave festival days that had unmistakeably come to an end. All the cheering and bravo-ing of the young students and their cohorts sounded as though intended to make Koussevitzky feel good about it all but it was really quite sad because, you felt, this Russian who would not surrender seemed to fancy himself having his festival just the same. Besides there was the mourning band on the sleeve of his white jacket for Mme. Koussevitzky who died during the winter.

If it is possible to shade out the effulgence of gladsome memory and arrive at an objective estimate this Berkshire Music Center orchestra is a splendid company of young musicians. They far outshine any body of players within that age group that your reviewer has ever heard.

The string section is superb, particularly the first violins which have the sweep and acuity which one associates with the Boston Symphony. The brass section gave a rather uneven performance. The horns faltered occasionally but redeemed themselves in the extremely difficult requirements of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

This score was carefully studied out and was unfolded with confidence and a thorough appreciation of its content. It was received with enthusiasm. In some ways it is more deserving of the title "Leningrad Symphony" than the much-publicized Seventh and it would probably be more readily comprehended in that role by the general run of symphony audiences. It is full of the tramp of marching feet and the din of mechanized warfare. The slow movement is infinitely more evocative than the corresponding mood of its younger brother.

Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3 was given a carefully wrought and meaningful interpretation. Haydn's G major Symphony, No. 88, is a Koussevitzky favorite and in his charming interpretation everybody's favorite.

* * *

On Sunday afternoon Tanglewood added to its oft-told tales with Franck's D minor Symphony, Tschaikowsky's Violin Concerto from the hands of Ruth Posselt and the two Sousa immortals, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." This program was dedicated to the U. S. Treasury Department's War Bond campaign, Roy Dickinson Welch, consulting expert to the department, speaking in behalf of Secretary Morgenthau.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1942

KOUSSEVITZKY'S STUDENTS MAKE GOOD IMPRESSION

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—Word of the excellence of Serge Koussevitzky's student orchestra continued to spread today through the fashionable neighboring communities following the second concert of his one-man music festival Monday.

The first concert was given Saturday night. The 105 young musicians were recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky' Berkshire music center.

An estimated 4000 persons assembled in the famous music shed Sunday afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud.

The program itself broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a performance of the Franck Symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was termed by critics unusual, to say the least.

Sunday's audience arived by bicycle, trucks, afoot and in shared cars. The second series of concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

In a week-end interview Dr. Koussevitzky said that when some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven."

The conductor took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony, written during the siege of Leningrad.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

AUG 3 - 1942

4,000 Cheer Music Of Youth Group

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanklewood Sunday afternoon demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert Saturday indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Doctor Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities.

As a result, an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed Sunday afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

BOTH before and after the concert the grounds of Tanglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent war savings stamp, and Roy Dickenson Welch, from the treasury department, Washington, made a bond appeal from the stage.

Sunday's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot, and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in charge of the stamp and bond sale, added one more means of transportation by stationing men with hay wagons at the busline in Lenox.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1942

Tanglewood Draws 4000 To Concert

Music Lovers Hike, Bicycle, Share Cars and Even Hayrack to Lenox. Program by Koussevitsky's Student Orchestra

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4.—AP—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickinson Welch, former head of the Princeton university music department, speaking for the treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tschaikovsky Violin Concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra; then gave a tonally rich performance of the familiar Franck Symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

AUG 3 - 1942

Conductor Versus Critics

It is refreshing to see the way Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has rushed to the rescue of Dmitri Shostakovich, whose Seventh Symphony recently was manhandled by a good many of the musical critics.

All too often conductors are regarded as being about as impersonal as a bass fiddle, just a part of the mechanics of the orchestra. Critics sit and listen and then solemnly "evaluate" the work they have heard. It never apparently occurs to them or to the public that the conductor may have an opinion that is worth while.

Toscanini conducted the Shostakovich work at its premiere; Koussevitzky will conduct it at its first American concert performance on August 14. Now both Toscanini and Koussevitzky are considered pretty good conductors. It is obvious that they wouldn't be where they are if they didn't know a good deal about music. It also should be obvious that they wouldn't waste their time or that of their orchestras on music that they consider "banal" or "uneven," as the critics described the Shostakovich work.

Maybe Koussevitzky is wrong. Nevertheless, it is pleasant to hear him speak out. There are, no doubt, a good many timid souls, and perhaps even a few timid critics, who will alter their opinions now that Koussevitzky has boldly expressed his appreciation of the composition of his fellow-Russian, without any ifs and buts.

FORT WORTH, TEX.
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1942

Student Orchestra Is Declared 'Finest'

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP). — The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" ever assembled in this country.

The first concert Saturday night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 musicians, recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities Sunday.

As a result, an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed Sunday afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 3 - 1942

Tanglewood Opening Is Brilliant

Koussevitzky Leads Orchestra in Two Weekend Programs

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, having scored a sensational success at its opening concert Saturday night, was heard Sunday afternoon in the second program of the series it is presenting in Tanglewood under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Center, Inc. Today's concert, which was heard by 3,300 persons, was dedicated to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign.

Since Henry Morgenthau jr. Secretary of the Treasury, was not able to accept Dr. Koussevitzky's invitation to appear as speaker at the event, his place was filled by Roy Dickinson Welch, consulting expert of the Treasury Department and professor of music at Princeton University, who made a brief address stressing the importance of the concerts at this time.

"It is a notable event, which we share here," Mr. Welch declared, "and one that may well become symbolic. Great difficulties have ben overcome to make it possible for us to meet here, and behind all else has been a persistent, motivating faith, a faith in art and in what is commonly called 'the American way.' It is not a secret to any of us that this faith has been personified by Dr. Koussevitsky."

Mr. Welch went on to say that it as obvious that the people of this country wished to preserve the concepts of government which rest upon the consent and cooperation of the governed, and that it was because Dr. Koussevitzky and his co-workers realized this fact sharply, that today's concert was dedicated to one of the major efforts of the government "to preserve our foundations intact."

Throughout the afternoon 40 girls and boys from the Berkshire Hills sold war stamps, while war bonds were placed on sale in three booths at the music shed.

The concert began with rousing performances of two Sousa marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." The rest of the program was devoted to Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the Franck Symphony.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
COURIER
8/6/42

YOUTHS WIN PRAISE

Koussevitzky Molds Young Musicians Into Fine Orchestra

The Tanglewood Festival of Music opened last week-end under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Music Center orchestra of students, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, drew extravagant praise from music critics for their first performanles. Trained as a unit for less than a month by the famous conductor who is giving both time and financial support to the foundation for the encouragement of young musicians, the orchestra executed programs on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon with a smoothness and brilliance which would have done credit to one of the country's best-known units. Critics had no hesitation in describing the musical organization as one of the best in the nation.

Handicapped by gas and tire rationing, music lovers did not turn out in the large numbers that attended last year's concerts. The Saturday performance attracted about 3000 and Sunday's audience was more nearly 4000. Enthusiasts hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood and there were none of the usual difficulties of parking.

Sunday's program opened with a moving rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and continued with a thumping good performance of two Sousa marches. Ruth Posselt, noted violinist, who had appeared last year with Dr. Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra, was soloist in the Tschaikovsky concerto, and her excellent playing won her repeated recalls. The concert closed with a tonally rich performance of the familiar D minor Franck symphony. Between rounds of applause, the audiance bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps, for which the concert was a benefit.

Concerts will be given on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons of the next two week-ends and a special gala benefit for Russian War Relief is planned for Friday, August 14, from 5:00 p. m.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 6 - 1942

Lenox

Final Music Forum Held

Dr. Koussevitzky Among Four Speakers

LENOX—The final music forum of the season was held at Sedgwick Hall last evening.

The topic was, "What About Government Support of Music." The speakers were Stanley Chapple, Gregor Piatigorsky and Richard Burgin members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the center. Dr. Koussevitzky stated that, although he is a democrat from "head to foot," he believes that a democracy has never done anything for music, and that there is something lacking in the countries that have this form of government. He also said "The supporters of music associations in this country have done much good, but their time is finished, the masses of the people must do the work. This can be done by educating the people. No one can exist without art." He then discussed music in Russia.

The other speakers generally agreed that the government must make music available to the people, since it has made available every other art.

Mr. Chapple declared that the desire for music must come from the people and that they do not need persuading fully to appreciate it. He also said that the musician, so far, has not done much to push music ahead. He believes that if the government does give help, it must be left entirely to local units as to how such support should be administered.

Mr. Piatorgorsky asserted that since every time the government was in trouble it needed the people it follows that when the people are in trouble or need, the government must help them. He stated that there was no way out, the government must help the musician and also the composer. He emphatically stated that music can never become a good business.

Mr.Burgin related the attitudes of various forms of government to music and said that he thought each country had a certain underlying idolatry. He also believes in the theory of help for those who make music as well as spread it. Mr. Burgin spoke of the opportunities in this country. Said he, "This certainly is a government of the people, by the people and for the people."

The moderator of all forums was Aaron Copland, composer, whose composition, "Quiet City," will be played at the Sunday afternoon concert.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 4 - 1942

Russian Relief To Benefit From Tanglewood Concert

Edward C. Carter, Summer Resident Of Lee, Chairman—Saltonstall, Honorary Chairman

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief Inc., will be chairman of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 14 for Russian war relief. Mr. Carter is a summer resident of Lee.

Co-sponsor of the benefit will be the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center will join in giving the extensive program to start at 5 PM. One of the features of the day will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Gov. ~~Leverett Sa~~ltonstall is honorary chairman for the occasion while honorary vice-chairmen will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Members of the general committee include Hugh Cabot of Boston, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams College, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the ticket committee.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
AUG 5 - 1942

Plans Progressing for Russian Relief Pop Concert

LOWELL—With the services of the 80-piece Boston Symphony Pop Concert orchestra ~~already~~ assured plans are progressing for the pop concert to be given in this city at the Lowell Memorial Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16 at 2.30 o'clock for the benefit of the Russian relief fund. For weeks, an active committee representing a distinct cross-section of the local population has been at work laying plans for this affair and indications point to a huge success. Added to the receipts of the recent tag day, the total sum raised should amount to a good figure.

For the information of persons interested in reserving tickets for this affair, the committee in charge today announces that tickets are available at the studio of Julius Woessner, East Merrimack street, Dial 2-3952; at the Lowell Commercial college, Central street, dial 5000; at the International Institute, Palmer street, dial 9031. Phone calls for reservations at any of these places will be given prompt attention. Mrs. George Upton of East Chelmsford, telephone 2-4901 has charge of the patrons and patronesses and will be pleased to hear of any one wishing to be added to her ever increasing list. Miss Eleanor Trull has assumed charge of publicity.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
AUG 6 - 1942

Tanglewood Concerts For This Week-end

Lenox, Aug. 6.—The second series of symphony concerts under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be given Saturday evening, when he famous duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will play with the orchestra the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in E flat. Also on the program will be Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Sunday afternoon's program under Dr. Koussevitzky will incude the Handel Concerto Grosso, the Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, first played by the Boston Symphony orchestra at its concerts last winter, and the Tschaikovsky Fourth.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 4 - 1942

Lenox Will Paint Portrait of Koussevitzky

Work of Bernard I. Green For Russian Relief

LENOX—Bernard I. Green, artist and art director at Thomas Jefferson High School, New York, is to paint a portrait of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Berk~~shire Music Center. Proceeds from its sale will be donated to Russian relief.

Mr. Green, who is spending the summer here with his wife, has painted many persons, including Supreme Justice Ferdinand Pecora of New York; the poet, Elias Lieberman, who wrote "I Am an American"; and the late Rev. Dr. Berman Revel, president of Yeshiva College. His works have been hung in numerous museums and were exhibited at the Panama Exposition and the New York World's Fair. Versatile in technique, he can paint in the classic, romantic and impressionistic manner.

He once was director of art at Hoblein Art School, New York. Mrs. Green, a pianist and graduate of Juilliard School of Music, is taking courses at the Music Center.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES
AUG 4 - 1942

...sician before using.

Tanglewood Juniors Praised For Music

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4 (AP)—The talk today in this musically discriminating neighborhood still concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their Sunday afternoon appearance in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire music center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

The word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sabbath concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood.

Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Roy Dickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton university of music department, speaking for the Treasury department in furtherance of stamp and bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in times of peril.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 4 - 1942

* * *

Tanglewood Concert Draws Enthusiastic Patronage

The talk today in Lenox, concerned Serge Koussevitzky and the noted conductor's student orchestra, which drew extravagant applause in concert about a month after being assembled.

Their appearance Sunday in the famous music shed at Tanglewood was only the second for the 105 young players whom Koussevitzky had chosen from his Berkshire Music Center. They had been introduced as a unit there the evening before.

Word of the youth orchestra's qualities spread and a large audience, perhaps 4,000 persons, turned out for the Sunday concert. Music lovers hiked, bicycled, car-shared and even hayracked to Tanglewood. Between their rounds of applause, they bought corsages and boutonnieres of War Stamps. Roy Rickenson Welch, former head of the Princeton University Music Department, speaking for the Treasury Department in furtherance of Stamp and Bond sales, expressed agreement with Koussevitzky's view that music and the other arts must be sustained in time of peril.

The young musicians broke no new ground with their program. They began with two Sousa marches; followed with the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, the soloist being Ruth Posselt, who had appeared with Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony Orchestra; then gave a tonally-rich performance of the Franck symphony.

They next will give concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Warmth and Vibrance Shown

Each of the works put forth was performed with electrifying enthusiasm, a positive grasp of style, and a control of tone and dynamics worthy of any major orchestra. The sounds produced were expert, capable of the finest gradations of light and shade, and of exceptional warmth and vibrance when at the full.

Moreover, the tone possessed an individual character all of its own, being singularly alive and sonorous. The phrasing was always meticulous, with the utmost attention to molding of outline and with attacks and releases admirably sharp and clean.

As for the interpretations, they were one and all on a par with the technical excellence of the performances. The blithe, happy spirit of the Haydn, the dramatic urge of the Beethoven overture were both fully captured. But it was in the reading of the Shostakovich Symphony that the orchestra made known its attainments most completely. Throughout its four difficult movements the orchestra played with an insight, wealth of color, and sensitive evocation of contrasted moods that proved almost unbelievable.

One hesitates to mention the few measures in the Haydn and Beethoven where the playing of the woodwinds and brasses was a bit rough, for they in no way interfered with the ultimate impression of the exceptional excellence of the students' endeavors. Dr. Koussevitzky may well be proud of them, and of his and of their triumph.

At today's concert Miss Posselt provided a musicianly, rich-toned account of the solo part of the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, and the orchestra, which lent her fine support, also gave a finely detailed performance of the Franck Symphony.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 3 -

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC IS HEARD BY 3,300

Koussevitzky Leads Berkshire Center Orchestra in the Second Concert of Series

WAR-BOND CAMPAIGN AIDED

Young Players Win Ovation—Ruth Posselt Violin Soloist in Tchaikovsky Concerto

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, having scored a sensational success at its opening concert last night, was heard this afternoon in the second program of the series it is presenting here in Tanglewood under the auspices of the Koussevitzky Music Center, Inc. Today's concert, which was heard by 3,300 persons, was dedicated to the United States Treasury War Bond Campaign.

Since Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, had not been able to accept Dr. Koussevitzky's invitation to appear as speaker at the event, his place was filled by Roy Dickinson Welch, consulting expert of the Treasury Department and professor of music at Princeton University, who made a brief address stressing the importance of the concerts at this time.

Throughout the afternoon forty girls and boys from the Berkshire Hills sold war stamps, while war bonds were placed on sale in three booths at the music shed. There also was a contest in which the sellers of war stamps vied to see who could dispose of the most, the winners to be given war bonds.

The concert began with rousing renditions of two Sousa marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "Stars and Stripes Forever," and the rest of the program was devoted to Tchaikovsky's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the Franck Symphony.

Group Is Highly Talented

The extraordinary demonstrations of approval which followed each of the works presented at both concerts were fully justified by the remarkable qualities of the performance. It was a foregone conclusion that Dr. Koussevitzky would not have given the series had he not been positive of the capabilities of the highly talented group of young men and women of this orchestra. But that in four weeks' time he had found it possible to bring the ensemble to the point of perfection evinced at these initial hearings proved uncanny and surprising.

When Dr. Koussevitzky came to the podium at the start of the first concert last night the entire audience rose to greet him with rounds of applause. The National Anthem was sung by the gathering in the full-throated manner with which it was voiced at today's concert, and then the conductor and his players launched into the Haydn symphony in G from the second Paris set.

Much had been anticipated, but the presentation of the work so far exceeded all normal expectations that at its close came a prolonged and tumultuous ovation, rarely equaled in the concert halls of the world. Similar outbursts of applause, shouting and roars of "Bravo" followed the Beethoven overture, "Leonore," No. 3, and the culminating Fifth symphony of Shostakovich.

Richly deserved, this sympathetic response must have rewarded the conductor and his musicians in no small degree for the hard work expended on the careful preparation of the offerings, a preparation which led to performances which made clear that Dr. Koussevitzky's genius as a teacher is on a par with his gifts as director.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 6 - 1942

Tanglewood Presents Opera Tomorrow

"The Merry Wives of Windsor," To Be Given by Students

"The Merry Wives of Windsor," will be given the first of two performances tomorrow evening at Tanglewood.

The opera department, under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, will present the second of two full-fledged performances in English of Nicolai's amusing opera in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood, Thursday evening, Aug. 13. The young singers, the pick of the country's "coming stars," were selected by Dr. Graf and his associate, Boris Goldovsky, of the New England Conservatory of Music in extensive auditions heard throughout the country.

The second series of symphony concerts under Dr. Serge Koussevitszky will be given Saturday evening, when the duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will play with the orchestra the Mozart concerto for two pianos in E-flat. Also on the program will be Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 and the Brahms fourth symphony.

Sunday afternoon's program under Dr. Koussevitzky will include the Handel Concerto Grosso the Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, first played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concerts last winter, and the Tchaikovsky fourth.

The final series of symphony concerts will be offered Saturday evening, Aug. 15, when the Bach Magnificat and the Beethoven ninth symphony will be performed with a student chorus. The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16, will be the Haydn Symphony No. 88 and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7, to be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere at the Russian war relief concert Friday, Aug. 14.

Olin Downes will give his final lecture in a series of four Saturday afternoon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1942

Benefit Concert

Tickets are on sale at Russian War Relief, 11 E. 35th St., for the benefit concert on Aug. 14 at Lenox, Mass., where Serge Koussevitsky will conduct Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony. Dorothy Maynor, colored contralto: Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist, will take part in a recital on the same program.

FREEPORT, N. Y.
NASSAU REVIEW STAR
AUG [illegible]

ding anniversary.

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hunt of Wyatt road, Garden City, have returned from Lenox, Mass., where they attended one of the concerts of the Berkshire music festival, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Their daughter, Miss Mary Elizabeth Hunt, is spending the summer at Camp Quannacut, Pine Bush.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 4 - 1942

Koussevitzky Calls For War Relief Benefit Workers

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has issued a call for a general meeting tomorrow afternoon at 4.30 at Tanglewood of those willing to work for the Russian War Relief benefit concert Aug. 14. The meeting will be in the chamber music hall. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak.

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER
AUG 4 - 1942

YOUTHS SCORE HIT IN LENOX CONCERT

Koussevitzky's One-Man Music Festival Shows Quality of Young Musicians

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP)— The second concert of Serge Koussevitzky's one-man music festival at Tanglewood yesterday demonstrated conclusively that the noted conductor's student orchestra was one of the finest "youth orchestras" to be assembled in this country.

The first concert Saturday night indicated this was the case. And word of the superlative playing by the 105 young musicians recruited from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center spread through the fashionable neighboring communities today.

As a result an estimated 4,000 persons assembled in the famous music shed Sunday afternoon and remained to cheer and applaud the interpretations in extravagant fashion.

No New Musical Ground.

The program broke no new musical ground. It began with two Sousa marches, followed by the Tchaikowsky violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and a tonally gorgeous performance of the familiar Franck symphony.

But the musicianship displayed by the youthful orchestra was unusual. Brought together about a month ago these student musicians had developed into a beautifully balanced clear-toned and accurate musical instrument.

There were no tricks involved in this achievement, no "national auditions" or anything like that. The requirements, as Dr. Koussevitzky demonstrated, consisted of good material to begin with, daily rehearsals and more, and an able, tirelessly devoted conductor, plus a measure of genius on the conductor's part.

The Real Test.

The real test Sunday came in the Tchaikowsky violin concerto. The soloist, Ruth Posselt, had appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times. But this was a new orchestra and the accompanying passages were both difficult and intricate. The fact that the student musicians cleared this hurdle cleanly and neatly was proof indeed of real accomplishment.

Both before and after the concert the grounds of Anglewood were thick with boys and girls selling corsages and boutonnieres of war stamps. Every ticket purchaser was entitled to exchange the stub of his ticket for a 50-cent War Savings Stamp. Roy Rickenson Welch, of the Treasury Department in Washington made a bond appeal from the stage.

Sunday's audience arrived by bicycle, truck, afoot and in shared cars. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, in cars will be dispersed so that each is at least 50 yards from its neighbor, and, unless the natural cover is extremely dense, also is camouflaged by a large fishnet into which branches have been woven.

This camouflage work—adopted to the needs of each unit and taught them by the engineers whose specialty it is—must be carried out to the most minute detail for full effectiveness.

Out in the field the men still must eat, sometimes they must cross a

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 7 - 1942

Russian Concert Tickets on Sale

At a meeting Wednesday afternoon in Stockbridge of the chairmen for the Russian War Relief Concert to be held on Friday, Aug. 14, between 5 and 11 p. m., Serge Koussevitzky made a very stirring appeal to those present.

One of the principal attractions of the concert will be the playing for the first time in the Western Hemisphere of the much discussed Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7. Koussevitzky has characterized this masterpiece as "the most magnificent and grandiose composition since the Beethoven 9th." Besides having the opportunity of hearing the famed symphony orchestra, the audience will be able to participate in other musical activities. Such eminent personalities as Dorothy Maynor, Albert Spaulding and Gregor Platigorsky will appear.

The committee is also hoping to have Dorothy Thompson, Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff, Vice-President Wallace speak during the intermission.

Tickets go on sale today at Steinert's, the Forbes & Wallace's information desk, the Carlisle Hardware Company's record department and at the Russian War Relief Society headquarters on Market Street.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
AUG 8 - 1942

Koussevitzky Keeps Berkshire Fete Alive

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky lifted his baton last week on the first of a series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Center, he not only was directing the 105-piece orchestra, but was "paying the piper" himself to the unmusical tune of perhaps $30,000.

The decision to spend that much of his own funds was made by Dr. Koussevitzky several months ago when the Boston Symphony trustees and the management of the Berkshire Music Festival called off the plans for the 1942 festival because of the difficulty of travel and an expected lack of patronage because of the war.

Declaring that "art must die last in a war" the Boston conductor agreed to underwrite the whole cost of whatever concerts he could give at the famous music center.

Last week's program was played by an orchestra which has rehearsed three hours daily—and sometimes longer—since July 5.

The music included Haydn's Symphony in G Minor, No. 88, the Third "Leonore" Overture of Beethoven, and Dimitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

SIX OTHER CONCERTS

The other six concerts, divided among three weekends, are musically of even interest, but patriotically the concert of Aug. 14 will be the climax.

This will be a performance of Shostakovitch's new seventh Symphony as part of a program for Russian relief, and it will be the first "face-to-face" performance of the work whose only previous American hearing was a radio broadcast with Arturo Toscanini conducting.

When some music critics panned the Seventh Symphony of Soviet Composer Dimitri Shostakovitch, they were critcising the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview recently in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

DREW COMMENT

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal", "uneven" and "program music". Others said it "contained trick"s, "lacked proportion", and was "anti-climactic". Many other critics, however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of refutation, Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticise the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovitch has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody wtihout end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 8 - 1942

Russian Relief To Benefit From Concert

The Russian War Relief Society will benefit from the gala concert being planned for Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, will direct the concert which will feature the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's "Seventh Symphony."

Three top ranking artists also will take part and will be the Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor; the cellist, Gregor Platigorsky, who is on the faculty at the Music Center, and the violinist, Albert Spalding, who lives in Great Barrington.

Students at the Music Center have volunteered their services and from 5 p. m. to 5:45 p. m. Tanglewood will demonstrate its activities. The student orchestra will be in the Shed, the chorus in the Red Barn, the opera department in the theater and the instrumental ensembles in the chamber music hall.

Picnic supper will be enjoyed from 7 to 8 p. m. when the concert will begin.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1942

Opera Tonight's Tanglewood Event

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, will present two full performances in English of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood this evening, with a cast of students.

These young singers, the pick of the country's "coming stars," were selected by Dr. Graf and his associate, Boris Goldovskys of the New England Conservatory of Music, in extensive auditions heard throughout the country. Another cast will give a second performance of the opera on Thursday, Aug. 13.

The second series of symphony concerts under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be given Saturday evening, when the duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will play with the orchestra the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat. Also on the program will be Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 and the Brahms Fourth Symphony.

Sunday afternoon's program under Dr. Koussevitzky will include the Handel Concerto Grosso, the Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, first played by the BostonSymphony Orchestra at its concerts last winter, and the Tchaikovsky Fourth.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 8 - 1942

Luboshutz and Nemenoff In Concert at Tanglewood

Duo-Piano Team To Play With Koussevitzky's Orchestra—Sanroma And Zighera Soloists Tomorrow

Pierre Luboshutz

Genia Nemenoff

Luboshutz and Nemenoff, outstanding two-piano team, will be heard with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Tanglewood Shed tonight at 8.30. This will be the third concert of six planned as part of the Festival of Music by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Mr. and Mrs. Luboshutz, who are spending the summer in West Stockbridge, will be heard in Mozart's concerto for two pianos in E flat. This will be their first professional appearance in the Berkshires although they are well known in this section. They have been heard in all principal cities of the country and have played with a number of orchestras, including the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky at Symphony Hall, Boston. Mr. Luboshutz played with Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra when it cruised the Volga River in Russia 25 years ago.

Also on tonight's program will be Howard Hanson's symphony No. 3 and the Brahms symphony No. 4 in E minor.

Tomorrow Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera will be soloists when the orchestra plays Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 4 in F minor. Also on the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso and Martinu's Concerto Grosso. Tomorrow's program will start at 3 PM

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 8 - 1942

OVER HALF BOXES SOLD FOR BENEFIT

Tanglewood Russian Relief Program Next Friday

More than half the boxes in the music shed at Tanglewood have been sold, it was announced today, for the Russian War Relief benefit program to be presented by the Koussevitzky Music foundation, sponsoring the Berkshire Music center, next Friday evening. Dr. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown and Washington, D. C., are among those who have reserved boxes.

The program will include the first concert performance in America of the Shostakovitch Seventh symphony; Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano whom Dr. Koussevitzky discovered at Tanglewood three years ago; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Music center student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 8 - 1942

Tanglewood To Present 3 Top Soloists

Lenox, Mass.—Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, will be heard Aug. 14 at the benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Maynor, soprano, was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1940. Mr. Piatigorsky, cellist, is on the faculty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington and is a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit, with Edward G. Carter, summer resident of Lee and national chairman of Russian War Relief Inc., as active chairman.

Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services. A full program starting at 5 p. m., has been planned. Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, chorus, opera department and instrumental ensembles.

From 6 o'clock to 7 will come the manifestation when, according to announcements "distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with this great occasion. The program constitutes a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom — the American way of life."

From 7 to 8 will come the lawn party. Those attending the benefit are asked to bring picnic suppers. The extensive Tanglewood lawns will be available.

The concert will be from 8 to 9:10 o'clock. A feature will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conductor. After a brief intermission, there will be the recital by the soloists.

OPERA BY NICOLAI HAILED AS TRIUMPH

1,000 See "Merry Wives of Windsor"

TO BE REPEATED

Cast Composed Principally of Music Center Students — Koussevitzky Supervises Performance

Making its first venture this season into the field of opera which has been given relatively greater importance by the withdrawal of the Boston Symphony orchestra from the concert schedule, the Berkshire Music center at Stockbridge last evening presented an English translation of Otto Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" before an audience of nearly 1,000 in the theater at Tanglewood.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Music center, supervised the opulent performance, one of two of the comic and fantastic Nicolai operas which are to be given, while Herbert Graf, head of the opera department at the center, was director of the production.

Audience and critics alike hailed the performance as a triumph from every standpoint—musical, dramatic, staging and costuming—and warm applause was given the performers, the conductor and Dr. Koussevitzky.

The cast, composed principally of students at the Berkshire Music center, supported a galaxy of guest artists who appeared in the stellar roles.

The women stars were Adelaide Abbot, soprano, taking the part of Mistress Ford, and Christine Johnson, contralto, as Mistress Page. Mack Harrell, baritone, a citizen of Windsor, is a Metropolitan opera singer, while Mario Lanza, as Fenton, had the principal tenor part.

Boris Goldovsky, who with Myron Ryan made the new English translation of the opera, conducted the orchestra. Stage settings by Mr. Graf were especially effective. Will Steiner designed the beautiful costumes. The opera is in three acts and seven scenes, with finely trained chorus and dancers. The second-act ballet was one of the best features of the performance, which will be repeated next Thursday at 8.30 o'clock.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 5 -

COMMITTEES NAMED FOR TANGLEWOOD FETE

Gov Leverett Saltonstall will be honorary chairman for the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood Friday, the 14th.

There will be a full program starting at 5 with Dr Serge Koussevitzky, students and faculty of the Berkshire Music center giving their services for the event. A feature of the day will be the first concert performance of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony in the western hemisphere. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct.

Edward C. Carter, long active in the Institute for Pacific Relations and chairman of national Russian War Relief, inc., will be the active chairman for the benefit. Honorary vice-chairman will be Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Mrs Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee and serving with her are Mrs Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, Mrs Sidney Howard of Tyringham, Mr and Mrs George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mrs L. Cushing Goodhue, Mrs Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox, Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Miss Robinson Smith will serve as chairman of the general ticket committee.

Hugh Cabot of Boston and Dr James Phinney Baxter, president of Williams college, are included on the general committee.

faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5 p. m. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists.

Reservations for tickets and boxes may be made by writing directly to Tanglewood, Lenox.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 7 - 1942

Red Benefit Planned At Tanglewood

Dorothy Maynor Among Artists Scheduled to Appear on Koussevitzky Program

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6.—(Special)—Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will he heard at the gala benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief, Friday, August 14, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Maynor, Negro soprano, was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1940 and has skyrocket to fame since. Mr. Piatigorsky, 'cellist, is on the faculty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington and is a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Governor Leverett Saltonstall, of Massachusetts, is honorary chairman of the benefit, while Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee, and national chairman of Russian War Relief, Inc., is the active chairman.

Volunteer Services.

Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. A full program starting at 5 p. m., has been planned. Until 5:45, Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, the chorus, the opera department, and instrumental ensembles.

From 6 to 7 will come the manifestation at which time, according to the announcements, "distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with this great occasion. The program constitutes a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom, the American way of life."

From 7 to 8 will come the lawn party. It is the hope of the committee that those attending the benefit will bring their picnic suppers to eat on the extensive Tanglewood lawns. The gala concert will follow from 8 to 9:10. A feature will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. After a brief intermission there will be the recital by Miss Maynor, Mr. Piatigorsky and Mr Spalding.

Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge is chairman of the box committee, and serving with her are Mrs. Albert Spaulding, Miss Mabel Choate of of Tyringham, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue, of Boston.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is chairman of the general ticket committee. As president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, she is also an honorary vice-chairman with Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets, moderately priced, and boxes may be reserved by writing directly to Tanglewood at Lenox.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 8 - 1942

MANY ATTEND OPENING AT MUSIC CENTER

Splendid Voices Heard in "Merry Wives of Windsor" at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 7—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center opened its "season" here tonight before an audience almost as large as the one which thronged the theater at Tanglewood last year when Mozart's "Cossi Fan Tutti" demonstrated what a few weeks of summer work under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera Company can do for young and extremely capable artists.

Sung in English

Tonight's offering was Nicolais "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and happily was sung in English, as any Shakspere play should be sung.

It was a delightful performance throughout, the fresh young voices ringing to the old but seldom heard comedy something that it would be hard for more experienced singers to deliver. Voices of Metropolitan caliber were notable by their large number. While it is dangerous to pick up a young singer and prophecy future greatness, it seems probable that several of those heard tonight will be landbys of future world opera stages. Mario Lanza, who sang Fenton has a natural tenor voice, of a Caruso-like quality and delivery, if it should be traced in any comparison. Christine Johnson, as Mistress Page, the fine mezzo soprano and Adelaide Abbot, a coloratura of great promise as Mistress Ford, were forced to take several curtain calls after their famous duet in the first act, James Pease, the Falstaf of tonight's performances, added to grotesqueness, had everything that the part needs.

Of course, while all the singers are advertised as students, some of them are students only while they are here. For instance, Mack Harrell, "Mr. Ford," is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and has sung extensively in concert.

The scenery by Richard Rychrarik and the Tanglewood workshop student crew was simple and delightful. The orchestra was composed of students at Tanglewood and the whole production was directed by Doris Goldovsky, who also aided Myron Ryan in translating the opera into English.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 7 - 1942

Shostakovich 7th and Soloists At Lenox, 14th

Tickets are now on sale at Russian War Relief, 11 E. 35th St., New York City, for the benefit concert to be held Aug. 14 at Lenox, Mass., when Serge Koussevitsky and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra of 110 players will give the first American concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony. Tickets for the event, which will include many other musical and entertainment features, are priced at $2.20 and $5.50.

Three world famous soloists, Dorothy Maynor, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; and Albert Spalding, violinist; will offer a recital following the performance of the Shostakovich Symphony. The announcement was made today by Dr. Koussevitsky, who also said Princess Juliana of Holland will be a guest of honor at the event.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 8 - 1942

Box Parking Area To Be Open Friday

War Relief Benefit to Be Held at Tanglewood

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 7 — The regular box parking area south of the shed at Tanglewood will be opened for the Russian War Relief benefit planned next Friday by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, it was announced today by Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, chairman of the box committee.

Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings of Pittsfield and his American Legion volunteers who served the Berkshire Symphonic Festival several years in developing an efficient parking system, will be in charge of the parking. Willard M. Sistare, who organized the crew for ushering and ticket takers for the festival, will be chairman of ushers for the box area. Entrance to the box parking area will be via Hawthorne Street from Route 183 near Tanglewood or from the center of Lenox. Windshield cards will be issued to all persons buying boxes.

Mrs. Johnson's committee has sold more than half the available boxes for the benefit, the program of which includes the first concert presentation in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony, Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the large student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 8 - 1942

126

Koussevitzky Asks Support For Benefit

Johanssens To Do Portrait Sketch Of Highest Bidder

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, today issued an appeal for support of the Russian war relief benefit to be given at Tanglewood Friday starting at 5 PM.

"Although it is banal to say that the Russian front is our front, it is a fact we Americans must constantly emphasize," said Dr. Koussevitzky. "The Russians have saved Western civilization from barbarism, have no doubt about that. It is true we have sent material to aid our Russian allies, but we must do more than that. Russia needs our aid in other ways. So buy tickets for the benefit Friday, even though you cannot come."

Tickets may be purchased at Tanglewood or from the following community chairmen: Stockbridge, Mrs. Nesbitt H. Bangs; Lenox, Mrs. Helen Alexandre Hoppin; Pittsfield, Mrs. Robert H. Colton and Mrs. Benjamin Harris; Dalton, Mrs. W. G. O'Connell; Sheffield, Mrs. Stuart Beard; Hudson, N. Y., Mrs. Charles Bradley; Springfield, Mrs. Hollis Carlisle; Lee, Miss Mary Rogers; Chatham, N. Y., Miss Annabelle Terrell; Great Barrington, Mrs. E. M. Hotchkiss; Egremont, Mrs. Frederick R. Brautigam; New Lebanon, N. Y., Mrs Harry Adams; Lanesboro, Miss Margery Whiting; Housatonic, Mrs Charles Giddings.

"Kill Two Birds"

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, chairman of the ticket committee, capitalizing on an old saw, is sending out postcards captioned "How To Kill Two Birds With One Stone." The card suggests that by buying tickets, the purchaser will be helping our Russian ally and will also have an opportunity to hear the much discussed Shostakovitch seventh symphony.

The Pittsfield committee working with the Berkshire Hills Conference includes:

Miss Frances W. Murphy, Mrs. Leonard F. Johnson, Mrs. William B. St. James, Miss Julia Ellen Kinney, Mrs. Edward L. Raab, Mrs. Paul Moss, Mrs. Leon Mohill, Mrs. Frank R. Hoyt, Miss Winnifred Rice, Mrs. James W. Hull, Mrs. Wendell G. Ahern, Mrs. Carl W. Germeck, Mrs. Harry G. Rich.

Tickets will be procurable from the Conference office, England Brothers' book department, the Open Book Shop, the Women's Club and the Hotel Wendell.

Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox, chairman of the prize committee, has a large group selling tickets and a list of 23 prizes to be distributed the night of the benefit. Included are a Russian painting donated by Joseph E. Davies, a terra cotta head by Guitou Knoop, jewelry, a radio, records by Albert Spalding, champagne, a dozen pairs of nylon stockings, a ton of coal and many other items of value.

Mrs. Schenck has also received an offer from Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johanssen (Jean McLean), well-known artists, to do a portrait sketch of the person making the highest bid. Bids may be left at the Tanglewood office of Russian war relief or at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

Lumber for the booths to be used at the benefit has been donated by Prescott Buffum and Francis Dufresne has donated his services to build them.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 8 - 1942

OVER HALF BOXES SOLD FOR BENEFIT

Tanglewood Russian Relief Program Next Friday

More than half the boxes in the music shed at Tanglewood have been sold, it was announced today, for the Russian War Relief benefit program to be presented by the Koussevitzky Music foundation, sponsoring the Berkshire Music center, next Friday evening. Dr. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown and Washington, D. C., are among those who have reserved boxes.

The program will include the first concert performance in America of the Shostakovitch Seventh symphony; Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano whom Dr. Koussevitzky discovered at Tanglewood three years ago; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Music center student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 8 - 1942

Tanglewood To Present 3 Top Soloists

Lenox, Mass.—Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, will be heard Aug. 14 at the benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Maynor, soprano, was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1940. Mr. Piatigorsky, cellist, is on the faculty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington and is a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit, with Edward G. Carter, summer resident of Lee and national chairman of Russian War Relief Inc., as active chairman.

Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services. A full program starting at 5 p. m., has been planned. Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, chorus, opera department and instrumental ensembles.

From 6 o'clock to 7 will come the manifestation when, according to announcements "distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with this great occasion. The program constitutes a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom — the American way of life."

From 7 to 8 will come the lawn party. Those attending the benefit are asked to bring picnic suppers. The extensive Tanglewood lawns will be available.

The concert will be from 8 to 9:10 o'clock. A feature will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conductor. After a brief intermission, there will be the recital by the soloists.

OPERA BY NICOLAI HAILED AS TRIUMPH

1,000 See "Merry Wives of Windsor"

TO BE REPEATED

Cast Composed Principally of Music Center Students — Koussevitzky Supervises Performance

Making its first venture this season into the field of opera which has been given relatively greater importance by the withdrawal of the Boston Symphony orchestra from the concert schedule, the Berkshire Music center at Stockbridge last evening presented an English translation of Otto Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" before an audience of nearly 1,000 in the theater at Tanglewood.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Music center, supervised the opulent performance, one of two of the comic and fantastic Nicolai operas which are to be given, while Herbert Graf, head of the opera department at the center, was director of the production.

Audience and critics alike hailed the per[illegible] from [illegible] to study their needs. They have furnished us valuable information about [illegible] have been given the problems faced [illegible] by traveling salesmen. The OPA has met with many groups representing almost every type of sales activity [illegible] a salesman renders this type of service may be be given preferred mile[illegible] construction and repair work. To the extent, but only to the extent, that [illegible] or technical advice, or supervises [illegible] salesman actually renders engineering [illegible] where a man who is primarily a [illegible] "There are rare and unusual cases [illegible] this field.

[illegible] all actions taken by the boards in [illegible] principles must be kept in mind In [illegible]

for Tanglewood Russian Benefit

Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the gala Russian War Relief at Tanglewood, Aug. 14.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp. Mrs. Edward C. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England Conservatory, who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and USO benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago; Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5 p. m. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists.

Reservations for tickets and boxes may be made by writing directly to Tanglewood, Lenox.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 7 - 1942

Red Benefit Planned At Tanglewood

Dorothy Maynor Among Artists Scheduled to Appear on Koussevitzky Program

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6.—(Special)—Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will he heard at the gala benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief, Friday, August 14, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Maynor, Negro soprano, was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1940 and has skyrocket to fame since. Mr. Piatigorsky, 'cellist, is on the faculty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington and is a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Governor Leverett Saltonstall, of Massachusetts, is honorary chairman of the benefit, while Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee, and national chairman of Russian War Relief, Inc., is the active chairman.

Volunteer Services.

Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. A full program starting at 5 p. m., has been planned. Until 5:45, Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, the chorus, the opera department, and instrumental ensembles.

From 6 to 7 will come the manifestation at which time, according to the announcements, "distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with this great occasion. The program constitutes a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom, the American way of life."

From 7 to 8 will come the lawn party. It is the hope of the committee that those attending the benefit will bring their picnic suppers to eat on the extensive Tanglewood lawns. The gala concert will follow from 8 to 9:10. A feature will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. After a brief intermission there will be the recital by Miss Maynor, Mr. Piatigorsky and Mr Spalding.

Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge is chairman of the box committee, and serving with her are Mrs. Albert Spaulding, Miss Mabel Choate of of Tyringham, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue, of Boston.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is chairman of the general ticket committee. As president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. she is also an honorary vice-chairman with Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets, moderately priced, and boxes may be reserved by writing directly to Tanglewood at Lenox.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 8 - 1942

MANY ATTEND OPENING AT MUSIC CENTER

Splendid Voices Heard in "Merry Wives of Windsor" at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 7—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center opened its "season" here tonight before an audience almost as large as the one which thronged the theater at Tanglewood last year when Mozart's "Cossi Fan Tutti" demonstrated what a few weeks of summer work under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera Company can do do for young and extremely capable artists.

Sung in English

Tonight's offering was Nicolais "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and happily was sung in English, as any Shakspere play should be sung.

It was a delightful performance throughout, the fresh young voices bringing to the old but seldom heard comedy something that it would be hard for more experienced singers to deliver. Voices of Metropolitan caliber were notable by their large number. While it is dangerous to pick up a young singer and prophecy future greatness, it seems probable that several of those heard tonight will be standbys of future world opera stages. Mario Lanza, who sang Fenton has a natural tenor voice, of a Caruso-like quality and delivery, if it should be placed in any comparison. Christine Johnson, as Mistress Page, the fine mezzo soprano and Adelaide Abbot, a coloratura of great promise as Mistress Ford, were forced to take several curtain calls after their famous duet in the first act, James Pease, the Falstaf of tonight's performances, padded to grotesqueness, had everything that the part needs.

Of course, while all the singers are advertised as students, some of them are students only while they are here. For instance, Mack Harrell, "Mr. Ford," is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and has sung extensively in concert.

The scenery by Richard Rychrarik and the Tanglewood workshop student crew was simple and delightful. The orchestra was composed of students at Tanglewood and the whole production was directed by Doris Goldovsky, who also aided Myron Ryan in translating the opera into English.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 7 - 1942

Shostakovich 7th and Soloists At Lenox, 14th

Tickets are now on sale at Russian War Relief, 11 E. 35th St., New York City, for the benefit concert to be held Aug. 14 at Lenox, Mass., when Serge Koussevitsky and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra of 110 players will give the first American concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony. Tickets for the event, which will include many other musical and entertainment features, are priced at $2.20 and $5.50.

Three world famous soloists, Dorothy Maynor, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; and Albert Spalding, violinist; will offer a recital following the performance of the Shostakovich Symphony. The announcement was made today by Dr. Koussevitsky, who also said Princess Juliana of Holland will be a guest of honor at the event.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 8 - 1942

Box Parking Area To Be Open Friday

War Relief Benefit to Be Held at Tanglewood

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 7 — The regular box parking area south of the shed at Tanglewood will be opened for the Russian War Relief benefit planned next Friday by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, it was announced today by Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, chairman of the box committee.

Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings of Pittsfield and his American Legion volunteers who served the Berkshire Symphonic Festival several years in developing an efficient parking system, will be in charge of the parking. Willard M. Sistare, who organized the crew for ushering and ticket takers for the festival, will be chairman of ushers for the box area. Entrance to the box parking area will be via Hawthorne Street from Route 183 near Tanglewood or from the center of Lenox. Windshield cards will be issued to all persons buying boxes.

Mrs. Johnson's committee has sold more than half the available boxes for the benefit, the program of which includes the first concert presentation in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony, Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the large student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 8 - 1942

126

Koussevitzky Asks Support For Benefit

Johanssens To Do Portrait Sketch Of Highest Bidder

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center, today issued an appeal for support of the Russian war relief benefit to be given at Tanglewood Friday starting at 5 PM.

"Although it is banal to say that the Russian front is our front, it is a fact we Americans must constantly emphasize," said Dr. Koussevitzky. "The Russians have saved Western civilization from barbarism, have no doubt about that. It is true we have sent material to aid our Russian allies, but we must do more than that. Russia needs our aid in other ways. So buy tickets for the benefit Friday, even though you cannot come."

Tickets may be purchased at Tanglewood or from the following community chairmen: Stockbridge, Mrs. Nesbitt H. Bangs; Lenox, Mrs. Helen Alexandre Hoppin; Pittsfield, Mrs. Robert H. Colton and Mrs. Benjamin Harris; Dalton, Mrs. W. G. O'Connell; Sheffield, Mrs. Stuart Beard; Hudson, N. Y., Mrs. Charles Bradley; Springfield, Mrs. Hollis Carlisle; Lee, Miss Mary Rogers; Chatham, N. Y., Miss Annabelle Terrell; Great Barrington, Mrs. E. M. Hotchkiss; Egremont, Mrs. Frederick R. Brautigam; New Lebanon, N. Y., Mrs Harry Adams; Lanesboro, Miss Margery Whiting; Housatonic, Mrs Charles Giddings.

"Kill Two Birds"

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, chairman of the ticket committee, capitalizing on an old saw, is sending out postcards captioned "How To Kill Two Birds With One Stone." The card suggests that by buying tickets, the purchaser will be helping our Russian ally and will also have an opportunity to hear the much discussed Shostakovitch seventh symphony.

The Pittsfield committee working with the Berkshire Hills Conference includes:

Miss Frances W. Murphy, Mrs. Leonard F. Johnson, Mrs. William B. St. James, Miss Julia Ellen Kinney, Mrs. Edward L. Raab, Mrs. Paul Moss, Mrs. Leon Mohill, Mrs. Frank R. Hoyt, Miss Winnifred Rice, Mrs. James W. Hull, Mrs. Wendell G. Ahern, Mrs. Carl W. Germeck, Mrs. Harry G. Rich.

Tickets will be procurable from the Conference office, England Brothers' book department, the Open Book Shop, the Women's Club and the Hotel Wendell.

Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox, chairman of the prize committee, has a large group selling tickets and a list of 23 prizes to be distributed the night of the benefit. Included are a Russian painting donated by Joseph E. Davies, a terra cotta head by Guitou Knoop, jewelry, a radio, records by Albert Spalding, champagne, a dozen pairs of nylon stockings, a ton of coal and many other items of value.

Mrs. Schenck has also received an offer from Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johanssen (Jean McLean), well-known artists, to do a portrait sketch of the person making the highest bid. Bids may be left at the Tanglewood office of Russian war relief or at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

Lumber for the booths to be used at the benefit has been donated by Prescott Buffum and Francis Dufresne has donated his services to build them.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1942

BOX PARKING AREA OPENS NEXT FRIDAY

Pittsfield, Aug. 7—The regular box parking area south of the shed at Tanglewood will be opened for the Russian war relief benefit planned next week Friday by the Koussevitzky Music foundation, it was announced today by Mrs Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, chairman of the box committee.

Fred N. Cummings and Thomas Sullivan of Pittsfield and their American Legion volunteers will be in charge of the parking in the box area. Willard M. Sistare of Pittsfield will be chairman of ushers for the box area. Entrance to the parking area will be by way of Hawthorne street from route 183 near Tanglewood or from the center of Lenox as in previous years. Windshield cards will be issued with box tickets.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 9 - 1942

Queen Wilhelmina Back at Home In Berkshires

Monarch Is Resting After Busy Time At Washington

LEE, Mass., Aug. 8 (INS).—Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, fulsomely honored during an activity-crammed state visit to the White House, tonight was resting at the comforable summer home of her daughter, Princess Juliana, in the Berkshire mountains.

The Queen returned late last night from Washington over a lend-lease sub-chaser to the Dutch Navy in her name. The Queen addressed a joint session of Congress, awarded medals of the Netherlands' navy to several Americans at a reception in the Dutch embassy, and placed a wreath on the tombs of George Washington and the Unknown soldier.

Wilhelmina had previously indicated she would undertake the return trip to her government-in-exile in London soon after her formal visit to Washington.

Prince Bernhard, who came unheralded to this country on a secret mission, already has returned to Great Britain.

Princess Juliana, it is learned, has made plans to attend one of the Tanglewood concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky this week-end. It is not known whether the Queen will accompany the princess.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

WILHELMINA BACK AT LEE FOR REST

Returns From Busy State Visit to White House — Said Planning Trip to London Soon

Lee, Aug. 8—(INS) — Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, fully honored during an activity-crammed state visit to the White House, tonight was resting at the comfortable summer home of her daughter, Princess Juliana, in the Berkshires.

The queen returned late last night from Washington, where the President toasted her at a state dinner and turned over a lease-lend sub-chaser to the Dutch navy in her name. The queen addressed a joint session of Congress, awarded medals of the Netherlands' navy to several Americans at a reception in the Dutch embassy, and placed a wreath on the tombs of George Washington and the unknown soldier.

Wilhelmina had previously indicated she would undertake the return trip to her government-in-exile in London soon after her formal visit to Washington.

Prince Bernhard, who came unheralded to this country on a secret mission, already has returned to Great Britain.

Princess Juliana, it is learned, has made plans to attend one of the Tanglewood concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky this weekend. It is not known whether the queen will accompany the princess.

PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN

AUG 9 - 1942

'Student Players Delight Audience

NEW YORK, Aug. 8 (Special) One hundred and ten students and young professional musicians from 37 states, who have been studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, near Lenox, Mass., made their debut this week-end before a delighted audience in the first of a series of symphonic concerts under the direction of Dr. Serge Kousevitzky.

War-time conditions have brought many changes in the Berkshire festival, which would have been cancelled this summer had it not been for the vision and devotion of Dr. Koussevitzky. When the Boston Symphony orchestra found it impossible to make its annual appearance at these celebrated concerts, the conductor organized the Koussevitzky Music foundation and went ahead with plans for the festival on his own financial responsibility.

110 Students Play

Instead of the famous Boston Symphony, the orchestra this summer is composed of 110 students, most of whom are studying at the Berkshire Music Center for the first time. They had only three weeks' rehearsal, but so brilliant and thorough was Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership that they executed a difficult program with gratifying musicianship. Critics praised their "expert performance" as a striking demonstration of what can be accomplished in a short time by the co-operative zeal of a conductor and gifted young musicians.

The opening program comprised Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3, and the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovich.

Other Events Slated

Other events scheduled for the season include two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," chamber music concerts, and a gala benefit concert for Russian war relief on August 14, at which Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovich's Seventh symphony.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

AUG 9 - 1942

BECAUSE OF THE

. . . practice blackout scheduled for Chicago and vicinity on Wednesday evening the Grant Park concert by the Chicago Symphony orchestra will begin promptly at 7 o'clock and be concluded by 9 p. m. in order that patrons may reach their homes before the time of the blackout. Hans Lange will direct the concert and Robert Quick, violinist will be soloist. Other concerts for the week are, Monday night, Dudley Powers, cellist soloist with the Chicago Symphony directed by Mr. Kange; Tuesday night, Joseph Vito, harpist, soloist with the Chicago Symphony; Thursday the Chicago Opera orchestra with Kurt Adker, conducting and Ada Belle Files, soloist, Friday Rico Marcelli and his symphony orchestra, Saturday night's concert is cancelled because of the Chicago music festival at Soldier Field and Sunday night the Walter Steindel symphony orchestra will be heard.

KOUSSEVITSKY

. . . and his youth orchestra have been acclaimed for the splendid concerts they have given at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood the past two week ends. More than 3,300 persons heard the concerts last week end. Last Sunday's program was dedicated to the treasury department and during the afternoon many war stamps and bonds were sold. The concert opened with two rousing Sousa marches, "Semper Fidelis" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Ruth Posselt, violinist was soloist.

Large Crowds Hear Berkshire Festival Music

N.Y. Her. Tribune

AUG 9 1942

'Merry Wives of Windsor' Given by Opera Group; Orchestra Plays Today

By Robert Lawrence

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The second week end of the Berkshire Music Center's festival opened tonight in the midst of crowds and general activity that seemed to deny the crisis which almost prevented the presentation of any orchestral concerts at Tanglewood this summer. Despite gasoline rationing and other difficulties, the festival is drawing large audiences. Howard Hanson's third symphony, the Mozart E flat concerto for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists, and Brahms's fourth symphony, in E minor, made up this evening's program, performed by the Center's remarkable student orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

There was opportunity this morning, at a rehearsal of Sunday afternoon's program, to form a just estimate of the ensemble's capabilities. The young musicians played through the Tchaikovsky F minor symphony with fine spirit. They gave a stunning reading of the relatively new Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, Czech composer, who was present in the Music Shed while his work was being rehearsed. But the Sunday program, as it is finally presented to an audience, will be discussed in tomorrow's dispatch.

Opera Performed

Last night the opera department of the Music Centetr gave the first of two performances of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," with a second scheduled for Aug. 13. There was much to admire in this production, which was sung and played by students, as well as much to freeze one's critical ardor. On the credit side were the settings of Richard Rychtarik, all imaginatively done except for a rather lush Windsor Forest scene; the singing of certain of the male principals, and some of Herberts Graft's stage direction. The chief drawbacks were the playing of an orchestra recruited from the center's department of music and culture, under the direction ofg Boris Goldovsky; the generally inferior level of the women's voices, and the pacing of the production as a whole, which was given without cuts.

Nicolai's score is no masterpiece but it has a great deal of wit and melody. These qualities can pall during the running, though, unless the performances comes out sharply etched. Last night Mr. Goldovsy's rhythms and attacs were too variable, some of the chief roles too inadequately taen to insure a successful mounting. It was, to be sure, a student performance, but the press had been invited to write about it. And what might have been a stimulating experience to the cast, under less widely publicized conditions, became in transit a semi-professional enterprise.

One very positive achievement of the stage last night was Mack Harrell's playing of Ford. Although this barytone is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Association, has has been listed at the Berkshire Music Center as a students; and it was in such a capacity that he appeared in the "Merry Wives of Windsor." His singing had more drive, more brilliance that I had ever heard in it before. His English enunciation (the opera was done in a translation from the German by Myron Ryan and Mr. Goldovsky) was flawless, and his entire approach to the role, on a dramatic basis, could scarcely have been unproved. Another outstanding member of the cast was a young tenor, Mario Lanza, in the part of Fenton. If Lanza's natural abilities are developed in the proper direction, he will own a splendid dramatic voice. At present he needs mode fundamental training and the rudiments of style. Yet even now, he offers good musicality and diction.

Pease Plays Falstaff

The Falstaff of James Pease was cordially applauded, and there were, no doubt, many listeners of sound taste in the audience who found his interpretation satisfying. For himself, however, Mr. Pease's whole enactment of the role—which very possibly consisted in following out stage directions that had been given him—was excessively bad in its comedy. This was no Fat Knight of English History, but rather an Elizabethan Oliver Hardy, vocally he passed muster.

Adelaide Abbot, in the important part of Mistress Ford, had trouble with the music, and the talented Christine Johnson, who played Mistress Page, has been heard to better advantage at other times Lois MacMahon, as Anne, also did not fare too well. Myron Ryan turned in an amusing bit as Dr. Caius, Robert Fischer offered a competent page, and George Tinker overacted his role.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" has been heard infrequently in New York and vicinity. There was a good production of it six years ago at the Juilliard Graduate School in which, if memory serves correctly, Mazine Stellman, together with Rise Stevens and Annamary Dickey along with Lucielle Browning, appeared in alternating casts as the wives. The score, directed by Albert Stoessel, seemed at the time far more full of humor and fantasy than it did last night.

Probably the most important recent presentation of the work took place in Vienna seven years ago, when it was restaged at the State Opera House, conducted by Felix Weingartner, and sung by a cast including Margit Bokor as Mistress Ford and Ludwig Hoffman as Falstaff. This opera, for best effect, needs a big theater and singers who are absolutely sure of their technique and of themselves. About 800 listeners heard the intimate performance last night.

Student Activities

Many student activities have been going on today at the Music Center, notably a chamber concert, forums for conductors and composers, and a program of choral music with orchestral and organ accompaniment led by Hugh Ross. Yves Tinayre, barytone, appeared as soloist at the choral concert, and Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," provided informative remarks and a basic perspective of the chorale and cantata during the course of the program.

Aside from music at Tanglewood, the artistic development that is exerting most audience appeal in the Berkshires is the dance festival at Jacob's Pillow, near Lee, Mass. Asadata Dafora, Negro specialist in the dances of West Africa, is appearing there over the current week end, assisted by Randolph Sawyer. On the s ame bill are Ted Shawn and Barton Mumow (on furlongh from Keesler Field, Mass.) in American and Indian movies, and Arthur Mahoney with Thalia Mara in a cycle of eighteenth-century court dances.

Jess Meeker, composer-pianist on leave from Fort Meade, Md., plays several of his own works as interludes during the performance. As seen yesterday afternoon, this generally excellent program offered more room for comment than can be provided in tomorrow morning's paper. It will be discussed in a dance column next Sunday.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

Pittsfield Museum Shows 'Music in Art'

For the thousands of music lovers who come to the Berkshires in the summer, the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield is holding a unique and distinguished exhibition, entitled "Music in Art—Rembrandt to Thomas Benton." On view from Thursday through September 6, the exhibition will supplement the program of music and opera at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Music Center, which is continuing through the generosity of its founder, Serge Koussevitzy. Students and summer residents will not only be able to see some outstanding paintings connected with music, but also a collection of rare musical instruments lent by the Metropolitan museum.

The exhibition included pictures by various artists and schools of the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th centuries. Historically interesting paintings, in which are depicted in minute detail many ancestors of modern orchestral instruments, are contrasted with canvases by noted contemporary artists, who have treated their subjects in a broad or abstract style.

Lenders to the exhibition are Mrs W. Murray Crane, Marshall Field, the Marquis and Marquise Helie de Talleyrand, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the City Art Museum of St Louis, the Knoedler galleries, Arnold Seligmann & Rey, the Schaeffer galleries and the E. and A. Silbermann galleries.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

AUG 9 - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY

. . . will be the honored guest at the "Little Red House" luncheon of the meeting of directors of the National Federation of Music clubs on Tuesday, Sept. 1. This luncheon is in honor of the Federation's project of rebuilding the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood, as a summer music studio for the Berkshire music center. The public premiere of "Noel" a piano composition of Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker ,a prize winner in the 1941 composition contest will be given at this meeting. The president of the Federation, Mrs. Guy Gannett of Portland, Ore., has added her voice to the protests against James Petrillo's refusal to permit the Interlochen high school orchestra to broadcast.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1942

Russian War Benefit Friday at Tanglewood

Shostakovitch 7th Symphony in Koussevitzky Program

An extensive benefit program will be held for Russian War Relief next Friday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Various activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be illustrated between 5 o'clock and 5:45. The "manifestation," with "a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom—the American way of life" as the keynote of the speeches, will be held between 6 and 7 o'clock. At 8 o'clock, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Berkshire Music Center's orchestra in the first American concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony. Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will give a short recital program between 9:30 and 10:15, when drawing for prizes will be held.

Tickets may be obtained in New York from the Russian War Relief, Inc., 11 East Thirty-fifth Street, or by writing to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The event is sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., and a committee headed by Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts as honorary chairman and by Edward C. Carter as active chairman.

The remaining regular festival programs to be played by the Center's orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood are:

Today, 3 o'clock: Handel, Concerto Grosso No. 12; Martinu, Concerto Grosso; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.
Saturday, Aug. 15, 8:30. Bach, Magnificat; Beethoven, Symphony No. 9 (with Berkshire Music Center's chorus).
Sunday, Aug. 16, 3: Haydn, Symphony. Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 7.

Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," will be repeated at Tanglewood next Thursday night. Chamber music programs will be played tonight and next Sunday at 8:30.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1942

LARGE AUDIENCE AT 'MERRY WIVES'

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 8—An audience of fully 1000 last night heard in the theater concert hall the first of two performances of Otto Nicolai's comic fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor." All the critics hailed it as a marvelous presentation from every standpoint, musical, dramatic and in beauty of costumes and scenery.

The fashionable audience was warm in its applause and it was the unanimous verdict that Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center, and Herbert Graf, who was directly in charge of tonight's opera, had scored another triumph.

The women stars were Adelaide Abbot, soprano, taking the part of Mistress Ford, and Christine Johnson, contralto, as Mistress Page. Mack Harrell, baritone, a citizen of Windsor, is a Metropolitan opera singer, while Mario Lanza, as Fenton, had the principal tenor part.

Boris Goldovsky, who with Myron Ryan made the new English translation of the opera, conducted the orchestra. Stage settings by Mr Graf were specially effective. Will Steiner designed the beautiful costumes. The opera is in three acts and seven scenes, with finely trained chorus and dancers. The second-act ballet was one of the best features of the performance, which will be repeated Thursday, the 13th, at 8.30 p. m.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 9 - 1942

Berkshire Festival 1942 Style

THE THREE week Berkshire Music Festival has much to offer in the interim between opening and closing, in the Music shed and Center auditorium at Tanglewood. First concert performance in the Western hemisphere of Dmitri Shostokovitch's Seventh Symphony will be given by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Hundreds of Worcester people are planning to be there, and note the benefit time, 5 o'clock on Frday afternoon. Activities of the Center will be "on parade" and at the Manifestation, several prominent guests will speak. Later in the evening Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra of 105 talented advanced students in the great Russian's monument-

Turn to Next Page

AMARILLO, TEXAS
GLOBE

AUG 9 - 1942

Wartime Culture To Concern Music Federation Group

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 8—How best to serve America's cultural interests without in any way relaxing efforts on the victory front is the question which will absorb the attention of members of the Board of Directors and State and District Presidents Council of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in a four-day meeting Aug. 30 to Sept. 2 in Providence, R. I., according to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of this city, national president.

"This is a problem too grave to be decided merely by the president and executive committee," Mrs. Gannett said today, in making the first public announcement of the impending meeting. "That is why, in spite of difficult travel conditions, we determined to call the Board and Council together and seek the advice of their membership from all parts of the country in shaping our wartime progress. Our officers and chairmen have loyally conserved gas and tires and have rearranged vacation schedules to attend. We shall seek their advice as to how to intensify and render more effective our wartime activities, how much of our peace program to conserve, and whether or not it is wise to attempt a biennial convention in 1942. We expect an attendance close to normal."

Forum Is Scheduled

Most of the Board and Council sessions will be of intra-organization character. High-lighted among the public meetings is a War Service Forum, entitled "Music—the Last Outpost for Happiness," which will be held Aug. 31 at either the Providence-Biltmore or the Rhode Island School of Design. Mrs. Gannett and Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Virginia, national war service chairman, will jointly preside, and Mrs. Ober will speak briefly on the results of the federation's nationwide campaign to provide records, sheet music and musical instruments for the men in the fighting services. Other speakers will be Lt.-Commander John D. Zimmerman, U. S. Naval Reserve, Prof. Arlan Coolidge, director of the Music Department of Brown University, and a music-minded service man who has benefitted from the federation's activities.

Cultural interests will be the fore at the "Little Red House" luncheon on Sept. 1 at the Providence-Biltmore, featuring the federation's project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood as a summer music studio for the Berkshire Music Centre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Centre, will be the honor guest.

Concert Planned

A concert Tuesday evening, Sept. 1, at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hall a former vice president of the federation, will feature the public premiere of "Noel," a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winner in the 1941 composition contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Joint meetings of the board of directors and state and district presidents council will be held Aug. 31 at 10:45 A. M. and 2 P. M. at the Providence-Biltmore; an executive meeting of the council at 9:30 A. M. Sept. 1, and executive meetings of the board at 3 P. M. Sept. 1, and 9 A. M. and 3:45 P. M. Sept. 2. Principal social events will be a complimentary coffee at the Providence-Biltmore at 12:30 P. M., Aug. 31; the Little Red House luncheon, an afternoon walking tour of Providence, a garden party at the historic John Brown House, and a Past Presidents' Assembly Frolic on Sept. 1; an old-fashioned New England broakfast, Gay Nineties vintage, on Sept. 2; and a Rhode Island clambake at the Warwick Country Club in the late afternoon as the final festivity.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 9 - 1942

Donor of Tanglewood Helps Russian Relief

Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Maine, President of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the ceneral committee sponsoring the gala Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood, August 14.

A project undertaken by Mrs. Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood. occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr. Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward O. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England Conservatory, who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and U.S.O. benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago; Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5:00. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performances in the Western Hemisphere of the much discussed Symphony No. 7 by Shostakovitch. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Music Center Orchestra in this monumental work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes may be made by writing directly to Tanglewood, Lenox.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 7 - 1942

WEEKEND PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Duo-Piano Team Will Play Saturday Night; Handel, Tsckaikowsky Feature

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7—Calling Dr. Serge Koussevitzky a miracle worker in welding a group of advanced music students at the Berkshire Music Center into a top-flight symphony group that astounded two large audiences last Saturday and Sunday, critics have had to use superlatives to describe the magnificent effects achieved by this youthful aggregation of over one hundred young players.

In three weeks of daily rehearsals the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given the musical world an orchestra that can play works from the "great repertoire" in a way to make favorable comparisons with first-rate orchestras. Transportation difficulties were surmounted by about 5,000 visitors who came somewhat skeptically and remained to cheer and whistle for fiftene minutes after the concert ended.

The opera department, under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, will present two full-fledged performances in English of Nicolai's amusing opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood this evening, with a cast of students.

The second series of symphony concerts under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be given Saturday evening, when the famous duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will play with the orchestra the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat. Also on the program will be Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 and the Brahms Fourth Symphony.

Sunday afternoon's program under Dr. Koussevitzky will include the Handel Concerto Grosso, the Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, first played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concerts last winter and the Tchaikovsky Fourth.

The final series of symphony concerts will be offered on Saturday evening, August 15, when the Bach Magnificat and the Beethoven Ninth Symphony will be performed with a student chorus. The final program on Sunday afternoon, August 10, will be the Haydn Symphony No. 88 and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 to be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere at the Russian War Relief concert on Friday, August 14.

Olin Downes will give his final lecture in a series of four on next Saturday afternoon.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

AUG 9 - 1942

Professor Toms Makes Choral Conducting Study

Chapel Hill, Aug. 8.—(Special)—Professor John E. Toms of the University Music Department is at the Berkshire Music Festival Center in Massachusetts, studying choral conducting under Hugh Ross, conductor of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Ifar Jones, conductor of the Bethlehem Bach Festival.

Professor Toms recently conducted two choral numbers with chamber orchestra accompaniment for an Olin Downs lecture concert and an orchestral accompaniment for Adelaide Abbott, soprano.

Next Thursday he will sing the role of Sparlich in Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which is directed by Mr. Graff of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Boris Goldovsky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

Others on Year's Program

Rollin Baldwin, a former pupil of Mrs Giles Blague, is now studying with Paul Althouse. He is a student at American International college and a member of the United States naval reserve. Miss Lacouline is a pupil of Alfred Troemel of New York and plans to continue her studies at the Juilliard School of Music this winter. She has won several scholarships, and this summer is doing orchestral work with Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS OF BERKSHIRE BENEFIT

Mrs Guy Gannett and Mrs Andrew Hepburn On Tanglewood List

Lenox, Aug. 8—Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts and the Berkshire Music center, and Mrs Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the Russian war relief benefit at Tanglewood on the 14th.

A project undertaken by Mrs Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood, occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs John Alden Carpenter, Mrs Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs Edward C. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip R. Allen, president of the board of the New England conservatory, who served as general chairman of the British War relief and USO benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs John T. Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, O., Mrs Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York, who served as ticket chairman for the British War relief benefit two years ago; Mrs Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the much-discussed symphony No 7 by Shostakovitch. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct the Music Center orchestra in this work.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1942

Pittsfield Garden Center Will Hear Talk by Mrs. King

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., the former Louisa Yeomans of Chicago and an authority on gardening, is the guest of Mrs. William Felton Barrett [Margery Barker] at Sky farm, North Egremont. Mrs. Barrett gave a dinner for her guest last night and is having a luncheon in her honor on Tuesday. Yesterday Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs was a luncheon hostess for Mrs. King at Red Lion inn in Stockbridge. Other guests included Mrs. Barrett, Mrs. George O. Forbes of Rockford, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Rodney Proctor, and Mrs. Race W. Paddock.

Mrs. Proctor is to have a luncheon party tomorrow at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, in compliment to Mrs. King, who later will give an address at Berkshire Garden center on "A Potpourri of Gardening." The Richmond Garden club is to attend, and Mrs. Gibbs is to pour at the tea. Mrs. King is to be the honored guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. George O. Forbes at Orchard farm, North Egremont, today, and Mrs. Albert Spalding, wife of the violinist, also is to entertain for her next week at Aston Magna, Great Barrington.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Glencoe have opened Tamarack in Tyringham and will remain until October. George Allen Holloway of New York has joined Mrs. Holloway at Pittsfield. Her brother, Dr. Franklin K. Paddock, a captain in the army, is now at Camp Eustis, Va.

Mrs. Perry M. Shepard [Eleanor Ogden West] and daughter, Miss Deborah S. Shepard, following a visit with Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at Pittsfield, have joined Lieut. Col. Shepard, now stationed at Richmond, Va.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood in Lenox next Friday, for which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and students at the Berkshire Music center are giving their service. Edward Clark Carter, chairman of the Institute of Pacific Relations, is head of the general committee, on which also are Mrs. Sidney Coe Howard, widow of the playwright; Mrs. Bruce Crane, and Dr. James Phinny Baxter III., president of Williams college.

Mrs. James Ransom Walker is having as guests at Fair Acres, Stockbridge, her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Wirt D. Walker of Lake Shore drive; her sister, Mrs. David Shields Cook of the Drake hotel, and Mrs. Tracy C. Drake of Chicago and Laguna Beach, Cal.

Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett and her daughter, Mrs. Livingston Hall, are on a bicycle trip across the state from Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, to visit friends near Boston.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

AUG 9 - 1942

Music Items of Interest to Milwaukee

WORD comes this way from two young Milwaukeeans who are furthering their music careers in the east this summer. John Fiasca, violinist and winner of a scholarship to the Berkshire music institute, is playing in the young people's orchestra at Lenox, Mass., directed by the eminent Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra. Because the regular Berkshire music festival was called off this year because of the war, Mr. Koussevitzky himself has paid $30,000 for the continuance of the young people's work.

Mrs. Louise Eilmann Grass, cellist,

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1942

LARGE AUDIENCE AT 'MERRY WIVES'

Critics at Tanglewood Agree Dr Serge Koussevitzky and Herbert Graf, Have Scored Again

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 7—An audience of fully 1000 tonight heard in the theater concert hall the first of two performances of Otto Nicolai's comic fantastic opera, "The Merri Wives of Windsor." All the critic. hailed it as a marvelous presentation from every standpoint, musical, dramatic and in beauty of costumes and scenery.

The fashionable audience was warm in its applause and it was the unanimous verdict that Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center, and Herbert Graf, who was directly in charge of tonight's opera, had scored another triumph.

The women stars were Adelaide Abbot, soprano, taking the part of Mistress Ford, and Christine Johnson, contralto, as Mistress Page. Mack Harrell, baritone, a citizen of Windsor, is a Metropolitan opera singer, while Mario Lanza, as Fenton, had the principal tenor part.

Boris Goldovsky, who with Myron Ryan made the new English translation of the opera, conducted the orchestra. Stage settings by Mr Graf were specially effective. Will Steiner designed the beautiful costumes. The opera is in three acts and seven scenes, with finely trained chorus and dancers. The second-act ballet was one of the best features of the performance, which will be repeated Thursday, the 13th, at 8.30 p. m.

AMARILLO, TEXAS
GLOBE

AUG 9 - 1942

Wartime Culture To Concern Music Federation Group

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 8—How best to serve America's cultural interests without in any way relaxing efforts on the victory front is the question which will absorb the attention of members of the Board of Directors and State and District Presidents Council of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in a four-day meeting Aug. 30 to Sept. 2 in Providence, R. I., according to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of this city, national president.

"This is a problem too grave to be decided merely by the president and executive committee," Mrs. Gannett said today, in making the first public announcement of the impending meeting. "That is why, in spite of difficult travel conditions, we determined to call the Board and Council together and seek the advice of their membership from all parts of the country in shaping our wartime progress. Our officers and chairmen have loyally conserved gas and tires and have rearranged vacation schedules to attend. We shall seek their advice as to how to intensify and render more effective our wartime activities, how much of our peace program to conserve, and whether or not it is wise to attempt a biennial convention in 1942. We expect an attendance close to normal."

Forum Is Scheduled

Most of the Board and Council sessions will be of intra-organization character. High-lighted among the public meetings is a War Service Forum, entitled "Music—the Last Outpost for Happiness," which will be held Aug. 31 at either the Providence-Biltmore or the Rhode Island School of Design. Mrs. Gannett and Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Virginia, national war service chairman, will jointly preside, and Mrs. Ober will speak briefly on the results of the federation's nationwide campaign to provide records, sheet music and musical instruments for the men in the fighting services. Other speakers will be Lt.-Commander John D. Zimmerman, U. S. Naval Reserve, Prof. Arlan Coolidge, director of the Music Department of Brown University, and a music-minded service man who has benefitted from the federation's activities.

Cultural interests will be the fore at the "Little Red House" luncheon on Sept. 1 at the Providence-Biltmore, featuring the federation's project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood as a summer music studio for the Berkshire Music Centre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Centre, will be the honor guest.

Concert Planned

A concert Tuesday evening, Sept. 1, at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hail a former vice president of the federation, will feature the public premiere of "Noel," a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winner in the 1941 composition contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Joint meetings of the board of directors and state and district presidents council will be held Aug. 31 at 10:45 A. M. and 2 P. M. at the Providence-Biltmore; an executive meeting of the council at 9:30 A. M. Sept. 1, and executive meetings of the board at 3 P. M. Sept. 1, and 9 A. M. and 3:45 P. M. Sept. 2. Principal social events will be a complimentary coffee at the Providence-Biltmore at 12:30 P. M., Aug. 31; the Little Red House luncheon, an afternoon walking tour of Providence, a garden party at the historic John Brown House, and a Past Presidents' Assembly Frolic on Sept. 1; an old-fashioned New England broakfast, Gay Nineties vintage, on Sept. 2; and a Rhode Island clambake at the Warwick Country Club in the late afternoon as the final festivity.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 9 - 1942

Donor of Tanglewood Helps Russian Relief

Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Maine, President of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the ceneral committee sponsoring the gala Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood, August 14.

A project undertaken by Mrs. Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood. occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr. Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward O. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England Conservatory, who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and U.S.O. benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago; Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5:00. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performances in the Western Hemisphere of the much discussed Symphony No. 7 by Shostakovitch. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Music Center Orchestra in this monumental work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes may be made by writing directly to Tanglewood, Lenox.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 7 - 1942

WEEKEND PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Duo-Piano Team Will Play Saturday Night; Handel, Tsckaikowsky Feature

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7—Calling Dr. Serge Koussevitzky a miracle worker in welding a group of advanced music students at the Berkshire Music Center into a top-flight symphony group that astounded two large audiences last Saturday and Sunday, critics have had to use superlatives to describe the magnificent effects achieved by this youthful aggregation of over one hundred young players.

In three weeks of daily rehearsals the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given the musical world an orchestra that can play works from the "great repertoire" in a way to make favorable comparisons with first-rate orchestras. Transportation difficulties were surmounted by about 5,000 visitors who came somewhat skeptically and remained to cheer and whistle for fiftene minutes after the concert ended.

The opera department, under the direction of Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, will present two full-fledged performances in English of Nicolai's amusing opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood this evening, with a cast of students.

The second series of symphony concerts under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be given Saturday evening, when the famous duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will play with the orchestra the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in E-flat. Also on the program will be Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 and the Brahms Fourth Symphony.

Sunday afternoon's program under Dr. Koussevitzky will include the Handel Concerto Grosso, the Concerto Grosso by Bohuslav Martinu, first played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concerts last winter and the Tchaikovsky Fourth.

The final series of symphony concerts will be offered on Saturday evening, August 15, when the Bach Magnificat and the Beethoven Ninth Symphony will be performed with a student chorus. The final program on Sunday afternoon, August 10, will be the Haydn Symphony No. 88 and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 to be given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere at the Russian War Relief concert on Friday, August 14.

Olin Downes will give his final lecture in a series of four on next Saturday afternoon.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

AUG 9 - 1942

Professor Toms Makes Choral Conducting Study

Chapel Hill, Aug. 8.—(Special)—Professor John E. Toms of the University Music Department is at the Berkshire Music Festival Center in Massachusetts, studying choral conducting under Hugh Ross, conductor of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Ifar Jones, conductor of the Bethlehem Bach Festival.

Professor Toms recently conducted two choral numbers with chamber orchestra accompaniment for an Olin Downs lecture concert and an orchestral accompaniment for Adelaide Abbott, soprano.

Next Thursday he will sing the role of Sparlich in Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which is directed by Mr. Graff of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Boris Goldovsky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

Others on Year's Program

Rollin Baldwin, a former pupil of Mrs Giles Blague, is now studying with Paul Althouse. He is a student at American International college and a member of the United States naval reserve. Miss Lacouline is a pupil of Alfred Troemel of New York and plans to continue her studies at the Juilliard School of Music this winter. She has won several scholarships, and this summer is doing orchestral work

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1942

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS OF BERKSHIRE BENEFIT

Mrs Guy Gannett and Mrs Andrew Hepburn On Tanglewood List

Lenox, Aug. 8—Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts and the Berkshire Music center, and Mrs Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the Russian war relief benefit at Tanglewood on the 14th.

A project undertaken by Mrs Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood, occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs John Alden Carpenter, Mrs Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs Edward C. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip R. Allen, president of the board of the New England conservatory, who served as general chairman of the British War relief and USO benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs John T. Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, O., Mrs Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York, who served as ticket chairman for the British War relief benefit two years ago; Mrs Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of the much-discussed symphony No 7 by Shostakovitch. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct the Music Center orchestra in this work.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1942

Pittsfield Garden Center Will Hear Talk by Mrs. King

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., the former Louisa Yeomans of Chicago and an authority on gardening, is the guest of Mrs. William Felton Barrett [Margery Barker] at Sky farm, North Egremont. Mrs. Barrett gave a dinner for her guest last night and is having a luncheon in her honor on Tuesday. Yesterday Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs was a luncheon hostess for Mrs. King at Red Lion inn in Stockbridge. Other guests included Mrs. Barrett, Mrs. George O. Forbes of Rockford, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Rodney Proctor, and Mrs. Race W. Paddock.

Mrs. Proctor is to have a luncheon party tomorrow at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, in compliment to Mrs. King, who later will give an address at Berkshire Garden center on "A Potpourri of Gardening." The Richmond Garden club is to attend, and Mrs. Gibbs is to pour at the tea. Mrs. King is to be the honored guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. George O. Forbes at Orchard farm, North Egremont, today, and Mrs. Albert Spalding, wife of the violinist, also is to entertain for her next week at Aston Magna, Great Barrington.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Glencoe have opened Tamarack in Tyringham and will remain until October. George Allen Holloway of New York has joined Mrs. Holloway at Pittsfield. Her brother, Dr. Franklin K. Paddock, a captain in the army, is now at Camp Eustis, Va.

Mrs. Perry M. Shepard [Eleanor Ogden West] and daughter, Miss Deborah S. Shepard, following a visit with Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at Pittsfield, have joined Lieut. Col. Shepard, now stationed at Richmond, Va.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the gala benefit for Russian war relief at Tanglewood in Lenox next Friday, for which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and students at the Berkshire Music center are giving their service. Edward Clark Carter, chairman of the Institute of Pacific Relations, is head of the general committee, on which also are Mrs. Sidney Coe Howard, widow of the playwright; Mrs. Bruce Crane, and Dr. James Phinny Baxter III., president of Williams college.

Mrs. James Ransom Walker is having as guests at Fair Acres, Stockbridge, her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Wirt D. Walker of Lake Shore drive; her sister, Mrs. David Shields Cook of the Drake hotel, and Mrs. Tracy C. Drake of Chicago and Laguna Beach, Cal.

Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett and her daughter, Mrs. Livingston Hall, are on a bicycle trip across the state from Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, to visit friends near Boston.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

AUG 9 - 1942

Music Items of Interest to Milwaukee

WORD comes this way from two young Milwaukeeans who are furthering their music careers in the east this summer. John Fiasca, violinist and winner of a scholarship to the Berkshire music institute, is playing in the young people's orchestra at Lenox, Mass., directed by the eminent Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra. Because the regular Berkshire music festival was called off this

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1942

LARGE AUDIENCE AT 'MERRY WIVES'

Critics at Tanglewood Agree Dr Serge Koussevitzky and Herbert Graf, Have Scored Again

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 7—An audience of fully 1000 tonight heard in the theater concert hall the first of two performances of Otto Nicolai's comic fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor." All the critics hailed it as a marvelous presentation from every standpoint, musical, dramatic and in beauty of costumes and scenery.

The fashionable audience was warm in its applause and it was the unanimous verdict that Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center, and Herbert Graf, who was directly in charge of tonight's opera, had scored another triumph.

The women stars were Adelaide Abbot, soprano, taking the part of Mistress Ford, and Christine Johnson, contralto, as Mistress Page. Mack Harrell, baritone, a citizen of Windsor, is a Metropolitan opera singer, while Mario Lanza, as Fenton, had the principal tenor part.

Boris Goldovsky, who with Myron Ryan made the new English translation of the opera, conducted the orchestra. Stage settings by Mr Graf were specially effective. Will Steiner designed the beautiful costumes.

Continued From Page One

al work, (played a few weeks ago over the air with Arturo Toscanini conducting the NBC orchestra.) A supplementary concert will have outstanding soloists. The famous draw for prizes will be the final event of the benefit. There are changes made by Dr. Koussevitzky in the two remaining week end programs; this afternoon at 3.30 o'clock Handel's Concerto Grosso, and one of Martinu's, then the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4. On Saturday evening Bach and Beethoven, masters of long ago will be played; the Magnificat in D by the former composer, the Beethoven Symphony No. 9 in D-Minor, op. 125. The following Sunday afternoon Copland's "Quiet City" and a repetition of the Shostakovitch Seventh will close a memorable Festival.

Opera department of the Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, in collaboration with Richard Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will perform Nicolai's amusing and fantastic opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor." It will be sung in English, on Thursday night in the Theater Concert Hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1942

Calls Attention to Russian Event

Springfield Union Photo

Mrs. W. S. Robinson, executive secretary of the Russian War Relief, is shown tacking up on the walls of the R. W. R. S. headquarters on Market Street an announcement of the gala benefit to be held at Tanglewood on Friday, in which Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra. The much discussed Shostakovitch symphony No. 7 will be the outstanding musical attraction.

Included also on the program are the solo recitals of such well-known artists as Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding.The festival will commence at 5 in the 10.15 that night. It is expected that such notables as Vice-President Wallace, Dorothy Thompson and Ambassador Maxim Litvinof will be present and will speak during intermission. Tickets and reservations may be had at the Russian War Relief headquarters, the information booth in Forbes and Wallace, Steinert's, or Carlisle Hardware Company.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 10 1942

Student Orchestra Scores Again in Tanglewood Shed

Week-end Program Even Better Than Opening Events, Critic Says—Thinks Koussevitzky Deserves Unreserved Support

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The third and fourth concerts of the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in the Shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon and the preceding Saturday evening offered better-made programs than for the opening brace the weekend before. It is our opinion that Dr. Koussevitzky deserves unreserved support for his adherence to a policy which gives his audiences, even under the special conditions which exist in the huge and well-sheltered hall, only selections from the best of the orchestral repertory.

Koussevitzky closed yesterday afternoon with the Tchaikovsky fourth symphony. While it is not exactly his private property, there are few who would dispute his right at least to attempt to stake out a claim within its domains. His hundred-strong young orchestra reflected the drive and fervor of his inspiration with increasing confidence and understanding; they dipped and surged, as the occasion demanded, through the emotional pages of the score.

Martinu in Audience

The presence of Bohuslav Martinu in the audience made the performance of his Concerto Grosso the more significant. Professor Martinu, born in Czechoslovakia, has given classes in composition in the Center this year for the first time. His music, however, has preceded him here. His string quintet, dedicated to Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, was played at the South Mountain Festival in 1928, and his string sextet won the Coolidge prize in 1932. There is barbaric rhythmic power to his music. Mr. Martinu answered the conductor's beckoning gesture and stepped from the audience to the stage to accept the intense and long applause his work provoked and earned. The concerto, written in 1938, had its first performance in the past season of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It is scored for flute, three oboes, three clarinets, two horns, strings and two pianos.

The program had opened with a Handel Concerto grosso, the twelfth. in B minor, the last of a dozen he wrote, the counterpart of Bach's Brandenburgers, for string orchestra. The growth of the orchetsra in a short week was noticeable by the manner it performed the long sustained phrases of the slow movements. Koussevitzky interchanged the two allegros to close the concerto with the one set down first, a practical and effective choice.

Saturday Program

Saturday evening the program consisted of Howard Hanson's third symphony, the Brahms fourth and the Mozart two-piano-concerto in E. flat, with the eminent two-piano team of Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff, as the soloists.

The concerto is not a huge work, and there must have been great temptation to insert an element of the bravado, regardless of the character of the piece, to make an impression by the very impact of the performance. It is the mark, therefore, of the true artist, when by devotion to the nature of the music, they place themselves in the background. It was their stylistic adjustment to the concerto, the sparkling clarity of the performance, the loving gentleness of their interpretation, the sound and sane sense of good taste and balance, that earned them recall after recall. We would not detract from the ovation they won by suggesting that a desire for a longer glimpse of the distaff side was in any measure the cause for the applause.

Hanson's symphony was written four years ago on commission from the Columbia Broadcasting Company. His mastery of the art of orchestral writing sometimes shows through the material itself, or rather reveals the Finnish derivation of his musical thoughts in this particular instance. We were not able to detect this in his preceding symphony, the Romantic. It is full of color and climax, however, and rationalization, too. Yet we could not be sure that only a greater familiarity with the Brahm, which came later, made the Hanson seem so much thicker, and the Brahms, by comparison, so much thinner. There surely seemed at least a hundred years between them rather than fifty.

Koussevitzky's Brams is not earth-bound. He chose a light graceful pace, on the swift side, which relieved it of any trace of that quality of weighy substance, which, when mentioned in connection with Brahms, is intended in a derogatory sense. The slow movement was the most poetic thing that has happened in the whole series so far. In the places where it was possible, and sometimes also necessary, he drew from the brass section volumes of tone which created stunning effects; witness the coda of the closing movement of the Tchaikovsky yesterday afternoon. eW love the excitement of a Koussevitzky finale. Not only that it is done well, but that it is done with a degree of bombast which even purists allow.

hTe wood-winds acquired themselves more than creditably in the lovely canzona of the Tchaikovsky, and the pizzicato scherzo, albeit taken a bit cautiously, found the strings tightly grouped at the finish dline.

Princess Juliana Attends

Princess Juliana of Holland, present at both concerts, mingled with crowds which exceeded the first week's audiences by a small margin. The weather was not completely favorable at either program, the evening being on the cool side, and yesterday the solid gray type of day which prevails in the dry stretches of an otherwise rainy period.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 10 1942

Wartime Music Meeting Topic

Federation Leaders To Confer Aug. 30-Sept. 2 in Providence

How best to serve America's cultural interests without in any way relaxing efforts on the victory front is the question which will absorb the board of directors and state and district presidents council of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in a four-day meeting Aug. 30 to Sept. 2 in Providence.

"This is a problem too grave to be decided merely by the president and executive committee," Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, national president, said in making the first public announcement of the impending meeting. "That is why, in spite of difficult travel conditions, we determined to call the board and council together and seek the advice of their membership from all parts of the country in shaping our wartime progress."

Program Highlights

Most of the Board and Council sessions will be of intra-organization character. High-lighted among the public meetings is a War Service Forum, entitled "Music — the Last Outpost for Happiness," which will be held Aug. 31 at either the Providence-Biltmore or the Rhode Island School of Design. Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Va., national war service chairman, will speak on the results of the Federation's nationwide campaign to provide records, sheet music and musical instruments for the men in the fighting services. Other speakers will be Lt.-Commander John D. Zimmerman, U. S. Naval Reserve, Prof. Arlan Coolidge, director of the Music Department of Brown University, and a music-minded service man who has benefitted from the Federation's activities.

Koussevitzky Guest

Cultural interests will be to the fore at the "Little Red House" luncheon on Sept. 1 at the Providence-Biltmore, featuring the Federation's project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood as a summer music studio for the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Center, will be the honor guest.

A concert Tuesday evening, Sept. 1, at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hail, a former vicepresident of the Federation, will feature the public premiere of "Noel", a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winner in the 1941 composition contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1942

Litvinov to Hear Symphony

Will Attend Concert Performance of Shostakovitch Work Tonight

Maxim Litvinov, Soviet Ambassador to the United States, and Mrs. Litvinov will make a special trip today from Washington to Lenox, Mass., to hear the first concert performance in America of Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, scheduled for this evening at the Tanglewood Music Shed, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in a benefit for Russian relief. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will also be a guest of honor at the benefit.

The Tanglewood concert performance begins at 8 p. m., but the Russian War Relief events will start at 5 o'clock this afternoon, with all of the Berkshire Music Center's departments taking part, in addition to a recital by Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, and a drawing for prizes. A few tickets are still obtainable in New York and may be bought at Russian War Relief, Inc., 11 East Thirty-fifth Street.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 10 1942

CROWD OF 3000 HEARS CONCERT

Orchestra Again Stirring in Tanglewood Program

LENOX, Aug. 9—Again proving to Berkshire that it doesn't take the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give a bang-up symphony performance, Serge Koussevitzky led his so-called student orchestra from Haendel to Martinu this afternoon before an audience of 3000, drawn to Tanglewood despite the inclement weather. In today's audience, as well as last night's, was Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, who Friday afternoon attended the concert on South Mountain, Pittsfield.

Exciting Performance

The entree on today's musical bill of fare was the Tschaikowsky Fourth Symphony, which the young orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's stirring leadership gave slam-bang performance, exciting and stimulating to a high degree. Tschaikowsky is Koussevitzky's meat, and while some may put more finesse to the great Russian's works, none read them in a more mighty and stirring manner.

The Tschaikowsky was preceded by two concerti grossi, one for strings alone by Haendel and the other by Martinu, the modern, who is becoming recognized as among today's great composers. Incidentally, he is a teacher of composition at the Berkshire Music Center this year, and, being on hand for the excellent playing of his work, took a well-earned bow. It is difficult to see why Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, pianists, were separately advertised as soloists, for the Martinu work appears to be for orchestra and the pianos are simply part of the orchestra. Of course, their appearance took the performance somewhat out of the student class, for both are professionals, the former being the permanent pianist of the Boston Symphony.

Last night's program, also before a good audience, larger than last week's because of the good notices the orchestra has had, featured the Mozart concerto for two pianos, the soloists being Luboshutz and Nemenoff, who in private life are Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz. It was enjoyable. The rather noisy third symphony by Howard Hanson and the Brahms Fourth completed the program.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 11 1942

RUSSIAN RELIEF CONCERT FRIDAY

Koussevitzky Receives Two Letters From Russia Relative to Shostakovitch Symphony.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire music center, whose student orchestra will present the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Seventh symphony at the Russian Relief program Friday night, has received two messages from Russia regarding the symphony, one from the composer himself and one from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy theater in Russia, which was the first orchestra to play the controversial work.

Dmitri Shostakovitch cabled Dr. Koussevitzky "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

Also on the program, Dorothy Thompson, noted newspaper columnist will speak, and Albert Spalding, violinist, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, will be heard.

The messages were received through the Russian embassy at Washington.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1942

Berkshire Center Concert For Russian War Relief

Maynor, Spalding, Tiatigorsky Guest Artists On Program

Three outstanding artists will be heard in the gala benefit concert for Russian War Relief to be held at the Berkshire Music center, Stockbridge, Mass., Friday night. They include Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit with Edward C. Carter, national chairman of Russian War Relief, Inc., as active chairman. Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music foundation which is operating the Berkshire Music center this season.

Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. From 5 to 5:45, Tanglewood will be "on parade" with activities by a student orchestra, chorus, opera department and instrumental ensembles being given simultaneously on different parts of the grounds of the estate.

The manifestation will be held from 6 to 7 p. m., which will include announcements by distinguished guests. From 7 to 8, a lawn party will be held with visitors bringing their own picnic suppers to eat on the Tanglewood lawns.

The gala concert will follow from 8 to 9:10, the feature of which is the first concert performance of Shostakovich's Symphony No. 7. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra. Following the concert, guest soloists will appear in recital. The evening's program will be concluded with awarding of prizes at 10:15.

The general benefit committee includes: Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward C. Carter, Philip Allen, Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin, Mrs. Robert Littell, Mrs. Frederic Schenck and Albert Spalding.

Others assisting are. Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Albert Spalding, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Sidney Howard, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Carlos M. DeHeredia, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. L. Cushing Goodhue and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

A second performance of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be given by the opera department Thursday night at the theater concert hall.

The final series of symphony concerts will be offered Saturday evening, when the Bach Magnificat and Beethoven Ninth Symphony will be performed, and Sunday afternoon, with performances of the Shostakovich Symphony No. 7 and Haydn's Symphony No. 88.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 10 1942

Noted Soloists For Benefit At Tanglewood

Singer, Cellist And Violinist To Take Part

Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, will be heard at the gala benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief Aug. 14 by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Maynor, talented Negro soprano, was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1940 and has sky-rocketed to fame since. Mr. Piatigorsky, 'cellist, is on the faculty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of Great Barrington and a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

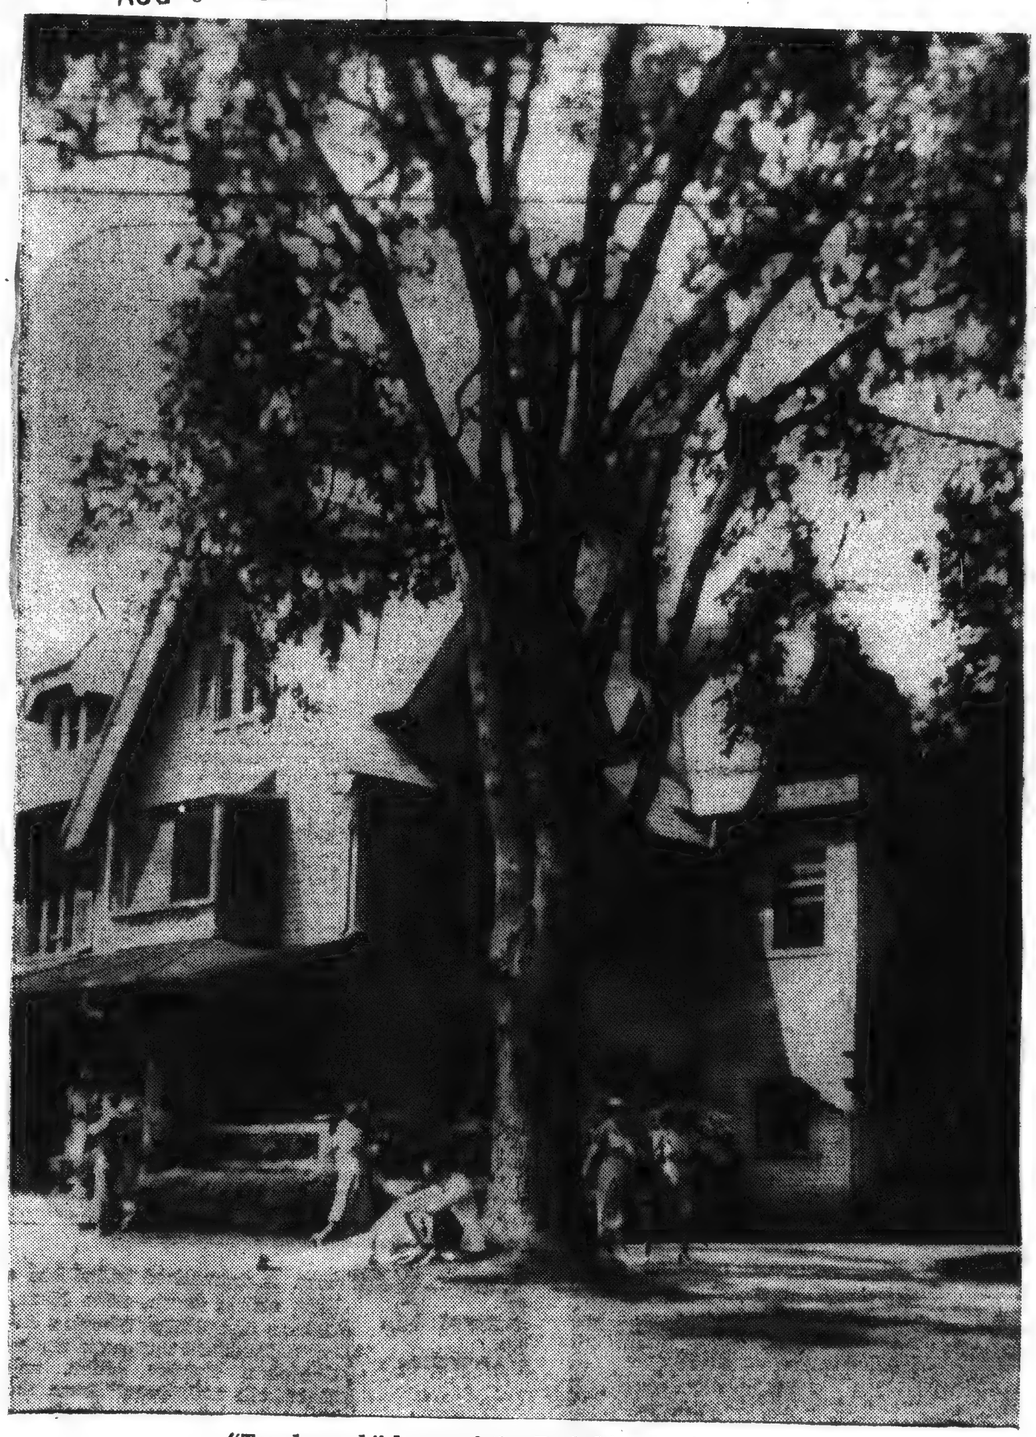
Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit, while Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee and national chairman of Russian War Relief, Inc., is the active chairman.

Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. A full program starting at 5 p. m., has been planned. Until 5:45, Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, the chorus, the opera department, and instrumental ensembles.

From 6 to 7 will come speeches by distinguished guests, from 7 to 8 the lawn party and the gala cent will follow from 8 to 9:10. A feature will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky conductor. After a brief intermission there will be a recital by Miss Maynor, Mr. Piatigorsky and Mr. Spaulding.

Tickets and boxes may be reserved by writing directly to Tanglewood at Lenox.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1942



"Tanglewood," home of the Berkshire Music Center.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 11 1942

Music Center Plans Russian Relief Concert

Symphony No. 7 By Shostakovich To Be Played

Many residents of Waterbury and western Connecticut are expected to attend the benefit concert for the Russian War Relief to be given Friday night at the Berkshire Music center, Stockbridge, Mass.

The Koussevitzky Music foundation, which is operating the center this season, is co-sponsor of the program. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman and Edward C. Carter, national chairman of the Russian War Relief, Inc., is active chairman.

Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. From 5 to 5:45, Tanglewood will be "on parade" with activities by a student orchestra, chorus, opera department and instrumental ensembles being given simultaneously on different parts of the grounds of the estate.

The manifestation will be held from 6 to 7 p. m., which will include announcements by distinguished guests. From 7 to 8, a lawn party will be held with visitors bringing their own picnic suppers to eat on the Tanglewood lawns.

The gala concert will follow from 8 to 9:10, the feature of which is the first concert performance of Shostakovich's Symphony No. 7. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra. Following the concert, guest soloists will appear in recital. The evening's program will be concluded with awarding of prizes at 10:15.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 11 1942

Koussevitzky to Conduct Tanglewood Performance

Benefit concert for Russian War Relief will be presented Friday at Tanglewood under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct an orchestra comprising members of the Berkshire Music Center who are donating their services.

Albert Spaulding will be guest artist. Princess Julianna of The Netherlands will be present. Governor Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the event.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

SHOSTAKOVITCH SENDS CONGRATULATION CABLE TO BERKSHIRE PREMIERE

Lenox, Aug. 11—Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history during the last two weeks, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet embassy at Washington two messages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh symhony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood on Friday, August 14, at the gala concert for Russian War relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony, and Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy theater, first to play it, sent their best wishes.

Although the performance by Dr Serge Koussevitzky and his Berkshire Music Center orchestra of the Shostakovitch symphony will be the most eagerly anticipated item on the program, the list of benefit events is a varied one. Beginning at 5 with "Tanglewood On Parade" at which all departments of the school will perform in three buildings of the center, the program will continue with a manifestation. Dorothy Thompson will be one of the speakers.

The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9.30, after a brief intermission, three famous soloists will give a recital. Dorothy Maynor, Tanglewood's "find," will appear with Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The draw will be the last feature. Already a score of valuable prizes have been contributed. Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and in several Springfield music stores.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 11 1942

Music Center Musicians Play To Many at Museum

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A packed house in the Berkshire Museum last night gave a trio of artists from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood an enthusiastic reception when they played a benefit for the benefit of the Pittsfield Community Music School. The artists were Jean Bedetti, cellist, Louis Speyer, oboist, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Leonard Bernstein, pianist, and of the faculty of the Center.

In this season of unusual musical events, this concert still rates the classification of unusual, both by reason of the instruments employed and of the program selected. Mr. Speyer, assisted by Mr. Bernstein, opened the evening with the sonata for English horn and piano by Paul Hindemith, composed last year when the author was at Tanglewood. In fact, Speyer was late to a picnic rendezvous one evening at the end of August last year. His apologetic explanation of his tardiness was that Hindemith had just called as he, Speyer, was preparing to leave, to bring him the sonata, the ink still wet, "and, after all, one just does not accept a dedication from Hindemith exactly on the run."

Hindemith has explored the timbre and limits of the double-reed wood-winds, and with such a skillful and musicianly executant as Mr. Speyer has succeeded in extending the range of expressiveness beyond the customary plaintive and pastoral effects. His style of writing sets well in the chosen combination. Mr. Speyer later in the program had the opportunity to show both a lighter, gayer type of music and his own individual art in producing it. In his second appearance he chose Mozart's Romance and Rondo for oboe, the English horn's brother pitched a fifth higher, and in this less stark music his beauty of tone and gracefulness of phrasing were more easily discernible.

Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Bernstein were heard in the Beethoven A major sonata, opus 69, for cello and piano, and again later in a group of shorter numbers by Frescobaldi, Breval and Francoeur. The ensemble work of the two artists in the sonata was an achevement of the highest degree, and fully merited the applause it received. Mr. Bedetti's tone, and the fresh maturity of his interpretations were pure delight.

Mr. Bernstein contributed two solos, Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" and Chopin's F sharp major Nocturne. Mr. Copeland was in the audience, and must have been gratified to sense the appreciation of his composition, especially as so graphically performed by Bernstein. The title refers to a dance hall in Mexico City, and the angular pulsating dance rhythms which ensue in unrelenting succession are vehicles for a most colorful performance in the hands of so dramatic an artist as last night's pianist.

The fraternal and co-operative gesture by the Tanglewood artists netted a tidy sum for the Pittsfield school.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL & REPORTER
AUG 8 - 1942

Music Federation Leaders To Meet In Providence

PORTLAND, MAINE, Aug. 8—How best to serve America's cultural interests without in any way relaxing efforts on the victory front is the question which will absorb the attention of members of the board of directors and state and district presidents' council of the National Federation of Music clubs, in a four-day meeting August 30 to September 2 in Providence, R. I., according to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of this city, national president.

"This is a problem too grave to be decided merely by the president and executive committee," Mrs. Gannett said today, in making the first public announcement of the impending meeting. "That is why, in spite of difficult travel conditions, we determined to call the board and council together and seek the advice of their membership from all parts of the country in shaping our wartime progress. Our officers and chairmen have loyally conserved gas and tires and have rearranged vacation schedules to attend. We shall seek their advice as to how to intensify and render more effective our wartime activities, how much of our peace program to conserve, and whether or not it is wise to attempt a biennial convention in 1943. We expect an attendance close to normal."

Most of the board and council sessions will be of intra-organization character. High-lighted among the public meetings is a war service forum, entitled "Music—the Last Outpost for Happiness," which will be held August 31 at either the Providence-Biltmore or the Rhode Island School of Design. Mrs. Gannett and Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Va., national war service chairman, will jointly preside, and Mrs. Ober will speak briefly on the results of the federation's nationwide campaign to provide records, sheet music and musical instruments for the men in the fighting services. Other speakers will be Lt.-Comdr. John D. Zimmerman, U. S. naval reserve, Prof. Arlan Coolidge, director of the music department of Brown university, and a music-minded service man who has benefited from the federation's activities.

To Feature Project

Cultural interests will be to the fore at the "Little Red House" luncheon on September 1 at the Providence-Biltmore, featuring the federation's project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood as a summer music studio for the Berkshire Music center. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Music center, will be the honor guest.

A concert Tuesday evening, September 1, at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hail, a former vice-president of the federation, will feature the public premiere of "Noel," a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winner in the 1941 composition contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Joint meetings of the board of directors and state and district presidents' council will be held August 31 at 10:45 a.m. and 2 p.m. at the Providence-Biltmore; an executive meeting of the council at 9:30 a.m. September 1, and executive meetings of the board at 3 p.m. September 1, and 9 a.m. and 3:45 p.m. Sept. 2. Principal social events will be a complimentary coffee at the Providence-Biltmore at 12:30 p.m. August 31; the Little Red House luncheon, an afternoon walking tour of Providence, a garden party at the historic John Brown house, and a past presidents' assembly frolic on September 1; an old-fashioned New England breakfast, Gay Nineties vintage, on September 2; and a Rhode Island clambake at the Warwick Country club in the late afternoon as the final festivity.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

TEA IS PLANNED AT TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 11—Faculty and students of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood are to be the honored guests at a tea and reception given by the Dr Koussevitzky foundation at Tanglewood Wednesday afternoon. Manager Lester Roberts of Curtis hotel, Lenox, is to be in charge and over 300 are expected. Mrs Sidney Homer is the guest of Mr and Mrs Clarence A. Warden, Haverford, Pa., at the Curtis.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1942

LENOX CONCERTS DRAW 3,000 EACH

Second Pair in Series of Six

PRAISED BY CRITICS

Princess Juliana Attends Both Presentations — Koussevitzky Wins New Acclaim.

Crowds numbering approximately 3,000 persons each time heard the two concerts Saturday night and yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood when Serge Koussevitzky conducted his Berkshire Music center student orchestra in the second pair of concerts in the six-concert series. The highly favorable impression made last week at the initial concerts was reinforced over the week-end, with music critics praising the work of the ensemble.

The presence of the consistently large crowds appeared to deny the crisis caused by war-time restrictions which it was thought might prevent the presentation of any concerts at Tanglewood this season. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, who is summering in Lee was present on Saturday evening and again on Sunday.

Yesterday afternoon's concert embraced the Handel concerto grosso and Martinu's work of the same form, with Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, pianists, as soloists, and Tschaikovski's Fourth symphony. The Handel piece was offered with fine effect by the strings and soloists. Saturday night, the orchestra played Howard Hanson's Third symphony, the Mozart E flat concerto for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists, and Brahm's Fourth symphony in E minor.

Robert Lawrence, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, said in his dispatch:

"If doubt still lingers as to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky for inspiring any instrumental body that plays under his guidance, a visit to the present Berkshire festival, which ends with concerts next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, will convince the dissenter of his error. I have been attending the symphonic series at Tanglewood for the last four years since the building of the Music Shed, and never yet, even with the famed Boston Symphony on the platform, have I heard such a thrilling concert here as that of last night."

Two more concerts will again be offered next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and these two performances will bring to a close the symphony concert program for the season.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1942

PIANO DUO PLAYS AT TANGLEWOOD

Luboshutz and Nemenoff Give Mozart Concerto in E Flat, Koussevitzky Conducting

OPERA BY NICOLAI HEARD

'Merry Wives of Windsor,' a Seldom Performed Work, Is Presented in English

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—The series of concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, which began here at Tanglewood last week, continued with a program given tonight in the music shed. Widely disseminated accounts of the superior work accomplished by the student orchestra at its initial appearances had aroused increased interest, with the result that the attendance was larger than at the opening concert a week ago.

Again the playing of the gifted young musicians evoked fervent enthusiasm. This time in a list which comprised Howard Hanson's Third symphony, the Mozart concerto in E flat for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists, and the Fourth symphony of Brahms. There was a prolonged ovation for the soloists after the concerto in the course of an evening of accomplishment once more reflecting great credit on all concerned.

800 in Opera Audience

Last night in the theatre on the Tanglewood grounds the opera department of the center, which is under the direction of Herbert Graf, presented Otto Nicolai's comic-fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," a work so seldom performed in this country that it probably was heard for the first time by the majority of the audience of 800.

The opera was given in English in a new translation made by Myron Ryan, a student at the center, with the assistance of Boris Goldovsky, who conducted the performance. Mr. Graf staged this revival of the German masterpiece, and Richard Rychtarik designed the sets, which were executed by students of the opera department.

Though overshadowed nowadays by Verdi's "Falstaff," based on the same Shakespearean comedy, Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" has consistently held the boards in Germany with unflagging popularity ever since it was first produced with phenomenal success in Berlin in 1849.

It was introduced to this country in Philadelphia in 1863, later that year was given in New York and was revived in an English version in 1886 by the American Opera Company.

Its latest American presentation, heretofore, was that accorded it this Summer by the students of the Academy of Vocal Arts of Philadelphia.

Work Presented in Full

The opera, in three acts and seven scenes, was given without cuts last night. If those in charge of the production were to be complimented on this decision to stage the work in its entirety, the fact remains that the opera seemed overly long, despite the verve and smoothness of the performance. For although much of this opera, with its excellent libretto by Salomon Mosenthal, is ingratiating and charming, there are frequent lapses in the worth of the music.

The three finales, the opening duet of Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford's first act aria, the further duet of these two worthies in the second act and the buffo duet of Ford and Falstaff in that division of the opera are so many instances of sustained inspiration. But practically all of the numbers allotted Fenton and Anne Pave proved practically bereft of musical interest.

The performance, if uneven, gained momentum as it progressed. All of the opera was admirably acted, but the singing ranged from excellent to mediocre. The most highly finished portrayal, both histrionically and vocally, was provided by Mack Harrell, whose work as Ford was an outstanding achievement.

Mario Lanza is Praised

Second honors went to the Fenton of the cast, Mario Lanza, 21-year-old tenor, an extremely talented, if as yet not completely routined student, whose superb natural voice has few equals among tenors of the day in quality, warmth and power.

His English diction was first rate, as was that of James Pease, the burly Falstaff of the evening, whose delineation of the role, though unconventionally conceived, was so filled with side-splitting comic detail that it fully merited the enthusiasm evoked. A weightier voice, however, is needed for this part.

Myron Ryan's amusing Dr. Caius, and the clever work of John Cassidy and Lukas Foss in the drinking scene, also deserve special mention. Christine Johnson sang her one solo number in rich contralto tones, but Adelaide Abbot, the Mistress Ford and Lois MacMahon, the Anne, were not equal to the exacting music assigned them.

An orchestra of thirty-seven students, mainly drawn from the Department of Music and Culture, played rather roughly, but with animation, under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Mr. Graf's staging of the opera effectively combined Elizabethan procedure with modern realism, and the colorful settings of Mr. Rychtarik could be wholeheartedly commended. The work will be repeated next Thursday night with an alternate cast.

This afternoon in the music shed Olin Downes gave a well attended lecture on chorales and cantatas, which illustrated choral and instrumental music by an elaborate program, with Yves Tinayre, the eminent French vocalist, as soloist.

OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN-REGISTER
AUG 10 1942

War Relief Concert Plans Continued

Lenox, Mass.—Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert and the Berkshire Music Center and Mrs. Guy P. Ganett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood, Aug. 14.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the much discussed Symphony by Shostakovich. Dr. Kousevitsky will conduct the Music Center Orchestra in this work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes for the Russian War Relief Concert may be made by wrting to Russian War Relief, Inc., at 11 E. 35th Street, New York, or Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD
AUG - 9 1942

Studies Choral Directing

CHAPEL HILL, Aug. 10.—Professor John E. Toms of the University Music Department is at the Berkshire Music Festival Center in Massachusetts, studying choral conducting under Hugh Ross, conductor of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Ifar Jones, conductor of the Bethlehem Bach Festival.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL & REPORTER
AUG 8 - 1942

Music Federation Leaders To Meet In Providence

PORTLAND, MAINE, Aug. 8—How best to serve America's cultural interests without in any way relaxing efforts on the victory front is the question which will absorb the attention of members of the board of directors and state and district presidents' council of the National Federation of Music clubs, in a four-day meeting August 30 to September 2 in Providence, R. I., according to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of this city, national president.

"This is a problem too grave to be decided merely by the president and executive committee," Mrs. Gannett said today, in making the first public announcement of the impending meeting. "That is why, in spite of difficult travel conditions, we determined to call the board and council together and seek the advice of their membership from all parts of the country in shaping our wartime progress. Our officers and chairmen have loyally conserved gas and tires and have rearranged vacation schedules to attend. We shall seek their advice as to how to intensify and render more effective our wartime activities, how much of our peace program to conserve, and whether or not it is wise to attempt a biennial convention in 1943. We expect an attendance close to normal."

Most of the board and council sessions will be of intra-organization character. High-lighted among the public meetings is a war service forum, entitled "Music—the Last Outpost for Happiness," which will be held August 31 at either the Providence-Biltmore or the Rhode Island School of Design. Mrs. Gannett and Mrs. Vincent Hilles Ober of Norfolk, Va., national war service chairman, will jointly preside, and Mrs. Ober will speak briefly on the results of the federation's nationwide campaign to provide records, sheet music and musical instruments for the men in the fighting services. Other speakers will be Lt.-Comdr. John D. Zimmerman, U. S. naval reserve, Prof. Arlan Coolidge, director of the music department of Brown university, and a music-minded service man who has benefited from the federation's activities.

To Feature Project

Cultural interests will be to the fore at the "Little Red House" luncheon on September 1 at the Providence-Biltmore, featuring the federation's project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood as a summer music studio for the Berkshire Music center. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Music center, will be the honor guest.

A concert Tuesday evening, September 1, at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hail, a former vice-president of the federation, will feature the public premiere of "Noel," a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winner in the 1941 composition contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Joint meetings of the board of directors and state and district presidents' council will be held August 31 at 10:45 a.m. and 2 p.m. at the Providence-Biltmore; an executive meeting of the council at 9:30 a.m. September 1, and executive meetings of the board at 3 p.m. September 1, and 9 a.m. and 3:45 p.m. Sept. 2. Principal social events will be a complimentary coffee at the Providence-Biltmore at 12:30 p.m. August 31; the Little Red House luncheon, an afternoon walking tour of Providence, a garden party at the historic John Brown house, and a past presidents' assembly frolic on September 1; an old-fashioned New England breakfast, Gay Nineties vintage, on September 2; and a Rhode Island clambake at the Warwick Country club in the late afternoon as the final festivity.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

TEA IS PLANNED AT TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 11—Faculty and students of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood are to be the honored guests at a tea and reception given by the Dr Koussevitzky foundation at Tanglewood Wednesday afternoon. Manager Lester Roberts of Curtis hotel, Lenox, is to be in charge and over 300 are expected. Mrs Sidney Homer is the guest of Mr and Mrs Clarence A. Warden, Haverford, Pa., at the Curtis.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1942

LENOX CONCERTS DRAW 3,000 EACH

Second Pair in Series of Six

PRAISED BY CRITICS

Princess Juliana Attends Both Presentations — Koussevitzky Wins New Acclaim.

Crowds numbering approximately 3,000 persons each time heard the two concerts Saturday night and yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood when Serge Koussevitzky conducted his Berkshire Music center student orchestra in the second pair of concerts in the six-concert series. The highly favorable impression made last week at the initial concerts was reinforced over the weekend, with music critics praising the work of the ensemble.

The presence of the consistently large crowds appeared to deny the crisis caused by war-time restrictions which it was thought might prevent the presentation of any concerts at Tanglewood this season. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, who is summering in Lee was present on Saturday evening and again on Sunday.

Yesterday afternoon's concert embraced the Handel concerto grosso and Martinu's work of the same form, with Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, pianists, as soloists, and Tschaikovski's Fourth symphony. The Handel piece was offered with fine effect by the strings and soloists. Saturday night, the orchestra played Howard Hanson's Third symphony, the Mozart E flat concerto for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists, and Brahm's Fourth symphony in E minor.

Robert Lawrence, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, said in his dispatch:

"If doubt still lingers as to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky for inspiring any instrumental body that plays under his guidance, a visit to the present Berkshire festival, which ends with concerts next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, will convince the dissenter of his error. I have been attending the symphonic series at Tanglewood for the last four years since the building of the Music Shed, and never yet, even with the famed Boston Symphony on the platform, have I heard such a thrilling concert here as that of last night."

Two more concerts will again be offered next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and these two performances will bring to a close the symphony concert program for the season.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1942

PIANO DUO PLAYS AT TANGLEWOOD

Luboshutz and Nemenoff Give Mozart Concerto in E Flat, Koussevitzky Conducting

OPERA BY NICOLAI HEARD

'Merry Wives of Windsor,' a Seldom Performed Work, Is Presented in English

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—The series of concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, which began here at Tanglewood last week, continued with a program given tonight in the music shed. Widely disseminated accounts of the superior work accomplished by the student orchestra at its initial appearances had aroused increased interest, with the result that the attendance was larger than at the opening concert a week ago.

Again the playing of the gifted young musicians evoked fervent enthusiasm. This time in a list which comprised Howard Hanson's Third symphony, the Mozart concerto in E flat for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists, and the Fourth symphony of Brahms. There was a prolonged ovation for the soloists after the concerto in the course of an evening of accomplishment once more reflecting great credit on all concerned.

800 in Opera Audience

Last night in the theatre on the Tanglewood grounds the opera department of the center, which is under the direction of Herbert Graf, presented Otto Nicolai's comic-fantastic opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," a work so seldom performed in this country that it probably was heard for the first time by the majority of the audience of 800.

The opera was given in English in a new translation made by Myron Ryan, a student at the center, with the assistance of Boris Goldovsky, who conducted the performance. Mr. Graf staged this revival of the German masterpiece, and Richard Rychtarik designed the sets, which were executed by students of the opera department.

Though overshadowed nowadays by Verdi's "Falstaff," based on the same Shakespearean comedy, Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" has consistently held the boards in Germany with unflagging popularity ever since it was first produced with phenomenal success in Berlin in 1849.

It was introduced to this country in Philadelphia in 1863, later that year was given in New York and was revived in an English version in 1886 by the American Opera Company.

Its latest American presentation, heretofore, was that accorded it this Summer by the students of the Academy of Vocal Arts of Philadelphia.

Work Presented in Full

The opera, in three acts and seven scenes, was given without cuts last night. If those in charge of the production were to be complimented on this decision to stage the work in its entirety, the fact remains that the opera seemed overly long, despite the verve and smoothness of the performance. For although much of this opera, with its excellent libretto by Salomon Mosenthal, is ingratiating and charming, there are frequent lapses in the worth of the music.

The three finales, the opening duet of Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford's first act aria, the further duet of these two worthies in the second act and the buffo duet of Ford and Falstaff in that division of the opera are so many instances of sustained inspiration. But practically all of the numbers allotted Fenton and Anne Pave proved practically bereft of musical interest.

The performance, if uneven, gained momentum as it progressed. All of the opera was admirably acted, but the singing ranged from excellent to mediocre. The most highly finished portrayal, both histrionically and vocally, was provided by Mack Harrell, whose work as Ford was an outstanding achievement.

Mario Lanza is Praised

Second honors went to the Fenton of the cast, Mario Lanza, 21-year-old tenor, an extremely talented, if as yet not completely routined student, whose superb natural voice has few equals among tenors of the day in quality, warmth and power.

His English diction was first rate, as was that of James Pease, the burly Falstaff of the evening, whose delineation of the role, though unconventionally conceived, was so filled with side-splitting comic detail that it fully merited the enthusiasm evoked. A weightier voice, however, is needed for this part.

Myron Ryan's amusing Dr. Caius, and the clever work of John Cassidy and Lukas Foss in the drinking scene, also deserve special mention. Christine Johnson sang her one solo number in rich contralto tones, but Adelaide Abbot, the Mistress Ford and Lois MacMahon, the Anne, were not equal to the exacting music assigned them.

An orchestra of thirty-seven students, mainly drawn from the Department of Music and Culture, played rather roughly, but with animation, under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Mr. Graf's staging of the opera effectively combined Elizabethan procedure with modern realism, and the colorful settings of Mr. Rychtarik could be wholeheartedly commended. The work will be repeated next Thursday night with an alternate cast.

This afternoon in the music shed Olin Downes gave a well attended lecture on chorales and cantatas, which illustrated choral and instrumental music by an elaborate program, with Yves Tinayre, the eminent French vocalist, as soloist.

OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN-REGISTER
AUG 10 1942

War Relief Concert Plans Continued

Lenox, Mass.—Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert and the Berkshire Music Center and Mrs. Guy P. Ganett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood, Aug. 14.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the much discussed Symphony by Shostakovich. Dr. Kousevitsky will conduct the Music Center Orchestra in this work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes for the Russian War Relief Concert may be made by wrting to Russian War Relief, Inc., at 11 E. 35th Street, New York, or Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD
AUG 10 1942

Studies Choral Directing

CHAPEL HILL, Aug. 10.—Professor John E. Toms of the University Music Department is at the Berkshire Music Festival Center in Massachusetts, studying choral conducting under Hugh Ross, conductor of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Ifar Jones, conductor of the Bethlehem Bach Festival.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1942

Berkshire Concert Is Heard by 4000

Sanroma and Zighera, Pianists, Soloists with Youthful Orchestra

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 9.—This afternoon the threat of showers marred ideal weather conditions for the first time at Tanglewood since the beginning of the Berkshire Music Center Festival, Aug. 1. Nevertheless, there was an attendance of nearly four thousand. Dr. Koussevitzky and his youthful orchestra were resoundedly applauded in a program which opened with the classic severities of Handel and closed with emotional "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor," by Tschaikowsky. The soloists of the afternoon were Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, pianists.

Youthful artistry is no better demonstrated than in the string section of the exhilirating orchestra. The Handel Concerto Grosso for strig orchestra" (No. 12 in B minor) admirably illustrated the results of the conductor's guidance. The Handel work was given a sweeping dignity that is found nowhere else in the literature. It wasn't a bold or forward exposition but a purposeful presentation of masses, little and small, of tonal beauty. The twelve "concerto grossi" of Handel were hardly exercises in string writing but rather were musical thoughts best expressed by the majestic richness that the strings produce. From the opening "Large" of this familiar concerto there was precision in attacks and phrase endings with, however, a less steady maintenance of rhythm during phrases. The remaining two slow movements were played with steadfast, posed bows, bringing out the restful pointedness of Handel melody. The neat, clear cut bowing which Kousseivitzky insists upon was in evidence in the "Allegro" movements.

Special Interest

Martinu, Czech composer, is one of the foundation's instructors in composition. His "Concerto Grosso for Chamber orchestra" was of special interest by its contrast to the Handel just played, as well as by its own structural virtues. While being entirely cognizant of the constructive merits of this work one sensed a poverty of thematic material in the first movement which necessitated repetitious development. There was interesting use of two pianos as purely percussion instruments. The themes of the second movement were of the nature of atonal wanderings, and although interesting devices were used in treatment they seemed singularly un-productive.

There was a cacophonous last movement which led to an abrupt change of tempo and perfunctory ending. Mr. Sanroma's prolific repertory and adaptitude to as many styles is truly astonishing. His appearance this afternoon in the Martinu work, although less in the nature of soloist than ensemble, again illustrated his vital, brilliant style.

Mr. Zighera, whom we have heretofore known only as harpist and conductor, proved himself entirely equal to Mr. Martinu's pianistic foils.

Orchestra More "At Home"

There are many expressions of weariness with Tschaikowsky. We readily acknowledge the superficiality of much of his writing, but there is so much in his "Symphony, No. 4" that portrays with remarkable vividness a strategy, remorse and hope that seem to have been destined for today. Tschaikowsky expressed a despair that is not consistent with present concepts. His belief was that the "fatum" or generating force of the entire work is an "inexorable force that prevents our hopes of happiness from being realized." Today's performance by Koussevitzky failed in its melancholic mission, largely because of the healthy pace at which the first and last movements were taken.

The performace of the Tschaikowsky work certainly equalled that of the Brahms "Symphony, No. 4" played last night. In spite of the excessive speed, the orchestra seemed more "at home" and less involved than with the internal complexities of the Brahms score. Whereas the string and wood-wind sections have frequently distinguished themselves, attention was called to the equally efficient participation of all sections. We were particularly well pleased with a decided improvement in the brasses. Obviously, Koussevitzky's conception of Tschaikowsky which always seems to lend significance to his writing and obliterate artificiality to a maximum was very little hadicapped by this recently assembled organization. Their sincerity and high degree of proficiency are truly an inspiration.

Chamber Music Concert Presented

LENOX, Aug. 9.—The fourth in the series of Berkshire Music Center chamber music concerts took place tonight in "Tanglewood's" chamber music hall before an audience of 250. This series is of special value for it permits keener observation of the talents of individual students of the foundation than do the large orchestral concerts.

One is not frequently impressed with the performance of one member of an ensemble, but Robert Ripley's reading of the cello score of Faure's "Quartet in C Minor" was an exception. Particularly the first movement revealed an impelling verve and remarkable maturity of style. This 20-year-old artist from West Canaan, N. H., is at present a student of Felix Salmond (he was formerly a student of Jean Bedetti). Among those who consider him unusually gifted is Gregor Piatigorsky, who is considered by many the world's greatest cellist.

If one would truly know Haydn, let him listen to the string quartets (of which there are 80). The one in "E-flat Major, Opus 33 No. 2" was played tonight by Melvin Ritter and Josept Petter, violins; Stanley Solomon, viola; Helen Bullis, cello. There is an even greater classic purity and authenticity in such a work as tonight's than in massive orchestral compositions for the instruments themselves have not changed.

Euphonious Group

Tonight's performers gave a neat, unfettered expose of the Haydn score. The "allegro moderato" was clear musical diction, the "largo" was tonally rich and exceptionally co-ordinate in passages that required utmost precision as did the final "presto."

The Cittorio Rieti "sonata" introduced an uncommon but euphonious group of instruments—Margaret Denison, piano; Kenneth Emery, flute; Raymond Toubman, oboe; Gabriel Selig, Bassoon. This performance was of outstanding merit, for it brought out in full measure the inherent humor of a difficult score. Emphasis was necessarily concentrated upon the melodic content. We sensed the influence of Ottorino Respighi (with whom Rieti studied) in the "allegretto" movement. The "adagio doloroso" was a delightful melange of the obvious phrases of an Italian aria and the secondary theme of the "Funeral March" by Chopin. It was in this movement that the quartet excelled, although the intricate "vivace" was rhyhmically precise.

The final work was Brahms' "Piano Quarter, Opus 25." Its performers were David Garvey, piano; Ruthabeth Kruege, violin; Harold Sorin, viola; and Marion Davies, cello.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 10 1942

Orchestra To Play Seventh Symphony

Lavish Music Feast at Berkshire Music Center to Benefit Russian War Relief

A music feast so lavish that memory fails to recall another even approaching it will be spread next Friday evening by hospitable Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in the sylvan Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War Relief.

Under Koussevitsky's baton, the Center's 110-piece symphony orchestra, enthusiastically praised by critics after its debut two weeks ago, will present the American concert premiere of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony.

The premiere of the new symphony by the famous Russian composer will be in itself enough to make the Berkshire Music Center the musical capital of the country on that evening. But in addition, Dr. Koussevitsky will present as soloists Dorothy Maynor, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

And that is not all. The formal concert will begin at 8 p. m., but at the unusual concert hour of 5 p. m., the advanced students of Dr. Koussevitsky's music school will present "The Berkshire Music Center on Parade." The second symphony orchestra of the Center will play in the beautiful open "Shed," the chorus will offer a recital in the Barn, the Center's opera company will present excerpts from "Porgy and Bess" in the theatre, and in the Chamber Music Hall instrumental ensembles are planned.

On the basis of attendance at Berkshire concerts in past years, such a program would be expected to draw from 15,000 to 20,000 persons. Transportation problems undoubtedly will cut attendance next Friday, but at headquarters of Russian War Relief, Inc., 11 E. 35th street, where tickets are on sale, it was said that there evidently is going to be a large attendance from New York. Many ticket purchasers have announced plans for automobile pooling and one group of ten enthusiasts planned to start this weekend on a leisurely hike to the concert.

A special committee of Berkshire residents, determined not to let the gas and rubber crisis interfere with the concert, has made every arrangement to transport visitors the one mile from the center of Lenox to the Center. The committee is headed by Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, whose summer home is in nearby Lee, with Dr. Hugh Cabot of Boston as co-chairman. Even hayricks, just released from the mowing season in the country around the Center, are being mustered to offer comfortable and appropriate transportation.

There will be a picnic supper on the grounds of the Center between 7 and 8 p. m.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 10 1942

Spotlight On Berkshires

The musical spotlight shifted this week from New York to the Berkshires, where Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has inaugurated a summer concert season with his student orchestra in place of the usual Berkshire Music Festival, which was cancelled for lack of means of transportation. Even the Youth Orchestra, however, is attracting a large musical contingent to Lenox and accommodations are almost at a premium. Treating Dr. Koussevitzky's experiment with the utmost seriousness, New York has sent some of its leading music critics to Tanglewood to pass upon the merits of the youth concerts. That Dr. Koussevitzky is scoring "a remarkable artistic and popular success" seemed to be the verdict after the first few programs ranged from the stirring strains of Sousa marches to the exacting intricacies of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

Incidentally Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra is composed approximately 50 per cent of girls, which should give the feminists a thrill.

The highlights of this week's concerts at Tanglewood will be the huge Russian War benefit Friday, when Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, "cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the featured artists and Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, composed during the Siege of Moscow, will be given its first concert performance in this hemisphere. Dr. Koussevitzky has taken sharp issue with those critics who after the initial American radio performance by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra characterized the score as "banal," "uneven" and "program music." Coming emphatically to the defense of his young fellow countryman, Dr. Koussevitzky has said "Shostakovich is a genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven."

"No one since Beethoven," Dr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "has had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has....His language is as rich as the world. His music is absolutely universal."

With such a defense as this, critics will await with unusual eagerness Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of a score born in the days of Russia's greatest agony, and what may ultimately prove to Be Russia's greatest triumph.

Boy 12, At Lewisohn Stadium

It was not in the Berkshires alone that musical youth had its innings this week. A 12-year-old boy came to the podium in the Lewisohn Stadium on Thursday evening and gave concert patrons one of the greatest of the season's thrills. Outfitted in long black trousers and a white mess jacket, Lorin Maazel, the youthful conductor, wielded his baton with authority in a program that would have been none too easy of conquest for a much more mature musician. Closing one's eyes as the Philharmonic-Symphony musicians bowed and trumpeted their way through the tricky score of the Beethoven C Minor Symphony, it was hard to credit that a boy of less than high school age was their guiding genius. Nor was young Maazel less happy in his leadership of the Marriage of Figaro overture; the March Slav of Tschiakowsky, or the Nutcracker Suite of the same composer. Fluent, polished and intelligent were all the interpretations. Young Maazel may have a long distance to go before he becomes another Toscanini or Koussevitsky, but that his feet are set squarely on the road to conductorial fame there is little doubt.

Light Opera Hard Hit

Light opera has had hard going at the Stadium this Summer because of the frequent rain, but the long promised performance of Johann Strouss's Gipsy Baron will be given Thursday and Friday of this week, unless the ubiquitous lightning, which prevented last week's scheduled performance by demolishing the band shell, makes another unanticipated visit.

Metropolitan Well Financed

For all the talk earlier in the season about the Metropolitan Opera having to go out of business for lack of funds, a financial report made public this week—the first to be given similar publicity since 1905—shows that the opera will have a backlog of $125,000 after summer salaries taxes, etc., have been disbursed, to launch it upon its 1942-1943 season.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1942

Koussevitzky Leads Students In Two Concerts

Hanson Symphony, Mozart and Tchaikovsky Works Presented in Berkshires

By Robert Lawrence

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—The second week end of the Berkshire Music Festival ended this afternoon with a splendid concert by the student orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 4, in F minor, and two concerti grossi, the traditional B minor, No. 12, for string orchestra of Handel and the recent work for chamber orchestra by the Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu, made up the program. Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera played the two solo piano parts in Martinu's work.

There is time now to discuss last night's concert by the same orchestra at greater length than was possible in yesterday's review. All of the works on the program — Howard Hanson's symphony No. 3: Mozart's concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra (K. 365), with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists; and Brahms's symphony No. 4 in E minor—were brilliantly performed. But any estimate of this concert in retrospect must take, basically, the form of a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky.

Judged not only by his previous achievements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but more essentially by the results that he has achieved with a student orchestra exactly five weeks old, this conductor must be accounted as one of the greatest cultural figures of our time.

Inspires His Players

If doubt still lingers as to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky for inspiring any instrumental body that plays under his guidance, a visit to the present Berkshire festival, which ends with concerts next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, will convince the dissenter of his error. I have been attending the symphonic series at Tanglewood for the last four years since the building of the Music Shed, and never yet, even with the famed Boston Symphony on the platform, have I heard such a thrilling concert here as that of last night.

First of all, it had the spark that can come only from youth—the enthusiasm and receptivity of the young players, who have their careers fresh before them and have not slipped into the deadening ways of routine, and the eternal youth of a conductor whose flame for music has never burned low. Then there was the tone quality, amazingly individual in essence when one considers the brief amount of time that this organiaztion has been in existence.

Brilliantly Performed

The Hanson symphony, which opened the program, went brilliantly. It is easy enough to point out certain derivative passages in this work. Ravel (of the general dance from "Daphnis and Chloe"), Borodin and Mahler—whose Scherzo of the C minor symphony, No. 2, has been incorporated somewhat bodily in Dr. Hanson's Tempo Scherzando movement—are unmistakably present. But in a composition that has the breadth and dignity of the Hanson symphony, a lack of complete originality does not always stand as the basis for adverse criticism.

An equally fine performance was given the next work on the program —Mozart's E flat concerto for two pianos. The orchestral accompaniment was first class. In the solo parts, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff acquitted themselves with a full measure of distinction.

With the space at hand, one can do no more in describing the overwhelming performance of the Brahms E Minor Symphony, with which the concert ended, than to speak of it in general terms. Of what moment to single out the powerful coda of the first allegro, the beautifully played slow movement, the most justly paced reading of the scherzo I have yet heard, and the superb sonorities of the final movement, with melting solo passages by the flutist and the three trombones?

No less impressive was the reading of the Handel concerto grosso, which began this afternoon's program. The larghetto, containing one of the most eloquent melodies in all music, received its due, and the other movements were read with fine effect by the string body and solo instruments. It was perhaps a rash choice to follow up the Handel with Martinu's new work in the same form. Comparisons are inevitable. But, inside the limits of its own creative approach, the Martinu concerto is a good one. Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, at the two pianos, played with the dazzling objective style that the score demanded, and they were ably companioned by the orchestra.

Activity is accelerated at Tanglewood as the Berkshire Music Center swings into its second week of concerts and opera. Above. an orchestral rehearsal conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

AUG 9 - 1942

THE ARTS

Music in the Air

Dignified dowagers thumbed rides. Paunchy gentlemen laboriously pedaled bicycles. Others jammed into "shared" automobiles, and haywagons waited at the bus station to give gratuitous lifts. Thus, in the gas-rationed East, did audiences night after night flock to Conductor Serge Koussevitzky's annual outdoor music festival, which opened last week in Tanglewood, Mass.

The war had already threatened to affect the Berkshire Festival more seriously. Several months ago the Boston Symphony Orchestra canceled this year's plans and withdrew its usual financial support, but Dr. Koussevitzky provided the backing out of his own pocket and recruited 105 players from his Berkshire Music Center whom he ...ped into orchestral shape in ...

...e of the players were relatively green, some had played in the festival before, and all were young. There was a little trouble in the string section as a result of damp weather. But the show went on and critics spared no adjectives in describing the programs.

The chef d'oeuvre of the event was to be the first U. S. concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's already famous seventh symphony, which NBC's Arturo Toscanini recently presented over the air and which Conductor Koussevitzky's undaunted youths will play on Friday for the benefit of Russian War Relief.

On another sector of the music front there was unnatural silence. Four weeks of the National High School Music Camp's eight-week season at Interlochen, Mich., had already passed without the regular Saturday night broadcasts that have been a feature of the camp for 12 years. The reason: James Caesar Petrillo, the American Federation of Musicians' fuehrer, banned the broadcasts because he objected to "amateur musicians competing with professionals."

The ban also balked a soldier-musicisian performance at the opening of New York's swanky Times Square Service Men's Station. Thereupon, amid nationwide catcalling, the Federal Communications Commission's James Lawrence Fly stopped viewing the situation "with serious concern," and called Petrillo into Federal Court on charges of restraint of trade in connection with another recent ban, the one on phonograph records.

At week's end the situation was building to its grand finale, explained Petrillo: "I am only a messenger for 138,000 musicians, who have, through their convention ordered the step taken ... the AFM in the recording sit...

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 9 - 1942

Program Notes:

Wellington Symphony Or Another Eroica?

By John Rosenfield.

THREE WEEKS ago Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was heard in this territory over Station KGKO as part of the most remarkable premiere ever staged for a composition. The symphony was played for the first time in America by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under the definitive baton of Arturo Toscanini.

Now the Shostakovitch Seventh goes to Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, who will give its first public performance on Aug. 14 with his student orchestra in the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass. After the Toscanini presentation over radio many critics, including us, used in effect such denigrating terms as "banal," "uneven," "program music," "anticlimactic."

Koussevitzky, with his own type premiere cooking, has fired away at such strictures. "The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch," says he, "is the work of a genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven. Musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said. To criticize the work of a man who is without a doubt a genius one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal. No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical materia that Shostakovitch has. He is the great master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Koussevitzky uses good language and he evinces a faith that will be most useful to his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh. But, once more, there is a case of asking the critics to do too much and blaming them for doing as much as they have done. A critic is a sort of reporter assigned to making musical news and comment within twelve hours after the event. For the newspaper critic there is no posterity. He can only make a contemporaneous record.

Practically every reviewer felt that the Shostakovitch Seventh was primarily program music descriptive of an event (the siege of Leningrad by Hitler's hordes) that is bound to lose its vividness as life rolls away from the event. When the Seventh Symphony is played as music and not as an esthetic communique from a valued ally as now its universal values will be all-important. What the symphony says in the vague abstractions of suspense, tragedy, turmoil, martiality, frustration, valor will have validity. When the fervors of this war shall have worn off, the Shostakovitch Seventh will have place in concert halls as good music or it will have no place.

We have repeatedly told The News readers that our acquaintance with the Shostavitch Symphonies is limited to the First, Fifth, Sixth and now the Seventh. We can only say again that we place the Seventh above the Sixth in technical achievement and expansion of orchestral vocabulary but below the First and Fifth in composure, in aim and in integrity. We regard Shostakovitch as a full member of the elite club of symphonists but question whether or not he has added much that is new to Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Sibelius or even certain isolated achievements of Gustav Mahler.

It is possible that Shostakovitch, in composing the Seventh Symphony, thought he was writing the Twentieth Century equivalent of Beethoven's Eroica. What he probably wrote is the analogue of Beethoven's Wellington Symphony, a composition now so discredited that it is neither played today nor listed among the nine great symphonies.

Most conductors praise the abnormally long first movement of the Shostakovitch Seventh even when conceding the unimportance of the other three movements. This movement has its moments of magnificence and excitement. Yet there are such recognizable echoes of the Tchaikovsky Fifth, the Sibelius Fifth and Ravel's Bolero that the listener cannot avoid comparisons. There have been some blasts at critics who say that this passage comes from Beethoven, this from Brahms, this from Whoozit. But is this just pedantic cavil? If a composer is not sufficiently individual to conceal the origins of his inventions, who is at fault?

The critics who placed Shostakovitch's Seventh somewhat lower in the scale than Beethoven's Eroica probably never will live to see this judgment either confirmed or repudiated. If they are wrong they will afford one more ironic footnote to musical history along with the critics of Wagner's Lohengrin, Brahms' First and Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps. These are the most spectacular cases of erroneous judgment. Nobody bothers to write how many more times the critics have been right.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1942

MUSIC OF THE TIMES

AMERICAN PLAYERS

Koussevitzky Shows Symphonic State of The Nation at Stockbridge

By OLIN DOWNES

WHEN Leopold Stokowski announced the formation of his Youth Orchestra several years ago and in due course conducted brilliant concerts of that organization in principal cities of both the Americas, the concert-going public was astonished at the results achieved and at the capacities, newly revealed, of the young generation of orchestral players being educated in this country.

Without in the least detracting from that achievement, which would have been remarkable under any circumstances, it nevertheless holds true that a considerable factor in the quality of the performances was due to the presence in the Youth Orchestra of a number of the first desk men of the Philadelphia Orchestra, thoroughly accustomed to Mr. Stokowski's conceptions and methods as a conductor, and placed in key positions among their younger colleagues.

But a week ago last night Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the first public concert by the student orchestra of his Berkshire Music Centre at Stockbridge, Mass., and this could be called the debut of a one hundred per cent American youth organization. This orchestra, in its full symphonic proportions of over one hundred players, is composed entirely of graduate students and young professional musicians, boys and girls, in the vicinity of twenty years of age, who were assembled this season and enrolled as students at the Berkshire Music Centre on less than a month's notice, and there trained, in just four weeks' time, to the pitch of excellence unanimously acclaimed by reviewers who went from many places to hear them.

All-Student Personnel

There were no first desk men from a parent orchestra to stabilize the situation or confer upon the ensemble the character of the highest professional finish in every solo part. There are twenty or twenty-one of the first desk men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the faculty of Dr. Koussevitzky's school. They assiduously train their pupils in the technic of the routine and musicianly treatment of orchestral music. But that is the place where their connection with the concerts stops. It was a body of the best young American orchestral players available after the demands of the military draft had been fulfilled who made the ranks of the new organization. It was their first experience in concerts of such a nature, under a conductor of Dr. Koussevitzky's rank. He had been certain in advance of the occasion that first desk men from an older orchestra would not be needed for representative performance—even if he had been able to get them, which was not possible. He could not have had them, since it was part of the agreement, when the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra permitted Dr. Koussevitzky the use of the grounds and the administration buildings at Tanglewood for his music school, that no member of the Boston Symphony could play in the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Centre.

Thus the young orchestra was on its own. Its performance was not only testimony to the capacities of the players, and the repeatedly proved ability of their leader in orchestra building but thrilling evidence of the development of orchestral training in this country, which Dr. Koussevitzky enthusiastically acknowledges as one of the most significant aspects of American culture.

Many States Represented

Graduates of leading institutions of musical education in many States contribute to his ensemble. Back of their accomplishment is to be realized the remarkable work done in the course of the last quarter-century by the most progressive of the American high schools in the education of musically disposed students in ensemble playing and in the body of the symphonic repertory. More than once these columns have had reason to pay tribute to this development. Its results are cropping out everywhere. Nor is it a phenomenon characteristic of any one part of this country, or group of States. No doubt some of the great cities and some of the States are well ahead of others in this aspect of education: the development is nation-wide, a growth that is putting an end to the conception of music in America as an importation. In the orchestra field, especially, the contrary is the fact.

Further testimony in this direction was furnished by the attendance at the concerts of the new student orchestra. It will be remembered that after every effort on the part of the Berkshire Symphonic Association and its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, to continue this season with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the past six years by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Festival was abandoned, in deference to the government ruling on limitations of gasoline and because under such circumstances it was feared that it would be impossible to provide transportation for its public of the concerts. All that the Festival Association could do under the circumstances was to generously donate to Dr. Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Centre the use and the maintainance of the Music Shed for his concerts and to give them the support and endorsement of the association. For these concerts, with the exception of the boxes, there were no reserved seats, and the prices were, of course, much less than those for the performances in previous years of the Boston Symphony.

Concerts Well Attended

No great attendance was expected. No such attendance as that of the former season of course materialized. But in some way an astonishing number of people from the immediate vicinity and surrounding country did come to the concerts, including a nucleus of former box holders of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival who kept their seats and paid proportionately for them, a considerable number who apparently had saved their week's gasoline—or their gasoline for weeks—for this single purpose, and a very considerable number who simply walked to a concert hall which is reached neither by train, bus nor by any other form of public conveyance.

In a word, the citizens of the Berkshires greatly wanted to hear symphonic music at a time of the year when they had become accustomed to it as a part of their lives, and they did not intend to lose the opportunity for it—an opportunity appreciated more perhaps in wartime than it would have been in any other period. In fact, the results in audiences that numbered nearly six thousand for the total of the first two concerts indicated that if the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been given, with or without much needed gasoline and with the customary preliminary publicity, it could have had big attendance and possibly balanced its budget.

But that is conjecture and beside the point. The upshot of it all may indeed be a blessing in disguise because of the proof which it provided that great symphonic performances and public enthusiasm for them do not necessarily rest upon the presence of crack orchestras.

Creative Spirit

They rest on something else: upon the spirit of music, particularly native to talented youth, and sound training, and masterful leadership. If this spirit, which fizzed from the Koussevitzky performances like champagne—this "élan"—is present we have an essence which in the highest degree is creative. And such was the case at Tanglewood. The technical capacity, the spirit, the leadership were all there. The young musicians had utter faith in their leader, as he had in them. Those who know Dr. Koussevitzky for an extremely hard worker and indefatigable drillmaster saw him train his boys and girls with an energy and care that even he had hardly brought to another musical situation.

The unanimous pronouncements of the reviewers who reported the concerts need not be repeated or summarized here. None pretended that the orchestra has the silken sheen, brilliancy, luminosity of tone, sheer technical virtuosity of the incomparable orchestra that Dr. Koussevitzky conducts in the wintertime. But in point of sensitiveness, a superb ensemble and a pervading spirit that carried everything before it these were performances to remember. It is safe to say, writing far from the scene, that the first two concerts set the key for the quality of the series. There were obvious, inevitable tensions and some slight technical slips at the opening performances, given after a first few weeks of rehearsals, when not only the repertory of the first two concerts but of the whole six was blocked out.

A long perspective is unfolded by the results of these concerts, not merely for a locality, or a special series of performances, or for Dr. Koussevitzky's individual activities or those of the school whose aims and ideals he has so profoundly at heart. His accomplishment is one that will have repercussions in the whole musical future of this country.

Students in the stage designing class at the Center receive practical instruction under the supervision of Richard Rychtarik of the Opera Department.

The cast, directed by Herbert Graf, center, and Boris Goldovsky, left, rehearses for the second performance of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be given Thursday.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 10 1942

Famous Soloists to Take Part In Russian Relief Concert

By Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Aug. 10—Three world famous soloists have contributed their services for the gala benefit concert of Friday, sponsored by the Koussevitsky foundation for Russian War Relief. They are Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist, all of whom have been heard at Worcester Auditorium. The feature of the concert will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Shostakovitch's controversial "Symphony No. 7."

Berkshire Music Center will be on parade with activities extending from 5 o'clock in the afternoon with a fanfare to 10.15 o'clock when prizes will be drawn, for which chances have been sold since the start of the festival. Distinguished guests will be called upon to give expression to their opinions associated with the occasion. Reservations for boxes have been made by prominent sponsors, including the George N. Jeppsons of Worcester. Many celebrated artists will be in evidence, including the brilliant Metropolitan soprano, Lily Pons, and the noted contralto, Madame Louise Homer.

During the last week, the 253 students of the foundation industriously have been preparing and performing programs. Monday through Thursday were spent in constant attendance at classes and rehearsals. Friday night marked the first of two performances of Nicolais' frivolous opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor." It will be repeated Thursday night with many changes in cast. Saturday night and yesterday afternoon, Koussevitsky conducted two symphony concerts, with Pianists Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff, Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera as soloists. All are well-known to Worcester audiences. The two major symphony works were the "Symphonies, No. 4" by Brahms and Tschaikowsky.

County Students

It is interesting to note that Massachusetts is the second state in the number of enrollments, lacking five to equal New York's 61. The Koussevitsky Music Foundation benefits students from 25 states, four from Mexico and one each from Cuba and Canada. Miss Ruth M. White of 15 Sherburne avenue, represents Worcester. From the vicinity are Miss Ruth Moorehouse of Hopedale, Naki Cheetham of Athol, and Miss Olivia Silberberg of Cambridge, formerly of Worcester. The last named was graduated from Cambridge's Longy School of Music.

In addition to Thursday night's opera and the Russian benefit concert Friday, the fifth symphony concert will be given Saturday night. It will include the Bach "Magnificat in D" and Beethoven's monumental "Symphony No. 9" for orchestra, soloists and chorus. At Sunday afternoon's final concert, two works previously played will be repeated—Haydn's "G Major Symphony" and the "Seventh Symphony" of Dmitri Shostakovitch. The final chamber music concert will take place Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

SHOSTAKOVITCH SENDS CONGRATULATION CABLE TO BERKSHIRE PREMIERE

Lenox, Aug. 11—Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history during the last two weeks, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet embassy at Washington two messages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh symhony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood on Friday, August 14, at the gala concert for Russian War relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony, and Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy theater, first to play it, sent their best wishes.

Although the performance by Dr Serge Koussevitzky and his Berkshire Music Center orchestra of the Shostakovitch symphony will be the most eagerly anticipated item on the program, the list of benefit events is a varied one. Beginning at 5 with "Tanglewood On Parade" at which all departments of the school will perform in three buildings of the center, the program will continue with a manifestation. Dorothy Thompson will be one of the speakers.

The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9.30, after a brief intermission, three famous soloists will give a recital. Dorothy Maynor, Tanglewood's "find," will appear with Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The draw will be the last feature. Already a score of valuable prizes have been contributed. Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and in several Springfield music stores.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFF TO VISIT LENOX

Envoy Will Hear Shostakovitch Symphony Tonight.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Soviet Russia's Ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Centre in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subject to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh Symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOV AT LENOX

LENOX, Aug. 14, (INS)—Maxim Litvinov, Russia's Ambassador to the United States and his English-born wife, tonight attend a concert of the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. The Russian War Relief Committee, making the announcement, said the Litvinovs would hear Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7, played for the first time in America.

[illegible] soloist. The Litvinoffs were [illegible] scheduled to arrive here from [illegible] Washington shortly before the performance.

[illegible] Washington shortly before the performance.

[illegible] sky, [illegible] gor-

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

...during the last war he was one of the first Air Corps officers overseas, with command of the ...

...Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance in Lenox, Mass., tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The concert, sponsored by a Russian War Relief committee, also will feature Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soloist. The Litvinoffs were scheduled to arrive here from Washington shortly before the performance.

...Washington shortly before the performance.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

during the last war he was one of the first Air Corps officers overseas, with command of the

Litvinoffs to Attend Berkshire Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14 (UP) —Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador to the United States, and his English-born wife will be present tonight when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra in the first American concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's "No. 7 Symphony."

The concert, sponsored by a Russian War Relief committee, also will feature Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soloist. The Litvinoffs were scheduled to arrive here from Washington shortly before the performance.

fore the performance.

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed end these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
N. ADAMS, MASS.

19 3 $

Maxim Litvinoff To Appear at Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14 (UP)—Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador to the United States, and his English-born wife will be present tonight when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Berkshire Music center's student orchestra in the first American concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's No. 7 symphony.

The concert, sponsored by a Russian war relief committee, also will feature Violinist Albert Spalding, Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky and Soloist Dorothy Manor. The Litvinoffs were scheduled to arrive here from Washington shortly before the performance.

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.. Friday evening when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.

U. S. NAVAL TRAINING STATION, Newport, R. I., Aug. 14—Joseph William Donna, 19-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harlie F. Donna of 25 Densmore street, Quincy, has been graduated from the School of the Recruit at this station, and is now on a seven day leave. Upon return, he will be assigned to a trade school, shore station, or to duty with a ship of the fleet.

Donna is a graduate of the Quincy Trade school, and was employed at the Boston Gear Works

Litvinoff To Attend Lenox Concert Tonight

STOCKBRIDGE, (U.P.) — Maxim Litvinoff, Russian Ambassador to the United States, and his English-born wife will be present tonight when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Berkshire music center's student orchestra in the first American concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's No. 7 symphony.

The concert, sponsored by a Russian war relief committee, also will feature violinist Albert Spalding, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky and soloist Dorothy Maynor. The Litvinoffs were scheduled to arrive here from Washington shortly before the performance.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

That's a ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Newton is handing to Miss Joan Richards. Both young socialites, together with Miss Carol Marcus, pictured with them, are members of the junior committee for the benefit concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Litvinoffs to Attend Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14.—(UP)—Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador to the United States, and his English-born wife will be present to-night when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Berkshire music centre's student orchestra in the first American concert performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's No. 7 symphony.

The concert, sponsored by a Russian war relief committee, also will feature violinist Albert Spalding, 'cellist Gregor Piatigorsky and soloist Dorothy Manor. The Litvinoffs were scheduled to arrive here from Washington shortly before the performance.

hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

othy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

Th[illegible] ticket to Tanglewood Miss Joan Richa[illegible] with[illegible] are r[illegible] bene[illegible] Mas[illegible] Joan [illegible]ether them, [illegible]or the [illegible]enox, [illegible]usse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Litvinoff to Hear Shostakovitch Music

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be present tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

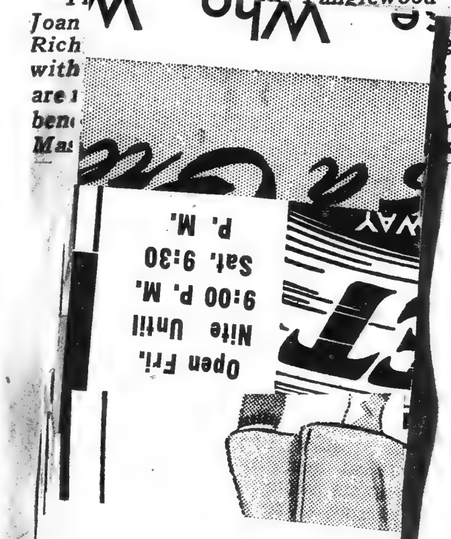
Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

The ... ticket to Tanglewood. Miss Joan ... Joan Rich... ...gether with ... them, are ... ...or the ben... ...Lenox, Mas... ...usse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.



Litvinoff to Hear Shostakovitch Music

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be present tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

...same time.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

...othy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed end these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

...lewood Miss ...o Miss Joan ...ites, together ...ed with them, ...mittee for the ...ood, Lenox, ...rge Kousse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Litvinoffs at Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be present tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief Benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed end these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical evénts programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

...lewood Miss ... Miss Joan ...ites, together ...ed with them, ...mittee for the ...ood, Lenox, ...rge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Soviet Ambassador At Berkshire Concert

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

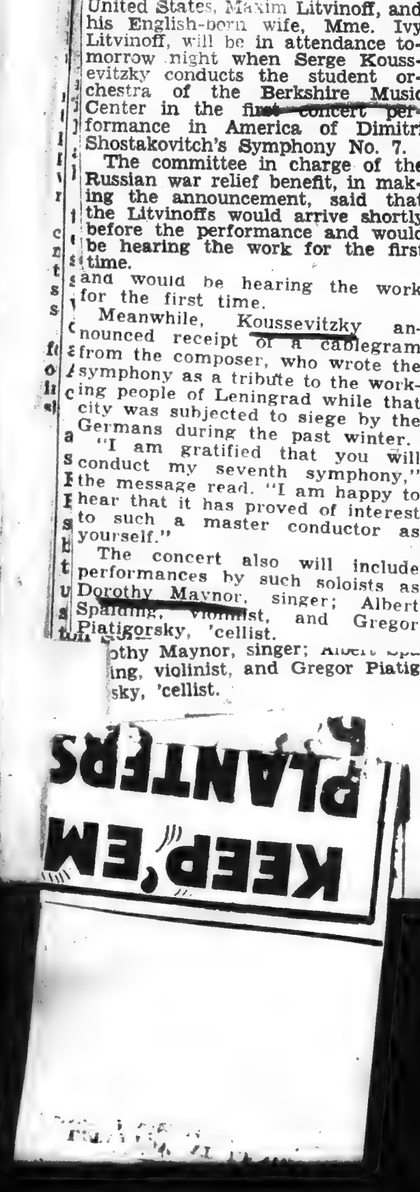
The committee in charge of the Russian war relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

othy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.



HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

WIFE-MOTHER and SWEETHEART
Appreciate the thoughtfulness on special occasions.
ROBBINS the Florist
122 Whitehall St. Tel. 143

Open Fri. Nite Until 9:00 P. M. Sat. 9:30 P. M.

Litvinoffs To Attend Concert

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian war relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

Miss Joan ether them, or the Lenox, Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Who W

Not All Work For Our Boys

It's not all work and no pla
for the Waterbury boys servin
"somewhere in the south Pacific, according to letters being receive here by relatives.

A typical letter was received yes terday by Police Sergt and Mrs
Edward A[illegible] from one [illegible]
4,500. It is without bars and sepe rated from spectators by two moat to prevent escape of the chimps.
The only one of the troupe c
ten which would be most likely t walk out on the show, Vierhelle explained, is 11-year-old Jimmy.

Jimmy, The Boss

Jimmy is the veteran in th point of service and carries a lo of weight (130 pounds) as far a the chimp show is concerned. It's his show, known as "Jimmy an
His Gang."

He corrects the others with slap of his hands when they make mis takes. Boss Jimmy, who started a a learner 8 years ago with "Jackl and His Gang," took over the man

LITVINOFF, WIFE TO GO TO CONCERT

Soviet Ambassador to U. S. to Hear Koussevitzky's Student Orchestra at Benefit Tonight.

Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mrs. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7, at Tanglewood.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

KEEP 'EM PLANTERS

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

...ewood Miss ... Miss Joan ...es, together ...d with them, ...ittee for the ...od, Lenox, ...ge Kousse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

...ork Connections:—
...BC-WEAF (660 kc) WGY (810 k
CBS-WABC (880 kc) WEEI (590 k
MBS-WOR (710 kc) WBRK (1340
BLU-WJZ (770 kc) WTRY (980 k

News Broadcasts:—
NBC—8 a. m., 12 noon, 6 p. m., 11
CBS—6.55 a. m., 8 a. m., 6 p. m., 1
MBS—7 a. m., 8.45 a. m., 1.30 p.
BLU—7.45 a. m., 12.25 p. m., 3.30

New York, Aug. 13 (World Wide)
—War views of two internationa
figures—Jan Masaryk, minister o foreign affairs for the provisiona
Czechoslovakian government, an
Dr. Lin Yutang, Chinese author an philosopher—will be broadcast i programs announced today by tw networks.

Masaryk will discuss post-war re construction on the Mutual-BBC
"Answering You" program Sunday a
11.30 p. m., the broadcast being fron
London. Dr. Lin Yutang will speak on the Indian crisis, in a program pla over CBS Tuesday at 10.30 p. m. ...vin
In similar vein, also Tuesday, wi...tic, be an address by Postmaster Gen...l Ve
eral Frank Walker on "The War Aims Are the Peace Terms." He ...yes will speak before the Knights of Co...Mrs lumbus banquet at Memphis at 10.1... over BLU.

...ngs for th...

Litvinoffs To Attend Concert

Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador to the United States, is scheduled to attend the Russian War Relief concert at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., tonight.

He will be accompanied by Mme. Litvinoff, and they are making a special trip from Washington to attend. Officials of the Berkshire Music Center were unable to state whether the ambassador would speak.

Feature of the event will be the concert premiere in the Western Hemisphere of the new seventh symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich. This is the symphony which was written under fire during the siege of Leningrad, and which was introduced to America in a broadcast by Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra.

The speaking program will be at 6 p. m., with Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist, and Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, among the speakers. The evening concert, by the Berkshire student orchestra, will commence at 8 p. m. under direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

ewood Miss Miss Joan es, together d with them, ittee for the d, Lenox, ge Kousse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed end these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical evénts programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

Miss Joan ogether th them, e for the Lenox, Kousse- vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Expect Litvinoffs At Tanglewood

Moscow's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and Mme. Litvinoff have announced their intention to journey from Washington to Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., today in order to attend the first public concert performance there of Shostokovitch's Seventh Symphony tonight.

This presentation by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is part of a gala benefit concert extending through this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood for Russian war relief. In addition to an address by Dorothy Thompson, famed newspaper writer, Edward C. Carter, national president of Russian War Relief, Incorporated, will be heard.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 12 1942

TICKET TO TANGLEWOOD

Miss Joan ether them, for the Lenox, Kousse-vitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will present the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. The event benefits the Russian War Relief, Inc. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands will be among the honor guests.

Litvinoff to Visit Berkshires

Will Hear Famed Leningrad Symphony

LENOX, Aug. 14 (INS)—Maxim Litvinoff, Russia's ambassador to the United States and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, tonight attend a concert of the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

The Russian war relief committee, making the announcement, said the Litvinoffs would hear Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7 (The Leningrad Symphony), played for the first time in America.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

Koussevitzky Gets Message From Shostakovitch

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, whose student orchestra at Tanglewood has been making musical history, has just received from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington, two mesages wishing him success in his performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, whose American concert premiere will take place at Tanglewood Friday at the gala concert for Russian War Relief.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who composed the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message came from Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoy Theater: "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoy Theater, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

The list of benefit events is varied. Beginning at 5 p. m. with "Tanglewood on Parade," at which all departments of the school will perform, the program will continue with several distinguished guests as speakers, including Dorothy Thompson, who made a deep impression two years ago. The symphony concert will begin at 8. At 9:30 Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will give a recital.

Tickets are on sale at all Berkshire hotels and from ticket committees in every town in Berkshire County.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 13 1942

Tanglewood Presents Concert of Russians

Both Shostakovitch, the contemporary Russian composer, and Samosud, the Russian conductor of Bolshoy theatre orchestra which first played the former's Seventh Symphony, are deeply interested in the first American concert presentation of the symphony tomorrow at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The symphony will be played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and one of the outstanding Shostakovitch supporters in the country. Presentation of the work, which requires about 70 minutes to perform, will be a feature of the gala benefit program for Russian war relief at Tanglewood tomorrow.

"Happy to hear it (the symphony) has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself," reads a cable to Dr. Koussevitzky from the composer. Another from Samosud reads: "Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestim composition."

Dorothy Thompson is to speak on the gala benefit program. Another feature will be a recital by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spaulding, violinist. Several valuable prizes have been contributed and these will be awarded to members of the audience attending the benefit. Tickets are os sale at the office of the Albany branch of Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1942

CITY BOARD TO CONFER ON CONCERT ISSUE

City Solicitor Says Rental to Boston Symphony Matter of Policy, Not Law

City Solicitor James M. Carroll said today that he considered the problem before the city property committee relative to rental of the Municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was a question of policy rather than of law.

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman of the City property committee was planning to confer with the city solicitor about the issue, it was said.

The committee apparently is concerned over the situation as James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' union, has told the committee that he will not permit any union orchestra to play in the Auditorium if the Boston Symphony concert is allowed.

Cancelation of all engagements in which union musicians appear would result in making the Auditorium dark most of the season. A reduction in revenue to the city of $5000 or more was figured if union musicians are kept out, it was said.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFFS TO HEAR BERKSHIRE CONCERT

LENOX, Aug. 13. (AP)—Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoff's would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanmhile, Koussevitsky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message read, "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 11 1942

TANGLEWOOD WILL CONDUCT RED BENEFIT

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russian relief is to be staged Friday at Taglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p.m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Schostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the baton of the distingushed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

THREE SOLOISTS

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenominal Negro; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m. will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

PICNIC SUPPERS

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

The final programmed event will be the drawing for prize awards to begin at 10:15 p. m.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale at the Albany Russian War Relief offices, 59 State street, Telephone, 5-5312. Reserved seats are $5.50, including tax; unreserved seats, $2.20, including tax, and boxes, seating six, $50, also including tax.

Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Albany chairman, said yesterday that every effort is being put forth to provide transportation to and from Tanglewood and she invited offers of automobile space from all able to provide the gasoline and rubber for the purpose.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 1 31942

Litvinoff, Russian Envoy, To Attend Benefit Concert

Wife Will Accompany Him to Tanglewood for War Relief Event—Crowd Expected

Maxim M. Litvinoff, Soviet ambassador to the United States accompanied by Mrs. Litvinoff, will attend the gala Russian war relief benefit tomorrow evening at Tanglewood, it was announced today by George A. Kuyper, manager of the Berkshire Music Center.

Will Attend

Maxim M. Litvinoff

The Litvinoffs will occupy a box in the Shed during the concerts. One of the largest crowds of the season is expected at Tanglewood, if the weatherman is kind. Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee is general chairman.

All of Tanglewood will be on parade with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist, donating their services. Dorothy Thompson, columnist, will be the speaker at the manifestation.

Despite war conditions, there has been a phenomenal sale of boxes. Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, chairman, announced today that separate seats were being sold in the few remaining. Local chairmen and the Tanglewood office also have received many calls for general admission tickets.

Mrs. Frederick Schenck of Lenox said today that all prize books with stubs must be delivered to her at the central booth at Tanglewood by tomorrow evening. Persons unable to get to Tanglewood may leave their books at the Berkshire Hills Conference office until tomorrow afternoon at 3 or at the Curtis Hotel office until noon tomorrow.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 1 21942

Tanglewood Aids Russian Relief

Gala Program Will Start Friday at 5 O'clock

Under the joint sponsorship of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzsky Music Foundation, a gala benefit for Russain relief will be staged Friday at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning at 5 p. m. and continuing, with one intermission, until 10:30 p. m.

Among outstanding musical events programmed will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by hte Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under the baton of the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. Only once before has the public had an opportunity to hear this work and that was a radio performance by the NBC Orchestra under Toscanini a few weeks ago.

The radio performance raised a furore of conflicting comment from critical listeners. Consequently, this performance will be an historic one presented as it is by one of the composer's staunchest defenders and supporters. The symphony will begin at 8 p. m. and is scheduled to end at 9:10 o'clock.

Beginning at 9:25 p. m., three of the world's great soloists will be heard in recital. They are Dorothy Maynor, phenomenal Negro singer; Gregor Piatigosky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

The program between 5 and 5:45 p. m. is titled "Berkshire Music Center on Parade" and will include the orchestra in the Tanglewood shed, the chorus singing in the Barn, opera in the theatre and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber music hall. The next hour beginning at 6 p. m., will be given over to expressions from distinguished guests of their reactions to the unusual features of the benefit.

Those attending have been asked to bring their own picnic suppers for a lawn party between 7 and 8 o'clock.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 1 3 1942

Berkshire Concert Boxholders Listed

MRS. OWEN Johnson, chairman of the Box Committee for the Russian War Relief Benefit at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tomorrow when Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center will give the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, announced a list of box subscribers for the event.

They include:

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Allen, Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs. Wm. Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blum, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Marshall Brown, Mrs. William N. Ballard, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Carter, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Miss Mabel Choate, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Thomas Davies, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Carl A. Degersdorff, Mrs. Carlos M. Deheredia, Mrs. R. J. Flick, Giraud Foster, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Jerome Greene, Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Seton Henry, and Mrs. Ramsey Hoguet.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 3 1942

Art Exhibit in Berkshires

Museum at Pittsfield Has It's Annual Members' Night

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 12. — The Berkshire Museum, of Pittsfield, Mr. Stuart C. Henry, director, held its annual members' nighttonight with the opening of an exhibition, "Music in Art—Rembrandt to Thomas Benton." Leaders include Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Mr. Marshall Field and the Marquis and Marquise de Talleyrand.

A Canadian color moving picture, "Rainbow River," was shown in the Museum Theater by Mr. Martin Bovey. The reception committee included Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, chairman; Miss Mabel Choate, Mmes. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Zenas Crane Colt, Charles J. Kittredge, David T. Dana jr., Charles W. Power, John Barker, Albert C. England, Loring G. Robbins and Clifford Francis.

Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge, of Pittsfield, has her sister, Mrs. William F. Pearson, Washington, as a guest. She entertained at dinner for her tonight.

The Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Foundation is giving a dinner tomorrow night at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, in honor of twenty-four Latin-American students at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Lowell Thomas and Mr. and Mrs. Spencer H. Logan had dinner parties at Egremont Tavern, South Egremont.

Former Governor Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Ely, are at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 1 21942

Plan Russian War Benefit At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concert and the Berkshire Music center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, are among those announced as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the gala Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood Friday.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward C. Carter, whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England conservatory who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and U.S.O. benefits at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York, who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago; Mrs. Frederick Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., and Albert Spalding.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5 pm. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the performance of the much discussed Symphony No. 7 by Shostakovich. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the Music Center orchestra in this monumental work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes for the Russian War Relief concert may be made by writing or telephoning to Russian War Relief, Inc., at 11 E. 35th street, New York, or Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 1 3 1942

Russian Benefit Tomorrow

Serge Koussevitzy will conduct the Berkshire Music Center orchestra in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony Friday evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as part of a mammoth program for Russian War Relief.

Festivities start at 5 with Tanglewood on Parade, in which all departments of the music school will take part. The Symphony begins at 8, followed by a joint recital by Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding. Tickets are on sale at Russian War Relief, 11 E. 35th St.

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
DAYTON, O.
HERALD
AUG 1 2 1942

—v—

Mrs. B. F. McCann and her daughter, Miss Eleanor McCann, both of North Robert boulevard, are at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, Mass., this summer where the latter is attending the Berkshire Music Center which is presided over by Serge Koussevitzky.

As a student in the center Miss McCann will take part in a "gala benefit" which is to be staged for Russian War Relief Friday evening. Orchestra and chorus will contribute to the early part of the program, that on which Miss McCann is to appear. Distinguished guests will then "give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with the great occasion.

"There will be a picnic supper followed by a presentation of Shostakovich's Symphony No. 7, the "War" symphony which will be given, on this occasion, its first concert presentation "in the western hemisphere." It was widely heard recently when the National Broadcasting company orchestra presented it under the direction of Arturo Toscanini. Mr. Koussevitzky differs from many press critics in thinking that the "War" symphony is one of the great symphonies.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 3 1942

Benefit to Hear Shostakovitch's 7th Tomorrow

Russians Cable Felicitations to Koussevitzky on Eve of Tanglewood Concert

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—Serge Koussevitzky has received two messages from Russia via the Soviet Embassy at Washington wishing him success in the performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony on Friday evening at the benefit planned for Russian War Relief at Tanglewood. It will be the first concert performance of the work in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Shostakovitch, composer of the symphony which has aroused much controversy in musical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky: "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14. Happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message to Dr. Koussevitzky came from Samuel Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoi Theater. "On behalf of orchestra of Bolshoi Theater, U. S. S. R., first to perform Shostakovitch's seventh symphony [at Kuybyshev on April 1] and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

Three well known artists, Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist, as well as the students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, are donating their services for the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johanssen (Jean McLean), of Stockbridge, have offered to do a portrait sketch for the maker of the highest bid of more than $100 for the benefit. Bids may be mailed or telephoned to Tanglewood, Lenox.

Mrs. Frederick Schenck, chairman of the prize committee, announced today that Guito Koop, sculptor, is donating a terra-cotta head as one of the prizes for the drawing. Joseph E. Davies has donated a painting by the Soviet artist, Brava. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding have donated a set of eight ginori coffee cups and saucers. Olga Tritt has donated a gold clip, and Louis Kronberg has given one of his paintings. There are also three bottles of 1929 Lanson champagne and many other items.

Mrs. Owen Johnson, of Stockbridge, chairman of the box committee, announced today that nearly seventy boxes have been sold. In a number of cases in which gasoline rationing interferes with attending the concert, the purchaser has turned the box back for resale. Princess Juliana, of the Netherlands, will drive here from Lee to attend the benefit.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 1 2 1942

Share Auto Idea Used For Concert

As a service to those facing ransportation problems in atending the Russian War Relief oncert at the Berkshire Music enter Friday night the Albany Committee of Russian War Relief s undertaking to arrange facilies through its office at 59 State.

The committee will act as a learing house to obtain rides to enox, Mass., with those who ave extra space in their cars. Inormation also is available on bus chedules. Tickets for the event re on sale at Russian War Relief eadquarters.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, direcor of the Berkshire Music Cener, whose student orchestra at anglewood has been making usical history during the last wo weeks, has just received from he USSR via the Soviet Embassy t Washington two messages ishing him success in his perormance of the Shostakovitch eventh Symphony, whose merican concert premiere will ake place at Tanglewood Friday.

Dmitri Shostakovitch, who comosed the symphony which has roused much controversy in muical circles, cabled Dr. Koussevitzky: "Gratified that you will onduct my seventh symphony ug. 14. Happy to hear it has roved of interest to such a mser conductor as yourself."

Although the symphony will be he most eagerly anticipated item n the program, the list of benefit vents is varied. Beginning at 5 . m. with "Tanglewood on Pade," at which all departments f the school will perform in hree buildings of the center, the rogram will continue with a anifestation; then several disinguished guests will speak. orothy Thompson will be one of he speakers.

The Symphony Concert will bein at 8 o'clock. At 9:30, after a rief intermission, three soloists ill give a recital. Dorothy Mayor, Tanglewood's "find," will ppear, as will Gregor Piatigorky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding, iolinist.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
AUG 1 31942

GALA BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD

First Concert Performance of Shostakovitch Symphony Friday Night

Three top-ranking artists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will be heard at the gala benefit planned at Tanglewood for Russian War Relief Friday by Dr. Serge Kossevitzky, director and conductor of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Maynor, talented Negro soprano was "discovered" by Dr. Kosseviszky at Tanglewood in 1940 and has skyrocketed to fame since. Mr. Piatigorsky, 'cellist, is on the famulty of the Music Center. Mr. Spalding, violinist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington and is a former trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Governor Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman of the benefit, while Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee and national chairman of Russian War Relief, Inc., is the active chairman. Co-sponsor of the event is the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which is operating the Music Center this season. Faculty and students have volunteered their services for the occasion. A full program starting at 5:00 p. m. has been planned. Until 5:45, Tanglewood will be on parade with activities by a student orchestra, the chorus, the opera department and instrumental ensembles.

From 6:00 to 7:00 will come the manifestation at which time, according to the announcements, "distinguished guests will give expression to the thoughts and feelings associated with this great occasion. The program constitutes a manifestation of our unity in diversity, under freedom—the American way of life."

From 7:00 to 8:00 will come the lawn party; it is the hope of the committee. The gala concert will follow from 8:00 to 9:10. A feature will be the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 by the Music Center orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conductor. After a brief intermission there will be the recital by the "world famous" soloists, Miss Maynor, Mr. Piatigorsky, and Mr. Spalding. The evening will end with the draw for prizes at 10:15. Tickets, moderately priced, and boxes may be reserved by writing directly to Tanglewood at Lenox.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 14 1942

Shostakovich 7th Given First Concert Performance Tonight

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony tonight at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in a benefit for Russian War Relief announced yesterday that he had received a message from the composer wishing him success in its presentation.

The cable from Dmitri Shostakovitch which was transmitted from the USSR via the Soviet Embassy at Washington read, "Gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony Aug. 14th. Happy to hear it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

An accompanying message to Dr. Koussevitzky came from Samuel Samosud, conductor of the orchestra of the Bolshoi Theatre: "On behalf of the orchestra of the Bolshoi Theatre, USSR, first to perform Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony and also on my behalf welcome performance this composition under your masterly baton forthcoming Aug. 14. Trust you share profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced working on this majestic composition. Congratulate you in advance undoubted success."

Although the performance by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his Berkshire Music Center orchestra of the Shostakovitch Symphony will be the most eagerly anticipated item on the program, the list of Benefit events is a varied one. Beginning at five o'clock this afternoon with "Tanglewood on Parade" at which all departments of the school will perform in three buildings of the Center, the program will continue with a Manifestation; then several distinguished guests will speak. The Symphony Concert will begin at eight o'clock. At half past nine, after a brief intermission, three famous soloists will give a recital. Dorothy Maynor, Tanglewood's "find" will appear with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

Shostakovich's war symphony was first heard in America on July 19th, when Arturo Toscanini conducted the NBC Symphony Orchestra in an international broadcast from New York.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
AUG 14 1942

BERKSHIRE GROUP PLAYS NEW RUSSIAN SYMPHONY

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP) Soviet Russia's ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7.

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh Symphony," the message read "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist; and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 14 1942

KOUSSEVITZKY TO DIRECT

Will Lead Shostakovich Work Before Maxim Litvinoff Tonight

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP)—Soviet Russia's Ambassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mme. Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night at Tanglewood when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovich's Seventh symphony.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Meanwhile, Dr. Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the last Winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my Seventh symphony," the message reau. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include solo performances by Dorothy Maynor, Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 14 1942

Berkshire Benefit This Evening To Be in Aid of War Relief

Berkshire Hills, Mass., Aug. 14.—As a social event the Russian War Relief Benefit at Tanglewood Lenox, tonight is to be one of the most important of the season.

Among subscribers for boxes, which are in charge of Mrs. Owen Johnson, are Lady Salter of London, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. Henry White, Mrs. Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Albert Spalding, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. Seton Henry, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Clark Carter, Mrs. Thomas Frederick Davies, Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease, Mrs. John McChesney, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin is in charge of Russian Relief headquarters at the Curtis Hotel. On the general Russian benefit committee, of which Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman, are Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, who gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

At Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, are Lloyd D. Aspinwall Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hubbell, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hough, Mrs. Thomas Campbell and Miss Helen Wilson of New York.

Newcomers at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, include Mr. and Mrs. G. DeWitt Williamson, Mrs. John Leffler of New York.

At Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Wentworth, Mrs. William A. Graham, the Misses Anna McBride and M. J. Hare of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Ian Oliphant and Edmund Morton, Brooklyn, N. Y., are at Egremont Tavern, South Egremont.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
AUG 12 1942

Relief Benefit

The first Western Hemisphere concert performance of the Shostskovich Seventh Symphony will be given Friday by Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra at Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of Russian War Relief. The symphony was greeted by tremendous popular acclaim after its initial American presentation by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC radio orchestra. The Berkshire Musical Festival performance will be the public's first opportunity to hear this much-discussed work first hand.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

The People's Forum

Russian Benefit

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The box committee of the Russian War Relief Benefit to be held at Tanglewood on Friday would like to express its deep appreciation of the generosity shown by the many people who have subscribed. Their response has been an inspiration to those of us who are working to raise these funds for the purchase of surgical and medical supplies for our desperately fighting ally.

Their generosity is also a tribute to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky. Everyone who has attended the concerts here during the last few days has been amazed and delighted by the quality of the youth orchestra created by him out of the student material during the few weeks of the music school's 1942 session. Only a supreme master of his art could have accomplished such a feat.

Everyone attending the benefit on Friday will have the opportunity not only of hearing the evening concert with its distinguished artists and the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, but they will also, during the late afternoon be able to hear the work of the music school in its various fields—opera, chamber music, and orchestral.

GERTRUDE B. JOHNSON,
Chairman, Box Committee,
Russian War Relief Benefit.
Stockbridge.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 14 1942

Tanglewood Benefit In 1940 for Finns but Tonight for Russians

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 13 — The war is making many changes, none, perhaps, more violent than in the ideas of the wealthy summer residents of Berkshire. Two years ago Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Orchestra, and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival staged a gala benefit at Tanglewood for the Finns, at that particular time hard pressed by Communist Russia, and many were on hand to speak for the Finns and condemn "Bolshivist hordes."

Tomorrow night Tanglewood will see a benefit for the Russians, and among those who will sit in the bedecked boxes will be no less a Communist than Maxim Litvinoff Russian ambassador. Mrs. Litvinoff will accompany him.

Nearby, and probably rubbing elbows with him, will be the crown princess of one of the oldest and wealthiest royal houses of Europe, Juliana. Ambassador Litvinoff will speak at exercises preceding the concert.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

Tanglewood Russian Relief Benefit Starts at 5 Tonight

Program To Be Given Rain Or Shine—Litvinoffs Expected To Arrive at 7

Whether it rains or shines, the gala benefit program for Russian war relief will go on at Tanglewood tonight starting at 5.

There still will be an opportunity early in the evening to buy tickets for the many prizes offered by Mrs. Frederic Schenck's committee and to make bids for the portrait sketch to be done for the highest bid over $100 by Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johanssen (Jean McLean) of Stockbridge.

Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador and Mrs. Litvinoff are expected at Tanglewood at 7, and will occupy seats in a box at the Shed. There will be a limited number of hot lunches available, also hot and cold drinks.

The program will be as follows:

5.00 to 5.45—Berkshire Music Center on parade, in the shed, in the barn, in the theatre and in the chamber music hall.

6.00 to 7.00—The manifestation with speeches by Dorothy Thompson and Edward C. Carter, giving expression to thoughts and feelings associated with the occasion.

7.00-8.00—Lawn party-picnic suppers.

8.00 to 9.10—Gala concert, the Shostakovitch seventh symphony, first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Intermission

9.25 to 10.00—Recital by world-famous soloists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding.

10.15—Draw for prizes.

Tickets may be purchased at the gate.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 14 1942

Tea Is Served

Activities at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon included a tea in the gardens for the students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, spoke briefly. Local Girl Scouts helped pour.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
AUG 14 1942

Honor Guest

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be honor guest at a luncheon meeting at which will be discussed the project of rebuilding the former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood, Mass., as a summer music center. A concert, the evening of September 1, at "Music Mansion," the home of Mrs. George Hail, a former federation vice president, will feature the premiere of "Noel," a piano composition by Hugh F. MacColl, Providence banker, which was a prize-winning entry in the 1941 composition contests.

An afternoon walking tour, a garden party at the historic John Brown House, a Past Presidents' Assembly frolic, an old fashioned New England breakfast, and a Rhode Island clambake will be among the more frivolous affairs arranged for the four days.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 13 1942

BERKSHIRE NOTES

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 12—Over 400 attended last night's reception at Berkshire museum, Pittsfield, to mark the opening of an exhibition entitled: "Music in Art—Rembrandt to Thomas Benton," a collection of paintings relating to musical subjects by artists from the 17th to the 20th centuries. Lenders included Mrs W. Murray Crane, Marshall Field, Marquis and Marquise de Tallyrand, and various city museums and galleries.

Mrs William F. Pearson of Washington, D. C., is visiting her sister, Mrs Lucy Wadhams Dodge, who had a dinner party for her tonight at Guestwick, Pittsfield.

The Dr Serge Koussevitzky foundation is giving a dinner tomorrow night at Curtis hotel, Lenox, in honor of 24 Latin-American students at Tanglewood.

Mrs Lowell Thomas and Mr and Mrs Spencer H. Logan had dinner parties at Egremont tavern, South Egremont, last night.

Among arrivals at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, are former Gov Joseph B. Ely, and Mrs Ely, of Westfield, and Dr C. L. Furcolo of Springfield.

Miss Edith Winthrop de Russy of New York is visiting Miss Frances A. Steiger at the Smuggery, Stockbridge.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1942

Music Critics Chided

Howard Hanson Talks at Center

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Browsing around the Tanglewood grounds of the Berkshire Music Center yesterday netted me a gripping rehearsal of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony by Serge Koussevitzky's six-week-old youth orchestra, a heated lecture by the American composer Howard Hanson on critics and virtuosos, and a rendering of Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor, done in crisp vernacular.

Mr. Koussevitzky's rehearsal tactics helped explain how it was possible to unify 95 young musicians from all parts of the country into smooth-working fusion in less than two months.

The large-scale Shostakovich score is no cinch, but the youngsters, aged 12 to 26, took all the movements, plus repetitions, in stride. They toiled like veterans to meet Mr. Koussevitzky's requirements of precision and warmth and took the occasional verbal lashings in good part.

Actually American boys and girls from 30 states, by taking part in the concert series, helped save the Ninth Berkshire Music Festival. After the Boston Symphony dropped out of the original plans because of finances, Mr. Koussevitzky took on the expected deficit burden personally and the youngsters partially earned their way by making the paying concert series possible. What they got in six weeks' training with the dynamic Boston Symphony batonist cannot be expressed in dollars.

Hanson Takes Whacks.

Addressing a gathering of musicians, conductors and composers in the theater concert hall, Mr. Hanson reviewed the history of interpretation in music and took several well-aimed whacks at the virtuoso attitude glorifying showy technic at the expense of real expression. He bemoaned the widespread tendency to identify high notes with great singing and tricky bowing technic with great violin playing.

Mr. Hanson grouped music critics under five heads, professional critics, composers, musicians, conductors and public, awarding the palm to conductors as the most discerning.

Professional critics he condoled for being forced to make snap judgments on compositions sometimes requiring three years of hard labor. Plagued by deadlines, newspaper critics cannot do justice to themselves or the composer, he said.

Orchestral musicians were ruled out as critics because they usually favored music playing up their instruments, Mr. Hansen maintained, and composers often were too intent on their own devices to make fair judgment; as for the public, it needed time to decide for itself, he said.

Comic Opera Presented.

Last night's staging of the Nicolai Comic Opera was a fine sample of what the Berkshire Opera Department, directed by Herbert Graf, has been doing. With Boris Goldovsky conducting, the performance brought out the dashing humor and romantic suavity of the old classics.

Simplicity keynoted the venture. Musically and dramatically it had real go, and with James Pease heading the cast as the portly would-be rake, the main fun was in masterly hands.

Laura Castellano, Jean Handzlik, Guiseppe Gentile and John Cassidy added sound vocal technic and snappy stage to the style Nicolai - Shakespeare merry - go - round. Messrs. Graf and Goldovsky both rate high praise for the way they handled their side of the show.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 15 1942

5,000 Hail Shostakovich Symphony

By O. V. Clyde

(Special to the Daily Worker)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14.—Shostakovich's Leningrad or Seventh Symphony, performed by Serge Koussevitzky, fell with the same shattering impact upon the ears of several thousand persons gathered here at the Tanglewood Music Festival, as it did upon the radio studio audience which first heard Arturo Toscanini give it two weeks ago.

Given as the climax of an all-day music festival for the benefit of the Russian War Relief, the Leningrad Symphony once again roused its listeners to an ovation of stormy enthusiasm.

The performance of the student orchestra under Koussevitzky was extremely brilliant.

5,000 PAY TRIBUTE

Despite heavy rains more than five thousand persons came to pay tribute to the heroism of our Soviet ally's struggle.

Maxim Litvinoff and Mme. Litvinoff are expected to appear to take part in the celebration.

Miss Dorothy Thompson delivered an eloquent tribute to the Soviet Union, referring to the enormous importance of its peace policy in the past and to its foresight in preparing the nation to meet the attack. She declared that America feels secure of victory solely because of the Soviet Union's achievements.

SHOSTAKOVICH MESSAGE

Edward Carter, chairman of the Russian War Relief, read a personal message from Shostakovich to Koussevitzky in which the Soviet composer expressed the hope that his symphony would result in increased successes for the Russian War Relief campaign.

In personal interviews here Koussevitzky has expressed the highest admiration for the Soviet composer's work, comparing it to Beethoven for orchestral color and intensity.

The large audience, coming from scores of nearby towns and villages, as well as from Boston and New York, demonstrated in everything they did today the warmest feeling of solidarity with the Soviet Union.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 14 1942

Concert Premiere Of Shostakovitch

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—The Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch will have its premiere concert performance in America when Serge Koussevitzky conducts his student orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Friday in a Russian War Relief Benefit.

The gala will begin at 5 p.m. with Berkshire Music Center on Parade, a program by various ensembles, both vocal and instrumental. From 6 to 7 p.m. several distinguished guests will speak. The lawn party at 7 p.m. will be followed at 8 p.m. by the performance of the Shostakovitch. Musical events of the evening will conclude with a joint concert by Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Albert Spalding, violinist. All proceeds go to Russian War Relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1942

RUSSIAN BENEFIT IS SOCIAL EVENT

Embassador and Mrs Litvinoff Guests in Dr Koussevitzky's Box — Princess Juliana Also Attends

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 14—Tonight's gala Russian war relief benefit at Tanglewood was one of the important society events of the season. All the 80 boxes were sold and there were notable guests.

In Dr Serge Koussevitzky's box were Maxim M. Litvinoff, Soviet embassador to the United States, Mrs Litvinoff; Miss Olga M. Naumoff, niece of the symphony conductor, and Mrs Charles E. Mitchell of New York, a director of the Koussevitzky Music foundation.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and honorary vice-chairman of tonight's benefit, had as guests her mother, Mrs Charles Robinson Smith; Princess Juliana of the Netherlands with her lady-in-waiting, Baroness Ethel Van Boetzelaer; Mr and Mrs Willem Van Tets, George Van Tets, Miss Miriam K. Oliver and Col Stewart Rodde of the British army. Miss Dorothy Thompson was with Count and Countess Raoul Roussy de Sales, with whom she is staying at Overlee.

Among others who bought boxes were Mr and Mrs Myron C. Taylor, Mr and Mrs David T. Dana, Mr and Mrs William A. W. Stewart, Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mrs Frederick G. Crane, Prof Philip Marshall Brown and Mrs Brown, Mr and Mrs Seton Henry, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs John Barry Ryan, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., Mr and Mrs Albert Spalding, Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson, Carl A. de Gersdorff.

Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Giraud Foster, Mr and Mrs Charles H. Marshall, Mr and Mrs Elbridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs Benjamin Walworth Arnold, Mrs John Maurice Hastings of London, Mrs Newbold Morris, Mrs Halstead Lindsley, Mr and Mrs Rodney Procter, Mrs Henry Hollister Pease, Mr and Mrs Bernhard Hoffman, Mrs E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs Donald F. McPherson, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Mrs William Norton Bullard, Mrs Thomas Frederick Davies, Mrs Ramsay Hoguet and Miss Alice Claff.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 15 1942

STIRRED BY SYMPHONY

Lenox Ovation Accorded Shostakovitch Work.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was given last night by Serge Koussevitzky and his student orchestra at a special Russian relief benefit concert attended by Maxim Litvinoff, the Russian Ambassador.

The symphony, composed during the attacks on Moscow, was greeted with tremendous enthusiasm by nearly 5,000 persons assembled in the famed music shed at Tanglewood.

Previously played over the radio by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra, the symphony so stirred the audience that they applauded after each of the movements and gave the orchestra and its conductor a five-minute ovation at the end.

Mr. Litvinoff was presented to the audience after Dorothy Thompson had spoken on behalf of Russia. A box was occupied by Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands. Edward C. Carter of New York, president of Russian Relief, also asked for support of the organization's efforts.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 14 1942

LITVINOFF TO BE AT TANGLEWOOD

Russian Embassador and Wife to Attend Soviet Benefit Featuring Shostakovitch's Symphony No 7

Lenox, Aug. 13—(AP)—Soviet Russia's embassador to the United States, Maxim Litvinoff, and his English-born wife, Mrs Ivy Litvinoff, will be in attendance tomorrow night when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first concert performance in America of Dimitri Shostakovitch's Symphony No 7.

The committee in charge of the Russian War Relief benefit, in making the announcement, said that the Litvinoffs would arrive shortly before the performance and would be hearing the work for the first time.

Cables Koussevitzky

Meanwhile, Koussevitzky announced receipt of a cablegram from the composer, who wrote the symphony as a tribute to the working people of Leningrad while that city was subjected to siege by the Germans during the past winter.

"I am gratified that you will conduct my seventh symphony," the message read. "I am happy to hear that it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself."

The concert also will include performances by such soloists as Dorothy Maynor, singer; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 15 1942

Shostakovitch Seventh Tops Varied Program of Music

First Concert Performance of New Symphony Given Tremendous Ovation—Several Soloists Heard

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The whole vast establishment at Tanglewood was the scene of a gay and gala event yesterday afternoon, and musically one which should be of historical moment. The occasion was the great Russian war relief benefit under the auspices of Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation; the special event was the first concert performance in this hemisphere, in fact, the first outside the land of its composition, of the Dimitri Shostakovitch seventh symphony, his Opus 60.

Tremendous interest in the new symphony had accumulated. The identification of the young composer with his country, practically as composer-laureate, and the political implication that Shostakovitch alone was authorized to express the Rusian credo musically, and various other auxiliary reasons, caused this Berkshire premiere to be awaited with certainly unusual anticipation, the more so because a previous rendition over the air had fallen on unfavorable elements and had not been heard satisfactorily.

Weather Like in 1941

The day had started like its counterpart at Tanglewood for the British last year with just plain soaking rain, not intermittent, but steady and thorough, and might have discouraged an audience less interested in the cause and the program, but, with all sorts of parapain equipment, a crowd, by far the largest of the season and estimated at more than 4000, was under the protecting roof of the Shed, or in the Theatre or the Chamber Music Hall in time for the parade of the Berkshire Music Center at 5 in the afternoon.

Programs were designed to pass in review the accomplishments of the school's six-week session which comes to a close tomorrow with the sixth and last concert when, among other things, the symphony-of-the-moment will be repeated. In the Shed, the so-called Second Orchestra did a list of four works, each conducted by a different student of the conducting class: in the Theatre the opera department under the direction of Herbert Graf put on scenes from two operas, "La Boheme" and "Porgy and Bess"; in the chamber music hall was a program of Madrigal singers and Tanglewood compositions.

Until time for the main event, the concert at 8, there took place the Manifestation, at which the national anthems of the USSR and of the United States, were played and speeches were given by Edward Clark Carter of New York and Lee, president of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and by Dorothy Thompson; then lunch boxes were fetched from parked cars or, in many cases, produced, magician-fashion, from beneath seats and wraps. The wet grass prevented any relaxed sprawling on the wide lawns, and so, with plenty of happy good nature, parties attacked the viands as best they could arrange themselves on the Shed's seats.

The presence in the huge audience of Maxim M. Litvinoff, ambassador of the Russian government, and Mrs. Litvinoff, and Princess Juliana caused the usual sensation and produced the natural curiosity that might have been expected. They had to pay the compensatory penalty of important personages and withstand the innocent and unashamed stares of all the encircling thousands.

Shostakovitch Symphony

The Shostakovitch symphony consumed about one hour and twelve minutes in the playing, including pauses between the first and second and second and third movements, during which Dr. Koussevitzky halted a trifle longer than customarily in a work of shorter duration. The third and fourth movements are played without pause. Probably the most significant statement that can be made regarding the new work is the fact that no one we encountered mentioned its duration. This, of course, may have two interpretations, or rather, a double one, for the greatly augmented orchestra of the advanced students of the center, including, it must be said, many post-graduates, played, nevertheless, with all the vibrant verve and vigor of undergraduates, with at the same time a poise and a discipline which was completely responsive to the baton of their conductor.

Shostakovitch already has long proved his talents, and now here again confirms the attributes and qualifications which must be conceded him. A superior sense of the best ranges of the individual instruments and the possession in equal degree of the faculty of combining various timbres for the production of telling sonorities. He makes use throughout the symphony of single instruments intoning long tenuous and wandering themes, then brings them to points of spiritually-refreshing repose by letting them rest on simple but resonant chords; he uses unisons many times, indeed the very introduction begins that way with the strings producing a robust, vital assertion, (could it be a challenge), which subsides into a more tender and spacious area.

Shostakovitch at no time seems to be in a hurry. The periods of excitement in the whole symphony are vastly outdistanced by those of quieter moods. Early in the first movement appears in the woodwinds in dialogue a bare unsupported theme in four leisurely beats, the second consisting of a dotted eighth and its complementing sixteenth. It in itself is not world-shocking. It might be a Morse-code idiom. But it is passed from instrument to instrument, section to section, with no one dropping out, with a consistent and ever-present snare drum undercurrent, reminiscent of the Ravel "Bolero" development, but one which here has undoubtedly more significance than mere repetition for musical effect. The cumulative power and might generates the greatest climax of the symphony.

Reveals Change of Pace

The second movement shows a new and warmer Shostakovitch than we had known. It is pure Russian intimate domesticity at its most unpretentious side. Its change of pace and skillful contrast should make it possibly the favorite of the symphony. There was a trace of labor in the third movement; designated as Adagio, its second phase was one of excitement and confusion. The final movement, if we must search for derivations, leaned on the massive simplicity of Bach. Here the brass choirs, calling for eight horns and six trombones, among other things, were given the freedom of their individual ability to blow. The tremendous and never-ending ovation which was accorded the orchestra and Koussevitzky was this time fully deserved. It was, nevertheless, a demonstration which in itself was a sight to behold.

After an intermission came a succession of soloists, each one of whom was forced to add encores to the short list accorded the artists on the program: Albert Spalding, accompanied by Andre Benoist at the piano; Gregor Piatigorsky by V. Pavlovsky, and Dorothy Maynor by Ernest Victor Wolff.

Miss Maynor then graciously consented to draw the lucky numbers from the cylinder for the award of the prizes for which tickets had been sold throughout the afternoon as well as at the previous events at Tanglewood.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Tanglewood Raises Large Sum For Russian Relief

The Russian war relief benefit concert held at Tanglewood last night, which was arranged by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, drew an attendance of about 4000. It was estimated the net receipts would be between $12,000 and $15,000. Among the distinguished guests were Maxim M. Litvinoff, Soviet ambassador to Washington, and Mrs. Litvinoff, who were guests of Dr. Koussevitzky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 15 1942

TANGLEWOOD NETS MORE THAN $12,000 AT BENEFIT EVENT

Lenox, Aug. 15—Tanglewood was on parade last night with a great Russian War relief benefit which was arranged by Dr Serge Koussevitsky. The attendance was about 4000 and it was estimated net receipts would be between $12,000 and $15,000. Among the distinguished guests were Maxim M. Litvinoff, Soviet embassador to Washington, and Mrs Litvinoff, who were guests of Dr Koussevitzky at Sernak.

The program, consisting of orchestra and opera music and speaking, started at 5 and continued for nearly four hours. Early intermittent showers, which kept down the gate receipts, were followed by sunshine.

At 6 p. m. came the exercises in the music shed, with Edward Clark Carter, secretary-general of the Institute of Pacific Relations, presiding. On the platform with Mr Carter were Dr Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Miss Dorothy Thompson and Jerome D. Green of Cambridge, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees. Dr Koussevitzky's brief address was read by Mr Carter.

Miss Thompson said that America must take part of the German armies away from Russia and make them fight on land not of their choice. She said this country should rise to save the Russian people and thereby save ourselves.

"The important thing is to keep Russia in the war and keep her fighting," she said.

The final number was the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by a music center chorus, standing outside the music shed, with Hugh Ross conducting.

Music Center On Parade

Music lovers found themselves torn three ways as the "Berkshire Music center on parade" phase of the program got under way at 5 in the afternoon.

In the shed, the center's second orchestra (the first being the festival ensemble) gave an appealing program to more than 1500 persons. Waldter Hendl conducted the Brahms "Festival Overture"; Lukas Foss directed the orchestra in Aaron Copeland's ballet suite, "Billy the Kid"; then came the Mendelssohn piano concerto in G minor with Hilda Banks as soloist and Frederick Fennell conducting. The concert closed with Robert Zeller leading the orchestra in Walter Piston's suite from the ballet "The Incredible Flutist."

Going on simultaneously were a recital by madrigal singers and soloists that included several Tanglewood compositions in the chamber music hall and two operatic excerpts in the theater.

Madrigal Chorus

The madrigal chorus opened the former program with "Summer Is Icumen In." Beatrice Ladhneer, violin, and Muriel Hess, piano, presented the first movement of a Senatina by Pablo Moncayo. This was followed by the singing of three songs by Romeo Cascarino, with Helena Strasburger, soprano, as soloist and John Cowell at the piano. Wellke's "On the Plains" was performed by Lonny Mayer, Patricia Mahon and Patricia Neway, the sopranos; Lillian Knowles, also; John Tons, tenor, and Robert Falk, bass.

The madrigal chorus then offered "Bauerlied" by Lasse. John Cowell's trio for clarinet, cello and piano was performed by Werner Janssen, Jr., clarinet; Marion Davies, cello, and Seymour Lipkin, piano. Irma Gonzalez, soprano, sang three songs by Blas Galindo accompanied by Mildred Spiegal. James Pease, bass, was soloist in the concluding number, a Russian song by Odak.

In the Theater

In the theater, a capacity audience heard act 3 of "La Boheme" with Irma Gonzalez as Mimi, James Pease as Marcelle, Mario Lanza as Rodolfe, Sheila Vogelle as Musetta, Robert Fischer as the sergeant and John Cassidy as an official. This preceded the Catfish row and Kittwah island scenes from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" with the following cast: Helena Strassburger as Clara, James Pease as Porgy, Christine Johnson as Bess, Sheila Vogelle as Serena, Myron Ryan as Sportin Life and Giuseppe Gentille as crown. Herbert Graf staged the Puccini excerpt and Boris Goldovsky conducted. Richard Rychiarik designed the set. The Gershwin opera was staged by Myron Ryan and James Pease and Leonard Bernstein conducted.

The western hemisphers concert premier last night of the Shostokovitch seventh symphony by students of the Berkshire Music center under Serge Koussevitzky made the Russian War Relief day at Tanglewood a memorable event in American musical history. Those critics who attempted to judge this great work by the 36-year-old Russian composer on the basis of a radio performance found ample reason last night for reconsideration of any adverse reaction.

Big Audience Thrilled

The audience of more than 4000 went far beyond the requirements of common politeness when the symphony's tremendously stirring climax ended at the peak of its crescendo. Koussevitzky was called back for six bows and when he asked his student orchestra to rise, the volume of applause heightened considerably in tribute to the orchestra's mature musicianship and exciting virtuosity.

After the symphony, Albert Spalding, Gregor Piatagorsky and Dorothy Maynor each presented a group of solos.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 15 1942

Leningrad Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony featured a huge six-hour benefit staged in the Tanglewood shed yesterday by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and Russian War Relief.

Beginning with a three-ring exhibit of the Berkshire Music School's newly primed talent, America's gallantly built up to the Shostakovich premiere.

After the Shostakovich rendering, topped by six minutes of steady clapping and cheering, Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatriogorsky, cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, turned in some high-grade solo work.

Though the Shostakovich reading will be reviewed fully after tomorrow's matinee repetition, a few general remarks are in order concerning the 75-minute score's sustained grip on last night's crowd and the level of excellence reached by Mr. Koussevitzky's student ensemble.

* * *

Listeners Aroused.

As at the NBC Toscanini premiere July 19, Shostakovich's symphonic epic on besieged Leningrad roused the latest huddle of first-time listeners to tense emotional pitch. The young Soviet genius appeared again to have made his message of deadly combat and final victory clear. The finale chant of prophecy reached out stirringly to every heart.

The young orchestra, worked into a close-knit entity in a few summer weeks, read the large-scale symphony with a wonder-working blend of top technique and emotional impact. The four bridge-span movements lengthened out in clear-cut outline as Mr. Koussevitzky whipped the ensemble to fiery response.

* * *

'Message of Faith.'

In a statement read by Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, Mr. Koussevitzky spoke of the Shostakovich symphony as bringing a "message of faith and the victory of the spirit of man over death."

Before the speeches Mr. Koussevitzky led brisk readings of the Soviet and American anthems, the Internationale coming first. By an odd mixup the student group launched out into both hymns simultaneously, making it sound at first like a clever piece of intended counterpoint. Mr. Koussevitzky brought down his baton after a few bars and the ensemble began all over again.

LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 16 1942

Meet at Symphony Concert

Serge Koussevitsky (left), conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff sit together after a concert performed by the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra. The orchestra played the new Seventh Symphony of Russian composer Dmitri Shostakovich.

—Associated Press Wirephoto

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 16 1942

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THIS is the week-end that the season of outdoor Summer concerts comes to an end. The report is that the war did not materially alter the picture from other years. Lights were dimmer at concerts in coastal cities, but that was about all. That the annual Berkshire Festichestra of the Boston Symphony Orchestra could not be held was to an unanticipated degree compensated for by the brilliant success of Serge Kousevitzky's student orchestra. On the whole, Americans turned out for Summer music in their usual large numbers and new series were give in new cities. In Philadelphia a new record of 14,250 for a single concert was set. A new record of 6,420 was also established in Chicago. And in New York the record was 19,743 for the all-Gershwin concert last week.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 10 1942

War Relief Concert Plans Continued

Lenox, Mass.—Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert and the Berkshire Music Center and Mrs. Guy P. Ganett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee sponsoring the Russian War Relief benefit at Tanglewood, Aug. 14.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5. Albert Spalding, Dorothy Maynor and Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloists. Another feature of the occasion will be the first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the much discussed Symphony by Shostakovich. Dr. Kousevitsky will conduct the Music Center Orchestra in this work.

Reservations for tickets and boxes for the Russian War Relief Concert may be made by wrting to Russian War Relief, Inc., at 11 E. 35th Street, New York, or Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, NY.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1942

Shostakovitch's Seventh Played At Tanglewood

Litvinov, Princess Juliana Attend Russia Benefit; Spalding, Piatigorsky Play

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Russian music was played for the benefit of Russian War Relief here at Tanglewood this evening, when Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony had its first American concert performance in the Music Shed by the Berkshire Music Center's expert student orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, Maxim Litvinov, Ambassador from the Soviet Union, and Mme. Litvinov were in the audience.

Earlier in the evening, Dorothy Thompson and Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, Inc., were the speakers at a manifestation in the Music Shed, which followed a demonstration of various aspects of the Center's musical activities.

This benefit, held under the auspices of the Russian War Relief and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, is the third annual large-scale affair of its kind to be held at Tanglewood with the co-operation of the Center.

Good-Sized Audience

Considering the weather and wartime difficulties in transportation, the audience was of good size. Virtually all the boxes had been sold in advance, and the attendance during the first hour was estimated at more than 2,000. About 4,000 listeners were on hand for the speeches. Others arrived later for the new symphony and the recital by Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Andre Benoist, Valentin Pavlovsky and Ernest Victor Wolff accompanied these artists.

Miss Thompson dwelt upon the titanic and significant nature of Russia's effort in the war, the immense sacrifices it has made, and the need of a corresponding sacrifice on America's part. Whatever the United States sacrifices, she said, will not be enough. Nor must our contribution be only one of relief and supplies, she added, advocating a second front. We must take part of the German armies away from Russia, and make them fight on ground not of their own choosing. We should rise for the salvation of the Russian people, and, in rising, save ourselves. The important thing now is to keep Russia in the war, to keep her fighting.

Miss Thompson also told of Russia's importance, geographically and culturally, and of the need of a thorough understanding of the Soviet Union. When the time comes for reconstruction in Russia, she said, Russia will not be alone in undertaking the task.

Praise for Russia's effort, and of the Shostakovitch Symphony, also were themes of Mr. Carter's speech and of the message which he read from Dr. Koussevitzky.

The manifestation opened with a trumpet fanfare by Purcell. Some members of the audience rose as this closed, perhaps mistaking it for the Russian national anthem, the "Internationale." This and "The Star-Spangled Banner" were played before the speeches. Mr. Litvinov then appeared on the stage, and was greeted with long applause. Hugh Ross then conducted the Center's chorus in Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

Varied Programs Given

The extensive program followed the general lines of its two predecessors in 1940 and 1941. The opening Tanglewood on Parade hour offered a choice of three attractions. In the Music Shed the Center's second orchestra played works of Brahms, Aaron Copland, Mendelssohn and Walter Piston, with Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller conducting and Hilda Banks as piano soloist. In the opera house, Act III of "La Boheme" and scenes from "Porgy and Bess" were sung, with Boris Goldovsky and Leonard Bernstein conducting and Herbert Graf, Myron Ryan and James Pease in charge of the staging.

Irma Gonzalez, James Pease, Mario Lanza, Shiela Vogelle, Helena Strassburger, Christine Johnson and Giuseppe Gentile sang leading roles. Meanwhile, early madrigals and vocal and instrumental music composed at Tanglewood by Pablo Moncayo, Romeo Cararino, John Cowell and Blas Galindo were performed in the chamber music hall. An hour for supper followed before Dr. Koussevitzky and his young musicians began the symphony, of which the only previous hearing in this country was in an N. B. C. Symphony broadcast under Arturo Toscanini on July 19.

The symphony stirred its hearers, and an admirable performance was followed by five minutes of cheers and ardent applause for Dr. Koussevitzky and his talented young musicians.

The Berkshire Music Center will continue its festival tomorrow night, when the first orchestra and chorus will present Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists will be Irma Gonzalez, soprano; Lilian Knowles, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 16 1942

The Berkshire Festival, usually so impressive, was handicapped this summer because of the gasoline restrictions in the East, and its program materially curtailed. Yet, with an orchestra consisting of student players, some good music was made, the school term went through nicely, and a bit of opera in Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" presented two casts which came through very well.

Everything considered, this summer's musical accomplishments held up amazingly well.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 15 1942

LITVINOV AT LENOX

Lenox, Aug. 15—Maxim Litvinov Russia's ambassador to the United States and his English-born wife, Mme Ivy Litvinov, tonight attend a concert of the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Good Symphony Tooting by Berkshire Youth

Shostakovich Rehearsal Pleases Koussevitzky

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—After three grueling hours Thursday morning rehearsing the 75-minute symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, in the Tanglewood shed, Sergei Koussevitzky dropped his baton and said to the 95 members of his Berkshire youth orchestra:

"I think we have done good work today."

For an ensemble of youngsters ranging in age from 16 to 20 the "good work" was a man-size job likely to keep the best veteran orchestra on its toes.

Anybody who had watched Mr. Koussevitzky in earlier seasons whip the Boston Symphony into concert shape would have noted a difference. The maestro was less drastic in his tactics, more the fatherly counselor than the blunt taskmaster often given to picturesque frankness during the rehearsal snarls.

* * *

No Concession to Youth.

But in the way of discipline and grim, unrelenting drive toward perfection, or the next best, Mr. Koussevitzky was just as thorough and insistent. No concession on grounds of youth was made or expected.

"Yes, you are all young boys and girls," he conceded at rehearsal, "but you must give all you can, and you can give plenty. Yet, whatever you give is not enough. I want a thousand times more."

At one point, while tightening up the cumulative drive of a Shostakovich crescendo, he stopped abruptly, wiped his brow, hummed angrily to himself and then said: "Even if I have to go over this passage a hundred and a thousand times, you're going to get it right," adding apologetically, "I tell you these things and explain these things not for tomorrow's concert alone but for your whole life."

You never saw a graver set of American youngsters as they listened to Mr. Koussevitzky's encouraging remarks and well-intended scolding. The kids could take it, too, as in instances where a laggard violin or trumpet brought a sharp rebuke from the podium and a nod of guilt from the offender.

* * *

Like a Campfire Caucus.

Despite the seriousness, though, the rehearsal looked highly informal, with shirt-sleeves, sweaters and generally light summer attire suggesting a campfire caucus of hiking youngsters more than a skilled symphonic huddle.

Of course, one secret of Koussevitzky's success with the young ensemble is his enthusiasm. While rehearsing he sang along with the kids and graphically cajoled a personal response to Shostakovich's gripping score. His own reaction spread like wildfire as the fledgling personnel strode through the epic symphonic span. "We are greatly honored in doing the first concert of this symphony," he said early in the Shostakovich rehearsing. "It is the greatest music written in our time." On another occasion he amplified the statement:

"Those who perform it must understand the four dimensions—height, length, breadth and depth of the musical genius of Shostakovich.

"For the performance of such a symphony at a moment when the life and future of the cultural world are being decided on the battlefields of suffering Russia, an inner unity is necessary."

* * *

Students Add Praise.

The members of the orchestra interviewed agreed in regarding Shostakovich's Seventh as tops. Adjectives ran all the way from "marvelous," "great," "thrilling," to "hot stuff." One violinist, while rehearsing, felt that he was actually living in Leningrad during an air blitz and heard a tremendous horde of tanks sweeping past him.

Though the symphony was written in beleaguered Leningrad and is in part intended as a panoramic view of the anti-Fascist fight, with a victory finale, Mr. Koussevitzky strongly objects to its being called "an imitation of war."

"It is an impression," he said, "not a camera study of war's horrors . . .

"Similarly, Debussy's La Mer is not a mere postcard view of the sea but a series of impressions. Shostakovich's symphony is like Beethoven's Pastoral, a set of reactions to phenomena, not an album of photographs to detail a summer thunderstorm or a city under siege."

Explaining why the symphony gripped audiences so powerfully at first hearing, he said:

"Shostakovich's music goes from the heart to the heart. It is the most universal music since Beethoven and the most universal expression of emotion.

"My boys and girls are absolutely wild about it. They feel this work is of their epoch and generation, that it lives in themselves and they in it."

While some music critics hailed the symphony as a masterpiece after the NBC Toscanini premiere last month, one or two others took a few swift pokes at it. Mr. Koussevitzky enlarged on some earlier remarks in which he predicted dissenting critics would eventually eat their words.

"Critics try to express their opinions of new music too fast," he said. "They should wait a little. They should listen several times. It is astonishing how they can find something, even something bad, to say about a new symphony after hearing it only once.

"Somehow the public grasps it faster. Perhaps because the public listens with its inside. The critic loses much by trying to analyze the material and pick it apart."

* * *

Maestro Pays Deficit.

The Ninth Berkshire Music Festival was made possible when Mr. Koussevitzky volunteered to take complete charge, including the expected deficit, after financial snags forced the Boston Symphony to back out.

"It is the first time in the musical history of any country where the pupils helped support the school. The concerts are paid for by the public and the performers are the pupils.

"Most of those in the orchestra get their tuition and living expenses. In fact, practically everybody is paid. There is only one person who is not paid, the director and conductor.

"No salary I ever received has made me as happy as paying the deficit after this season will make me. The comradeship has been excellent. It has been like a big family."

Music Tonight

Goldman Band

Conductor, Edwin Franko Goldman.
Prospect Park, Brooklyn.
At 8:30.

Marche Slav——Tschaikowsky
Overture, Tannhauser——Wagner
Newsreel——Schuman
Second Hungarian Rhapsody——Liszt
Overture, Orpheus——Offenbach
Fantasie——Staigers
Del Staigers, cornetist.
Kol Nidrei——Bruch
The Christmas March——Goldman
Russian Sailors' Dance, from The Red Poppy——Gliere

Tomorrow Night

Goldman Band

Conductor, Edwin Franko Goldman.
The Mall, Central Park.
At 8:30.

Pomp and Circumstance——Elgar
An Outdoor Overture——Copland
Ave Maria——Schubert
Russian Sailors' Dance, from The Red Poppy——Gliere
Introduction to Act III, from Lohengrin——Wagner
Overture, Carnival of Venice——Thomas
A Soldier's Dream——Rogers
Raymond Crisara, cornetist.
Finale, The Pines of Rome——Respighi
March, Anniversary——Goldman
Tone Poem, Finlandia——Sibelius

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1942

Salvaging Tanglewood

In spite of atrocious weather, Dr Serge Koussevitzky has been performing something like a miracle, as it appears from a distant point of observation. The annual symphonic festival at Tanglewood was canceled because it was assumed that few people could reach Tanglewood to attend the Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts. The rationing of gasoline and tires must have a deadly effect, it was argued.

Sound as the decision may have been from the financial point of view, the remnant of the musical season surviving under Dr Koussevitzky's direction has at least made the front page as news, while the New York music critics have been attending closely to the Tanglewood calendar of concerts. As a popular event, Friday's Russian war relief benefit program must have had much drawing power. According to The Republican's reporter, the attendance was about 4000 and it was estimated net receipts would be between $12,000 and $15,000.

How they all got there is natural question. They did not fly; nor did most of the 4000 walk—not in this weather.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 15 1942

Koussevitzky Scores With Revised Berkshire Set-Up

By George Tucker

NEW YORK—A 10-gallon sombrero is not too much to take off for famed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Russian gentleman who conducts the Boston Symphony and makes propaganda early and late, for living composers both American and otherwise.

Dr. Koussevitzky said, quite a spell back, that "art must die last in a war."

Summers, the good doctor has been wont to conduct the most plush and perhaps most successful of all summer music festivals—the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, which is a great estate in the southern reaches of Lenox, now the property of the Boston Symphony. The festival well under way, he insisted on founding also a music school like no other in the world. This he called the Berkshire Music Center, and the idea was to give young professionals the best in advanced instruction, and to allow amateurs to sit in with them, and pick up the crumbs. The crumbs made a full meal.

* * *

This spring, however, the Berkshire festival was called off on a hint from the government. Then Dr. Koussevitzky's chin went out.

He called together his friends, and announced that he would not give up—would they help? He called together his newspaper friends, and asked the same question. Both groups said yes.

The school went on, cut about 100 from last summer's level of 360 students. Then the doctor announced a festival, using the student orchestra instead of the Boston Symphony. This meant that the people who would attend must take Dr. Koussevitzky's word for the quality of the performances, and the old, veddy, veddy social atmosphere would no longer make going to Tanglewood "the thing."

None of the 3,000 persons who took the first concert on faith will ever forget it. Some were so hoarse from cheering they couldn't even talk much about it. It rained for the next concert, or the audience would have been doubled. It has grown since.

* * *

On the stage of the flatiron-shaped music shed were 105 young musicians, nearly as many girls as boys. They looked bright and shining, even before the doctor entered proudly and picked up his baton. He played a Haydn symphony—No. 88, if you're interested. The audience sat in stunned silence when it was done, and the yelling began.

He played the third "Leonore" overture, and there was more shouting—it sounded like the old days of national political conventions. Then, after intermission, came Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth symphony. It's modern music, it's typically Russian, but it's full of tunes.

* * *

The music swept off the stage like a cavalry charge, and you could see the audience strain to keep its seats.

First result was increased activity at the box office, the doctor stands to lose several thousands, but it won't be as bad as it might. Second result was a great increase in society's interest. Third result was a surprise to everybody.

It was a remark I must have heard 50 times in an hour, "If those kids can play like that, why worry about the Boston Symphony?" they were asking.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 16 1942

Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge, of Pittsfield, has her sister, Mrs. William F. Pearson, Washington, as a guest. She entertained at dinner for her Wednesday night.

The Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Foundation gave a dinner Thursday night at Curtis hotel, Lenox, in honor of twenty-four Latin-American students at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Lowell Thomas and Mr. and Mrs. Spencer H. Logan had dinner parties at Egremont Tavern, South Egremont.

Former Governor Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Ely, are at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington.

139.

Maxim Litvinoff, At Music Festival

Hartford Courant Aug. 15, 42

Lenox, Mass.—Crown Princess Juliana of The Netherlands, Maxium Litvinoff and civic and artistic notables were brought together at Tanglewood last night with 5,000 music lovers to hhear the first concert rendition in America of Shostakovitch's Seventh symphony. It had previously been played by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC orchestra over the air waves.

Edward C. Carter, president of Russian Relief, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, had just joined in a burst of applause that greeted Dorothy Thompson's "Long Live the Soviet Union", when Soviet Ambassador Litvinoff and his English-born wife walked onto the stage of the Tanglewood music shed. The ovation made the sylvan setting ring as the statesman, whose arrival in Lend had been delayed was greeted by Dr. Kossevitsky, Miss Smith and Mr. Carter. Crown Princess Juliana who is summering at Lee in this summer of exile, joined in the applause to Stalin's envoy to America.

As the strains of the "Internationale" rolled out over the Berkshire hills, the red flag of the Soviet, unfurled on one side of the stage, faced the Stars and Stripes, gracing its ther side.

Dorothy Thompson Speaks

Dorothy Thompson, columnist, after a glowing tribute to the Soviet, predicted in the principal speech of the occasion that the future would build a bridge between democracy and socialism. Cheers greeted her as she told of gallant struggle of the Russians against the Nazi horde in the Caucasus.

A similar note was struck by Dr. Koussevitsky when he said "the Seven Symphony of Shostakovich brings us a message of faith and the victory of the spirit of man over death. We who have gathered here to help the Russian people in the darkest hour of their history must be grateful to this great nation, which carried the cross, and through the supreme suffering of her people leads us to the hope of resurrection."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1942

50 WILLIAMS MEN TO SING TONIGHT

First Appearance at Tanglewood

COLLEGE GLEE CLUB

To Join in Mixed Chorus of 200 Offering Vocal Passages of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

A telephone call from Serge Koussevitsky to Robert G. Barrow, director of the Williams college glee club, resulted in preparations which will climax tonight in the appearance of the student members of the club in the chorus which will sing the vocal passages of Beethoven's Ninth symphony at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The 50 male voices of the Williams Glee club will join in a mixed chorus of 200 appearing with the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music center, the first time any Williams organization has appeared there.

Soon after the invitation which Dr. Koussevitsky extended to Director Barrow by telephone, rehearsals began in July for the concert highlighted by the Choral symphony. During this week Director Barrow has been assisted by Hugh Ross, who has been connected with the Berkshire concert festival for two years.

Mr. Ross of the Schola Cantorum of the Juillard School of Music is also assisted this year by Iver Jones, and with Director Barrow they have collected the chorus of nearly 60 voices.

The present shortage of male singers may mean that the Glee club, first organization from Williams college to appear at Tanglewood, may appear alone there later in the season, according to some reports.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1942

Serge Koussevitzky In Tribute to Students At Berkshire Festival

5000 Hear 'Magnificat in D' and 'Ninth Symphony'; Orchestra of 100 Maintains Its High Standard

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 15.—At the conclusion of this morning's rehearsal, Serge Koussevitzky addressed his young students in a moving speech. He stated that although he had his own orchestra in Russia many years ago, the pleasure he has derived from directing the Berkshire Foundation has been unsurpassed.

He added that he would devote much of his future career to the continuance of this enterprise whose purpose it is to help gifted students.

Telegram Editorial

A testimonial to this ambition may best be cited from an editorial in the Worcester Telegram of June 6, and from which, by the way, was extracted the only quotation to appear on all the programs that have been provided to the patrons of this festival—" in a world at war when man's genius seems bent only on destruction—it is good to know that we do have among us men who still have the souls of artists. The fields of art and culture must remain in our civilization as green oases in a forbidding desert of man's destructiveness."

Two masterworks comprised the fifth of the Berkshire Center festival concerts tonight at Tanglewood. Bach's "Magnificat in D" and the "Ninth Symphony" by Beethoven. The 100-piece symphony orchestra, conducted by Koussevitzky, again maintained the incredibly high standard it has established. The audience of 5000 was one of the largest of the series.

Four Soloists

The Bach cantata "Magnificat in D" is one of his most extensive vocal works. The orchestra collaborated with chorus of 125 and four soloists—Irma Gonzalez, soprano, Lillian Knowles, contralto; William Hain, tenor; Mack Harrell, Bass. The opening chorus was played with strong sturdy beats, but thereafter the work seemed to lack a crisp, rhythmic delivery that is so essential to classic oratorio. The pulse was not punctuated with meticulous precision, but rather the effect was one of tonal and rhythmic instability. Of the soloists, outstanding performance was given by Mr. Harrell of the Metropolitan Opera. His aria, "Quia Fecet Mihi Magna" was delivered with clarity and penetration.

Particularly in her duet with tenor, Miss Knowles read the score with elusiveness. There was a lack of firmness through phrase endings, most noticeably when associated with long roulades. Her voice, however, is one of rich quality. Mr. Hain's voice also lacked the fullness and resonance to transmit the lengthy roulades with assurance. Miss Gonzales sang the soprano role with lucidity but unimpressively. The final chorus, "Gloria Patri" again resumed the more virile charcter of the opening, but it must be confessed that the work as a whole failed in its fundamental power.

Praise for Swan

The Beethoven "Ninth Symphony" is its composer's greatest in scope and inspiration, which in itself conveys its inherent depth and strength. Orchestrally and chorally, this performance assumed proportions that definitely eclipsed the impression of the Bach cantata. Following as it did last night's historical performance of the Shostakovich "Seventh Symphony," a comparison between the two was inevitable.

The classical straightforwardness of Beethoven's Opus 125 seemed conventional, or at least utterly plausible when compared to the Russian master's latest work. Even the cacophony at the outset of the last movement now fails to startle. The sequences following this outburst, however, still intrigue by the clever manner in which Beethoven introduces theme after theme in a search for one to sing the choral climax, "Ode to Joy" (based on the poem by Schiller).

Robert Swan Excels

We wish to make special mention of the performance of one member of the orchestra's personnel. Robert Swan performed the extensive and exposed score for Timpani with youthful alertness and rhythmic pulse that left little to be desired. The importance of this instrumental portion is immeasurable, and therefore enthusiastic asknowledgement is deserved.

The same soloists sang the recitatives and solos of the Beethoven work. Mr. Harrell further accentuated the excellent impression of his success in the Nicolai opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" as well as that in the Bach work heard tonight. The others improved upon their previous performances and there was an appreciable gain in the choral ensembles.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1942

Festival in Tanglewood Closes This Afternoon

Koussevitzky Leads Symphonies by Haydn, Shostakovich

The sixth and last orchestral concert of the Berkshire Music Center's festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held today at 3 o'clock, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the center's student orchestra in Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, and Dmitri Shostakovich's seventh symphony. The latter work, introduced to America in a radio program of the N. B. C. symphony under Arturo Toscanini on July 19, was scheduled to have its first concert performance in this country under Dr. Koussevitzky in last Friday's Russian War Relief benefit concert at Tanglewood. There will be a chamber music program at Tanglewood tonight at 8:30.

A wired review in the New York Herald Tribune of Aug. 9 about the student performance of Nicolai's opera, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which took place at Tanglewood on Aug. 7, contained certain errors in publication on the subject of James Pease's performance as Falstaff. The paragraph, as printed, read: "The Falstaff of James Pease was cordially applauded, and there were, no doubt, many listeners of sound taste in the audience who found this interpretation satisfying. For himself, however, Mr. Pease's whole enactment of the role—which very possibly consisted in following out stage directions that had been given him—was excessively bad in its comedy." . . . The second sentence should have read: "For myself, however, Mr. Pease's whole enactment of the role—was excessively broad in its comedy." Regrets are duly noted to Mr. Pease for these errors.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 16 1942

YOUNG ORCHESTRA WARMLY THANKED AT TANGLEWOOD

Serge Koussevitzky Reports Thrill of a Lifetime—Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Is Magnificent

Lenox, Aug. 15—In a moving farewell speech at the final rehearsal of the Berkshire Music center student orchestra this morning, Serge Koussevitzky, the country's outstanding conductor, told his young proteges that the formation and directing of a center orchestra has been the foremost thrill of his lifetime, and that he would devote much of his future career to the musical training of American youth.

Dr Koussevitsky spoke to the young musicians just after he had put them through a meticulous reading of the Beethoven Ninth symphony, which the orchestra and Berkshire Music center chorus was preparing for the evening's concert.

"My Happiest Moments"

"I had my own orchestra in Russia and conduct the Boston Symphony now," the masetro said. "But you young boys and girls here this summer have given me my happiest moments.

"The deficit for the operation of the center this summer will be paid by me, and it will give me greater pleasure than the biggest pay check I have ever received."

The few scores of men and women attending the rehearsal were visibly impressed by Mr Koussevitzky's words, spoken as they were, quietly and with deep sincerity.

The conversation at Tanglewood and Lenox today centered around the American premier of the Shostakovich Seventh symphony the night before. Almost invariably any query as to how it was liked brought an enthusiastic response. One woman said she hadn't expected to enjoy it, because she was brought up in the old musical idioms and did not care for modernists. She added, however, that the new Shostakovich work was very moving. A first violinist in the center orchestra commented that on the first and second hearings he felt that the symphony was rather noisy. He said that he has now heard it and helped perform it in rehearsals and in a concert 11 times and finds more and more in it each time.

The Concert

The next to last concert in the Berkshire center festival series given in the Tanglewood shed tonight consisted of Bach's Magnificat in D and Beethoven Symphony No 9 in D minor, with the Berkshire center chorus assisting the orchestra. Soloists for both works were Irma Gonzalez, soprano; Lillian Knowles, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass-baritone.

E. Power Bigges of Cambridge, a superb organist who performed in Springfield last winter with the NYA orchestra, was at the organ for the Magnificat. Putnam Aldrich was the harpsicordist and Louie Speyer, oboist. Tonight's audience, which approached the 5000 mark, was fully as enthusiastic as those that heard the previous festival concerts.

There was much to admire in the Magnificat, which on the whole, received a stirring presentation. There were moments, however, when the solo vocal work and the singing of the chorus did not emerge clearly. This seems to be true of almost all choruses that sing in the Tanglewood shed, which raises the question of whether voices can ever emerge with resonance and clarity from the rear of the stage.

The work of the student orchestra in the Beethoven Ninth was truly magnificent.

M. R. B.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 17 1942

Conductor, Diplomat Meet

—Associated Press Photo

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY (left), conductor of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, sits with Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff at Tanglewood, Mass., after a concert performance by the Student Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Centre of the Seventh Symphony by their fellow countryman, Dmitri Shostakovitch.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 17 1942

TWO CONCERTS CLOSE TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 16.—An audience which swelled beyond the seating capacity of Tanglewood's chamber music hall to the surrounding grounds, heard the fifth and final in the series of chamber music concerts this morning. The program included the Boccherini "Quintet in G Major," Mendelssohn "Quartet in E minor, Opus 44" and the world premiere of Martinu's "Piano Quartet 1942."

The chamber music of Boccherini is unhappily neglected. The quintet heard today is one of more than 150 of his chamber works. This "Italian Haydn" has a remarkable gift for melody, which, combined with his excellent classic style results in pleasantly tuneful, coherent sound. Today's performers were mindful of the light, unaffected character of his style. The "Andante Con Moto" was lucidly phrased, the "Menuet" was light and sparkling in true 18th century fashion. Excellent tonal balance was achieved in the customary slow movement. This one marked "grave" and the "Rondo" brought the work to a lilting closing. The players were Melvin Ritter and Joseph Pepper, violin: Olga Bayrach, viola: Dimitry Markevitch and Helen Bullis, cello.

Praises Piano Work.

There are many consistencies between the Martinu piano quartet heard today and the "Concerto Grosso for string orchestra" which was performed here a week ago. Again we were impressed with the uniqueness of many of the Czech composers devices, although the source of many of them is apparent. In this quartet, Martinu openly favors the piano score and judging from today's performance this was fortunate, for Walter Hendl read it with entirely competent pianism, particularly in the interlude of the "Adagio" movement which skirmished pleasantly over the keyboard, exhibiting velocity of scale passages and various other technical textbook material. The "Poco Allegro" movement had a changing background of assorted rhythms which punctuated melodies that occasionally lapsed into coherency. The "Brahmsian" last movement was based upon a variety of amusing devices that had a habit of re-appearing. Nevertheless, excellent performances were given by Walter Trampler, violin; Jerome Lipson, viola; Robert Ripley, cello.

Outstanding Performance

Nina Appleman gave an outstanding performance of the first violin score of the Mendelssohn quartet. It abounds in technical difficulties which she surmounted with ease and precision, and with excellent tone. The first movement "Allegro Assai Appassionato" was played ruggedly, but sensitively, although the general impression would have been enhanced by a less prominent cello. This was remedied in the following three movements. The "Scherzo" was rapid, neat, but at times too vigorous for Mendelssohn. The last two movements were scholastically read. The other performers were Robert Sushel, violin; Harold Sorin, viola; Anthony Sophos, cello.

This memorable festival was brought to a close this afternoon with an orchestral concert conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The program is not reviewed as it comprises two works that have already been discussed by this reviewer. The Haydn "Symphony in G. Major, No. 88" (played opening night) and the Shostakovitch "Seventh Symphony" (played last Friday night).

[140]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 17 1942

Music Festival Links Two Great Epics

Beethoven and Shostakovich Symphonies Stir Audiences

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 17.—The Ninth Berkshire Music Festival, rescued and sponsored by Serge Koussevitzky, whose name it now bears, ended over the week end with the student orchestra linking two giant epics of classic and modern music, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Shostakovich's Leningrad Symphony, in performances stirring huge audiences to lusty cheering.

Yesterday's matinee repetition of the mammoth Shostakovich score, previously heard at the Russian War Relief benefit Friday in a Hemisphere concert premiere, was bracketed with Haydn's G major symphony (No. 88). Beethoven's symphonic ode to human brotherhood was heard Saturday night with Bach's Magnificat in D.

Despite differing technical and stylistic trends, the Beethoven and Shostakovich symphonies were properly juxtaposed as mirroring much the same ideals of human hope and betterment.

Through his choral symphony Beethoven envisioned a world brought closer through brotherly love. Facing sterner issues in the grim setup of total war, Shostakovich's score similarly heralds world unity, but through hard-earned victory over Axis savagery.

* * *

Testimony of Power.

The demonstrations following both renderings of Shostakovich's 75-minute battle hymn attested afresh the Soviet composer's power of driving his theme home with sweeping emotional clarity. No doubt much of the wild acclaim aroused by this work derives from the battering impact of surrounding facts, such as the life-and-death struggle inspiring it and its having been born, so to speak, under fire.

Yet, Mr. Koussevitzky's twin performances fully bore out impressions gained at the NBC-Toscanini radio premiere on July 19 that the Shostakovich symphony, despite its length and rambling sequences, is a peak triumph of modern music destined to take lasting root. Musically and emotionally, by new means and old, it whips up cumulative response by fresh force and mounting drama.

Comparing the Koussevitzky and Toscanini readings bar-by-bar would show dozens of minor differences in phrasing, dynamic nuance, and rhythmic cohesion. The Toscanini version was highly concentrated in impact, the terrific crescendos graded to even more compelling drive. Solo episodes were naturally more brilliant in the NBC reading, the men all being seasoned virtuosos. Basically, though, the performances were alike in lashing the big rhythmic episodes into dynamos of living energy.

* * *

A Personal Triumph.

For Mr. Koussevitzky a personal triumph lay in his having successfully drilled the 95-piece American student ensemble for possibly the toughest assignment in the whole symphonic repertory. One or two solo sequences went slightly sour in the snaggier spots of the Shostakovich music. The marvel was that more didn't and that these young hopefuls, the majority still in their teens, could turn in such a mature job of orchestral virtuosity.

The Beethoven reading, while inferior to the Shostakovich in sustained technical aplomb, reflected further credit on Mr. Koussevitzky's debutant band. Mr. Koussevitzky's pulsing intensity set the Beethoven masterpiece aglow and a hurtling vim whipped through the Presto. But for sheer brilliance of tone and technic the Shostakovich tour de force excelled it.

For the choral finale the Berkshire school chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, was expanded to a 200 voice ensemble by additions from the Pittsfield Choral Society and Williams College. Members of the student conductor and composer classes also pitched in as vocal rank-and-filers. The impromptu chorus flung out Beethoven's ringing salute to world brotherhood in steadily gripping fashion.

Like the Beethoven Work, the Bach Magnificat had Irma Gonzalez, Lillian Knowles, William Hain, and Mack Harrell as soloists, all handling the allotted solo music of both scores with sound style and smooth tone. Choral and instrumental forces combined beautifully toward an expressive unfolding of the Bach music.

In large part the resounding applause and cheering heard at these concerts were a tribute to one man, Serge Koussevitzky. By slaving day and night over rehearsals and administrative planning, he kept the Berkshire center working on all cylinders.

And by volunteering to meet the expected deficit out of his own pocket, the dynamic little man who leads the Boston Symphony, prevented a black-out of music at the Tanglewood Shed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM

AUG 17 1942

Amateurs Sound Like the Pros

By HENRY SIMON

LENOX, Aug. 17.—With a repetition of the Shostakovich Seventh the Berkshire Music Festival yesterday came to a tumultuous close, both in terms of the sound made by the orchestra and the reception the Symphony earned.

The Shostakovich was preceded by a very tidy performance of the Haydn Symphony No. 88 marred only by vagaries on the part of one of the horns. Its classical restraint made a dramatic contrast with what followed.

As for the performance of the Shostakovich at the hands of the student orchestra, it was even better than Friday's when the drums in the first movement had a tendency to overload the frightened march which is the outstanding feature of the movement. Dr. Koussevitzky had the boys and girls aged 16 to 26 playing like mature veterans by this time.

In the absence of the Boston Symphony this year, the forces at Dr. Koussevitzky's disposal are the students of the Center. The concert demonstrated all the virtues of a highly proficient student group and few of the reasonably expected shortcomings. The vigor with which they sailed into Beethoven's Ninth on Saturday, the ardor with which they proclaimed its courageous message were characteristic of amateur music lovers ready to give their all.

If there were occasional false entrances (and there were very few); if the strings lacked the finish and solidity of the Boston Symphony, which usually plays at these concerts, the fact remains that one even thinks of comparing this student orchestra with such a first-rate aggregation.

Furthermore, both orchestra and chorus responded so well to their conductor's leading that the performances bore the hallmarks of a real Koussevitzky performance, drive, drama, intense earnestness, even the Russian feeling some listeners feel overlaid on the German music.

All this was accomplished in the space of a few weeks with those students who happened to be enrolled at the school—quite a different matter from the amazing results achieved a couple of years ago in an even shorter time by Leopold Stokowsky with an orchestra equally young, but made up of professionals chosen after months of combing the country.

The soloists of the occasion included such well-known and experienced professionals as William Hain and Mack Harrell; but there also was a soprano named Irma Gonzalez, who sang Mimi in La Boheme. She fully held her own in that company, and I think you ought to be hearing of her soon again.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 17 1942

SHOSTAKOVITCH AGAIN CHEERED

Berkshire Musicians Give Season's Last Concert

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 16—The Berkshire Music Center, supported this year by the Koussevitzky Foundation, closed its season at Lenox this afternoon before some 3500 persons with another stirring rendition of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. As on Friday night, the so-called student orchestra played the great new work with tremendous appeal, and as on Friday it was wildly cheered by the enthusiastic audience.

Departs From Custom

Dr. Koussevitzky departed from the usual program-making in order to have Berkshire hear the symphony a second time, for he realizes that any great work grows greater in the public mind with repetition. Many of the fine shadings and beautiful orchestrations are only revealed through repeated hearings.

The program today opened with the Mozart Symphony No. 25 in G minor, which in the hands of the young orchestra took on a reburnished sparkle. Last night the Music Center Chorus, augmented by the Berkshire Music Association chorus and singers from other parts of the county, gave the Bach Magnificat in D and the Beethoven Ninth Symphony.

In carrying on the Center this year against the advice of his former supporters, Dr. Koussevitzky proved that the six weeks of study which he inaugurated at the Tanglewood two years ago is here to stay. Its public concerts have played before an average of 300 persons and this despite gas rationing and tire shortages. It is probable, however, that the regular Berkshire Festival with the expensive Boston Symphony Orchestra would have proved another deficit on the musical scene.

D. L. C.

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

AUG 17 1942

WOMAN'S NEW YORK—Boston Band Plays Its Mozart

BY ALICE HUGHES.

NEW YORK.—The great Boston Symphony Orchestra and its presiding genius, Serge Koussevitsky, were going to play a Mozart Festival at their beautiful summer quarters in the Berkshires this year—and play it they did, in spite of everything. Thanks to my Boston surgeon, who loves music and has considerable gas for his car, I managed to be present at this wartime version of what, when peace comes, will be a worthy rival of the great musical feasts at Salzburg—of hallowed memory.

Of course, this year Koussy couldn't use the huge Music Shed, near Stockbridge, as the audience was made up of summer Berkshire residents and a few diehards like myself, minus the wonderful crowd of starched old Boston Brahmins who used to come to these wonderful musical experiences before Pearl Harbor. This time the concerts were held in a smaller theater on the beautiful grounds called "Tanglewood"—and the crowd overflowed onto the lawn. In the rapt mob I saw a few of my friends who had also managed the pilgrimage—Mrs. Lowell Thomas, wife of the oracle; Leo Godowsky, son of the great musician, and his wife Frankie, sister of the late George Gershwin.

The orchestra was only a third its normal size, but the maestro explained that this was the number of musicians used in Mozart's time, which made it all right. During one symphony, a cloudburst descended, with the usual thunder, and sent the overflow scurrying to shelter. Koussy repeated the entire number when the storm abated, so that the devotees should not miss a single note. The soloist was the great Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, who had made her big-time debut under Koussevitsky's patronage, there at "Tanglewood." Her art and artistry have grown vastly.

It was a wartime Mozart festival under every possible difficulty, but everyone lucky enough to be at that lovely spot will tell you that it was wonderful—and far better than no Mozart at all from Koussy and his Boston band boys.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Elizabeth Grinnell, a pretty transplanted Bostonian, decided she ought to do some hospital work, so she went downtown to the Beekman and asked to be put to work at anything. She was given a uniform and told to wait for orders. She waited until she was worn out—so she went into a men's ward and the man in the first bad had a sprouting beard decorated with bits of breakfast. Elizabeth asked if he wouldn't like to be shaved, and he said he sure would. She got hold of a safety razor and not only shaved the first man, but every man in the ward—and it was a clean bunch the interne saw on his rounds. Since it was Elizabeth's first go at barbering, and she hadn't nicked a chin, she thought she'd made a good start at hospital work. So did that crowd of neat patients! . . . Brooklyn flew its flags this week to welcome the borough's first war bride from Australia. Eunice Murray, of Brisbane, met Pfc. Anthony Tecarr of Brooklyn in a canteen in her home town. They fell in love and were married, and now Eunice, with a pretty baby daughter, has arrived to live with Tony's parents until he comes marching home from the wars. I'm unable to get a quotation from a Brooklyn girl.

FREMONT, NEB.
TRIBUNE

AUG 18 1942

Choose New Talent This Week for Omaha Little Symphony

OMAHA — There is a real opportunity this week for the discovery of talented musicians living in Omaha and in neighboring communities. New members for Omaha's Little Symphony orchestra will be chosen by audition this week before a committee headed by Musical Director Richard E. Duncan.

Important is the fact that vacancies need to be filled in all sections, that is, in the string, percussion, wood-wind, and brass sections.

There will be a series of three concerts; November 16th, January 25th, and March 29th. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as guest artist at the November concert. A greater variety of music than has ever been possible before will be presented this year. This will naturally give the member-players an additional opportunity for developing their talents under the direction of Duncan. Duncan is a protege of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony. The primary purpose of the Little Symphony orchestra is to discover, develop and encourage talented musicians in this vicinity. These musicians, in turn, bring enjoyment and relaxation to many local listeners who otherwise would not have access to such entertainment.

[141]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 17 1942

Koussevitzky Closes Festival At Tanglewood

Haydn G Major Symphony and Shostakovitch 7th Heard by Crowd of 5,000

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Music Center's festival closed this afternoo nat Tanglewood when Serge Koussevitzky and the Center's advanced orchestra devote dtheir program to Haydn's Symphony in G Major, Op. 88, with which they had opened the festival on Aug. 1, and Dmitri Shestakovitch's Seventh Symphony, which they had already played in Friday night's Russian war-relief benefit. The attendance of over 5,000 seemed to be the largest of the six regular festival concerts.

The Berkshire Music Center's chorus took part with the orchestra in Bach's Magnificat and Beethoven's Ninth Smphony which were given before an audience estimated at 4,000 or more last night.

Chorus Deserves Praise

Unlike the orchestra, the Center's chorus is not composed of specialists in one particular main field of music, but draws a considerable proportion of its membership from the Center's Department of Music and Culture, which caters primarily to music lovers who do not intend to pursue professional careers. The choral singing deserved praise, especially in view of the limited time —six weeks—available for preparation. In some of the florid passages of the Magnificent there was room for a little further polish, but in the concert as a whole there was a generally admirable quality of tone in the chorus and its component sections, good balance and clarity, and revelation of the expressive significance of the music, in responsive accord with the conductor's wishes. The tenor section deserved special mention for the roundness and sonority of its singing; good tenor sections do not always characterize choral concerts. The singing in the finale of the Beethoven symphony could be hailed for its musical qualities as well as for its vigor and spirit.

Three of the soloists, Lilian Knowles, William Hain and Mack Harrell, are well known in New York, and their singing in the Magnificent observed a generally good vocal and artistic standard. The Mexican soprano, Irma Gonzalez, sang her Bach aria commendably, and in the final solo section of the Ninth Symphony sang with a firmness of tone an eveness of vocal surface which has been missed by many noted singers in these taxing measures. Mr. Harrell gave a vocal portion of the symphony a well-phrased and even-toned introduction, and Mr. Hain presented his solo with due buoyancy.

The orchestra, as before, played very well. The instrumental introductions and interludes in the Bach work were particularly delectable and the performance of the symphony was also that of a first-class organization. In some cases Dr. Koussevitzky's tempo left room for dissenting opinions; for some of us a touch of ruggedness at certain points would have been an added asset in the admirably played first movement, and the expressive significance of the third movement would have been more fully served by a broader pace, but the interpretation as a whole was expressively convincing and admirably performed.

Guest Artists Heard

In the Magnificat, an aria, a trio and a chorus were omitted. Putnam Aldrich, harpsichordist, Louis Speyer, oboe d'amore, and E. Power Biggs, organist, were the guest instrumentalists.

The repetition of the Shostakovitch symphony was memorably performed so that one was more conscious of the strong points of the work and less of its weaker ones. The orchestra, it seemed, had entered more deeply into the spirit of the work, and the intentness and concentration of its playing, its range of dynamic color and emotion were of a degree which would be hard to equal.

The sonority of the climaxes were even more imposng than those of Friday's performance. The ensuing ovation was long and loud. This performance and the festival as a whole were an exceptional demonstration of Dr. Koussevitzky's powers as an organizer, an inspiring leader and interpreter, and a stimulating force in this country's musical life.

Princess at Berkshire Music Festival

Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, right, listening to a concert at the Tanglewood Music Shed. At left is Mrs. Robinson Smith

Herald Tribune—Acme

County Enjoys Full House

Hotels and Rooming Houses Filled to Capacity on Week End

Berkshire had an old-fashioned full house over the week end.

Practically every bed was taken at hotels and rooming houses from Pittsfield to Sheffield. Some houses had to turn away customers, Friday and Saturday when sleeping accommodations were found often after a hunt. The boom only eased off the third night, and today hotel lobbies still were busy.

The peak got under way one night early in Pittsfield when more than 100 Dutch aviators and embassy officials arrived Friday for Saturday's airport ceremonies and many other guests came for the Russian relief concert at Tanglewood. A majority of concert goers stayed over, and their number was swelled for the Saturday and Sunday Berkshire Music Center Festival programs. Another visitor group comprised many parents of boy and girl summer campers, here for the closing parent week-end events.

Aiding in the search for rooms was the Berkshire Hills Conference information booth at Lenox, Mrs. Harold R. Felton in charge. This served as a clearing house in conjunction with town-operated booths at Lee and Stockbridge and the Southern Berkshire Chamber of Commerce booth in Great Barrington.

Pittsfield hotels and rooming establishment proprietors were in constant communication much of Friday and Saturday evening taking care of overflow applicants. About one-fourth of the capacity, 500 guests at the Hotel Wendell on both evenings were Tanglewood music patrons. The majority of guests at both houses were transients. Night Clerk James Swail of the Wendell gave up his own room to a soldier Saturday night when other shelter failed.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 17 1942

Shostakovitch Symphony Ends Tanglewood Concerts

Enthusiastic Audience Impressed By Interpretation of Koussevitzky And Orchestra

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Those in the audience yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood for the closing concert of the Berkshire Music Center series, who had also attended the Russian benefit concert on the preceding Friday evening, must by now have assimilated the newest Shostakovitch symphony pretty well. Its repetition thus within a few days was a boon to the great number who had been so interested to make its acquaintance.

Of all the nine years of summer orchestral series under the various sponsoring authorities, this one took the most blows on the chin from the weather. There was no real interruption nor disturbance of an actual concert, but there was a degree of uncertainty, to say the least, preceding every one of the seven programs. And yet even gray skies and light rain did not prevent the final week end from being the high in attendance records. Saturday evening for the fifth program the figure had been exceeded only by the benefit event, and yesterday afternoon a high peak for the series was registered.

The sun did relent sufficiently Sunday afternoon to dry and warm the lawn behind the Shed. Some took advantage of the opportunity to relax and listen during the Shostakovitch, among them the Princess Juliana of Holland and a woman of her attendant party.

The second performance of the Leningrad fireman's symphony, while the previous and initial one was still so fresh in one's mind, gives a chance for more leisurely consideration. Our impression was confirmed of the composer's mastery of sonority. Even in its most extended and thinnest passages the disposition of the melody or the chord structure was without exception in a felicitous part of the instrumental range. The man's sense of drama in music is apparent by the wise and skillful use of the great variety of every conceivable means of the production of color and contrast.

Transparency in Playing

Thanks as much to the orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, as to the writing, there was a transparency to the 75-minute symphony which permitted discernment of some of the voluminous background which in writing has preceded the arrival of the music. We ask ourselves, if this music should survive these troubled days, must the import and intentions of Shostakovitch, and the aspirations which the regime wished this music to portray, be revisualized for the enjoyment of the music per se. Must one conjure up in his mind the picture and situation of a great nation at bay to be stimulated by the music? We believe the symphony should and will stand on its own merits. After the concert, in the parking area, on the streets of Lenox, in the crowded car which gave us a lift homeward, the first movement little short idiom had caught on and was being whistled everywhere.

The performance itself we found more confident and assured and more vital. Shostakovitch has written a good part for all the instruments of the huge orchestra he requires. There is a lyric line to the string parts; the violas have a solo in the third movement which is not only in the most responsive range of their instruments, but was played with beauty of tone and smoothness. There are innumerable gems throughout the four long movements which in sequence and in combination add up to a brilliant whole.

The Haydn G major symphony was used to begin the concert. It had also served as the vehicle with which Koussevitzky had introduced his newly assembled and trained orchestra on the evening of the first concert three weeks ago.

Saturday evening was devoted to two great choral works: the Bach Magnificat in D, and the Beethoven ninth symphony. A chorus of 150 voices placed at the rear of the stage provided the sensation of the evening, eclipsing for the occasion, the work of their instrumental colleagues placed to the force on the platform. Serge Koussevitzky had at his disposal a chorus, consisting largely of Berkshire voices, trained by the center's two choral masters, Ifor Jones and Hugh Ross. They had several opportunities to display the glorious power and opulent quality of their combined voices, especially in the closing "Gloria Patri" of the ecclesiastical work, and later in the majestic "O Ye Millions."

The vocal soloists in both works were Irma Gonzales, soprano, Lillian Knowles, contralto, William Hain, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass-baritone. The delightful woodwind obligato to several of the Bach solo numbers enhanced their beauty; especially the soprano air "Quia respexit" in which the oboe d'Amore solo was played by Louis Speyer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the accompanying harpsichord by Putnam Aldrich, and later in the lovely air for contralto, "Esurientes implevit bonis" where again the harpsichord played with the assistance of two flutes.

Mack Harrell's baritone opening recitative in the symphony and his work in the solo quartets, and the allotments of Miss Gonzales, were conspicuously ably done. It was the chorus which scored most impressively during the evening. Their entrances and attacks were strong without explosiveness and conveyed the magnificence of the music with spirited self-reliance.

The final chord of every composition has been the occasion of a demonstration of enthusiasm by the audience. The ovation following the final note of the Shostakovitch, and the last of the season, was, as was to be expected, not the least of the series. The smiling conductor walked among his alert and eager young aspirants, clasping the hand of as many as he could reach in paternal affection. The leave-taking was genuinely poignant. Through six weeks of as intense study and application as any orchestra over underwent, through the hours of at times grueling repetition, there has developed an unsurpassed zeal and devotion for their inspiring leader. The experience for them has been unique. The same can be said for Koussevitzky and the audience.

[142]

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 17 1942

MANY FROM HERE ATTENDED BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD

Audience Thrills to Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony —Princess Julianna Present.

The Russian War Relief Benefit, which was held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday evening, was an artistic and financial success. Despite weather that at times was at its worst, an audience of between 5,000 and 6,000 (and that is a conservative estimate) assembled in Tanglewood's huge music shed and listened to a wonderful program which included the first concert performance of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony, given by the Advanced Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, under the nothing short of magical direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and solos by Albert Spalding, violinist; Igor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano.

Seated on the stage for the "Manifestation," which took place at 6 p. m., were Dr. Koussevitzky, Edward C. Thompson, president of the Russian War Relief, Inc.; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and chairman of the ticket committee for the benefit, and Miss Dorothy Thompson, the principal speaker. Miss Robinson Smith wore an afternoon dress in a black and white print and a white hat, while Miss Thompson was hatless and wore a tailored suit of silk in a charming shade of rose. Miss Thompson's speech, a masterly exposition of Russia and its needs, was followed with close attention by the huge audience.

There was an extraordinary occurrence at the opening of the "Manifestation," following the "Fanfare." According to the printed program, the "Manifestation" was to open with "The National Anthems of the U. S. S. R. and the United States," in this order. Suddenly, the opening bars of the "Star Spangled Banner" were heard. The audience rose, the singing of the National Anthem went on to about as far as "the dawn's early light," then, with what could only be called a "stop signal" from Dr. Kousseivtzky, there was a pause, perfect silence for a minute or so, while everybody wondered. Then, immediately, came the singing of the U. S. S. R. National Anthem, followed, as originally scheduled, by the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner." Just what happened, no one has yet revealed.

Tanglewood audiences are notoriously enthusiastic, but seldom, if ever, even in that huge Music Shed which has so frequently rung with the applause of thousands, has anything been heard which measured up to the enthusiasm at Friday night's concert. And, in this order, so it seemed to at least one in the audience, was the applause bestowed: First and foremost to Dr. Koussevitzky, then to the Shostakovitch Seventh and its splendid rendition by the Berkshire Center Advanced Student Orchestra, then to Piatigorsky, then to Albert Spalding and lastly to Dorothy Maynor.

Much has been written about the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Most critics agree that it is a bit overlong, that some of its music is a bit undistinguished, but that it has some passages that are absolutely inspired, particularly those toward the close of the first movement. The martial motif predominates, of course, and at times is positively thrilling.

Picnic suppers both in the Music Shed and elsewhere—after the rain stopped—lent a democratic touch to the whole affair, and one which everybody seemed to enjoy. People who looked as if they had never done it before, toted picnic baskets here, there and everywhere. And out on the grounds one could buy soft drinks, and by special license, even a glass of beer or mild ale.

Of course, the Music Shed teemed with celebrities, Olive Downes, Rodzuiski, Ambassador Litvinoff and countless others.

The center of attraction among the boxes was that of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who had, as her chief guests, Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands and her lady-in-waiting, the Baroness Ethel Van Boetzelaer.

In addition to the list already published of those from this vicinity who attended Friday's benefit were: Mrs. John T. Kaemmerlen, Mrs. Heinz Salm and Mrs. Grace Fritts Newman, of this city; Miss Mabel Esselstyn, of Claverack; and Mrs. John Bayard Pruyn, of Kinderhook. Guests of James E. Leath in his box were Mrs. E. F. Gidley and Miss Jane Gidley, Miss Julie Pruyn, of Kinderhook; Miss Annabelle Terrell, of Spencertown; Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand, of Stuyvesant Falls, and Peter Rice, of Pittsfield, Mass.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 16 1942

Music World

By E. S. Van Olinda

Russian music, played for the benefit of Russian War Relief, featured the program at Tanglewood Friday evening, when Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony had its first American concert performance in the Music Shed by the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, Maxim Litvinov, ambassador from the Soviet Union, and Mme. Litvinov were in the audience.

Dorothy Thompson and Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, Inc., were the speakers at a manifestation in the Music Shed, which followed a demonstration of various aspects of the Center's musical activities.

The benefit, under the auspices of the Russian War Relief and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, is the third annual affair of its kind to be held at Tanglewood with the co-operation of the Center.

The audience was of good size. Virtually all the boxes had been sold in advance for the new symphony and the recital by Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Andre Benoist, Valentin Pavlovsky and Ernest Victor Wolff accompanied these artists.

Miss Thompson told of the titanic and significant nature of Russia's effort in the war, the immense sacrifices it has made, and the need of a corresponding sacrifice on America's part. The United States, she pointed out, should rise for the salvation of the Russian people, and, in rising, save ourselves.

Praise for Russia's effort, and of the Shostakovitch Symphony were themes of Mr. Carter's speech and of the message which he read from Dr. Koussevitzky.

The manifestation opened with a trumpet fanfare by Purcell. The Russian national anthem, the "Internationale," and "The Star-Spangled Banner" were played before the speeches. Mr. Litvinov then appeared on the stage, after which Hugh Ross conducted the Centers chorus in Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

The program followed the lines of its two predecessors. The opening Tanglewood on Parade hour offered a choice of three attractions. In the Music Shed the Center's second orchestra played works of Brahms, Aaron Copland, Mendelssohn and Walter Piston, with Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller conducting and Hilda Banks as piano soloist. In the opera house, Act III of "La Boheme" and scenes from "Porgy and Bess" were sung, with Boris Goldovsky and Leonard Bernstein conducting and Herbert Graf, Myron Ryan and James Pease in charge of the staging.

Irma Gonzalez, James Pease, Mario Lanza, Shiela Vogelle, Helena Strassburger, Christine Johnson and Giuseppe Gentile sang leading roles. Meanwhile, early madrigals and vocal and instrumental music composed at Tanglewood by Pablo Mencayo, Romeo Cararino, John Cowell and Blas Galindo were performed in the chamber music hall. An hour for supper followed before Dr. Koussevitzky and his young musicians began the symphony, of which the only previous hearing in this country was in a broadcast under Arturo Toscanini on July 19.

The Berkshire Music Center continued its festival last night, when the first orchestra and chorus presented Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists were Irma Gonzales, soprano; Lillian Knowles, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 16 1942

Final Concerts Of Festival On At Tanglewood

Chorus Joins Orchestra in Bach Magnificat Under Koussevitsky's Direction

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—Having successfully completed last night's extensive program for the benefit of Russian war relief, the Berkshire Music Center began the third and last week end of its regular festival series tonight in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The Center chorus sang with the student orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Bach's Magnificat and also took part in the finale of the other work in the program, Beethoven's 9th Symphony.

The soloists in both works were Irma Gonzalez, Mexican soprano; Lilian Knowles, contralto, and William Hain, tenor, both well known in New York as oratorio singers, and Mack Harrell, Metropolitan Opera barytone. In devoting one of his Tanglewood programs to music for chorus and orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky was following the precedent of his last few Berkshire festivals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Largest Crowd of Summer

Yesterday's benefit, which can be considered as part of the festival although it was officially a separate event, drew the largest Tanglewood audience of the summer despite initially discouraging weather; approximately 5,000 persons listened to the first American performance of Shostakovitch's symphony for which tickets were sold. For most of them, this was a first hearing, as radio reception conditions had been unfavorable in this region on July 19 when the symphony was broadcast by the N. B. C. symphony under Arturo Toscanini. At the end, after the final urging triumphant measures projecting a mood of ultimate victory, there was a long and fervent demonstration for Dr. Koussevitzky and his talented young musicians, with cheers as well as vigorous manual plaudits.

Doubtless the audience was in a mood for enthusiasm, what with the associations of the work with Russia's valiant resistance to the enemy and with the composer's own patriotism and war service. These had been themes in the speeches at the manifestation which preceded last night's concert. But the audience was also moved by the music itself, which has stirring measures, especially in the first movement and at the close.

Strength of Music

For this reviewer, yesterday's rehearing of the symphony made no marked changes in previously formed impressions of the score. It has strength, and also certain readily perceptible weaknesses and unevenness, but throughout it gives a sense of expressive sincerity. As before, one could recognize occasional influences here and there, but to no greater extent than before; the reminiscences are matters of detail, or of a particular passage, while the work as a whole conveys a feeling of individuality, and of directness of musical utterance. Apart from certain features in the scoring and instrumental color, the style is conservative and usually unsophisticated.

The work, while on a large scale, is longer than necessary; its effectiveness as a whole would be greater if it were more condensed and concentrated. The structure is sometimes rather diffuse, and the musical ideas vary in salience and distinction.

The two middle movements have variety in themselves, but together do not offer sufficient contrast. The second movement, with its prevailingly lyric pastoral character, provides an effective contrast with the first, but quite a little of the third movement repeats the mood of the second. The long-breathed, stately recitative first stated by the strings in the third movement is one of the most memorable episodes in the symphony, but the balance and variety of the entire work would have gained had its slow movement been more in the vein of the corresponding part of the composer's fifth symphony. But the work as a whole held the reviewer's intention; its moods and emotions are persuasively projected and enhanced by the scoring, and its expressive effectiveness is not limited to surefire passages such as the long crescendo of the marching figure in the first movement or the closing climax.

Similar Interpretations

Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the work showed no pronounced difference from Mr. Toscanini's. He presented it as an inspiring leader who thoroughly understood the music and was intently devoted to it, deeply felt its emotional associations, and had an orchestra able to give a full revelation of his interpretative wishes. The music is not hard to understand, but not easy to play; the scoring, in which varieties of instrumental color and sonority within individual choirs play an important part, often needs exceptionally clarity and finesse of dynamics and shading.

The orchestra played with enthusiasm, but also with constantly admirable balance, lucidity of medium and finesse of detail as well as the requisite mass of tone; unity was unerring, and the quality of tone deserving of high praise, especially in the singing of the strings, which matched the best which our major symphony orchestras have to offer.

The climax of the long crescendo in the first movement and the closing climax did not for this listener seem quite to equal the record for volume of sound achieved in the N. B. C. performance, but this could be laid to acoustic differences between the N. B. C. studio and the wider places of Tanglewood's vast semi-outdoor Music Shed, and also to an individual hearer's tendency to anticipate and partially discount such an effect in a rehearing.

The orchestra has a roster of 115 musicians, counting two pianists. Thirty-three of its members are women.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 16 1942

S. Koussevitzky To Give Dinner

Conductor Will Honor Group Tonight That Is Interested In Concerts in Berkshires

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give a dinner tomorrow night at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, for a group of Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, members of the faculty of Berkshire Music Center and a number of personal friends who are in Berkshire for final series of the Tanglewood concerts.

Princess Diane R. Eristavi, who has resigned as chairman of Stockbridge branch, Bundles for America, is to organize other branches in the Southern New England territory of which she is regional director. The first one will be at Pittsfield.

Miss Nancy T. Patten, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Frederick Davies, is chairman of a sale for the blind at Lenox Academy on Wednesday. Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre, Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin, Mrs. David T. Dana, Mrs. Henry P. Jaques, Mrs. John D. Kennedy, and Mrs. Ross Winans Whistler will be aides.

Arrivals at the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, include Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, former Governor Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts and Mrs. Ely, Lloyd D. Aspinwall, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hough, Mrs. H. P. Ryan, Mrs. Byron Park, Mrs. Susan Prosser of New York and Judge and Mrs. William J. Granfield of Springfield.

Dr. and Mrs. John Dodge Peters will give a dinner tomorrow at Edgeholm, Great Barrington, for Mrs. Peters's sister, Mrs. Marian K. Kerr.

Mrs. Felix Lamond has returned to Martin Inn, Stockbridge, after visiting her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fairfield Osborn, at Milan Hollow, Irvington, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Field 3d, who were married in June, are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, at Pittsfield. Mrs. Field is the former Miss Suzanne Underwood.

Mrs. Hugh Peters of New York gave a luncheon yesterday at her Great Barrington Summer home for Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y.

POST DISPATCH
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

AUG 16 1942

18-Year-Old Girl Little Symphony Violin Soloist

Ruthabeth Krueger, 18-year-old violinist, will be soloist at the fourth concert in the series by the Little Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Washington University Quadrangle. The guest conductor will be Stanley Chapple, who also will conduct the following week's concert.

Miss Krueger comes from the Berkshire Music School, to which she won a scholarship in national competition last winter. A native of Denver, she is a student at Black Mountain College in Kentucky, and has been playing the violin since the age of 5. In making her St. Louis debut, she will play Bach's Concerto in E Major.

Chapple, an Englishman, is head of the choral, orchestral and opera departments at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, and also is assistant to Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire School. He conducted two concerts in the Little Symphony series last summer.

The complete program follows:

Concerto Grosso — Handel
Pastoral Ode — Gardner Read
(First performance in St. Louis.)
Two Interlinked French Folk Melodies — Ethel Smyth
(First performance in St. Louis.)
Concerto in E Major — Bach
Miss Ruthabeth Krueger, soloist.
Intermission.
Symphony No. 88 — Haydn

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1942

SINGER DRAWS PRIZES AT BENEFIT CONCERT

Dorothy Maynor Officiates —Names of the Winners Announced

Lenox, Aug. 15—Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who sang in last night's program at the Russian War Relief benefit concert, drew the prizes from a cylindrical box just before midnight. Winners follow:—

Berkshire patrons were dotted among the 26 winners of Mrs Frederick Schenck's prize committee. The lucky tickets, drawn from the large cylindrical box by Soprano Dorothy Maynor, were held by the following:—

R. L. Resnikoff, Newton Hills, a member of the Berkshire Music center faculty, an autographed picture of Dr Koussevitzky.

Jane D. Cleveland of Albany, N. Y., an electric clock.

Gerry Blake of Lenox, three bottles of champagne.

N. L. John of Lenox, one dozen nylon stockings.

Mrs A. J. Berkheir, Park avenue, a $10 gift certificate.

Theresa Stang, Lawrence, L. I., a painting of Dr Koussevitzky.

Ernest Hillman, Fairfield, Ct., autographed picture of Albert Spalding.

Michael Kraskow, Brooklyn, N. Y., a $1200 head of himself to be made by Guitou Knoop.

Florence Mahanna, Lenox, jewelry.

James Moriarty, Great Barrington, a Magnavox record cabinet.

Mrs Nathan Naum, Albany, N. Y., a General Electric table model radio.

Mrs Arthur James, New Marlboro, an autographed Spalding record.

Thomas McDonald of Pittsfield, a year's subscription to Life.

Count Rene de Roussy Sales, Stockbridge, a $20 gift certificate.

Emile Polak, New York, a cocker spaniel puppy.

Mrs T. J. Carrigan, Lenox club, a set of coffee cups and saucers.

L. D. Scriven, Boston, $20 gift certificate.

B. J. Tyrell, Pittsfield, a year's subscription to the Eagle.

Elizabeth Turner, Lenox, two dinners at the Curtis hotel.

Wilfred C. Wannamaker, Pittsfield, a ton of coal.

M. J. Heinlich, Larchmont, N. Y., $20 gift certificate.

Catherine D. Navin, Lee, $15 gift certificate.

Mrs Charles A. Dee, Lenox, a beauty kit.

Mrs A. L. Zucke, Pontoosuc lodge, Lanesboro, a painting.

Peter Rice of Pittsfield, three cases of beer.

Philip Allen of Walpole, president of the New England Conservatory of Music, a painting donated by former United States Embassador to Russia Joseph E. Davies.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 17 1942

MANY FROM HERE ATTENDED BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD

Audience Thrills to Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony —Princess Julianna Present.

The Russian War Relief Benefit, which was held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday evening, was an artistic and financial success. Despite weather that at times was at its worst, an audience of between 5,000 and 6,000 (and that is a conservative estimate) assembled in Tanglewood's huge music shed and listened to a wonderful program which included the first concert performance of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony, given by the Advanced Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, under the nothing short of magical direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and solos by Albert Spalding, violinist; Igor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano.

Seated on the stage for the "Manifestation," which took place at 6 p. m., were Dr. Koussevitzky, Edward C. Thompson, president of the Russian War Relief, Inc.; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and chairman of the ticket committee for the benefit, and Miss Dorothy Thompson, the principal speaker. Miss Robinson Smith wore an afternoon dress in a black and white print and a white hat, while Miss Thompson was hatless and wore a tailored suit of silk in a charming shade of rose. Miss Thompson's speech, a masterly exposition of Russia and its needs, was followed with close attention by the huge audience.

There was an extraordinary occurrence at the opening of the "Manifestation," following the "Fanfare." According to the printed program, the "Manifestation" was to open with "The National Anthems of the U. S. S. R. and the United States," in this order. Suddenly, the opening bars of the "Star Spangled Banner" were heard. The audience rose, the singing of the National Anthem went on to about as far as "the dawn's early light," then, with what could only be called a "stop signal" from Dr. Kousseivtzky, there was a pause, perfect silence for a minute or so, while everybody wondered. Then, immediately, came the singing of the U. S. S. R. National Anthem, followed, as originally scheduled, by the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner." Just what happened, no one has yet revealed.

Tanglewood audiences are notoriously enthusiastic, but seldom, if ever, even in that huge Music Shed which has so frequently rung with the applause of thousands, has anything been heard which measured up to the enthusiasm at Friday night's concert. And, in this order, so it seemed to at least one in the audience, was the applause bestowed: First and foremost to Dr. Koussevitzky, then to the Shostakovitch Seventh and its splendid rendition by the Berkshire Center Advanced Student Orchestra, then to Piatigorsky, then to Albert Spalding and lastly to Dorothy Maynor.

Much has been written about the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Most critics agree that it is a bit overlong, that some of its music is a bit undistinguished, but that it has some passages that are absolutely inspired, particularly those toward the close of the first movement. The martial motif predominates, of course, and at times is positively thrilling.

Picnic suppers both in the Music Shed and elsewhere—after the rain stopped—lent a democratic touch to the whole affair, and one which everybody seemed to enjoy. People who looked as if they had never done it before, toted picnic baskets here, there and everywhere. And out on the grounds one could buy soft drinks, and by special license, even a glass of beer or mild ale.

Of course, the Music Shed teemed with celebrities, Olive Downes, Rodzuiski, Ambassador Litvinoff and countless others.

The center of attraction among the boxes was that of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who had, as her chief guests, Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands and her lady-in-waiting, the Baroness Ethel Van Boetzelaer.

In addition to the list already published of those from this vicinity who attended Friday's benefit were: Mrs. John T. Kaemmerlen, Mrs. Heinz Salm and Mrs. Grace Fritts Newman, of this city; Miss Mabel Esselstyn, of Claverack; and Mrs. John Bayard Pruyn, of Kinderhook. Guests of James E. Leath in his box were Mrs. E. F. Gidley and Miss Jane Gidley, Miss Julie Pruyn, of Kinderhook; Miss Annabelle Terrell, of Spencertown; Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand, of Stuyvesant Falls, and Peter Rice, of Pittsfield, Mass.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 16 1942

Music World

By E. S. Van Olinda

Russian music, played for the benefit of Russian War Relief, featured the program at Tanglewood Friday evening, when Dmitri Shostakovitch's seventh symphony had its first American concert performance in the Music Shed by the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, Maxim Litvinov, ambassador from the Soviet Union, and Mme. Litvinov were in the audience.

Dorothy Thompson and Edward C. Carter, president of Russian War Relief, Inc., were the speakers at a manifestation in the Music Shed, which followed a demonstration of various aspects of the Center's musical activities.

The benefit, under the auspices of the Russian War Relief and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, is the third annual affair of its kind to be held at Tanglewood with the co-operation of the Center.

The audience was of good size. Virtually all the boxes had been sold in advance for the new symphony and the recital by Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Andre Benoist, Valentin Pavlovsky and Ernest Victor Wolff accompanied these artists.

Miss Thompson told of the titanic and significant nature of Russia's effort in the war, the immense sacrifices it has made, and the need of a corresponding sacrifice on America's part. The United States, she pointed out, should rise for the salvation of the Russian people, and, in rising, save ourselves.

Praise for Russia's effort, and of the Shostakovitch Symphony were themes of Mr. Carter's speech and of the message which he read from Dr. Koussevitzky.

The manifestation opened with a trumpet fanfare by Purcell. The Russian national anthem, the "Internationale," and "The Star-Spangled Banner" were played before the speeches. Mr. Litvinov then appeared on the stage, after which Hugh Ross conducted the Centers chorus in Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

The program followed the lines of its two predecessors. The opening Tanglewood on Parade hour offered a choice of three attractions. In the Music Shed the Center's second orchestra played works of Brahms, Aaron Copland, Mendelssohn and Walter Piston, with Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller conducting and Hilda Banks as piano soloist. In the opera house, Act III of "La Boheme" and scenes from "Porgy and Bess" were sung, with Boris Goldovsky and Leonard Bernstein conducting and Herbert Graf, Myron Ryan and James Pease in charge of the staging.

Irma Gonzalez, James Pease, Mario Lanza, Shiela Vogelle, Helena Strassburger, Christine Johnson and Giuseppe Gentile sang leading roles. Meanwhile, early madrigals and vocal and instrumental music composed at Tanglewood by Pablo Mencayo, Romeo Cararino, John Cowell and Blas Galindo were performed in the chamber music hall. An hour for supper followed before Dr. Koussevitzky and his young musicians began the symphony, of which the only previous hearing in this country was in a broadcast under Arturo Toscanini on July 19.

The Berkshire Music Center continued its festival last night, when the first orchestra and chorus presented Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists were Irma Gonzalez, soprano; Lillian Knowles, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 16 1942

Final Concerts Of Festival On At Tanglewood

Chorus Joins Orchestra in Bach Magnificat Under Koussevitsky's Direction

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—Having successfully completed last night's extensive program for the benefit of Russian war relief, the Berkshire Music Center began the third and last week end of its regular festival series tonight in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The Center chorus sang with the student orchestra under Serga Koussevitzky's direction in Bach's Magnificat and also took part in the finale of the other work in the program, Beethoven's 9th Symphony.

The soloists in both works were Irma Gonzalez, Mexican soprano; Lilian Knowles, contralto, and William Hain, tenor, both well known in New York as oratorio singers, and Mack Harrell, Metropolitan Opera barytone. In devoting one of his Tanglewood programs to music for chorus and orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky was following the precedent of his last few Berkshire festivals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Largest Crowd of Summer

Yesterday's benefit, which can be considered as part of the festival although it was officially a separate event, drew the largest Tanglewood audience of the summer despite initially discouraging weather; approximately 5,000 persons listened to the first American performance of Shostakovitch's symphony for which tickets were sold. For most of them, this was a first hearing, as radio reception conditions had been unfavorable in this region on July 19 when the symphony was broadcast by the N. B. C. symphony under Arturo Toscanini. At the end, after the final urging triumphant measures projecting a mood of ultimate victory, there was a long and fervent demonstration for Dr. Koussevitzky and his talented young musicians, with cheers as well as vigorous manual plaudits.

Doubtless the audience was in a mood for enthusiasm, what with the associations of the work with Russia's valiant resistance to the enemy and with the composer's own patriotism and war service. These had been themes in the speeches at the manifestation which preceded last night's concert. But the audience was also moved by the music itself, which has stirring measures, especially in the first movement and at the close.

Strength of Music

For this reviewer, yesterday's rehearing of the symphony made no marked changes in previously formed impressions of the score. It has strength, and also certain readily perceptible weaknesses and unevenness, but throughout it gives a sense of expressive sincerity. As before, one could recognize occasional influences here and there, but to no greater extent than before; the reminiscences are matters of detail, or of a particular passage, while the work as a whole conveys a feeling of individuality, and of directness of musical utterance. Apart from certain features in the scoring and instrumental color, the style is conservative and usually unsophisticated.

The work, while on a large scale, is longer than necessary; its effectiveness as a whole would be greater if it were more condensed and concentrated. The structure is sometimes rather diffuse, and the musical ideas vary in salience and distinction.

The two middle movements have variety in themselves, but together do not offer sufficient contrast. The second movement, with its prevailingly lyric pastoral character, provides an effective contrast with the first, but quite a little of the third movement repeats the mood of the second. The long-breathed, stately recitative first stated by the strings in the third movement is one of the most memorable episodes in the symphony, but the balance and variety of the entire work would have gained had its slow movement been more in the vein of the corresponding part of the composer's fifth symphony. But the work as a whole held the reviewer's intention; its moods and emotions are persuasively projected and enhanced by the scoring, and its expressive effectiveness is not limited to surefire passages such as the long crescendo of the marching figure in the first movement or the closing climax.

Similar Interpretations

Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the work showed no pronounced difference from Mr. Toscanini's. He presented it as an inspiring leader who thoroughly understood the music and was intently devoted to it, deeply felt its emotional associations, and had an orchestra able to give a full revelation of his interpretative wishes. The music is not hard to understand, but not easy to play; the scoring, in which varieties of instrumental color and sonority within individual choirs play an important part, often needs exceptionally clarity and finesse of dynamics and shading.

The orchestra played with enthusiasm, but also with constantly admirable balance, lucidity of medium and finesse of detail as well as the requisite mass of tone; unity was unerring, and the quality of tone deserving of high praise, especially in the singing of the strings, which matched the best which our major symphony orchestras have to offer.

The climax of the long crescendo in the first movement and the closing climax did not for this listener seem quite to equal the record for volume of sound achieved in the N. B. C. performance, but this could be laid to acoustic differences between the N. B. C. studio and the wider places of Tanglewood's vast semi-outdoor Music Shed, and also to an individual hearer's tendency to anticipate and partially discount such an effect in a rehearing.

The orchestra has a roster of 115 musicians, counting two pianists. Thirty-three of its members are women.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 16 1942

S. Koussevitzky To Give Dinner

Conductor Will Honor Group Tonight That Is Interested In Concerts in Berkshires

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give a dinner tomorrow night at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, for a group of Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, members of the faculty of Berkshire Music Center and a number of personal friends who are in Berkshire for final series of the Tanglewood concerts.

Princess Diane R. Eristavi, who has resigned as chairman of Stockbridge branch, Bundles for America, is to organize other branches in the Southern New England territory of which she is regional director. The first one will be at Pittsfield.

Miss Nancy T. Patten, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Frederick Davies, is chairman of a sale for the blind at Lenox Academy on Wednesday. Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre, Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin, Mrs. David T. Dana, Mrs. Henry P. Jaques, Mrs. John D. Kennedy, and Mrs. Ross Winans Whistler will be aides.

Arrivals at the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, include Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, former Governor Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts and Mrs. Ely, Lloyd D. Aspinwall, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hough, Mrs. H. P. Ryan, Mrs. Byron Park, Mrs. Susan Prosser of New York and Judge and Mrs. William J. Granfield of Springfield.

Dr. and Mrs. John Dodge Peters will give a dinner tomorrow at Edgeholm, Great Barrington, for Mrs. Peters's sister, Mrs. Marion K. Kerr.

Mrs. Felix Lamond has returned to Martin Inn, Stockbridge, after visiting her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fairfield Osborn, at Milan Hollow, Irvington, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Field 3d, who were married in June, are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, at Pittsfield. Mrs. Field is the former Miss Suzanne Underwood.

Mrs. Hugh Peters of New York gave a luncheon yesterday at her Great Barrington Summer home for Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y.

Reaction of women to wartime conditions is the theme of "This War Against Mrs. Hadley," while women again are the principal in "Private Miss Jones" and "Flying Blonde."

The former is the story of a girl who finds an outlet for her patriotism in helping in a military training center, while the latter has the air force training

Girl Violinist To Be Soloist at Friday Concert

Ruthabeth Krueger, 18-year-old violinist, will be the Little Symphony's guest artist at its fourth concert Friday night in the Washington University quadrangle. The orchestra will be under the direction of Stanley Chapple, who will lead the orchestra both this week and next.

Miss Krueger comes to St. Louis from the Berkshire Music School to which she won a scholarship in a national competition last winter. A native of Denver, Colo., she is a student at Black Mountain College in Kentucky, and has been playing the violin since the age of 5. For her debut in St. Louis with the Little Symphony, she will play Bach's Concerto in E Major.

Chapple, an Englishman who is head of the choral, orchestral and opera departments of the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, also comes from the Berkshire School, where he is assistant to Serge Koussevitsky. He conducted two concerts for the Little Symphony last summer.

The complete program:

Concerto Grosso — — — — — Handel
Pastoral Ode — — — — Gardner Read
(First performance in St. Louis.)
Two Interlinked French Folk Melodies—
Ethel Smyth
(First performance in St. Louis.)
Concerto in E Major — — — — — Bach
Symphony No. 88 — — — — — Haydn

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1942

SINGER DRAWS PRIZES AT BENEFIT CONCERT

Dorothy Maynor Officiates —Names of the Winners Announced

Lenox, Aug. 15—Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who sang in last night's program at the Russian War Relief benefit concert, drew the prizes from a cylindrical box just before midnight. Winners follow:—

Berkshire patrons were dotted among the 26 winners of Mrs Frederick Schenck's prize committee. The lucky tickets, drawn from the large cylindrical box by Soprano Dorothy Maynor, were held by the following:—

R. L. Resnikoff, Newton Hills, a member of the Berkshire Music center faculty, an autographed picture of Dr Koussevitzky.

Jane D. Cleveland of Albany, N. Y., an electric clock.

Gerry Blake of Lenox, three bottles of champagne.

N. L. John of Lenox, one dozen nylon stockings.

Mrs A. J. Berkheir, Park avenue, a $10 gift certificate.

Theresa Stang, Lawrence, L. I., a painting of Dr Koussevitzky.

Ernest Hillman, Fairfield, Ct., autographed picture of Albert Spalding.

Michael Kraskow, Brooklyn, N. Y., a $1200 head of himself to be made by Guitou Knoop.

Florence Mahanna, Lenox, jewelry.

James Moriarty, Great Barrington, a Magnavox record cabinet.

Mrs Nathan Naum, Albany, N. Y., a General Electric table model radio.

Mrs Arthur James, New Marlboro, an autographed Spalding record.

Thomas McDonald of Pittsfield, a year's subscription to Life.

Count Rene de Roussy Sales, Stockbridge, a $20 gift certificate.

Emile Polak, New York, a cocker spaniel puppy.

Mrs T. J. Carrigan, Lenox club, a set of coffee cups and saucers.

L. D. Scriven, Boston, $20 gift certificate.

B. J. Tyrell, Pittsfield, a year's subscription to the Eagle.

Elizabeth Turner, Lenox, two dinners at the Curtis hotel.

Wilfred C. Wannamaker, Pittsfield, a ton of coal.

M. J. Heinlich, Larchmont, N. Y., $20 gift certificate.

Catherine D. Navin, Lee, $15 gift certificate.

Mrs Charles A. Dee, Lenox, a beauty kit.

Mrs A. L. Zucke, Pontoosuc lodge, Lanesboro, a painting.

Peter Rice of Pittsfield, three cases of beer.

Philip Allen of Walpole, president of the New England Conservatory of Music, a painting donated by former United States Embassador to Russia Joseph E. Davies.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 16 1942

New England Receives a Message From Russia and Understands It

By Henry Simon

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The 5 to 11 p.m. Russian War Relief benefit of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation at the Berkshire Music Center has just reached its climax with the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony. The audience—about 5000, despite gas shortage and rain—still is cheering Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, and his remarkable orchestra of students even after five bows. I have never heard such enthusiasm at this staid music center.

Earlier in the day the opera, chamber music and composition departments and the second student orchestra had demonstrated the high caliber of work done at the Center. I heard only scenes from La Boheme and Porgy and Bess as all this was going on simultaneously. There was some extraordinarily fine singing—especially from James Pease and Helena Strassburger—and some almost equally bad imitation of Negro acting. There was no question that music is the center of the Music Center.

Later on, Edward Carter, president of Russian War Relief, spoke, and Dorothy Thompson made an eloquent summary of the importance and heroism of the Russian war effort. Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinov joined the applause and Princess Juliana appeared in the evening. Toward the close of her speech Miss Thompson had this to say about the Shostakovich symphony:

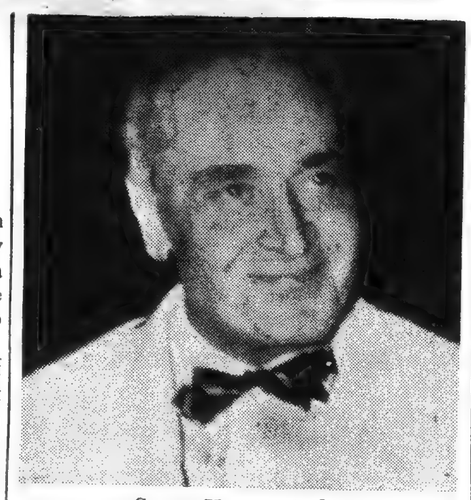
"It is a cry of indignation, a prayer of hope, and a shout of triumph aimed straight at the heart of all mankind. And as we listen to it we know it is the voice of a great people, and a young people, full of energy, power and hope, who have refused to be trampled into the ground. It is the voice of heroism."

The audience listening tonight must have had the picture of the brave siege of Leningrad in mind. The composer himself has associated the work closely with it. But after a third hearing (two regular performances and a rehearsal), I believe that it is music which transcends even the emotions aroused by contemporary news—that its direct appeal to humanity will live beyond the time those emotions are so immediate as they are now—just as the appeal of Beethoven's Eroica has survived the feelings aroused by the world-shaking events which inspired it.

After my initial review of the symphony, an irate correspondent wanted to know why I hadn't pointed out that one passage used a trick Ravel had used first in the Bolero. Another wanted to know, didn't I recognize a bit of Sibelius? Other critics pointed out parallels with Tchaikowsky, Mahler and More. Still others said the symphony was uneven, too long.

I am somewhat mystified by these strictures. They are the sort of comment English teachers sometimes make about Shakespeare. Wyatt wrote sonnets before the Bard, Marlowe made dramatic use of blank verse, and there are some pretty close parallels to Hamlet in Kyd. Also, Shakespeare is uneven and sometimes too long. Nevertheless, at the first or second performance of a great work, one has other feelings. I think there can be little doubt that the Seventh is a great work. Its emotions speak directly, eloquently, unmistakably, and the composer took whatever means came to hand and used his great skill to send home his deeply moving message. The reaction of the audience is only one evidence of his success.

Following the symphony, which received an eloquent reading, Albert Spalding, Gregor Piatigorsky and Dorothy Maynor contributed a brief joint recital. The applause for Miss Maynor is now coming across the lawn from the music shed to the press room.



Serge Koussevitzky

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 17 1942

Shostakovich Battle Symphony Wins Ovation at Tanglewood

By O. V. Clyde

The critical dispute over Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony still rages. But outside the confinements of the aesthetic boxing ring, the music of this young Soviet musician carries everything before it. It makes its way among the people who hear expressed in it the emotions which now stir them, emotions of combat, courage, and resolution.

I heard Toscanini unleash it at the radio studio, and on Friday night at the Tanglewood music festival I heard Koussevitzky deliver it. The Toscanini version, as might be expected, is more taut. Koussevitzky revealed that the score contains, in addition to the explicit tension of the battle-program, passages of beautiful tenderness and feeling.

The essential thing is to grasp what Shostakovitch is trying to do. He is not writing any contemplative philosophy of life. He is not worried as to how closely he can approximate the symphonies of the 19th century. He writes in the midst of battle. He desires to express the emotions of a peoples war, to depict and inspire. And he does it wonderfully well. He gets results, and the results are not superficial, but concern the most significant emotions possible at this hour of human history.

First Movement Highly Dramatic

The first movement is dramatic in the extreme. It is launched by a sweeping figure in the strings. This leads to an interlude depicting peaceful labor. Then begins the relentless advance of the now-famous ostinato (or obstinately repeated) theme accompanied by the drums.

At this point, critics have broken out into a violent quarrel; they do not like the device of the steadily repeated theme which mounts to a furious height above the percussion. They knowingly refer to Ravel's Bolero where the same device is used for another effect. But this is formalistic absurdity! The device is not new with Ravel. Rossini knew all about it a hundred years ago. Shostakovitch's deliberate choice of this musical method is the opposite of imitative; it is creative in the highest degree, getting its effect not only by the accumulation of the sound as such, but also by the increased density of the musical substance. This is what most of the hostile critics seem to have missed.

Some writers say that Shostakovitch does not "work up" his theme (as, for example, Beethoven does in the second movement of the Third Symphony with powerful fugato passages), but merely repeats it on the same musical level at a greater volume. But where is it written that Shostakovitch must do what the critics say? If he wanted to write a fugato development he would have done it; he is a master of this type of writing. The musical effect on both audiences, in New York and at Tanglewood, was unmistakable.

Will this effect wear off with repeated hearings, as the surprise element becomes less? It is hard to say. I do not believe it will. The musical substance here does not depend on surprise alone. There is depth in this movement as well as musical shock.

Dmitri Shostakovich, whose Seventh Symphony had its first concert performance in the United States on Friday, at the Berkshire Music Festival.

An Answer To the Critics

Koussevitzky's performance of the second movement was a revelation. Perhaps it was due to the final hearing, but I did not assimilate this movement in the Toscanini performance. It seemed to add little to the first movement. But the second performance showed me how mistaken I was. This movement, though not as immediately visible as the first, contains, in my opinion even finer musical thought. It contains in abundance exactly what the hostile critics say Shostakovitch lacks — originality and depth of thought. It is "Russian" as Moussorgsky and Tchaikowsky were "Russian;" but it is also "Russian" as the young Socialist artist, Shostakovitch, is Russian, with contemporary feeling, with tenderness and poetry such as I have not heard in any other contemporary musician.

The opening passages of the third movement have also become instantly famous. They consist of magnificently written antiphonal passages for the strings, boldly harmonized. The last two movements seem to be more episodic than the first two whose structures seem firmer. Bassoon and flute solos intervene at moments when one is led to expect a developed climax. This gives them, at least at our present level of knowledge of the score, the feeling of overlength which seems to retard the stunning conclusion which comes as a paean of liberation.

There is much to be said in reply to the misconceptions and hostilities which certain critics have hurled against this music. We will have to say these things later, when space will permit. But, the experience of this music cannot be forgotten. It restores to humanity the living relation with music which Mozart and Beethoven always strive for against the spiritual traditionalism of their generations

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 17 1942

SEASON CONCLUDED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

He Plays 88th Symphony of Haydn and Shostakovich's 7th at Tanglewood

ORCHESTRA IS PRAISED

Young Berkshire Music Center Organization Attracts 4,000 at Its Last Concerts

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16—With performances of Haydn's Eighty-eighth symphony and Shostakovich's Seventh this afternoon, and Bach's Magnificat and Beethoven's Ninth symphony last evening, the historic series of concerts given by the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky came to an end. These concerts have been successful beyond all expectation.

From the practical point of view, the proportions of the audiences and the enthusiasm they displayed would in themselves have been matter for congratulation. The concerts began with audiences that numbered approximately 2,000. Four thousand at each of the last two concerts was a conservative estimate today.

But what far surpasses these results in Dr. Koussevitzky's estimation is the artistic achievement to which he can point with pardonable pride. In six weeks time he has created an orchestra of formidable capacity. No one had believed that this orchestra could present the repertory of old and new music that it has performed so impressively on such short notice, or indeed that this could have been accomplished under any circumstances short of those of a professional orchestra of long standing.

Technical Virtuosity Shown

As examples of what has been accomplished, there may be mentioned not only the technical virtuosity and the dramatic spirit of the interpretations of Beethoven and Shostakovich—in each instance a symphonic work of enormous dimensions and the most varied demands upon the players—but also the fact that in impossibly bad weather, the intonation of the orchestra performing in an open-air auditorium, was much superior in accuracy to that of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, New York, in its average of late Winter seasons.

To the musician, the significance of this will be obvious. It would be a pleasure to dilate upon the artistic details of these readings, but sufficient has been said of Dr. Koussevitzky's performances to establish their excellence and the response of the public to them.

His Faith Vindicated

The supreme fact which emerges from the achievements of the present season is the manner in which his faith in the musical talent of American students has been vindicated. In so doing, he also has shown how greatly the public needs and appreciates great music in a time of national crisis. It had been predicted that no considerable attendance could be expected at an orchestral season given at Tanglewood under existing shortage of gasoline and attendant difficulties of transportation.

As it materialized, the population for a distance of some fifty miles in the neighborhood of the concert center saved its gasoline, shared automobiles and in many cases walked long distances to the concert hall. The people wanted the music, and the music being provided in such quality and measure, they made known their enthusiasm and gratification for it in a memorable way.

It also was shown that it is not a crack symphony orchestra which is a first requisite for concert-giving in these times in America. It is rather the spirit, the intelligence, the talent and the mastery of the conception that fulfills the need.

DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERAL

AUG 16 1942

Concerts Heard In Berkshires

Eleanor McCann, head of music education department at the Dayton Art institute and who is attending the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Mass., a center presided over by Serge Koussevitzky—is enthusiatic in the matter of the Boston conductor's "Youth" orchestra.

Because of the war and, the shortage of rubber and gas the annual series of concerts by the Boston orchestra given in connection with the Berkshire Music Center was cancelled this season. But an orchestra of students attending the center has been organized by Koussevitzky, and evidently to good effect.

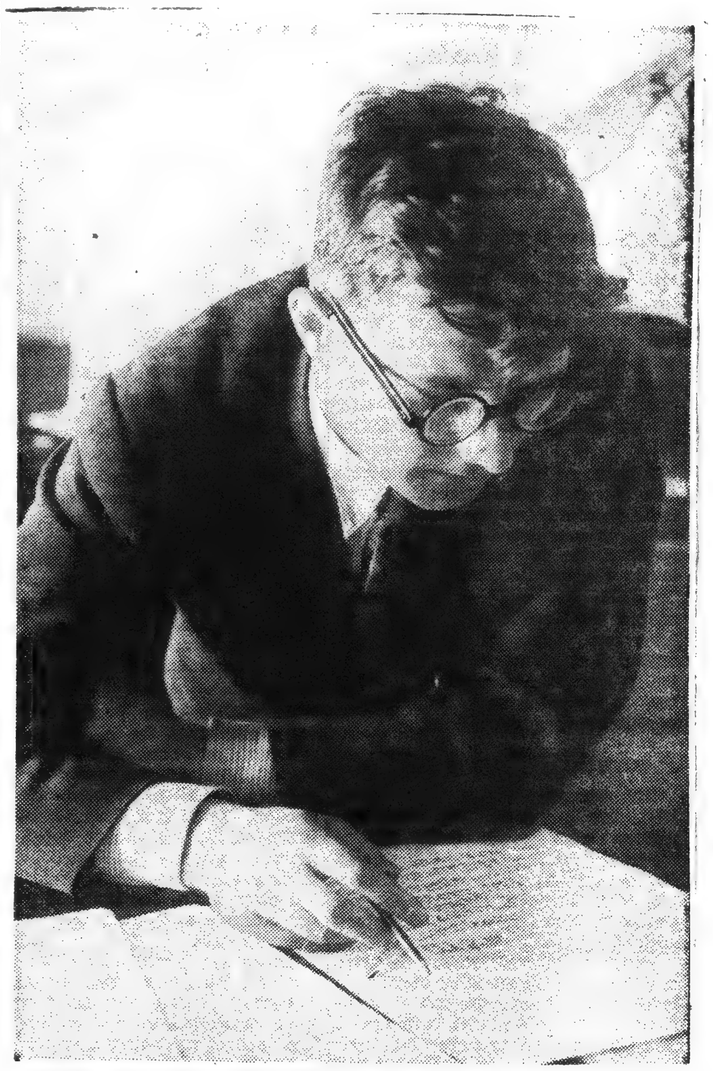
Miss McCann writes that on the occasion of the first concert under Koussevitzky's direction the 110 young people of the orchestra "simply poured out their hearts for him. It was a memorable evening."

She sends, too, a program given by the Berkshire Music Center, last Friday, for Russian war relief; a program which included Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, the "War" symphony, in its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere. In the same concert appeared Dorothy Maynor, Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky. Miss McCann writes that Koussevitzky praises the Shostakovich symphony and encloses in a letter a newspaper article in which Koussevitzky is quoted as having said:

"No one since Beethoven has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to music material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth. He knows everything he wants; he is boss of everything he sets out to do. He has melody without end. His language is as rich as the world. His emotion is absolutely universal.

"His latest work is as great as the greatest work he has given us. The First, the Fifth and the Seventh are each a world of beauty and emotion."

Miss McCann tells of one programmed event which she terms "historic." On this occasion the speakers were the French concertmeister, Richard Burgin; Mr. Koussevitzky; Stanley Chapple, English conductor; and the Russian cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky. Aaron Copland, American composer, was moderator, and the subject was "What About Government Support for Music?"



DMITRI SHOSTAKOVICH'S Symphony No. 7 was given its first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere, Friday evening, at Tanglewood, New Jersey, when Serge Koussevitzky directed the Berkshire Music Center orchestra in its presentation. The young Russian composer is photographed here as he appears—probably—while composing.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1942

This Weekend to Climax Berkshire Social Program For the Summer Season

Events Include Queen Wilhelmina's Visit to Pittsfield, Gala Russian Relief Benefit and Final Concerts of Tanglewood Festival — Dr Serge Koussevitzky Will Be Host at Dinner Party Tonight — Numerous Titled Dignitaries Among Those Attending Concert Series—Other Items of Berkshire Social Interest

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 15—This weekend is the climax of the midsummer resort season in Berkshire. Events include the visit to Pittsfield airport today by Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, last night's gala Russian relief benefit at Tanglewood and the final concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon of the Tanglewood Music festival. Dr Serge Koussevitzky is having a dinner party of 40 tomorrow night at Curtis hotel, Lenox, in compliment to Boston Symphony orchestra trustees who are in Berkshire, the faculty of the Tanglewood Music center and a group of friends.

Queen's Trip to Pittsfield

Her majesty's trip to Pittsfield today was one of several she has made during her summer sojourn at Fence Fields, Lee, the others having been for shopping, or sightseeing. While Princess Juliana has attended several concerts at Tanglewood and has been the principal guest at teas given by Mrs William Willeke at Mountain House, Pittsfield; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at the Residence and Mrs William Penn Cresson at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, her mother has declined all such invitations greatly to the disappointment of hostesses.

Besides Princess Juliana titled dignitaries who are attending the weekend concerts are Sir Arthur and Lady Salter of London, who are at Hickory Farm, Tyringham; Baron and Baroness Humbert de Viry, formerly of Savoie, France; Baron and Baroness Eduard de Rothschild, formerly of Paris, who are at Curtis hotel; Princess Eugenia Ruspoli of Rome who is at the Curtis; Princess Diane R. Eristavi of Laurel Mere, Stockbridge; Count and Countess Hans C. Seherr-Thoss (Marion C. Kingsland) of Alford, Count and Countess Andre de Saint Phalle (Jacqueline Harper), who are at Shipton Court cottage, Lenox, and Count and Countess Raoul Roussy de Sales, who are at Overlee, Lenox.

Mrs Lucy Wadhams Dodge is having several small entertainments in compliment to her sister, Mrs William F. Pearson of Washington, D. C., who is her guest at Guestwick, Pittsfield, including a tea next Tuesday afternoon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 15 1942

Shostakovich Seventh Receives First U. S. Concert Performance

Symphony Led by Koussevitzky at Russian War Relief Fete in Berkshires—Litvinoff and Wife and Princess Juliana Guests

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony was given its first concert performance in America tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, as the focal point of the ceremonies of the Russian War Relief Benefit given under the auspices of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and in the presence, among many distinguished guests, of the Russian Ambassador, Maxim Litvinoff, and his wife.

In a neighboring box sat Princess Juliana of the Netherlands. The occasion was brilliant and imposing, like the finale of the symphoney, which at the close of a highly dramatic interpretation, received an ovation, which lasted for a good ten minutes, of a shouting, cheering audience which rose to its feet as it extended this homage to the distant composer, to the land and the cause which his symphony symbolized, and to the conductor and the student orchestra, which had carried out his wishes with a spirit and technical proficiency that elicited the highest praise.

Setting for Symphony 'Ideal'

The setting was ideal for the symphony which has caused the still-young Mr. Shostakovich—the same who only six years ago was in a state of political and musical eclipse in Russia after Stalin's disapproval of his opera, "Lady MacBeth"—to be elevated back in the twinkling of an eye to the position of the composer of the most sought-after symphony in the world, in the instance of this score which he created as a composer in and defender of besieged Leningrad, and completed in several months as his testimonial to the bravery of his fellow-countrymen and soldiers and the heroism of the struggle, of which they are bearing the brunt today, in defense of homeland and humanity.

No wonder, then, that the symphony has received such a sendoff. No more than justice that the composer should be whole-heartedly honored and acclaimed for all that he represents in his art. Aside from the question of the actual value of the score, the performance tonight could be summarized in terms of unsparing praise of all that Koussevitzky and his American boys and girls did in proclaiming Shostakovich's message. Not a point in the score was missed.

Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of the opening of the first movement is thus far unmatched for power and breadth in the American concert-goers' experience. No conductor could easily fall in the great crescendo, which forms a theatrical feature of the opening movement, and from which the last iota of effect was squeezed, from its beginning, with an almost inaudible rattle of the snare-drum and the announcement by the strings of the ostinato theme, to the screaming climax of the passage.

Wind Instruments Effective

Nor were such effects the only ones. The singing of the strings in lyrical passages, the significance given each phrase, some beautiful solos of wind instruments and brilliant effects of brass, and the balance and cohesion of the orchestral fabric—all these were worthy of a seasoned orchestra of veterans, and they were coupled with the incomparable zest of youth. To say that every solo passage was as complete a ravishment of the ear as would have been the case with the best first-desk men of the best orchestra in America would be unpardonable exaggeration.

On the other hand, there are first-desk players in the orchestra of exceptional capacity, and in all that pertains to musicianly and dramatic interpretation, and the highest standards of orchestral ensemble, the conductor more than vindicated his vivid comprehension of the symphony, and the prowess of the young players whom he had assembled and drilled, in the short space of five weeks, for a really heroic task. Nor is it easy to believe that the composer would have thought of a different, or at least great, and some decidedly cheap, in a way is not organic or characteristic of the close and sustained musical thinking that the symphonic form demands. Here is a passage of marked rhetorical effect; there a lyrical oasis of a feeling and poetry which point to other things. Also there are great stretches of comparative emptiness, with patent banalities that no amount of patriotism or puffery will cause to endure.

Symphony Is Appraised

We are too close to Shostakovich, and he is too near his creative beginnings as a composer in his middle thirties, for us to be able to designate the precise place that this symphony will take in the perspective of this art. But it is cearly a formative work, not nearly as well and carefully knit together as his First symphony of his nineteenth year, not rising, at any time, to such heights as parts of the first movement and the slow movement of his Fifth symphony. It could be called a battle piece, nobly intended, excitingly scored, with parts and patches of the truly creative spirit to mature showing through at vtimes in a very striking but by no means consistently convincing manner.

As remarked, the symphony fully served its purpose this evening and was as appreciably received. It constituted the first half of the concert, after which solos were sung and played, to the vast delight of the audience, by three distinguished soloists: Albert Spaulding, violinist; Gregor Piatagorsky, violincellist; and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, all of whom, in response to insistent applause, returned repeatedly to the platform.

4,000 ATTEND BENEFIT

$15,000 Raised by Tanglewood Program for Russian Relief

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Tanglewood was on parade tonight for the great Russian War Relief benefit arranged by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The attendance was about 4,000, and it was estimated that net receipts would be between $12,000 and $15,000. The Litvinoffs are visiting Dr. Koussevitzky at Seranak.

The program, consisting of orchestral and opera music and speaking, started at 5 o'clock and continued for almost four hours. Early intermittent showers kept down the attendance.

For the first hour there was a double program with the second orchestra in the Music Shed playing compositions by Brahms, Copland, Mendelssohn and Piston, with Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller conducting. In the Mendelssohn number Hilda Banks was piano soloist.

Act 3 of "La Bohème" Given

Simultaneously in the Chamber Music Hall, the Opera Department, under the direction of Herbert Graf, presented Act 3 of Puccini's "La Bohème" and scenes from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

At 6 o'clock came the speaking exercises in the Music Shed, with Edward Clark Carter, secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations, presiding. On the platform with him were Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Miss Dorothy Thompson and Jerome D. Greene of Cambridge, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees. Dr. Koussevitzky's brief address was read by Mr. Carter.

It follows: "I am not addressing you as a speaker on this occasion but as a musician. I voice my hope in mankind because of my hope in the victory of Russia. Indeed at a time when Russia is crucified for the rest of the world from her scorched plains comes this masterpiece of music as great as the world. The symphony of Shostakovich is a message of faith and the victory of the spirit of man over death.

"We who have gathered here to help the Russian people in the darkest hour in history must be

[146]

TELEGRAM
AUG 15 1942

Symphony Written During Nazi Attack Heard At Tanglewood

First Performance in Western Hemisphere Of Shostakovitch Work Enthusiastically Received at Russian Relief Benefit

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 14. — The first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch "Seventh Symphony" was given tonight. This work was written under fire and flame of Nazi attacks on Leningrad as an eloquent indictment of Axis tyranny and despotism.

Before proceeding further with a descussion of this work we hasten to state that it is our belief that this is the greatest orchestral work of the past century, that Koussevitzky tonight reached one of the highest peaks in musical conductorship, and that this performance will be excelled only by an orchestra, however mature, that will shelve all its established inhibitions and concern itself entirely with the transmission of a great message.

To begin with, this 36-year-old Russian composer has a remarkable sense of the effectiveness and appropriateness of instruments and combinations. This is true of many pseudo "modernists," but in his Seventh Symphony in particular, one feels that Shostakovitch's "streamline" instrumental ideas are not intended to impress by their cleverness but by the results achieved. That is why the piano score of the First Symphony, for example, was not used as a deliberate innovation but because that instrument alone could achieve the desired effect. Thus, this latest symphony by Shostakovitch is instrumentally invigorating, but not shocking.

Electrifying Power

Symphonies of 70 minutest' duration are happily rare. Those of such length (notably Mahler's) tax one's powers of receptiveness to the exhaustive point. However, the work in question, being of current historical significance, is of special interest to this generation's audiences. Whether it will retain its powers of engrossment is again speculative, but we are strongly inclined to believe that it will. Our reason is that this work possesses the electrifying power of repeatedly hurling itself to, and receding from, dramatic climaxes with youthful determination, but without monotony.

There is a wealth of musical ideas from sly gentle themes to gigantic masses of tone. Reminisence to other masters is inevitable and Shostakovitch does not always disguise them. For example, the slender woodwind subordinate theme of the first movement which gains in volume and momentum, accompanied by a steady rhythmic pulse in the percussion section, is more than vaguely suggestive of the Ravel Bolero. Many other themes and devices apparently stem from Tschaikowsky, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Berlioz. But these effects are presented in new and exciting attire.

Brass Section Praised

As for the performance itself, we wish first of all to comment upon the superlative work of the brass section and we wish we might name all of those soloists (particularly the oboe, bassoon and timpani) who performed exposed and treacherous passages fluently and accurately. The final movement reaches an almost unprecedented climax. The reaction of the audience is clearly indicated by the six minutes (by actual count) of applause that was accorded the work's conclusion.

Three celebrated artists donated their services to conclude the day's concert, all of them known and well received by Worcester audiences. Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, appropriately sang songs by Rachmanioff, Mousborghky and Tschaikowsky. Gregor Piatigorsky, played two of his cello arrangements of works by Prokofieff and Weber. Albert Spalding played violin arrangements of familiar themes by Chopin, de Falia and Paganini.

Russian Relief Program

Heavy, persistent showers earlier had failed to dampen the ardor of several thousand who assembled under the shelter of Tanglewood's auditoriums to support the cause of Russian relief. By 5 o'clock there was an estimated 2800 in attendance with the prospect of more than double that number before the night's activities had concluded.

This event will remain historically significant not only because of its eloquent purpose but because of its many outstanding musical and patriotic features.

Prior to addresses by Dorothy Thompson and Edward C. Carter (president, Russian War Relief) musical programs of many and varied descriptions were simultaneously in progress in the Sher, Opera House, and Chamber Music Hall. Obviously, it has been possible to hear these programs but fragmentarily, but it did afford unique experience in proceeding to a variety of musical styles in rapid succession.

In the Shed

The Shed offered its patrons four orchestral works, three of which were tone pictures. These were conducted by Students Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller. We were fortunate in arriving upon the scene as Hilda Banks, 14-year-old pianist and pupil of Arthur Schnabel, was performing the Mendelssohn G. Minor Concerto in a style that could be easily described as "virtuoso." The last movement, in particular, was played with firm, vigorous phrases. The balance of this program included Brahams' "Tragic Overture" and two ballet-suites Coplands' "Billy the Kid" and "The Incredible Flutist," by Walter Piston.

Chamber Music Hall

From the platform of the Chamber Music Hall we heard one movement of a "Trio for Clarinet, Cello and Piano," by John Cowell who is a student of Martinu, Czech composer. Although we recognize a certain talent for instrumental effect, the largo movement lacked individuality of style. Of its performers, Werner Janssen, Jr., clarinetist and Marion Davies, cellist, were outstanding.

Other interesting selections of this division were madrigal choruses, including "Sumer is Icumen In," "Weelke's "On the Plains," and "Odak" with James Pease, as bass soloist.

Opera House

Two romantic excerpts were presented at the Opera House—the third act from Puccini's "La Boheme" and scenes from "Porgy and Bess" by George Gershwin. A remarkable contrast in character portrayal was given by James Pease as Porgy.

No greater change in make up or personality could possibly be imagined then from his jovial interpretation of John Falstaff in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai opera performed here for the second time last night. We were glad to hear him sing from the Gershwin score as it permitted more extensive use of his wide, rich range, unhampered by the bulky attire of the Falstaff role.

a su... work...

Wi... tion, ... the ... super ... did ... er, ... convi... Tosc... Seve... tially ... phon...

In ... trep... serv... faul... tues... pose... tery, ... that ... coun... whic... extr... that ... sens... mat...

Ch... is th... of ... en... ch...

eful to this great nation which les the cross and, through the eme suffering of her people, us to the hope of light and rrection."

Ambassador Is Applauded

Litvinoff arrived during the ing program and was led to center of the stage by Dr. sevitzky. The audience arose gave the diplomat a rousing ion.

e final number was the sing- of Randall Thompson's "Alle- by a music center chorus, ding outside the Music Shed, Hugh Ross conducting.

th Miss Robinson Smith, hon- y vice chairman of the relief ram, were Princess Juliana; lady in waiting, Baroness Ethel Boetzelaer; Mr. and Mrs. em Van Tets, Mrs. Charles nson Smith, Miss Miriam K. er and Colonel Stewart Rodde e British Army.

hty-four seats had been re- d for aviators from the Neth- ls Indies, who will be decor- tomorrow in Pittsfield by Wilhelmina, but they were d and only a few of them ar- onight.

Concert Attended By Litvinoff

LENOX, Aug. 14 (AP)—Dmitri Shostakovitch's "Seventh Symphony" was given tonight by Serge Koussevitsky and his student orchestra at a special Russion Relief Benefit concert attended by Maxim Litvinoff, the Russian ambassador.

Previously played over the radio by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra, the symphony so stirred the audience that they applauded after each of the four movements (regular Boston Symphony audiences never applaud between movements) and then gave the orchestra and its distinguished conductor an ovation at the end.

Litvinoff was presented to the audience from the stage and then returned to a box close to one occupied by Crown Princess Juliana of The Netherlands, who is summering at Lee.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
AUG 21 1942

Plan Music Club Board Meeting

National Federation to Meet in Providence Aug. 30-Sept. 2.

The National Federation of Music clubs has announced the National Board meeting to be held August 30 to September 2 at the Providence Biltmore hotel, Providence, R. I. Mrs. Willis Lyman of Glenbrook, president of the Connecticut State Federation will attend the meeting.

Included on the program will be a public forum on the war activities of the National Federation entitled "Music-Happiness' Last Outpost." The committee in charge has arranged concerts and walking tours of old Providence. On Monday night of the meeting, there will be concert featuring American composers. The program on Tuesday will be highlighted by the "Little Red House" luncheon, honoring Dr Serge Kussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Contest Planned

The club has also planned to sponsor, during March, a contest for student musicians and artists. Information and application may be procured through Mrs. Willis Lyman, the president, or Mrs. Lulu Rochlen Gray of Stamford, state contest chairman.

In considering the purpose of the contest, the National Federation of Music club believes that greater emphasis should be placed on the importance of greater effort by the student division. The Federation also believes that today's advanced student, through his work and influence in his own country, can do much to expand our general culture. The Federation also holds that the finest musical training can be had in this country and purposes through contests, awards, and appearances to recognize American training and talent worthy of a concert career.

Four cash prizes of one thousand dollars each will be presented to the winner of the first place in piano, violin, men's voice and women's voice. Schubert Memorial Inc. will make one award in piano and violin. The competition of Schubert Memorial Inc. and the National Federation of Music clubs will select the winner from the Federation National winners in piano and violin.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 15 1942

Shostakovich Seventh Receives First U. S. Concert Performance

Symphony Led by Koussevitzky at Russian War Relief Fete in Berkshires—Litvinoff and Wife and Princess Juliana Guests

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony was given its first concert performance in America tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, as the focal point of the ceremonies of the Russian War Relief Benefit given under the auspices of the Russian War Relief, Inc., and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and in the presence, among many distinguished guests, of the Russian Ambassador, Maxim Litvinoff, and his wife.

In a neighboring box sat Princess Juliana of the Netherlands. The occasion was brilliant and imposing, like the finale of the symphoney, which at the close of a highly dramatic interpretation, received an ovation, which lasted for a good ten minutes, of a shouting, cheering audience which rose to its feet as it extended this homage to the distant composer, to the land and the cause which his symphony symbolized, and to the conductor and the student orchestra, which had carried out his wishes with a spirit and technical proficiency that elicited the highest praise.

Setting for Symphony 'Ideal'

The setting was ideal for the symphony which has caused the still-young Mr. Shostakovich—the same who only six years ago was in a state of political and musical eclipse in Russia after Stalin's disapproval of his opera, "Lady MacBeth"—to be elevated back in the twinkling of an eye to the position of the composer of the most sought-after symphony in the world, in the instance of this score which he created as a composer in and defender of besieged Leningrad, and completed in several months as his testimonial to the bravery of his fellow-countrymen and soldiers and the heroism of the struggle, of which they are bearing the brunt today, in defense of homeland and humanity.

No wonder, then, that the symphony has received such a sendoff. No more than justice that the composer should be whole-heartedly honored and acclaimed for all that he represents in his art. Aside from the question of the actual value of the score, the performance tonight could be summarized in terms of unsparing praise of all that Koussevitzky and his American boys and girls did in proclaiming Shostakovich's message. Not a point in the score was missed.

Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of the opening of the first movement is thus far unmatched for power and breadth in the American concert-goers' experience. No conductor could easily fail in the great crescendo, which forms a theatrical feature of the opening movement, and from which the last iota of effect was squeezed, from its beginning, with an almost inaudible rattle of the snare-drum and the announcement by the strings of the ostinato theme, to the screaming climax of the passage.

Wind Instruments Effective

Nor were such effects the only ones. The singing of the strings in lyrical passages, the significance given each phrase, some beautiful solos of wind instruments and brilliant effects of brass, and the balance and cohesion of the orchestral fabric—all these were worthy of a seasoned orchestra of veterans, and they were coupled with the incomparable zest of youth. To say that every solo passage was as complete a ravishment of the ear as would have been the case with the best first-desk men of the best orchestra in America would be unpardonable exaggeration.

On the other hand, there are first-desk players in the orchestra of exceptional capacity, and in all that pertains to musicianly and dramatic interpretation, and the highest standards of orchestral ensemble, the conductor more than vindicated his vivid comprehension of the symphony, and the prowess of the young players whom he had assembled and drilled, in the short space of five weeks, for a really heroic task. Nor is it easy to believe that the composer would have thought of a different, or at least great, and some decidedly cheap, in a way is not organic or characteristic of the close and sustained musical thinking that the symphonic form demands. Here is a passage of marked rhetorical effect; there a lyrical oasis of a feeling and poetry which point to other things. Also there are great stretches of comparative emptiness, with patent banalities that no amount of patriotism or puffery will cause to endure.

Symphony Is Appraised

We are too close to Shostakovich, and he is too near his creative beginnings as a composer in his middle thirties, for us to be able to designate the precise place that this symphony will take in the perspective of this art. But it is cearly a formative work, not nearly as well and carefully knit together as his First symphony of his nineteenth year, not rising, at any time, to such heights as parts of the first movement and the slow movement of his Fifth symphony. It could be called a battle piece, nobly intended, excitingly scored, with parts and patches of the truly creative spirit to mature showing through at vtimes in a very striking but by no means consistently convincing manner.

As remarked, the symphony fully served its purpose this evening and was as appreciably received. It constituted the first half of the concert, after which solos were sung and played, to the vast delight of the audience, by three distinguished soloists: Albert Spaulding, violinist; Gregor Piatagorsky, violincellist; and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, all of whom, in response to insistent applause, returned repeatedly to the platform.

4,000 ATTEND BENEFIT

$15,000 Raised by Tanglewood Program for Russian Relief

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Tanglewood was on parade tonight for the great Russian War Relief benefit arranged by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The attendance was about 4,000, and it was estimated that net receipts would be between $12,000 and $15,000. The Litvinoffs are visiting Dr. Koussevitzky at Seranak.

The program, consisting of orchestral and opera music and speaking, started at 5 o'clock and continued for almost four hours. Early intermittent showers kept down the attendance.

For the first hour there was a double program with the second orchestra in the Music Shed playing compositions by Brahms, Copland, Mendelssohn and Piston, with Walter Hendl, Lukas Foss, Frederick Fennell and Robert Zeller conducting. In the Mendelssohn number Hilda Banks was piano soloist.

Act 3 of "La Bohème" Given

Simultaneously in the Chamber Music Hall, the Opera Department, under the direction of Herbert Graf, presented Act 3 of Puccini's "La Bohème" and scenes from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

At 6 o'clock came the speaking exercises in the Music Shed, with Edward Clark Carter, secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations, presiding. On the platform with him were Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Miss Dorothy Thompson and Jerome D. Greene of Cambridge, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees. Dr. Koussevitzky's brief address was read by Mr. Carter.

It follows: "I am not addressing you as a speaker on this occasion but as a musician. I voice my hope in mankind because of my hope in the victory of Russia. Indeed at a time when Russia is crucified for the rest of the world from her scorched plains comes this masterpiece of music as great as the world. The symphony of Shostakovich is a message of faith and the victory of the spirit of man over death.

"We who have gathered here to help the Russian people in the darkest hour in history must be

[146]

TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Symphony Written During Nazi Attack Heard At Tanglewood

First Performance in Western Hemisphere Of Shostakovitch Work Enthusiastically Received at Russian Relief Benefit

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 14. — The first concert performance in the Western hemisphere of the Shostakovitch "Seventh Symphony" was given tonight. This work was written under fire and flame of Nazi attacks on Leningrad as an eloquent indictment of Axis tyranny and despotism.

Before proceeding further with a descussion of this work we hasten to state that it is our belief that this is the greatest orchestral work of the past century, that Koussevitzky tonight reached one of the highest peaks in musical conductorship, and that this performance will be excelled only by an orchestra, however mature, that will shelve all its established inhibitions and concern itself entirely with the transmission of a great message.

To begin with, this 36-year-old Russian composer has a remarkable sense of the effectiveness and appropriateness of instruments and combinations. This is true of many pseudo "modernists," but in his [illegible] the Mendelssohn G. Minor Concerto in a style that could be easily described as "virtuoso." The last movement, in particular, was played with firm, vigorous phrases. The balance of this program included Brahams' "Tragic Overture" and two ballet-suites Coplands' "Billy the Kid" and "The Incredible Flutist," by Walter Piston.

Chamber Music Hall

From the platform of the Chamber Music Hall we heard one movement of a "Trio for Clarinet, Cello and Piano," by John Cowell who is a student of Martinu, Czech composer. Although we recognize a certain talent for instrumental effect, the largo movement lacked individuality of style. Of its performers, Werner Janssen, Jr., clarinetist and Marion Davies, cellist, were outstanding.

Other interesting selections of this division were madrigal choruses, including "Sumer is Icumen In," "Weelke's "On the Plains," and "Odak" with James Pease, as bass soloist.

Opera House

Two romantic excerpts were presented at the Opera House—the third act from Puccini's "La Boheme" and scenes from "Porgy and Bess" by George Gershwin. A remarkable contrast in character portrayal was given by James Pease as Porgy.

No greater change in make up or personality could possibly be imagined then from his jovial interpretation of John Falstaff in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai opera performed here for the second time last night. We were glad to hear him sing from the Gershwin score as it permitted more extensive use of his wide, rich range, unhampered by the bulky attire of the Falstaff role.

ENGAGEMENT

The engagement of Miss Evelyn G. Schnare to Joseph T. Mahoney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Mahoney of 6 Cheney street, announced by her father, Harry E. Schnare of Hartford.

Send Boxes to Soldiers

Mrs. Margaret I. Gibbons, grand regent of Court Bishop O'Leary, Catholic Daughters of America, announces that during the past week the organization has packed and sent 12 boxes containing candy, chewing gum, books, and toilet articles to service men.

Working on the project were Misses Catherine T. Donahue, Mary E. Melia, Mary R. Sullivan, Patricia M. Gibbons, Catherin F. Wilson, and Dorothy F. McLaughlin.

Miss Cohen to Wed

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cohen of 10 Edgewood street announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Shirley B. Cohen, to Donald Pearlman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Pearlman of Rochester, N. Y. The wedding will be tomorrow at 12:45 o'clock at Temple Emanuel.

To Wed Aug. 22

Miss Lucianne LaPlante, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred LaPlante of East Jaffrey, N. H., and Peter P. Martin, son of Mrs. Marion Martin of 63 Boston avenue, will be married Aug. 22 at 9 o'clock in St. Margaret Mary Church.

Tea at Home

Mrs. Rogers entertained for Mrs. Pooley Thursday night at her home, 4 Minthorne street. Tonight Mrs. Lord will have her as guest of honor at a wiener roast at her home, 39 Stafford street.

With these facts for congratulation, it need be no particular fly in the ointment to remark that this superb presentation of the score did not alter, for the present writer, a jot or tittle of his previous conviction entertained after the Toscannini performance, that the Seventh of Shostakovich is essentially far from a first-class symphony.

In fact the very clarity and intrepedity of the performance served to emphasize its obvious faults and its equally obvious virtues. The virtues lie in the composer's admirable facility and mastery of orchestral combinations that usually work; his brilliant counter-point; the lyrical gift which, when it is not distorted by extra-musical considerations, is that of a true musician, and his sense of the big line and his dramatic temperament.

Cheek by jowel with these merits is the plain presence, in the score, of many poorly assimilated influences of other composers; and inclusion of musical elements, some day afternoon and evening at open house honoring Mrs. Richard A. Pooley of Tampa, Fla. Assistants to the hostess were Mrs. Elizabeth A. Rogers and Mrs. Everett B. Lord, Mrs. Fielder S. Clark and Mrs. Nina eful to this great nation which les the cross and, through the eme suffering of her people, us to the hope of light and resurrection."

Ambassador Is Applauded

Mr. Litvinoff arrived during the speaking program and was led to the center of the stage by Dr. Koussevitzky. The audience arose and gave the diplomat a rousing ovation.

The final number was the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by a music center chorus, standing outside the Music Shed, with Hugh Ross conducting.

With Miss Robinson Smith, honorary vice chairman of the relief program, were Princess Juliana; her lady in waiting, Baroness Ethel Van Boetzelaer; Mr. and Mrs. Willem Van Tets, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Miriam K. Oliver and Colonel Stewart Rodde of the British Army.

Eighty-four seats had been reserved for aviators from the Netherlands Indies, who will be decorated tomorrow in Pittsfield by Queen Wilhelmina, but they were delayed and only a few of them arrived tonight.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 21 1942

Plan Music Club Board Meeting

National Federation to Meet in Providence Aug. 30-Sept. 2.

The National Federation of Music clubs has announced the National Board meeting to be held August 30 to September 2 at the Providence Biltmore hotel, Providence, R. I. Mrs. Willis Lyman of Glenbrook, president of the Connecticut State Federation will attend the meeting.

Included on the program will be a public forum on the war activities of the National Federation entitled "Music-Happiness' Last Outpost." The committee in charge has arranged concerts and walking tours of old Providence. On Monday night of the meeting, there will be concert featuring American composers. The program on Tuesday will be highlighted by the "Little Red House" luncheon, honoring Dr Serge Kussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Contest Planned

The club has also planned to sponsor, during March, a contest for student musicians and artists Information and application may be procured through Mrs. Willis Lyman, the president, or Mrs. Lulu Rochlen Gray of Stamford, state contest chairman.

In considering the purpose of the contest, the National Federation of Music club believes that greater emphasis should be placed on the importance of greater effort by the student division. The Federation also believes that today's advanced student, through his work and influence in his own country, can do much to expand our general culture The Federation also holds that the finest musical training can be had in this country and purposes through contests, awards, and appearances to recognize American training and talent worthy of a concert career.

Four cash prizes of one thousand dollars each will be presented to the winner of the first place in piano, violin, men's voice and women's voice. Schubert Memorial Inc. will make one award in piano and violin. The competition of Schubert Memorial Inc. and the National Federation of Music clubs will select the winner from the Federation National winners in piano and violin.

Concert Attended By Litvinoff

LENOX, Aug. 14 (AP)—Dmitri Shostakovitch's "Seventh Symphony" was given tonight by Serge Koussevitsky and his student orchestra at a special Russion Relief Benefit concert attended by Maxim Litvinoff, the Russian ambassador.

Previously played over the radio by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra, the symphony so stirred the audience that they applauded after each of the four movements (regular Boston Symphony audiences never applaud between movements) and then gave the orchestra and its distinguished conductor an ovation at the end.

Litvinoff was presented to the audience from the stage and then returned to a box close to one occupied by Crown Princess Juliana of The Netherlands, who is summering at Lee.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1942

More Than Half of Boxes Taken for Russian Benefit

Mrs. Owen Johnson Announces That Box Parking Area at Tanglewood Will Be Opened for Occasion

The regular box parking area south of the shed at Tanglewood, will be opened for the Russian war relief benefit planned next Friday by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, it was announced today by Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, chairman of the box committee.

Fred N. Cummings and Thomas H. Sullivan of Pittsfield and their American Legion volunteers who served the Berkshire Symphonic Festival several years in developing an efficient parking system, will be in charge of the parking in the box area. Willard M. Sistare of Pittsfield, who organized the Festival crew for ushering and ticket-taking, will be chairman of ushers for the box area. Entrance to the parking area will be via Hawthorne Street from Route 183 near Tanglewood or from the center of Lenox as in previous years. Windshield cards will be issued with box tickets.

Mrs. Johnsons' committee has already sold more than half the available boxes for the benefit, the program for which will include the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony, Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the large student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

Honorary Sponsors

Honorary sponsors include Governors Herbert H. Lehman, Sumner Sewell and Robert A. Hurley while Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman.

Reservations for boxes have been made to date by the following: Mr. and Mrs. Philip Allen, Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blum, Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Carter, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Thomas Davies, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Mrs. Carl A. deGersdorff, Mrs. Carlos M. deGersdorff, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Giraud Foster.

Also, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Johnson, Jerome D. Greene, Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Seton Henry, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. Elizabeth Hotchkiss, George N. Jeppson, James Leath, Mrs. Henry White.

Also, Dr. Koussevitzky, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall, Gordon Mendelssohn, Mrs. John McChesney, Mrs. Donald F. McPheron, Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease, Lester Roberts, Mrs. George O. Rockwood, Mrs. John B. Ryan, Lady Salter, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Albert Spalding and Miss Gertrude Walker.

Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, and the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee.

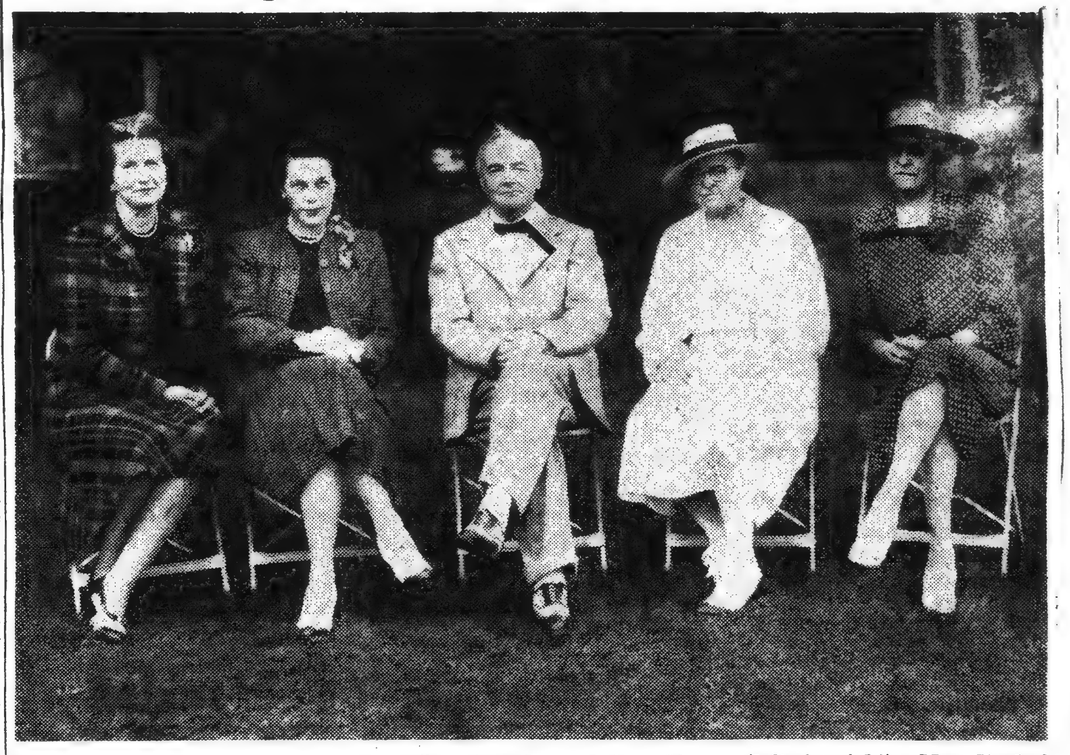
A project undertaken by Mrs. Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood, occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr. Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Jerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward C. Carter whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England Conservatory who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and USO benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucius Wulson of Cincinnati, Ohio, Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago and Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5.

Aiding Russian War Relief Benefit



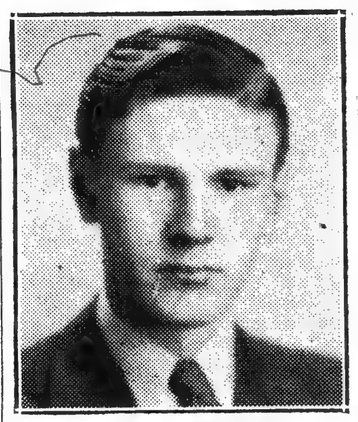
Helping with the Russian war relief benefit at Tangl ewood Aug. 14 are (left to right): Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox, Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky director and conductor at the Berkshire Music Center, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. Helen Alexandre Hoppin.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1942

Completes Second Season In Trumpet Section of Berkshire Orchestra

For the second season, Alan Abbott, 18-year-old Methuen boy, played in the trumpet section of the advanced orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center which closed its 1942 season Sunday under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.



ALAN ABBOTT

Abbott, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Abbott, 10 Gage street, Methuen, attended the six weeks' session that was climaxed last Friday night by a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief. On the program were Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, world famous soloists, and Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist.

The Methuen boy was graduated in June from Edward F. Searles high school, Methuen. He has studied trumpet for two years under a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He plans to enter the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., in the fall.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

AUG 24 1942

Symphony Composer Dies.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Aug. 24.—(I. N. S.)—Private funeral services were to be held today for Henry Eichheim, 71, composer of Oriental symphonic poems, who died at his Montecito home Saturday. Born in Chicago, Eichheim for 20 years was first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His best-known symphonic works were "Java" and "Bali."

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 24 1942

Berkshire Music Center Scene Of Only Major Event For Week

Student Festival Closing Still Being Lauded By Leading Critics

By Helen Havener

A large row of fat round zeros would describe better than any other symbol what the musical life of New York has amounted to this week. If the premier critics had not had last week's Berkshire Music Center student festival closing to write about—to the tune, in some instances, of several columns each—it would have been difficult to locate music copy with a microscope. But Dr. Koussevitzky's success with his student musicians continues to be the musical "nine-day wonder." And it is generally agreed that in the Shostakovich Seventh, to which we referred briefly in this column last week, Koussevitzky has out-Koussevitzkied himself and the youthful orchestra has done likewise.

To put it in the words of Louis Biancolli of the World-Telegram staff, who was one of the prime enthusiasts about the symphony and Mr. Koussevitzky's 'ten-age orchestra, "The young musicians read the large-scale symphony with a wonder-working blend of top technique and emotional impact."

Mr. Biancolli quotes in the World-Telegram what the National Federation of Music Clubs' three scholarship students, all members of Dr. Koussevitzky's advanced orchestra, told the National President, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, after Dr. Koussevitzky had said goodbye to his "kinder." "The biggest salary I ever earned in my life didn't make me nearly as happy as paying the deficit on this Summer's music school will do," the maestro said to the young musicians in his speech of farewell. "These have been the happiest six weeks of my life. They have made me decide to devote the rest of my life to the youth of America."

anxious to hear what Koussevitsky and his kids would do with it.

The youngsters (their ages range from 16 to 26) and their gray-haired maestro came through brilliantly. Communicating all of his own great faith in his countryman Shostakovich, Koussevitsky swept the orchestra through crashing crescendo upon crescendo and at the end had the crowd of 5,000 on its feet cheering.

The critics found little difference between Koussevitsky's reading and Toscanini's. Those who had defended the symphony previously continued to feel it an inspired work in spite of its excessive length (70-odd minutes). Olin Downes of The New York Times, who had led the opposition in July, still didn't like it in August. He stuck to his contention that it was "far from a first-class symphony."

Even Downes, however, admitted the festival itself was first-class. Despite showers on two of the week ends, a grand total of about 25,000 people proved Koussevitsky's point that music—not "name" orchestras—was what counted.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK

AUG 24 1942

MUSIC

Koussevitsky's Kids

There was an orchestra, there was music, and there was an audience at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. All in all a minor miracle, since the directors of the Boston Symphony (which usually plays there) and of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival (which puts the show on) had called the whole thing off because of the war and transportation difficulties.

The trouble was they couldn't call off Serge Koussevitsky. Insisting that in wartime music was more important than ever, the Boston Symphony's director announced that he himself would carry on. The Berkshire Music Center, a school he founded three years ago, he reopened and underwrote with money of his own. Its students, he declared, would make up the festival orchestra. And Koussevitsky hoped an audience would find some way to get there.

It did. Beginning Aug. 1 a crowd of nearly 6,000 showed up for the first two week-end concerts and nearly 5,000 for the second pair. Some saved their gas and doubled up with their neighbors. Many came on buses and trains to nearby Lenox and walked the remaining mile to the music shed at Tanglewood. Others hitchhiked; two boys and a girl arrived on the back of a milk truck, and another enterprising group rode up ensconced on a hay wagon.

All this gave the festival a free and easy spirit. Gone was the parade of women who swept down to their boxes in glittering evening dress. The boxes themselves, formerly sold at $75 for three concerts, became mere reserved seats at $2.20 each—about half the previous rate.

And the orchestra proved well worth the fans' ingenuity. Recruited from all over the country, and with only three and a half weeks of rehearsal, the students played everything from Concerti by Handel and Martinu to the Beethoven Ninth and the Bach Magnificat.

But their biggest test came at the festival's close last week end, when they performed the year's most-discussed piece of music: the Seventh, or Leningrad, Symphony of Dimitri Shostakovich. Although the symphony had its Western Hemisphere debut July 19 over the air with the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini (NEWSWEEK, July 27), last Friday night's performance for Russian War Relief marked its official American concert première, and both critics and public were

[147]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1942

More Than Half of Boxes Taken for Russian Benefit

Mrs. Owen Johnson Announces That Box Parking Area at Tanglewood Will Be Opened for Occasion

The regular box parking area south of the shed at Tanglewood, will be opened for the Russian war relief benefit planned next Friday by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, it was announced today by Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge chairman of the box committee.

Fred N. Cummings and Thomas H. Sullivan of Pittsfield and their American Legion volunteers who served the Berkshire Symphonic Festival several years in developing an efficient parking system, will be in charge of the parking in the box area. Willard M. Sistare of Pittsfield, who organized the Festival crew for ushering and ticket-taking, will be chairman of ushers for the box area. Entrance to the parking area will be via Hawthorne Street from Route 183 near Tanglewood or from the center of Lenox as in previous years. Windshield cards will be issued with box tickets.

Mrs. Johnsons' committee has already sold more than half the available boxes for the benefit, the program for which will include the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Shostakovitch seventh symphony, Dorothy Maynor, eminent Negro soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist and Albert Spalding, violinist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the large student orchestra in the performance of the Shostakovitch work.

Honorary Sponsors

Honorary sponsors include Governors Herbert H. Lehman, Sumner Sewell and Robert A. Hurley while Gov. Leverett Saltonstall is honorary chairman.

Reservations for boxes have been made to date by the following: Mr. and Mrs. Philip Allen, Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blum, Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Carter, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Thomas Davies, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Mrs. Carl A. deGersdorff , Mrs. Carlos M. deGersdorff, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Giraud Foster.

Also, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Johnson, Jerome D. Greene, Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Seton Henry, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. Elizabeth Hotchkiss, George N. Jeppson, James Leath, Mrs. Henry White.

Also, Dr. Koussevitzky, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall, Gordon Mendelssohn, Mrs. John McChesney, Mrs. Donald F. McPheron, Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease, Lester Roberts, Mrs. George O. Rockwood, Mrs. John B. Ryan, Lady Salter, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Albert Spalding and Miss Gertrude Walker.

Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, and the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, were among those announced today as additional members of the general committee.

A project undertaken by Mrs. Gannett and well on its way when this country entered the war, is the replica of the little red house at Tanglewood, occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne. The house will be restored after the war. Mr. Hepburn is the architect.

Others on the general committee include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Jerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward C. Carter whose husband is general chairman; Philip Allen, president of the board of the New England Conservatory who served as general chairman of the British War Relief and USO benefit at Tanglewood last year; Mrs. John Pratt, Lucius Wulson of Cincinnati, Ohio, Mrs. Robert Littell of Tyringham and New York who served as ticket chairman for the British War Relief benefit two years ago and Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C.

As at the two previous benefits at Tanglewood, Mrs. Schenck will be chairman of the prize committee.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and director of the Berkshire Music Center and the faculty and students are planning a full program starting at 5.

Aiding Russian War Relief Benefit

Helping with the Russian war relief benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 14 are (left to right): Mrs. Frederic Schenck of Lenox, Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky director and conductor at the Berkshire Music Center, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. Helen Alexandre Hoppin.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 21 1942

Completes Second Season In Trumpet Section of Berkshire Orchestra

For the second season, Alan Abbott, 18-year-old Methuen boy, played in the trumpet section of the advanced orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center which closed its 1942 season Sunday under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Abbott, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Abbott, 10 Gage street, Methuen, attended the six weeks' session that was climaxed last Friday night by a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief. On the program were Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding, world famous sololsts, and Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist.

The Methuen boy was graduated in June from Edward F. Searles high school, Methuen. He has studied trumpet for two years under a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He plans to enter the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., in the fall.

ALAN ABBOTT

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES
AUG 24 1942

Symphony Composer Dies.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Aug. 24. — (I. N. S.) — Private funeral services were to be held today for Henry Eichheim, 71, composer of Oriental symphonic poems, who died at his Montecito home Saturday. Born in Chicago, Eichheim for 20 years was first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His best-known symphonic works were "Java" and "Bali."

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 24 1942

Berkshire Music Center Scene Of Only Major Event For Week

Student Festival Closing Still Being Lauded By Leading Critics

By Helen Havener

A large row of fat round zeros would describe better than any other symbol what the musical life of New York has amounted to this week. If the premier critics had not had last week's Berkshire Music Center student festival closing to write about—to the tune, in some instances, of several columns each—it would have been difficult to locate music copy with a microscope. But Dr. Koussevitzky's success with his student musicians continues to be the musical "nine-day wonder." And it is generally agreed that in the Shostakovich Seventh, to which we referred briefly in this column last week, Koussevitzky has out-Koussevitzkied himself and the youthful orchestra has done likewise.

To put it in the words of Louis Biancolli of the World-Telegram staff, who was one of the prime enthusiasts about the symphony and Mr. Koussevitzky's 'ten-age orchestra, "The young musicians read the large-scale symphony with a wonder-working blend of top technique and emotional impact."

Mr. Biancolli quotes in the World-Telegram what the National Federation of Music Clubs' three scholarship students, all members of Dr. Koussevitzky's advanced orchestra, told the National President, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, after Dr. Koussevitzky had said goodbye to his "kinder." "The biggest salary I ever earned in my life didn't make me nearly as happy as paying the deficit on this Summer's music school will do," the maestro said to the young musicians in his speech of farewell. "These have been the happiest six weeks of my life. They have made me decide to devote the rest of my life to the youth of America."

anxious to hear what Koussevitsky and his kids would do with it.

The youngsters (their ages range from 16 to 26) and their gray-haired maestro came through brilliantly. Communicating all of his own great faith in his countryman Shostakovich, Koussevitsky swept the orchestra through crashing crescendo upon crescendo and at the end had the crowd of 5,000 on its feet cheering.

The critics found little difference between Koussevitsky's reading and Toscanini's. Those who had defended the symphony previously continued to feel it an inspired work in spite of its excessive length (70-odd minutes). Olin Downes of The New York Times, who had led the opposition in July, still didn't like it in August. He stuck to his contention that it was "far from a first-class symphony."

Even Downes, however, admitted the festival itself was first-class. Despite showers on two of the week ends, a grand total of about 25,000 people proved Koussevitsky's point that music—not "name" orchestras—was what counted.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
AUG 24 1942

MUSIC

Koussevitsky's Kids

There was an orchestra, there was music, and there was an audience at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. All in all a minor miracle, since the directors of the Boston Symphony (which usually plays there) and of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival (which puts the show on) had called the whole thing off because of the war and transportation difficulties.

The trouble was they couldn't call off Serge Koussevitsky. Insisting that in wartime music was more important than ever, the Boston Symphony's director announced that he himself would carry on. The Berkshire Music Center, a school he founded three years ago, he reopened and underwrote with money of his own. Its students, he declared, would make up the festival orchestra. And Koussevitsky hoped an audience would find some way to get there.

It did. Beginning Aug. 1 a crowd of nearly 6,000 showed up for the first two week-end concerts and nearly 5,000 for the second pair. Some saved their gas and doubled up with their neighbors. Many came on buses and trains to nearby Lenox and walked the remaining mile to the music shed at Tanglewood. Others hitchhiked; two boys and a girl arrived on the back of a milk truck, and another enterprising group rode up ensconced on a hay wagon.

All this gave the festival a free and easy spirit. Gone was the parade of women who swept down to their boxes in glittering evening dress. The boxes themselves, formerly sold at $75 for three concerts, became mere reserved seats at $2.20 each—about half the previous rate.

And the orchestra proved well worth the fans' ingenuity. Recruited from all over the country, and with only three and a half weeks of rehearsal, the students played everything from Concerti by Handel and Martinu to the Beethoven Ninth and the Bach Magnificat.

But their biggest test came at the festival's close last week end, when they performed the year's most-discussed piece of music: the Seventh, or Leningrad, Symphony of Dimitri Shostakovich. Although the symphony had its Western Hemisphere debut July 19 over the air with the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini (NEWSWEEK, July 27), last Friday night's performance for Russian War Relief marked its official American concert première, and both critics and public were

[142]

Globe, Aug 15-42

YOUTH AT TANGLEWOOD

If the ghost of Nathaniel Hawthorne revisited "Tanglewood" he would be an astonished spook. In the preface to his "Scarlet Letter," penned at Salem about a century ago, he imagines his Puritan ancestors eyeing his profession of novelist: "'What is he,' murmurs one gray shadow of my forefathers to the other, 'a writer of story-books! What kind of a business in life—what mode of glorifying God, or being serviceable to mankind in his day and generation—may that be? Why, the degenerate fellow might as well have been a fiddler!'" To have been a century ago the first novelist in America took as much hardihood as it did three decades ago in America to embark on the career of artist. Yet the calling was there all along, and as early as the 18th century, in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, where good music was already in that Moravian religious settlement a part of their daily life, when a visiting elder in shocked tones inquired of the young people, "And shall you use these same instruments on which you are now playing secular tunes of a Saturday to worship God with tomorrow?" a youth retorted, "And shall you, sir, use the same mouth tomorrow to preach the word of God with which you are now eating sausages?"

*
* *

We cannot be too careful into what period of history we choose to be born. Bad though this one is, it has at least one great advantage; it is the first in which the feeling of the American people has been, in general, friendly to the arts. At "Tanglewood" this Summer, even in the absence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the concert platform of the Music Shed since the cancellation of the annual festival because of gasoline and rubber rationing, the Berkshire Music Center has maintained its student performances of orchestral, choral, and operatic works at so high a pitch of artistic excellence as to raise this question: could such an orchestra of young people have been assembled twenty years ago? Mr. Roy Welch, sometime head of the Department of Music at Princeton, but now in Washington, who came on to pronounce as it were an official blessing on the plucky determination to keep this unique school going in wartime, answered without hesitation, "No. Twenty years ago it would not have been possible. The means of professional training were not then up to this standard, and neither was the sentiment of the American public favorable enough to the arts as a career for youth."

The great change began about 1920. In 1942, wartime though it is, the progress goes on powerfully. After the first World War, our people underwent a sudden and remarkable maturity, one aspect of which was an awakened awareness of the world situation in economics and therefore in politics, and another aspect of which was this shift from suspicion, even hostility, towards the arts, to a surmise that something more than the activity of buying-and-selling was needed for a living of "the good life." It was like that last step from adolescence to manhood. In 1919 we were as a nation aged about 19 in the 19th year of the century; in 1920 we were as a nation come of age in the 20th century. Symbolical though this way of putting it is, within this symbol is the kernel of truth. For verification one need go no farther than this very column of newsprint where, twenty-two years ago, the case for a public hospitality to the arts had to be argued with considerable tact—which case is now so taken-for-granted that argument is superfluous. The cause has been espoused by multitudes of the very persons who, two decades ago, had to be persuaded.

Honorary citation: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who, in an age of destruction continues to build. As is well known, he and a group of associates assumed the financial responsibility for keeping on with this remarkable school of music. Although its enrollment this Summer is lessened by about a third, its resident faculty is as distinguished as ever, and the audiences of 3000 and more who managed somehow to get to its orchestral concerts were astonished by the fire and finish of the student orchestra. "Student" is a misnomer, for these young men and women are accomplished artists, lacking only experience of playing, singing, and acting together ("ensemble") which they rapidly acquire under the rehearsing of an eminent conductor, under choirmasters who are indeed masters of choirs, and under equally skillful operatic coaches. The surprises are, in fact, all round. The youth orchestra plays better than its players ever knew they could, under the magnetic leadership of their poetizing conductor, and a youth orchestra, this time, it genuinely is, being composed entirely of young people and not, as was a previous one so-called, ballasted with players from the first desks of an established Symphony Orchestra. The school, as a school, has in a way gained from not being overshadowed during the second three weeks of its session, as it has been in previous years, by that colossus, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and demoted to the post of second fiddle by the Symphonic Festival. This Summer, being alone on the grounds of "Tanglewood" and monarch of all it surveys, it finds itself the whole show instead of sideshow. And finally, you have the surprise of the surprisingly large audiences at the concerts of these young artists who perform with a competence which is breath-taking. In the language of the Western frontier they lifted the whole outfit right out of its sole leather.

*
* *

Is an index of high civilization what you want? Then here is one: to what extent can a people maintain their cultural institutions without dilution in wartime? It is a shrewd test. In the first World War an English audience in the Convent Garden Opera House was listening to a performance of a German opera, Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," during a German air raid; in ancient Athens during a thirty years' war against Sparta (for that time and place, a world war) the dramatist Aristophanes could, on the public stage, argue the case for Sparta and denounce a scoundrelly Premier—which for freedom of speech is almost without parallel in history. But yesterday evening at "Tanglewood" two masterworks were performed by the youth orchestra and chorus, Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's 9th Symphony, whose text is Schiller's "Ode to Joy." All three works, two in music and one in verse, are by Germans. The text of the Magnificat is a revolutionary hymn in Church Latin, and Beethoven's music to Schiller's Ode is a hymn to human brotherhood.

To set these sounding gloriously from the hands and throats of talented American youths in wartime is an act of faith. Had Bach, Beethoven and Schiller lived in the Germany of today they would probably have perished in concentration camps. The appeal is from Caesar drunk to Caesar sober. The nobler spirits of Germany a century and two centuries ago voiced aspirations of the human spirit which now, from the lips of Germany's antagonists, confound the baser elements that have misled that people. Even today, across an ocean and beyond more than one century, these aspirations toward mercy and justice uttered in supreme works of art by Germany's own men of genius, and ringing out in our embattled land, mean even more than meets the ear. The paradox is prophetic.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

[1945]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 1942

Shostakovitch Symphony Acclaimed at Tanglewood

First Public Performance Presented at Russian Relief Benefit

LENOX, Aug. 14—The greatest outpouring of enthusiasm ever to greet a musical work at Tanglewood stormed about the ears of Serge Koussevitzky and his youthful student orchestra tonight when they played the first public performance of Dimitri Shostakovitch's long-heralded Seventh Symphony.

Opportune Time

Dr. Koussevitzky has picked an opportune time to present the symphony. This afternoon and tonight was given over at Tanglewood to a benefit for the Russian relief, and, although prepared by previous speakers to accept anything Russian with enthusiasm, the symphony itself was acclaimed by the nearly 5000 people apparently for its own worth.

Furthermore, in the audience was the Russian ambassador to America Maxim Litvinoff, and Mrs. Litvinoff sitting in a box adjacent to that of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, which contained Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, who is summering in Lee. Thus the heir to the wealthiest royal house in the world rubbed elbows with that champion of the proletariat, Stalin's envoy.

The benefit commenced with an exhibition of the work done at Tanglewood this summer by the Berkshire Music Center, supported by the Koussevitzky Foundation. In the shed a student orchestra, conducted by a student director, played; in the theater the opera department gave scenes from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" and Puccini's "La Boheme," and in the chamber music hall various groups of students played and sang.

Fanfare Confusing

At 6 a fanfare of trumpets and trombones brought the scattered crowd to the shed where the formal part of the program was presented under the direction of Edward C. Carter, president of the Russian Relief, Inc. The fanfare caught the audience somewhat flatfooted, for the majority thought that it was the "Internationale" and stood, and when the real "Internationale" was played by the orchestra they were at least surprised. For the first time in Berkshire, the red flag of Soviet Russia graced one side of the stage flanked on the other by the Stars and Stripes.

Dorothy Thompson, columnist, was the principal speaker. She said that her address would be in the nature of a defense of Soviet Russia, and then she proceeded to outline its history, its tremendous geography, and to note that despite its illiteracy up to the time of the revolution, it was a nation of geniuses. It is very similar in many respects, she said, to the United States, and except for the United States has done more for the furtherance of true religion than any other nation.

"We owe our freedom to Russia today," she continued, "maintaining that if the German horde was not now in the Caucasus, it would be here. Turning to the future she promised that America would help rebuild Russia's broken cities and homes, and out of the war will come a bridge between socialism and democracy.

Litvinoff Greeted

"Long live the Soviet Union," she cried, and at that moment Mr. Litvinoff, who had been delayed in getting to Lenox, walked on the stage to be greeted with a tremendous round of applause. He did not speak to the audience, but was greeted by Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Robinson Smith and Mr. Carter.

In prefacing his later playing of the Shostokovitch Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky said, "The Seventh Symphony of Shostokovitch brings us a message of faith and the victory of the spirit of man over death. We who have gathered here to help the Russian people in the darkest hour of history, must be grateful to this great nation, which carried the cross, and through the supreme suffering of her people leads us to the hope of resurrection."

The Seventh Symphony is a mighty work, albeit overlong. Its playing could have been something of an anticlimax, for its bid for fame rested on the fact that it was the first concert performance. Arturo Toscanini and the NBC orchestra had given it previously over the air. But it was no anticlimax in the hands of Koussevitzky and his young orchestra. In fact one doubts if an older orchestra could have given a work, so full of meaning for today, as stirring a performance as did those 100-odd musicians gathered from all parts of the country.

Written During Siege

The symphony, it will be recalled, was composed during the siege of Leningrad, and it is said that Shostakovitch left his piano at times to go onto the roof of the Leningrad Conservatory and fight fire from incendiary bombs. One can believe it, for the symphony is full of the roar of flames and the tumult of battle.

While the symphony is long, it is not tiresome. The two middle movements have their dull moments, but so full of melody are they in spots that the lulls are acceptable. It is the first and the last movements, however, which tell the tale of revolution and resistance against the Nazis that the composer apparently wanted to express.

Long applause greeted the end of each movement, an acclaim to which the conductor did not give heed. But at the close the audience would not be restrained. It stood on the chairs and cheered for more than five minutes, recalling the conductor time and time again, and applauding the orchestra.

The program ended with a group of solos by Albert Spaulding, violinist, Gregory Piatigorsky, cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, who made her debut on the same platform two years ago.

R. L. C.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA.
DOMINION NEWS

SEP 2 - 1942

Music Federation Plan to Restore Hawthorne Home

Mrs. Gibson Caldwell Will Represent State Group On Sponsor Committee

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, Sept. 1—Names of nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre, were made public today by Mrs. Patterson of Portland, Maine, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Collidge, outstanding patron of Chamber Music, are a few of the many nationally and internationally famous men and women on the list.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs, currently in session here, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the summer at the Berkshire Music Centre and played in the Student Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property orginally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

Sponsor List

It includes Charles Wakefield Cadman of California; Frank La Forge of Connecticut; Rudolph Gans of Illinois; Dr. Edgar Stillman of Ohio and Mr. Hugh F. MacColl of Rhode Island, artists and composers; Mrs. Carle Jackson of Maryland (the former Rosa Ponselle) formerly of the Metropolitan; Grace Moore of Tennessee, present Metropolitan diva; Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of The New Opera Company and of the Musicians Emergency Fund of New York City and Chairman of the Women's Advisory Board of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, and Mrs. George Houston Davis of Alabama; Mrs. J. M. Shinn of Arkansas; Mrs. Leonora Wood Armsby of California; Mr. Mark Wessel of Colorado; Dr. David Stanley Smith of Connecticut; Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss of the District of Columbia; Mr. Christopher O. Honaas of Florida; Mrs. Bonita Crowe of Georgia; Mr. Booth Tarkington of Indiana; Mr. D. M. Swarthout of Kansas; Mr. Donald M. Payson of Maine; Mr. Andrew Hepburn of Massachusetts; Miss Ethelwynne Kingsbury of Minnesota; Mrs. J. E. Seale of Mississippi; Mrs. Anna Heuermann Hamilton of Missouri; Mrs. LaFell Dickinson of New Hampshire; Mrs. Ogden Hewitt of New Jersey; Mrs. Henry Harley of New York; Mr. Alfred G. Arvold of North Dakota; Mrs. E. A. Deeds and Mr. Philip Wyman of Ohio; Mrs. Frances Smith Catron of Oklahoma; Mrs. Alfred L. Hallstrom of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Henry D. Sharpe of Rhode Island; Mrs. Robert I. Woodside of South Carolina; Mrs. Camden Rayburn of South Dakota; Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway of Vermont; Mrs. Malcolm Perkins of Virginia; Prof. Carl Paige Wood of Washington; Mrs. Gibson Caldwell of West Virginia; Mrs. Louis M. Hanks of Wisconsin, and Mrs. R. E. Crane of Wyoming.

WHEELING, W. VA.
INTELLIGENCER

SEP 1 - 1942

Federated Music Clubs to Restore Hawthorne Home In the Berkshires

MRS. GIBSON CALDWELL AMONG SPONSORS FOR THE PROJECT

The name of Mrs. Gibson Caldwell, founder of the Wheeling Symphony Society orchestra, is among those, many of them of national prominence, who are sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center. The list of sponsors is made public by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Maine, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Included in the list are: Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music; Charles Wakefield Cadman of California, famous composer; Mrs. Carle Jackson of Maryland (the former Rosa Ponsell) formerly of The Metropolitan; Grace Moore of Tennessee, present Metropolitan diva, and many others from all parts of the nation. The National Federation of Music clubs is currently in session in Providence, R. I.

Honor Koussevitsky

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project are to be announced to the board of directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs in conjunction with a luncheon today tendered by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre.

As soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its own original foundations and in replica of the original structure.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 1 - 1942

HAWTHORNE HOUSE WORK STARTS SOON

Reconstruction at Tanglewood to Begin When Materials Are Available —Sponsors Named.

Reconstruction at Tanglewood of the "Little Red House," the dwelling Nathaniel Hawthorne occupied during his visit there, will be started as soon as building materials are available.

This was announced today at a luncheon given at Providence, R. I., by the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is to rebuild the house for use as a summer studio, in honor of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood. The house will be erected on the foundations of the original "Little Red House," which was destroyed by fire in the '90's, and will be an exact replica of it architecturally. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, whose wife is a member of the Tappan family which gave Tanglewood to the Boston orchestra, will be the supervising architect.

Sponsors of the project named by the federation, were announced at today's luncheon. They include Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music; Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, founder of the South Mountain Music temple in Pittsfield; Charles Wakefield Cadman, composer; Grace Moore and Rosa Ponselle, Metropolitan opera artists, and representatives of all 48 states. Massachusetts representatives include Mrs. Hepburn, Philip Allen of Boston, Mrs. Alvin T. Fuller of Boston, and William H. Eaton and George W. Edman of Pittsfield.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

1942

Federation to Rebuild Hawthorne Home

'Little Red House' in Berkshires to Rise Again As Music Center

Names of nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre, were made public today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of Chamber Music, are a few of the many nationally and internationaly famous men and women on the list.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs in conjunction with a luncheon tendered at Providence, R. I., by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee colaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the Summer at the Berkshire Music Centre and played in the Student Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

SEP 6 - 1942

'Little Red House' Project of Music Clubs Sponsored

Nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center, were listed today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the board of directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs, currently in session here, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered by the federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Prof. Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, Va., will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Center.

The majority of the 48 States were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 5 - 1942

Federation to Rebuild Hawthorne Home

'Little Red House' in Berkshires to Rise Again As Music Center

Names of nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre, have been made public by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of Chamber Music, are a few of the many nationally and internationaly famous men and women on the list.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered at Providence, R. I., by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee colaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the Summer at the Berkshire Music Centre and played in the Student Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE

SEP 16 1942

Name Sponsors for "Little Red House"

Names of nationally prominent sponsors of the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center, were made public today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music, are a few of the many nationally and internationally famous men and women on the list.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Center.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

SEP 13 1942

Hawthorne's Tanglewood To Be a Studio

Rebuilding of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood" home as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center is a project which has been undertaken by the National Federation of Music Clubs. The house, which was destroyed by fire in the 1890's, will be reconstructed on the original foundations under supervision of Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect and member of the firm which had a large part in the restoration of Colonial Williamsburg. He was prompted to offer his services because the property once belonged to his wife's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Center.

A majority of the 48 States are represented on the list of sponsors of the project. Among those who are actively interested are Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Mary Curtis Bok, Walter Damrosch, Charles Wakefield Cadman, Rudolph Ganz, Frank La Forge, Edgar Stillman Kelley, David Stanley Smith, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Henry K. Hadley, Carl Paige Wood and Booth Tarkington.

[149]

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

SEP 21 1942

Gentile to Teach Music and Physics

Joseph Gentile

Joseph Gentile, Cleveland baritone and a civil engineer, will join the faculty of Youngstown College as a teacher of physics, mathematics, and as a voice teacher in the Dana Musical Institute of the college.

Gentile is a graduate of Case School of Applied Science in civil engineering and worked as an engineer in the development of the Cleveland Union Terminal project. Recently he has been an engineer in the Cleveland water department.

Gentile has sung in recitals with such opera stars as Giovanni Martinelli and Helen Jepson. He studied voice with Warren Whitney, oratorio soloist and vocal coach. In Cleveland he attracted attention when he appeared in numerous recitals and in various roles with the Friends of the Opera. His engagements have taken him to more than 50 cities and he has appeared with the Cleveland Orchestra opera series under Artur Rodzinski and the Cleveland Opera Theater under Boris Goldovsky.

For five years Gentile has been baritone soloist in Old Stone Church in Cleveland. This summer he was featured baritone with the opera department of the Berkshire Festival, where he also sang solo parts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

SEP 20 1942

Summer Concerts in Retrospect

Despite earlier predictions that summer music festivals and special concerts would meet with many difficulties because of the war, a marked measure of success seems to have resulted in every instance where scheduled performances were carried on. The Berkshire Music, Center at Tanglewood Mass., had a registration of 250 students from all parts of the country, 95 of them forming the student orchestra that presented the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich, given under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The eighth annual Bach festival at Carmel-by-the-Sea in California presented five concerts, two organ recitals and several lectures. The closing event was a performance of the Bach "Mass in B minor."

On July 4 the National Symphony orchestra of Lima, Peru, gave a concert specially honoring the United States, including on the program the Dvorak "New World Symphony" and the MacDowell "Concerto."

The Robin Hood Dell series of concerts in Philadelphia, marking its thirteenth sesaon, reported one of the most successful years of its existence. Popular drawing cards were Oscar Levant, pianist, and Lily Pons, coloratura soprano.

A year ago music loving America was alarmed at the internment of Kirsten Flagstad in war-torn Europe and local concert goers were disappointed becaues she was to have opened the Tuesday Musical series in Omaha. But she is still singing in Europe and appeared in three performances in Switzerland in June at the Zurich festival. She sang in "Gotterdammerung," "Fidelio" and "Oberon." The conductor was Wilhelm Furtwangler.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

SEP 20 1942

Unofficial reports place the deficit for operating the Berkshire Music Center at $5500 or $6000 for the past summer. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who developed the Center student orchestra into outstanding musical organization, had expected a $30,000 deficit according to estimates made early in the summer.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

SEP 21 1942

Engineer-Baritone Joins College Faculty

Joseph Gentile, for the last eight years an engineer in the City Water department and for five years baritone soloist at Old Stone Church, has left to become a teacher of physics, mathematics and voice at Youngstown College.

During the past summer, Mr. Gentile was featured baritone soloist with the opera department of the Berkshire Festival, where he sang solo parts under direction of Sergei Koussevitzky. He is a graduate of Case School of Applied Science.

CHICAGO ISRAELITE
CHICAGO, ILL.
9/12/42

Sergei Koussevitzky

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been responsible for the success of the Berkshire Music Festival this summer guaranteeing $40,000 toward any deficit.

SUNDAY NEWS-AGE-HERALD

SEP 6 - 1942

Mrs. George H. Davis Among Sponsors Of Plan To Rebuild Home Of Nathaniel Hawthorne

'Little Red House' Will Serve As Summer Studio For Berkshire Music Center; Art Club To Have Two Outstanding Exhibits

Items of interest in all of the arts are invited by this column but must be in the hands of the editor not later than noon Thursday preceding Sunday publication.

* * *

BY LILY MAY CALDWELL

Among names of nationally prominent sponsors of the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves the rebuilding of the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center, is that of Birmingham's Mrs. George Houston Davis. The list of sponsors, announced Saturday by Mrs. G. P. Gannett, national federation president, includes Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music; Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of Curtis Institute of Music; Dr. Walter Damrosch, Frank LaForge, Rudolph Ganz, Charles Wakefield Cadman, the Edgar Stillman Kelleys, Grace Moore, Mrs. Carle Jackson (the former Rose Ponselle), Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of the New Opera Company and a member of the advisory board of the New York Philharmonic; Mrs. Davis and others.

MRS. DAVIS

Sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the board of directors of the national federation, currently in session in Providence, R. I., after a luncheon given for the federation by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, who is chairman with the Boston Symphony committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Prof. Randall Steward, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and his literary associations there.

As soon as building materials are available, the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm largely responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He offered his services because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Festival.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

SEP 6 - 1942

Prominent Ohioans Included On Sponsor List For Rebuilding Nathaniel Hawthorne Home

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 5.—Mrs. E. A. Deeds of Dayton and Philip Wyman of Cincinnati, were among the nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music clubs, it was revealed earlier in the week by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the federation. The project which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music center also includes as sponsors Senator Arthur Vandenburg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curits Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the board of directors of the National Federation of Music clubs, in session here, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered by the federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music center, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the summer at the Berkshire Music center and played in the Student orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music center.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

It includes Charles Wakefield Cadman of California; Frank La Forge of Connecticut; Rudolph Ganz of Illinois; Dr. Edgar Stillman Kelley of Ohio and Hugh F. MacColl of Rhode Island, artists and composers; Mrs. Carle Jackson of Maryland (the former Rosa Ponselle) formerly of the Metropolitan; Grace Moore of Tennessee, present Metropolitan diva; Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of the New Opera company and of the Musicians Emergency fund of New York City and chairman of the woman's advisory board of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society, and Mrs. George Houston Davis of Alabama; Mrs. J. M. Shinn of Arkansas; Mrs. Leonora Wood Armsby of California; Mark Wessel of Colorado; Dr. David Stanley Smith of Connecticut; Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss of the District of Columbia; Christopher O. Honaas of Florida; Mrs. Bonita Crowe of Georgia; Booth Tarkington of Indiana; D. M. Swarthout of Kansas; Donald M. Payson of Maine; Philip Allen, William H. Eaton, George Edman, Mrs. Alvin T. Fuller and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn of Massachusetts; Miss Ethelwynne Kingsbury of Minnesota; Mrs. J. E. Seale of Mississippi; Mrs. Anna Heuermann Hamilton of Missouri; Mrs. LaFell Dickinson of New Hampshire; Mrs. Ogden Hewitt of New Jersey; Mrs. Henry Hadley of New York; Alfred G. Arvold of North Dakota; Mrs. E. A. Deeds and Philip Wyman of Ohio; Mrs. Frances Smith Catron of Oklahoma; Mrs. Alfred L. Hallstrom of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Henry D. Sharpe of Rhode Island; Mrs. Robert I. Woodside of South Carolina; Mrs. Camden Rayburn of South Dakota; Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway of Vermont; Mrs. Malcolm Perkins of Virginia; Prof. Carl Paige Wood of Washington; Mrs. Gibson Caldwell of West Virginia; Mrs. Louis M. Hanks of Wisconsin, and Mrs. R. E. Crane of Wyoming.

[150]

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

SEP 20 1942

'Red House' Gets Patrons

Floridian Included In National Music Federation Project

NAMES of nationally prominent sponsors have been announced for the "Little Red House," project of the National Federation of Music clubs, which involves the rebuilding of the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center.

They were revealed this week by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, Portland, Me., president of the national organization.

Christopher O. Honaas will represent the state of Florida. He has been associated with Rollins College, Winter Park, since 1932, serving as professor of music education and director of the conservatory since 1936. He directs the annual Bach Festival in Winter Park.

The sponsors from a majority of the 48 states, were announced at a recent board meeting of the National Federation in Providence, R. I., in conjunction with a luncheon given for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the center.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

SEP 21 1942

Gentile to Teach Music and Physics

Joseph Gentile

Joseph Gentile, Cleveland baritone and a civil engineer, will join the faculty of Youngstown College as a teacher of physics, mathematics, and as a voice teacher in the Dana Musical Institute of the college.

Gentile is a graduate of Case School of Applied Science in civil engineering and worked as an engineer in the development of the Cleveland Union Terminal project. Recently he has been an engineer in the Cleveland water department.

Gentile has sung in recitals with such opera stars as Giovanni Martinelli and Helen Jepson. He studied voice with Warren Whitney, oratorio soloist and vocal coach. In Cleveland he attracted attention when he appeared in numerous recitals and in various roles with the Friends of the Opera. His engagements have taken him to more than 50 cities and he has appeared with the Cleveland Orchestra opera series under Artur Rodzinski and the Cleveland Opera Theater under Boris Goldovsky.

For five years Gentile has been baritone soloist in Old Stone Church in Cleveland. This summer he was featured baritone with the opera department of the Berkshire Festival, where he also sang solo parts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

SEP 20 1942

Summer Concerts in Retrospect

Despite earlier predictions that summer music festivals and special concerts would meet with many difficulties because of the war, a marked measure of success seems to have resulted in every instance where scheduled performances were carried on. The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Mass., had a registration of 250 students from all parts of the country, 95 of them forming the student orchestra that presented the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich, given under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The eighth annual Bach festival at Carmel-by-the-Sea in California presented five concerts, two organ recitals and several lectures. The closing event was a performance of the Bach "Mass in B minor."

On July 4 the National Symphony orchestra of Lima, Peru, gave a concert specially honoring the United States, including on the program the Dvorak "New World Symphony" and the MacDowell "Concerto."

The Robin Hood Dell series of concerts in Philadelphia, marking its thirteenth sesaon, reported one of the most successful years of its existence. Popular drawing cards were Oscar Levant, pianist, and Lily Pons, coloratura soprano.

A year ago music loving America was alarmed at the internment of Kirsten Flagstad in war-torn Europe and local concert goers were disappointed becaues she was to have opened the Tuesday Musical series in Omaha. But she is still singing in Europe and appeared in three performances in Switzerland in June at the Zurich festival. She sang in "Gotterdammerung," "Fidelio" and "Oberon." The conductor was Wilhelm Furtwangler.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN

SEP 20 1942

Unofficial reports place the deficit for operating the Berkshire Music Center at $5500 or $6000 for the past summer. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who developed the Center student orchestra into outstanding musical organization, had expected a $30,000 deficit according to estimates made early in the summer.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

SEP 21 1942

Engineer-Baritone Joins College Faculty

Joseph Gentile, for the last eight years an engineer in the City Water department and for five years baritone soloist at Old Stone Church, has left to become a teacher of physics, mathematics and voice at Youngstown College.

During the past summer, Mr. Gentile was featured baritone soloist with the opera department of the Berkshire Festival, where he sang solo parts under direction of Sergei Koussevitzky. He is a graduate of Case School of Applied Science.

CHICAGO ISRAELITE
CHICAGO, ILL.
9/12/42

Sergei Koussevitzky

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been responsible for the success of the Berkshire Music Festival this summer guaranteeing $40,000 toward any deficit.

SUNDAY NEWS-AGE-HERALD

SEP 6 - 1942

Mrs. George H. Davis Among Sponsors Of Plan To Rebuild Home Of Nathaniel Hawthorne

'Little Red House' Will Serve As Summer Studio For Berkshire Music Center; Art Club To Have Two Outstanding Exhibits

Items of interest in all of the arts are invited by this column but must be in the hands of the editor not later than noon Thursday preceding Sunday publication.

* * *

BY LILY MAY CALDWELL

Among names of nationally prominent sponsors of the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves the rebuilding of the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center, is that of Birmingham's Mrs. George Houston Davis. The list of sponsors, announced Saturday by Mrs. G. P. Gannett, national federation president, includes Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music;

MRS. DAVIS

Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of Curtis Institute of Music; Dr. Walter Damrosch, Frank LaForge, Rudolph Ganz, Charles Wakefield Cadman, the Edgar Stillman Kelleys, Grace Moore, Mrs. Carle Jackson (the former Rose Ponselle), Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of the New Opera Company and a member of the advisory board of the New York Philharmonic; Mrs. Davis and others.

Sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the board of directors of the national federation, currently in session in Providence, R. I., after a luncheon given for the federation by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, who is chairman with the Boston Symphony committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Prof. Randall Steward, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and his literary associations there.

As soon as building materials are available, the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm largely responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He offered his services because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Festival.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

SEP 6 - 1942

Prominent Ohioans Included On Sponsor List For Rebuilding Nathaniel Hawthorne Home

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 5.— Mrs. E. A. Deeds of Dayton and Philip Wyman of Cincinnati, were among the nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music clubs, it was revealed earlier in the week by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the federation. The project which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music center also includes as sponsors Senator Arthur Vandenburg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curits Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the board of directors of the National Federation of Music clubs, in session here, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered by the federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music center, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the summer at the Berkshire Music center and played in the Student orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music center.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

It includes Charles Wakefield Cadman of California; Frank La Forge of Connecticut; Rudolph Ganz of Illinois; Dr. Edgar Stillman Kelley of Ohio and Hugh F. MacColl of Rhode Island, artists and composers; Mrs. Carle Jackson of Maryland (the former Rosa Ponselle) formerly of the Metropolitan; Grace Moore of Tennessee, present Metropolitan diva; Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of the New Opera company and of the Musicians Emergency fund of New York City and chairman of the woman's advisory board of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society, and Mrs. George Houston Davis of Alabama; Mrs. J. M. Shinn of Arkansas; Mrs. Leonora Wood Armsby of California; Mark Wessel of Colorado; Dr. David Stanley Smith of Connecticut; Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss of the District of Columbia; Christopher O. Honaas of Florida; Mrs. Bonita Crowe of Georgia; Booth Tarkington of Indiana; D. M. Swarthout of Kansas; Donald M. Payson of Maine; Philip Allen, William H. Eaton, George Edman, Mrs. Alvin T. Fuller and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn of Massachusetts; Miss Ethelwynne Kingsbury of Minnesota; Mrs. J. E. Seale of Mississippi; Mrs. Anna Heuermann Hamilton of Missouri; Mrs. LaFell Dickinson of New Hampshire; Mrs. Ogden Hewitt of New Jersey; Mrs. Henry Hadley of New York; Alfred G. Arvold of North Dakota; Mrs. E. A. Deeds and Philip Wyman of Ohio; Mrs. Frances Smith Catron of Oklahoma; Mrs. Alfred L. Hallstrom of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Henry D. Sharpe of Rhode Island; Mrs. Robert I. Woodside of South Carolina; Mrs. Camden Rayburn of South Dakota; Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway of Vermont; Mrs. Malcolm Perkins of Virginia; Prof. Carl Paige Wood of Washington; Mrs. Gibson Caldwell of West Virginia; Mrs. Louis M. Hanks of Wisconsin, and Mrs. R. E. Crane of Wyoming.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

SEP 20 1942

'Red House' Gets Patrons

Floridian Included In National Music Federation Project

NAMES of nationally prominent sponsors have been announced for the "Little Red House," project of the National Federation of Music clubs, which involves the rebuilding of the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center.

They were revealed this week by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, Portland, Me., president of the national organization.

Christopher O. Honaas will represent the state of Florida. He has been associated with Rollins College, Winter Park, since 1932, serving as professor of music education and director of the conservatory since 1936. He directs the annual Bach Festival in Winter Park.

The sponsors from a majority of the 48 states, were announced at a recent board meeting of the National Federation in Providence, R. I., in conjunction with a luncheon given for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the center.

[150]

1944

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 8 1944

MUSIC

The Planners Seem To Be Less Nervous

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

MUSIC seems definitely to have put aside the war jitters. There was a time when even the bravest of whistling didn't seem to generate much courage. Even while saying that music was a morale builder and that parlous times had need for more and more of it, there were those who took a parsimonious reef in their budgets and made curtailments which were attributable mainly to nerves.

All the Inside Dope picked up nowadays by the antennae of this column tends toward bigger and better music-making.

No formal announcement has yet been made regarding the Worcester Festival, but there are unmistakable signs that its 85th season will be the most glamorous in decades. For the past two years there has been little more than a token presentation by this most venerable of American music festivals. The death of Albert Stoessel, who for so long was the directional force behind these choral, symphonic and operatic presentations was a heavily contributing factor in the curtailment.

Details will be printed here as soon as available, but for the present it can be reliably reported that one of the Big Three orchestras with its regular conductor will spend an entire week in Worcester.

* * *

WITH regard to the Berkshire Festival, it would seem that the question was settled when the trustees voted to suspend "for the duration." That is definite enough. Nevertheless, this column wouldn't be at all surprised to see something happen at Tanglewood this summer.

Reason is that Dr. Koussevitsky has his heart set on it. His tenacity is almost proverbial. About everything connected with Tanglewood has he had his way—sometimes he has had to wait, but he has won out.

The decisions of the board in first calling off the Festival and, the following year, in suspending the school known as the Music Center were most unacceptable to him. He fougnt hard and with every resource at his disposal. Those who think he will stop talking about both the Festival and Music Center just don't know the Doctor. He might yet get the Center.

Certainly most of Berkshire County will be pullling his way.

* * *

WILL the Hartford Oratorio Society come back into the field it has held exclusively, long and honorably? This writer cannot pretend to be in the know, but he looks for a return to Bushnell with an adequate orchestra. Members are talking about it, anyway.

* * *

SO far was Frank Pandolfi from curtailing or even waiting for a new season of the Connecticut Opera Association that he dedeclared an extra dividend on this one. La Forza del Destino is in the works to be duly and progressively announced.

It begins to look as though music is one business that isn't merely talking about what it's going to do after the war but is beginning to sit up and ask for nourishment now.

Morale is good for music, too.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 15 1944

Music in the open. . . . This has become an American custom and cultural diversion of late years. Many localities have splendid centers and roofless stadiums where the brasses, strings, woodwinds and so on mingle their sounds with the breezes. Then the war came and a few of these were forced to suspend temporarily because of transportation difficulties. Last year the musical pride of the Berkshires, Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., had to do so for professional performances. But again this summer it will open for a Mozart Festival which is good news. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who lives nearby, will conduct the Boston Symphony in the grand open air shell for four concerts beginning the end of July, and going into August, on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Great soloists will be heard, such as Dorothy Maynor, who was first introduced to the musical world professionally at Tanglewood; Robert Casadesus, Ruth Posselt, and others.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 16 1944

The Mozart Festival

Dr. Koussevitzky has come to the happiest possible solution, it seems to us, in the dilemma which musical art finds itself in the crescendo of war at its most furious tempo. The reinstitution of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on a limited scale as far as program, orchestral personnel and audience is concerned, which at the same time makes no compromise whatsoever as to program, presentation and superiority of the performers is admirably accomplished by the decision to put on a Mozart festival in July.

The official policy of the government is as stringent regarding vacations and travel as it has been since the war started. The war agencies, indeed, seem to have given the plea for summer austerity a new emphasis with the knowledge that there is great danger in the American people deciding that the war is won because D-Day has come and gone with great initial success on the beach heads around the globe. Yet it is difficult to quarrel with a musical conception which takes into proper perspective the need to co-operate with the war effort and at the same time preserves the tradition and heritage of a great musical enterprise whose essence is of the freedom we strive to vindidate and make secure.

The concerts are so arranged that they may be encompassed on two week ends so they can not disrupt work weeks. The orchestra personnel will number 35 which fortuitously is the number of musicians for which most of the Mozart orchestral music to be played is written. The audiences of necessity will be limited to a number somewhat in excess of 1000 because the concerts will be presented in Music Center Theatre and not the large Shed.

Yet conductor and orchestral personnel are, of course, unsurpassed. The hall is admirably suited for the size of the orchestra and the music. The several soloists who will appear, Mr. Judd assures us, are top-flight artists and no one can doubt his distinguished word. All of which put together means a musical event which, if not of enormous proportions quantitatively, is in the Tanglewood tradition qualitatively, meaning that the national and local musical public has something to look forward to which is very good indeed.

Dr. Koussevitzky's imagination, initiative and musical intelligence is here shown at its best.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 17 1944

Mozart Festival Set for Summer

Lenox, Mass.— (AP) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

JUN 17 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL PLANNED

LENOX (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Mayor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a seires of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 17 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL IN SUMMER TREAT

Tanglewood in Lenox Will Be Setting; Keussevitzky to Direct Symphony

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., June 17.—A Mozart Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this summer. Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be reopened for the purpose.

Directing the festival; Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now at his summer home in Lenox, will make his only between-season public appearance. To preserve the true eighteenth century character of Mozart's instrumental music the festival will be held in the intimate auditorium at Tanglewood, seating 1180, which was built for the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8:30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3:30. The following soloists are announced in addition to the solo players of the Boston Symphony orchestra: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff. The programs will include early and late symphonies of Mozart as follows: the Symphonies in A major, K. 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major. K. 285 ("Kaffner"); in C major, K. 425 ("Linz"); in E-flat major, K. 543; in C minor, K. 550, and in C major, K. 551 ("Jupiter"); the "Kaffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade in C minor, K. 388; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for strings, K. 525, and the Divertimento for two horns and strings in B-flat, K. 287. There will also be the Concertos for violin in D major, K. 218, for piano in M major, "Coronation," K. 537, and for two pianos in E-flat, K. 365. Arias are to be announced.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JUN 17 1944

Lenox, Mass., June 17—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will direct a series of four concerts called a Mozart festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Berkshires estate, during July and August, in his only between-seasons public appearance, it was announced today. The program which will feature soloists, will be held on the evening of July 29th and August 5th and the afternoons of July 30th and August 6th. A similar series of concerts will be given later in the season in Boston.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL & REPORTER

JUN 17 1944

Boston Symphony Plans Summer Mozart Festival

LENOX, MASS., June 17 (AP) — The Boston symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston on the week ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

JUN 17 1944

Reopen Tanglewood For Mozart Festival

LENOX — A Mozart festival will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, this summer and Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be reopened. No concerts were given last year because of the pleasure driving ban.

The festival will be held in the smaller auditorium seating 1180, which was built for the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8:30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3:30. The following soloists are announced, in addition to the solo players of the Boston Symphony orchestra: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 16 1944

Koussevitzky To Conduct Concerts on Two Week Ends

Nationally-Known Soloists and Boston Symphony Members To Be Heard in Music Center Theatre on Four Evenings

A Mozart festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be held at Tanglewood on two week ends this summer, when 35 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with nationally-known soloists, will play symphonies, concertos, serenades, and arias in the intimate auditorium seating 1180 built for the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will include the principals of the Boston orchestra and others.

The concerts, the first to be given at Tanglewood since 1942, and the first to be performed there by members of the Boston orchestra since the war started, will be held Saturday and Sunday, July 29 and 30 and the evenings of Aug. 5 and 6.

The initial announcement is made in the Berkshires today because of the intimate relationship between Tanglewood and Berkshire County, said George E. Judd, the orchestra's manager, who for the past two days has been in the county arranging for the concerts. Because of its national importance in the musical world a formal announcement, with details will be made.

Season tickets may be obtained by mail from Symphony Hall, Boston.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUN 17 1944

Boston Symphony Plans Four Concerts In the Berkshires

Lenox, Mass., June 17 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, in the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5, at 8:30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6, at 8:30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano; the paired pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 17 1944

Four Concerts At Tanglewood

LENOX, June 17 (UP) — Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will direct a series of four concerts called a Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Berkshires estate, during July and August, in his only between-season's public appearance, it was announced today.

The program, which will feature soloists, will be held on the evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 and the afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6. Similar series of concerts will be given later in the season in Boston.

BIDDEFORD, ME.
JOURNAL

JUN 17 1944

Boston Symphony To Give Concerts In Berkshires

LENOX, Mass.-AP-The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this Summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evening of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Ruth Posselt, violin, Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3.

[1517]

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUN 17 1944

Symphony Plans Mozart Festival

LENOX, Mass., June 17 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this Summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8.30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3.30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Ruth Posselt, violin, Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principal and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUN 17 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD IN THE BERKSHIRES THIS SUMMER

Lenox, Mass., June 17, (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshire this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8.30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3.30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Ruth Posselt, violinist, Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 17 1944

Tanglewood to Have Mozart Festival

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a group of men from the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., starting July 29. The performances will take place in the auditorium of the Berkshire Music Center, of which Koussevitzky was the founder. The programs are scheduled for two consecutive Saturday evenings and two consecutive Sunday afternoons, ending on August 6.

The small orchestra will consist, to a large extent, of first desk men from the Boston Symphony. Also participating will be the following guest soloists: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist, and Luboschutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists.

The programs will include the "Haffner," "Linz," and "Jupiter" symphonies, as well as the famous E-flat and G minor ones, and K. 201 and 338. Concertos and arias are also scheduled. Among works in smaller form there will be the Wind Serenade in C minor, K. 388 and the B-flat Divertimento.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 17 1944

Tanglewood To Have Concerts This Summer

Lenox, Mass., June 17—AP—The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8.30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3.30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Ruth Posselt, violin, Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

JUN 17 1944

SYMPHONY AT LENOX

LENOX, June 17, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this Summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today. The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 17 1944

Summer Concerts of Symphony Orchestra

Lenox, June 17 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8.30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3.30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt violin; Robert Casadesus, piano; the paired pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

JUN 17 1944

Boston Symphony To Play at Festival

Lenox, Mass., June 17 (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Ruth Posselt, violin, Robert Casadesus, piano, the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the weekends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 17 1944

Will Reopen Tanglewood This Year

Mozart Festival Scheduled by Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give a Mozart festival in the Berkshires this summer with Tanglewood, the orchestra's scenic estate, being reopened for the purpose.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30. Soloists will be Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano; and the duo-pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

The programs will include early and late symphonies of Mozart as follows: the Symphonies in A major, K 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major, K. 285 ("Haffner"); in C major, K. 425 ("Linz"); in E-flat major, K. 543; in G minor, K. 550, and in C Major, K. 551 ("Jupiter"); the "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade in C minor, K. 388; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for Strings, K. 525, and the Divertimento for Two Horns and Strings in B-flat, K. 287. There will also be the Concertos for Violin in D major, K. 218, for Piano in D major, "Coronation," K. 537, and for Two Pianos in E-flat, K. 365. Arias are to be announced.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestras proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony. These concerts will also consist of four programs, each program performed twice, on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20 and 27, and Sept. 3.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN

JUN 18 1944

PLAN CONCERTS AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Will Present Them On July 29 and 30, August 5 and 6—Will Be a Mozart Festival

Lenox, June 17 — (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a Mozart festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer, Boston Symphony officials announced today.

The orchestra will play four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8.30 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3.30.

Soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano; the paired pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and solo players of the orchestra.

Following the Mozart festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the orchestra on the weekends of August 13, 20, 27, and September 3.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

JUN 17 1944

The Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, offers Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings in E major, a composition, written thirty-six years ago, which demonstrates the fine craftsmanship and musical feeling of its author. It is given a rich, glowing performance, too (Victor DM-962).

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

JUN 17 1944

Koussevitzky Plans Summer Concerts

LENOX, Mass. (UP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will direct a series of four concerts called a Mozart festival at Tanglewood the orchestra's Berkshires estate during July and August, in his only between-seasons public appearance, it was announced today.

The program, which will feature soloists, will be held on the evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 and the afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6. A similar series of concerts will be given later in the season in Boston.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN 18 1944

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a Mozart festival with principals and players of the Boston Symphony orchestra as participants in the Berkshires this summer. Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony, will be reopened for the purpose. Four concerts will be given, on July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6. Soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violin; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Robert Casadesus, piano, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists. The programs will include several early and late symphonies, two serenades and two divertimentos, the "Coronation" piano concerto, the D major violin concerto and the concerto for two pianos. Following the Mozart festival a series of chamber orchestra concerts will be given by the Boston players in their home city on Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3. Each program will be played twice. Conductors will be Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera. At the conclusion of the Boston "Pops" concerts on July 15, Arthur Fiedler will lead the Boston Symphony in 30 free concerts on the Charles River esplanade.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 18 1944

Summer Symphony Programs Planned

Following the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, a series of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These concerts will consist of four programs, each program performed twice, on the weekends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate.

The concerts will be given in the New England Mutual Hall at Clarendon and Boylston Streets. They will bring to an end a full season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has included since the close of the Winter season on April 30, 70 Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall (May 2-July 15). Arthur Fiedler, having concluded the Pops, will conduct 30 free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to Aug. 16. The 64th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 6, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 18 1944

Koussevitzky Directing Mozart Festival at Tanglewood Hall

A Mozart festival will be presented at Tanglewood, scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, in July and August. The concerts will be held in the intimate auditorium built for the Berkshire Music Center. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will participate.

Four concerts will be given, each with a different program on Saturday evenings, July 29 and August 5 at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons, July 30 and August 6 at 3:30. The following soloists will be heard: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist, and Genia Nemenoff and Pierre Luboshutz, duo-pianists. The programs will comprise the symphonies in A major, K. 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major, K. 285 (Haffner); in C major, K. 425 (Linz); in E flat, K. 543; in G minor, K. 550; in C major, K. 551 (Jupiter); the "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade, in C minor, K. 368; "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525; the Divertimento in B flat, K. 287; the violin concerto in D major, K. 218; the "Coronation" piano concerto in D major, K. 537, and the concerto for two pianos in E flat, K. 365. The arias to be sung by Miss Maynor will be announced later.

Season tickets for the four concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood may be obtained by application to Symphony Hall, Boston, at $10 and $15, plus 20 per cent war tax. Details about the Boston series will be announced shortly.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 18 1944

Music

Mozart Festival Program

Four Performances At Tanglewood in July and August

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

A MOZART festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky is to be given on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 in one of the smaller halls near Stockbridge, Mass., on the Tanglewood estate of the Boston symphony orchestra. The programs will include early and late symphonies of Mozart.

The orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with guest artists including Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano who made her debut at a reception by Dr. Koussevitzky, three years ago; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and wife of the orchestra's concertmaster; Robert Casadesus, pianist and the duo-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff, the latter heard as the opening event in the Albany Civic Music association's 1943-4 series of concerts at Chancellors hall. Season tickets for the festival may be obtained by application to Symphony hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, Albany pianist, will give a benefit concert this afternoon at Chatham, N. Y., for the benefit of the local Red Cross. His program will consist of numbers by Scarlatti, Bach, Grieg, Rachmaninoff and Chopin. Mr. French's other summer concert engagements will include a recital at the College of St. Rose late in July, and an appearance each, during August, in Brooklyn and Asbury Park.

* * *

Betty Roberge Weir will present her advanced piano students in recital this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Woman's club, Schenectady, N. Y. The concert is open to the public. The students who will appear are: Stuart Kraut, Ronald Olszewski, Judity Traver, Mary Ann Kress, Joyce Silverstein, Nancy Pearson, Janet Kirchner, Shirley Reynolds, Charlotte Alter, Estelle Turner, Sally Binley, Marian Segal, Jane and Janet Picotte, Arlene Steinberg, Muriel Kron, Barbara Hershenhorn, Vera Wyld, Jeanne Van Denplas, Joel Sandleman, Patricia Brightman and Phyllis Blessing.

[152]

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 18 1944

Koussevitsky Leads Tanglewood Mozart

Boston Symphony Will Play in Four Concerts at Lenox, Mass., and Chamber Orchestra Series in Mutual Hall

Lenox, Mass.—A Mozart Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this summer. Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be reopened for the purpose.

Directing the festival, Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now at his summer home in Lenox, will make his only between-season public appearance. To preserve the true eighteenth century character of Mozart's instrumental music the festival will be held in the intimate auditorium at Tanglewood seating 1,180, which was built for the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8:30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3:30. The following soloists are announced, in addition to the solo players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

The program will include early and late symphonies of Mozart as follows: the Symphonies in A major, K 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major, K. 285 ("Haffner"); in C major, K. 425 ("Linz"); in E-flat major, K. 543; in G minor, K. 550, and in C major, K. 551 ("Jupiter"); the "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade in C minor, K. 388; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for Strings, K. 525, and the Divertimento for Two Horns and Strings in B-flat, K. 287. There will also be the Concertos for Violin in D major, K. 218, for Piano in D major, "Coronation," K. 537, and for two pianos in E-flat, K. 365. Arias are to be announced.

Following the Mozart Festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These concerts will also consist of four programs, each program performed twice, on the weekends of August 13, 20, 27, and September 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate. The concerts will be given in the New England Mutual Hall.

They will bring to an end a full season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has included since the close of the winter season on April 30 seventy Pops Concerts in Symphony Hall (May 2-July 15.) Arthur Fiedler, having concluded the Pops, will conduct 30 free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to August 16. The Sixty-Fourth Season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 6, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Season tickets for the four concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood may be obtained by application to Symphony Hall, Boston, at $10 and $15, plus twenty per cent war tax. Details about the Boston series will be announced shortly

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 18 1944

Summer Concerts By Boston Symphony

A Mozart Festival of four concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra is to be given in the Berkshires this summer on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8.30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3.30. Soloists announced are: Dorothy Maynor, Soprano; Ruth Posselt, Violin; Robert Casadesus, Piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

Following the Mozart Festival, a series of chamber concerts will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the New England Mutual Hall on the weekends of August 13, 20, 27, and September 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate. Arthur Fiedler, after concluding the Pops, will conduct thirty free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to August 16. The sixty-fourth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 6, with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

JUN 30 1944

A MOZART FESTIVAL will be presented at Tanglewood, scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, in July and August.

The following soloists will be heard: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist; and Nemonoff and Luboshutz, duo-pianists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 30 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD

Announced by Koussevitzky, Now at Lenox — He's Received Many Letters of Appreciation

Lenox, June 29—"Because I do not want longer to interrupt the great idea and work we are doing at Tanglewood, and because I want to continue to bring to this community great music, we are going to give a Mozart festival this summer," said Serge Koussevitzky, who has just completed his 20th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, on his terrace at Serenac in Lenox.

Looking out from time to time at one of the most breath-taking views in the Berkshires, or anywhere, Dr Koussevitzky told with a thrill in his voice and sparkle in his eyes the reasons for choosing the music of Mozart for the festival. "It is fortunate," he said, "that the greatest music that exists in literature was written for a small orchestra, to be played in a small auditorium. It is appropriate that such music should be played to keep alive for our youth the great values that we have and for which we are fighting."

"Never in a concert hall in this country, and only abroad at Salzburg, in the famous Mozarteum, and on a private estate near London, has there been a Mozart festival. Both of these have been abandoned because of the war," he said. He told of the playing by Alfred Wallenstein over the air several seasons ago of all of Mozart's compositions.

"When the war interrupted the Berkshire Symphonic festivals," Dr Koussevitzky said, "we hoped that the school at the Berkshire Music center could continue, but even if other war conditions had not interfered, it would have had to be given up temporarily because the students are over 18 and eligible for military service."

"I have already received," Dr Koussevitzky said, "many letters from friends telling me that they are so happy that the Berkshire Hills are again to have concerts, to ring with beautiful tunes, and that great music will again sound at Tanglewood."

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUN 25 1944

ALTHO the regular Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will not be held this year, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky has announced that a Mozart festival of four concerts will be given there this summer. Two of them will be on Saturday nights, July 29 and Aug. 5, and two will be on Sunday afternoons, July 20 and Aug. 6. The Boston Symphony orchestra will present the concerts and there will be noted soloists, Dorothy Maynor, vocalist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist, and the duo pianists, Luboschutz and Nemenoff. In addition many of the first chair men in the orchestra will appear in solo roles.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUN 25 1944

The World Of Music

By GRENA BENNETT

Lovers of music who were fortunate enough to have attended the annual Mozart festivals in Salzburg, Austria, an enchanting city where the immortal works of that great genius were interpreted by the most renowned artists and batonists of their time, will welcome the news that an effort to create in a measure, the charm and appeal of those foreign events is about to be launched in this country.

Mozart Festival

A Mozart Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this Summer. The place will be Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was closed last year owing to wartime rationing of gasoline. It will be re-opened next month as a contribution to the open-air musical events which are more numerous and attractive this year than ever before.

There will be no attempt to duplicate the elaborate productions of Mozart's operas that were given in Salzburg under the conducting of Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter.

The Tanglewood programs will be devoted mainly to instrumental compositions with some vocal solos by Dorothy Maynor to vary the character of the offerings.

Four Concerts in Series

Mr. Koussevitzky has aimed to preserve the real character of 18th Century musical performances in selecting and constructing the programs, which will be performed in the intimate auditorium that nestles in the foothills of the Berkshires. The hall seats about 1200 persons, and was built a few years ago for the Berkshire Music Center.

The Festival will consist of four concerts at which the programs will be entirely different, the lists to comprise the symphonies known as the A major, "Haffner," "Linz," "Jupiter," the E flat and G minor; besides "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; "Haffner" and C minor serenades; songs; concertos for one and two pianos; and the D major violin concerto.

Well known soloists have been engaged as assisting artists. This attractive plan may lead to a regular yearly series of Mozart Festivals that will bridge the time until world peace is restored and the delightful music centers of the Old World will resume.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

MOZART FESTIVAL

Programs have been announced for the Mozart Festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The four concerts of the Festival are to be given in the Opera Concert Hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. Notable soloists will assist. Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be on sale at England Brothers, Pittsfield, Mass., Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mass., Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass. and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, Mass. Season tickets may still be had by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUN 29 1944

MAESTRO HONORED

Cambridge, Mass., June 29.—(INS) Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was among six who were elected to honorary membership in the Harvard Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa today in connection with the university's commencement.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUN 26 1944

Dr. Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony in a Mozart festival at Tanglewood, for airing Thursday and August 5 from 8:30 to 9:30 on the Blue net.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 29 1944

Reservations Being Made For Festival

Tanglewood Event Being Given Wide Attention

LENOX—Keen interest is shown in the Mozart Festival that the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, will give July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6. A fifth of the opera-concert hall seating 1100 has been reserved, with 25 per cent of the subscribers from Pittsfield 50 per cent from other parts of Berkshire County, and 25 per cent from New York State, Connecticut and other parts of Massachusetts.

Among the earliest subscribers are members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees, including the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Bruce Crane Henry W. Dwight and Mrs. C. D Lloyd, and Jerome D. Greene, Boston orchestra president, and Edward A. Taft, orchestra trustee.

Neighbors of Tanglewood in Lenox and Stockbridge among the initial subscribers are Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mrs. John H. P. Gould Mrs. George K. Livermore, Mrs John Kennedy, Mrs. Henry H Pease, Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn Mrs. John L. Senior and Lester Roberts of Lenox and Miss Mabel Choate, E. C. Leonard and Seton Henry of Stockbridge.

At least one hotel and several smaller inns report every room taken for the festival dates, and inquiries are pouring in about programs, which will be announced at an early date, location of seats, transportation and room accommodations.

Festival subscription reservations may be obtained by mail to Symphony Hall, Boston.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 9 - 1944

Mozart Festival In Tanglewood Opens July 29

Programs are announced for the Mozart Festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The four concerts of the festival are set for in the Opera Concert Hall of the Orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday night, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday night, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. Notable soloists will assist. Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be available. Season tickets are available by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

The programs:

SATURDAY EVENING, July 29, at 8:30
Symphony in A Major
Divertimento in B-flat Major (for strings, horns)
Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni"
Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Symphony in C Major

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, July 30, at 3:30
Symphony in D Major, from "Haffner"
Concerto in E-flat Major (for two pianos and orchestra)
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff
Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito"
Symphony in G Minor

SATURDAY EVENING, Aug. 5, at 8:30
Symphony in G Minor
Concerto in D Major (for violin and orchestra)
Soloist: Ruth Posselt
Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta"
Symphony in E-flat Major

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, Aug. 6, at 3:30
Serenade in C Minor, from "Nacht Musique" (for oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons)
Concerto in D Major, from "Coronation Concerto" (for piano and orchestra)
Soloist: Robert Casadesus
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (serenade for strings), in G Major
Symphony in C Major, from "Jupiter"

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 8 - 1944

List Programs For Mozart Festival

Boston Symphony Schedules Series Of Four Concerts

Programs for the Mozart festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra. The four concerts will be given Saturday night, July 29. Sunday afternoon, July 30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6.

The July 29 program will include the Symphony in A major, the Divertimento in B flat major for strings with two horns, airs from the "Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni" and the Symphony in C major.

Soloists for the July 30 concert will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff. The program will include the Symphony in D major, the Concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra, the overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the Symphony in G minor.

The Symphony in G minor will open the Aug. 5 program which will also include the Concerto for violin and orchestra in D major with Ruth Posselt as soloist, the overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" and the Symphony in E flat major.

The Aug. 6 program will include the Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C minor for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, the Concerto in D major for piano and orchestra with Robert Casadesus as soloist, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings) in G major and the Symphony in C major (Jupiter").

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUN 18 1944

Koussevitsky Leads Tanglewood Mozart

Boston Symphony Will Play in Four Concerts at Lenox, Mass., and Chamber Orchestra Series in Mutual Hall

Lenox, Mass.—A Mozart Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this summer. Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be reopened for the purpose.

Directing the festival, Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now at his summer home in Lenox, will make his only between-season public appearance. To preserve the true eighteenth century character of Mozart's instrumental music the festival will be held in the intimate auditorium at Tanglewood seating 1,180, which was built for the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8:30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3:30. The following soloists are announced, in addition to the solo players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

The program will include early and late symphonies of Mozart as follows: the Symphonies in A major, K. 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major, K. 385 ("Haffner"); in C major, K. 425 ("Linz"); in E-flat major, K. 543; in G minor, K. 550, and in C major, K. 551 ("Jupiter"); the "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade in C minor, K. 388; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for Strings, K. 525, and the Divertimento for Two Horns and Strings in B-flat, K. 287. There will also be the Concertos for Violin in D major, K. 218, for Piano in D major, "Coronation," K. 537, and for two pianos in E-flat, K. 365. Arias are to be announced.

Following the Mozart Festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These concerts will also consist of four programs, each program performed twice, on the weekends of August 13, 20, 27, and September 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate. The concerts will be given in the New England Mutual Hall.

They will bring to an end a full season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has included since the close of the winter season on April 30 seventy Pops Concerts in Symphony Hall (May 2-July 15.) Arthur Fiedler, having concluded the Pops, will conduct 30 free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to August 16. The Sixty-Fourth Season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 6, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Season tickets for the four concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood may be obtained by application to Symphony Hall, Boston, at $10 and $15, plus twenty per cent war tax. Details about the Boston series will be announced shortly.

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
JUN 30 1944

A MOZART FESTIVAL will be presented at Tanglewood, scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, in July and August.

The following soloists will be heard: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist; and Nemonoff and Luboshutz, duo-pianists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 30 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD

Announced by Koussevitzky, Now at Lenox — He's Received Many Letters of Appreciation

Lenox, June 29—"Because I do not want longer to interrupt the great idea and work we are doing at Tanglewood, and because I want to continue to bring to this community great music, we are going to give a Mozart festival this summer," said Serge Koussevitzky, who has just completed his 20th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, on his terrace at Serenac in Lenox.

Looking out from time to time at one of the most breath-taking views in the Berkshires, or anywhere, Dr Koussevitzky told with a thrill in his voice and sparkle in his eyes the reasons for choosing the music of Mozart for the festival. "It is fortunate," he said, "that the greatest music that exists in literature was written for a small orchestra, to be played in a small auditorium. It is appropriate that such music should be played to keep alive for our youth the great values that we have and for which we are fighting."

"Never in a concert hall in this country, and only abroad at Salzburg, in the famous Mozarteum, and on a private estate near London, has there been a Mozart festival. Both of these have been abandoned because of the war," he said. He told of the playing by Alfred Wallenstein over the air several seasons ago of all of Mozart's compositions.

"When the war interrupted the Berkshire Symphonic festivals," Dr Koussevitzky said, "we hoped that the school at the Berkshire Music center could continue, but even if other war conditions had not interfered, it would have had to be given up temporarily because the students are over 18 and eligible for military service."

"I have already received," Dr Koussevitzky said, "many letters from friends telling me that they are so happy that the Berkshire Hills are again to have concerts, to ring with beautiful tunes, and that great music will again sound at Tanglewood."

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUN 18 1944

Summer Concerts By Boston Symphony

A Mozart Festival of four concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra is to be given in the Berkshires this summer on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and August 5 at 8.30, and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and August 6 at 3.30. Soloists announced are: Dorothy Maynor, Soprano; Ruth Posselt, Violin; Robert Casadesus, Piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

Following the Mozart Festival, a series of chamber concerts will be given in Boston by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the New England Mutual Hall on the weekends of August 13, 20, 27, and September 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate. Arthur Fiedler, after concluding the Pops, will conduct thirty free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to August 16. The sixty-fourth season of the Boston Symphony orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 6, with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

[155]

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
JUN 25 1944

ALTHO the regular Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will not be held this year, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky has announced that a Mozart festival of four concerts will be given there this summer. Two of them will be on Saturday nights, July 29 and Aug. 5, and two will be on Sunday afternoons, July 20 and Aug. 6. The Boston Symphony orchestra will present the concerts and there will be noted soloists, Dorothy Maynor, vocalist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist, and the duo pianists, Luboschutz and Nemenoff. In addition many of the first chair men in the orchestra will appear in solo roles.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUN 25 1944

The World Of Music

By GRENA BENNETT

Lovers of music who were fortunate enough to have attended the annual Mozart festivals in Salzburg, Austria, an enchanting city where the immortal works of that great genius were interpreted by the most renowned artists and batonists of their time, will welcome the news that an effort to create in a measure, the charm and appeal of those foreign events is about to be launched in this country.

Mozart Festival

A Mozart Festival, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this Summer. The place will be Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was closed last year owing to wartime rationing of gasoline. It will be re-opened next month as a contribution to the open-air musical events which are more numerous and attractive this year than ever before.

There will be no attempt to duplicate the elaborate productions of Mozart's operas that were given in Salzburg under the conducting of Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter.

The Tanglewood programs will be devoted mainly to instrumental compositions with some vocal solos by Dorothy Maynor to vary the character of the offerings.

Four Concerts in Series

Mr. Koussevitzky has aimed to preserve the real character of 18th Century musical performances in selecting and constructing the programs, which will be performed in the intimate auditorium that nestles in the foothills of the Berkshires. The hall seats about 1200 persons, and was built a few years ago for the Berkshire Music Center.

The Festival will consist of four concerts at which the programs will be entirely different, the lists to comprise the symphonies known as the A major, "Haffner," "Linz," "Jupiter," the E flat and G minor; besides "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; "Haffner" and C minor serenades; songs; concertos for one and two pianos; and the D major violin concerto.

Well known soloists have been engaged as assisting artists. This attractive plan may lead to a regular yearly series of Mozart Festivals that will bridge the time until world peace is restored and the delightful music centers of the Old World will resume.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
JUL 8 - 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL

Programs have been announced for the Mozart Festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by [redacted] conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The four concerts of the Festival are to be given in the Opera Concert Hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. Notable soloists will assist. Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be on sale at England Brothers, Pittsfield, Mass., Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mass., Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass. and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, Mass. Season tickets may still be had by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUN 29 1944

MAESTRO HONORED

Cambridge, Mass., June 29.—(INS) Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was among six who were elected to honorary membership in the Harvard Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa today in connection with the university's commencement.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
JUN 26 1944

Dr. Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony in a Mozart festival at Tanglewood, for airing Thursday and August 5 from 8:30 to 9:30 on the Blue net.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 29 1944

Reservations Being Made For Festival

Tanglewood Event Being Given Wide Attention

LENOX—Keen interest is shown in the Mozart Festival that the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, will give July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6. A fifth of the opera-concert hall seating 1100 has been reserved, with 25 per cent of the subscribers from Pittsfield, 50 per cent from other parts of Berkshire County, and 25 per cent from New York State, Connecticut and other parts of Massachusetts.

Among the earliest subscribers are members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees, including the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Henry W. Dwight and Mrs. C. D. Lloyd, and Jerome D. Greene, Boston orchestra president, and Edward A. Taft, orchestra trustee.

Neighbors of Tanglewood in Lenox and Stockbridge among the initial subscribers are Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mrs. John H. P. Gould, Mrs. George K. Livermore, Mrs. John Kennedy, Mrs. Henry H. Pease, Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn, Mrs. John L. Senior and Lester Roberts of Lenox and Miss Mabel Choate, E. C. Leonard and Seton Henry of Stockbridge.

At least one hotel and several smaller inns report every room taken for the festival dates, and inquiries are pouring in about programs, which will be announced at an early date, location of seats, transportation and room accommodations.

Festival subscription reservations may be obtained by mail to Symphony Hall, Boston.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 9 - 1944

Mozart Festival In Tanglewood Opens July 29

Programs are announced for the Mozart Festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The four concerts of the festival are set for in the Opera Concert Hall of the Orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday night, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday night, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. Notable soloists will assist. Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be available. Season tickets are available by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

The programs:

SATURDAY EVENING, July 29, at 8:30
Symphony in A Major
Divertimento in B-flat Major (for strings, horns)
Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni"
Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Symphony in C Major

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, July 30, at 3:30
Symphony in D Major, from "Haffner"
Concerto in E-flat Major (for two pianos and orchestra)
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff
Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito"
Symphony in G Minor

SATURDAY EVENING, Aug. 5, at 8:30
Symphony in G Minor
Concerto in D Major (for violin and orchestra)
Soloist: Ruth Posselt
Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta"
Symphony in E-flat Major

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, Aug. 6, at 3:30
Serenade in C Minor, from "Nacht Musique" (for oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons)
Concerto in D Major, from "Coronation Concerto" (for piano and orchestra)
Soloist: Robert Casadesus
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (serenade for strings), in G Major
Symphony in C Major, from "Jupiter"

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 8 - 1944

List Programs For Mozart Festival

Boston Symphony Schedules Series Of Four Concerts

Programs for the Mozart festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra. The four concerts will be given Saturday night, July 29. Sunday afternoon, July 30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6.

The July 29 program will include the Symphony in A major, the Divertimento in B flat major for strings with two horns, airs from the "Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni" and the Symphony in C major.

Soloists for the July 30 concert will be Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff. The program will include the Symphony in D major, the Concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra, the overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the Symphony in G minor.

The Symphony in G minor will open the Aug. 5 program which will also include the Concerto for violin and orchestra in D major with Ruth Posselt as soloist, the overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" and the Symphony in E flat major.

The Aug. 6 program will include the Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C minor for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, the Concerto in D major for piano and orchestra with Robert Casadesus as soloist, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings) in G major and the Symphony in C major (Jupiter").

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 7 - 1944

Orchestra of 35 Men To Play for Mozart Festival at Tanglewood

When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart festival in the Tanglewood Theatre on July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6, he will have about 35 men before him. This is not the entire orchestra, of course, but it will be composed of the principals of each section, and it will be intentionally contracted to this size.

In the latter half of the 18th century, most music was written and performed expressly for audiences invited to the courts of Europe's large and small potentates, of one type or another. Many royal patrons maintained orchestras, and in their coterie there was often the prime composer of the day. Mozart happened to be a bit of an independent young man, and was unwilling to do some things which might have permitted him to eat more regularly, a habit from which, in its irregularity, he suffered severely during so many years of his short life. It was Beethoven, indeed, who is credited with being the first court musician to sit "above the salt," the phrase which indicated the division of the patron's table, guests being placed "above" and talented servants "below."

But orchestras of that day normally consisted of some 20 to 30 musicians. Thus the performances of Mozart ordinarily played by the major orchestras are much amplified and even glorified, to be exact, over what the composer intended. This present orchestra, therefore, that Koussevitzky proposes to use will come very near to that which the Salzburg genius had in mind at the time.

Small String Groups

It should be noted that Mozart and others of his day wrote for smaller groups. He probably had four or six first violins at most and the others in proportion which the Boston orchestra uses in Symphony Hall or in the Tanglewood Shed. Moreover his scores for the three big symphonies call for fewer kinds of wind instruments than later composers required, such as Berlioz and Wagner, who came early in the next century. For instance the big G minor symphony calls for flute, oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns; no trumpets, no trombones, even no percussion, not to speak of the innumerable additions which the modern orchestra has acquired at the hands of time and generations of those who would improve on Mozart.

Thus again the smaller hall goes hand in glove with the smaller orchestra. Incidentally the olden court orchestras had a variety of uses: They played for dinner, concerts and for dancing, and the court composer who was very often also the director of the band, was supposed to furnish from his own pen the musical fare of the evening. The result was often quickly prepared and less than adequately rehearsed. Moreover, the standards of instrumental performing were very different then from now. There were not available then a score of men capable of passing the tests which the Boston orchestra requires of its string players, and, as for wind instrument players, the conditions were even worse.

Could Blame Candle

The fluttery candle, which was standard equipment on every music rack, could always be blamed for slight errors, but performances in Mozart's day would probably be termed today just plain ragged. Another excuse, too, was the low visibility of the leader, for he always took his place at one of the desks himself, usually the concertmaster's rack, but he did not stand with a baton in front of his man with his back to the audience. In fact, it was not until well into the 19th century that conductors turned their backs to their audiences and addressed their players.

The Boston orchestra some few years ago put on a show in Symphony Hall in which the players dressed in the costumes of Haydn's day, which was Mozart's, too, of course, and played by candlelight. To have been really consistent they should have made Dr. Koussevitzky lead from his post at the double-bass, the instrument he played before he became a conductor.

J.C.R.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
1944

Mozart Festival This Summer In Tanglewood Under Baton Of Dr. Koussevitzky

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 1.—A Mozart Festival conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, is to be given in the Berkshires this summer. Tanglewood, the scenic estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be reopened for the purpose. Directing the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky, now at his summer home in Lenox, will make his only between-season public appearance. To preserve the true eighteenth century character of Mozart's instrumental music, the Festival will be held in the intimate auditorium at Tanglewood, seating 1,180, which was built for the Berkshire Music Center. The Orchestra will consist of the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There will be four concerts, each with a different program, on the Saturday evenings of July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 o'clock and the Sunday afternoons of July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30 o'clock. Soloists, in addition to the solo players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violin; Robert Casadesus, piano, and the paired pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

The programs will include early and late symphonies of Mozart as follows: The Symphonies in A major, K. 201; in C major, K. 338; in D major K. 285 ("Haffner"); in C major, K. 425 ("Linz"); in E-flat major, K. 543; in G minor, K. 550, and in C major, K. 551 ("Jupiter"); the "Haffner" Serenade, K. 250; the Wind Serenade in M minor, K. 388;" "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for Strings, K. 525, and the Divertimento for Two Horns and Strings in B-flat, K. 287. There will also be the Concertos for Violin in D major, K. 218, for Piano in D major, "Coronation," K. 537, and for Two Pianos in E-flat, K. 365. Arias are to be announced.

Following the Mozart Festival, a series of concerts of chamber orchestra proportions will be given in Boston by principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These concerts will also consist of four programs, each program performed twice, on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27, and Sept. 3. The conductors will include Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera, and the Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate. The concerts will be given in the New England Mutual Hall. They will bring to an end a full season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has included since the close of the winter season on April 30 seventy "Pops" Concerts in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler, having concluded the Pops, will conduct thirty free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade from July 20 to Aug. 16. The Sixty-Fourth Season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 6, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Season tickets for the four concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood may be obtained by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 9 - 1944

Koussevitzky Lists TanglewoodProgram

Four Concerts Arranged for Mozart Festival —Soloists Named for Lenox, Mass., Event Beginning July 29—Reservations Start

The programs are announced for the Mozart Festival, to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The four concerts of the Festival are to be given in the Opera Concert Hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. Notable soloists will assist.

Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be on sale at England Brothers, Pittsfield, Mass., Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mass., Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass., and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, Mass. Season tickets may still be had by application to Symphony Hall, Boston. The programmes will be as follows:

Saturday, July 29, at 8:30 P. M.

Symphony in A major (29; K. 201).

Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings with Two Horns, (15; K. 287).

Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni".

Soloist: Dorothy Maynor.

Symphony in C major (34; K. 338).

Sunday, July 30, at 3:30 P. M.

Symphony in D major ("Haffner"), (35; K. 385).

Concerto in E-flat major for Two Pianos and Orchestra (K. 365).

Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff.

Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito," K. 621).

Symphony in G minor (40; K. 550).

Saturday, August 5, at 8:30 P. M.

Symphony in G minor (25; K. 183).

Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major (4; K. 218).

Soloist. Ruth Posselt.

Overture to "Domeneo, Re di Creta" (K. 366).

Symphony in E-flat major (39; K. 543).

Sunday, August 6, at 3:30 P. M.

Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C minor, for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassons (12; K. 388).

Concerto in D major for Piano and Orchestra ("Coronation Concerto") (26; K. 537).

Soloist: Robert Casadesus.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings) in G major, (K. 525) Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") (41; K. 551).

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 9 - 1944

Mozart Soloists Listed

Tanglewood Artists to Include Maynor, Posselt and Casadesus

Soloists for the series of Mozart concerts which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present at Tanglewood in the Berkshires late this month and early in August include Dorothy Maynor, soprano; the two-piano team, Luboshutz and Nemenoff; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Robert Casadesus, pianist. The four concerts, which will be played by the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will take place in the opera concert hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate. Season tickets can be obtained by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

The programs are to be as follows:

Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30: Symphony in A Major, (29; K. 201); Divertimento in B-flat Major, for Strings with Two Horns, (15; K. 287); Airs from "Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni," (soloist, Dorothy Maynor); Symphony in C Major, (34; K. 338).

Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30: Symphony in D Major, ("Haffner"), (35; K. 385); Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos and Orchestra, (K. 365), (soloists, Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff); Overture to "Clemenza di Tito," (K. 621); Symphony in G Minor, (40; K. 550).

Saturday evening, August 5, at 8:30: Symphony in G Minor, (25; K. 183); Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D Major, (4; K. 218), (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," (K. 366); Symphony in E-flat Major, (39; K. 543).

Sunday afternoon, August 6, at 3:30: Serenade in C Minor, for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons, (12; K. 388); Concerto in D Major for Piano and Orchestra, ("Coronation Concerto"), (26; K. 537), (soloist, Robert Casadesus); "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," (Serenade for Strings), in G Major, (K. 525); Symphony in C Major, ("Jupiter"); (41; K. 551).

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 9 - 1944

Music

Mozart Festival Unique

Dr. Koussevitzky Tells of Plans For Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

"Because I do not want longer to interrupt the great ideas and work we are doing at Tanglewood, and because I want to continue to bring to this community great music, we are going to give a Mozart festival this summer," said Serge Koussevitzky, who has just completed his 20th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, on his terrace at Serenac, in Lenox, Mass.

Looking out from time to time at one of the most breathtaking views in the Berkshires, or anywhere, Dr. Koussevitzky told with a thrill in his voice and sparkle in his eyes the reasons for choosing the music of Mozart for the festival.

"It is fortunate," he said, "that the greatest music that exists in literature was written for a small orchestra, to be performed in a small auditorium. It is approriate that such music should be played to keep alive for our youth the great values that we have and for which they are fighting.

Few of Kind

"Never in a concert hall in this country, and only abroad at Salzburg, in the famous Mozarteum, and on a private estate near London, has there been a Mozart festival. Both of these have been abandoned because of the war."

He told of the playing over the air several seasons ago of all of Mozart's compositions by Alfred Wallenstein.

"When the war interrupted the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals," Dr. Koussevitzy continued: "we hoped that the school at the Berkshire Music Center could continue, but even if other war conditions had not interfered it would have had to be given up temporarily because the students are over 18 and subject to military service."

"We cannot now have a complete great festival, with the complete Boston Symphony orchestra, for many reasons. War conditions will not permit it, nor is it appropriate in war time to expect, so far from centers of population, audiences of ten or twelve or thirteen thousand that crowded at Tanglewood when the festivals were interrupted, but we can be sure, of an audience of 1100 which is the capacity of the opera-concert hall in which Mozart will be played this summer."

NORTHAMPTON, MASS
GAZETTE
JUL 8 - 194

Four Concerts To Be Given Week-Ends Soon At Tanglewood

Officials in charge of the Mozart festival, to be given at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Serge Koussevitsky and principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, announced today that seats for single concerts will be available on Monday on application to the festival at Pittsfield. Four concerts will be given during the last weekend of July and the first weekend of August.

Among the soloists are Dorothy Maynor, Robert Casadesus, Ruth Posselt, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff. This Saturday concerts will be at 8.30 and the Sunday concerts at 3.30, in the opera concert hall, on the Lenox estate which is the orchestra's summer home.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL

At the four concerts of the Mozart Festival, to be presented by Serge Koussevitzky, July 29 and 30, and Aug. 5 and 6, in the Opera Concert Hall at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., the conductor will lead the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the following programs:

Saturday, July 29, 8:30 P. M.

Soloist: Dorothy Maynor, soprano.

Symphony in A major (K. 201); Divertimento in B flat, for strings and two horns (K. 287); Arias from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni," and Symphony in C major (K. 338).

Sunday, July 30, 3:30 P. M.

Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists.

"Haffner" Symphony; Two-piano Concerto in E flat; Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and Symphony in G minor (K. 550).

Saturday, Aug. 5, 8:30 P. M.

Soloist: Ruth Posselt, violin.

Symphony in G minor (K. 183); Violin Concerto in D (K. 218); Overture to "Idomeneo" and Symphony in E flat (K. 543).

Sunday, Aug. 6, 3:30 P. M.

Soloist: Robert Casadesus, piano.

Serenade in C minor, for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons (K. 388); Piano Concerto in D major (K. 537); "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and Symphony in C major (K. 551).

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 9 - 1944

Boston Symphony In Mozart Festival

Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony orchestra will present four concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, Saturday, July 29; Sunday afternoon, July 30; Saturday evening, August 5; and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6.

The concerts will be given in the Opera Concert Hall of the Orchestra's Lenox estate. Notable soloists will assist.

Beginning Monday, July 10, seats for the single concerts will be on sale at England Brothers, Pittsfield; Curtis hotel, Lenox; Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge; and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington. Season tickets may be had by application to Symphony hall, Boston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 18 1944

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Koussevitzky Planning a Mozart Festival at Tanglewood in July and August

THOUGH the Berkshire Festival will once again be conspicuous by its absence, there will be musical activity at Tanglewood this summer after all. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced that he will direct a Mozart Festival of four concerts on Saturday evenings, July 29 and Aug. 5 at 8:30 and on Sunday afternoons, July 30 and Aug. 6 at 3:30. The orchestra will be made up of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and soloists will include Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Robert Casadesus, pianist, and the duo-pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff. The orchestra's first-desk men will also make solo appearances. The concerts will be held in the Tanglewood auditorium instead of the outdoor Shed where the regular Berkshire Festival concerts were held. Season tickets for the four Mozart concerts may be obtained by applying to Symphony Hall, Boston. Prices will range from $10 to $15 plus 20 per cent tax.

Dr. Koussevitzky also announces that following the Mozart Festival there will be a series of chamber orchestra concerts in the New England Mutual Hall, Boston, by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They will be given on the week-ends of Aug. 13, 20, 27 and Sept. 3 and will be conducted by Richard Burgin, G. Wallace Woodworth and Bernard Zighera. The Boston Flute Players Club and the Boston Society of Early Instruments will participate.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra has launched a nation-wide competition for the writing of a "Jubilee Overture" for full orchestra to celebrate the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary, which takes place during the coming season. A prize of a $1,000 war bond will be awarded to the winner and the judges will be Eugene Goossens, the orchestra's conductor; Pierre Monteux, conductor of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and Deems Taylor, composer and author. The competition is open to all American citizens and works submitted must be between ten and fifteen minutes in length and written especially for the anniversary.

Massimo Freccia, who recently signed a contract as permanent conductor of the New Orleans Symphony, has returned from the South with a new kind of post-war concert in mind.

"I saw the Mississippi for the first time," he said, "and immediately I thought of the Volga and the concerts Serge Koussevitzky used to give in Volga towns, traveling up and down the river with his orchestra on a steamboat. He brought great orchestra music to people who had never before heard good music.

"There are thousands of large and small communities along the Mississippi. Why not take an orchestra on a long trip up the river? Of course, it could not be done until after the war, but I see great possibilities in the idea. There are some enormous steamers on the Mississippi—big excursion boats that are palatial, with great ballroom decks which could accommodate an orchestra and a large audience. I'm going to start working on the plan now."

Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, pianists, will hold master classes this summer at the Lamont School of Music of the College of Arts and Sciences of the University of Denver, Denver, Col., during the first term of the school's summer quarter. The opera "A Tree on the Plains" by Ernst Bacon, who also will be on the school's faculty as guest instructor, is scheduled for two performances under his baton in Denver, in the course of the quarter which opens tomorrow and closes Aug. 25.

The Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester will hold its summer session from June 26 through Aug. 4 in Rochester, N. Y. Practically the entire faculty of the school will teach during the session.

The seven-week series of concerts at the Robin Hood Dell opens tomorrow night with a program conducted by Dimitri Mitropoulos who will direct the Robin Hood Dell Symphony during the first fortnight of the season. Artur Rubinstein, pianist, will appear at the inaugural event as soloist in the Brahms concerto in B flat major.

Oscar Shumsky, musician 1/c, USN, will be the soloist in Wieniawski's violin concerto, No. 2, at tonight's concert of the Watergate Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D. C. Wednesday night, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will be the assisting artist, and on Friday night the American Ballad Singers, under Elie Siegmeister, will be featured on an all-American program dedicated to men and women of the armed forces. Stanley Chapple conducts all three concerts.

The Budapest Quartet will give a series of six weekly concerts, starting June 27, at the San Francisco Museum of Art. A Beethoven cycle will be presented, beginning with the quartets, Op. 18, No. 3; Op. 95 and Op. 127.

Hemidemisemiquavers: Paul Bowles has written the score for the film "Congo," produced by the Belgian Government Commission, and Max Goberman has conducted the orchestra in it. The first showing is scheduled for Thursday night at 9 o'clock at the Museum of Modern Art. . . . Instruments of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries from the Morris and Ida Loeb collection are being exhibited for the first time by the music division of the New York Public Library. A violin concealed in a walking-stick and two inlaid chitarroni are in the exhibit.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

7/13/44

Orchestra for Mozart Festival Has First Chairs of Symphony

The series of four concerts which will be given in the theatre at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the week-ends of July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6 will be devoted entirely to the music of Mozart. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead an orchestra consisting of some 35 men including all the first chairmen in four concerts on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The decision to concentrate on the famous young Salzburger is hardly a capricious one. His place in music is steadily gaining its proper place among the larger circle of music-lovers, as it has long been established in the hearts and minds of musicians. The fact that he was allotted but 35 years on earth, in the light of history, is not especially important or that he composed at such a phenomenally early age and that so much that has endured was the product of a mere youngster. His music can be examined and appreciated on its merits and not by comparison with the output of one who lived longer and wrote later. It would almost seem, however, that those composers whose lives were destined to be unfortunately short wrote with a speed and a fluency and intensity as if to indicate that they knew they dared not dally on the way.

In the case of Mozart, his poverty, come by honestly and decently maintained, is often pointed out as a situation in spite of which he triumphed. What is generally overlooked is that he was born to parents of intelligence far above the average. His father was a man who had had the advantage of study in the fine arts and belles-letters. That the boy at six, and his beloved and evidently equally phenomenal sister Nannerl, his elder by five years, were exploited by the father may at this time be discussed as a question of parental wisdom. Child guidance was not a science of that day, but we can't write history in reverse.

The young man turned things out in fabulous quantities. All of it was not equally good but time has taken care of that and sifted the precious from the less valuable. Even so, all that is worth while is not on the lists of popular favorites. This festival, therefore, offers Dr. Koussevitzky an opportunity to include some of the less familiar works with those which have become standard by consistent repetition by the major symphonic organizations.

As a matter of fact, Mozart is considered by many a master of song. That he carried his special gift for tunes over to the field of the orchestra, and into chamber music, too, for that matter, above his unquestioned mastery of the form and "feel" of these other types, perhaps accounts for his immortality. The programs will include the three big and best-known symphonies and another three less familiar; a couple of overtures from his operas, especially that to "Idomeneo" which has been arbitrarily assigned as the spot in his career which marks the end of his period of spending his musical wild oats; a couple of the serenades, and a choice from the larger so-called chamber music literature; and a very select example from each of the fields of solos with orchestral accompaniment for the piano, violin, two pianos, and for voice. The soloists Robert Casadesus, Ruth Posselt, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, and Dorothy Maynor, bespeak the character of the performances which may be anticipated.

—J.C.R

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

JUL 22 1944

Mozart Festival to Celebrate Koussevitsky's 70th Birthday

The Mozart Festival at Tanglewood next week will mark the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitsky, who will conduct the four concerts at the Berkshire Music Center. The Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor will be 70 on Wednesday, when he will begin rehearsals of the programs to be given next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, and Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitsky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston season in October.

The principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, will be heard. The soloists will be Ruth Posselt, Dorothy Maynor, Robert Casadesus and Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 22 1944

Boston Symphony Opens Open Air Concert Series

With Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first in the annual series of the well-known Esplanade concerts on the Charles river embankment in Boston will be broadcast over WISH and the Blue network at 7:30 o'clock tonight.

The program will open with "Sambre et Meuse, Regiment March," by Planquette-Turlet. Following this Beethoven's overture to "Egmont" will be heard. The orchestra will then play Dvorak's "15th Slavonic Dance in C Major," after which the "Bostonia Suite" will be heard. The latter is Keith Brown's musical picturization of several well-known Boston landmarks. The program will conclude with Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The famous open air concerts, which replace the Symphony Hall pops concerts by the orchestra, will continue to be heard under the sponsorship of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company over the Blue each Saturday until their conclusion.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 19 1944

Mozart's Music

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The enclosed letter from my friend ,the great musicologist, Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, who is now a professor of music at Harvard University, is so interesting that I wonder if my friends in Berkshire might not like to read it.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

Lenox.

* * *

Dear Dr. Koussevitzky:

You are about to conduct a series of Mozart's works at the Auditorium, in those beautiful, peaceful, idyllic surroundings of the Berkshire district. To this scenery nothing is more congenial than Mozart's music, and nowhere in America could one find a place better suited to the genius of Mozart's art.

In the old world there was one locality sacred to Mozart—Salzburg—the city where he was born, where he grew up, the place from which his fame spread all over Europe. Can the Salzburg Mozart Festivals, now, alas, no more existing, be revived in this continent that has now become the heir of the ruined mid-European music? If this were at all possible, where could these festivals be more appropriately revived than at Tanglewood? Your intuition, dear Dr. Koussevitzky, has guided you admirably in the idea that Tanglewood should take the place of the Salzburg festivals, and that also the art of Mozart should find a permanent home at Tanglewood. There a periodically returning Mozart Festival might become a unique and ideal feature of the musical life of America . . .

In these troubled times of war Mozart's music, if performed with that perfection that we may justly expect at Tanglewood, will act, more than any other music, as a consoling, healing, purifying power beyond comparison. No other of the great masters can compete with Mozart in this power or rejuvenation of the soul, because his music is the idealization of youth. At the age of 35 years Mozart had come to the close of his earthly career.

The music of Bach and Handel with its religious intensity, its character of manly strength and its superior mental powers yet does not exhale that fascination of youthful ardor radiating from Mozart. Even Hayden, so similar to Mozart in many respects, strikes us as possessing manly vigor rather than youthful exaltation. Beethoven's pathetic, heroic, majestic and grandiose manner is essentially different from Mozart, and the romantic turbulence of a Chopin, Schumann, Liszt and Wagner likewise lacks that peculiar Mozartean atmosphere of youthful candor. In view of this striking and unique feature of Mozart's art it seems appropriate to analyze the source of this central energy, pervading and animating all his music.

Grace, vivacity, joyfulness, purity and a gentle melancholy are the main attributes of Mozart's music, attributes that are the outcome of a youthful temperament. Though these qualities belong to youth in general, they acquire their artistic significance in the case of Mozart by their abnormal intensity. The prevailing mental attitude of the time around 1768, when Mozart commenced his career, favored the unhampered and natural expression of these youthful traits much more than the preceding epoch of baroque mentality intent on pompous gravity, powerful structure, complicated contrapuntal design. Mozart had not been brought up on the involved polyphony of Bach. His education was based on Italian opera, on the refinements of the already vanishing French rococo culture, dominating the middle of the 18th century also in Germany, and on that new style of popular simplicity and directness seen in the symphonies of the then famous Mannheim school and in Haydn's early symphonies and quartets. Mozart's instrumental music in a way combines the refined elegance and grace of the aristocratic rococo art with the new popular tunefulness of the Mannheim style. But by his superior gifts Mozart far surpassed his early models both of the rococo and the popular type. The already exhausted and artificial rococo grave he rejuvenated by an infusion of fresh, healthy blood from the popular German tunes, and at the same time he gave to the rather plain and unpretentious bourgeois music of Mannheim a new interest for more exacting listeners, by a fascinating wealth of invention and art, in form, harmony, orchestra and soulful melody. This new mixture of grace, vivacity, joyfulness and gentle melancholy resulted in a never surpassed and rarely equalled purity of form, in a captivating beauty of sound and in an incomparable expressive — of the emotions of a youthful soul.

HUGO LEICHTENTRITT.

Cambridge.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 9 - 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL PROGRAMS ANNOUNCED

Lenox, July 8 — The programs are announced for the Mozart festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The four concerts of the festival are to be given in the Opera concert hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. Notable soloists will assist.

The programs will be as follows:—

Saturday evening, July 29, at 8.30—Symphony in A major (29; K. 201); Divertimento in B-flat major, for strings with two horns, (15; K.287).

Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni," soloist, Dorothy Maynor. Symphony in C major (34; K.338).

Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3.30—Symphony in D major (Haffner), (35; K.385). Concerto in E-flat major for two pianos and orchestra (K.365). Soloists, Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff.

Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito," (K.621). Symphony in G minor (40; K550).

Saturday evening, August 5, at 8.30 — Symphony in G minor (25; K183). Concerto for violin and orchestra in D major (4; K218). Soloist, Ruth Posselt.

Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" (K366). Symphony in E-flat major (39; K543).

Sunday afternoon, August 6, at 3.30—Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C minor, for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons (12; K388). Concerto in D major for piano and orchestra ("Coronation Concerto") (26; K537). Soloist, Robert Casadesus.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings), in G major (K525). Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") (41; K551).

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 20 1944

MUSIC LOVERS MUST WALK TO FESTIVAL

PITTSFIELD, July 19 — A decision of the Office of Transportation today that the Berkshire Street Railway will not be allowed to operate special busses to Tanglewood the week ends of July 29th and Aug. 5th when Serge Koussevitzky and 35 members of the Boston Orchestra play Mozart, will keep the festival in the rarified atmosphere that the $3.60 and $4.80 ticket prices would indicate. Those without automobiles will be able to ride as far as Lenox center but from then on, they will have to walk.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 17 1944

Mozart Fete In Berkshires Opens July 29

NEW YORK, July 17—Much of music-minded New York will probably be treking to the Berkshires in the not-distant future. The attraction is the Mozart Festival which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his Bostonians are putting on at Tanglewood. Four superb programs are to be offered. Dorothy Maynard will open the Festival on Saturday evening, July 29, presenting arias from The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni, while the orchestra will play the Symphony in A Major, the Divertimento in B Flat for strings and two horns, and the Symphony in C Major. On Sunday, July 30, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Meneoff, the popular duo-pianists, will play the Mozart Two-Piano Concerto in E Flat. Orchestra numbers will be the Haffner Symphony, the Overture to La Clemenza di Tito and the Symphony in G Minor.

On the succeeding week-end the soloists will be respectively, Ruth Posselt, violinist on Saturday night, and Robert Casadesus, pianist on Sunday night. The Mozart Concerto in D will be Miss Posselt's offering, while the orchestra will play the Symphony in G Minor, the overture to Idomeneo and the Symphony in E Flat. The concert at which Mr. Casadesus is soloist will open with the Serenade in C Minor for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons. The ever favorite Eine Kleine Nachmusik will be played and the Symphony in C Major. Mr. Casadesus's number will be the Piano Concert in D Major.

New York and New Englanders have been a little homesick for the familiar Tanglewood events, and bid fair to turn out in large numbers for the two week-ends when the music of the German genius holds the boards.

Anderson Applaudes

Marian Anderson brought the season's largest audience to the Stadium Concerts last Monday night, topping by some hundreds the crowd attracted the preceding week by the all-Gershwin program. The credit practically all goes to the singer, also, for although General Charles de Gaulle honored the concert briefly with his attendance, he was not expected and therefore was not a drawing card. The famous negro songstress, unquestionably one of the greatest artists in the world, chose her selections from her Brahms repertoire, and perhaps reached the peak of artistic perfection in the Sind es Schmerzen, sind es Freuden which evoked such enthusiasm as is almost unprecedented even in the Stadium. The singer gave one encore, Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child, which is a pre-eminent favorite with her fans, and was obliged to respond to 10 curtain calls before the audience would release her.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 16 1944

One of the most interesting announcements of recent days is regarding the Mozart Festival to be held July 29th, 30th and August 5th, 6th at Tanglewood, Mass., the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In observance of Serge Koussevitzky's 70th birthday, the festival will be given with the assistance of the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Share the ride policies by the Berkshire friends of the orchestra are expected to facilitate transportation problems for vacationers at nearby Lenox and Stockbridge resorts. A letter accompanying the announcement stated, "It is a source of real satisfaction to Dr. Koussevitzky and all of us here that we can make a beginning on a resumption of our Berkshire concerts."

The Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon programs of the July weekend will offer Symphony in A major, K 201, Divertimento in B flat for strings and two horns, Symphony in C, K 338 and Arias sung by Dorothy Maynor on Saturday, and Symphony in D (Haffner) Concerto in E flat for two pianos and orchestra with Pierre Luboshuts, Genia Nemenoff, Overture to La Clemenza do Tito and Symphony in G minor on Sunday.

The Saturday concert of the August weekend will feature Symphony in G minor, K 183, Concerto in D for violin and orchestra with Ruth Posselt, Overture to Idomeneo, Re di Creta, and Symphony in E flat. The fine program scheduled for the Sunday finale offers Serenade (Nacht Musique) for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns, and two bassoons, Concerto in D for piano and orchestra with Robert Casadesus, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, and the Jupiter Symphony.

Mozart Festival Program Listed

Koussevitzky to Lead Boston Symphony

The programs are announced for the Mozart Festival to be presented at Tanglewood in the Berkshires by Serge Koussevitzky conducting the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The four concerts of the Festival are to be given in the Opera Concert Hall of the orchestra's Lenox estate on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. Notable soloists will assist.

Seats for the single concerts are on sale at England Brothers, Pittsfield, Mass., Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mass., Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass., and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, Mass. Season tickets may still be had by application to Symphany Hall, Boston.

The programs will be as follows:

I, Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30—Symphony in A major (K. 201); Divertimento in B-flat major, (15, K. 287); Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni," soloist: Dorothy Maynor; Symphony in C major (K. 338).

II, Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30—"Haffner" Symphony; Concerto in E-flat major for two pianos (K. 365), soloists: Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff; Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito"; Symphony in G minor (K. 550).

III, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30—Symphony in G minor (K. 183), Concerto for violin and orchestra in D, (K. 218), soloist: Ruth Posselt; Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta"; Symphony in E-flat major (K. 543).

IV, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, at 3:30—Serenade ("Nacht Musik") in C minor, for two obes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons (12, K. 388); "Coronation Concerto" (26, K. 537), soloist, Robert Casadesus; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (K. 525); "Jupiter" Symphony, (41; K. 551.)

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 16 1944

Music

Mozart Festival Program

Koussevitzky Makes Public Feature Music

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced that there is a limited number of single tickets available for individual concerts of the Mozart festival to be given at "Tanglewood," July 29 and 30 and August 5 and 6 in the Opera Concert hall on the orchestra's Lenox estate.

I.
JULY 29, 8:30 P. M.
Symphony in A major (29; K. 201)
Divertimento in B-flat major (15; K. 287)

Airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni"
Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Symphony in C major (34; K. 338)

II.
JULY 30, 3:30 P. M.
Symphony in D major ("Haffner"), (35; K. 385)
Concerto in E-flat major for Two Pianos and Orchestra (K. 365)
Soloists: Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff

Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito," (K. 621)
Symphony in G minor (40; K. 550)

III.
AUGUST 5, 8:30 P. M.
Symphony in G minor (25; K. 183)
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major (4; K. 218)
Soloist: Ruth Posselt

Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" (K. 366)
Symphony in E-flat major (39; K. 543)

IV.
AUGUST 6, 3:30 P. M.
Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C minor
Concerto in D major for Piano and Orchestra ("Coronation Concerto") (26; K. 537)
Soloist: Robert Casadesus

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" in G major (K. 525)
Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") (41; K. 551)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 22 1944

Four Composers Receive Awards

The Koussevitzky Music Foundation has presented this year's grants to Aaron Copland, Darius Milhaud, Burrill Phillips and Nikolai Lopatnikoff. The grants take the form of commissions for orchestral works. The awards to Copland and Milhaud are for symphonies, the one to Phillips for an overture, and the one to Lopatnikoff for a concertino. The Koussevitzky Foundation was established in memory of Natalie Koussevitzky, the late wife of the Boston Symphony conductor.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 21 1944

Koussevitzky Returns As Mozart Interpreter

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Serge Koussevitzky comes out of summer retirement in order to take charge of the rehearsals for the planned Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass. The conductor has arranged four programs, to be given in lieu of the Berkshire Music Festival of other years, concerts to take place in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall.

The quartet of Mozart programs will offer representative works of the composer, for which two noted soloists have been engaged: Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Dates set for the events are July 29 and 30, and Aug. 5 and 6. The purpose of this year's presentation is to "keep alive the purpose to which Tanglewood—summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—is dedicated, namely, the study and performance of music of the first order in the 'out of season' summer months."

* * *

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 16 1944

Musical Digest:

Mozart Music For Festival In Berkshires

Five Soloists for Four Concerts by Boston Symphony

By Eric Claudin.

NEW YORK, July 15.—Since the long-famed and devotedly attended Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has become a war casualty Serge Koussevitzky has arranged a brief Mozart Festival which will consist of four concerts to be given on successive week ends in July and August.

The series will be given in the Opera Concert Hall at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., scene of the more elaborate Bershire Festival, and will open on July 29 with Dorothy Maynor, soprano, as soloist in arias from The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will be heard in the Two-Piano Concerto in E Flat on July 30. The next Saturday, Aug. 5, Ruth Posselt will be guest artist in the Violin Concerto in D (K 218), and Robert Casadesus, pianist, will conclude the guest list Sunday, Aug. 6, playing the Concerto in D Major (K 537).

Orchestral items for the series will include seven symphonies, the B-flat Divertimento for Strings, the Overtures to La Clemenza di Tito, and Idomeneo, the Serenade in C Minor for Oboes, Clarinets, Horns and Bassoons, and Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Foundation Grants Go To Four Composers

Lenox, Mass., July 22—(AP)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopainikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Awarded Grants

LENOX, Mass., July 22 (AP).—Four composers, Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikola Lopatnikoff, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips.

New York Journal-American
 Sun., July 23, 1944.—L-16

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

JUL 16 1944

Koussevitsky Group to All-Mozart Festival Pr

By J. FRED LISSFELT
Sun-Telegraph Music Critic

THERAPEUTIC and healing powers of music have long been under observation among leading physicians and researchers.

I have always contended that the music of Mozart is the supreme healer for tired minds and conflicting emotions, and so it was with some satisfaction that I read of the survival of the Berkshire festival concerts through the medium of Mozart.

Serge Koussevitsky, with the leaders and some players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give four programs entirely devoted to music of Mozart Saturday evening, July 29; Sunday afternoon, July 30; Saturday night, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6.

Soloists Chosen

Soloists are Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, in airs from "Don Giovanni and the "Magic Flute" for the first program; Luboshutz and Nemenoff in a concerto for two pianos for the second; Ruth Posselt in the D Major Violin Concerto for the third; and Robert Casadesus in the "Coronation Cocerto" for the fourth.

Many Pittsburghers are accustomed to attend these concerts and might find and will find them a real solace in these troublesome times.

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

JUL 22 1944

Music Awards

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced the composer grants for 1944 awarded by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, which was established in memory of Natalie Koussevitzky.

The grants were awarded to Aaron Copland for a symphony, Darius Milhaud for a symphony, Nikolai Lopatnikoff for a concertino, and Burrill Phillips for an overture.

[156]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phililps. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO
NEWS-SUN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 23 1944

FOUR COMPOSERS RECEIVE GRANTS

Koussevitzky Music Foundation Announces Them at Lenox—Will Produce Compositions to Be Used by Boston Symphony

Lenox, July 22 — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky music foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the lifelong interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present-day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burril Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVITZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced that the annual grants to composers awarded by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., will go to Aaron Copland for a symphony, Darius Milhaud for a symphony, Nikolai Lopatnikoff for a concertino, and Burrill Phillips for an overture. Dr. Koussevitzky, who organized the foundation in memory of his wife, Natalie, expressed the hope that some of the commissioned works would be ready for performance during the coming season.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchaturian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

157

INFORMATION OBSCURED

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Hart McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back

When excess stomach acid causes painful, sufferation gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fast-acting medicines known for symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell-ans Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in a jiffy or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Trained from childhood, the H... Indians are marvelous runners.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Bea...

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton bea... district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer. The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand at Hampton. Busses and taxis meet trains daily at Hampton stati... bringing visitors directly to the bea...

Strassen will visit Minnesota brie... on his way to Washington on offic... business.

...ough." he s... "and we are operat... under a good plan. I have full c... fidence in the force we put ashore." expect to reduce Guam completely...

...vitzky Music ... ...tations were th... ...they are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzy and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced that the annual grants to composers awarded by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., will go to Aaron Copland for a symphony, Darius Milhaud for a symphony, Nikolai Lopatnikoff for a concertino, and Burrill Phillips for an overture. Dr. Koussevitzky, who organized the foundation in memory of his wife, Natalie, expressed the hope that some of the commissioned works would be ready for performance during the coming season.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmanino*
Toccata	Katchaturian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Philips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back

When excess stomach acid causes painful, suffocating gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known for such symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell-ans Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in a jiffy or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Trained from childhood, the Hopi Indians are marvelous runners.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Beach

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and free ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton beach district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer.

The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand at Hampton. Busses and taxis meet trains daily at Hampton station, bringing visitors directly to the beach.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitsky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitsky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Shipshape

at dawn, and each player has copy of the chart struck off especially for that day, so he will know where he is at.

Koussevitsky Plans Four Mozart Concerts

Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony and soloists in a Mozart Festival of four concerts to be presented at Tanglewood, near Leno, Mass., July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6. Soloists will be Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Nemenoff and Luboshutz, duo-pianists; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Robert Casadesus, pianist.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchaturian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

[157]

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phililps. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back

When excess stomach acid causes painful, sufferfrom gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known for symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell-ans Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in a jiffy or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Trained from childhood, the Hoosier Indians are marvelous runners.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Beach

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and free ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton beach district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer season. The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand at Hampton. Busses and taxis meet trains daily at Hampton station bringing visitors directly to the beach.

Stassen will visit Minnesota briefly on his way to Washington on official business.

vitzky Music [illegible] They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzy and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burril Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitsky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitsky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

Shipshape

His writings range plays ("A Yank at ("Admiral Tojo"), th foreign correspondent something he interes his existence has p
the role gene
where he is at

[illegible] N.Y.

SERGE KOUSS[illegible]AY,

conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a Mozart Festival on the orchestra's scenic estate at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, with two of the concerts to be broadcast over WSLS and the Blue Network.

These will be aired on July 29 and August 5, from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. Directing the music, Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now at his summer home in Lenox, will make his only between-season public appearance at the Festival, to be held in the auditorium at Tanglewood, which was built for the famous Berkshire Music Center.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchaturian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phililps. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back

When excess stomach acid causes painful, suffocating gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known for such symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell-ans Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in a jiffy, or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Bea

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and free ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton beach district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer.

The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand. Hampton. Busses and taxis meet trains daily at Hampton station bringing visitors directly to the beach.

Trained from childhood, the Hindians are marvelous runners.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burril Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

Shipshape

Another local boy to receive recent promotion is Jesse McCall, Jr., who has recently been given the rank of Lieut. Colonel. Col. McCall is a V. M. I. graduate and was practicing medicine in Norfolk when he interrupted his existence has [illegible] where he is at [illegible]

Mozart Program.

SATURDAY, at 7:30 p. m. on KXOK, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a broadcast from the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills. He has programmed Mozart's Symphony in A Major, Divertimento in B Flat Major and Symphony in C Major. Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, will sing arias from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." [illegible] playing the Concerto in E Flat Major for duo pianos and orchestra. The orchestra will play the Hafner symphony among other Mozart items.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchatourian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

INFORMATION OBSCURED

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phililps. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back
When excess stomach acid causes painful, sufo- ing gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usu prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell- Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort i jiffy or double your money back on return of bo to us. 25c at all druggists.

Trained from childhood, the H Indians are marvelous runners.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Bea

Thursday will be children's day Hampton beach, N. H., with a rade, clowns, entertainment and f ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton be district, is part of program of tertainment planned for the summ The Hampton beach chamber commerce has available a list rooms for vacationists who wish enjoy the sun, surf and sand Hampton. Busses and taxis meet trains daily at Hampton stati bringing visitors directly to the bea

Stassen will visit Minnesota bri on his way to Washington on offic business.

vitzky Music [illegible] They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzy and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When

Shipshape

[illegible] where he is at.

[illegible] the role [illegible]

[illegible] has [illegible] existence has [illegible]

[illegible] and was practicing medicine in [illegible] Col. McCall is a V. M. I. graduate [illegible] the rank of Lieut. Colonel.

[illegible] Jr., who has recently been given [illegible] command [illegible] promotion is "Jesse" Mae Call.

[illegible] told [illegible] when she introduced me at my l

[illegible] the anecdote which Kathleen N

In a letter to Noel Coward:

[illegible] that is the way it is going to b

Mass., the home of the Berkshire music festivals, will begin on Saturday evening with Dorothy Maynor as soloist in arias from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." In addition there will be symphonies and other Mozart works. Part of the Saturday night program will be broadcast over the Blue network in the regular Saturday night series. The second in the series of concerts will be on Sunday afternoon but will not be broadcast. Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo pianists, will be the soloists playing the Concerto in E Flat Major for duo pianos and orchestra. The orchestra will play the Hafner symphony among other Mozart items.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchatourian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

INFORMATION OBSCURED

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back

When excess stomach acid causes painful, suffocating gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known. Thus, No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in 5 minutes or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Trained from childhood, the Hoopa Indians are marvelous runners.

Children's Day Thursday At New Hampshire Beach

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and free ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton beach district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer season.

The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand at Hampton. Busses and taxis meet the daily train at Hampton station.

bringing visitors directly to the beach.

er

vitzky Music ... They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzy and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon, August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky ...

Shipshape

... where he is at.

The first of two Mozart Festival music programs to be broadcast on consecutive Saturdays from Tanglewood, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be heard at 8:30 p. m. next Saturday on WJZ. The orchestra will play the Symphony in A major, Divertimento in B-flat major and Symphony in C major, No. 34. Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will sing airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni."

... prano; Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, and Robert Casadesus, French pianist.

Tickets are available by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchatourian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatinkoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

INFORMATION OBSCURED

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky Composer Grants Awarded to 4

LENOX, July 22 (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzy hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 23 1944

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 23 1944

Four Composers Get Koussevitzky Music Awards

Lenox, Mass., July 22.—(AP.)—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from The Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performances by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a base viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 23 1944

New Yorkers who want to buy tickets for the Mozart Festival which Serge Koussevitzky will direct at Tanglewood beginning on July 29 can get them by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston. They can also be purchased at England Brothers in Pittsfield, Mass., the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington. Dates for the four programs in the festival are: Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30; Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3:30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Aug 6, at 3:30.

Born to make MUSIC

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Birthday anniversaries this week: Sergei Koussevitzky, July 26, 1874; Ernest Bloch, July 24, 1880; Ruggerio Ricci, July 24, 1920; Marcel Journet, July 25, 1868; Ernest Schelling, July 26, 1876; Vladimir de Pachmann, July 27, 1848; Harl McDonald, July 27, 1899.

KOUSSEVTZKY and good music —the phrase fits together like picnics and chiggers, steak and mushrooms or even Dem Bums and Brooklyn. Nor is the team something new and untried. The blood and bone of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festivals has been conducting for 39 years and before that attracted so much attention with the giant bass fiddle that he was known as one of the three outstanding virtuosi of the instrument during nearly 200 years.

S. Koussevitzky

It was no divine calling, no magic compulsion that caused the 14-year-old Russian to take up the double-bass. Practically an orphan, Sergei Koussevitzky in 1888 left the microscopic town of his birth in central Russia for Moscoe where he talked himself into the Philharmonic school. Since he had no money of his own he had to take what was left. The boy was offered a choice of study on the horn, the trombone or the double-bass. To him this was no choice and left only the big stringed instrument.

But from this beginning has grown a brilliant career, one which many another famous musician would give his eye-teeth to equal.

Through his role as double-bass soloist Koussevitzky met the woman who was to do more, perhaps, to put him into a custom-fitted niche in the hall of fame than his own genius. It was Natalya Ushkova who helped Koussevitzky's desire to be an orchestral conductor to become a reality.

Almost legendary is the story of the wedding gift which accompanied their marriage, for Mme. Koussevitzky came from a fabulously rich family. A symphony orchestra was placed at the disposal of the young man and two years later the entourage was to charm the province towns along the Volga with good music at popular prices.

In 1924 Koussevitzky was placed on the podium of the Boston Symphony where his musicianship and ability as a drill-master pummeled and coaxed the misshapen remnants back into the splendid symphony which had earned so much fame. He began in much the same manner that Rodzkinski employed when he took over the New York Philharmonic—firing the inefficient and hiring younger men who were willing to take orders as he gave them. The quality of the orchestra, which is termed by some the world's finest, testifies to his wisdom. His is a life contract.

New music has been welcomed with open arms by Koussevitzky throughout his years as a conductor. He has been a kind of musical propagandist for Scriabin, Stravinsky, Schonberg, Hindemith, Prkofieff, Honegger, Ravel, Albert Roussel and Florent Schmitt. And today he has instigated a system of reading auditions to which composers may submit manuscripts, to be examined and sight read by the orchestra and if they possess enough value, eventually performed before an audience.

When Mme Koussevitzky died a little over two years ago the conductor set up in her honor the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to subsidize contemporary composers of serious music. Saturday it was announced that grants from these funds have been awarded to Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Nikolai Lopatnikoff and Darius Milhaud.

157

Acid Indigestion
Relieved in 5 minutes or double your money back
When excess stomach acid causes painful, sufocating gas, sour stomach and heartburn, doctors usually prescribe the fastest-acting medicines known for symptomatic relief—medicines like those in Bell-ans Tablets. No laxative. Bell-ans brings comfort in a jiffy or double your money back on return of bottle to us. 25c at all druggists.

Children's Day Thursday
At New Hampshire Bea

Thursday will be children's day at Hampton beach, N. H., with a parade, clowns, entertainment and free ice cream for every child. The fair, sponsored by the Hampton beach district, is part of program of entertainment planned for the summer. The Hampton beach chamber of commerce has available a list of rooms for vacationists who wish to enjoy the sun, surf and sand at Hampton. Busses and taxis meet all trains daily at Hampton station bringing visitors directly to the beach. Trained from childhood, the Hindians are marvelous runners.

Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 23 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday At Tanglewood

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place next Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four programs to begin on Saturday evening, July 29, Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, August 5, and Sunday afternoon. August 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October. The festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium, seating 1,200, that the festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitzky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular festival concerts. The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitzky asked her to sing.

Pierre Luboshuts and Genia Nemonoff, the dua-pianists, and Robert Casadensus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Bros. in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1944

FOUR HONORED BY MEMORIAL MUSIC GRANTS

Koussevitzky Foundation Grew Out of Life-Long Interest

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One-Man Venture

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitsky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitsky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitsky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death, her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitsky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

JUL 23 1944

4 Composers Win Koussevitzky Music Awards

LENOX, Mass., July 22. (AP) — Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "Composer Grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

Shipshape
Where he is ar... The studi... 2,000 rolls ... artment. ... work devolvi... to accommodate the additiona... The lacquer room was enlarged ... MORE ROOM. ... installed. ... shop and additional equipment ... bedrooms, 2 baths, 2 stories, open fireplaces suitable for ... vate baths. Near ocean and inlet ... also boating, bathing, golf, ... movies. Moderate rates. Good food and ... Outstanding service. ... bus connections. Write for particulars. WATTS HILL, R.I.

Directly after ... day, July 26, Serge Kou... vitzky will step out of summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart festival at Tanglewood. This will be his only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season in October.

The festival will consist of four programs — Saturday evening, July 29; Sunday afternoon, July 30; Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. Soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists, and Robert Casadesus, French pianist.

Tickets are available by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 23 1944

Music

Opening Mozart Concert

Saturday to See Start of Series At 'Tanglewood'

DIRECTLY after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, on Wednesday, July 26, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra will change his summer slacks for more formal attire to rehearse for the opening concerts of Mozart festival at Tanglewood.

The festival will consist of four concerts, to be given on Saturday evening, July 29, and Sunday afternoon, July 30, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Mr. Koussevitzky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved by writing Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Edward French, pianist and co-director of the Morris Hummel Conservatory of Music, will give a recital in the auditorium of the College of St. Rose, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. The program is as follows:

Pastorale	Scarlatti
Impromptu, E Flat	Schubert
Melodie	Gluck-Sgambati
Toccata and Fugue, D Minor	Bach
Prelude in G sharp Minor	Rachmaninoff
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Toccata	Katchatourian
Jeux D'Eau	Ravel
Two Etudes	Chopin
A Flat Op. 25 No. 1
C-Sharp Minor, Op. 25 No. 7
Polonaise A Flat	Chopin

COMPOSER GRANTS (200)

Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevtzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the Music Foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present day composer to a hearing,

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
JUL 26 1944

Koussevitzky's 70th Birthday

By JOHN N. BURK

Serge Koussevitzky has been much feted on the completion of his twentieth season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and rightly so. He has in that stretch of years kept his musical energies and ambitions unabated; he has grown in artistic stature, and his orchestra has grown with him.

He has traversed prodigious territory, musically speaking, in his score of American years, and found fresh conceptual depths and beauties in the music of the past.

Today, July 26, Serge Koussevitzky reaches another milestone, his 70th birthday. And this calls for another accounting. At 70, Dr. Koussevitzky looks as fit and dapper as he did at 50, when he first landed on the American terra firma of a New York pier. Gray hairs are unessential; so are the relics of a picturesque Russian accent and the courteous Old World manners which linger in Serge Koussevitzky, the American citizen.

Decidedly a birthday toast should be added to the many toasts proposed on May 16 by a group of grateful American composers and 400 guests at a testimonial dinner in New York. These composers had plentiful cause for gratitude. Twenty years ago, Koussevitzky had found in America a handful of composers of an older generation, with distinguished abilities, but on the whole European in their musical speech. There proved to be some younger men; but they were neither played nor heeded. How different the situation in May of 1944! At the head table sat a round dozen of American composers truly to be reckoned with.

Of more than one of them it could be said that he has had from Koussevitzky not only his true introduction to the public by orchestrial performance, but consistent performances of ensuing works which have brought him inner development and outward renown. These include Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Roy Harris, Nicolai Berezowsky, Howard Hanson, Roger Sessions, Vladimir Dukelsky, and William Schuman.

An interviewer who made his way into Dr. Koussevitzky's study in the course of the 20th season extracted interesting comments from the conductor on just this situation. He is Cyrus W. Durgin of the Boston Globe.

"So much has happened in 20 years," said Dr. Koussevitzky to Mr. Durgin. "When I first came here, there was little new music, little American music played. Both the orchestra and I are proud of the enormous influence the Boston Symphony has had in the entire musical life of the country.

AMERICAN MUSIC

"American music can be said to be in its third generation. The first included such men as Edward MacDowell, George Chadwick and Arthur Foote. Between them and the next generation, Edward Burlingame Hill is a connecting link. The outstanding men of America's second generation are Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Roger Sessions and Roy Harris. Now we have a third, young generation led by William Schuman, David Diamond and Nicolai Berezowsky.

"Styles in American composition have changed enormously since I first came to Boston in 1924," continued Koussevitzky. "The technique has developed so that now men like Copland and Piston possess the highest, most universal technique of writing.

"I can find little emotion in modern music. The best of it sounds very well as music, is beautifully written. But try as I have, I can find little emotion in it. Perhaps other conductors can."

And he made this frank statement with the smiling simplicity and the honesty of a great artist with a vast knowledge and understanding of musical evolution.

When his birthday comes to pass, he will not be content with settling back and receiving felicitations. He will interrupt his summer's rest at his beautiful and idyllic country place in Lenox in the Berkshire Hills to open Tanglewood, necessarily dormant for the duration as far as concerts on a large scale are concerned, to give a festival in chamber proportions of the music of Mozart.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 23 1944

Dorothy Maynor Is Soloist At First Festival Concert

10th Anniversary of Berkshire Symphonic Program Will Be Celebrated With Four Mozart Concerts, First of Which Will Be Given Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, July 22—This 10th anniversary year of the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts is to be celebrated with a Mozart festival of four concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Tanglewood theater, Lenox, starting next Saturday night. Miss Dorothy Maynor, soprano, is to be the soloist. The theater will seat 1150 persons and the house has been nearly sold out for the series. Hotels and taverns will be filled to capacity in the Lenox-Stockbridge-Great Barrington area and Pittsfield expects the greatest rush so far this season.

Compliment Koussevitzky

Miss Olga Naumoff has issued cards for a tea at Saranak, Lenox, on Wednesday, in compliment to her uncle, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor for 20 years of the Boston Symphony orchestra who will be 70 years old on that day. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, is arriving at the Curtis hotel on Tuesday and a number of directors are to be there for the Mozart festival. It is reported they are giving a dinner at the hotel in honor of the distinguished conductor. Jerome D. Greene is chairman.

Princess Eugenia Ruspoli and her sister, Mrs Maria Teresa Berry of Castello di Nemi, Rome, are at the Curtis for a month and they are to be among the festival patrons.

Berkshire's initial symphonic concerts were held in August, 1934, and were open air events "under the moon" at the Dan R. Hanna farm, Stockbridge. A second festival was given there in 1935 and there were showers. In 1936 the festival took place under a tent on the Holmwood estate at Lenox of Mrs Margaret Emerson, the former Mrs Alfred G. Vanderbilt. Early in 1937 Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn (Rosamond Sturgis Dixey) of Concord and her aunt, the late Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, announced the gift of Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony orchestra and with the exception of last year concerts have been given there annually.

The famous Tanglewood shed which has a seating capacity of about 6000 was first used in 1938. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York city, who is at her summer home, The Dugway, Stockbridge, has been president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival association from the start. It has had a deficit only the first year and then it was $413.30, or $51.67 each for the underwriters. The late Henry Hadley had 65 men in his first orchestra at the Hanna farm and 85 the second year. Dr Koussevitzky has had over 100 at Tanglewood.

Despite the war, patrons of the coming Mozart festival will find that Tanglewood is undiminished in its scenic beauty. Supt Ward E. Gaston takes a personal interest in the upkeep of the famous gardens and wide sweeping lawns and their glory is undimmed. OPA has decreed no extra bus service, but it is only a mile walk to historic Tanglewood from Curtis hotel.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
JUL 26 1944

KOUSSEVITZKY 70 YEARS OLD TODAY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Maestro Not Thinking of Retiring

BY JOSEPH NOLAN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass., July 26—(UP)—Today was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 70th birthday but the energetic maestro of the Boston Symphony orchestra had too many things on his mind to think much about celebrating the occasion.

Lenox's most famous squire was busy preparing for the Berkshire music festival at which he will direct his musicians in a Mozart concert Saturday and Sunday. He was thinking, too, about his pet project for subsidizing promising young composers. But he wasn't thinking at all about retiring from the symphony post he has held for the past 20 years.

"Why should I retire when there is so much to work for in music now?" the Russian-born conductor wanted to know.

Highlight of his birthday was a visit from the Lenox selectmen who presented him with a resolution commending him as "a gentleman who by his many acts of kindness, by his friendly neighborliness as well as by his ability and foresight in establishing the Berkshire music center, has earned the deep respect and sincere gratitude of his fellow townsmen."

A consistent champion of modern music, whose salary once was quoted unofficially as $100,000 annualy, Koussevitzky is planning to sponsor a project whereby ambitious and talented composers would be given six months or a year free to write. If the composition were worthwhile, Koussevitzky himself would see that it was played and royalties would all be turned over to the composer.

"The young musicians of today are working under certain handicaps, chief among which is lack of money," he remarked. "They have to be too much concerned with the commercial aspects of their work. Under such conditions, it is difficult—if not impossible—to turn out fine music."

Koussevitzky himself has known complete poverty as well as great wealth. He delights in recalling that he was born "of poor but musical parents," yet his father-in-law was one of Russia's wealthiest men. He it was who backed Koussevitzky in his first symphony orchestra.

When he became head of the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1924, Beacon Hill Brahmans intepreted his flair for showmanship as unnecessarily theatrical, but they soon acknowledged that his repertoire was more varied than that of any other conductor in the United States. At first, Koussevitzky was forced to import many of his key performers from Europe. Such is no longer the case.

"We don't have to search Europe for talented musicians," he said. "The best players are here in America and they are here in abundance. They are young and responsive to suggestion and coaching From this kind of material—produced only in America—can you make the best orchestras for the future."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 26 1944

Mozart Festival Tickets Available

Canvas Canopy to Protect Listeners at Tanglewood —Two Saturday Night, Two Sunday Afternoon Concerts Listed.

Admission tickets may be obtained at the grounds at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, for the Mozart Festival that Serge Koussevitzky will conduct in observance of his 70th birthday anniversary July 29, and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6. A canvas canopy will protect listeners outside the opera-concert hall from sun and rain. Benches will be placed along the sides of the auditorium, near the open doors and in the rear.

Because the Saturday concerts will be broadcast they will start promptly at 8.30. The Sunday concerts will begin at 3.30.

The program for Saturday evening will include Mozart's Symphonies in A Major and C Major, Divertimento in B-flat Major, Aria from "Il Re Pastore," with violin obligato by Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra, whose principals and other members will form the 35-piece orchestra for the Festival. Recitatives by Dorothy Maynor, soprano, with piano obligato by Bernard Dighera.

The Sunday program will include Symphonies in D Major and G Minor, Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos and Orchestra, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, soloists, and Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito."

A few seats remain for the concerts, for sale at England Brothers Pittsfield; the Curtis hotel, Lenox; the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge; and the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington. Admission tickets for the grounds of the estate, which is the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be sold at the box office beginning at noon on the days of the concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 28 1944

Preparations Completed for Mozart Festival, Tanglewood

Rehearsals Prove Overflow Guests Will Get Full Benefit of Program—Dorothy Maynor Arrives at Wendell-Sheraton Today

In the opera-concert hall of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted yesterday from 4 to 7 the first of the final rehearsals for the Mozart Festival.

The apparatus for broadcasting the Saturday night concerts over the Blue Network of NBC had been set up and was being tested by announcer and engineer. An improvised booth has been arranged offstage for control room from which announcements will be made and program notes read.

Many To Sit in Open

Benches to seat a couple of hundred admission ticket holders had been placed in the shade of the garden shrubbery, on the east side of the auditorium, and under a canvas canopy at the back and north of the hall. Those fortunate and early enough to secure seats opposite the open doors will see the orchestra and soloists as well as hear them.

Because of the brilliant acoustical properties of the hall the music will be heard within a radius of more than 100 feet from the building almost as clearly as from the seats within, observers state. Tickets for admission to the grounds will be on sale at the box office from noon of the days of the concerts.

Declaring that they were happy to be back at Tanglewood, members of the orchestra took their seats on the extended platform, built over the pit used for the opera orchestras. The stage proper will seat more than 200, who will hear the concerts from the unique position of facing the conductor instead of the players. Rehearsals, closed to the public, will be held today and tomorrow.

Arrives Today

Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who will be heard tomorrow night in the opening concert, will arrive at the Wendell Sheraton Hotel this afternoon. She will participate in rehearsals tomorrow morning.

The 32 members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, made up of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their colleagues, and a half dozen other string players, are staying in Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield, a few of them for the summer. Nearly all will remain for the week between the concerts, though a few will return to Boston for the Esplanade concerts on the Charles River next week.

Jerome D. Greene, Boston orchestra president, and Mrs. Greene, will arrive today from Peterboro, N. H., where they are spending the summer. Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Judge J. J. Kaplan and Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft, orchestra trustees, are expected today and tomorrow.

Dorothy Maynor

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 29 1944

Radio Program Notes:

Koussevitzky To Conduct Mozart Works

By Pericles Alexander.

With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the Boston Symphony Orchestra (KGKO, 7:30 p.m.), now in the midst of its Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., Saturday will play an all-Mozart program. Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will be heard with the symphony orchestra in arias from The Magic Flute and Don Giovanni. The orchestra will play Mozart's Symphony in A Major (K. 201), his Divertimento in B-Flat Major (K. 287), and his Symphony in C Major, No. 34 (K. 338).

[158]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 26 1944

Koussevitzky Honored by Town of Lenox

Resolution Presented on 70th Birthday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reads the resolution presented by Lenox this morning. With him are J. Joseph McCabe, chairman of the Lenox Selectmen, who made the presentation, and Lester Roberts of Lenox.

For the first time the town of Lenox has officially recognized the birthday of one of its citizens.

At 10.30 this morning J. Joseph McCabe, chairman of the selectmen, accompanied by Lester Roberts, presented Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a box of flowers that contained a resolution adopted on July 13 by Mr. McCabe, John J. Shalley and Tremaine Parsons, selectmen, and signed by Ann T. Kelly, town clerk.

The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, in the year 1940, there came to the village of Lenox, as a summer resident, a gentleman of international repute as a symphonic conductor, and

Whereas, this gentleman by his many acts of kindness, by his friendly neighborliness as well as by his ability and foresight in establishing the Berkshire Music Center, has earned the deep respect and sincere gratitude of his fellow townfolk, and

Whereas, this distinguished citizen is, on the 26th day of July, 1944, to observe his 70th birthday, therefore

Be it resolved, that the citizens of the town of Lenox extend to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky their sincere good wishes on this happy occasion.

They hope that this day of celebration may be full of joy and happiness, and that he may continue to dwell in our midst for many years to come.

Presentation at Serenak

The presentation was made at Serenak, the conductor's summer home overlooking Stockbridge Bowl and Tanglewood.

Acknowledging the gift he said "I am very happy to be a citizen of Lenox."

In a birthday interview Dr. Koussevitzky urged that an international music festival be held in connection with the next world peace conference. It has long been his contention that "music can save the world." He believes that its harmonizing influence would assist the new peace conference to avoid the bickering of Versailles.

"If our nation should send its greatest singers, players and a leading symphony orchestra to the peace conference," he suggests, "and if other nations would do likewise, we would have an international music event of the highest spiritual value and one that would give the peace conference delegates the rest, peace and joy of the finest entertainment. It would inspire and facilitate their work." There would be no difficulty getting the artists, he said.

"Musicians always are the best ambassadors between countries, and all invited would eagerly attend and perform because they would consider it a mission to be done for world peace." He added that there is every reason to believe that the composers of the world would be fired to create new works for the event, perhaps some that would be a lasting inspiration to humanity.

"I feel sure," he said, "that if this great music festival were to be held at the peace conference the trustees of the orchestra and the people of Boston would realize that we are doing a service for America and would be glad to allow us to accept."

Tea This Afternoon

Spending the day quietly at his home, in preparation for the Mozart Festival that he will conduct at Tanglewood on the coming two week ends in observance of his birthday, Dr. Koussevitzky is planning no celebration except to be at home to his friends this afternoon from 5 to 7. Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz, who as the two-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will be the soloists for the concerto that will be the feature of Sunday's concert, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, arrived this morning from Bar Harbor, Me. Mr. Luboshutz played with Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra on its tour on the Volga in Russia.

Mrs. Edward Thaw of Boston and Dublin, N. H., and Mrs. Chester Humphrey of Boston are house guests.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 27 1944

Festival to Permit Grounds Admission

Lenox, Mass.—Although a few seats remain, the management of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood announced today that grounds admission would be sold.

The four concerts, on July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6, will be presented in honor of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who was 70 on July 26.

The Saturday program will include Mozart's Symphonies in A Major and C Major, Divertimento in B-flat Major, Aria from "Il Re Pastore" with violin obbligato by Richard Burgin, recitatives by Dorothy Maynor, soprano, with piano obbligato by Bernard Zighera

The Sunday program will include symphonies in D Major and G Major, concerto in E-flat Major for two pianos and orchestra, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, soloists, and overture to "La Clemenza di Tito."

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

JUL 28 1944

Tanglewood Festival to Be Heard Over KGO

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present the first of two broadcasts of the Mozart Festival from Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Mountains, over KGO and the Blue Network in the regular time of 5:30 p.m. tomorow.

In his only public appearance between seasons, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Orchestra in Mozart's "Symphony in A Major" and "Divertimento in B-flat Major." Dorothy Maybor, distinguished American soprano, will be heard in airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." To conclude the program the orchestra will perform the "Symphony in C Major, No. 34."

The two broadcasts from Tanglewood, the estate owned by the Boston Symphony, will be the only broadcasts this year. Meanwhile, the time period will be filled with the popular Esplanade outdoor concerts under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The Esplanade concerts, broadcast from the bank of the Charles River, are one of Boston's great institutions, and draw capacity crowds. They will continue to be heard at 5:30 p.m. over KGO until the symphony season resumes in October.

[159]

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1944

Koussevitzky Is Busy At Lenox On 70th Birthday

LENOX, (U.P.)—Today was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 70th birthday but the energetic maestro of the Boston Symphony orchestra had too many things on his mind to think much about celebrating the occasion.

Lenox's most famous squire was busy preparing for the Berkshire Music Festival at which he will direct his musicians in a Mozart concert Saturday and Sunday. He was thinking, too, about his pet project for subsidizing promising young composers. But he wasn't thinking at all about retiring from the symphony post he has held for the past 20 years.

"Why should I retire when there is so much to work for in music now?" the Russian-born conductor wanted to know.

Highlight of his birthday was a visit from the Lenox selectmen who presented him with a resolution commending him as "a gentleman who by his many acts of kindness, by his friendly neighborliness as well as by his ability and foresight in establishing the Berkshire music center, has earned the deep respect and sincere gratitude of his fellow townsmen."

A consistent champion of modern music, whose salary once was quoted unofficially as $100,000 annually, Koussevitzky is planning to sponsor a project whereby ambitious and talented composers would be given six months or a year free to write. If the composition were worthwhile, Koussevitzky himself would see that it was played and royalties would all be turned over to the composer.

"The young musicians of today are working under certain handicaps, chief among which is lack of money," he remarked. "They have to be too much concerned with the commercial aspects of their work. Under such conditions, it is difficult—if not impossible—to turn out fine music."

Koussevitzky himself has known complete poverty as well as great wealth. He delights in recalling that he was born "of poor but musical parents," yet his father-in-law was one of Russia's wealthiest men. He it was who backed Koussevitzky in his first symphony orchestra.

When he became head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924, Beacon Hill Brahmans interpreted his flair for showmanship as unnecessarily theatrical, but they soon acknowledged that his repertoire was more varied than that of any other conductor in the United States. At first, Koussevitzky was forced to import many of his key performers from Europe. Such is no longer the case.

"We don't have to search Europe for talented musicians," he said. "The best players are here in America and they are here in abundance. They are young and responsive to suggestion and coaching. From this kind of material—produced only in America—can you make the best orchestras for the future."

LENOX, (AP)—To insure the success of the next world peace conference, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in a birthday interview, described an international music festival to be held with it.

That "music can save the world," long has been the philosophy of the famed conductor.

That its harmonizing influence would assist the new peace conference to avoid the bickering of Versailles, he is equally certain.

This is his suggestion:

"If our nation should send its greatest singers, players and a leading symphony orchestra to th peace conference—and if other nations would do likewise—we would have an international music event of the highest spiritual value and one that would give the peace confrence delegats the rest, peace and joy of the finest entertailnmnt. It would inspire and facilitate their work."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 27 1944

Koussevitzky to Lead Berkshire Programs

Serge Koussevitzky will open the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., in the Berkshires next Saturday evening. A small orchestra, made up of members of the Boston Symphony, will play Mozart symphones and the Divertimento, K. 287. Dorothy Maynor will be heard in arias. Sunday afternoon's program lists the Concerto in E flat for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. The third program will take place Saturday, August 6, and the final one on the following Sunday. The festival is being held in observance of Mr. Koussevitzky's seventieth birthday.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

JUL 28 1944

Great Music Be He[illegible]d During Summer Despite War Time Restrictions That Bring Changes In Schedules And Plans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will present a Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., the orchestra's "summer home". Four concerts, occupying two weekends will be given; two of these, the Saturday night concerts, July 29, and August 5, will be heard via the Blue network at 8:30 P. M. Tanglewood is a beautiful estate in the Berkshires, lying between Lenox and Stockbridge. Its name is familiar to readers of Hawthorne for the Tanglewood Tales which were written there. The estate has been given to the Boston Symphony which has established a school for orchestra students, conductors, composers, and other students in music. Highlights of the school were the concerts by the Symphony. Due to travel restrictions the school was discontinued last year but the Symphony is returning this year for the Festival.

Several of the greatest of the large Mozart works will be played including the famous last three symphonies, the Haffner Symphony, the Two-Piano Concerto in E flat, the Violin Concerto in D, and the Coronation piano concerto. Several shorter works will be heard. These include the "A Little Night Music" and the little symphony in G minor; these two works have been presented by the Bach Choir Festival of Greenville during the past two seasons.

The broadcast portion of this Saturday's program includes the Symphony in A Major, k. 201, written in 1774; Mozart was 18 at that time and was spending four years in Salzburg working hard at his art and preparing for his last grand tour. The second work is a Divertimento for Strings with two horns, 1777. Mozart wrote several serenades and divertiments for orchestra; this one is among the finest. The soloist for the evening is the celebrated negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor. Dr. Koussevitsky discovered her voice some years ago. She will sing several arias which are to be announced.

We of the vast radio audience of the United States are deeply indebted to the Boston Symphony for such a festival. A few musicians used to be able to go to Salzburg in years past to hear the music of Mozart. Today we can all sit before our radios and hear some of the greatest music ever conceived by a man, a man whose genius was crystalized in his very name, Amadeus, "God-lover," or "beloved of God."—H. N. L.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 26 1944

Koussevitzky Honored by Town of Lenox

Resolution Presented on 70th Birthday

For the first time the town of Lenox has officially recognized the birthday of one of its citizens.

At 10.30 this morning J. Joseph McCabe, chairman of the selectmen, accompanied by Lester Roberts, presented Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a box of flowers that contained a resolution adopted on July 13 by Mr. McCabe, John J. Shalley and Tremaine Parsons, selectmen, and signed by Ann T. Kelly, town clerk.

The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, in the year 1940, there came to the village of Lenox, as a summer resident, a gentleman of international repute as a symphonic conductor, and

Whereas, this gentleman by his many acts of kindness, by his friendly neighborliness as well as by his ability and foresight in establishing the Berkshire Music Center, has earned the deep respect and sincere gratitude of his fellow townfolk, and

Whereas, this distinguished citizen is, on the 26th day of July, 1944, to observe his 70th birthday, therefore

Be it resolved, that the citizens of the town of Lenox extend to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky their sincere good wishes on this happy occasion.

They hope that this, day of celebration may be full of joy and happiness, and that he may continue to dwell in our midst for many years to come.

Presentation at Serenak

The presentation was made at Serenak, the conductor's summer home overlooking Stockbridge Bowl and Tanglewood.

Acknowledging the gift he said, "I am very happy to be a citizen of Lenox."

In a birthday interview Dr. Koussevitzky urged that an international music festival be held in connection with the next world peace conference. It has long been his contention that "music can save the world." He believes that its harmonizing influence would assist the new peace conference to avoid the bickering of Versailles.

"If our nation should send its greatest singers, players and a leading symphony orchestra to the peace conference," he suggests, "and if other nations would do likewise, we would have an international music event of the highest spiritual value and one that would give the peace conference delegates the rest, peace and joy of the finest entertainment. It would inspire and facilitate their work." There would be no difficulty getting the artists, he said.

"Musicians always are the best ambassadors between countries, and all invited would eagerly attend and perform because they would consider it a mission to be done for world peace." He added that there is every reason to believe that the composers of the world would be fired to create new works for the event, perhaps some that would be a lasting inspiration to humanity.

"I feel sure," he said, "that if this great music festival were to be held at the peace conference the trustees of the orchestra and the people of Boston would realize that we are doing a service for America and would be glad to allow us to accept."

Tea This Afternoon

Spending the day quietly at his home, in preparation for the Mozart Festival that he will conduct at Tanglewood on the coming two week ends in observance of his birthday, Dr. Koussevitzky is planning no celebration except to be at home to his friends this afternoon from 5 to 7. Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz, who as the two-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff will be the soloists for the concerto that will be the feature of Sunday's concert, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, arrived this morning from Bar Harbor, Me. Mr. Luboshutz played with Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra on its tour on the Volga in Russia.

Mrs. Edward Thaw of Boston and Dublin, N. H., and Mrs. Chester Humphrey of Boston are house guests.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reads [illegible] presented by Lenox this morning. With him are J. Joseph McCabe, chairman of the Lenox Selectmen, who made the presentation, and Lester Roberts of Lenox.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 27 1944

Festival to Permit Grounds Admission

Lenox, Mass.—Although a few seats remain, the management of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood announced today that grounds admission would be sold.

The four concerts, on July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6, will be presented in honor of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who was 70 on July 26.

The Saturday program will include Mozart's Symphonies in A Major and C Major, Divertimento in B-flat Major, Aria from "Il Re Pastore" with violin obbligato by Richard Burgin, recitatives by Dorothy Maynor, soprano, with piano obbligato by Bernard Zighera

The Sunday program will include symphonies in D Major and G Major, concerto in E-flat Major for two pianos and orchestra, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, soloists, and overture to "La Clemenza di Tito."

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

JUL 28 1944

Tanglewood Festival to Be Heard Over KGO

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present the first of two broadcasts of the Mozart Festival from Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Mountains, over KGO and the Blue Network in the regular time of 5:30 p.m. tomorow.

In his only public appearance between seasons, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Orchestra in Mozart's "Symphony in A Major" and "Divertimento in B-flat Major." Dorothy Maybor, distinguished American soprano, will be heard in airs from "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." To conclude the program the orchestra will perform the "Symphony in C Major, No. 34."

The two broadcasts from Tanglewood, the estate owned by the Boston Symphony, will be the only broadcasts this year. Meanwhile, the time period will be filled with the popular Esplanade outdoor concerts under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The Esplanade concerts, broadcast from the bank of the Charles River, are one of Boston's great institutions, and draw capacity crowds. They will continue to be heard at 5:30 p.m. over KGO until the symphony season resumes in October.

[159]

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1944

Koussevitzky Is Busy At Lenox On 70th Birthday

LENOX, (U.P.)—Today was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 70th birthday but the energetic maestro of the Boston Symphony orchestra had too many things on his mind to think much about celebrating the occasion.

Lenox's most famous squire was busy preparing for the Berkshire Music Festival at which he will direct his musicians in a Mozart concert Saturday and Sunday. He was thinking, too, about his pet project for subsidizing promising young composers. But he wasn't thinking at all about retiring from the symphony post he has held for the past 20 years.

"Why should I retire when there is so much to work for in music now?" the Russian-born conductor wanted to know.

Highlight of his birthday was a visit from the Lenox selectmen who presented him with a resolution commending him as "a gentleman who by his many acts of kindness, by his friendly neighborliness as well as by his ability and foresight in establishing the Berkshire music center, has earned the deep respect and sincere gratitude of his fellow townsmen."

A consistent champion of modern music, whose salary once was quoted unofficially as $100,000 annually, Koussevitzky is planning to sponsor a project whereby ambitious and talented composers would be given six months or a year free to write. If the composition were worthwhile, Koussevitzky himself would see that it was played and royalties would all be turned over to the composer.

"The young musicians of today are working under certain handicaps, chief among which is lack of money," he remarked. "They have to be too much concerned with the commercial aspects of their work. Under such conditions, it is difficult—if not impossible—to turn out fine music."

Koussevitzky himself has known complete poverty as well as great wealth. He delights in recalling that he was born "of poor but musical parents," yet his father-in-law was one of Russia's wealthiest men. He it was who backed Koussevitzky in his first symphony orchestra.

When he became head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924, Beacon Hill Brahmans interpreted his flair for showmanship as unnecessarily theatrical, but they soon acknowledged that his repertoire was more varied than that of any other conductor in the United States. At first, Koussevitzky was forced to import many of his key performers from Europe. Such is no longer the case.

"We don't have to search Europe for talented musicians," he said. "The best players are here in America and they are here in abundance. They are young and responsive to suggestion and coaching. From this kind of material—produced only in America—can you make the best orchestras for the future."

LENOX, (AP)—To insure the success of the next world peace conference, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in a birthday interview, described an international music festival to be held with it.

That "music can save the world," long has been the philosophy of the famed conductor.

That its harmonizing influence would assist the new peace conference to avoid the bickering of Versailles, he is equally certain.

This is his suggestion:

"If our nation should send its greatest singers, players and a leading symphony orchestra to th peace conference—and if other nations would do likewise—we would have an international music event of the highest spiritual value and one that would give the peace confrence delegats the rest, peace and joy of the finest entertailnmnt. It would inspire and facilitate their work."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 27 1944

Koussevitzky to Lead Berkshire Programs

Serge Koussevitzky will open the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., in the Berkshires next Saturday evening. A small orchestra, made up of members of the Boston Symphony, will play Mozart symphones and the Divertimento, K. 287. Dorothy Maynor will be heard in arias. Sunday afternoon's program lists the Concerto in E flat for two pianos, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. The third program will take place Saturday, August 6, and the final one on the following Sunday. The festival is being held in observance of Mr. Koussevitzky's seventieth birthday.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

JUL 28 1944

Great Music Be He[illegible]d During Summer Despite War Time Restrictions That Bring Changes In Schedules And Plans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will present a Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., the orchestra's "summer home". Four concerts, occupying two weekends will be given; two of these, the Saturday night concerts, July 29, and August 5, will be heard via the Blue network at 8:30 P. M. Tanglewood is a beautiful estate in the Berkshires, lying between Lenox and Stockbridge. Its name is familiar to readers of Hawthorne for the Tanglewood Tales which were written there. The estate has been given to the Boston Symphony which has established a school for orchestra students, conductors, composers, and other students in music. Highlights of the school were the concerts by the Symphony. Due to travel restrictions the school was discontinued last year but the Symphony is returning this year for the Festival.

Several of the greatest of the large Mozart works will be played including the famous last three symphonies, the Haffner Symphony, the Two-Piano Concerto in E flat, the Violin Concerto in D, and the Coronation piano concerto. Several shorter works will be heard. These include the "A Little Night Music" and the little symphony in G minor; these two works have been presented by the Bach Choir Festival of Greenville during the past two seasons.

The broadcast portion of this Saturday's program includes the Symphony in A Major, k. 201, written in 1774; Mozart was 18 at that time and was spending four years in Salzburg working hard at his art and preparing for his last grand tour. The second work is a Divertimento for Strings with two horns, 1777. Mozart wrote several serenades and divertiments for orchestra; this one is among the finest. The soloist for the evening is the celebrated negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor. Dr. Koussevitsky discovered her voice some years ago. She will sing several arias which are to be announced.

We of the vast radio audience of the United States are deeply indebted to the Boston Symphony for such a festival. A few musicians used to be able to go to Salzburg in years past to hear the music of Mozart. Today we can all sit before our radios and hear some of the greatest music ever conceived by a man, a man whose genius was crystalized in his very name, Amadeus, "God-lover," or "beloved of God."—H. N. L.

JUL 26 1944 Berks, Pittsfield, Mass. Eagle

Today at his summer home in Lenox Serge Koussevitzky is receiving congratulatory greetings from many friends, far and near, on the occasion of his 70th birthday. The messages and felicitations are not in the nature of appreciation and gratitude for a task accomplished, but rather the recognition and approval of a career now progressing under full sail.

His position in American music is unique and in its attainment it has been his personal vision, courage, conviction and determination that have carried him through. His career prior to his arrival in Boston just 20 years ago to take the leadership of the Boston orchestra is pretty generally known: The early struggles to obtain admission and instruction in the conservatories of his native Russia; the trips down the Volga on a chartered steamer to bring orchestral music to communities which never before had seen or heard such a group; the apprenticeship in conducting in various European capitals; the Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris; and then, the grand chance, the most-prized invitation of all among the orchestral posts.

Koussevitzky came to Boston at the age of 50. The orchestra, founded by Major Higginson, had always been a crack organization. The Karl Muck incident during World War I brought on a few years of scattered responsibility which quickly became apparent in the orchestra's work. It was imperative that someone should be given control who would bring the ensemble back to its former prestige. The choice was the man who had been making such conspicuous success in Paris.

The Boston orchestra today needs no encomium for Berkshire music-lovers. We happen to be extremely fortunate to know at first hand what the musical world at large esteems as the world's peerless orchestra. Its reputation is inextricably intertwined during the past score years with that of its conductor, for its name is synonymous not only with the degree of its performances of rare virtuosity but with its encouragement and championing of American composers.

Koussevitzky has the precious faculty of conveying through the instruments of his men in the orchestra the highly sensitive effects and the remarkable sense of balance and symmetry which his innermost musical instincts guide him to express. He has made his orchestra men the most malleable material he could desire; the distinction of his musical taste is as reliable as it is elegant and aristocratic; his detection of talent and merit in composers and compositions is sure and relentless.

Of all the facets of his distinguished career none excels in lasting value the stimulation he has kindled in scores of aspiring young composers and musicians. The record of the Tanglewood concerts and of the school at our doorstep in its few short years is evidence and sample of his activities throughout the decades of his American residence. His plans for the current summer and for the Boston season, the awards of the Koussevitzky Foundation for the coming year, are all segments of the pattern of his life and his aims. His Berkshire neighbors are certainly among those most aware of his measure in the musical world.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. GAZETTE

JUL 26 1944

Today Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky is celebrating the fact that 70 years ago he was born at Tver in Rusia. In a recent interview with Olin Downs, Mr. Koussevitzky told of some of his interesting experiences.

'I've known complete poverty and great wealth; much discomfort and all conveniences, and I tell you they make little difference.' In order to gain a scholarship at the M w Conservatoire he studied the double bass which was needed in the orchestra. He became leading double bass at the Imperial opera in Moscow and one of the three greatest double bass players that the world has known.

He started conducting by working with the orchestra of the Berlin Hoch Schule and attending rehearsals of the noted conductors—Nikisch, Weingartner, Muck and Richard Straus.

He organized trips with full orchestra and world famous soloists on chartered steamers which made the trip down the Volga. He became director of State Symphony orchestras and director of the Grand Opera at Moscow. He organized the "Concerts Koussevitzky" in Paris.

For the last 20 years Koussevitzky has conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra. Of conducting he says—"Conducting requires a maximum of thinking, concentration and control, amanating principally from the eyes and from the inner self and a minimum of movement, which bring the greatest results from the orchestra. If you are not the master of the situation you will move a great deal and the orchestra will do less."

Koussevitzky says that it is no longer necessary to go to Europe for the best players—"The best players are here, and in abundance."

Koussevitzky has done much to better the position of native composers both in this country and in Russia. Back in 1909, with his wife Natalia Konstaninovna Koussevitzky, he founded the Russian Music Publishing Co., whose profits went to composers. This company published works by such composers as Scriabin, Prokofieff, Stravinsky and Tanieff besides many others less well known. When the critical board of his publishing company rejected composers in whom he had faith, Koussevitzky bought the Gutheil music house and had their works published there.

In this country Koussevitzky has done more for native composers than any other person. Koussevitzky's music center in the Berkshires was founded for the express purpose of training young musicians, especially conductors. It is at this music center that Koussevitzky and the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra are presenting the Mozart festival this Saturday and Sunday and the Saturday and Sunday of Aug. 5, and 6th. The festival is part of the celebration of Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday. The concerts are being held in the Opera Concert hall and start at 8:30 on Saturdays and 3:30 on Sundays. People who are driving have been asked to share their cars with as many others as possible. Tanglewood is between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. on route 183.

The National Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting system and the Blue network have made a new contract with the Radio Writers guild, which is a branch of the Authors League of America. The three chains have put into writing their intention to give credit on the air to authors whenever their work is of such excellence or originality to justify it. According to Peter Lyon who is the New York vice president of the guild, the new contract provides minimum salaries for writers for the first time. The minimum wage provision, however, has not been approved as yet by the war labor board.

DAVENPORT, IOWA DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUL 30 1944

THE FINAL TWO

. . . concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will be given on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Ruth Posselt, violinist will be soloist in the first concert which will be broadcast in the usual Boston Symphony hour over the Blue network. She will play the Concerto for violin and orchestra in D Major. Robert Casadesus, pianist, will be the soloist at the Sunday afternoon concert which will not be broadcast. He will play the "Coronation" concerto, in D Major, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusick" and the serenade in C Minor for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons will be other features of the Sunday program.

Concerts at Tanglewood

Although wartime transportation difficulties have forced suspension of the Berkshire Summer Music Festival, the Boston Symphony has announced it will play a four-concert Mozart series at Tanglewood during July and August.

Those concerts will help keep alive the spirit and tradition of the Berkshire Festival, which in a few years became one of the country's notable institutions in the field of musical enjoyment and education. War conditions compelled curtailment of the Worcester Music Festival, too, in 1942 and 1943, but next October, with Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra and a fine assembly of soloists, the Worcester Festival will be back on full schedule, taking its rightful place in America's music calendar. The Berkshire Festival, with the Boston Symphony, likewise should be able to look forward to a resumption of its regular schedule before long, perhaps in the Summer of 1945.

PATERSON, N. J. CALL

JUL 29 1944

The Music Box For Music Lovers

Conducted by PROFESSOR GEORGE KELLER

Joussevitzky Is Seventy

The greatly admired and eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky celebrated two anniversaries this year; one was his seventieth birthday on July 26, the other the commemoration of his being conductor of the Boston Symphony for the past 20 years. When America invited this Russian master to her shores, it was truly a splendid idea, for Mr. Koussevitzky certainly maintained the musical standards of Boston and its symphony orchestra. The twin celebration, therefore, will cause some heartening ovations staged in honor of this splendid artist and man, who has deserved them well.

Mr. Koussevitzky was born July 26, 1874 in Tver, Russia. His father, a musician, was averse to his son's desire to follow a musical profession. Young Koussevitzky, however, did not change his mind and left home to enroll at the conservatory in Moscow. Without sufficient financial support, he was more or less left to the mercy of the director of the conservatory, who finally accepted him under the condition that he study the double-bass. This instrument naturally never was considered a very exciting means with which to shine as a soloist; it was the last of all instruments considered by ambitious students. Koussevitzky, nevertheless, was a very attentive and obedient scholar and learned amazingly fast; in fact, he made so great a success of his studies that he became one of the foremost soloists on the double-bass. Soon the professorship at the conservatory, and the position as first double-bass player in the orchestra were given to him. His strong desire for conducting persuaded him, despite his great success as bass-player, to leave his posts and go to Germany, where in Berlin, he studied at the Hoch Schule under the celebrated conductor Arthur Nickisch. Furthermore, he made the acquaintances of the brilliant reign of other conductors such as Mottle, Weingartner, Muck, Schuch, and Richard Strauss, the greatest conductors of their era. Then he returned to his native Russia, where he conducted the State Symphony and the Moscow Grand Opera. His astonishing success was balked by political difficulties which began to sweep Russia, and he was forced, like many of his class, to flee Moscow and seek refuge in Paris, which had become the refuge of Russian aristocrats and artists. Koussevitzky thus had no difficulties in displaying his talents. During his three years' stay in Paris, he gave some of his memorable superb performances as a conductor.

Since 1924, Koussevitzky has been in America and has proved many times to his countless admirers and friends how great he is as an artist and man. His unselfishness, his courage, and his readiness to help, have been unlimited. His sympathy towards struggling young talents persuaded him to arrange reading rehearsals of orchestra scores composed by unknown musicians. Always he was interested in works of contemporaries which made him a publisher also. He helped composers as prominent now as Scriabin, Stravinsky, Tanieff, Copland, George Schuman, and many others. The foundation of the Koussevitzky Music Center in the Berkshires, has given feasts to music lovers from many States. Music festivals and popular concerts arranged by him, gave the best in music to those with limited means

Therefore it should be a pleasure to join in honoring the man and praising the master, who has given so much to our country men, and who has uplifted the reputation of the Boston Symphony to such an extant that America may proudly hail it as one of the most finished and greatest orchestra bodies in the world. Even though he may be seventy, he still is the untiring pioneer and is guiding the endless stream of activities in a manner which gives hope that the celebrated conductor may be with us for many more years to come.

PITTSFIELD, MASS. BERKSHIRE EAGLE

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has issued invitations for tea from 5 to 7 Wednesday at Seranak, his home in Lenox, in celebration of his 70th birthday. The public celebration will be the Mozart Festival of four concerts that he will conduct at Tanglewood July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6.

HANNIBAL, MO. COURIER-POST & JOURNAL

JUL 29 1944

Serge Koussevitsky

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a Mozart festival on the orchestra's scenic estate at TANGLEWOOD in the Berkshires, for tonight's broadcast concert over KHMO-Blue at 7:30. Dorothy Maynor, distinguished soprano, will be the guest soloist. The program will include entirely Mozart compositions, including the following:

"Symphony in A Major"
"Divertimento In C Major, No. 34"
Airs From "Don Giovanni"
"The Magic Flute"

[160]

Springfield Republican,

July 30, 1944

Dorothy Maynor Shows Quality In Her Numbers

The Mozart festival directed by Serge Koussevitzky with the assistance of the principals and other members of the Boston Symphony orchestra opened at Tanglewood last night. The concert was held in the smaller auditorium which was built several years ago for opera performances.

Well proportioned and seating about 1200 the hall is admirably suited for music of an intimate nature.

After a full throated rendition of our national anthem Dr Koussevitzky led his men in a superlatively fine performance of Mozart's dignified and stately "Symphony in A major," No. 29 in four short movements, which was followed by the major offering of the evening the "Divertimento" in B-flat, for strings and two horns. The lovely work which is surely Mozart at his best is often played as a work for solo violin with string accompaniment, but last night it was played by an ensemble. Passages, difficult enough as a solo cadenza, were played with an amazing clarity and precision by the eight first violins. The second movement "Andante grazioso," a theme and variations was particularly beautiful and gave one another opportunity of admiring the string section of this organization which is unexcelled by any other major orchestra.

After the intermission, Dorothy Maynor sang "Non Temer," "Il re Pastore" (L'amero) and Pamina's aria from "The Magic Flute." Three better airs could not have been chosen to show the better qualities of this gifted soprano. The high tessitura, the long sustained phrases, the fine sense of legato and the pure lyric quality required for the successful singing of music by Mozart were met perfectly by the soprano who was in unusually fine voice. She received an ovation.

Richard Burgin played a sympathetic violin obligato for the first aria and Bernard Zighera played a skillful piano accompaniment with the strings in the last.

The concert closed with the "Symphony in C major." The performance of this delicate work was one of the high lights of the concert. The tranquil and melodious second movement for strings, bassoon and two violas was particularly moving.

Dr Koussevitzky who has just celebrated his 70th birthday received tremendous applause at the conclusion.

This was not the Tanglewood of the spacious open-air shed with its perfect acoustics, its background of trees and green foliage and an audience overflowing to the large expanse of yard. (There was a small tent at the back of the hall to shelter an overflow of several hundred). Nevertheless there was a festival air about the concert and surely it was better than no Tanglewood at all.

VICTOR PRAHL.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 30 1944

From Mozart Festival

Ruth Posselt, talented young American violinist, will be the solo artist of the Mozart Festival to be broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, next Saturday, which will be broadcast at 8.30 p. m. by WGR in the Blue network.

The festival, staged in connection with the 70th birthday anniversary of Dr. Koussevitzky, will be held in picturesque Tanglewood concert hall in Lenox, Mass.

Theater Filled For Opening of Mozart Series

Tanglewood, Lenox, July 29 — Threatening showers and wet grounds failed to dampen the enthusiasm tonight of a capacity audience at Tanglewood theater for the first of four Mozart festival concerts given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Dorothy Maynor, soprano soloist with her husband, Rev Shelby Rooks, pastor of St James's Presbyterian church, New York, is a guest of Dr Koussevitzky and niece, Miss Olga Naumoff at Seranak.

The music shed is boarded up tight for the duration, otherwise historic and matchless Tanglewood seemed unchanged from prewar days when the Boston Symphony midsummer festival attracted thousands from all over the country. Heavy rain this afternoon made the Tanglewood gardens, with their beautiful hedges, a good place to avoid. These gardens were first laid out 90 years ago by William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, the grandfather of Mrs Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Concord, who with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1937.

With Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, New York, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival association from the start, at tonight's concert were her mother, Mrs Charles Robinson Smith; her brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs Lyman Beecher Stowe. Ensign David Stowe; Mrs John Barclay and Malcolm Vaughan, New York.

Noticed with Lester Roberts manager of Curtis hotel and Mrs Roberts were Princess Eugenia Ruspoli and niece, Miss Marja Teresa Berry of Castello de Nemi, Rome. Among others from the Curtis were Mrs E. H. Gammell Slater of Newport, Mrs E. Griswold Hollister, Miss Olice C. Colton, Mrs J. G. Monsarrat, Mme Lenora Blanca Renard; Mrs Grant Squires, Mrs H. F. Stevens, Mrs Andre Beck, Mr and Mrs Joseph May, Mrs Charles J. Raincar, Misses Julia Ryle, Anna P. and Mary E. Deeter, Katherine Geddes, Judge and Mrs H. C. Rudlich.

Mr and Mrs Lowell Thomas came over from Pawling, N. Y., and are at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington for the Tanglewood festival. Proprietor James J. Joyce of the inn had cocktails for them and a group of friends before the concert and a midnight snack afterward.

With Baroness Humbert de Viry, formerly of Savoie, France, who is in residence at Shipton court, Lenox, were her daughters, Mrs Woodbridge Strong and Miss Roselyne de Viry.

Mrs Albert Spalding, wife of the violinist, had as guests, Mrs Ann Reed Brenner and Hudson Strode, the author.

From the Red Lion inn were Mrs Benjamin Walworth Arnold (Elizabeth Van Rensselaer); Mrs George F. Chandler of the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia; Mrs Charles C. Griswold; James O. Stack, vice-president of Ritz Carlton hotel, New York, and Mrs Stack; Enrico Penteardo, first secretary of the Brazilian embassy, Washington and Mme Penteardo.

Willard M. Sistare, Pittsfield, chief usher, was assisted by Fred T. Francis, Carl W. Germeck and Norman B. Hollister. Taking tickets were Harry B. Johnson, David M. Cullen, George P. Hunt, Jr., Franklin C. Pilsbury and Leonard F. Johnson. Miss Martha Hick had charge of the program girls.

Tonight's program was broadcast for an hour from 8.30 over the Blue network. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, pianist soloists for the concert tomorrow at 3.30, are at Wendell-Sheraton hotel, Pittsfield.

Tanglewood Revival

Herald July 31

Fireflies, thunderstorms and music at Tanglewood in the Berkshires form a welcome wartime combination as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky proceeds with his four-concert Mozart festival. The echoes of this concert season in miniature in the little opera hall at Stockbridge designed by Finland's famed Saarinen stirred the ghosts of pre-war days when the great Berkshire Festivals attracted more than 13,000 spectators. But quality and not quantity is always the reliable gauge in this tuneful art.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his sterling players are once again giving evidence of their devotion to the cause of good music under most difficult conditions. Although the big festivals had to be suspended in 1941 the orchestra's summer public as well as the musicians refused to visualize Tanglewood silent after the great efforts of the past which made it a symbol of excellence to the whole country. If only 2000 attended the first Mozart concert, the small attendance figure was due only to lack of transportation and not to lack of interest. In fact, the presence of those hardy 2000 encourages festival and orchestra officials all the more in their plans for the postwar future. We now have certainty of greater concerts than ever before in the hills where the Boston Symphony Orchestra leader did his vernal pioneering as soon as peace arrives.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 30 1944

Music Grants Awarded Four

LENOX, Mass., July 29 (AP)—Four composers, two of American root and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips. No time limit has been set, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the life-long interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

In his years with the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has insisted on the right of the present-day composer to a hearing, even when his subscribers threatened rebellion.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 30 1944

WAR SETS TEMPO FOR TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Conducts First Concert in an Abbreviated Version of Berkshire Fete

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 29— An abbreviated version of the famous Berkshire Music Festival got under way at Tanglewood this evening, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Because of transportation and other problems arising from the war, only a comparatively small section of the Boston Symphony, thirty-eight players, including first desk men, are taking part in the Mozart festival. However, the proportions of the orchestra, plus the intimacy of the surroundings, should do much toward reproducing the actual concert conditions of Mozart's day.

The concerts are being held in the Tanglewood Opera Concert Hall, which normally seats 1,152. For the festival, an additional 240 persons are seated on the stage, and a large tent, set up just outside the hall, accommodates several hundred purchasers of general admission tickets.

This year's audiences will be much smaller than those of prewar years when 6,000 persons were seated in the huge shed and another 2,000 to 5,000 heard the concerts from the surrounding lawns. Some of the country's leading musicians have been engaged to appear as soloists under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, while others have assembled at Tanglewood to enjoy the music as spectators.

At the first concert, held this evening, Dorothy Maynor, the distinguished soprano, who was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at the 1939 Berkshire Festival, appeared as soloist in the concert aria (K. 505) and arias from "Il Re Pastore" and "The Magic Flute." The program also listed the symphony in A major (K 201), the Divertimento in B flat for strings and two horns (K. 287) and the Symphony in C major (K. 338).

The second concert, tomorrow afternoon, will feature Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, while Ruth Bosselt, violinist, and Robert Casadesus, pianist, will appear as soloists during the final two concerts next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

The Mozart festival was organized to keep alive the tradition of summer music at the beautiful Tanglewood estate. The Berkshire Festival concerts were conducted for several years by Dr. Koussevitzky until 1942, when it was decided that presenting the concerts in the face of wartime difficulties would be impracticable.

Despite that decision, Dr. Koussevitzky organized an orchestra among the students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, which is also housed at Tanglewood, and gave a series of six concerts, which drew large audiences. As there was no summer music at Tanglewood during 1943, the present Mozart festival marks a revival, after a year's lapse, of one of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorite projects.

Organized along practical lines it is designed to serve not so much visitors from far away but residents of near-by communities. Tickets for the four concerts have been in great demand, and the first two concerts are completely sold out. When general admissions went on sale at noon today, a line had already formed.

Hotel accommodations have not been as scarce as during pre-war festival years, when every bed within a radius of twenty or thirty miles was requisitioned, but there has been a considerable influx of visitors at Pittsfield, Lenox, Stockbridge and other near-by towns, with many visitors having difficulty finding transportation to Tanglewood.

Sunday Advertiser (Boston) July 30

Koussevitsky Plays 'Peace Music' at Fete

LENOX (AP)—The 1152 seats in Opera Hall were sold last night and hundreds of people, who came in from nearby farms, stood outside to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first of four programs [illegible] of a Mozart festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who marked his 70th birthday anniversary last Wednesday and his 20th year with the Boston Symphony, described the festival and the response of this Berkshire Hills community as "another milestone in the history of the Boston orchestra."

Dr. Koussevitsky, who recently offered his plan to send the great artists and orchestras of each nation to the postwar peace conference gave a sample of his "peace music."

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, in arias from "Il Re Pastore" and "The Magic Flute" was soloist, marking the fifth anniversary of her discovery by Dr. Koussevitsky at a Berkshire music festival.

The orchestra of 38 players, which Dr. Koussevitsky directed, was not much larger than the one [illegible] Mozart wrote. Thirty-two of the players are Boston Symphony members, who in pre-war days, were members of the faculty of Dr. Koussevitsky's Berkshire music center.

Music critics were agreed that "Mozart himself never heard his music played as beautifully, partly because of higher instrumental standards today and partly because the director has an affinity for the youthful music of the composer and took the trouble to rehearse exhaustively."

[161]

Koussevitsky Opens 4-Concert Mozart Festival at Stockbridge

Globe
July 30

By CYRUS DURGIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 29—Tonight there was music "Tanglewood" for the first time in two years, as Serge Koussevitzky began a four-concert Mozart festival.

It was not heard in the huge, fan-shaped music shed—now boarded up because of wartime circumstances—but in the quaint little Opera-concert Hall designed by Eliel Saarinen. More than 2000 persons are estimated to have attended. This figure includes about 200 seated on the stage behind the orchestra, and others placed in a tent on the lawn in front of the Opera-concert Hall.

Promptly at 8:30 Mr. Koussevitzky was welcomed to the stage by the applause of an audience which rose in greeting. He conducted a white-coated orchestra of about 38 principal and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The Star Spangled Banner," which all were invited to sing, preceded the Mozart music, which assembled the A Major Symphony (k. 201), the divertimento for strings and two horns (k. 287), the little, three-movement symphony in C Major (k. 338) and three soprano arias sung by Negro soprano Dorothy Maynor. These last were "L'Amero, Saro Costante" from "Li Re Pastore"; Pamina's "Ach Ich Fuehls" from "The Magic Flute," and the "Non Temer, Amato Bene," with its preceding recitative (k. 505).

Unpredictable as always, the Berkshire weather had brought a thunderstorm in the afternoon, but by concert time the air was cool and misty and fireflies twinkled over the green lawns.

Dampness Interfered

This atmosphere was too damp for the good of stringed instruments, with the result that the orchestral tone was a bit soggy. After a slight roughness during the opening movement of the introductory with accustomed delicacy and indescribable grace of phrasing. Miss Maynor's singing was in her usual, careful-prepared style.

This is not a festival of pre-war proportions, and it is given under the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., not the Berkshire Festival Committee. The war caused temporary abandonment of the big festivals after 1941. The one in 1942 was by students of Mr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which was closed after the season of 1942.

Transportation from Lenox to "Tanglewood" is understood to have been carried on by private automobile and individual taxis. The ODT did not grant permission to commercial bus lines to extend their mileage to the concert grounds. For the first time the ushers are girls.

Mozart Festival in the Berkshires

Dr. Koussevitzky Conducts Opening Tanglewood Concerts

By L. A. Sloper

Lenox, Mass.

A friendly informality informs the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Mozart festival now being given at Tanglewood.

This was especially evident at the second concert of the series yesterday afternoon. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff were performing with the chamber orchestra the Concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra. As they neared the end of the first movement a thunderstorm arose, which added to the score effects that the composer had not intended.

Nevertheless, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky went on with the slow second movement. The storm grew heavier, and much of the delicacy of the music was necessarily lost. The conductor had directed a few measures of the finale when the thunderclaps and the downpour on the roof became so noisy that they all but drowned out the music. Suddenly Dr. Koussevitzky halted the performance, turned to the audience and suggested an intermission. The director and the soloists, who had been smiling at the interruptions of the elements, grinned at the listeners, who grinned back and applauded.

When the storm had subsided, players and audience returned, and Dr. Koussevitzky began an announcement:

"Since you heard so little from the beautiful andante. . ."

At this point the audience interrupted with loud applause, and the conductor spread his hands, smiled, shrugged, and turned around to resume with the slow movement. Then the audience laughed heartily, and the director, who is a showman as well as an artist, faced them briefly with a Puckish grimace, and the music began again. At the end there was an ovation for all concerned.

The incident was characteristic of a festival that is blessed with a happy comradeship between the brilliant conductor and orchestra and the musically aware audience. A festival in the Berkshires that included no interruptions by thunderstorms would not be in the tradition. And players and listeners understand each other so well that every mishap is an added attraction.

The concerto was the central feature of a program which began with the great "Haffner" Symphony in G minor, throwing in the overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" along the way.

The festival, which began Saturday evening with Dorothy Maynor as soloist in three Mozart Arias, and with three symphonic numbers—the symphonies in A major, No. 29, and in C major, No. 34, and the Divertimento in B flat major—is already established as a success, thus justifying Dr. Koussevitzky's faith in reviving on a smaller scale the festivals interrupted last year by war conditions.

The concerts are being given, not in the vast shed, but in a smaller auditorium which holds about 1,100 persons. This hall was sold out, and outdoor seats in the rear and at the sides of the building were filled by several hundred more listeners—probably 1,500 in all. It is said that this response, and the enthusiasm shown by the audiences, may lead to a resumption next year of the full-scale festival.

Serge Koussevitzky and Dorothy Maynor

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Mozart festival, now in progress at Lenox, with the soloist at the opening concert, last Saturday.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 24 1940

LENOX CHURCH 175 YEARS OLD

Extensive Program Includes Koussevitzky Greetings

PITTSFIELD, July 23—The Congregational Church of Lenox today observed its 175th anniversary with a service in the morning and extensive program in the afternoon.

The church building, at the top of the steep hill in the Lenox-Pittsfield Road, is one of the oldest in the county. It was built 138 years ago and was dedicated in 1806 with Rev. Samuel Shepard, pastor, giving the sermon. The church society was organized in 1769 and the first worship building was erected in 1770 just south of the present site and adjoining the cemetery beside which the present church stands. The church is one of the few truly colonial structures of its kind in Berkshire.

Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor for two years, preached this morning, and there was much special music. Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played the Handel Largo, and the Curtis Trio of the Hotel Curtis played Raff's "Cavatina."

At the afternoon session music was furnished by the Tanglewood Quartet composed of Rolland Tapley, first violin; Frank Macdonald, second violin; George Humphrey, violin and Carl Zeise, cello. Greetings were given by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and greetings from pastors of Berkshire churches were read.

An exhibition of articles having to do with the history of the church was a feature. Among them were the first Bible used in the church and an ancient cello which once furnished music for the parishioners, now owned by the Lenox Library; newspapers printed in Lenox when it was the county seat and bidding for first place among the towns of the county and various old deeds to pews.

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD

Dr. Koussevitzky and Symphony Orchestra Principals in Mozart Programmes

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

In the 19th century they didn't, just as a matter of course, have Mozart festivals. For that ardent age the peerless boy was altogether too impersonal, too classic, in the strict sense of the word. Nevertheless, the romantic movement owed him quite a lot. The end of "Don Giovanni" is still spookier than anything in Weber. The C minor Fantasy for piano anticipates the free chromaticism of Chopin and Wagner.

Perhaps he was then primarily a composer's composer. Both Tchaikovsky and Richard Strauss declared their overwhelming preference for his music. But that, you might have said, was a pose, a blind, since their own music, their own esthetic was so very different. Or else it was merely that they were captivated by his seemingly effortless mastery of all the problems of composition, by his ever-present feeling for beauty of sound and form.

But with the exit of romanticism Mozart, along with Bach, came into his own, and together they came to be looked upon as the apostles of pure music. Actually, of course, neither of them was really that, since they both spent a large part of their time expressively setting words to music. And today Mozart festivals, like Bach festivals, are taken quite for granted.

The true beginning in Mozart's case was made in Salzburg, the picturesquely beautiful city of his birth, though when the Salzburg festivals got into full swing there was no Mozart monopoly. In 1930 your roving musical reporter heard operas there by Beethoven, Donizetti and Gluck, orchestral works by Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Mahler (the Kindertotenlieder," of which more below).

* * *

Then there were the Glydnebourne opera performances in England, established in 1934 by Captain John Christie, on his Sussex estate 60 miles from London. These performances, which regretfully I never attended, were given in a specially constructed theatre seating 500. Fritz Busch, later with New York's New Opera Company, conducted. In the interval a table d'hote dinner or a cold supper would be prepared and served by the six chefs and 60 waiters who were housed in their own dormitory. For four summers only Mozart operas were given, but in 1938 Verdi's "Macbeth" and Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" were added to the repetoire. Perhaps after the war this widely celebrated festival will be resumed.

And this brings us to Dr. Koussevitzky's first Mozart festival, which was inaugurated last evening at Tanglewood, near Lenox, the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire festivals, which will undoubtedly be resumed when the war has ended. These four concerts, the second of which takes place this afternoon, and the remaining ones next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, are given in the smaller of the two auditoriums, the combined concert hall and theatre accommodating 1100. Nor does the conductor have the full symphony at his disposal, only the principals and a few others, some 30 in all. Enough, however, for Mozart's music in these intimate surroundings. As announced, last evening's programme consisted of the Symphonies in A major and C major, K. 201 and K. 338, a Divertimento in B-flat for strings and two horns and soprano arias by Dorothy Maynor. Today's concert will bring the "Haffner" Symphony and the famous "G minor," the Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the two-piano Concerto in E-flat, with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists.

Collectively, the final programmes will assemble the little G minor, E-flat major and "Jupiter" Symphonies, the Overture to "Idomeneo," the Serenade in C minor and the "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" for strings. Saturday's soloist, Ruth Posselt, will play the D major Violin Concerto, and on Sunday, Robert Casadesus will offer the "Coronation" Concerto for piano. These Mozart concerts, by the way, are given in observance of Dr. Koussevitzky's 70th birthday, which befell last Wednesday.

* * *

This Mozart Festival accomplished, the Symphony "principals and others" will reassemble in Boston for the first of four pairs of concerts in New England Mutual Hall on Sunday and Monday evenings, Aug. 13 and 14, through Sept. 3 and 4. Bernard Zighera will conduct the first pair, G. Wallace Woodworth, the second, and Richard Burgin, the fourth, while the third will be given over to the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments and the Boston Flute Players Club, which still means Symphony men.

In seven similar pairs of concerts last season we learned that a great deal of music, old and new, can be heard to excellent advantage under these particular conditions. Some of the elder symphonies sound well with relatively few performers, and there are many pieces for the so-called chamber orchestra. Mr. Zighera's programme for the opening concert, for example, consists of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto, Mozart's C minor Serenade, Martinu's "Tre Ricercari" and the Mahler "Kindertotenlieder," with Mary Davenport as the singer. This notable and affecting song-cycle has had but one performance in this city, that given by the Conservatory's Converse Club, Stanley Hassell, conductor, with Evelyn Duncanson as the soloist on May 9, 1940.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 3

CONCERT DRAWS AUDIENCE OF 2500

Rain Brings Intermission at Tanglewood Event

PITTSFIELD, July 30—Twenty-five hundred persons from a half dozen states traveled in 1000 automobiles this afternoon to Tanglewood in Lenox where Serge Koussevitzky and 35 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the second concert in a series of four comprising a Mozart festival. The series opened Saturday night and will be concluded next Saturday and Sunday.

The heavens opened during the andante of the "Concerto in E-Flat Major" for two pianos and orchestra, and drowned it out in a rattle of raindrops on the roof of the theater, and a booming of thunder that reminded thoughtful persons of Normandy, Guam and Russia.

So noisy was the storm that Dr. Koussevitzky temporarily called the concert off, and the intermission was taken at that point. The rain again poured down just as the concert closed, drenching those running for their cars, and causing a few autos to become stuck in the slippery parking field.

The music produced this afternoon was, as with all that given by the Boston folks, without peer. The program opened with the "Symphony in [illegible] Major," the "Haffner," and closed with the overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and the "Symphony in G Minor," No. 40. Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff were the artists in the two piano concertos. They received an ovation from the audience and Miss Nemenoff, a chaste kiss on the forehead from Dr. Koussevitzky.

Mr. Koussevitzky declared intermission.

Soon the storm was past and when the orchestra and soloists had reassembled the andante was repeated and the final heard through.

Words are pretty inadequate to describe the razor-keen piano playing of Mr. Luboschutz and Mme. Nemenoff. Their four hands might be one instrument; their range of dynamics is amazing, and they play Mozart with the utmost tenderness. This in short, was a magnificent performance.

Mr. Koussevitzky has slightly changed the seating of his orchestra for these concerts, and has transferred the violas to the left of the stage, behind the first violins, with the second violin placed where the violas customarily sit. The last two concerts of the festival will be given next Saturday and Sunday.

First Half of Mozart Festival Is Ended

By CYRUS DURGIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 30—The first half of the Mozart Festival, presented by Serge Koussevitzky and 8 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was ended here today. An audience even larger than last night's gathering of more than 2000 was on hand. The program brought the "Haffner" Symphony (K384): The Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" (K 621): The "Great" G Minor Symphony (K 550) and the E-Flat Concerto for two pianos, (K 365 in which the soloists were Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff.

In general and in detail it was a superb concert, although as at the first program of the festival, the opening movement of the first symphony fell short of that magical precision and blending which is the Boston Symphony at best. Otherwise the playing was a marvel of refinement, grace, tone richness and style.

Though the Berkshire sun fell benignantly on "Tanglewood" through the morning and early afternoon, it was evident a thunderstorm was in the making soon after the concert began.

It broke soon after the beginning of the concerta. All hands sat patiently, waiting to launch into the lovely, soft andante. This was punctuated with rolls of thunder. Finally, at the outset of the final,

[162]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 31 1944

TANGLEWOOD FETE CALLED A SUCCESS

Koussevitzky's Reading of Mozart, With Only 38 Pieces, Has Charm, Brilliance

By MARK A. SCHUBART

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 30—The first of two week-ends of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Mozart Festival at Tanglewood came to an end this afternoon, and it would be no exaggeration to say that not only is the festival a success, but that it is a musical achievement of major proportions. With an orchestra made up of thirty-eight members of the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky has given us readings of the Austrian composer's music which nave charm, brilliance and meticulous musicianship.

No small share of the pleasure of the two concerts in the opera concert hall came from the small dimensions of the orchestra. Whether or not Mozart himself preferred a group of this size is a matter of speculation. He once characterized a performance of his C major symphony (K.338) as "magnifique" when it was played by an orchestra which was as large or larger than our present day symphony groups. But the fact remains that conditions at Tanglewood were those often found at eighteenth century concerts and hearing the music expertly played under these conditions was of more than passing interest.

The Risks of a Small Unit

In some respects, playing Mozart with a small orchestra is a hazardous undertaking. The conductor cannot rely on masses of tone to cover up sloppy playing and the very size of the group makes each instrumental part proportionately more prominent and more noticeable. Furthermor., with eight first violins, instead of the usual sixteen or eighteen, the listener hears more of the characteristic string tone, while such instruments as the horns and the timpani stand out to a much greater degree. All these factors place more responsibility on the shoulders of each member of the orchestra and make the clean playing and admirable tonal balance of Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra appear all the more remarkable.

Last evening's program featured Dorothy Maynor as soprano soloist in three Mozart arias, and though the opening "L'Amerò, Sarò Costante" from "Il Re Pastore" found her singing somewhat overcautiously, the ensuing recitative and aria of "Pamina" from "The Magic Flute" was delivered with admirable control and touching sentiment. There was applause for Miss Maynor after her first two arias, and an ovation after the brilliant concert recitative and rondo (K. 505) which followed. Richard Burgin, the orchestra's concert master, and Bernard Zighera, pianist, provided tasteful obbligatos for Miss Maynor.

Work of the Orchestra

Among the purely orchestral performances on the program, each had its remarkable features. Particularly rewarding was the delightful divertimento in B-flat major for strings and two horns (K. 287) which Dr. Koussevitzky directed with sparkle and his unfailing sense of the style. The second movement, a theme and variations, was particularly fine and the final variation resembling a perpetual motion was a feat of orchestral virtuosity.

The program also listed two symphonies, the A major (K. 201) and the C mojar (K. 338). Of the two, the earlier A major work received the most well-rounded performance, perhaps because its lighter instrumentation is better suited to the extremely sensitive acoustics of the Opera Concert Hall.

Rain Interrupts Program

Today's concert was an equally satisfying affair, though it had to compete with a vociferous thunderstorm which interrupted a performance of the concerto in E-flat major for two pianos (K. 365) with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists. The rumble of thunder and the patter of rain on the roof broke into the quiet andante, so Dr. Koussevitzky called a halt to the performance while the storm spent itself.

Besides the concerto, Sunday's program included the "Haffner" symphony, the sparkling little overture to "La Clemenza di Tito" and, as a fitting finale to the week-end, the great G minor symphony. There was an ovation for Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra was asked to rise several times to share in the applause.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 31 1944

Many Attend First Concert of Mozart Festival

Overflow Audience Hears Performance By Boston Orchestra; Miss Maynor Sings

Some persons undoubtedly were kept from attending the opening concert of the Tanglewood Mozart festival Saturday night at Stockbridge, Mass., by the weather, but nevertheless the opera concert hall was completely sold out by 7:30 p.m. The hall seats 1,350 and the concert was attended by an estimated 2,000. Seats were made available on the stage in back of the orchestra and were placed under canopies at the back of the hall to accommodate the overflow audience.

The orchestra was made up of a picked group of the first chair and principal players of the Boston Symphony orchestra and gave a wonderful performance under the baton of the ever dynamic Koussevitsky. The entire evening's performance was a marvelous demonstration of what can be done with a small orchestra composed of A-1 players.

Dorothy Maynor, with her sincere and [illegible] manner, her beautiful legato, and her supreme vocal instrument completely won her audience and received a true ovation.

The program opened with the Symphony in A major, (No. 29, K. 201) which was composed when Mozart was about 20 years old. The entire mood of this symphony is one of joy from the quiet opening of the strings in the first movement to the last note of the "allegro con spirito". The long andante with the muted strings and the gay "menuetto" were particularly effective.

The "divertimento in B flat major" for strings with two horns, K. 287 was written in 1777 for the name-day of the Salzburg Countess Antoine Lodron. This type of music was very popular in 18th century Austria and was intended for performance in private homes.

This particular divertimento was originally scored for string quintet and two horns—on Saturday evening it was played by string orchestra and two horns—which of course throws the horn parts out of balance. The effect achieved by Saturday night's performance was that of a string orchestra with horn obligato. The "andante" and the "adagio" were the outstanding movements, and the noble theme of the "adagio" is one which will long be remembered by most of the audience.

After the intermission Dorothy Maynor sang a group of three Mozart arias accompanied by the orchestra. "L'amero, saro costante" is from Mozart's dramatic cantata, "Il Re Pastore", and Miss Maynor gave a most enjoyable interpretation of it. Richard Burgin played the intricate violin obilgato which accompanied the vocal cadenza and trill. This was followed by the recitative and aria of Pamina from the ever lovely "Magic Flute". Miss Maynor concluded her part of the program with the dramatic recitative, "Ch'io mi scordi di te" and the rondo, "Non Temer, Amato Bene" (K. 505) which Mozart composed for soprano with orchestra and piano obligato. Bernard Zighera played the typical Mozart piano obligato with a rippling, clear-cut technique which emphasized Miss Maynor's lovely controled tones.

Mozart's vigorous Symphony in C major, (No. 34, K. No. 338) with its three movements—allegro vivace, andante di molto, and finale brought the first concert of the series to a close.

Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt expressed the hope of many musicians when he wrote to Dr. Koussevitzky and suggested the possibility that Tanglewood might revive the Mozart festivals which formerly found their home at Salzburg and make "a permanent home for the art of Mozart at Tanglewood".

Koussevitzky in Brilliant Performance at Tanglewood

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

LENOX, July 30—Not the one to be thrown off balance by a sharp thundershower, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the second concert in his Mozart festival series at Tanglewood this afternoon, called a halt in the two-piano concerto featured on the program, dismissed the audience for an intermission, and picked up where he left off when the shower disappeared over the Lenox hills as quickly as it had come.

This sort of thing is fairly old stuff to the people of the locality who make up the lion's share of the 2000-person audiences these two concerts in the series have drawn, so the sudden, violent turn to the previously beautiful weather was taken in strike, and virtually no one left the opera hall when a rumble over the hill sounded the warning.

BEAUTIFUL PERFORMANCE

The concert had gone exceedingly well up to the downpour. The Haffner symphony, which opened the concert, was performed beautifully, if possibly a little too overrefinedly, while the tonal quality was far superior to the previous night's concert because of the drier, clearer atmosphere.

The music was better performed from a technical standpoint, too, as last night there were occasionally faulty attacks, especially in the recitative section of the divertimento.

The orchestra and the soloists, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, got to the cadenza of the first movement of the E-flat two piano concerto before the competition from the thunder and heavy rain on the roof outshouted them. Koussevitzky sat down to wait a bit, and during a lull started the second movement. Practically nobody heard it or the first few bars of the finale which followed. It was at that point the conductor turned to the audience and suggested an intermission. In 10 minutes the rain was over and the concert resumed with a repetition of the slow movement.

The storm, incidentally, sneaked back over the hills just in time to drench the audience as it scooted for home after the concert.

DELIGHTFUL CLARITY

The final half of the program listed the overture to "The Clemency of Titus" and the great Symphony No. 40 in G minor, both performed excellently but not comparing, in the final analysis, with mid-season performance in Symphony Hall. However, it must be said that the smaller orchestra, of 30-odd symphony musicians, which more nearly approached the size of the orchestra of Mozart's time, allowed of a certain clarity of line which was delightful.

The weather mishap was but one of many for the audiences of the festival, those of whom who had not made reservations having been practically camping out. The ODT had forbidden the bus companies to extend their run the mile and a half from Lenox to Tanglewood, so many walked. The local restaurant's larder was bare early in the day, and as the town's hotel is capricious in such matters anyway, the dining situation was indeed, as one of them advertises, a "Duncan Hines adventure," but in reverse.

The next two concerts in the series will be given on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5 and 6, at which time Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Robert Casadesus, pianist, will be the soloists.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Composers Given Grants

Koussevitzky Foundation Announces Awards

LENOX—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces the composer grants for 1944 awarded by the Kouseevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., which was established in memory of Natalie Koussevitzky.

The grants were awarded to the following composers: Aaron Copland, for a symphony; Darius Milhaud, for a symphony; Nikolai Lopatnikoff, for a concertino; and Burrill Phillips, for an overture.

It is expected that some of these compositions will be ready for performance during the 1944-1945 season.

Copeland, born in Brooklyn in 1900, has been a pioneer among American composers and has been intimately identified with Tanglewood since its inception.

Milhaud, born in Aix Province in 1892, is now professor at Mills College, Cal. Since his arrival in America he has suffered various ailments and is now a semi-invalid.

Lopatnikoff, 1903 Russian born, was educated in Helsingfors, Finland. He has been a regular attendant at the Tanglewood Festivals.

Phillips is Omaha born, 1907, and now teaches composition at Eastman School of Music, Rochester.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 24 1944

Four Composers Win Foundation Grants

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—Four composers have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopanikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Phillips.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the lifelong interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 25 1944

Mozart Festival To Open Saturday

Nation-Wide Programs From Tanglewood on Next Two Saturday Nights to Mark Koussevitzky's 70th Anniversary.

From 8.30 to 9.30 o'clock on the next two Saturday evenings, the celebration of the 70th birthday anniversary of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra who will lead 35 of its principal and other members in the nation's first Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, will be broadcast from 146 stations.

The details of putting the concerts on the air from the opera-concert hall of the Berkshire Music Center are expected to cause little difficulty as the auditorium is wood and acoustically satisfactory. Addison Armor, who has directed the Saturday night programs from Symphony hall, Boston, and the shell of the Esplonade on the Charles river with Harold Campbell, engineer, will arrive at Tanglewood tomorrow to make the necessary arrangements.

Program notes prepared by John N. Burk, author and member of the Symphony hall staff who writes the notes for the regular concerts, will be read by Donald Low, who has previously announced the concerts from Boston.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 24 1944

Festival to Mark 70th Birthday For Koussevitsky

Directly after the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, which takes place Wednesday, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will step out of his summer retirement at Lenox to rehearse for the opening concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood.

The Festival will consist of four programs, to be given on Saturday evening, Sunday afternoon, Saturday evening, Aug. 5, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6. This will be Dr. Koussevitsky's only public appearance before the opening of the regular Boston Symphony season next October.

The Festival revives and keeps alive the purpose to which Tanglewood, the summer estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is dedicated—the study and performance of music of the first order in the "out of season" summer months. Mozart performances are especially remembered in the intimate Opera-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, and it is in this auditorium seating 1,200, that the Festival will be held.

Dr. Koussevitsky will traverse in the four programs the principal types of Mozart's instrumental music, both early and late, and this diversification will be made possible by the appearance of notable soloists, all of whom have previously appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ruth Posselt and Dorothy Maynor at regular Festival concerts.

The remarkable talent of Miss Maynor first came to public attention at Tanglewood when Dr. Koussevitsky asked her to sing. Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, the duo-pianists, and Robert Casadesus, the eminent French pianist, are both summer residents in the Berkshires. Tickets for the single concerts are still available at England Brothers in Pittsfield, the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and the Berkshire Inn in Great Barrington, or by mail order to Symphony Hall, Boston.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 24 1944

'COMPOSER GRANTS' AWARDED TO FOUR

LENOX, Mass., July 24 (AP).—Four composers, two of American roots and two of foreign extraction, have been honored by "composer grants" from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. They are Aaron Copland, Burrill Phillips, Darius Milhaud and Nikolai Lopatnikoff.

If the project matures, the result will be symphonies by Messrs. Copland and Milhaud, a concertino by Mr. Lopatnikoff, and an overture by Mr. Phillips. No time limit has been set, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky hopes that some of the compositions will be ready for performance by his Boston Symphony next season.

One of the few one-man ventures of its kind, the music foundation grew directly out of the lifelong interest taken by the late Natalie Koussevitzky in the career of her famous conductor-husband. When Dr. Koussevitzky and she were married, he was famous as a bass viol player, and ambitious to conduct.

Mme. Koussevitzky put a very large fortune at the service of her husband's career. Immediately after her death her husband organized the foundation in her honor, devoting most of its money to subsidizing composers of serious music.

[163]

Its Glamorous Self Again Tanglewood Is Nearly Like

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

Dorothy Maynor, Luboshutz And Nemenoff, Are Soloists With Boston Symphony Orchestra

July 31, 44

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Tanglewood in Lenox was nearly again its old glamorous self yesterday afternoon and the previous evening when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first two concerts of a Mozart festival with 35 of the principal men from his Boston Symphony Orchestra in the theatre of the Berkshire Music Center. Nearly, because only the greater numbers which the huge shed used to seat in pre-war days were lacking from the gala atmosphere which is the unique feature of performances in this now-famed spot. At it was, the hall, the stage behind the musicians, the tent erected to the rear of the auditorium, and all the many portals, were just jammed with eager, extra cordial music-lovers.

Concerts Brilliant

The concerts were brilliant, and the happy excitement and applause were well deserved, but Tanglewood audiences come with a predisposition to be pleased, and thus there is an admitted absence of discrimination and a general hearty approval of all and everything. This, in turn, has a salutary effect on the performers, for everyone, from the conductor down, (or up), senses the spirit of exhilaration and the interpretations soar to heights a less sympathetic audience would not evoke. The ovations accorded the soloists, the orchestra and the conductor were novel only to Tanglewood-tyros, but as old stuff as it may have been to the habitues, it was just as nerve-tingling and new and part of the show as always.

The general plan of the programs is to begin and end each concert with a symphony, and within this crust to use a soloist and an overture or serenade as filling. No one but the genius of Salzburg offers such ample and rich choice. Indeed, his position in music rests to a certain extent on his eminence in all the various branches of composition rather than on a specialized one as does the reputation of some of the other immortals. From the works of what other composer could such rewarding programs be constructed with music for orchestra, string and wind groups, solos, both instrumental and vocal, etc.?

In the afternoon Sunday the symphonies were the "Haffner" and the big G minor. Mozart's more than 40 symphonies had only key identifications when he wrote them, thus time (and Mr. Kochel) have attempted further to identify them, and avoid confusing duplication. These are two of the last great half dozen. On the opening concert on the previous evening there had been two of the early youthful symphonies. Such references in the case of Mozart are merely relative, however, for, because he was only granted only 35 years on earth, he crammed and wrote swiftly, if not feverishly, as if he knew his term would be short and that he must do in 35 years what could be done in the normal double granted span. Thus a symphony of Mozart at 20 is not really comparable to one of another immortal at the same age but who lived longer.

Saturday Program

Nothing in the two concerts just played, and we venture to predict, nothing in the two to come this coming week end, will exceed in pure inspiration the tempo selected by Koussevitzky for the opening movement of the A major symphony on Saturday night. To remove it from the ordinary, to elevate it above the usual, that was the accomplishment of the conductor. It is to his credit, naturally, too, that the performance was impeccable, but the choice of tempo, the poise and grace, the variety of color established in that one movement set the standard which was maintained throughout the programs. In the B flat divertimento for strings with horns, the first violins distinguished themselves in the broad adagio, and Koussevitzky graciously shook hands with the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, and asked the whole section to stand to receive the homage they had won and which the audience so vociferously accorded. On the whole, though, this number had been less certain than the symphonies and at times dipped below the inspired level which was the rule.

Dorothy Maynor received a tremendous ovation. Her pure voice and distinction of style were perfectly suited to the trio of songs she chose: arias from "Il re Pastore" with the violin obbligato played by Burgin, a recitative and aria from the "The Magic Flute," and the recitative "Ch'io mi scordi di te" and the rondo, "Non temper, amatto bene" with the piano obbligato by Bernard Zighera. With unforced ease the wholesome substance of her voice carried to the far corners of the hall with all the beauty and taste of style she has consistently developed since her debut and launching on the identical boards on which she returned Saturday night. The recitatives could have been installed with more eloquence, but the voice was never less than enchanting.

Sunday Program

Sunday's symphonies were more substantiated in character than those of the preceding evening, but all the Mozart symphonies in the Boston mens' fingers and embouchures, and in the repertoire of their conductor, have acquired a finish and a texture which is the result of years of effort and thought. It is not enough to give a little intensive application to a Mozart symphony to prepare it for an audience. Only ceaseless care and restudying can bring it to the point to which it was played yesterday. The great G minor, one of the famous 'trilogy' of symphonies of 1788, cannot be adequately described. It was done with such astonishing beauty and yet with such obvious and natural refinement that one is apt not to notice the polish lavished on the innumerable details.

The sun of the early afternoon was obscured as the concert began, and, by the time Luboshutz and Nemenoff appeared for the E flat double-piano concerto, the skies had become gruff and lowery. The rain competed for the audience's attention before the first movement was over. After a wait and some stage consultations, the second movement was attacked, or, to be exact, wooed, for in spite of the B flat thunder the mood was one of great tenderness. After a few bars of the final rondo, Koussevitzky threw up his hands in despair, and suggested that the intermission be taken then. As a friend suggested, the next number was to be a Jupiter Pluvius symphony. The decision was imperative and, as it proved, wise, for after a reasonable recess the concert could resume.

Repeat Performance

Returning to the stage, Dr. Koussevitzky turned to the audience and said, "You have heard so little from the beautiful andante." Here applause cut off any amplification he may have intended, for the audience knew they were to hear the second movement again, instead of only the sole remaining movement which had not been heard. The conductor gave an understanding shrug and turned to his men. This two-piano concerto was a repeat performance, for they had played the same number, Mozart's only effort for this combination, in the Shed three years ago. It was even better yesterday than the first time. The accompaniment was not only extremely sympathetic, but the size of the orchestra was admirably adjusted to the nature of the piece. Mozart surely never envisioned an accompaniment for this concerto of more than twenty-five strings.

Each movement of the concerto was given individual contour. Encasing the exquisitely handled slow movement were the two allegros, one made properly assertive, and the other engagingly light and gay. Not a note lacked its exact relation to the whole concept, and every phrase was polished with consummate artistry. It may also be said in all candor, and with due deference to the gentleman of the team, that Madame Nemenoff's appearance caused those who chose to listen with their eyes closed to miss an important attribute of the performance. The artists were recalled repeatedly, and when they could force Dr. Koussevitzky to return, shared their honors with him

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky acknowledges an ovation from the audience at the opening of the Mozart Festival by the Boston Symphony in the opera theatre at Tanglewood Saturday night.

The Weather

LOCAL WEATHER

U. S. Weather Bureau noon report

Temperature 8.30 AM	66
Temperature at 12 noon	77
Highest temperature 24 hours, 3.30 PM	81
Lowest temperature 24 hours, 6 AM	66
Precipitation 24 hours	.39 inch rain
Temperature range year ago today	81, 52

ALMANAC

Sun rises at	5.44
Sun sets at	8.11
New moon	Aug. 18
Full moon	Aug. 4
Lamps lighted at	8.44

Mozart Festival Makes 16,000 Words of News

In spite of shortage of newsprint, manpower and transportation facilities, the musical importance of the Mozart Festival is such that the concerts were attended by more than 30 critics, who telegraphed 16,000 words of criticism, in addition to copy telephoned, mailed or carried by hand.

Among the newspapers, magazines and press services represented were The Associated Press by John Selby; New York Times, Mark Schubart; Boston Globe, Cyrus Durgin; Christian Science Monitor, Leslie A. Sloper; Boston Herald, Rudolph Ely; Hartford Times, Carl Lindstrom; Worcester Telegram, Raymond Morin; Albany Times-Union, Edgar Van Olinda; Musical America, Grace Stutsman; Springfield Republican, Carey S. Hayward; Springfield Union, Donald L. Coleman; Millerton News, Peter Haworth; Northampton Gazette, Robert Hadesh; North Adams Transcript, James A. Hardman Jr.; Burlington News, Berkshire Courier, and various radio stations.

As in other years, many concert patrons heard the music while they were seated on the lawn. In the large overflow audience Saturday night and yesterday afternoon were many servicemen.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1944

All Seats Sold At Mozart Festival

With all seats sold for the final concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, hundreds of music lovers are expected to listen this weekend from the grounds surrounding the opera-concert hall where Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ruth Posselt, celebrated violinist, who played with the orchestra in the Berkshire Festival days, will appear at the Saturday concert, and at the Sunday matinee Robert Casadesus, the French pianist, will be heard.

The program will be as follows:

Saturday evening at 8:30: Symphony in G Minor (K 183), Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D Major, Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," Symphony in E-flat Major.

Sunday afternoon at 3:30: Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C Minor, for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons; Concerto in D Major for Piano and Orchestra ("Coronation Concerto"), "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter").

Admission to the grounds, where the music can be heard and the musicians seen through the open doors, will be on sale from noon of each concert day, at the box office.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE

AUG 1 - 1942

World Of Music

NEW YORK—Aug. 1.—(UP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., has started its Summer music festival, to continue on weekends until August 16th. It replaces the annual Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Beginning today, there will be six Saturday and Sunday concerts by an orchestra of ninety six advanced students from all parts of the country, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky. Rose Posselt, violinist, and Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will appear as soloists. At the concert of August 16th, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Shostakovitch's new Seventh ("war") Symphony.

There will be two opera performances of Nicolai's The Merry Wives Of Windsor, five chamber music concerts and four lecture concerts by Olin Downes, critic.

[164]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1944

Trumpet Player and Wife Prove Artists Are Practical by Living Off the Land

Proving that musicians can be practical, George C. Mager, French-born trumpter with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his wife are producing their own butter, milk, meat and vegetables on their 72-acre farm in West Stockbridge, which they purchased three years ago. Babette and her bull calf are two of the Magers' pets and receive as much tender care as does Mr. Mager's trumpet.

George C. Magers Farm It in West Stockbridge

WEST STOCKBRIDGE—If anyone claims musicians cannot be practical, and at the same time artists, he should visit the old Pixley farm where in three years a trumpet player and his wife transformed a tumble-down house and abandoned farm into a charming home where they produce with their own hands all the food they eat in summer and much of their winter's larder.

Three years ago, George C. Mager, one of the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Mager, decided that since they were to spend future summers near Tanglewood, so that he could teach at the Berkshire Music Center and play in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, they would settle in the Berkshires. When a real estate agent took them to the top of a hillside between Glendale and West Stockbridge, where the view was good but the house run-down, they bought on the spot the house in which they saw possibilities, and 72 acres of land.

Still No Electricity

With the advice of an architect the house was restored and modernized as far as it is possible to modernize where there is no electricity, no running water and no telephone. The electricity and telephone are promised. They took the porch off the front of the house and added an open one on the back, overlooking a valley. Mr. Mager reinforced the timbers in the barn, divided it into rooms and gave it a coat of whitewash.

They planted vegetable and flower gardens, which Mr. Mager cultivates. Mrs. Mager's departments are the house and the livestock, which now includes two cows and a calf, two pigs, a thoroughbred New Zealand rabbit with three babies, one day to become stew, 75 chickens, two thoroughbred German shepherds, two blue love birds and a canary.

The cows are named Babette and Fauchette, but the calf has no name because he will go to the butcher. Mrs. Mager tells proudly of rehabilitating Babette from a scrawny little animal, bred too early, to the plump healthy cow she was four weeks later. The dogs are Petroushka and Wonder; the rabbit, Melanie; and the spotless pigs are Isadore and Pericille. All, they say, "speak French." Mrs. Mager does the milking to save her husband's hands.

With no ration problems they live, literally, off the fat of the land. The surplus vegetables and fruit and chickens, that have not reached the pot by September, are canned. One half of the 375 jars went to Brookline last fall, for winter consumption. The other half remained for their return in May.

Mrs. Mager's War Work

After the eight-month season with the Boston Orchestra, when Mrs. Mager puts in almost full time as a volunteer nurse at the Brookline Free Hospital for Women, they come to Sky Terrace. Their 15-year-old son, Pierre, joins them at the end of the school year. A student at Manlius Military Academy, he plans a Navy career. Mr. Mager travels each week to Boston for two days, to teach. They return to Brookline in October, for the opening of the symphony season.

Mr. and Mrs. Mager met at the Paris Conservatory of Music, where they were studying singing. They still sing together on occasion, though Mrs. Mager long since decided that her home was more important than a musical career. In 1918 Mr. Mager came to the United States with a French military band, playing at camps all over the country and twice in Boston. When some of the German members of the Boston orchestra left he was invited to remain as a viola player. After a year he returned to the trumpet. His wife joined him here a year later.

At first they returned to France every three or four years, but they decided it was not right to make their living in one country and give their allegiance to another. They have been American citizens for many years. They are enthusiastic about the friendliness of their neighbors in the Berkshires, and say they have never felt at home as they do now. They are happy that Tanglewood is again open with the Mozart Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 6 - 1944

Hundreds Unable to Get Seats Attend Concert

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 5—Despite torrid weather and threatening showers, hundreds of persons unable to secure seats attended tonight's Boston Symphony orchestra Mozart festival concert at Tanglewood. All seats had been sold 10 days ago, but scores of others were willing to run the risk of getting wet through failure to "make the tent" near the main entrance of the music hall. As at the first two concerts all the 240 stage seats were occupied. It was said unofficially tonight that the overflow audiences were needed to furnish profits for the Boston Symphony orchestra which undertook the enterprise and has carried it through with great success. It has been under the direct charge of George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, who is staying at Curtis hotel, Lenox. Mrs Judd arrived today for the last two concerts.

Among others from the Curtis noticed in the audience tonight were Dean Frederick W. Beekman, former rector of the American cathedral in Paris and Mrs Beekman; Mrs Grant Squires and her guest, Mrs Zinn Gould; Lieut-Comdr Thomas V. Murtha, USN, and Mrs Murtha, Lester Roberts, manager of the Curtis, and Mrs Roberts.

With James J. Joyce, owner and manager of the Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, were Mr and Mrs Lowell Thomas.

From Red Lion inn were Mr and Mrs Charles E. Van Norman of Springfield, Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Pratt and Mr and Mrs Melville E. Stone of St George, L. I.; Mr and Mrs S. C. Buckner of 280 Park avenue, New York.

Mrs Albert Spalding had as guests Miss Marion Beckett and Hudson Strode, the author.

With Rev Dr and Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes were her brother and sister-in-law, Mr and Mrs Clarence Blair Mitchell of New York.

Lieut-Comdr John D. Kennedy, USN, and Mrs Kennedy had as guests Mrs Kennedy's son, Able Seaman Herbert Parsons Patterson, and Mrs James V. Forrestall of Washington.

Mr. John H. P. Gould had a supper party of 40 tonight at Mahkeenac farm, Stockbridge, after the concert at Tanglewood.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1944

Many Tanglewood Patrons Lose Out

Fail to Obtain Seats—Hundreds to Risk Weather —Ruth Posselt to Play Tonight — Robert Casadesus Tomorrow.

Many of the would-be patrons to the Boston Symphony orchestra Mozart festival concerts at Tanglewood this evening and Sunday afternoon have been disappointed in not securing seats for the final performances. Hundreds of the concert enthusiasts are to risk the weather and buy lawn seats and hope they will get under the tent provided near the entrance.

Ruth Posselt, violinist, in private life the wife of Richard Bergen, concertmaster of the orchestra, is to be the assisting artist tonight at 8:30 o'clock and Robert Cassues, pianist, is to play in a concerto Sunday at 3:30 o'clock.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1944

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Two Saturday Night Mozart Concerts To Be Broadcast

The celebration of the 70th birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will lead 35 of its principals and other members in America's first Mozart Festival at Tanglewood for the coming two week ends, will be made nationwide by the broadcasting of the two Saturday night concerts.

Over the entire Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Company on a sustaining program, the Festival will be heard from 146 stations from 8:30 to 9.30. Because the programs must start precisely at 8.30 the audience must be seated before that hour.

Addison Armor, who has directed the Saturday night programs from Symphony Hall and now from the shell of the Esplanade on the Charles River, with Harold Campbell, engineer, will arrive at Tanglewood Wednesday to work out details of putting the concerts on the air from the opera-concert hall of the Berkshire Music Center. Because the auditorium is of wood and is acoustically brilliant no difficulty is expected. The details will be worked out during rehearsals, which will not be open to the public.

Donald Low, who has announced the concerts from Boston, will arrive Saturday. He will read program notes prepared by John N. Burk, author and member of the Symphony Hall staff, who writes the notes for the regular concerts.

Albany Music Notes

By Edgar S. VanOlinda

WITH all seats sold for the final concerts of the Mozart Festival at Tanglewood, hundreds of music loves are expected to listen this week-end from the grounds surrounding the opera-concert hall where Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the opening concerts last week-end the hall was filled, including 240 stage seats, and despite the rain on Sunday many enjoyed the music from benches on the lawns, continuing a Berkshire Festival custom.

Ruth Posselt, celebrated violinist, who played with the orchestra in the Berkshire Festival days, will appear at tomorrow's concert, and at the Sunday matinee Robert Casadesus, the French pianist, will be heard.

The program follows:

TONIGHT AT 8.30

Symphony in G minor
Concerta for Violin and Orchestra in D Major
Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta."
Symphony in E-flat Major

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT 3:30

Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C Minor, for two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons.
Concerto in D Major for Piano and Orchestra ("Coronation Concerto")
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings) in G Major.
Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter").

Admission to the grounds, where the music can be heard clearly and the musicans seen through the open doors, will be on sale from noon of each concert day, at the box office.

[165]

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 4 - 1944
SPRINGFIELD, OHIO
NEWS

THESE DAYS

by

George E. Sokolsky

The Logic of Civilization

The other night, at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, Mr. Koussevitzky directed a Mozart concert. Mozart was a German. So was Beethoven. So was Wagner. Brahms was a Hungarian. During the last war, there were wild men who protested the playing of Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner and Brahms. This time, we have more sense. We do not visit upon the culture and civilization of all mankind our antipathies to a partciular country.

Art, like religion, is universal. It belongs to all people. It knows neither politics nor economics nor the madnesses of hate which every so often beset human beings. Art, like religion, knows neither race nor creed nor nationality. It raises the weak and backward as it humbles the strong and aggressive.

And that is what is so hard to understand about the Germans. In music, they have excelled all the peoples upon this earth. If German composers were removed from the symphonic operatic programs, they would indeed become thin. Yet, these same Germans can produce a Hitler, a Goering, a Himmler. What curious psychology makes this people so rich in mind and emotions and yet so ruthless in the pursuit of their political ends? Perhaps politics is a strange region for them and not knowing where to go, they lose their way. The Japanese unquestionably have lost their way, for when they are not fighting, they appear so meek and gentle.

As one listened to Mozart at Tanglewood, the war was for a moment forgotten, although there were plenty of young people there in the uniforms of all the services. And they, too, for the moment forgot, for Mozart is timeless and one listens as though in another century, the facts of the moment being driven far way from the miserable reality of campaigns and speeches and wars and radio commentators. Yet, it was impossible not to recall just this: Politics and economics are absorbing us too completely in this generation. These mechanisms of our living are grinding us instead of being managed by us. We have erected machines that are so intricate that we no longer altogether understand how to handle them. They play tricks on us—and they frighten us.

Man invented politics to set up rules for his relations with other men. He invented government as an agency for the management of communal affairs. At first, it was all very simple. The father controlled his offspring and their communal relationships which in time became tribal. By now, however, government is a fightingly complex organism which relates itself not only to communal matters but to everything that an individual does. In some countries, it even attempts to control the mind, determining what the individual is to believe and think and pray for. Government has grown from a mechanism of utility to a master of man.

This has happened often before. In fact, history is an endless struggle between the need for some kind of government and the tendency of all governments to expand their functions and powers until they overwhelm the individual into slavery. Then there is resistance—at first passive resistance as with the Chinese who when they weary of a tyrannous officialdom, shut up their shops and schools and houses and do nothing. And doing nothing, they produce such a stagnation that the state itself might die of desuetude. Officials soon cringe before that type of passive resistance which is utterly paralyzing. But when that fails, revolution is the only course—the fight of free minds for freedom of thought and action.

It is another curiosity of history that those who praise revolution in other countries, abhor it in their own. The Russians have at various times stimulated revolutions in every country, but they put down any form of opposition as ruthlessly as Hitler does in Germany. The hero of freedom elsewhere becomes the traitor in his own country. Yet, free minds and free men will ever appear in lands where cruel tyranny and oppression become the tools of government.

I don't know what Mozart has to do with all this. Yet, as I passed from Lenox through Lee to Otis hidden deep in the hills, my mind played not upon melody but liberty.

DULUTH, MINN.
HERALD
FORT WAYNE, IND.
JOURNAL-GAZETTE
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

AUG 5 - 1944

These Days

Life's Mechanics Overwhelm Man

By George E. Sokolsky

THE other night, at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, Mass., Mr. Koussevitzky directed a Mozart concert. Mozart was a German. So was Beethoven. So was Wagner. Brahms was a Hungarian. During the last war there were wild men who protested the playing of Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner and Brahms. This time we have more sense. We do not visit upon the culture and civilization of all mankind our antipathies to a particular country.

Art, like religion, is universal. It belongs to all people. It knows neither politics nor economics nor the madnesses of hate which every so often beset human beings. Art, like religion, knows neither race nor creed nor nationality. It raises the weak and backward as it humbles the strong and aggressive.

And that is what is so hard to understand about the Germans. In music, they have excelled all the peoples upon this earth. If German composers were removed from the symphonic and operatic programs, they would indeed become thin. Yet, these same Germans can produce a Hitler, a Goering, a Himmler. What curious psychology makes this people so rich in mind and emotions and yet so ruthless in the pursuit of their political ends? Perhaps politics is a strange region for them and not knowing where to go, they lose their way. The Japanese unquestionably have lost their way, for when they are not fighting, they appear so meek and gentle.

AS one listened to Mozart at Tanglewood, the war was for a moment forgotten, although there were plenty of young people there in the uniforms of all the services. And they, too, for the moment forgot, for Mozart is timeless and one listens as though in another century, the facts of the moment being driven far away from the miserable reality of campaigns and speeches and wars and radio commentators. Yet, it was impossible not to recall just this: Politics and economics are absorbing us too completely in this generation. These mechanisms of our living are grinding us instead of being managed by us. We have erected machines that are so intricate that we no longer altogether understand how to handle them. They play tricks on us—and they frighten us.

Man invented politics to set up rules for his relations with other men. He invented government as an agency for management of communal affairs. At first, it was all very simple. The father controlled his offspring and their communal relationships which in time became tribal. By now, however, government is a frightenly complex organism which relates itself not only to communal matters but to everything that an individual does. In some countries it even attempts to control the mind, determining what the individual is to believe and think and pray for. Government has grown from a mechanism of utility to a master of man.

THIS has happened often before. In fact, history is an endless struggle between the need for some kind of government and the tendency of all governments to expand their functions and powers until they overwhelm the individual into slavery. Then there is resistance—at first, passive resistance as with the Chinese who when they weary of a tyrannous officialdom, shut up their shops and schools and houses and do nothing. And doing nothing, they produce such a stagnation that the state itself might die of desuetude. Officials soon cringe before that type of passive resistance which is utterly paralyzing. But when that fails, revolution is the only course—the fight of free minds for freedom of thought and action.

It is another curiosity of history that those who praise revolution in other countries, abhor it in their own. The Russians have at various times stimulated revolutions in every country, but they put down any form of opposition as ruthlessly as Hitler does in Germany. The hero of freedom elsewhere becomes the traitor in his own country. Yet, free minds and free men will ever appear in lands where cruel tyranny and oppression become the tools of government.

I DON'T know what Mozart has to do with all this. Yet, as I passed from Lenox through Lee to Otis hidden deep in the hills, my mind played not upon melody, but liberty.

FORT SMITH, ARK.
SOUTHWEST AMERICAN

AUG 7 - 1944

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1944

The Mozart Festival

Perhaps we parents, together with Dr. Damrosch, deserve some of the credit, but there is no doubt that the younger generation know more about music than we ever even suspected when we were their age.

The large number of young men and women who overcame the obstacles of transportation and braved heat and thunder storms to journey to Tanglewood the last two week ends are a tribute that Mr. Koussevitzky knows how to appreciate. Mozart certainly should also welcome the demonstration if the news of it gets across the Styx. The tribute is the more important and significant because it was unintentional and incidental. The chief reason the youngsters lay or stood outside or huddled under canvas for two hours was because they wanted to hear Mozart's music played by a portion of the orchestra that a non-Bostonian like Oscar Levant has referred to as "unquestionably the finest in the world." The contributing cause was that their elders, because of greater foresight or a better financial position, had all the inside seats. The fact that despite all handicaps there were overflow crowds at all four performances is evidence of the popularity of the annual music festival and is a happy augury, as Mr. Jerome Greene suggested yesterday in his birthday felicitations to Dr. Koussevitzky, for summers after peace has returned and the full orchestra again plays in big Shed, not only Mozart but Beethoven, Brahms, Sibelius and Shostakavitch.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1944

Overflow Crowds To Attend Finale of Mozart Festival

More than 1000 persons are expected to find their way to Tanglewood—many by foot—this evening and tomorrow afternoon, in addition to the 1100 who have reserved seats in the opera theatre, to hear the last two concerts of the Mozart Fesival from the spacious lawn outside the theatre.

Reserve tickets are sold out, but the box office will be open at noon today and tomorrow for the sale of admission tickets to the grounds which will entitle early arrivals to seats on benches under the canvas or on the grass.

Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be soloist this evening. She will play Mozart's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D Major. Also included on tonight's program will be Symphony in G Minor, Overture to "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," and Symphony in E-Flat Major.

Casadesus To Play

Robert Casedesus, pianist, will be the second Berkshire musician to play at Tanglewood when he joins the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final concert tomorrow afternoon in the Concerto in D Major for Piano and Orchestra (Coronation). The first Berkshire summer resident to appear at Tanglewood was Albert Spalding, violinist, now with the OWI in Italy.

Mr. Casedesus, director of the summer music school at the Barrington School in Great Barrington, was head of the music school at Fontainebleau, France, until the war brought him to this country.

Sunday's program includes Serenade ("Nacht Musique") in C Minor, for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Serenade for Strings) in G Major and Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter"). The audience is requested to be in their seats shortly before 8.30 tonight as the first half of the concert will be broadcast over the Blue Network.

ROBERT CASEDESUS, pianist, who will play at Tanglewood tomorrow

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 6 - 1944

THIRD PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD HAS WIDE APPEAL

Koussevitsky Selection of Mozart Compositions Is of Sufficient Contrast to Hold General Interest

Attracting larger numbers at each concert, the third program of the Mozart festival at Tanglewood under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitsky was given last night before an audience that filled every seat in the hall, on the stage, and the benches in the tent at the rear of the auditorium. In addition there were numerous standees outside each door.

Although devoted entirely to the works of one composer, Dr Koussevitsky has been discriminate in choosing numbers of sufficient variety and contrast to hold the interest of the average listener whether he be a Mozart fan or not. Another youthful work written when Mozart was 20 years old, the "Symphony in G minor" opened the program. As the key of C minor was dear to the heart of Beethoven, so was the key of G minor a favorite with Mozart for expressing some of his more passionate and moving phrases. The "Andante" particularly, as played last night was a moment of haunting beauty.

The talented and dependable Ruth Posselt, remembered by local concert-goers for her fine performance of the Tschaikowsky concerto with the Springfield Symphony orchestra last spring, was the soloist in Mozart's "Violin Concerto in D major (all seven of Mozart's violin concertos were composed during the year of 1777). Remarkable for the limpid melodic line of the "Andante Cantabile" and the contrasting, lilting rhythms of the rondo, rather than the conventional mold of its opening movement, Miss Posselt gave a sympathetic, sensitively phrased and technically perfect performance of this work, displaying an amazing bit of virtuosity in the cadenzas of the first and second movements. There was enthusiastic applause and the artist was recalled several times.

Following the intermission the orchestra played the overture to the opera, "Idomeneo," a work composed in 1780 when Mozart was under the musical influence of Gluck. Written in the grand manner, Dr Koussevitsky gave it a reading of dignity and breadth in keeping with its stately style.

A truly magnificent performance of the great "Symphony in E-flat" perhaps the most emotionally expressive of all the symphonies, "a triumph of beauty in sound," as Jahn put it, was the closing number. Impressive was the majestic "dagio" and the brilliance of the contrasting "Allegro" of the opening movement. The prevailing tonal beauty of the violin section was again in evidence throughout the lovely "Andante" and the "Menuetto." After the thrilling "Finale: Allegro," there was more than the usual applause, round of cheers, and "bravos," bringing Mr Koussevitsky back to the stage repeatedly.

The final concert of the series will be given tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 when the French pianist, Robert Casadesus, will be the soloist in the D major (Coronation) piano concerto.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 7 - 1944

DOWNPOUR FAILS TO KEEP CROWDS FROM TANGLEWOOD

Record Attendance Enjoys Final Mozart Concert—Dr Koussevitzky Accorded Birthday Felicitations

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 6 — A shower which left 1.15 inches of rain in one hour this afternoon at the United States weather bureau, Pittsfield, seemed to be an incentive to help break the record for attendance at the final of four Mozart festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The storm broke soon after 2, and there was a veritable deluge with the first arrivals. It continued right up to 3.30 and Dr Serge Koussevitzky wieided his baton for the start exactly on time.

Gordon Simpson, in charge of the box office, said today's attendance was 2750; last night it was 2700, and for the first and second, respectively, 2000 and 2200, making a grand total for the series of 9650, far exceeding expectations. This afternoon, as at the other concerts of the festival, every seat in the music hall was taken, and there were 240 chairs occupied on the stage back of the 35-piece orchestra. The others had general admission tickets. There were hundreds with only blankets between them and the rain-soaked oozy greensward.

Just before the start of the second half of the program, Jerome T. Greene, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra, appeared on the stage and extended 70th birthday greetings to Dr Koussevitzky in behalf of the trustees and the Mozart festival audience. Mr Greene's address which brought forth waves of applause follows:—

"Ladies and gentlemen: As this series of concerts draws to its close, I venture to speak on your behalf as well as for the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra in a greeting to Dr Koussevitzky whose offering of this Mozart festival we have associated with his recent birthday. What happier setting could there be for the celebration of that anniversary.

"We may apply to our good friend in his accustomed health and matchless vigor the memorial inscription to Sir Christopher Wren, the great English architect of St Paul's cathedral "If you seek his monument look about you." What a monument it is. The natural beauties and the facilities of Tanglewood; the superb orchestra he has led and molded to his art; the hundreds of eager young musicians to whom he and the faculty you see on this platform have given instruction, encouragement and inspiration at the Berkshire Music center and finally the scores of thousands who have attended the festival of former years who owe to him the recreation and joy that great music can bring and who will count the sure renewal of the festival after the war as one of the rich blessings of returning peace.

"Dr Hu Shih, the late embassador of China, on receiving an honorary degree at the Harvard tercentary remarked, 'It is Harvard's birthday, but we get the presents.' It is your birthday, Dr Koussevitzky, but we get the presents in the form of this beautiful festival. What can we offer in return? Our admiration, gratitude and affection expressed not only by our presence here today but also by our determination to maintain the ideals you embody and to preserve this temple of art which you have built.

"And so, Dr Koussevitzky, we wish for you and also for ourselves, many happy returns of the day."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1944

Tanglewood Triumphs

Ruth Posselt, Robert Casadesus Win Ovations as Mozart Festival Soloists

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

THE SECOND PAIR of Mozart concerts at Tanglewood turned out to be personal triumphs for the two soloists, Ruth Posselt who Saturday night played the D major violin Concerto and Robert Casadesus in the so-called "Coronation" piano Concerto on Sunday afternoon.

This reviewer is violently prejudiced in favor of Miss Posselt. He would nominate her to perform any violin concerto from Mozart to Tschaikowsky, even over any of the great virtuosos —name them yourself. This is because of her perfect command of tone. There are bigger tones, but none purer. She is incapable of offending the ear either by imperfections of pitch or quality. Her phrasing is precise, eloquent, artistocratic.

Are there any other prerequisites to artistic Mozart playing? In a hypercritical estimate of Miss Posselt's interpretation, the question came to my mind as to whether she had warmth. Certainly there was humanity in the rondo as well as the slow movement. Out of curiosity this question was put to a friend during intermission who replied with the dictum, "Perfect musical tones can't be anything but warm". Which may be a moot point but I would not willingly debate against it.

* * *

IF by some topsy-turvy reversal of protocol the ovation had come before the performance, one's opinion of Casadesus might have been influenced by his exemplary reception of the prolonged acclaim which he received. He was modest and generous in his insistence that Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra share in the plaudits. But he had the self-assurance of a congressman and had you known he was so business-like you wouldn't have trusted him with Mozart. And what a mistake that would have been!

Here again was primarily a great Mozart technique—jewelled scales and arpeggios, bubbling trills—everything crystal clear. He was perhaps over-fond of the una corda pedal, and his conception of the piece was of exquisite rather than robust proportions.

The finale was emphatic, resolute. He began it abruptly lest he be interrupted by applause after the larghetto as he was after the first movement. The larghetto was, as the youngsters say, quite out of this world. It framed two of Mozart's greatest attributes, simplicity and songfulness, by which people for generations have been sent.

* * *

IN spite of the fact that his players and his audiences have risen to their feet to do him homage, and in spite of the congratulatory speech made Sunday afternoon by Jerome D. Greene in behalf of the BSO trustees on the occasion of the Doctor's 70th birthday, Koussevitzky has studiously underlined the fact that W. A. Mozart was the hero of this Festival.

Even when he stood there conducting the wind octet in the C minor Serenade it was the composer and what he had to say that counted. There has been no spectacular conducting, no personalized interpreting. The E flat Symphony on Saturday and the "Jupiter" on Sunday afternoon afford plenty of opportunities for a build-up of the conductor but Dr. Koussevitzky was not at Tanglewood for that purpose.

Your reviewer does not pretend to inside knowledge when he says that the great Boston leader alone was responsible for the fact that Tanglewood reopened its doors this summer. It was a success and the credit is his.

But it was quite apparent that this Mozart Festival burst its bonds. Not only was it a sell-out, opera-concert hall and several hundred seats on the stage but overflow accommodations were taken far beyond what even the most sanguine planners expected. Sunday afternoon the lawn for quite some distance away from the concert hall was strewn with listeners—this in spite of the fact that a heavy shower preceded the concert by about an hour.

[167]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1944

MOZART FESTIVAL CLOSING PROGRAM PLEASES AUDIENCE

Wind Instrument Octet Plays Rarely-Heard 'Serenade' — 'Kleine Nachtmusik' Performed Perfectly

By VICTOR PRAHL

The Mozart festival at Tanglewood directed by Serge Koussevitsky with the assistance of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a close with yesterday afternoon's concert. Comprising some of Mozart's finest music, the final program opened with the rarely heard "Serenade" ("Nacht Musique") in C minor for eight wind instruments. Regarded as an outstanding example and superior to his other efforts in this field, Mozart himself liked this work well enough to arrange it as a quintet. In spite of its title, this "Serenade" in four movements, is an exciting, dramatic work and at times profoundly impressive and revealing. Scored for two oboes, wo horns, two clarinets and two bassoons, the composer exercised his ingenuity in using some rare and unusual combinations of these instruments. Especially in the canon of the "Menuetto," did the tonal texture of the different winds seem particularly appropriate to the contrapuntal treatment, while the closing "Allegro" exhibited originality in and mastery of the variation form. It was good to hear the members of the wind section—all skilled soloists—in this admirable and unusual composition. At the finish, Dr Koussevitsky shook hands with each member of the octet individually and the compliment was well deserved, for this work was one of the high lights of the festival.

Although the four other soloists of the festival had appeared here in previous seasons, this was the debut of Robert Casadesus, the well-known French pianist, in this setting. He played the D major piano concerto, popularly known as the "Coronation," due to the fact that Mozart first played it at the coronation festivities of Emperor Leopold II, in 1791. The orchestra plays a more important part in this score than in some of the better known concertos (Mozart wrote 28 concertos for the piano). The approach to this work by this musician-pianist was entirely admirable. While the more brilliant passages for the solo instrument of the first and last movements stood out with sparkling clarity, the piano always seemed at one with the orchestra and in the lyrical "Larghetto," the subtle ensemble constituted a moment of music at its purest. Mr Casadesus had a tremendous success with the audience which brought him back repeatedly.

The second half of the program began with the familiar "Kleine Nachtmusik." It was a pleasure to hear this much played work performed so perfectly. While most of Mozart's music of this genre dates from his youth, this composition in four movements written in his later years, in 1787, reveals his complete mastery of form and style in this idiom. This was followed by the closing number, the greatest and noblest of all the Mozart symphonies, that in C major, known as the "Jupiter," and socalled on account of "its Hellenic clarity even in complexity, its power combined with supreme beauty and its unsurpassed art." This symphony as played yesterday afternoon was in the nature of an event for not only was it Mozart at his greatest, but Dr Koussevitsky at his best, the rare combination resulting in an inspired performance. The audience reacted to the occasion by giving the conductor and his men an ovation which they will probably remember for a long time.

The printed program of the festival contained an open letter to Dr Koussevitsky from the distinguished musicologist, Dr Hugo Leichtentritt, in the course of which he wrote, "In these troubled times of war, Mozart's music, if performed with the perfection that we may justly expect at Tanglewood, will act, more than any other music, as a consoling, healing, purifying power beyond comparison. No other of the great composers can compete with Mozart in this power of rejuvenation of the soul, because his music is the idealization of youth. As long as men will continue to long for youth, a youth already past and lost, they will find in Mozart's music the final and ever valid expression of that longing."

The audience, the largest of any of the four concerts, numbered approximately 3000.

Mozart Festival Attendance Comes Close to 10,000 Mark

Many Notables Heard Concerts At Tanglewood—Woman Bicyclist Spends Night Under Tree

Eagle
Aug 7

Using their umbrellas, those who were lucky or foresighted enough to have brought them, for protection from the rain, and an hour later as sunshades, an overflow audience of 1300 attended the final concert of the Mozart Festival. Among the audience of the last two concerts, as on the previous week end, were many persons famous in the musical world.

The crowd had started to gather at 1.30, two hours before the first note was struck. On the south lawn, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, were a dozen picnic parties. At 2.30, when the rain came, the overflow audience ran for cover under the canvas north of the hall that had already done its duty as protection against the storm of the previous Sunday. The front line, however, with choice seats, good-naturedly sat through the rain as at a football game, protected by soaking blankets that they had brought to sit on, or not protected at all.

Increasing with each concert, from 2200 to 2720 yesterday, the total audience for the festival was just under 10,000, who came by car, taxi, on foot and bicycle. It would have been far larger but for the contrary weather. The largest number of cars in the parking field was yesterday's total of 551.

Many Use Bicycles

A young woman arrived by bicycle from Charlemont Saturday, slept under a Tanglewood tree, bought vegetables and milk from a near-by farmer, heard both concerts, and started back at 5.30 yesterday to care for her baby whom she had left with her mother-in-law. Eight Mt. Holyoke students bicycled from South Hadley and a bus load of students from the French summer session of the Northampton School for Girls and a score of Waves came from Northampton.

Among the noted figures were Mrs. Lytle Hull, vice-president of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and founder, president and backer of the New Opera Company of New York, who was a guest, on her way from Northeast Harbor, Me., of Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski at their Stockbridge summer home; Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Reiner; Arthur Lourier of New York, composer and writer; Dr. Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla., and Mrs. Holt, who are spending the summer at Woodstock, Conn.; Madame Olga Samaroff of New York and Tyringham; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Swift (the former opera singer, Clara Dux), of Chicago, also guests of Dr. and Mrs. Rodzinski.

The musicians left for Boston and their summer homes last night and this morning, excepting Rosario Mazzeok, clarinist, who is staying in the house at the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary, George Mager, trumpet player, who has a farm in West Stockbridge, and Victor Polatschek, clarinetist, who has bought a summer home on Stockbridge Bowl.

Boston Season Next

The orchestra will open its Boston season in early October with eight of its members in the armed forces, playing in military bands overseas and in training camps. Before Pearl Harbor the men were playing benefit concerts and in the past two years they have constantly given their services as an orchestra in concerts at military camps, in Symphony Hall for performances for men and women in uniform, and for Russian, British and United Nations Relief.

Because 30 per cent of the players are French-born, the war early affected them and their wives, whose relatives and friends in France have not been heard from in the past four or five years. Some of the Frenchmen came to replace German musicians in World War I, and haver emained.

Each man in the service left with a watch on his wrist, the joint gifts of his colleagues and the orchestra, and the promise of his job when he returns.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 8

PROMINENT ART PATRONS, Mrs. Lytel Hull, vice-president of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, founder, president and backer of the New Opera Company of New York and the former Mrs. Vincent Astor, greets Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, backstage at the close of the Mozart Festival Sunday at Tanglewood. She congratulated Dr. Koussevitzky and wished him a happy 70th birthday.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Ten Years Ago Tonight

When the 1934 Lewishon Stadium concerts were over, Henry Hadley brought 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra up to the Hanna Farm on the Stockbridge back road ten years ago tonight and conducted in a flimsy plywood shell the first of three concerts which had been organized for that week end and were advertised with the slogan, "Music under the moon." The importance of that event hardly could have been sensed by any one of the three thousand among the blanketed, be-coated audience seated within the horse-exercising ring. Many an unimaginative head had wagged in depreciatory incredulity at the "mad" undertaking.

The descending dew, a stalwart echo, and a few other unforeseen inconveniences can be remembered with a smile, but the items on the favorable side far outweighed any minor obstacles. The venture was a success to the extent that the deficit was small and was enthusiastically absorbed by the several local guarantors.

It was conceived, of course, as a local institution. But the standard of performances which Mr. Hadley established at the outset and later was expanded and raised by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, caused the enterprise to become of national musical importance. Its present eminence may be due to a combination of advantages, but certainly what has given Tanglewood its unique position among summer musical ventures in America is its uncompromising adherence to the highest musical standards.

If Mr. Hadley, frail and ailing though he was at the time, furnished the artistic spark, it was Gertrude Robinson Smith, among several Central and South Berkshire co-workers and sponsors, who fed the spark the bulk of the fuel.

One committeeman who does not pride himself necessarily on his perception was moved to prophesy: "With such strong motive power this thing will go through."

And how it went through now is common knowledge from coast to coast to all who are interested in music. The courage and vision, the intrepidity, of those pioneers of 10 years ago, can be appreciated better from this vantage point of time than they possibly could be at the moment. Miss Robinson-Smith and her hard-working, unselfish corps of helpers, working with Henry Hadley, Massachusetts-born, Massachusetts-trained, but world-renowned, accomplished something which not only earned them great honor and the gratitude of their fellow-citizens, but brought rich rewards to musical America.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 9 - 1944

Around Town

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

WELL, the Mozart festival at "Tanglefoot" is now honorable history. The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, have by now, packed up their trailers, and returned to the "Home of the Cod and the Beans," while Serge Koussevitzky has gone to his "Tanglewood" estate, which he calls "Serak" on a high hill, overlooking the Stockbridge Bowl and the music sheds of the Berkshire Music center for a well-earned holiday.

E. S. VAN OLINDA

Celebrities were a dime a dozen. During one intermission, we noted Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the New York Philharmonic orchestra and his attractive wife, Halena, who have a 240-acre estate about a mile from the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge. He is practically a native son. And then we saw Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburg symphony. We could not help but wonder what they really thought of the conducting of Mr. Koussevitzky. We thought it "tops."

The Sunday afternoon concert scheduled for 3:30 o'clock looked for a few minutes as if it might be washed out. There was a deluge from 3 o'clock right up to five minutes before the down beat. But the sun came out, and Jupiter, the "Rain God," was relegated to his rightful position on the program, and the festival came to a triumphal conclusion with the playing of the symphony which bears the Sun God's tag.

One sees funny sights over at Tanglewood. For instance, during the intermission, we noted one attractive young lady with a penciled sign pinned on her back where all might see, which read as follows: "Attention! Will you give me a ride to New York? Am willing to pay!" We wouldn't be surprised if some Albanians returned to our fair city by way of the metropolis. She was that attractive.

And then there was the lady, who entered the music shed in her bare feet, carrying her shoes and stockings. At first, we thought she might be an Oriental and had removed her foot coverings before entering the sacred precincts of the concert hall. But no! She confided that she was shy on shoe rationing coupons and was protecting her precious investment from the wet ground. Truly, music, like politics, makes strange bedfellows. When we chatted for a moment with manager Judd, of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and referred to the festival as the "American Salzburg," he said: "Let us forget that. It's all over. This should be publicized as 'The American Tanglewood'." We think Brother Judd has something there.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 8 - 1944

The Mozart Festival

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

With the bravery and spirit of America and her Allies hovering over the scene, Koussevitzky carried on to a brilliant finish what would have been the 11th Berkshire Symphonic Festival. From the very depths of every instrument's soul went forth a message to this ravaged world. The idyllic surroundings of the Berkshires, with only peace and serenity in the atmosphere, emitted a challenge to the forces of war and hatred.

The glamour, the pomp, the overtones of youthful exuberance, the color, and the gaiety of the '34-'41 festivals had all gone to war. The shed, once brimming over with enthusiastic music-lovers, for many years the vortex of a colorful panorama, stood closed and silent, catching the reflected glory of the little opera house. The big festival, the tremendous crowds, the extravagance of the former spectacles, were not in evidence, but the spirit and soul of the ideal, conceived so brilliantly by Koussevitzky, survived and flourished.

In a world where nothing has been preserved because of sacred significance, where the enemy recognizes only strength and cunning, the untouched splendor and exquisite natural setting of Tanglewood becomes more poignant. The spacious lawns, the rolling hills, the Bowl sitting in earth's own saucer, the grandeur of the open spaces, and the infinite ethereal sky—all like Koussevitzky's art and charm remain unaltered. Tanglewood, the shrine of music-lovers, once again received its pilgrimage, took its artistic worshippers to the altar of Mozart, there to find rejuvenation of spirit and soul.

How encouraging is the thought that the harmony and splendor of music succeed in raising their voices above the din of the raging battlefronts. Though the deafening roar of guns is far from our shores, the repercussions are in the hearts of every American. And for those who sought the comfort of music—in and out of uniform—Koussevitzky in his beloved Tanglewood brought uncontested peace and renewed vigor to their disconcerted minds!

IDA LIGHTMAN KAY
North Adams.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
READING, PA.
EAGLE
AUG 12 1944

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

THE great Boston Symphony Orchestra and its presiding genius, Serge Koussevitsky, were going to play a Mozart festival at their beautiful summer quarters in the Berkshires this summer—and play it they did, in spite of everything. Thanks to my Boston surgeon, who loves music and has considerable gas for his car, I managed to be present at this wartime version of what, when peace comes, will be a worthy rival of the great musical feasts at Salzburg—of hallowed memory.

Alice Hughes

Of course, this year Koussy couldn't use the huge Music Shed, near Stockbridge, as the audience was made up of summer Berkshire residents and a few diehards like myself, minus the wonderful crowd of starched old Boston Brahmins who used to come to these wonderful musical experiences before Pearl Harbor. This time the concerts were held in a smaller theatre on the beautiful grounds called "Tanglewood"—and the crowd overflowed onto the lawn. In the rapt mob I saw a few of my friends who had also managed the pilgrimage—Mrs. Lowell Thomas, wife of the oracle; Leo Godowsky, son of the great musician, and his wife Frankie, sister of the late George Gershwin.

The orchestra was only a third its normal size, but the maestro explained that this was the number of musicians used in Mozart's time, which made it all right. During one symphony, a cloudburst descended, with the usual thunder, and sent the overflow scurrying to shelter. Koussy repeated the entire number when the storm abated so that the devotees shouldn't miss a single note. The soloist was the great Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, who had made her big-time debut under Koussevitsky's patronage, there at "Tanglewood." Her art and artistry have grown vastly, and her singing now reflects her happiness since her marriage to a Harlem clergyman.

It was a wartime Mozart festival under every possible difficulty, but everyone lucky enough to be at that lovely spot will tell you that it was wonderful—and far better than no Mozart at all from Koussy and his Boston band boys.

[168]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 7 - 19

Crowds Fill Theatre and Lawns For Fourth Tanglewood Concert

Jerome D. Greene, Board President, Pays Tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra for Gift of Music to Berkshire County

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The fourth concert of the Mozart Festival yesterday afternoon brought the series to a magnificent close. The storm and threatening weather passed on to leave the skies bright, the air crystal-clear, and the ground underfoot passable, at your own risk. Every seat inside the theatre and all the temporary seats and arrangements placed outside the building, were filled to the last inch with a loyal and extra cordial multitude of music lovers.

Koussevitzky and the 35 men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra rewarded them with a program signalized by extra snap and sparkle. It becomes difficult to differentiate between performances of the matchless Boston Orchestra, but we cannot recall a program in which they all seemed more on the beam. The program started with the holiday for wind instruments, the C minor serenade for two oboes, clarinets, bassoons and horns; through the D major piano concerto with Robert Casadesus as soloist; the string section's recompense for their colleagues' short grasp of the spotlight, the "Kleine Nachtmusik" and ended with a truly glorious performance of the Jupiter symphony.

Just before the program resumed after intermission, Dr. Koussevitzky escorted Jerome D. Greene, president of the board of trustees of the Boston orchestra, to the platform where he gave a short honorary and laudatory address to the orchestra's director on the occasion of his recent 70th birthday and the unique achievement of this Mozart Festival.

The choice of symphonies was exceptionally astute. In addition to four of the late and so-called big ones, there was a rich selection of the early ones. Two overtures of which "Idomeneo, King of Crete" was played Saturday evening are almost never heard, and while it was interesting to make their acquaintance, there can be little doubt that the judgment of time in neglecting them has been understandable and valid. The divertimenti, or serenades, of Mozart are examples of his extremely facile genius. He evidently dashed these off as a newspaperman reports a traffic collision but they often proved to be the most inspired and lasting of his entire production.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusic" for strings alone is a prime exhibit. Yesterday it was dashed off by the men of the orchestra with a confidence which allowed them to play with abandon and yet maintain the immaculate virtuosity which is their normal manner. The finish of details and the general conception of this piece, as in the symphonies, are the material on which rests the peerless reputation of the Boston orchestra and that of its leader. These are the major pillars in the edifice of their musical character. The size of the orchestra, on this occasion and for this purpose, is not only adequate but ideally suited to the music and to the hall.

The C minor serenade for wind instruments is essentially chamber music. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted, although such a procedure is debatable. When it is played in the other version in which Mozart also wrote it, for string quartet with added second viola, it is played of course without anyone conducting. Nevertheless, the performance is the thing, and it was indeed a beautiful piece of work. The opportunity to hear the winds of the Boston orchestra, unencumbered by their colleagues of the strings, afforded them the too rare chance to display what has been long regarded as one of the prime exhibits of orchestral perfection. The blending of their tone, the finesse and grace of their phrases, and the general character of the performance was a high spot of the entire Festival. The andante was taken at a tempo which dragged considerably, but otherwise it was a superb performance.

DESPITE RAIN-DRENCHED GRASS yesterday, more than 1300 music lovers spread out coats and blankets and sat on the lawn at Tanglewood to hear the fourth and last Mozart concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One woman, with an eye toward comfort, brought her deck chair.

The strings got their chance later in the program. Their attributes and abilities are too well known to be astonished now at anything they may do, but they distinguished themselves again as could have been expected. Going into the closing number of the Festival, the Jupiter symphony, they maintained the level established at the very outset and were accorded an ovation, which their conductor most graciously shared with them on innumerable recalls.

Probably the most striking individual success of the Festival was that of Robert Casadesus in the D major (Coronation) piano concerto. With poetry in every note, even when he employed his most decisive and virile pianism, he gave the music a spirit and a style with which Mozart would have been gratified, could he have returned to observe the honor being accorded him here in the Berkshires after some hundred seventy-five years. His playing was completely without mannerisms, indeed there was a humbleness before the music, and attention to the business of the moment, which marked him as an artist through and through. In an afternoon and in a series in which applause has been on tap in unlimited quantities, his reception stood out as among the most sincere and spontaneous, as deserved.

Saturday Concert

Saturday evenmg the orchestra was at its brilliant best. A cool breeze moved through the Theatre to dispel the oppresive humidity. There was a definite lift to the whole program. In the beautiful little G minor symphony, especially the first two movements, there was some of the most exquisite orchestral ensemble playing achievable, and, still more specifically, in the second subject of the andante, the interplay, the dialogue between the strings and the wind, oboes, bassoons and horns, was unforgettable, so smoothly and so sympathetically did the statements of the strings find response in the winds.

Later in the program came the great E flat symphony, and again did the same spirit pervade every note of the score. The andante under Koussevitsky's glances, (at this point the baton is redundant,) reaches the pinnacle of perfection in the performance and in the evening. And probably it is this very unity of musical good taste and instrumental proficiency which combine to give the Boston orchestra's Mozart its special bouquet. For, with all the care and finish of detail, there is a confidence which allows relaxation and flexibility. This was no cautious feeling-out as a cat advances on padded paws, but the assured and proud march-past of musicians certain of their artistic integrity.

The seating of the orchestra at these concerts has been altered in one particular, the second violins were to the right of the conductor, exchanging normal positions with the violas. This was no doubt dictated by the numbers of the various sections, as there were six seconds and four violas in the first brace of concerts. In these final concerts another desk of seconds has been added to match the numerical strength of the firsts. This was a wise move because in several instances in the preceding concerts there was a suspicion of inadequacy in substance in the second violins. In the slow movement of the most beautifully done A major symphony on the opening evening, the seconds repeat the theme immediately after its statement by the firsts, and here, for an example, the melody did not emerge sufficiently. The new arrangement in this half of the festival overcame that situation.

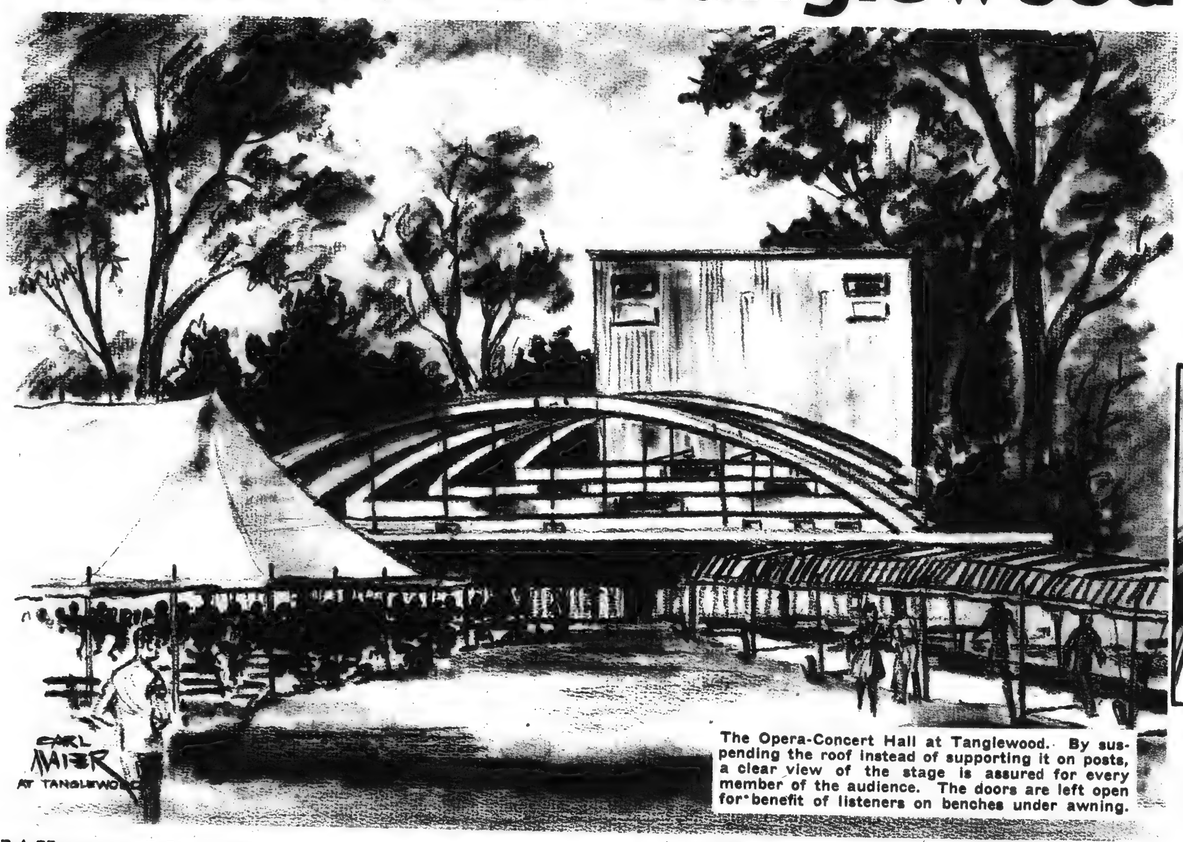
Ruth Posselt Plays

The soloist was Ruth Posselt in the D major violin concerto. We wish we might say that her performance was as stunning as her appearance, but the concerto was marked by an evident studious assiduity, mellifluous in tone, clean as a whistle, and the accompaniment was all that could be asked. Miss Posselt played flawlessly and without ever suggesting that her tone was forced, but there remained an impression of lofty correctness. She received a tremendous and spontaneous ovation.

In these four concerts a large and astute selection of Mozartiana has been offered large audiences. The standard of the performances has been of the degree to attract music-lovers from afar, in addition to the loyal ones from the neighboring communities. Dr. Koussevitzky must appreciate that the calibre of his work and that of his men of the orchestra is recognized. Such Mozart is the result of years of accumulation in experience, study and actual performance. The leader may provide the spark at any particular program which gives the individual performance its vitality, but the symmetry, of the nuances, and the general persuasiveness are all worked out through long years of application. The results were evident during the past two week ends.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 22 1944

MOZART at Tanglewood



The Opera-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. By suspending the roof instead of supporting it on posts, a clear view of the stage is assured for every member of the audience. The doors are left open for benefit of listeners on benches under awning.

Bench customers, of whom there were several hundred at each concert, are pictured above. At the left are some of the listeners inside.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducts a small orchestra in a symphony by Mozart at one of the evening concerts. The musicians are on a platform built over orchestra pit.

Where Hawthorne Worked, Summer Audiences Now Gather Without Formality to Hear Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra

STORY BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE—SKETCHES BY CARL F. MAIER

SATURDAY EVENING—The concert will not begin for more than an hour, but there are a few cars parked outside the fence even now, and a few persons strolling among the tall pines and birches and the thick hemlock hedges, or under the grape arbor with its green bunches ripening. Some of the visitors sit on the porch of the closed residence, a large, gray, slate-roofed, deteriorating building, witness to many architectural influences. The view is across lawn, hedge, and woods to Lake Mackinac and the Berkshires. Mist enhances the mass and outline of the hills.

This is Tanglewood, an estate in the towns of Lenox and Stockbridge; it is remembered as a place where Hawthorne worked and it is famous as the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The big music shed is boarded up until the world is calmer. Tonight's concert will be in the much smaller Opera-Concert Hall. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who was 70 last month, is celebrating with a Mozart festival of four concerts.

Miss Posselt

The crowd gathers gradually. There is little formality in dress—here and there a gown sweeping the grass, but mostly sports clothes and ordinary garb, a few young men and young women in uniform. There are not many young men at all. People of means buy tickets for seats inside. The hall holds 1200 normally. More than 200 more will be seated behind the orchestra. Others will sit outside on benches, under an awning or unprotected, and others will lie on blankets on the grass. About 2300 are expected.

At the rear of the hall, musicians in black trousers and white jackets are strolling and talking, playing phrases on violins, stopping, trying something else. A bassoon leans in an angle of the building. In the wings, the radio men test their apparatus.

Presently the auditorium is filled. The lights go out, except those needed by the musicians. Dr. Koussevitzky appears. The applause is fervent. He smiles and bows. He seems remarkably vigorous for his age. It is said that in rehearsal it is the players who tire, not he.

A symphony in G minor, composed by Mozart in his youth, is followed by the concerto in D major, No. 4, K. 218, for violin. Ruth Posselt is soloist. She is a blonde, young, in a blue, gauzy dress with a few spangles. She keeps a small handkerchief under Dr. Koussevitzky's music stand to dry the perspiration from fingers and fingerboard. Her performance is exquisite. The audience claps ecstatically. She shakes hands with Dr. Koussevitzky, who is smiling, nodding, trying to leave the stage to her. She shakes hands, with particular warmth and affection, with the concertmaster, Richard Burgin. He is her husband.

Somebody shouts, "Bravo!" Every such audience has a man who shouts, "Bravo!" This time it is a young man with dark, curly hair. He is wearing a white linen suit. Afterwards he staggers up the aisle, rocked to his soul, exhausted, clutching a cigarette. He gasps a word or two to acquaintances as he goes along. Perhaps he is the representative of the mute thousands sitting at home by their radios, unable to applaud Miss Posselt. They have heard his "Bravo!" and they are relieved, though their representative has hazarded lungs and nerves to speak for them and won't be worth a nickel for a week.

After an overture and a symphony, the automobiles jam slowly along West road towards Lenox, under a cloudy sky.

SUNDAY MORNING—"Koussie," as he is generally referred to, has a summer estate called Seranak (Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky). It occupies an eminence affording a Mozartian prospect of lake and hills—elegant in variation, proportion, and contrast, profound yet simple, enchanting the beholder with distant music rather than striking him dumb with mighty chords.

To one side, through tall poplars, Tanglewood can be seen in the valley. Not far away is an estate once owned by Carnegie; the scenery reminded him, it is said, of Scotland. The Jesuits have acquired the property for a school.

Koussie has several ladies and gentlemen as guests. One is the conductor Fritz Reiner. The host, in light trousers and a blue jacket, is cordial. He consents to be interviewed for a few minutes, and leads the way into a drawing room in which stands a huge portrait of himself with his double-bass, by Shoukhaieff.

If there is one thing he desires, Dr. Koussevitzky says, it is to see the public accept modern music. The attitude is far better than it was even 10 years ago. Now, at least, people listen. Modern music is the expression of modern man, a man who goes from New York to Chicago in five hours instead of 20, talks to London in five minutes instead of communicating by letter. It is not a freakish expression, but the result of evolution. Even traditions grow. Why cannot people understand and approve the voice of their own age, their own lives, the appeal to unaccustomed emotions? But they will. He smiles earnestly, confidently.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON—Near the Tanglewood box-office, not yet open for the afternoon concert, a young lady in shorts, jersey, and blue bandana is sitting on the grass writing. Her name is Mrs. Henry Scarborough. Yesterday afternoon she left her eight-months-old boy with her mother in Charlemont and pedalled forty miles to Pittsfield on her second-hand bicycle. She couldn't get a room, because of the festival crowds, so she slept under a tree; she had brought a blanket roll. At 3 o'clock this morning, it began to rain. She got up and finished her sleep on the porch of a store. Then she rode here, getting breakfast at a farmhouse on the way. At the moment, she is writing instructions for the care of her baby while she is away later on a two-weeks' canoe trip in the Adirondacks. She has brought a red skirt to wear at the concert. . . . .

Dr. Koussevitzky

Several picnic parties are beginning to establish themselves under the trees, with their blankets, jugs, and boxes of lunch. The sky promises, then threatens. Occasionally a few drops are felt.

Finally, just before the concert, when the auditorium and the outside benches are filled, it does rain. Then it clears. The wet grass does not deter the blanket trade. The orchestra comes in, in white suits. The tympanist takes his mallets out of a brief case. An elderly lady going down the aisle says to her companion, "Our seats are right under the guns." Now Dr. Koussevitzky, in a brown, double-breasted suit with a light pin stripe, enters from the wing. He conducts the audience in "The Star Spangled Banner."

Robert Casadesus, the pianist, plays the "Coronation Concerto." His tone and style suit the music perfectly, and the orchestra participates with the finest balance and vitality of expression. The crowd is overwhelmed. Casadesus bows. He has a tug-of-war with Koussie to get him out from behind the piano. More applause. More and more.

At intermission, the audience smokes, talks, and strolls on the grounds. In one of the hedged enclosures a fish-and-cherub fountain splashes in the sun.

The auditorium breathes the crowd in again, and the "Kleine Nachtmusik" and the "Jupiter" symphony end the Festival. . . .

The bus returning to Providence from Pittsfield passes Mrs. Scarborough unconcernedly pedalling back to Charlemont.

Before the concert; the musicians warm up outside the theatre. Their acquaintances and the general public go to talk with them or to get informal glimpses of them.

[170]

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Music Under the Moon

Ten years ago tonight the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's initial concert was heard by 3000 patrons who sat under a clear August sky at the Hanna Farm, Interlaken. Under the baton of the late Henry Hadley, the orchestra played before a shell with the audience in the open in the horse show ring in front of the spacious shingled barns of the summer estate. Later a tent was used and then when Dr. Hadley was obliged to discontinue because of failing health, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took over and has since conducted the concerts. The programs of 1936 and '37 were given on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, now occupied by Foxhollow School. The gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks' estate, including a large house and acreage,— Tanglewood, gave the Boston Symphony a permanent home and then in 1938 came the huge shed accommodating 8000, a concert theatre and smaller buildings comprising the Berkshire Music Center where students are attracted from all parts of the country. The war caused curtailment and discontinuance of full-symphony concerts although this summer a Mozart festival of six concerts was given in the small concert hall to the pleasure of several thousand music lovers.

[171]

EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES
SEP 17 1944

Music speaks movingly to Anne Conners and Corp. Arthur Weinstein. Their faces reflect rehearsal thrills provided by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Musical Week End

The perfect vacation, in the opinion of some 3000 persons who this year attended the Berkshire Music Festival in Massachusetts, is one that combines the study of the best in music with the joys of the outdoors.

That's why girls like Anne Conners, a lyric soprano from Danbury, Conn., spend a musical week end near Stockbridge and the Festival. At home they call daughter Anne "the girl with the singing smile." Why? That's easy to see—and so is Anne!

In prewar days, the Festival boasted a school of music that attracted students from all over the world. Today only the very hardiest of easterners —perhaps with seven-league boots—manage to overcome travel obstacles.

Anne comes by her music by way of a Dad who is an organist. She has three sisters who play the piano, violin and cello. In winter she studies at Juilliard School of Music, where she'll soon get her master's degree. Dramatics and ballet prepare her for a stage career. Then comes summer again at Stockbridge and the ballet of the woodland creatures set to the world's finest music on Nature's own vast stage, roofed over by the sky.

PARADE QUICK QUIZ:

- QUESTION A: What instruments do the members of Anne's family play?
- QUESTION B: Whose works were being played at the festival Anne attended?
- QUESTION C: What instrument is the man in the left foreground in the above picture playing?

Answers on page 27

[172]

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

Just what Anne and Arthur are listening to is anybody's guess. They can't see the orchestra but they can hear perfectly. Under the odd shaped music shed in the rear sit many of the 3000 persons who went to Stockbridge this summer for a musical vacation.

The drummer's having about as much fun as Anne as she wields a couple of wicked sticks after a rehearsal. Snap it up, Anne!

Here Anne's learning how to make friends and influence base viol players. Her "singing smile" is working a charm all its own.

"Musical Promenade" might well be the title of this picture. Anne and Arthur are treading a harmonious measure through Tanglewood paths toward a Saturday concert. They're discussing plans for a hike and swim. That's how it's done at the Music Festival.

This old wall has heard a lot of musical discussion in its time. Maybe that's what makes it look so cut up. Anne and Arthur are deep in the study of an all-Mozart program with Serge Koussevitsky conducting. This, incidentally, is the Festival's eleventh year.

Anne finds quaint relics fascinating and Arthur's fascinated, too, obviously, as they visit Lennox Town Hall's antique show.

Yes, there's a fringe on top. Anne and Arthur have rented a surrey, complete with horse, from a farmer. Now to have real fun.

The end of a perfect day, and of a perfect musical week end, finds Anne and her friends singing around the fireside at the hotel.

The Berkshire Music Festival with its outdoor joys is just about over, but it will live on in their hearts and in their songs.

BLANK PAGE

THIS CLIPPING FROM LIFE
CHICAGO, ILL.
SEP 1 - 1941

Relaxed on the grass, these listeners soak up sunshine and music at the same time. They pay $1.50 admission. Below: Koussevitzky has tea with the student-conductors at his hilltop home. These are the young Americans who, he believes, will soon develop into orchestral leaders as accomplished as any that Europe could provide.

The fan-shaped Music Shed, designed by famed Finnish Architect Eliel Saarinen, is acoustically so perfect that an orchestral pianissimo can be

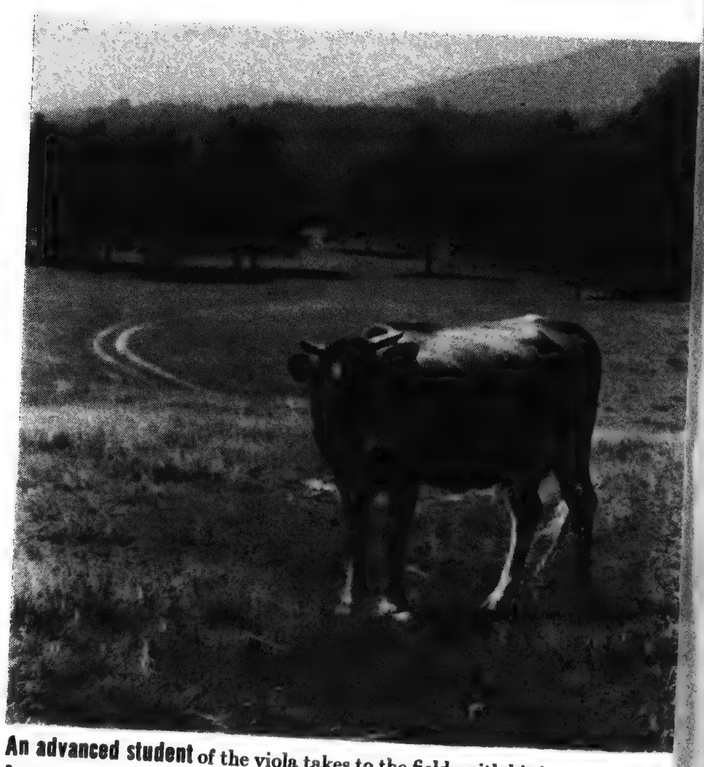
Life Goes to the

Thousands of Americans find new

Troubled peoples have always turned for solace to the church and to music, the art form most closely related to religion. Significant therefore in the U. S. today is the ever-increasing popularity of summer music performed outdoors. To natural concert halls scattered over the country (New York's Lewisohn Stadium, Chicago's Ravinia Park, Hollywood's Bowl, Cincinnati's Summer Opera, Denver's Red Rocks, Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell) swarm Americans who in more carefree times thought of relaxation in terms of amusement parks and beach clubs. Not only to the cultured and well-to-do but to all who can hitchhike, bus-ride or tramp their way, these centers of aesthetic pleasure have become part of emotional survival.

Foremost summer musical event is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in the last eight years has grown from an experiment in a tent to Salzburg's heir-apparent. It now has a $90,000 Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on the beautiful green acres of the Tanglewood estate where Hawthorne lived and worked.

There, in a quiet bowl of land surrounded by blue hills sloping to a polished silver lake, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its dynamic conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, annually send waves of symphonic sound to melt among the ancient pines. Filling the Shed to its 6,000 capacity and overflowing in multi-



An advanced student of the viola takes to the fields with his instrument for undisturbed practice. Right: under the stately aisle of white pines

3 X

Berkshire Festival (continued)

A CONDUCTOR'S FACE IS A CALL TO MUSIC

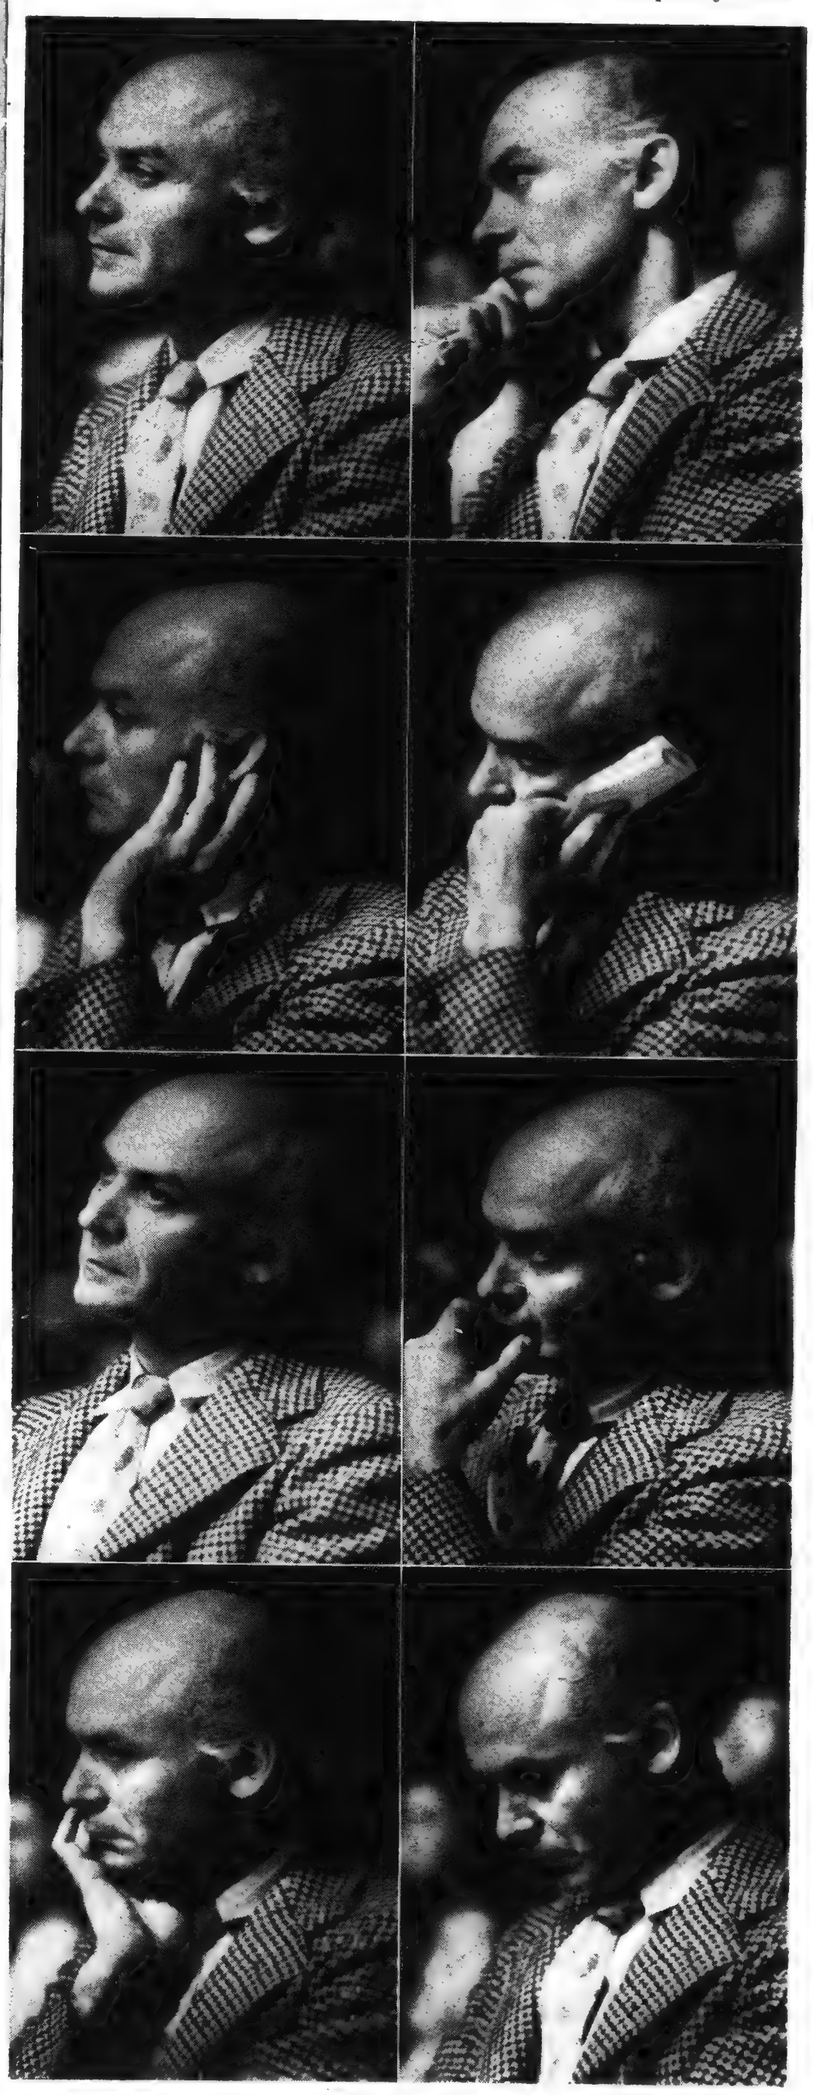
With compelling gestures, Serge Koussevitzky leads his orchestra through a rehearsal of the immortal passages of Beethoven's Eroica. As the music swells, his hands slash the air, his mouth silently implores the instruments to give up their very souls, his whole face calls for more, still more ardor.

3X

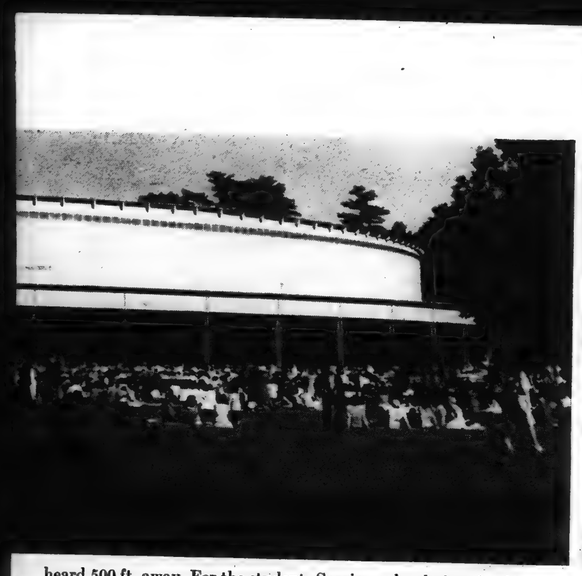
ON NEXT PAGE 75

A LISTENER'S FACE IS AN ANSWER TO MUSIC

Professor Hugo Burghauser, one-time president of the Vienna Philharmonic Society, listens to the Eroica. A skilled musician and a skilled listener, his face reflects the music's changing moods. Not all concertgoers look so absorbed; some close their eyes, some smile, some are completely blank.



2X



heard 500 ft. away. For the students Saarinen also designed a Chamber Music Hall and a Theater Concert Hall, which were completed this year.

Berkshire Festival

peace and joy in outdoor music

tudes on the smooth lawns around it, the church-silent audiences —which this year reached a record total of 13,000 at a single concert—seem to breathe with the music.

They come from cities and suburbs and villages, from resort hotels and tourist camps and farmhouses. Those who cannot afford seats or who prefer the open air sprawl on blankets in the grass. They bring picnic meals and their children, take off their shoes, sit linked in close couples under the trees.

Inside the Shed, the small but intense figure of Koussevitzky hovers over his orchestra like a presiding spirit. Though to many of his listeners (see upper left) he is invisible during the concerts, he nevertheless becomes to them a symbol of the peaceful joy which they find at Tanglewood.

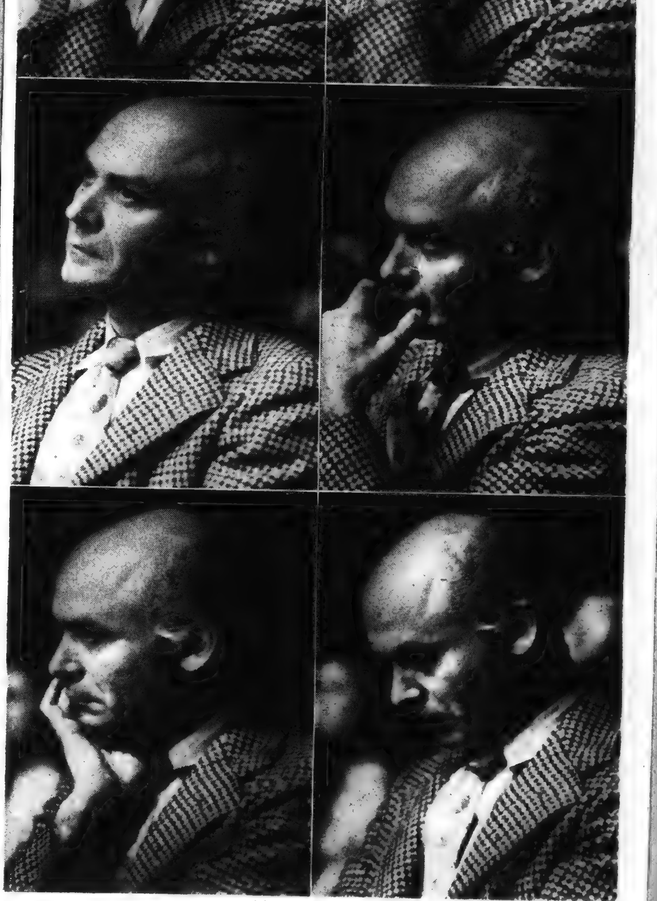
"Koussie," as he is affectionately called by his students and colleagues, is also the moving spirit of the associated Music Center, a super-school for advanced musicians which was started last year, fulfilling a long-time dream of the great conductor. The Center puts 340 hand-picked students through a stiff six-week course, definitely establishes Tanglewood as a fountainhead of U. S. music. The primary object of the school, says Koussevitzky, is "to train young musicians both as performers and as composers that they may be at one and the same time givers and receivers, administering the sacrament of sound."

known as Hawthorne Row, members of the student orchestra rehearse under the direction of Georges Moleux, first double bass of the B. S. O.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE 75

A LISTENER'S FACE IS AN ANSWER TO MUSIC

Professor Hugo Burghauser, one-time president of the Vienna Philharmonic Society, listens to the Eroica. A skilled musician and a skilled listener, his face reflects the music's changing moods. Not all concertgoers look so absorbed; some close their eyes, some smile, some are completely blank.



Opera News – March 10, 1941

TRAINING FOR TOMORROW'S OPERA

By HERBERT GRAF

THE STAGE DIRECTOR OF THE METROPOLITAN TELLS OF STARS IN THE MAKING

The European war flings its challenge to opera in the United States. Without the provincial theatres of Germany, Italy and France, where is young America to secure its practical training for the future? What is the young graduate of our conservatories to do before he may apply to the existing opera companies in his own land? How can such local opera companies be stimulated without trained material to fill their ranks?

Questions such as these are being answered this summer in the Berkshire Music Centre where last July the first experimental steps were taken under the idealistic leadership of Serge Koussevitzky. In 1939 it was my privilege to meet the distinguished conductor as a member of the audience of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. When he told me of his ultimate plans for festival plays, and the development of the scenic aspects of the festival, I suggested that a foundation might be laid in one department of the summer school which he then had in mind, the Berkshire Music Centre.

After brief deliberation, Dr. Koussevitzky and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra wired their consent. A year later the department was in full swing with Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik assisting me in the training of twenty young men and women.

Chosen from among 200 aspirants from every part of the country, this student body represented the talented potentialities of the stage, most of them between the ages of 20 and 25. Fifteen hours each week they worked with me over the particular requirements of operatic acting. Five hours they studied their roles individually or in ensemble. For two hours Eric Hawkins taught them physical training, and for two more Roland Partridge grounded them in diction. The same curriculum is being planned for the coming summer with the addition of two other periods devoted to work in scenic and costume design and the problems of make-up with Mr. Rychtarik.

Herbert Graf leads his students to work

As the best stage training consists in stage activity, we put on a series of scenes from standard operas, some in English, to try its effect on the audience and work out a practicable presentation; and some in the original language, which would be valuable to young singers seeking employment in the established companies.

The Papageno scenes from The Magic Flute excited applause which surprised us all—so immediate was the reaction of even our unsophisticated hearers. The Letter Scene from Eugen Onyegin tested our young players in their ability to put over a dramatic and tender emotion in their own language, while the Acis and Galatea was presented in its original English against the charming background of the Tanglewood garden, and Hindemith's Hin und Zurück, also in English, demonstrated the contemporary repertory.

The first act finale from Bohème, the first act from Contes d'Hoffmann and acts from Rigoletto, Freischütz and Don Carlos were given in their original Italian, German or French.

The audiences, which paid no admission, came in increasing numbers through our six weeks season. Toward the close as many as 1200 people sat in the fields surrounding our simple covered stage. Costumes were make-

Acis and Galatea in the Berkshires

Dr. Graf rehearses the death of Acis shift, usually executed by the students themselves: one could find Papageno, sitting in the grass, sewing feathers to his tunic, or Olympia, threading her ruffles with ribbon on a garden bench.

The approval of the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations, as well as the generous support of Mrs. Curtis Bok, resulted in substantial grants to make the school possible. In the future it is hoped to add a modern theatre to the present inadequate equipment, and Eliel Saarinen has already designed an appropriate theatre building to harmonize with the vast Music Shed for which he was also responsible.

Orchestra, chorus and folk-dancing were independent features of the Music Centre, both contributing their services to our stage presentations.

Again this Spring, auditions are being held in New York (March 15), Baltimore (March 25), Boston (March 29-30) and Cleveland (April 15). Applications may be secured from the offices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Mrs. Margaret Grant, Executive Secretary) in Symphony Hall, Boston. A modest tuition fee and inexpensive board and lodging bring the facilities of the Centre to a wide range of young people.

Serge Koussevitzky's vision is of so wide a perspective and so long a view that he tempts all of those who work with him to similar faith. In the future I can see the opera department of the Berkshire Music Centre promoting other such ventures all over the country, laying a solid foundation for operatic effort. Local companies will surely multiply under such stimulus. Eventually American operas may come into being, as composers will be encouraged by the existence of a great body of well-trained singers, able to sing both in the vernacular and in the language of the classic repertory.

Ahead of us the path has endless variations toward its goal. Today we can rejoice that the path is open.

[178]

Montag
2. September 1940
Blatt 5

Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Mittagausgabe
№ 1260

Aus der Tätigkeit des Schweizerischen Roten Kreuzes

Dem Direktorialbericht des Schweizerischen Roten Kreuzes für das Jahr 1939 ist zu entnehmen, daß das Berichtsjahr in den ersten acht Monaten vor allem dem Ausbau der Kriegsvorbereitungen gewidmet war. Die schon 1938 begonnene Kontrolle der Rotkreuz- und Samariterdetachemente wurde wesentlich gefördert; verschiedene große Spitäler führten Kurse für Hilfspflegerinnen durch, ferner wurde mit der Organisation von Sanitätsformationen für den Grenzschutz begonnen. Zu den 31 Spitälern, die im Vorjahr der Uebereinkunft über die Militarisierung für den Kriegsfall beigetreten waren, sind in der Berichtsperiode weiter 79 hinzugekommen. Der Anschaffung von Spitalmaterial wurde weiterhin alle Aufmerksamkeit geschenkt und das neue Materialdepot in Bern bezogen. Mit den verschiedenen Schwesternschulen und dem Schweizerischen Krankenpflegebund wurde eine neue Vereinbarung aufgestellt und die Ausarbeitung eines Ausbildungsprogrammes in Angriff genommen. Infolge der Mobilisation konnte aber die Angelegenheit nicht zum Abschluß gebracht werden. Außerdem hat sich das Schweizerische Rote Kreuz bei Anlaß der Beratung der eidgenössischen Räte über die Wirtschaftsartikel energisch für eine eidgenössische Regelung der Ausbildung des Pflegepersonals eingesetzt. Die vorgelegte Fassung wurde vom Nationalrat zuerst angenommen; später aber schloß er sich der Ablehnung durch den Ständerat an.

Ueber die Tätigkeit im Jahre 1939, die vom September an wesentlich durch die Generalmobilmachung beeinflußt wurde, enthält der Direktionsbericht u. a. noch folgende Mitteilungen: Eine Erdbebenkatastrophe in Chile forderte zahlreiche Todesopfer und Tausende wurden obdachlos. Zur Linderung der Not stellte das Schweizerische Rote Kreuz 1000 Fr. zur Verfügung, dem der Bundesrat den Betrag von 2000 Fr. beifügte. Bei Beendigung des spanischen Bürgerkrieges wurde Südfrankreich von spanischen Flüchtlingen überflutet; zudem wuchs in Spanien selbst die Not der Zivilbevölkerung. Das Schweizerische Rote Kreuz eröffnete eine Sammlung zugunsten dieser Notleidenden und richtete einen Appell an die Kantone und größeren Städte zugunsten der notleidenden Zivilbevölkerung verschiedener Länder. Auch hier wurden die eingelangten Beträge dem Internationalen Komitee zur Weiterleitung überwiesen. Das Schweizerische Rote Kreuz stellte außerdem dem Eidgenössischen Justiz- und Polizeidepartement die Summe von 10 000 Fr. für die durch den Bürgerkrieg in Spanien in Not geratenen Schweizer zur Verfügung. Das Geld soll diesen Landsleuten die Schaffung neuer Existenzmöglichkeiten erleichtern.

Die in Zürich abgehaltene Rotkreuztagung brachte in eindrucksvoller Weise das Interesse zur Geltung, das weiteste Volkskreise dem Roten Kreuz entgegenbringen. An der Delegiertenversammlung wurde mit Bedauern vom Entschlusse des Präsidenten, sein Amt niederzulegen, Kenntnis genommen; Oberst von Schultheß-Rechberg wird in-

[illegible] die Spitze des [illegible]

[illegible]ens geschwungen. [illegible] Berkshire Hills liegen wenige [illegible]ahnstunden nördlich von New York im Staate [illegible]assachusetts und vereinigen somit die Annehmlichkeit einer rasch[illegible] Verbindung der Großstädte [illegible]r Ostküste mit der Landschaft, wie sie sich für den finanzielle Hilfe des Bundes erfüllt werden; als neuer Posten steht in den Passiven das Darlehen der Eidgenossenschaft von 900 000 Fr. Die Direktion gibt aber der Hoffnung Ausdruck, daß er aus dem Ergebnis der Sammlung für die Nationalspende und für das Rote Kreuz abgelöst werden könne und daß darüber hinaus die nötigen Mittel zur Verfügung stehen werden, um den weiteren Aufgaben im Dienste der Armee gerecht zu werden.

Kantone

Solothurn

Kantonale Volksabstimmung

Solothurn, 1. Sept. ag In der kantonalen Volksabstimmung vom Sonntag wurden beide Vorlagen angenommen: das zweite Arbeitsbeschaffungsprogramm mit 8229 Ja gegen 1183 Nein und die Teilrevision des Jagdgesetzes mit 7900 Ja gegen 1445 Nein.

St. Gallen

Arbeitsbeschaffungsprojekte

St. Gallen, 29. Aug. Der Kriegsausbruch hatte vor Jahresfrist den Krisenkanton St. Gallen mitten in der Ausführung verschiedener großer Bauarbeiten überrascht, die seither, wenn auch unter nicht zu vermeidenden Verzögerungen, weitergeführt wurden. Es handelte sich vorwiegend um Straßenbauten, wie die Erstellung der neuen Walenseetalstraße, die Korrektion der Straße Buchs-Wildhaus und Stein-Neßlau, der Stoßstraße von Altstätten bis zur Appenzellergrenze und der Staatsstraße Altstätten-Heerbrugg-Berneck mit der gleichzeitigen Ersetzung des Trams durch den Trolleybus. Dazu kamen die Korrektion des Rapperswiler Seedamms, der Dreimillionenbau der neuen Straßenbrücke über die Sitter bei St. Gallen, die Errichtung des neuen kantonalen Frauenspitals in St. Gallen und die Erweiterung des kantonalen Krankenhauses in Grabs. Verschiedene dieser Bauten stehen vor ihrem Abschluß.

Für den Fall, daß neue Bauarbeiten bereitgestellt werden müssen, fehlt es nicht an Projekten, deren Ausführung nicht nur als wünschbar, sondern als notwendig bezeichnet werden muß. Wohl ohne weiteres begonnen werden könnte, nachdem die Kredite vor mehr als einem Jahr durch Bund und Kanton bewilligt wurden, mit der Regulierung des alten Rheinbetts zwischen Rheineck und der Einmündung des frühern Flußlaufes in den Bodensee. Ganz besonders dringlich erscheint die Beseitigung der Geschiebeanhäufung im Diepoldsauer Rheindurchstich, die im ganzen Rheintal Beunruhigung verursacht. Daneben harren zwei große Meliorationen der Verwirklichung. Während wohl noch einige Zeit verstreichen wird, bis die Vorarbeiten für die Melioration der Rheinebene im Oberrheintal ausgeführt sind, ist zu hoffen, daß mit der Melioration der Linthebene, die die Zustimmung der eidgenössischen Instanzen wie der Stimmbürger der Kantone St. Gallen und Schwyz gefunden hat, nicht mehr allzulange zugewartet wird, um dieses Siedlungswerk, dem für [illegible] die „[illegible]“ [illegible] nicht einen Hauch von ihrer Wirkung verlieren, die im Gegenteil durch das leise Rauschen der Bäume noch gesteigert wird. Das Publikum ist ungewöhnlich aufmerksam und gediegen. Es berührt einen Europäer fremdartig und zugleich sehr sympathisch, daß ein

Himmelserscheinungen im September

P. S. Jedenfalls stellt der Himmelsanblick von heute nicht etwas für alle Ewigkeit Gegebenes dar, sondern bedeutet lediglich eine Entwicklungsphase des kosmischen Geschehens. Auch der gestirnte Himmel offenbart uns ein stetiges Kommen und Gehen: Sonnen werden geboren, Sonnen sterben. Nur die kurze Lebensdauer des Menschengeschlechtes täuscht einen unwandelbaren Himmel vor. Moderne Wissenschaft und Technik haben dem Forscher raffinierte Mittel in die Hand gegeben, die erlauben, das Alter von Weltkörpern — etwa das unserer Sonne oder der Erde — annäherungsweise bestimmen zu können. Ein gangbarer Weg zu solchen Erkenntnissen ist der folgende: Nach den neueren Auffassungen des Naturgeschehens sind Stoff und Energie nur zwei verschiedene Aeußerungsformen ein und desselben Etwas. Dementsprechend verliert ein Körper, der Energie abgibt, unweigerlich an Stoff. Unsere Sonne strahlt nun ständig ungeheure, aber zuverlässig meßbare Energiemengen aus und der dadurch bedingte Gewichtsverlust kann leicht gerechnet werden. Eine Tafel, die diese Gewichtsverluste infolge Ausstrahlung verzeichnet, würde etwa so aussehen:

Heutiges Gewicht der Sonne					1,0000
Vor 2000 Jahrmillionen wog die Sonne					1,00013
„ 1 Jahrbillion wog die Sonne					1,07
„ 2 Jahrbillionen	„	„	„		1,16
„ 5,7	„	„	„		2
„ 7,1	„	„	„		4
„ 7,4	„	„	„		8
„ 7,5	„	„	„		20
„ 7,6	„	„	„		100

Nun ist aber die Sonne nur ein Stern unter Sternen. Eines der wichtigsten Forschungsergebnisse der modernen Sternkunde lautet aber so: Das Gebiet der Sterne — also auch das der Sonne — kann nicht beliebig groß sein. Sterne, die eine Masse von etwa dem Fünfzigfachen unserer Sonne besitzen, und solche, die nur über eine Zehntels-Sonnenmasse verfügen, sind unmöglich. Tatsächlich bestätigt die Beobachtung diese theoretisch gefundene Gesetzmäßigkeit und zeigt eine überraschende Gleichförmigkeit der Sterngewichte, die alle wenig um den Wert des Sonnengewichtes streuen. Die obige Tafel zeigt nun, daß das höchstmögliche Sonnenalter bei 7½ Jahrbillionen liegen muß. Die Sonne mag also innerhalb dieser ungeheuren Zeitspanne irgendwann entstanden sein. Anderweitige Ueberlegungen, deren Darlegung hier zu weit führen würde, nötigen zu dem Schluß, daß ein „minimales“ Sonnenalter von etwa vier Jahrbillionen angenommen werden muß. Zwischen diesen beiden Zahlen wird also das wirkliche Sonnenalter zu suchen sein. Selbstverständlich kommt es hier auf irgend eine genaue Zahl gar nicht an und auch die angegebenen Schätzungen erheben keinen Anspruch auf Genauigkeit. Immerhin wird mit solchen Ueberlegungen die „Größenordnung“ des Sonnenalters festgelegt.

Nicht lange nach dem Verschwinden des Tagesgestirns glimmt in der hellen Dämmerung scheitelnahe die bläuliche Wega, der Hauptstern im kleinen Bild der Leier auf. Kurz nachher folgen wenig ostwärts von Wega der weiße Deneb im Schwan und in halber [illegible] diesem „Musikdorf“ vermittelt aufschlußreiche Einblicke in die Art und Weise des amerikanischen Musiklehrbetriebes. Was dem Fremden dabei auffällt, ist die große Gewissenhaftigkeit und der unermüdliche Fleiß, mit dem selbst bei vierzig Grad im Schatten

Schweizer Hilfe an den Kriegsopfern

(Eing.) Die Schweizerische Arbeitsgemeinschaft für kriegsgeschädigte Kinder (S. A. K.) setzt ihre Hilfsaktionen in Frankreich fort und wird über die dort geleistete Arbeit von ihren Vertrauensleuten auf dem laufenden gehalten.

Im Zentrum der Stadt Constantine wurde neuerdings eine Kantine eröffnet, in der jeden Nachmittag zwischen vier und fünf Uhr den Flüchtlingskindern ein Becher Milch verabreicht wird; im Barackenlager von St-Cyprien (Toulouse) leben zurzeit 800 belgische Flüchtlinge, deren Ernährung vorerst sichergestellt werden konnte; nur für die Kinder fehlte das Wichtigste: die Milch. Nun konnte die S. A. K. vier Tonnen Pulvermilch dorthin senden, die mit Hilfe des Belgischen Roten Kreuzes und der dortigen Behörden verteilt wurden. Seither können die Lagerleiter den Kindern regelmäßig ihre Milch ausschenken. Dreißig Kilometer von Toulouse entfernt, entstand die Schweizer Kantine von Muret, deren Milchausschank am 10. August eröffnet wurde.

In der Kantine von Luchon kommen die Kinder um neun Uhr morgens zum Milchtrinken; jedes bringt sein Stück Brot mit. Die Zahl der kleinen Gäste wächst täglich, seitdem man weiß, daß es da „Milch aus der Schweiz“ gibt. Zuerst ließen die kontrollierenden Aerzte nur die dringlichsten Fälle zur Milchverteilung zu, weil sie die ihnen überlassenen zwei Kisten Trockenmilch für das ganze ihnen zukommende Quantum hielten. Jetzt sind sie glücklich, eine größere Anzahl Kinder versorgen zu dürfen. In der Kantine von Luchon erhalten auch Säuglinge unter ärztlicher Aufsicht ihre Milch.

In der Gegend von Montuban zeigte sich auch ein Bedarf an Milchpräparaten, die die Aerzte den Säuglingen, die noch keine Kuhmilch ertragen, verabreichen. Darüber hinaus denkt man auch hier an die Eröffnung einer Milchkantine für Flüchtlingskinder zwischen drei und zwölf Jahren, um während des nahenden Herbstes und Winters die karge Nahrung durch eine tägliche Tasse Milch ergänzen zu können.

Wenn wir, schreibt die Schweiz. Arbeitsgemeinschaft, mit all unseren Kräften versuchen, das Los zahlloser Unglücklicher, wo immer wir können, zu erleichtern, so tun wir das nicht nur aus Treue zu unserer humanitären Tradition, sondern auch weil unsere bisherige Vorzugsstellung uns dazu treibt. Wir haben freilich schon auf viele Hilferufe geantwortet, aber wir müssen noch mehr tun. Wir haben nicht das Recht, uns vor so großem Leid zu verschließen, wir müssen an die Augen all jener denken, die bittend und erwartungsvoll auf uns gerichtet sind. Unsere Jugend möge ihre Anstrengungen mit den unsrigen vereinen, damit wir allen unglücklichen Opfern des Krieges die Antwort nicht schuldig bleiben.

Am 7. September veranstaltet die Schweizer Arbeitsgemeinschaft für kriegsgeschädigte Kinder einen „Schweizer Tag für die Opfer des Krieges. Bereiten Sie sich darauf vor in Ihrem Herzen und mit Ihrer Spende.

[illegible] Festivals zum temporären Mittelpunkt der Musik nicht nur Nordamerikas, sondern der ganzen Welt machen kann.

Walter Duclour

Montag
2. September 1940
Blatt 5

Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Mittagausgabe
№ 1260

dessen dem Roten Kreuz seine Dienste als Direktionsmitglied auch weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen. Als Ausdruck tiefgefühlten Dankes für seine 40jährige Rotkreuztätigkeit wählte ihn die Delegiertenversammlung zum Ehrenmitglied. Dann bestätigte sie die Wahl von Oberstdivisionär von Muralt zum neuen Präsidenten.

Mit der Kriegsmobilmachung der schweizerischen Armee im August/September 1939 trat das Rote Kreuz unter die direkte Leitung der Abteilung für Sanität. Nach den Bestimmungen der Sanitätsdienstordnung übernahm der Rotkreuz-Chefarzt schon mit dem 30. August die allgemeine Leitung des Roten Kreuzes. Das Zentralsekretariat steht seither mit Personal und Einrichtung für die Dauer der Mobilmachung zur Verfügung.

Die Jahresrechnung ist natürlich auch kriegsbedingt. Die Bilanz zeigt gegenüber dem Vorjahr verschiedene Veränderungen. Die Immobilien haben durch den Neubau des Lagerhauses eine Werterhöhung von 47 000 Fr. erfahren. Dagegen hat der mit der Mobilisation eingetretene Kurssturz der Wertschriften den Fonds aufgezehrt, der anläßlich der Frankenabwertung geschaffen worden war. Bedingt durch die Zeitverhältnisse ist ferner das Verschwinden der Reserven für Spitalmaterial. Zum Verbrauch dieser vorsorglichen Rückstellung kamen noch die großen Mobilisationsanschaffungen an Spitalmaterial von 374 000 Fr., die denn auch an der Verminderung des Vermögens um 339 852 Fr. den hauptsächlichsten Teil tragen. Die bisherigen Aufgaben des Schweizerischen Roten Kreuzes, über deren Lösung der Rotkreuzchefarzt in einem Sonderbericht Rechenschaft ablegen wird, konnten nur durch die [illegible] kommt, zu verwirklichen.

Auch gegenüber den Bundesbahnen machen sich heute neuerdings Wünsche geltend. Man denkt in der Zeit der Kohlenknappheit vor allem an die Elektrifikation der Strecke Wil-Wattwil, der letzten Bundesbahnlinie auf st.-gallischem Boden, die mit Dampf betrieben wird. Der heutige Zustand auf dieser Strecke, die auch dem Wintersportverkehr dient, hat den Nachteil, daß in Wattwil vor der Weiterfahrt nach Neßlau ein Maschinenwechsel nötig ist. Daneben wird das Begehren nach neuen Doppelspuren gestellt. Im Vordergrunde steht, neben der Erstellung des zweiten Geleises zwischen Flums und Unterterzen auf der Strecke Zürich-Chur, der Bau der Doppelspur zwischen St. Fiden und Rorschach, und zwar vor allem auf dem Teilstück Goldach-Rorschach. Hier ist vorgesehen, das Anbringen der Doppelspur mit einer Tieferlegung der Bahn zu verbinden, um nahezu ein Dutzend Niveauübergänge in der Gemeinde Rorschach beseitigen zu können. Schließlich harren die beiden Grenzbahnhöfe Buchs und St. Margrethen, die heute einen unerquicklichen Anblick bieten, einer Ausgestaltung.

Auch auf dem Gebiete des Straßenausbaues steht im Vordergrund die Umgestaltung der allzu schmalen Straßenverbindung von der Schwägalp nach dem Obertoggenburg, die dem Verkehr seit der Eröffnung der Säntisschwebebahn nicht gewachsen ist. In diesem Zusammenhang wird auch wieder dem alten Plan einer Fortsetzung dieses Straßenzuges von Neßlau über die Amdenerhöhe nach Weesen gerufen, einem Projekt, dem durch die Erstellung der Kistenpaßstraße vermehrte Bedeutung zukommen wird.

Himmelshöhe genau im Süden Atair im Sternbild des Adlers. Goldgelb flammt tief im Westen Arktur auf und wenig über dem Nordhorizont funkelt Capella im Bild des Fuhrmannes. Zwischen Arktur und Wega, etwas näher bei jenem, finden wir leicht den Sternenkranz der Krone. Etwas höher gegen Wega treffen wir die ausgedehnte Gruppe des Herkules und unterhalb dieser Konstellation die ein weites Himmelsareal ausfüllenden Bilder der Schlange und des Schlangenträgers. Zwischen Himmelspol und Ostpunkt durch zieht sich jetzt die sehr eindrucksvolle Sternreihe der Andromeda, die W-förmige Gestalt der Cassiopeia unterstreichend. Nach links zeigt der flache Sternbogen der Andromeda auf die in allen Farben funkelnde Gruppe der Perseussterne, rechts von ihm liegt das ungeheure Sternviereck des Pegasus. Aus den Dünsten des nordöstlichen Sehkreises steigt der prächtige Sternhaufe des Siebengestirns empor.

Die prachtvolle und seltene Konstellation von Jupiter und Saturn beherrscht jetzt allmählich den Abendhimmel. Im Verlaufe des Monats September verfrüht sich der Aufgang des schönen Sternpaares von 21 Uhr auf 19 Uhr. Da die Umlaufszeiten der beiden Riesenplaneten sehr lang sind, scheinen sich von uns aus gesehen auch ihre Verschiebungen unter den Fixsternen recht langsam zu vollziehen. Das hat zur Folge, daß das Beisammensein der beiden Himmelswanderer nur allmählich sich löst und wir den eindrucksvollen Himmelsanblick für längere Zeit genießen dürfen. Der Planetenbeobachter hat es jetzt denkbar bequem: die beiden weitaus interessantesten Objekte für das Fernrohr liegen in der nämlichen günstigen Stellung. Für das unbewaffnete Auge ist der Anblick noch besonders reizvoll, weil nicht weit von Jupiter und Saturn das schöne Sternhäufchen des Siebengestirns steht. — Die Herrschaft über den Morgenhimmel übt Venus aus, die den ganzen Monat hindurch als glänzender Morgenstern zwischen ein Uhr und zwei Uhr im Osten emporsteigt. Ihre Leuchtkraft überstrahlt alle andern Himmelslichter um ein Beträchtliches. Am 5. September erreicht die Venus ihren größten westlichen Abstand von der Sonne. Im Winkelmaß gemessen beträgt dieser fast 47 Grad. Der Morgenstern durchwandert jetzt das Sternbild des Krebses und bewegt sich rechtläufig gegen den Stern Regulus zu. Merkur und Mars bleiben wegen zu großer Sonnennähe unsichtbar.

Das Verfolgen des Mondlaufes ist während dieser Berichtsperiode besonders empfehlenswert. Am 2. des Monats haben wir Neumond. Als zunehmende Sichel steht der Mond am 4. bei Spica in der Jungfrau und am 8. beim rötlichen Antares im Skorpion. Der 16. September ist Vollmondtag. In wieder abnehmendem Licht besucht sodann am 20. der Erdbegleiter das Sternpaar Jupiter und Saturn und vereinigt sich mit diesen zu einem Himmelsbild besonderer Schönheit. Zwei Tage darauf findet eine Sternbedeckung statt, auf welche der Sternfreund ganz besonders aufmerksam gemacht werden möge: auf seinem Lauf schreitet der Mond über Aldebaran im Stier hinweg, das Märchen vom Rotkäppchen von neuem illustrierend. Der Mond ist der Wolf, der Rotkäppchen — den rötlichen Stern Aldebaran — verschlingt. Man begebe sich etwas nach 21 Uhr auf den Beobachtungsposten. Im Feldstecher ist die Erscheinung einer Sternbedeckung

„The Berkshires"

Nordamerikas Sommer-Musikzentrum

Während der Krieg die Durchführung von internationalen Musikfestspielen in europäischen Städten entweder vollständig verhindert oder nur in stark reduziertem Umfang zugelassen hat, ist das sommerliche Musikleben Nordamerikas zu einer Regsamkeit und Vielgestaltigkeit emporgeblüht, die das im Winter mehr oder weniger gesättigte Europa kaum erreicht hat. Nicht nur veranstaltet fast jede größere Stadt, die ein Symphonieorchester besitzt, Freiluftkonzerte in Stadien oder eigens hierzu errichteten, akustisch meist vorzüglichen sogenannten „Bowls", unter Beiziehung weltberühmter Dirigenten und Solisten; sondern die Lehrtätigkeit der Konservatorien und populären Musikschulen wird in einer großen Anzahl von Sommer-Musikschulen und Ferienlagern, die in erster Linie dem Zwecke der musikalischen Erziehung dienen, aufrechterhalten. Diese Institutionen sind über das ganze Land hin verbreitet und erfüllen in der Musikerziehung der amerikanischen Jugend eine Mission, deren segensreicher Einfluß heute noch gar nicht überblickt werden kann.

Im Laufe weniger Jahre haben sich die Berkshire Music Festivals, die jeweils im August stattfinden, an die Spitze des nordamerikanischen Sommermusiklebens geschwungen. Die Berkshire Hills liegen wenige Bahnstunden nördlich von New York im Staate Massachusetts und vereinigen somit die Annehmlichkeit einer raschen Verbindung der Großstädte der Ostküste mit der Landschaft, wie sie sich für den erwähnten Zweck nicht idealer denken ließe. Sanftes, waldreiches Hügelland, durchsetzt mit zahllosen kleinen Seen, schafft den Rahmen, in dem sich alljährlich Tausende von musikbegeisterten Amerikanern aller Klassen zusammenfinden, um den Festkonzerten zu lauschen.

Der künstlerische Leiter des Unternehmens ist Serge Kussevitzki, und die Hauptereignisse der Festwochen sind seine Konzerte mit dem Bostoner Symphonieorchester, einem der hervorragendsten Instrumentalkörper der Welt. Dieses Jahr, das siebente in der Reihe, sieht neun Konzerte vor, worunter als Höhepunkt der Aufführung von Bachs h-Moll-Messe, und ein zehntes als Wohltätigkeitsveranstaltung zugunsten des Roten Kreuzes. Das Festspielhaus, wenn mann es so nennen kann, ist eine riesige gedeckte Halle, deren Grundriß die Form eines Kreissektors besitzt und die schätzungsweise 10 000 Personen faßt. Das von einer Sperrholzverschalung überwölbte Podium befindet sich in der Spitze dieses Sektors, während der Zuschauerraum nach allen Seiten hin freien Ausblick gewährt. Das Gebäude selbst steht inmitten einer großen, von hohen Ulmen locker bestandenen Wiese, die nach drei Seiten hin von dichtem Wald umsäumt ist, während eine Seite gegen einen kleinen See abfällt. Auf dieser Wiese lagern Tausende von Zuhörern, die sich keinen Platz in den Konzerten leisten können. Die Akustik ist so vollkommen, daß selbst Stücke wie das „Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune" nicht einen Hauch von ihrer Wirkung verlieren, die im Gegenteil durch das leise Rauschen der Bäume noch gesteigert wird. Das Publikum ist ungewöhnlich aufmerksam und gediegen. Es berührt einen Europäer fremdartig und zugleich sehr sympathisch, daß ein weltberühmter Dirigent in Hemdärmeln vor sein ebenfalls in Hemdärmeln spielendes Orchester tritt, um eine Symphonie von Brahms zu dirigieren, ohne daß jemand daran Anstoß nimmt und ohne daß die Weihe des Anlasses im geringsten darunter leidet.

Um diese Konzerte gruppiert sich eine reiche Fülle von kleineren musikalischen Anlässen, vor allem Kammermusikkonzerten. Die Vorliebe des Amerikaners für Kammermusik ist überaus stark, und es ist bezeichnend, daß z. B. die Kammermusikwerke Regers viel leichter den Weg in die Herzen des amerikanischen Publikums finden als seine Orchesterwerke. Diese Kammermusikkonzerte finden nicht in der erwähnten Halle statt, sondern in kleinen, hübschen Sälen, von denen man einen Ausblick auf einen See oder Wald genießt. Ausführende sind einzelne der führenden Ensembles des Kontinentes.

Die wichtigste Institution der Berkshire Festivals außer den großen Konzerten ist die Sommer-Musikschule, die dank der Bedeutung der mitwirkenden Lehrer Tausende von jungen Musikern aus Nordamerika zu ihren Schülern zählt. Der Unterricht ist dadurch besonders anziehend und angenehm, daß er zum Teil im Freien abgehalten wird, sofern die Witterung dies gestattet. Um das Festspielhaus herum gruppieren sich in weitem Abstand, getrennt durch reizvolle Parks und Gärten, eine Anzahl von mehr oder weniger einfachen Bauernhäusern, die in kleine Konservatorien umgewandelt wurden. Ein Besuch in diesem „Musikdorf" vermittelt aufschlußreiche Einblicke in die Art und Weise des amerikanischen Musiklehrbetriebes. Was dem Fremden dabei auffällt, ist die große Gewissenhaftigkeit und der unermüdliche Fleiß, mit dem selbst bei vierzig Grad im Schatten gearbeitet wird. In einem der Häuser hält Kussevitzki seinen Dirigierkurs, dessen Teilnehmer zu den Proben des Boston Orchesters Zutritt haben. Im Park eines andern Hauses hält Herbert Graf, der Oberregisseur der Metropolitan Oper, seinen Kurs für operndramatische Darstellung, während in einem dritten Haus der Konzertmeister des Bostoner Orchesters eine Gruppe junger Geiger im Orchesterspiel unterweist. Im Schatten eines hohen Baumes erblicken wir eine Gruppe von Kontrabassisten, die unter der Leitung eines jungen Kapellmeisters die Stretta aus der dritten Leonorenouvertüre exerzieren. Der Abstand zwischen den einzelnen Häusern und Gärten ist so groß, daß man sich gegenseitig nicht stört. Aus einem Fenster ertönt ein feierlicher Posaunenchoral, während irgendwo abseits Paul Hindemith mit einer Anzahl von Studenten Bachs „Kunst der Fuge" erörtert. Die Studenten haben ein eigenes großes Orchester, das von Zeit zu Zeit von Kussevitzki inspiziert wird und in dem aus diesem Grunde mit einer Hingabe gearbeitet wird, die in wenigen Wochen bereits erstaunliche Resultate gezeitigt hat.

Heuer, da die Parole „Reise in der Heimat" dem Amerikaner durch die Verhältnisse im Ausland besonders nahe gebracht ist, war die Nachfrage für Berkshire so stark wie noch nie zuvor. Wenn Europa tatsächlich auf Jahre hinaus kulturell völlig lahmgelegt bleibt, dann stehen wir hier vielleicht am Beginn einer Entwicklung, die diese Berkshire Musical Festivals zum temporären Mittelpunkt der Musik nicht nur Nordamerikas, sondern der ganzen Welt machen kann.

Walter Ducloux

Wellesley College News

XLIX 2311 WELLESLEY, MASS., APRIL 3, 1941 No. 24

Music Center Plans For Coming Season

The ears of many collegiate musicians will be tuned to the Berkshire Hills this summer as the plans now in progress for the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, directed by Dr. Serge Koussovitzky, culminate in six weeks of "living and working in music." Last summer, ten Wellesley students and seven alumnae were among those singing, playing, and listening to great music at Tanglewood, the beautiful estate where the Center is located. Already this spring there is lively talk about Billings concerning Koussevitzky, the Beethoven Missa Solemnis which will be prepared for performance under him, and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra whom students will come to know both as teachers and performers. Wellesley also contributes a faculty member to the Music Center in Mr. Malcolm Holmes, conductor and violinist.

Mr. Malcolm Holmes

Offering as teachers men like Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copeland, composers; Olin Downes of the New York Times; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello virtuoso; and Herbert Graf, stage-director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, the Music Center has attracted students varying widely in experience and interest. The section of the Center known as "The Department of Music and Culture," draws the largest number of college men and women, since it makes no professional entrance requirements except a certain amount of experience in playing and singing. This season, the choral and instrumental groups of the "Department" will approach music from an historical point of view. But unlike most college courses in music history they will study the growth of music from the 14th century by singing and playing it themselves. A week will be devoted to music of the present day in an atmosphere where it is actually being made and played by its modern creators.

Music Center students will attend the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But if last summer's activities were an example, they will hear the music discussed, meet the men who play it, and come to its rehearsals before the actual concerts tal place.

No study of the Music Center could omit mention of "Woody," Mr. J. Wallace Woodworth—whose official winter title is Chairman of the Harvard Music Department and Director of the Harvard Glee Club. In the summer he turns to preparing the Music Center Chorus for their performance with Dr. Koussevitzky. This year, Hugh Ross, Director of the famous Schola Cantorum of New York, will aid him in teaching the proper way to sing. Students interested in choral conducting will have time to acquire the proper technique of wrist and baton under these experienced teachers.

Collegiate instrumentalists can take time out for a string quartet or flute trio just before a swim at Tanglewood, oboe-ployers can practice in a truly bucolic atmosphere complete with cows and meadows, embryonic composers may consult with Mr. Hindemith or Mr. Copeland. Whatever one's particular bent, the Music Center offers one a summer of "music for the fun of it" at its very best.

Berkshire Center Offers Student Unforgettable Musical Experience

If you want a musical experience that cannot be duplicated, if you want a vacation spent in the most beautiful and famous part of Massachusetts, if you want to associate with the most proficient musicians in this country, if you want to work hard but have fun every minute, or if you want to make friends with people who have lived interesting lives, then go to the Berkshire Music Center next summer. As Koussevitzky said in an address to the Academy, the experiment at Tanglewood was intentionally called a Center rather than a School. The directors, in naming it, hoped to make the old home of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, the Shed, the little red barn, and the Little Theater the center of musical education in this country, a place to which the best teachers would come to give of their talent and experience, and from which the young musicians of America would leave, enriched and ready to give generously to others the rewards of their summer in the Berkshires.

A visitor to the Center during its six weeks' session would have found the three hundred and twenty-five students busily and noisily occupied. On the stage of the Shed, an enormous open auditorium seating six thousand, he would have seen and heard the Institute orchestra, the group from the advanced half of the Center, in rehearsal for their weekly concert. This orchestra of about eighty men and women was directed by the five promising young student conductors, chosen from a larger group of aspirants to be in Koussevitzky's conducting class. Every morning from nine to twelve the five conductors rehearsed their small symphony orchestra under the direct coaching of Koussie, as he is familiarly called, and Stanley Chapple, formerly guest conductor of the London Philharmonic Orchestra. In the afternoon the orchestra broke up into quartets and trios to work under and with the first desk men from the B. S. O. (Boston Symphony).

Our visitor would have heard great arias bursting forth from the Little Theatre. Here, the twenty-five students in the Opera Dramatics class rehearsed short scenes and acts from the great operas under the direction of Herbert Graf, Stage Director of the Metropolitan, and Boris Goldovsky of the Cleveland Institute of Music. Twice during the summer these budding opera stars presented excerpts from opera in evening programs.

In the main house, Tanglewood, our visitor would very likely have heard conscientious violinists and pianists practicing in what seemed a deliberate attempt to outdo each other. In several rooms he might have seen young composers struggling to write masterpieces under the guidance of Aaron Copeland and Paul Hindemith.

After a short walk down the hill and across the road, the spectator would have seen a typical New England red barn. But instead of farmers tossing hay into the loft, he would have found a chorus rehearsing the Bach B Minor Mass under Woody, G. Wallace Woodworth, the conductor of the Harvard Glee Club. Or in the afternoon he would have heard the Academy orchestra, the group in the Center interested in music from the amateur's standpoint, in rehearsal for one of their concerts under Malcolm Holmes.

These two groups, the Academy and the Institute, worked five and a half days a week. But the Berkshire Music Center was not all work. There were lectures by well-known musicians such as Olin Downes, Archibald Davison, Abram Chasins, Randall Thompson and others; concerts by members of the B. S. O.; and folk dancing twice a week. All the members and faculty of the Center enjoyed teas in the garden at Tanglewood, and especially the one during the final week at Koussevitzky's beautiful home, Seranak, overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and the Stockbridge Bowl. When Koussevitzky begged us all not to forget Tanglewood, and the work we had done there together, the real meaning and importance of our summer of music, during Europe's summer of air raids, became clear to us all.

Wellesley was well represented at the Center. Malcolm Holmes, conductor of our orchestra, was our faculty's sole contribution to the teaching staff. But from the student body and alumnae there were two in the Institute, eleven in the Academy, and one in the Secretary's office.

For me, however, the peak of the summer came when the Berkshire Festival Chorus sang the Bach Mass with the B. S. O. under the direction of Koussevitzky. We felt very proud to be included in the program of nine concerts given during the Festival. When one sees an audience of nine thousand people enjoying the privilege of listening to the Boston Symphony, one feels a sense of thankfulness, and above all, a sense of gratitude to the man who had the vision to make the Berkshire Music Center possible, Serge Koussevitzky.

B.B.P. '41

Dr. Koussevitzky Tells Of Classes, Concerts At Berkshire Music Center

By Joan Pinanski

"It is a miracle when a genius like Mozart comes into the world," declared Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an interview following a morning rehearsal at Symphony Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky was speaking of the three Mozart programs to be given in the Berkshires next summer as part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

He went on to talk about the Berkshire concerts with a gleam in his eye. "Do I like conducting there? Why, of course. There people come only for the music. They are not thinking about business and other appointments, as in Symphony Hall. So naturally, they listen better." Dr. Koussezitvky is himself very fond of the Berkshires and has bought a home there—a retreat where the conductor loves to relax.

Last summer the Berkshire Music Center offered over three hundred students an opportunity to "live and work" in music, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Making plans for next season, he extended a cordial invitation for college students to come there. "Students are my favorite audience," were his words. "They are creative—they have such imagination. It is not necessary to be a professional musician to work at the Music Center. All you need is a voice to sing in the chorus."

The chorus to which Dr. Koussevitzky referred will perform the Missa Solemnis by Beethoven with the Boston Symphony. "Each year we will choose to perform one great choral work," he explained. "Last year, it was the Bach B minor Mass —maybe next time, the Brahms Requiem."

Most of the chorus will come from the "Department of Music and Culture" at the Music Center. This is a division of the Music Center with no technical entrance requirements, which includes college students going to teach music, but really he [illegible]ssevitzky emphasized that not only men like Mr. G. Wallace Woodworth, Conductor of the Harvard Glee Club, who trained the chorus last summer, will work with students, but new faculty members, including Mr. Hugh Ross, who directs the famous Schola Cantorum of New York.

The Berkshire Music Center is a project very close to Dr. Koussevitzky's heart, the realization of a life-long dream for him. To hear him describe it is to hear one of the truly great artists of our time talking about an institution of major importance in America's musical future. He speaks in superlatives, with a tremendous enthusiasm and with the fiery warmth which is his on the conductor's stand.

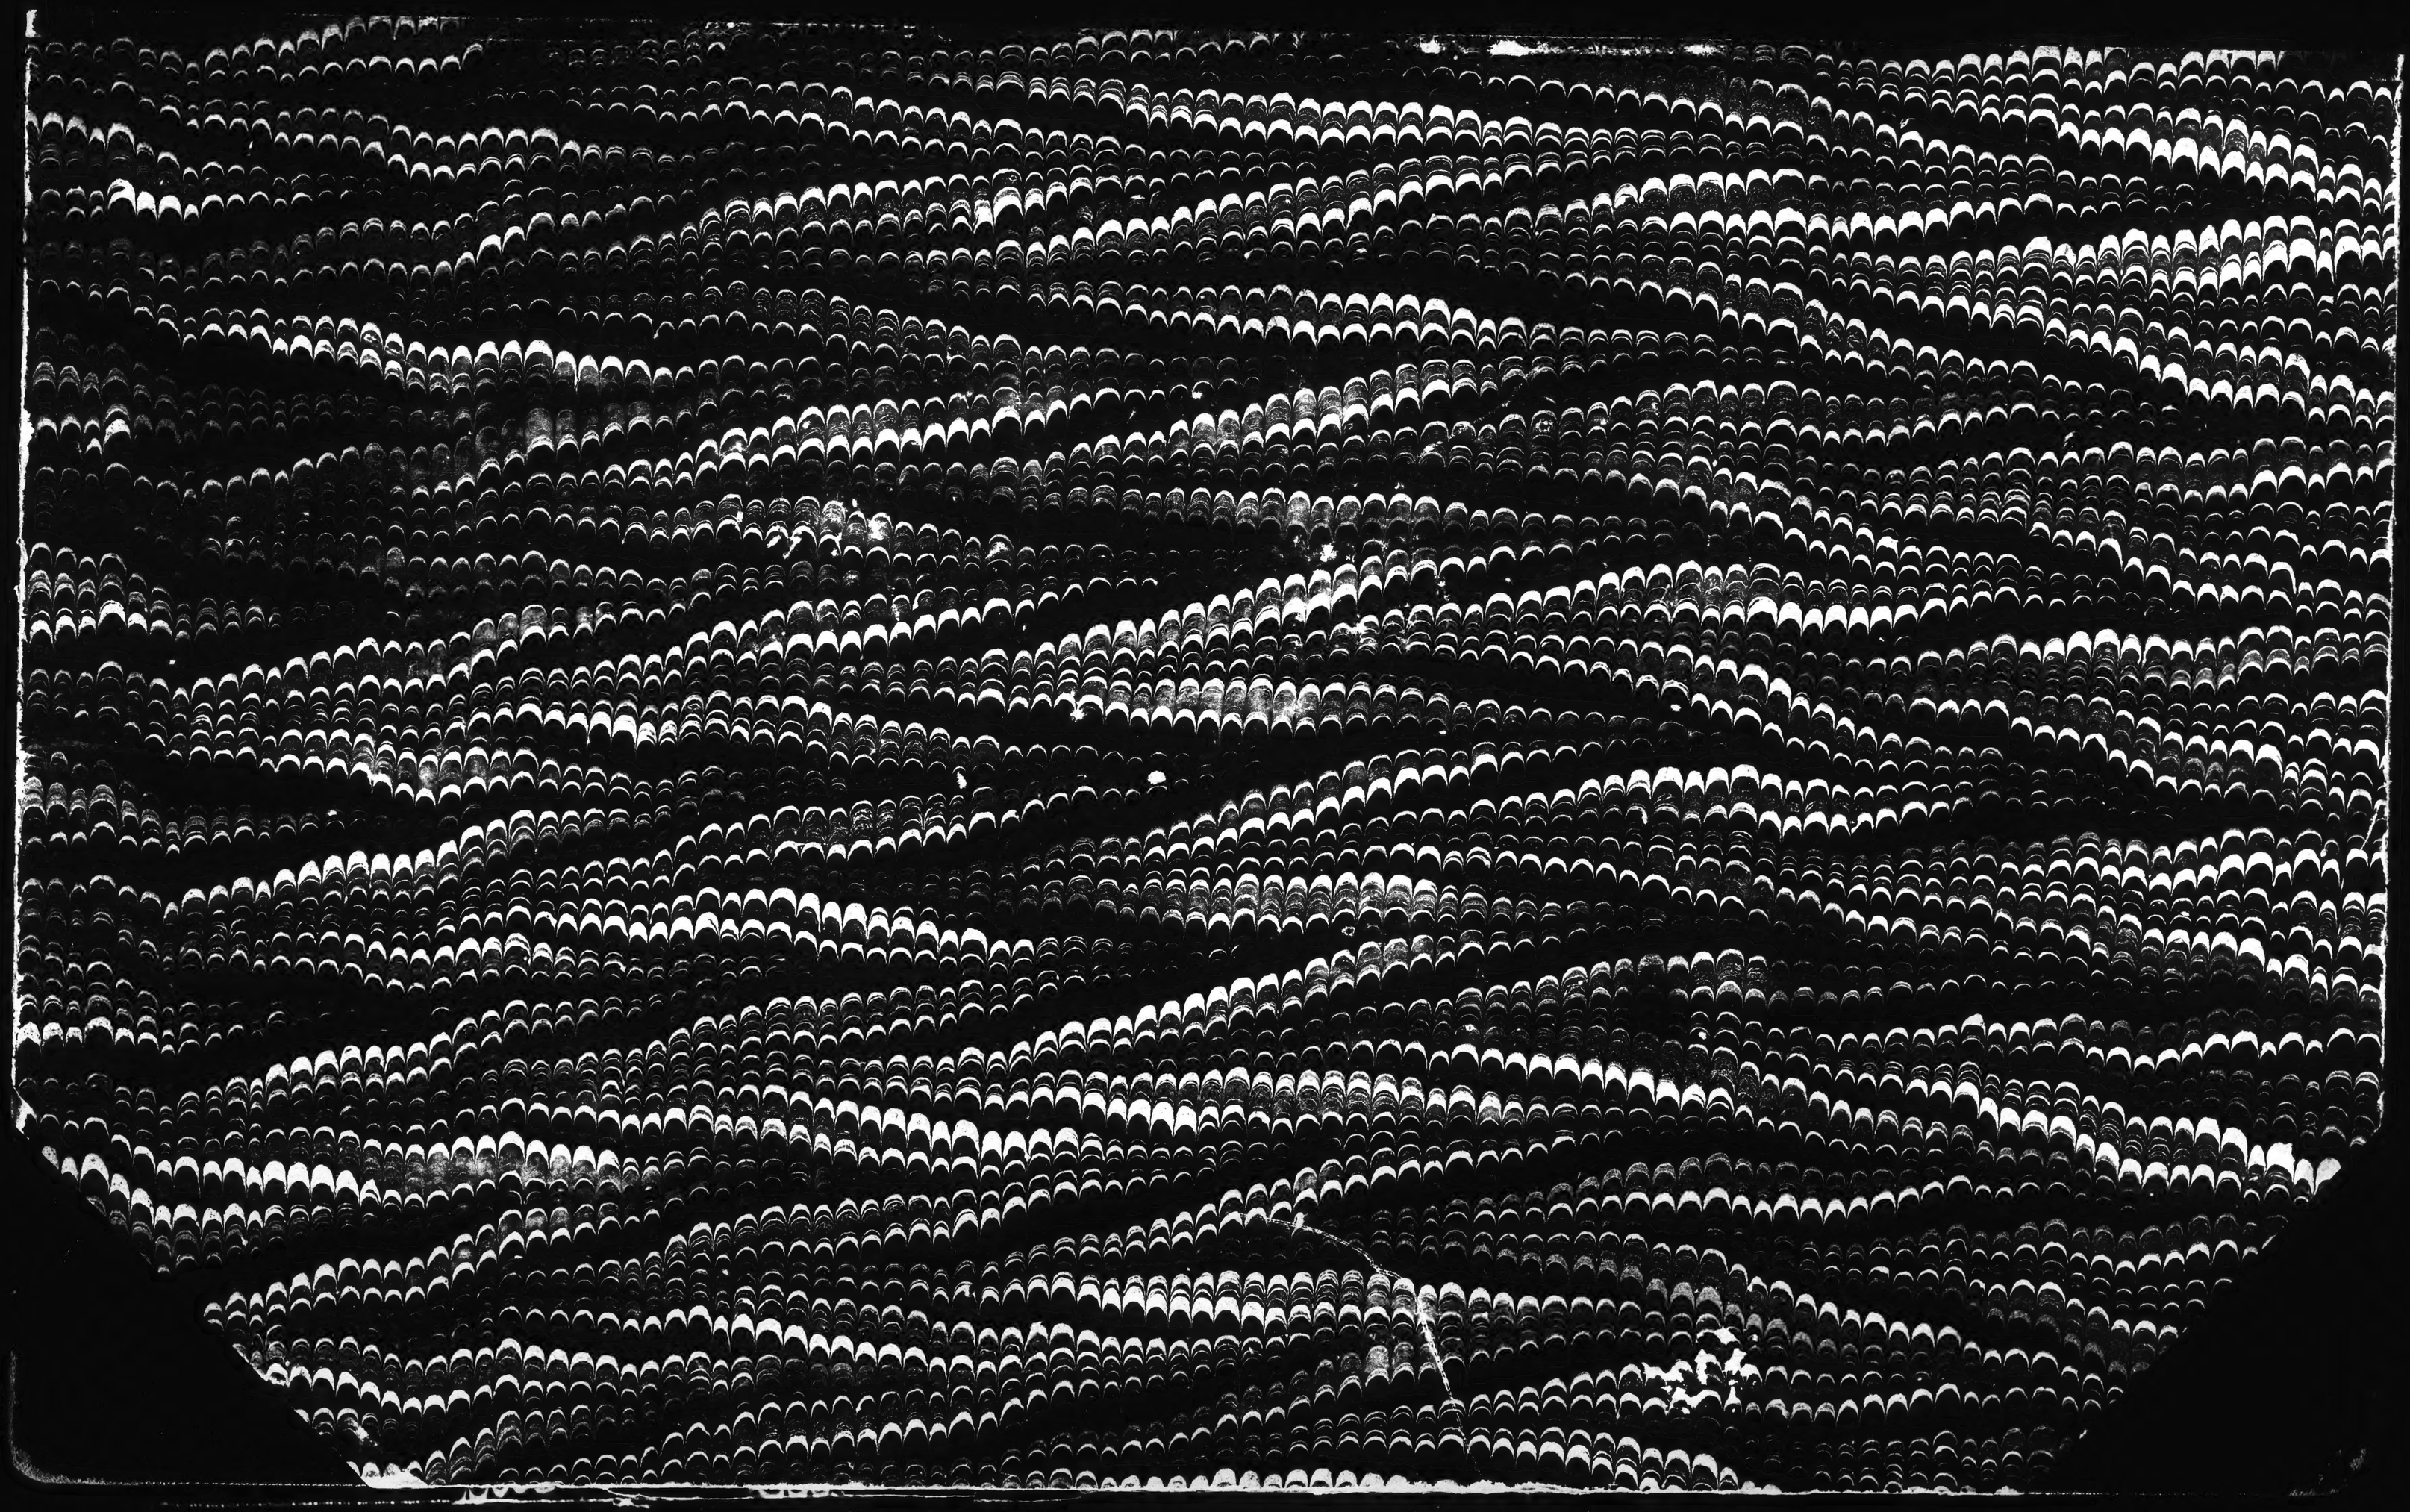
[180]

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Overflow Audiences Hear First Half of Mozart Festival

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER
911
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK



END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND